HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 25, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of Veterinary Director General and Live Stock Commissioner for the year ended March 31, 1912.—Mr. Crothers.

ONTARIO SUPERIOR COURTS.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 155, respecting the Superior Courts of the Province of Ontario. He said: The purpose of this Bill is merely to make the different dispositions of our statutes attributing jurisdiction to the courts in Ontario conform, as regards the designation of the courts to the changes effected in the judicature system by the Ontario Act entitled the Law Reform Act of 1909. That Act was brought into force by proclamation on the 1st of January of this year. Among its provisions are certain dispositions changing the designation of the courts. What was formerly known as the Court of Appeal becomes the Appellate division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and the Court of the first instance is entitled the High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario. The changes in these designations gave rise to the question whether there existed in Ontario a court of appeal, for instance, having jurisdiction with regard to reserved cases and all the different matters which, under the existing Dominion statutes, are placed within the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal. The purpose of this legislation is merely to provide throughout all our statutes, wherever provision is made attributing jurisdiction to the Court of Appeal of Ontario, that the jurisdiction shall be exercised by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the new designation of the court, and, wherever jurisdiction is attributed to the High Court of Justice for Ontario or a judge of that court, that jurisdiction shall belong to the High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, or a judge of that court. The matter has been pressed upon me by the Government of Ontario, because it happens that there are actually pending cases requiring to be dealt with, more particularly in the Court of Appeal, now the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and it has been suggested that there was some doubt as to the jurisdiction of the court under its new designation.

Mr. GERMAN: Does this Bill propose to enlarge in any way the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. DOHERTY: The Bill does not in the slightest degree enlarge the jurisdiction. It simply substitutes for the words 'Court of Appeal for Ontario' the words 'Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario,' and for the words 'High Court of Justice for Ontario' the words 'the High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario,' so that in our Acts the courts of Ontario shall be designated by the names by which they are designated under the Ontario Law Reform Act.

Mr. GERMAN: It merely changes the name?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is all.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

On the motion of Mr. White for Committee of Supply:

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, there is a matter which I wish to bring up before you leave the Chair, and that is the rules which should govern procedure in this House. I invited your attention to it the other day, and you will recall that it was ruled to be neither a question of privilege nor one of urgent or definite public importance. I bowed to your ruling, and I now desire to invite your attention, and the attention of hon. members of this House, to the subject, to which I attach a great deal of importance. It is one that involves the procedure of Parliament, and, in a measure, the privileges of members of Parliament. We are all interested, I am sure, in the maintenance of constitutional government in Canada; and, underlying that, there are the privileges of Parliament and the question of the proper procedure to be followed in this House, which is perhaps not of second importance to the one I have first mentioned, because upon that is based the preservation of our constitutional rights. I asked the other day for the privilege of calling your attention to:

(1) The right of Mr. Speaker to take the Chair while the House is in Committee of the Whole, unless he has received a report from the Chairman of the said committee, except in special cases provided by the rules; (2) and in the event of his so doing without any such report, or in such excepted cases, as to his right and power to do so to any other end than to adjourn the House.

I desire to discuss this question in a dispassionate and calm way, without regard to incidents that have transpired, and solely with the view of having a discussion in which I think hon. members should take part, as to the rules which prevail, and as to how far the rules of the British Parliament should govern our procedure. I shall confine myself at the outset to the first branch:

The right of the Speaker to take the Chair while the House is in Committee of the Whole, unless he has received a report from the Chairman of the said committee, except in special cases provided by the rules.

If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to a view which I presented on this subject before it had become as acute as it has since become, when we had under discussion the subject of the right of the Speaker to take the Chair. With the indulgence of the House I will quote my utterance on March 10, in the debate of Saturday evening of the week before last. I then made this contention:

When the Speaker forms a Committee of the Whole House I submit that, until the Chairman of that committee makes a report, the Speaker is not in the Chair and there is no session of the House in the sense of the House meeting with the Speaker in the Chair. I quite appreciate the fact that a custom has grown up whereby, at six o'clock, when the committee is in session, the Speaker ascends to the Chair and announces that: It being six o'clock I leave the Chair. He cannot be considered to be in the Chair and he therefore cannot leave the Chair. It is the duty and privilege of the Chairman of the committee to make that announcement. He alone can say: It being now six o'clock I leave the Chair. It was the custom of this House in previous Parliaments and under other Speakers for the Chairman of the committee to make that announcement and it was not usual for the Speaker to ascend to the Chair and say: It being now six o'clock, I leave the Chair. It would seem to me to be beyond all question that under sub-section 4 of section 13, in the absence of the Chairman of the committee, the Speaker, in forming a committee of the Whole House, appoint any member Chairman of the committee. Under the rule that Chairman, so appointed at the time of the formation of the committee, must remain in the Chair and, before he can be relieved, he must make some sort of a report.

Then I went on to say:

I do not know that we have ever had a ruling and certainly no clearly-defined decision with respect to the matter; but I submit that there can be no decision that in any respect varies the strict legal declaration of sub-section 4.

That is, of rule 13. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are exceptional occasions when you can take the Chair while the Committee of the Whole House is convened, but those exceptions are provided for in the rules. One is with respect to the hour which is devoted to the consideration of private Bills, on Tuesday evening between 8 and 9 o'clock, and on Friday evening between 8 and 9 o'clock; the other is with respect to a message from His Excellency the Governor General. Our rules provide that, under these circumstances, even although the Committee of the Whole House is in session, it is the right and the duty of the Speaker to take the chair. On the evening of Saturday of the week before last, I called your attention to rule 14 of this House, which reads as follows:

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the Committee deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

I invited your attention to that rule on the occasion mentioned, impliedly putting the question: should that rule prevail in the Parliament of Canada, or should a contrary rule of the British House of Commons prevail in that regard? Now, Sir, I turn to the very first rule of this House, which says:

In all cases not provided for hereinafter or by sessional or other orders, the rules, usages and forms of proceeding of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in force on the first day of July, 1867, shall be followed.

The proper interpretation to give to that rule, in my judgment, is that where we have not made any special provision under the rules of this House, the rules, usages, and forms of proceeding of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in force on the first day of July, 1867, shall be followed, and shall govern the procedure of this House That rule, which stands as rule No. 1 to day, was the last of the first rules concurred in by this House in 1867. It was the very last rule and it was in terms similar to this, with the exception that, at that time, it was not limited by the words 'in force on the first day of July, 1867,' which have since been inserted. I think they were inserted in 1909, when a committee of the House of Commons had under revision the rules of the House. On that occasion they transposed this last rule, made it the first rule and inserted these words to which I have referred. Their report was considered in the Committee of the Whole, the report of the committee was concurred in by the House, and the rules as then adopted became the rules of the House. Therefore, rule 1 of this House has been in force since we have had a Dominion parliament, and we have been governed by that rule. Where we had no special rule we were governed by the rules, usages and forms of proceedings of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland which were in existence at the time of the enactment of the British North America Act. I have looked over that Act to see whether there was any provision having regard to our rights and privileges and to our authority to enact rules. I find that in section 18 of the British North America Act the following provision was made:

The privileges, immunities and powers to be held, enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof, respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and by the members thereof.

It would then seem to be beyond all question that only the rules, usuages and forms of proceeding which prevailed and were of authority in the House of Commons of Great Britain on the first of July, 1867, were the rules which should govern this House of Commons when we had no special rule of our own to govern us or to direct us in regard to our procedure. In other words, when we have no special rule providing for certain contingencies or circumstances, we are limited to the rules, usages and forms of proceedings which prevailed and governed in the House of Commons in Great Britain in 1867.

Mr. BORDEN: The hon. gentleman knows that that was amended.

Mr. EMMERSON: But not materially to the point I am making.

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, it was amended in 1875.

Mr. EMMERSON: Yes, that is a fact, but that does not bear on the point I am making.

Mr. BORDEN: I would like to direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, while the year 1867 was originally stated, it was afterwards unlimited as to date, if I am not mistaken, by section 1 of the Act of 1875, which provides that section 18 of the British North America Act, to which he has alluded, shall be repealed and another section substituted in its place.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is that section?

Mr. BORDEN: The section is this:

The privileges, immunities and powers to be held, enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof, respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any Act of the Parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities and powers shall not confer any privileges, immunities or powers exceeding those at the passing of such Act held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and by the members thereof.

Mr. EMMERSON: That does not affect my point at all.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not think this section affects the rules at all.

Mr. EMMERSON: No. My point was that, under the authority of the British Parliament, our rule No. 1 confines us to the rules which were in force in 1867, and that therefore any subsequent usage or form of procedure cannot be said to govern us, or to be our rule of conduct where, under the circumstances, we have a rule of our own governing the procedure in a particular matter.

Now, Sir, we have a rule, and the question arises with respect to the procedure in committee. The fourteenth rule adopted by this House states distinctly that:

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House; but disorder in a committtee can only be censured by the House, on rceiving a report thereof.

That rule places upon the chairman of the committee the responsibility of dealing with any disorder. The term 'disorder' in the rule is not limited to small disturbances; it is inclusive of every form and kind and description of disorder that can by any possibility take place in a committee of the whole House. In case disorder has arisen in a committee, under our rules, it is the duty of the Chairman to report the same to the House, and the House, on receiving that report can take action. Without in any way referring to procedure in debate in the past, or referring to a former debate, we have had this to happen when the Chairman of the committee is presiding over the Committee of the Whole House. Mr. Speaker may be present in the House when the House is sitting in Committee of the Whole with a chairman presiding, but he is then as a private member of the House, and by the etiquette of the House his rights are restricted and limited, and he can only take cognizance of what transpires in the committee or what has transpired in the committee, upon a report to him from the Chairman in the discharge of his duties and responsibilities. We had the exhibition here of the Committee of the Whole House being in session, a chairman presiding over that committee, and at the same time Mr. Speaker taking the Chair and directing the Chairman of the Committee to order that the debate should go no further. I do not speak of this with a view of raking up the past; I speak of it in order that we may discuss the question to the end that there shall be some decision or understanding as regards the future proceedings of this House. On an occasion, Mr. Speaker, you have stated that the Speaker has the right to take the Chair at any time in case of grave disorder, and your authority for so acting you gave as the 161st rule of the English House of Commons, which reads:

In the case of grave disorder arising in the House, the Speaker may, if he thinks it necessary to do so, adjourn the House without question put, or suspend any sitting for a time to be named by him.

I understood you to say, Mr. Speaker, that there was a similar rule applicable to the procedure in this House under like circumstances. The 161st rule of the English House is referred to in the proceedings of May 22, 1905, but speaking from memory, that rule was adopted in 1902. My contention is that that rule is not in force in the Canadian House of Commons, and it is very material to the proper government of this deliberate body that we should have a determination as to whether my contention is right. I grant you that under the rules of the British House of Commons the Speaker can in a case of grave disorder do as you did on that occasion; but in the Canadian House of Commons we have no such rule, nor have we any rule that in any way can be considered as analogous to it. Clearly that rule was not in force in the British House of Commons in 1867; it was not in force in 1875 when the amending British North America Act was passed, and it cannot be successfully contended that it is a rule which we in the Canadian House of Commons are bound in any way to recognize. The Canadian House of Commons has in its wisdom, not later than three years ago, made a different provision with respect to just such circumstances and contingencies, by enacting the 14th rule of this House. Under that rule, the Speaker has no right, while the committee is in session, to assume the duties of the Speaker and to deal with any matter in the committee until he receives a report from the Chairman of the committee. While sitting in this Chamber as a member of the House, so far as the office of Speaker is concerned, the Speaker would be like the Sphinx, a stone dummy; he can take no cognizance officially of what transpires in Committee of the Whole House duly organized under its Chairman. The only way the information as to what transpires in the committee can come to the Speaker is through the medium of a report presented in the regular way by the Chairman of the committee. My contention is that if the 161st rule of the British House of Commons were applicable to proceedings in this House, the Speaker, having taken the Chair under such circumstances, cannot do more than adjourn the House or suspend any sitting for a time to be named by him. He has no power, no right, no authority, to direct the Chairman of the committee; he has no power or authority to declare that the debate has gone far enough and should cease. So far as the proceedings in the committee are concerned, the Chairman of the committee is supreme, subject to the action of the committee itself, he for the time being having all the authority of the Speaker, and with the right of submitting to the House for action any case of disorder that may have arisen. I think it will be admitted that rule 14 of this House has been transgressed, and that when the Speaker takes the Chair while the committee is in session, and while the Chairman of the committee is presiding, he does so without authority. It is an invasion of the rights and privileges of the Committee of the Whole; it is an interference with that committee and with the Chairman of that committee.

Is it within the power of the Speaker under such circumstances to say:

I want the Chairman to rule on this point of order; in my judgment, it has been debated away beyond the usual length, and beyond the usual privilges of debate.

The Chairman is the presiding officer of the Committee of the Whole, and presumably he acts upon his own initiative without interference from any member or from the Speaker. For the time being, the office of Speaker ceases so far as the Committee is concerned. In the English rules there is a very different provision from that in ours. The position of Speaker in Great Britain is entirely different from the position of Speaker in this country. A Speaker in Great Britain is elected and is continued in office. He is non-partisan; he is in no way affiliated or associated with either political party. Conditions which prevail in the British House of Commons are vastly different from those which prevail in the Canadian House of Commons. With us, on the advent of a new Administration, a Speaker is selected, who is one of the Government's supporters and who is associated with the party in power. I am not complaining of that; I am only mentioning the fact. So far as lies within his power, he may seek to be immune from association with either of the political parties; but there is no use disguising the fact that the party which appoints a Speaker looks to him as one of its own, as a part of the Administration, as it were. I am not speaking of present conditions merely; I am speaking as well of conditions which have prevailed in the past. To attempt to apply an English rule, which is based on entirely different conditions, to conditions which prevail in the Canadian House of Commons, is simply to attempt a misfit; it is an impossibility; it presents an anomaly. The point is this: Can there not be some understanding in order that difficulties, which have arisen in the past and which may possibly arise in the future, may be avoided? There certainly should be some definite understanding as to what rules shall govern procedure in this House. That is a very important question. If the Chairman of the committee is but a donkey engine of the Speaker and subject to his direction, then rule 14 is entirely nugatory and should be repealed at once. It is absolutely obsolete, if the circumstances could present itself of a Chairman in the Chair with a committee in session and of the Speaker in the Chair, and the Speaker directing the Chairman to do this or that. A report must first be presented from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to the Speaker, who receives that report and submits it to the House. It is then for the House to take action. If some member has been named in committee or has been reported as being disorderly or as acting in contempt of the Chair, the Chairman makes a report in detail to the Speaker. Under our rule the Speaker may be called to the Chair for that purpose. The report of the Chairman is then read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and it is for the House to deal with that recalcitrant or disorderly member. In the English House of Commons, a Chairman of a committee has the power of the Speaker with regard to an offending member of a committee, and he can take action in the matter. Under those circumstances, without wishing to deal with the matter from a party standpoint, and only with the desire that conditions and circumstances shall be exposed in order that future proceedings of Committees of the Whole and of the House of Commons itself shall be governed and that difficulties may be avoided, do I attempt to present the matter before you, Sir, on this occasion. I could perhaps recall to the minds of hon. members circumstances which transpired within the last fortnight in their presence. I wish to do that, only in so far as it is necessary with a view of placing the matter in its true light and in order that a remedy may be afforded and that future occurrences of a similar character may be avoided. Something might be said in favour of the usages of Parliament prevailing, had we no such rule as No. 14.

I sought to bring this matter up merely for discussion, not contemplating, nor having any desire to censure anybody as to anything that had transpired in the past. But, Mr. Speaker, you, very properly, called my attention to a rule that you thought prevailed with respect to the necessity of giving notice of motion. You quoted from Bourinot, page 280. Referring to the Speaker, Bourinot says:

> He decides only when questions actually arise, and not in anticipation. If a member wishes to challenge his act or conduct he must proceed in the usual way by giving notice of motion on the subject.

Bourinot cites as his authority, the English 'Hansard,' Third Series, Vol. 277, pages 810 to 812. But the authority thus cited, in my humble opinion, does not bear out the dictum of Bourinot or the conclusion drawn by him. The circumstances of the case referred to do not warrant the statement that 'when a member wishes to challenge any act or the conduct of the Speaker, he must proceed in the usual way by giving notice of motion on the subject.' The case referred to was one that occurred in March, 1886. The question was one of privilege, raised by Sir H. Drummond Wolff. I shall not read the details of the case or the circumstances, but the following is part of that debate:

> Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asks me whether the answer given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to a question put by the hon. and learned member for Chatham (Mr. Gorst) does not amount to a breach of privilege.
> Sir H. Drummond Wolff: No, Sir, that was not my question.
> Mr. Speaker: I am bound to say that the question should have been put to me at the time the answer was made; and I have to observe that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his answer, referred to a treasury minute bearing on the matter which has been laid on the table of the House. When that treasury minute comes on for consideration then will be the time for putting a question as to whether the minute itself involves a breach of privilege of the House.

On account of that dictum of the Speaker, Lord Randolph Churchill did give notice that the matter would be taken up at the first opportunity, when the House was moved into committee of supply. I simply refer to this case to show that it in no way laid down the rule, nor made any authoritative statement, that, in order to bring a matter of privilege before the House challenging any act, or the conduct of the Speaker, it was necessary to give notice of motion. Your ruling, Mr. Speaker, was to the effect that that was necessary, and I bow with all deference to that ruling. I simply invite your attention to the authority cited by Bourinot in support of his contention and statement.

Now, I do not wish to dwell further upon the situation. As I have stated, I have brought this matter to the notice of the House with a view to some action being taken whereby a clear understanding may be reached as to the rights and privileges of members of this House, and the rights, privileges and responsibilities of the Chairman of the Whole House in relation to a matter that has transpired or which may in the future transpire in the Committee of the Whole when no report has been made, and, especially in view of what I conceive to be the rigid, inexorable rule of the House of Commons of Canada in that regard. I have not elaborated the matter, nor quoted, as I might have done, with a view to placing on 'Hansard' any of the proceedings that transpired a week ago Saturday night. I only hope my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, will take notice of the situation. I apprehend that he has already looked into the authorities. Whatever the decision, or whatever the understanding reached, in my judgment, it cannot come too soon, having regard to the procedure of Parliament and to the rights of members as representing their constituents on the floor of this House.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie): I was not fortunate enough to be in my place when the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) opened his address. But, I listened very carefully to such remarks as were uttered in my hearing, and I take his effort to have been one to establish four distinct conclusions. The first one that I gathered was—and if I omit or misconstrue, I should be only too glad to be corrected—that by virtue of rule 14 of the House of Commons of Canada, disorder in committee can come within the purview of the chairman alone, and that under no circumstances can it be a matter for you, Mr. Speaker, except when reported by the Chair. I take it that that is the first argument offered by my hon. friend from Westmorland. He proceeded from that to establish that you, not being in the Chair on such a regrettable occasion as took place in this House a week ago Saturday night, could not, theoretically and technically under the rule, be supposed to know what was transpiring in the House. From that he proceeded to another argument to which I shall refer later. Let me revert to the first—

Mr. EMMERSON: I did not quite understand my hon. friend's statement; will he be good enough to repeat it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did my best to come to some definite appreciation of my hon. friend's argument, and had some difficulty in doing so; but I understood it to be that inasmuch as you, Mr. Speaker, were not in the Chair when the disorder in committee occurred a week ago Saturday night, you could not, theoretically, be apprised, under our rules, of the disorder in committee, and consequently could not act thereon.

Mr. EMMERSON: What I said was that the Speaker, if he could act at all in that regard, could do so only on the report of the Chairman, and I stated distinctly the grounds upon which I based that argument.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I stated that as the argument adduced by my hon. friend, and only a moment will be required to deal with it. What does rule 14 say?

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order, subject to an appeal to the House.

This has reference to ordinary questions of order, and the thoroughly established power of the Chairman in regard thereto.

But disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

The first part of this rule, my hon. friend will agree, has no application to a case of gross disorder, or, at all events, if I may call it so, a case of impulsive and impetuous disorder. The last clause, however, says that such disorder in committee as may properly be the subject of censure can only be censured on report by the Chairman to the Speaker of this House in session assembled. That is, doubtless, the meaning of it, but does my hon. friend not see that there is quite a difference between a report of disorder for the purpose of censure, and the taking of the Chair by the Speaker for the purpose of suppressing the disorder itself? If it had been the purpose of the committee to report the disorder of any individual member, that it might be reviewed and censured by this House, doubtless the proper procedure would have been for the Chairman to have called you, Mr. Speaker, to the Chair, and to have so reported. But no disorder in committee was reported to you, Mr. Speaker, for the censure of this House. The disorder that was reported for the censure of this House was the disorder in the House after you, Mr. Speaker, took the Chair and constituted a House in regular session and not a House in committee, so that rule 14 is in no way applicable to the special circumstances that arose a week ago Saturday night.

Mr. BUREAU: If there was no disorder in committee why did the Speaker take the Chair?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Surely the hon. member would not say I am guilty of making the extraordinary statement that there was no disorder in committee. I said the committee took no action to have the disorder reported to the House for the purpose of censure; whether or not the committee should have done so is entirely another matter. I will be the last to throw out any suggestion that there was not disorder of the most regrettable and painful type in committee of this House at that time.

Mr. MACDONALD: I would call the attention of my hon. friend to what the Speaker said after taking the Chair on that occasion:

I want the Chairman to rule on this point of order. In my judgment, it has been debated away beyond the usual length, and beyond the usual privileges of debate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was referred to by the hon. member for Westmorland, and if my hon. friend had been listening, he would have heard me say that I would come to the latter part of the remarks of the hon. member for Westmorland in due course. I want to follow strictly the order adhered to by my hon. friend in presenting his argument to the House. It cannot be contended, Mr. Speaker, that you are necessarily oblivious to the proceedings in committee, and unless it can be argued that, according to the rules of the House, you are oblivious to those proceedings, then you have a perfect right to take any constitutional step you may desire to take as a result of those proceedings. I refer to Bourinot, at page 422:

During the sittings of the committee, the Speaker generally remains in the House, or within immediate call, so that he may be able to resume the Chair the moment it is necessary.

And in other places it is clearly laid down that you, Mr. Speaker, being a member of the House, have the right not only to be here, to be interested in and to listen to, but also to take part in, the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON: As a member only; not as Speaker.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, but inasmuch as the Speaker takes cognizance of the proceedings as a member, he knows what is going on. I now come to the point as to whether or not he had a right to resume his position as Speaker under the circumstances on that occasion. The hon. member for Westmorland argues that you were in error, Mr. Speaker, in two respects; first, that you had no right to take your place as Speaker of this House, and, under the circumstances, to move from your position as an ordinary member of the House; second, that, having done so, you had no right to instruct the Chairman to put the question.

I think I have stated very fairly what the hon. member for Westmorland endeavoured to prove. I contend, and do so with the utmost confidence, that not only were you, Mr. Speaker, amply justified in taking the course you did, but in doing so you performed an act that entitled you to the gratitude of this House and the lasting regard of the people of this country. I was rather astonished that the hon. member for Westmorland, when reciting the authority adduced by you a week ago today for the action you took, recited only a portion of the authority you so adduced. It may be, as my hon. friend argues, that the specific rule quoted by you was passed since 1867, but, supposing it was, it has more application, I admit, to a case of disorder that has arisen not in committee but in the House, that you should take cognizance of and proceed to act upon by way of adjourning the House. But it will be remembered that Mr. Speaker adduced another reason for his action in that regard, and that reason was supported by Bourinot at page 521. This authority, which is so eminently substantial and cannot be shaken, was assiduously ignored by the hon. member for Westmorland:

In a very urgent case of disorder, the Speaker may take the Chair immediately, without waiting for the report of the Chairman.

I will not have so little regard for the intelligence of this House as to argue that there did not exist on the night of the 15th of March a very urgent case of disorder. If there was no such case of disorder on that occcasion, then the imagination of hon. members will be taxed in vain to indicate or picture to this House what such an urgent case could be. I assume, out of regard for the intelligence of all hon. members of this House, that there was such an urgent case, and we must proceed to inquire whether or not the authority quoted by Mr. Speaker had application thereto. If it had, then it was not only the right of the Speaker, but his clear duty to resume the Chair just when he did on that occasion, without waiting for the report of the Chairman. The hon. member for Westmorland has argued that in all cases where we have no specific rule on the subject, we revert to the rules, usages and forms of proceedings in force in the motherland on the 1st day of July, 1867. We have availed ourselves of the authority vested in us under the British North America Act, as amended in 1875, to vest this House with all immunities and privileges of the mother of parliaments at any time enjoyed; consequently this rule is strictly within our power. What were the rules, usages and forms of proceedings in force in the British House on 1st July, 1867, in so far as they relate to the present case? Hon. gentlemen who were in the last parliament will remember that the purview of the words, 'rules, usages and forms of proceedings' was under discussion on an amendment to the motion to go into Supply, and received very thorough treatment at the hands of the then hon. Minister of Justice. It was laid down in that debate, and indeed, no authority is necessary to support it, for all will agree to it as a matter of common sense, that the rules referred to mean any rule, especially rules of a permanent character that are imprinted in the books and records, and are established as such by Parliament, and furthermore that they embrace all usages that might otherwise be called the common law of Parliament, and they become usages by virtue of precedent, however rare that precedent may be. So long as they have been acted upon, and are unquestioned as usages in the British House, then they are such usages as were in force on 1st July, 1867, and Parliament has vested us with authority to act thereupon. One would have thought that the hon. member for Westmorland, would have traced the authority for the assertion of Bourinot when it had been quoted by you, Mr. Speaker. Bourinot, in inserting this in his book, thereby gives it as his opinion that that rule is applicable here, and in support of that opinion he quotes one specific authority, the Fuller case, in the British House in 1810. I have gone further back, and I have found an authority of an earlier date; I go back to 1675.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. gentlemen may think it looks like straining the case to get an authority so far back in history, but they must remember that in regarding the antiquity of the authority for your action, Mr. Speaker, they must also have regard for the antiquity of the offence. When I set about to find authorities, I made up my mind that I would have to get pretty close to the days of barbarism in order to get a precedent for the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite on that Saturday night. In May's Parliamentary Practice, page 367, we find that the following incident occurred in the British House in the year 1675:

An outbreak of disorder in a committee, by which the honour and dignity of the House were affected, has justified the Speaker in resuming the Chair immediately, without awaiting the ordinary forms.

That is very clear and pertinent to the present case.

On the 10th May, 1675, a serious disturbance arose in a Committee of the Whole House, which threatened bloodshed; the Speaker thereupon 'very opportunely and prudently rising from his seat near the bar, in a resolute and slow pace made his three respects through the crowd, and took the Chair.'

These words are in quotation marks, having been taken from the records of that time, and the quotation is couched in the language peculiar to that time:

The mace was laid upon the table; the disorder ceased; and the Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again, that, 'though not according to order,' he had taken the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That appears to have been the first precedent; and consequently Mr. Speaker was quite justified in the assertion; but once he acted the authority and the precedent were established. No other entry appears in the Journal than that 'Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair,' and it is Journal entries that constitute a precedent for this House to follow. The Journal entry is as follows:

'Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair,' but the same report adds that though some gentlemen excepted against his coming into the Chair, the doing it was generally approved, as the only expedient to suppress the disorder.

That is evidently applicable to the case now in question.

This incident has not been repeated——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think there must be a misprint there, for the same author goes on to say that it has been repeated.

Mr. MACDONALD: After the committee had reported progress.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will come to that in a moment. (Reading):

—for subsequently when a member who, for disorderly conduct, had been ordered into custody, returned into the House, during the sitting of a committee, in a violent and disorderly manner, upon a report of progress, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

Hon. gentlemen will look the records of that case in vain to find that progress was reported.

Mr. MACDONALD: Take the next case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, we will take this case. The case referred to is the Fuller case, which occurred in the British House in 1810, when an hon. member of that House became disorderly in committee, There was an excuse for him as the records of the case clearly show; but he became disorderly in committee, and was reported to the House in the usual way. That was when the report occurred. Then he was named and ordered to withdraw, and the committee resumed its business. After the committee resumed its business on the 27th of February, 1810, and again became a Committee of the Whole:

The hon. member in question rushed from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and forcibly entered the House in a disorderly and riotous manner. Then Mr. Speaker resumed the chair without a report, and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

That is the case here exactly. Will any hon. member say there was nothing like that? Will any hon. member argue that if one individual enters this House while it is in committee and thereby creates a disturbance, and that that gives the Speaker authority to resume the Chair to establish order again, in another case, where not only one, but say fifty members of the committee became riotous and disorderly, there is no authority at all for you Mr. Speaker to take the Chair? The very circumstances of the case are such as to make the report of the Chairman a matter of practical impossibility, and it is by virtue of these extraordinary circumstances that the Speaker is justified in such cases in taking the Chair. A full report of that case is in 'Hansard' of 1810, on the 27th of February, and the discussion took place on the day following the 1st of March. The report in May goes on to quote another case, not I think as clearly applicable to this case, although apparently from May it is applicable. This case occurred in 1815.

Mr. DEVLIN: In the case to which my hon. friend has referred, did the Speaker not simply come into the Chair to adjourn the House?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. If the hon. gentleman will read the report, he will see that there was no adjournment in either case. They went on with the business.

Mr. DEVLIN: Was not that a case of the Speaker coming in and naming a member?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, nor did Mr. Speaker come into this Chamber to name any hon. member. He came into the Chair to preserve or restore order, and if hon. gentlemen had had regard to this purpose, there would have been no need to name any hon. member.

Mr. MURPHY: That was not what Mr. Speaker said was his reason for taking the Chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will come to that later. The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy) would hardly ask this House to reverse the action taken by Mr. Speaker if there was ample justification for it, no matter what justification might at the time have been alleged. I read at page 367:

So also, when during the sitting of the committee on the Corn Bill, 6th March, 1815, tumultuous proceedings took place outside, and one member complained that the House was surrounded by a military force, and another that he had been beset by a mob, on the report of progress, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and, the matter having been considered, the committee was resumed.

That is not a case that is on all fours with the other two cases quoted; but the other two cases are amply sufficient to justify the action of Mr. Speaker in resuming the Chair, on the occasion in question.

Now, it is argued that, even granted that you were within your rights and that you were acting in the clear pursuance of your duty in so resuming the Chair, you exceeded your authority in ordering the Chairman to put the question. What are the facts? The Chairman of the committee had risen to put the question, was about to put the question and he was on the point of being forcibly prevented from putting it by hon. members of this House either by force of arms or by force of voice.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman's statement is entirely unfounded. There is no justification whatever for the statement that he was being prevented by force. We were appealing to his reason and we were endeavouring to make him hear and understand that a member was on the floor of the House desiring to address the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I said was that an attempt was being made to prevent him from putting the question either by force of arms or force of voice. I was under the impression that both were resorted to, but I am positive that one was. That being the case, the putting of the question was the immediate point of business before the Committee of the Whole. You entered the Chair, Mr. Speaker, which meant that you entered it under the initial authority of the action of the Speaker, referred to in May, in 1675, who had taken the Chair on that occasion to bring the House into order. At page 367 of May it is stated:

> The mace was laid upon the table; the disorder ceased; and the Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again. . . . that he had taken the Chair.

That being your purpose, and that purpose being your justification, then, you were entitled to do all such things as were necessary to bring the House to order. The precise business before the House was the putting of that question; consequently, until that immediate point of business should be resumed, you were simply fulfilling your duty in bringing the House to order. So, I argue that you were quite within your rights in asking that the question be put because it was the clear and undisputed intention of the Chairman to put the question. But, even supposing that you were wrong and that you had not authority to order the question put, would the result be anything fatal? The only result would be that the Chairman would not be bound to obey your injunction. Your remarks would be a nullity or they would be what are ordinarily known as a surplusage. There would be no invasion of rights and if the Chairman was not justified in putting the question, he could not plead that he was fortified in doing so by the order of the Speaker.

Mr. EMMERSON: The Speaker could have named him in that case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Speaker had not the power to name anybody that I am referring to now.

Mr. EMMERSON: Supposing the Chairman had not obeyed the order?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If hon. gentlemen will not agree to my first argument that it was part of the duty of the Speaker to direct that the point of order that was before the committee should be decided, then I say that, even if we concede them to be right in that, the effect is only that the Chairman is not bound by what the Speaker says beyond the purview of his power.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What would be the result on the Chairman of disobeying the order of the Speaker?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If hon. gentlemen argue that the Speaker has no power to make the order the effect would be nil.

Mr. EMMERSON: If the Speaker, not being in the Chair properly, named an hon. member, the hon. gentleman contends that he is not naming him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know what the hon. gentleman is trying to get at. Nothing can be clearer than that Mr. Speaker was in the Chair properly and, being in the Chair with authority, he had a right to be obeyed, and in consequence of any hon. member disregarding the Chair, he was subject to being named. But so far as your conduct, Mr. Speaker, in insisting upon the continuance of the procedure upon which the committee was engaged when the disorder arose, is concerned, you acted within your clear duty in ordering that it be resumed and that the business of the committee be got under way before you left the Chair. So far from anything out of the way having been done on the part of yourself, Mr. Speaker, on Saturday night the 15th March, I contend that under the very extraordinary circumstances, you did what was your clear duty and that you acted within the rules and usages of this House and that, so far from being obliquely censured by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is much more in line with their duty to pay you that respect and gratitude which you on that occasion, as on many others, made yourself entitled to.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to express an opinion, it would be that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has entirely misapprehended the nature of the matter which my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), has seen fit to bring before the House. My hon. friend from Westmorland was most careful to inform the House that, in bringing this matter up for discussion, he had no intention to censure or criticise any action of Your Honour, but merely to ascertain for the future what was to be the recognized procedure of this House in the event of a repetition of the scenes which prevailed in this Chamber on Saturday evening, the 15th of March. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie has gone very wide of the mark and has occupied the time of the House in tilting against windmills by seeking to apologize for and uphold some action of your honour that has not been attacked by anyone on this side of the House. I would say, Mr. Speaker, at the outset that, under normal conditions, I would hesitate merely to express any opinion of my own in regard to the business of this House where my opinion might come in conflict with any opinion or action of yours in regard to the procedure in this Chamber. We all realize that the conditions which prevailed in the Chamber on Saturday, the 15th of March, were decidedly abnormal.

At a moment when there was considerable excitement in the Chamber, without any opportunity given to Your Honour for consideration or reflection, Your Honour of your own motion, while this House was sitting as a Committee of the Whole regularly and formally engaged in considering the clauses of a public Bill, undertook to take the Chair. And the rule being asked for upon which Your Honour acted, Your Honour stated it was rule 161 of the English rules, and you also made reference to the statement contained in Bourinot, which my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has referred to. I have a proper respect, Sir, for the very high office which you occupy with so much dignity and firmness. On this side of the House we are just as intent as is Your Honour in maintaining to the fullest the dignity and the authority of the Chair. We realize that the authority of the Chair, properly administered, constitutes the chief safeguard of the rights of the minority in the discussions in this Chamber, and I am sure I express not only my own opinion but the opinion of every member of the Opposition when I state quite openly that we entertain a very high opinion of Your Honour's accurate knowledge of the rules applicable to the conduct of business in this Chamber. However, the best opinion, and the best informed member of the Chamber, under the strain of excitement, in the heat and haste of the moment, may very easily quite unconsciously fall into error. What I submit to Your Honour, without desiring to refer particularly to what transpired in the Chamber on the occasion in question, is, that Your Honour did not have that time for consideration and reflection which might be necessary under such strained circumstances; and that had your honour had time for consideration and reflection—which Your Honour might have asked for if you so desired—I doubt that your honour would have taken the course which you saw fit to take. That incident is closed and I do not desire to refer to it more than for the purpose of having the future course of procedure in this House decided. There is no doubt there is a correct procedure and an incorrect procedure. My hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has brought this matter to the attention of the House simply for the purpose of having the correct procedure defined, so that in the future if unhappily another similar occasion should arise, we may apply the correct procedure and be bound by it. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that however high my opinion may be of your knowledge and authority in regard to the rules which appertain to the conduct of business in this House. Your Honour was in error in the course which you pursued while the House was sitting in Committee on Saturday, the 15th instant. I state my opinion after having given the best consideration I can to the rules of this House, to the formal rules which have been adopted in the British House of Commons, and after having consulted the various text writers and constitutional authorities and given them the best thought within my power, I have come to the conclusion that Your Honour's action on that occasion was not according to proper parliamentary procedure. I cannot understand how, having regard to rule 14 of the rules governing the procedure of this House, my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie could offer the opinion he has just offered to the House. Rule 14 meets the case exactly; it is precise, it is definite in its language, it is brief; it reads:

> The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

That rule fits the case precisely. There can be no dispute that the House was in Committee of the Whole regularly constituted. If Your Honour's action was correct, what would the situation be? It certainly would be an anomalous one; for we would have in reality two presiding officers in this Chamber at the same time. What I submit to Your Honour is that the moment the House goes into committee Your Honour's duties as Speaker of the House, so far as any discussion in the Chamber is concerned, are terminated, and Your Honour sits in Committee of the Whole just as any other member sits. It is laid down by authorities that your Honour as a member of the committee has the right to speak in the committee, and to vote in the committee. As a rule, it is true, the Speaker does not exercise his right either to speak or to vote in committee, but in England, on several occasions during the past century, Speakers have spoken and voted in committee. The authority for this is cited in May's Parliamentary Procedure, pages 368-369, and Bourinot, page 282. The point is that the Speaker is a member of the committee, and as a member of the committee he is subject to the ruling of the Chairman of the committee just as any other member of the committee, and he has no right to disregard the Chair, or to interrupt the Chair, or to take the floor while the Chairman is on his feet. I submit that while the Chairman of that committee was on his feet on Saturday, the 15th instant, when Your Honour, of your own motion, took the Chair, you had no authority for so doing. There was no report from the committee to the House, and Your Honour's action was irregular if that rule is in force. The only incidents cited by the hon.

member for Portage la Prairie to support your action were the three cases given in May's Parliamentary Procedure. The first case is the old case in the reign of the Stuarts in which, for the purpose of avoiding imminent bloodshed, the Speaker took the Chair while the committee was sitting and stated to the House that he had not done so according to order. Surely that should be an answer to the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) that that case is a precedent which should be followed. It was improperly done by the Speaker on that occasion—done not according to order, as he stated himself. If the Speaker can act contrary to the rules of the House in one instance, why may he not do so in every instance? Rules are framed in this Parliament and in every parliament to bind members and Speaker. I submit, therefore, that the case which was cited by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), which occurred in the year 1675, is not a precedent at all for Your Honour's action. It was entirely out of order at the time when the incident took place and it would be out of order still unless it complied with our rules or with some law or usage of parliament, and I submit that no such law or usage is in existence.

As regards the Fuller case, that is the case upon which Mr. Bourinot has made the statement referred to by Your Honour on the 15th of March. I do not read the Fuller case, as does my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie. Sir Thomas Erskine May, whose authority I do not think will be questioned in such matters, states the Fuller case in this way; at page 367, he says:

> Subsequently when a member who, for disorderly conduct had been ordered into custody, returned into the House, during the sitting of a committee in a violent and disorderly manner, upon a report of progress, the Speaker resumed the Chair and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. gentleman read the actual account of the occurrence?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am coming to that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He will find that there was no report of progress at all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In my opinion, Sir Thomas Erskine May is one of the very highest parliamentary authorities. The statement contained here has run through eleven editions of his work and has stood unchanged in the particular respect to which I have just referred. I therefore take it that there is some reason why so great an authority should have made that statement, and why editors of subsequent editions should have left it unchanged throughout eleven editions. It may be this, that the misconduct at that time was a subject of report by the committee, and, that being the case, that there was a continuing report in the Speaker to see that this first order was maintained. I think that is probably the solution, because the account of the proceedings, to which my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie has referred does not mention that on the second occasion when Fuller entered the chamber there was a report. I contend that the Speaker was merely maintaining his original authority to see that Fuller was again excluded by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I think we may take it for granted that Sir Thomas Erskine May placed that statement in his book after consideration, and that there was a report or the equivalent of a report on that occasion. The other case cited by my hon. friend is the case which took place on the 6th of March, 1815. In that case there undoubtedly was a report of progress upon which the Speaker acted. Even if the first case in 1675 is a precedent, still I maintain that in the face of our positive rule it cannot be treated as such. Rule 14 abrogates any custom or usage. If we give any force or effect to rule 1, then the custom or usage of Parliament relied on by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie is entirely abrogated by rule 14. If rule 14 had no existence or, if it were framed in different language, it might then be argued—I agree with my friend from Portage la Prairie—that there was some authority for Your Honour taking action on that occasion. I cannot for a moment admit that the English rule No. 161 has the slighest application to the occurrence which took place on the 15th March last. That has reference only to a sitting of the House where the Speaker, in a case of grave disorder, may take the Chair and do one of two things, either adjourn the House or suspend the sitting. He has no power to do either except under a motion. He can take the Chair but he cannot adjourn the House or suspend the sitting without a motion. Under similar circumstances in England, Speakers have taken the Chair when the House had been sitting as a House and not as a committee. In this instance there is all the difference between a sitting of the House and a sitting of a committee. If I may point out to Your Honour with great deference and respect, Your Honour has stated the reasons which actuated you in taking the Chair. That is all to be found in 'Hansard' I submit to your Honour with a good deal of confidence, knowing that if my argument is correct Your Honour will be the first member of this House to see that the matter is set right, that you were in error on that occasion in the following respects: In the first place in taking the Chair in the absence of a report from the committee; in the second place in giving any direction to the Chairman, Your Honour being a member of that committee was subject to the direction of the Chairman and could therefore give no direction to the Chair; in the third place in pronouncing the debate in committee closed, because I have neither seen nor heard any authority cited giving Your Honour that power; in the fourth place in naming an hon. member of the House, who could not be out of order under such circumstances unless Your Honour were in the Chair. I do not know what view my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) takes of the situation. It might be well, however, to have the records of the House corrected, if they are incorrect through any mistake in procedure. So satisfied am I in my own mind that rule 14 applies in every particular to the situation, which was evident to everybody who was in the House on the 15th of March last, that I am confident that hon. members after calmly reading that rule will conclude that there is no power in this Chamber, under our rules or under any parliamentary usage or custom to which we are bound to give obedience, which would entitle Your Honour to take the Chair as you did on that occasion. I agree entirely with this proposition, that the English rules to a very large extent are the outcome of recognized usage. Occasionally they are not so. In 1882, the closure was a new rule which did not owe its existence to any recognized custom or usage; it was a rule de novo. The majority of English rules have arisen from well recognized customs or usage which have been codified. Although we are not bound by the English rule itself, if passed after the year 1867, we are bound by the ancient usage or custom, provided it has not been changed by any of our rules, pursuant to rule 1, which reads as follows:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter or by sessional or other orders, the rules, usages and forms of proceeding of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in force on the first day of July, 1867, shall be followed.

Many of them which were in force then are in force now. These we are bound to obey unless we have ourselves provided some different form of procedure. But, taking the rules and authorities from beginning to end so far as I have been able to judge, I cannot come to any other conclusion—and I come to it with the greatest deference to Your Honour—that Your Honour was in error in taking the action you took on the day in question, and that the House should now seek to devise some procedure suitable for such an occasion, if the procedure is not already well enough defined by rule 14. Such an incident may never happen again in this Chamber—I hope it may not—but as long as minorities in this Chamber have to depend upon the good offices and good-will of chairman, the rule becomes a most important one; and minorities will have to see to it that their rights and privileges are protected under that rule; and if they are not protected under that rule, procedure will have to be taken by this House which will protect them.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) has referred to the rights of minorities. I do not see that this is a question that affects the rights of minorities solely; this is a question that relates to the procedure of this House upon occasions of grave disorder. It does not follow by any means that minorities are always to be responsible for such disorders, and I do not conceive that my hon. friend intends to convey that impression. It seems to me that the question is as to whether your action, Mr. Speaker, was justifiable on the 15th of March in resuming the Chair under the circumstances existing at that particular time. Because, notwithstanding that this is stated to be an academic or theoretical discussion, or, as my hon. friend from South Wellington has said, a discussion in order that the method of procedure may be decided under similar circumstances, at the same time, both the hon. member for Westmorland who has brought the matter to the attention of the House, and other speakers also have made reference to the occurrence of the 15th of March, and therefore I am justified in dealing with the circumstances that existed upon that occasion in addressing myself to this subject. The hon. member for South Wellington has said that you were in error on that occasion. Differing from him, I affirm that your action was entirely justified by the constitutional precedents and usages, that you acted, Sir, with dignity and firmness upon that occasion, and that you are entitled essentially to the thanks of this House for that action. Speaking generally, and speaking of course, only for myself, I deprecate the attempt to decide in advance a question of this kind. We are unable as a House to foresee what circumstances will arise which the Speaker of this House may have to deal with. Occasions have arisen in the British House of Commons such as have not arisen before, and the Speaker who is charged with the duty of preserving the dignity of the House and the regularity of debate had to act in such a manner as he deemed best to put an end to disorder. Therefore, I think it is unwise to deal with this question from an academic or theoretical standpoint, to attempt to decide in advance what your action might be under circumstances which we by no possiblity can foresee. This matter has been argued upon special grounds, and I propose to argue it first upon broader grounds and then upon the special grounds touched upon.

I lay it down as a fundamental proposition, abundantly sustained by authorities, that you, Mr. Speaker, have a two-fold capacity. First, you are the spokesman of this assembly in dealing with other bodies —the Senate, the Crown and the departments of state. There is abundant authority for that proposition. To that you owe your position as the First Commoner of Canada. But there is another aspect of your duty, and that is the aspect with which we are dealing at the present time. You preside over the deliberations of this House, preserve the dignity of this House and the regularity of its debates, and, above all, preserve the order of this House; because, I consider one of your chief functions —certainly one of your chief functions in this House—is to preserve order, to prevent disorder, and to put an end to all disorder. Unless this is done, you could have no dignity and regularity of debate and the proceedings of this House and the business of this country would be retarded. Therefore, I hold that one of your principal functions is to preserve order and put an end to disorder. And I say that unless we can foresee the circumstances that are likely to arise, all the eventualities that may occur, unless we can bring before our minds all the degrees of disorder that may exist in this House, it is unwise for us to attempt to lay down a hard and fast rule that may fetter you in the future in dealing with disorders that may arise. Now, I turn to rule 5, which has not been quoted so far as I know in this discussion. It is general in character:

> The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order subject to appeal to the House.

In other words, once the Speaker gives his decision, there must be a reference to the House if any one decides to demand such a reference. Fundamentally this House is master of its own procedure and its own rules, and it is on that ground that an appeal from the decision of the Speaker can be taken only to the House and without debate. The Speaker gives a decision; prima facie, it is good and valid; but if any member differs, he appeals to the House; and if the majority of the House decides that the Speaker is right, the matter is settled; it is settled conclusively, because as I said, the House is master of its own procedure and its own rules. Now, I hold, further, coupling what I have said as to the general duties of the Speaker, that the Speaker has a continuing authority, not only when the House is sitting, but also when the House is in committee—that the Speaker of this House is charged with the duty, insofar as he can discharge that duty, of preserving order in committee, if the Chairman of the committe is not able to preserve order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is the question.

Mr. WHITE: I am not saying that that is so; I am not begging the question.

Mr. NESBITT: With your permission, I would like to ask a question. The Chairman presides over the Committee of the Whole and Mr. Speaker over the House. But if it were not for the rules of the House, would any individual, no matter what you might call him, be authorized to preserve order?

Mr. WHITE: In answer to my hon. friend, we must fall back upon the rules. I stated that it is the essential duty, one of the first duties, of the Speaker, to preserve order in this House, and I said that in my view the Speaker had a continuing authority to preserve order when the House was in committee, if by any chance the Chairman of the committee was not able to preserve order. In other words, I take it that if there is disorder in committee which the Chairman cannot repress. the Speaker, whose duty it is to preside over and preserve order in the deliberations of the House, should interfere for the purpose of maintaining order. According to rule 14, which has been quoted by the hon. member from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee. I agree with my hon. friend that it is the duty of the Chairman to preserve order in committee if he can; but what happens if he is unable to do so? I quote further from rule 14:

> The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) in his very able address with regard to this matter, the report of the Chairman in respect of disorder is confined to cases in which the disorder had to be censured; but we have to deal with a very different case. The case with which we have to deal is one in which there was grave disorder in the House, which disorder was beyond the control of the Chairman of the committee, and that is precisely what happened on March 15 last. My hon. friend has referred to the case of 1675, and I understood him to say that bloodshed was threatened. I wish to discuss this matter very dispassionately and, although I do not mean to say for one moment that bloodshed was threatened in this House on the occasion to which I have referred, I do say that, as a matter of my own observation, a very respected member of this House was standing within two feet of the Chairman, with his hand raised, and I am quite sure in my own mind that the hon. gentleman in question was, in the common law, guilty of an assault, because, by the common law, physical contact or physical force is not necessary to constitute an assault. If a man in an angry mood is standing within striking distance of an opponent with his hand raised, he is, at common law, guilty of an assault on the individual in question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would my hon. friend say that there was disorder in the committee which the Chairman was powerless to put an end to, in view of the fact that the Chairman himself was violating the rules, and could, by his action, have stopped the disorder at any time?

Mr. WHITE: I do not admit for one moment the contention that the Chairman was violating the rules of the House, and I say that the Chairman at that time, who has the respect of all the members of this House, was endeavouring to discharge his duty to the best of his ability. There was disorder and tumult in this House, which, as I am advised and believe, was unprecedented in its extent; an hon. member of this House was standing two feet from the front of his desk with his hand raised in a very threatening attitude over the Chairman; and it was under those circumstances that you, Sir, very firmly and with great dignity took the Chair and put an end to these proceedings. I say therefore, that, far from even by implication blaming you, Sir, for your action on that occasion, the Commons of Canada is indebted to you for the firmness and dignity with which you took your seat and repressed the disorder which had taken place in the committee at that time.

I now come to a consideration of the special cases that have been reviewed in connection with this matter. I agree with the hon. member for Westmorland that the general principle as contained in rule 1 of the House is applicable.

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter or by sessional or other orders, the rules, usages and forms of proceedings of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in force on the first day of July, 1867, shall be followed.

What were the rules and usages, or some of them, of the British House of Commons upon that occasion? It was stated by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie that the case of 1675 was an antiquated case, but we are dealing with the common law of parliament, and any lawyer knows that, in common law, the older the case the greater its validity.

Mr. MACDONALD: If my hon. friend will look at May, he will find that such an incident as this, which the hon. gentleman contends to be so ancient, has not been repeated.

Mr. WHITE: Certainly, and so it is generally unwise to attempt to lay down any rules in advance of actual occurences. In all probability, no such scene ever disgraced the British House of Commons afterwards, and I venture to say—I shall not use the same word, because it would not apply in this case—that we cannot foresee that the particular occurrence to which I have referred—the disorder which existed in this House—may not occur again in a very aggravated form. The hon. member for Pictou says that May asserts that the incident in question never occurred again——

Mr. MACDONALD: Not the actual disorder; but May says that the ruling and the conduct of the Speaker was never repeated in the British House of Commons.

Mr. WHITE: Incidents may never have occurred which would call forth that attitude on the part of the Speaker, and we may never have a repetition of the disorder that occurred in this House a week ago Saturday night. But we may have a repetition of that occurrence, and we may have it in an aggravated form. Therefore, I say it is very unwise to lay down in advance rules for the future guidance of the Speaker, because the Speaker must take such measures as are in his opinion necessary to restore order, subject only to an appeal to this House. I do not argue that the Speaker is to be absolutely fettered by precedent, because, if such a principle had been followed, no Speaker in the British House of Commons would ever have taken a step not justified by precedent; but it must be remembered that the whole of the common law has consisted in and been made up of the establishing of precedents from time to time in order to meet circumstances as they arise. As I have said, it is extremely unwise for us to attempt to fetter the Speaker or ourselves by rules now laid down to meet situations which by no means can we forecast or foresee. We must decide this matter upon the general principle that the Speaker is charged with the duty of maintaining order, and that he must, on any particular occasion which we cannot now foresee, do whatever he deems necessary, as the presiding officer of this House, to restore order, and if any member is dissatisfied with his decision, he has the remedy of having it decided upon, without further debate, by a majority in this House, because this House is master of its own procedure. As I have said, the older the case the better the law, and I will now for a few moments deal with the case in 1810 which was referred to by my hon. friend. Take the 1810 case; what do the journals of the British House of Commons say?

The House resolved itself into committee, Mr. Fuller returned,——

Remember there had been a report before and Mr. Fuller had been ejected.

Mr. Fuller returned, and was violent and disorderly; Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

Mr. Fuller was accordingly taken out by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Where is the report from the committee in that case? Now we go back to the old case, which is abundant authority for this Speaker, or any other Speaker, to act under circumstances similar to those in which he acted, because it is a precedent unchallenged and unquestioned. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) says that May points out that the action of the Speaker on that occasion has not been duplicated since. But May does not say that situations have arisen on all fours with the situation that arose on that occasion, and therefore it is impossible to say that the Speaker was outside his rights in acting as he did. The fact that this precedent has stood unquestioned in any House during all those years, so far as I know, is prima facie evidence that it is a precedent on which the Speaker of the British House of Commons, or the Speaker of this House can act in dealing with disorders as they arise, because it was previous to 1867. What was that case? May says:

On the 10th May, 1675, a serious disturbance arose in a Committee of the Whole House.——

And the Speaker took the Chair. The Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again, to discharge the first function that he has, because order is essential to discussion, and to the conduct of business. He acted on the principle to which I referred at the outset. It is a mistake to deal with a matter of this kind on narrow grounds; you must deal with it on broad grounds; you must consider what is the function of the Speaker. His function is to keep order, and acting on that principle, and on that broad principle which I stated, the Speaker in that case announced that it was to bring the House into order again that he took the Chair. Then he stated:

Though not according to order, he had taken the Chair.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds)

That is, he acted according to a special rule, but in the exercise of his function as Speaker to keep order when the House was out of order.

No other entry appears in the journal than that 'Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair'; but the same report adds that though 'some gentlemen excepted against his coming to the chair,'——

Just as some gentlemen except to your action, Mr. Speaker, a week ago Saturday night.

—the doing it was generally approved——

As it is generally approved here.

—as the only expedient to suppress the disorder.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend ignores rule 14 altogether.

Mr. WHITE: I thought I had dealt with rule 14. I have dealt with the general authority of the Speaker according to the precedent of 1675, a precedent unquestioned, under which the Speaker——

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree that that would bind us now were it not for our rule.

Mr. WHITE: Rule 14 says that, if it is specifically provided for, then the rules and usages of the British House of Commons would not apply. Rule 14 says:

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee.

Very good; but supposing the Chairman of the committee is unable to maintain order. That is what happened.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then he had better report to the House.

Mr. WHITE: Supposing he does not report; are you going to have the House thrown into grave disorder for hours because the Chairman of the committee is unable to maintain order, or does not report. It is the duty of the Speaker on general grounds, as I have said, to maintain order. Sitting, as he had a perfect right to sit, in the committee, and observing what was going on, the Speaker saw the Chairman of the committee practically threatened with physical force.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WHITE: I saw the Chairman of the committee practically threatened with physical force. I am stating what I saw, and what every hon. member in this House saw.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise again to a point of order. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is entirely unwarranted in making that statement. I have already stated in this House that I had no thought whatever of making any assault upon the Chairman.

Mr. WHITE: I will accept that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend is repeating that he himself saw the Chairman threatened with violence. That is absolutely without foundation. I repeat that the Chairman himself created the disorder by disobeying the rules of the House, and by trying to prevent free discussion of an important question which was then before the committee. All I sought to do, and I did it as emphatically as I could, was to induce the Chairman to obey the rules of the House, and to allow the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) to exercise the right which it was the duty of the Chairman to permit him to exercise.

Mr. WHITE: I dissent entirely from what my hon. friend says as to the action of the Chairman. But, admitting that what he has stated is correct—I do not admit it for a moment, but simply for the sake of argument—that the Chairman in his opinion was not acting properly, what was the duty of my hon. friend in the circumstances? If the Chairman in his opinion was out of order, was that any justification for the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) putting himself out of order? I accept what my hon. friend says, that it was not his intention to make any assault, or to use any improper methods towards the Chairman of that committee; but we must gather from a man's acts what his intentions are from what he appears to be doing. Now what was the appearance that my hon. friend gave to the House? I accept entirely his statement that it was not his intention to assault the Chairman; but he gave the hon. members of this House every reason to believe that he intended to assault him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend forms a member of the majority of this House. If he thought from appearances that my intention was to assault the Chairman, why did he not do his duty and ask the Speaker to punish me?

Mr. WHITE: This matter happened very suddenly. You, Mr. Speaker, intervened at the precise moment when my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) was giving the appearance I have indicated. I think that probably the Chairman would have been able to protect himself in the event of his being called upon to do so, but there was not only tumult when you, Mr. Speaker, intervened, but the appearance of an attempt to assault the Chairman. At that moment the Speaker very properly intervened. I would ask my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) what was the appearance of the House at that time? Was it not that of tumult, disorder, an appearance of assault upon the Chairman, the House out of hand? What is the use of rule 14? It says that the Chairman shall maintain order. The Chairman was not maintaining order; but order must be maintained; it is the first law of the universe, let alone this House. It being, as I have said, the special function of the Speaker to preserve order, the Speaker very properly rose from his place in the House and assumed the Chair on the precedents established, and because, as a matter of fact, the Chairman of the committee was not maintaining order. So much for that branch of the case. It seems to me that it is perfectly clear why you took the Chair, Mr. Speaker, and it is perfectly clear that you also had the right, on the constitutional precedents I have mentioned, and on general principles, to take the Chair.

Now, we come to the question of instructing the Chairman to put the question. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie has dealt with it, but I will go farther than he has. I will give, with great deference, my own view. Circumstances might arise in which the Speaker, in the exercise of his judgment, and for the purpose of preserving order, would be perfectly justified in giving such an order as be deemed proper to the Chairman of the committee for the purpose of keeping order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the Chairman did not obey him what would happen?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend for Portage la Prairie answered that. Do not beg the question; either the Speaker has authority or he has not. If he has not authority, then the word that he speaks to the Chairman is a nullity and it has no validity. The Chairman is presumed to know the rules, and assuming that the contention of my hon. friend is correct that the Speaker had not the authority to give him the order, then it becomes a mere nullity, and the Chairman could act upon it or not as he deemed proper. But he had given this decision because the decision comes properly under rule 18. Under rule 18 the Speaker 'may permit debate of the point of order before rendering his decision.' That was the position.

Mr. McKENZIE: In a ruling which we had in this House a few days ago, it was held that 'may' is equivalent to 'shall.'

Mr. WHITE: I do not agree with that.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is a rule of the House.

Mr. WHITE: I think not. But let me refer to that for a moment. What was stated by the Prime Minister was that it had been customary and usual to permit debate. Did he say to permit unlimited debate? It would be a very dangerous precedent in this House to practically cut out the words that 'the Speaker may permit debate' and take the rule as reading that 'the Speaker must permit unlimited debate.' The purpose of the rule is obvious. The Speaker desires to be informed, or desires the House to be informed, as to a point of order, and, with his permission, debate may take place upon the point of order. As I understand the Prime Minister, it has been usual to debate such questions with that limitation.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Speaker gave a ruling at that time. The Prime Minister said that it would be proper to have discussion, and immediately thereafter the Speaker gave a ruling that it would be proper to have discussion.

Mr. WHITE: I do not understand that any ruling was given. I think there should be regard for the rules and procedure of this House; and, if the Speaker had given a decision and it was unappealed to this House, even though I might dissent in my own mind from it, I would conform to his decision because it is to the Speaker that we must look to preserve order in the Chamber.

Mr. SPEAKER: I had no intention of giving any ruling at the time, nor did I give any ruling in my judgment. I stated what was the usual custom in the House, as I understood Bourinot to imply, to permit debate.

Mr. WHITE: That is precisely what I understood. I did not understand that you gave any ruling, nor did I understand you to state that unlimited debate was to be permitted. I understood you to say that debate was permissible, but it would be to delete these words and to render them absolutely meaningless to say that unlimited debate should be permitted. I think it would be a very unwise principle to lay down, and I submit that view with very great deference to the consideration of the Speaker and of the House.

I have dealt with this question on general lines and on particular lines, and I have been discussing the question of the propriety of your action, Mr. Speaker, in instructing the Chairman of the committee to put the question without further debate. I have indicated my view. If Mr. Speaker should say in regard to a debate on a point of order: Now, we have had sufficient debate upon that point, I say that under the authority of rule 18, he would be doing nothing wrong. The Speaker is clothed by the authority of this House with the continuing duty of keeping order, and if, upon a particular occasion following a debate on a point of order and during a scene of grave disorder such as existed here, he tells the Chairman of the committee to put the question, thus exercising his judgment as to the best way of putting an end to the disorder, so far as I can see, he does nothing inconsistent with his duties as Speaker of the House. I submit that as my own opinion, and I argue it on the general ground, as I have repeatedly said, of the paramount necessity of the Speaker keeping order.

On all these grounds I contend that your action, Mr. Speaker, does not call for the reflection of this House because we cannot disguise from ourselves that this is not a purely academic debate but is the result of circumstances that happened on the 15th March. On the contrary, I am of the opinion that we owe you our thanks for the fairness and dignity with which you dealt with a difficult and trying situation and restored this House to a condition of order from a condition of very grave disorder indeed.

Mr. GERMAN: Does the hon. gentleman contend that the Speaker, under rule 18, has the right, having permitted debate on a point of order, to stop that debate while it is relevant to the point of order?

Mr. WHITE: What I am putting forward is my own view. I do not think it has been decided. The Speaker has stated that he did not give a ruling upon that question. My own view is that, if words mean anything, the Speaker may permit a debate on a point of order. It is permissive. He may permit debate on a point of order before rendering his decision. If the Speaker may give permission to members to debate a point of order, there follows from it that, after hearing the debate at such length as he deems proper and adequate, he may terminate it. Otherwise you would have interminable debates upon points of order. If that were not the meaning, how would it read? If that were not the case, would it be worded: 'The Speaker may permit debate of the point of order?' Would it not rather be that: Members shall have the right to debate the question?

Mr. GERMAN: That is permitted to-day, so long as the debate is relevant.

Mr. WHITE: I do not agree with my hon. friend. No precedent has been established, because I understand the Speaker to state that he gave no ruling on the question.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), in bringing this matter before the House for discussion, was actuated with the idea that we should have discussed, for the information of the House, and for its future guidance, the question as to whether or not Mr. Speaker has the right to take the Chair when the House is in Committee of the Whole in any case except when the rules expressly provide that he may do so, or in any case other than on the particular occasions when the committee has reported progress. It will be noted that gentlemen on this side of the House endeavour to approach the consideration of this matter in a calm and judicial way, in contrast with the somewhat heated manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite are considering it. The Minister of Finance, for example, has given us a dissertation on rules of order which is somewhat novel and which indicates that he has peculiar views as to the functions of the Speaker, views which are hardly in keeping with parliamentary porcedure and precedent. The Minister of Finance has given us a dissertation which would incline us to believe that although this tyro in parliamentary government has been in the House for only a session and a half, he wants to instruct hon. gentlemen, contrary—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr MACDONALD: Yes, excuse me—contrary to what has been laid down by such authorities as Bourinot and Erskine May. The Finance Minister undertook to discuss the facts as to what did or did not occur on Saturday evening the 15th instant. I was not present at the particular time that you took the Chair, Mr. Speaker, and my information in regard to what occurred has to be derived from 'Hansard.' I would say, however, that as the Minister of Finance reflects upon hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, I see no reason why in this discussion we on this side should not be permitted to give our statement as to what occurred on Saturday evening, just as well as the Minister of Finance. For my part I propose devoting myself to the consideration of the question as to whether Mr. Speaker, under the rules of this House, has the right to take the Chair under such conditions as existed on Saturday evening.

The Minister of Finance tells us that the Speaker of this House is a gentleman of commanding authority, who can do practically what he pleases, free of criticism, and that in the Speaker is vested some supreme, unusual, and arbitrary power which members of this House cannot question. The Finance Minister, in justification of his position is forced to go back to the days when Oliver Cromwell strode into the Imperial Parliament at Westminster and, looking at the Mace, said: 'Take away that bauble.' He is forced to go back to that period through the whole history of parliamentary government in the English speaking world to find a precedent for the incident he is attempting to justify. I can well understand that, imbued with that same spirit, the Minister of Finance would justify the action of the Chairman, or the Speaker, and would sustain in an equally arbitrary and unjust manner the breaking of some rule of this House which has been respected from time immemorial. The Speaker of this House has certain rights and powers which are founded on the rules, supplemented, in so far as they are not specially covered in these rules, by the usage and practice of the Imperial Parliament existing in 1867. The Speaker of this House has not one whit more power nor one tittle more right than is thus conferred upon him, and the imagination of the Minister of Finance will not bring down from Heaven nor from any other quarter any special or unusual right except what is given to Mr. Speaker under these rules.

What is the condition of this House when it is in Committee of the Whole; how can it go into Committee of the Whole, and how can it come out of Committee of the Whole? After the Speaker leaves the Chair, and the Chairman for the time being is in charge of the Committee of the Whole, the Chairman of the committee has certain absolute and defined rights settled by the rules of this Parliament, settled by the usage of the Imperial Parliament, rights just as strong, just as settled, just as definite as are the rules which govern Mr. Speaker when he is in the Chair. And neither Mr. Speaker nor any other member of this House has the right to transgress upon the rights of the Chairman of the committee any more than he has the right to transgress any other rule of the House. Let us see what Redlich, volume II, page 199, has to say on the status of Committee of the Whole.

> The passage from the House to committee is marked by certain accompanying circumstances. First, the Chairman is changed. In place of the Speaker the permanent Chairman of committees, chosen at the beginning of a new parliament presides. The Speaker and the Clerk of the House leave the chamber.

That is under the English practice and I will show from Bourinot that the Speaker in the Canadian Parliament occupies an entirely different position, because he has the right to remain in the Chamber and take part in the deliberations of the committee, and to that extent he is under the control of the Chairman of the committee. Another indication which marks the passage of the House from the control of the Speaker to that of the Chairman is:

> Another symbol of the change is the removal of the mace. When the House is resolved into a committee, the mace, which till then has been lying visible to all, upon the table, is placed in a receptacle below it and hidden from view. The Chairman takes his place at the upper end of the table in ordinary dress, wearing neither wig nor grown; the Speaker's chair remains empty.

These are the formal indications to the House of the transition which takes place when Mr. Speaker leaves the Chair and the Chairman of the committee of the Whole takes it. Redlich goes on to show in a similar way the formalities that attach to the change of the Chairman of the committee back to the Speaker. He speaks of the duration of the committee and what may take place there:

> The duration of the sitting of a committee of this kind is subject, like any other sitting of the House, to the general provisions of the rules. In adidtion, there is a special procedure by which the sitting of a committee may be closed and the committee retransformed into the House proper. The principle applicable is that a Committee of the Whole House is not entitled on its own authority to close or adjourn its sitting or debate.

And upon that significant fact which Redlich says distinguishes the Committee of the Whole, from any other committee of the House which could adjourn of its own motion, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole cannot adjourn without coming to the House and making a report and asking for leave to sit again. He discusses that phase of the matter elaborately, and he says:

> The end of a sitting of the committee, therefore, is marked by the Chairman making a report to the House and asking for leave to sit again.

That is a peculiar and significant characteristic which attaches to the Committee of the Whole and which distinguishes it from any other Committee of Parliament. Redlich goes on:

> These formalities. . . the reporting to the Speaker, serves the purpose of marking off distinctly the committee stage of a matter from the rest of the business of the House. The resumption of the sitting of the House is marked by the return of the Speaker and the replacing of the mace on the table; the report of the Chairman to the House as to what has taken place in the committee concludes its proceedings.

There you have the method under which regularly the House is resolved into Committee of the Whole and regularly how that Committee of the Whole gets to the House again. It speaks of the significance of the motion which must be made: that the committee do report that the committee has made progress and ask leave to sit again. There is the procedure with regard to the Committee of the Whole laid down by undoubted authority. Where is the exception, where are the rules to be found which justify a departure from that ordinary method of dealing with this matter and the ordinary practice which has prevailed in this Parliament within the recollection of us all? We have Rule 14 of this House, which tells us what the Chairman shall do while the House is in Committee of the Whole. It contemplates that probably disorder may occur in the committee, and it speaks of what shall be done when disorder arises. It says the Chairman of the committee shall report to Mr. Speaker; the committee rises and the Speaker resumes the Chair, and the House deals with the question.

Mr. MORPHY: The rule does not say anything of the kind.

Mr. MACDONALD: What does it say?

Mr. MORPHY: The rule only says:

> Disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

You are misquoting.

Mr. MACDONALD: I was not quoting at all. I did not read the rule; I said what the substance of the rule was.

Mr. MORPHY: You did not state it correctly.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend is worrying as to whether or not I am stating the rule correctly. My hon. friend is splitting hairs. Will he be good enough to tell me how disorder in committee can be dealt with in any way except by the House on a report of the Chairman of that committee?

Mr. MORPHY: The point I make is that the rule clearly says:

> But disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House on receiving a report thereof.

That is not the reporting of general disorder. That means the reporting of a disorder involving censure.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will my hon. friend say that the disorder in this particular case was not a disorder involving censure?

Mr. MORPHY: It was not put forward with the idea of censuring anybody.

Mr. MACDONALD: Who was putting it forward?

Mr. MORPHY: No general report of disorder was put forward. The member who was in the Chair says so himself.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend is in this position, that, if there was no disorder requiring censure, then there was nothing to report at all, and there was no disorder at all.

Mr. MORPHY: I did not say that.

Mr. MACDONALD: Following my hon. friend's argument to its logical conclusion, we get to the point that there was no disorder and that the Speaker could not take the Chair. My hon. friend should not be so ready to talk about misquoting. I was stating an absolute fact, that, if you have disorder in the committee, you cannot have it dealt with so as to have it penalized in any way except by going to the House with it. The only way to do that is for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to report the matter to the House. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), who deals in casuistry always of the highest order, tells us that he has found in May a case in 1675. I have referred to the significance of the fact that my hon. friend has had to go back to the most turbulent times in the history of parliament in order to find any case in which Mr. Speaker——

Some hon, MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD: I will go a step further. My hon. friend might also go back as far as the same period before he could find any precedent for some of the most outrageous rulings which we had in parliament last week.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friends like to make all the noise possible, if they think that anything suits them; but the moment any hon. member on this side says anything that does not suit them, they cry 'order.' My hon. friends have had to go back to a period previous to the revolution in England, back to the time of James II, to find any case in which a Speaker undertook to take the Chair where a Chairman of the committee had not reported progress. That is the situation. Disorder or no disorder, no case exists in which the Speaker ever undertook to take the Chair except after the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole had reported progress and asked leave to sit again. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie tries to argue that Sir Thomas Erskine May is wrong. May and his book through twelve editions have been accepted unreservedly in every parliament in England and wherever parliamentary government has been established in British colonies. It is left to my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie, in order to find some justification and some unusual precedent, to enlighten this Parliament and all other parliaments and to assert that Sir Thomas Erskine May is wrong. When May tells us, as he does emphatically and clearly, that the incident in 1675 was never repeated in the English parliament, he tells that at no time since then did the Speaker in the Imperial Parliament undertake to take the Chair unless the Chairman of the committee had reported progress. I think that he will be good enough authority for this Parliament, the member for Portage la Prairie to the contrary notwithstanding. As against Sir Thomas Erskine May, we have the argument of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie that Sir Thomas Erskine May is wrong in the citations which he makes and in the discussion which he has on that question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I said was that hon. gentlemen opposite had not any statement of mine as against Sir Thomas Erskine May, but that according to the record of proceedings as given by the Commons Journal of 1810 and also by 'Hansard' of 1810, May is clearly in error. The 1810 case substantiates the 1675 case in all particulars, and both substantiate this case.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend was answered on that point by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). Sir Thomas Erskine May has put on record the statement that the incident in 1675 was no precedent. That statement has gone through twelve editions of his book, and has been accepted. He reiterates that in the case which occurred in 1815, subsequent to the Fuller case, which my hon. friend undertakes to say, according to his version of 'Hansard' and of the journal which I have not seen, is different from that of Sir Thomas Erskine May. Mr. Speaker did not act until after the Chairman had reported progress and asked leave to sit again. There is one lonely isolated authority for the proposition that the Speaker can take the Chair on any occasion, whether disorderly or not, except when specially provided for by the rules, and where the Chairman of committee has not reported progress.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MACDONALD: When the House rose for dinner we were dealing with various grounds which had been urged to justify the proposition that the Speaker could take the Chair while the House was in Committee of the Whole. Or perhaps, I am using too general language when I speak of 'the various grounds,' because there was only one ground urged so far as I could gather from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite. There is only one source to which we can go when we desire to ascertain what is proper usage and practice, and that is to these rules which were adopted by this House unanimously, I understand, some four years ago. These rules are for your guidance, Mr. Speaker, and for the guidance of the House. Under these rules you obtain your authority, from them you get the guidance which enables you to deal with the matters before the House. The line between the duties of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and your duties are very well defined under these rules. If we take rule 5, which some hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted—with what aptness to the point they try to make, I have been unable to discover—we find that it is your duty to preserve order and decorum and to decide points of order subject to appeal to this House. That is your authority for the power you exercise while in the Chair and while the mace is on the table. All the powers necessary for the purpose are contained within the four corners of that rule. What that has to do with something which happens when you have left the Chair, when the mace has disappeared, and when another functionary of this House has assumed control of the Committee of the Whole, I am at a loss to see. The rules state what are the functions of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. These are laid down clearly in rule 14. If the Chairman of the committee wants to know what he can or cannot do, he must go to rule 14; he cannot go outside it. There is no use talking about the usages of the Imperial Parliament; there is no use in going back to the year 1675, when the Charleses ruled in England and when two revolutions occurred within half a century causing infringement of the rules of Parliament and involving great changes in the parliamentary system of the country. It is certainly an unfortunate period for hon. gentlemen to have to go to for their precedent.

But the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in this House does not need to go so far afield to obtain information as to his rights and powers, because these are clearly defined under our own rules. Rule 14 provides that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole shall maintain order in the committee, as you maintain order in the House, and is to decide questions of order subject to appeals to the House, just as you do. But there is a further clause to this rule, and in dealing with it my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), showed what I have called the unfortunate casuistry with which he deals with a weak case. This clause goes on to tell how disorder in the committee is to be punished. If you, Mr. Speaker, undertake to deal with a member, you must ask the House to carry into effect your views; and if the House should not stand by your ruling your views would not prevail. So, the Chairman of the committee, when he has failed to prevent disorder or any other infringement of the rules, must come to the House and get the matter dealt with by the House. And unless he does come to the House, the House is not seized of the matter and so cannot deal with it. This rule provides a way by which disorder can be punished, but only 'on receiving a report thereof.' It is an accepted principle of law, and one which the hon. member for Portage la Prairie knows well, and so does the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), that when you have a statute or rule expressly dealing with a particular matter, the expression contained in that rule excludes you from going farther afield to find some authority. Where the House has adopted a special rule dealing with the functions and powers of the Chairman of the committee, you have the whole authority in question; you cannot get it outside. Hence, I submit that, unless you find within the four corners of rule 5 and rule 14 of this House something which would enable the Speaker to intervene, to take away from the committee and from its mouthpiece, the chairman, the right to report what goes on in committee so that the House may deal with it, there is no constitutional or parliamentary authority to be found anywhere. I dismiss the theory that these antiquated cases have any bearing upon the subject. The Minister of Finance, in the new set of parliamentary rules he laid down, seems to think that if he could quote the opinion of some ancient judge he had the best light that could be thrown upon a question. I am sorry that his legal studies were nipped so early in his career. His going into the field of finance has apparently caused him to forget, what everybody else knows, that when a lawyer goes to court, what he wants is not some antiquated opinion to refer to, but the last case upon the question. His argument is entirely inapt; his argument has no bearing upon the question. We have in our own rules everything that is necessary for the guidance of this House, and this alleged precedent, unfortunate as it is, has no place whatever in the present discussion. This being the case, upon what authority does Mr. Speaker usurp the functions of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and take the Chair to the exclusion of the Chairman and without any report from him? There are certain occasions upon which he can do it —when there is a message from the Black Rod or from the Governor General, but these are well defined by the rules, and reference to them is not necessary in the consideration of this matter. Has the Speaker, then, any right to usurp the powers of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole? Supposing he has the right, what was Mr. Speaker's object in taking the Chair on that occasion? The Speaker but represents the authority of the House; he has no inherent functions or powers other than those conferred upon him by the rules. He is the functionary who sets into operation the conditions under which this House can assert its rights and privileges, and who provides for penalties being effected. The personality of the Speaker has no significance in the matter; he is but a necessary element in the machinery of this House. The theory of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in regard to this question is entirely aside from the matter for the reasons I have given, and the whole history of parliamentary institutions shows that the status of the Speaker is as I have stated it; when he comes into the Chair the House is in a position to deal with the report of the Committee of the Whole when that report is submitted to him. I have quoted from Redlich the principle, laid down with absolute clearness, which sets forth the solemnity that attaches to the Speaker's leaving the Chair and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole taking his seat, and the same solemn formality occurs when the Chairman of the committee on all such occasions reports progress to the Speaker and asks that the committee have leave to sit again. While these things may, to a certain extent, seem to hon. gentlemen who sit in the House and observe the proceedings to be forms of supererogation, they have, nevertheless, a parliamentary significance which is of the utmost importance, and which lies at the very bottom of the determination of this question. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, except in so far as he cannot deal with certain questions, is supreme within his own sphere, and with regard to questions referred to the Committee of the Whole by the House itself.

There has been some confusion of ideas with regard to this matter. We must remember that there is a great deal of difference between the conditions which obtain in England and those which operate in Canada in respect of the functions of the Speaker. In England the Speaker is purely a judicial officer. He is a functionary who is selected because of his particular qualifications, who does not change with every change of government, as in this country, and who becomes a permanent part of the British parliamentary system. The history of the Speakers of the British Parliament during the last thirty or forty years shows the status which the Speakers have obtained under their system, and reveals conditions which differ from those existing in this country. I quoted from Redlich this afternoon to show in the British House, when the House went into Committee of the Whole the Speaker went out of the Chamber altogether. Does that occur in Canada? No; on the contrary, the Speaker remains in the Chamber, and, as a matter of parliamentary practice, he is supposed to be here and have the right to do certain things which the Speaker of the British House does not pretend to have. The Speaker of the British House does not interfere in matters that are before the Committee of the Whole for discussion, and never expresses an opinion upon them. In this connection Bourinot says:

> When the House is in Committee of the Whole the Speaker has an opportunity, should he think proper to avail himself of it, of taking part in the debate, but this is a privilege, however, which, according to the authorities, he will only exercise on rare occasions and under exceptional circumstances.

During the course of three parliaments, I have seen two Speakers sitting upon the treasury benches and being submitted to a cross-examination from hon. gentlemen who are now sitting opposite in regard to Supply, and with respect to matters which they were asking to have passed upon for their particular departments. This procedure, so far as I can judge, does not exist in England. Supposing Mr. Speaker was sitting where the Minister of Finance now sits, and was explaining to the Committee of the Whole, the members of which were considering his Supply, matters which related to the money which was to be expended under his control, and supposing any hon. member in the House proceeded, by reason of the strength of his opposition to Mr. Speaker's estimates, to break the rules or create disorder, imagine how absurd it would be if it was held that Mr. Speaker, who was asking the committee to vote the money for his department, could at his own whim and fancy, leave his seat, take the Speaker's Chair, and declare that the Chairman of the committee should not be there! In such a case the Speaker could at any time take the Chair and declare the whole thing had to be settled and brought to a conclusion, and that is the proposition which the hon. gentlemen opposite are seriously putting forward. The question as to whether or not there is disorder in committee is a matter for the House to decide, and this is not a question subject to the opinion of Mr. Speaker. Bourinot lays down, on page 281:

> The Speaker, however, cannot be called upon to decide a question of law nor to express opinions on matters which are for the determination of the House itself.

As I have said, under rule 14, the question as to whether or not there is disorder is a matter entirely for the House to decide, and upon which Mr. Speaker has no right to express an opinion, more particularly when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is seized of the question and the matter is being dealt with by him. Upon a general review of the facts connected with the matter, the situation seems to me to be absolutely clear. The rules of this House determine and define the functions, duties and powers of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and in rule 14 is found everything that is necessary to enable the business of the House to be properly conducted. Notwithstanding the fact that all the rules contemplate that every committee must report to the House before the House can be seized of the matter before the committee, it is asserted by hon. gentlemen opposite that Mr. Speaker can, of his own motion and at any time, take the Chair and proceed with the business of the House. I say that such a conclusion is not warranted, and there are no conditions which reasonably justify such a proposition. When this matter came up for discussion last week, Mr. Speaker, when asked to read the rule embodying the authority under which he took the Chair, said:

> The quotation which I gave as to the right of the Speaker to take the Chair is in the English rules, number 161, which reads:
> In the case of grave disorder arising in the House the Speaker may, if he thinks it necessary to do so, adjourn the House without question put.

He went on to say that our rules are practically the same; but I am sure that Mr. Speaker, on reflection, will see that no such principle is involved in the rules of this House as they exist to-day. Rule 161 is an English rule which applies entirely to the proceedings in the House itself, and not to the proceedings when the House is in Committee of the Whole. I have read the rule, which is a correct transcript of what is to be found on page 139 of the Manual of Procedure of the English House of Commons dated 1912. I think these rules came into force in 1902. The point, however, is that rule 161 deals with conditions existing in the House with the Speaker in the Chair, and when disorder arises it indicates what should be done. There were incidents in the British House in 1905 and 1911 which show how that rule is enforced. In 1905 a discussion was originated by Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman who demanded from the then Premier, Mr. Arthur Balfour, a statement as to the position of the Government with respect to the matter of colonial preference. Mr. Balfour did not rise to reply, but Mr. Lyttleton, who I think was Secretary of the Colonies at the time, proposed to do so, whereupon the Opposition of the day insisted that Mr. Balfour should make the statement. They continued to insist vociferously; the incident is recorded here in the English 'Hansard.' A lot of maudlin references have been made to what occurred here the week before last. Let us go to the English House of Commons and see what occurred in 1905, and in 1911. True, they do not have such curious rulings as we have had in this House but we find discussions in which the Opposition in the British House of Commons have asserted their rights in the most determined manner. What occurred in 1905 under rule 161 was this. Mr. Deputy Speaker, who presided in the absence of the Speaker, rose and said:

> It is perfectly obvious that this scene cannot go on. It has now lasted for nearly an hour. In these circumstances it comes, I take it, within the words of rule 21, namely, 'that in case of grave disorder' the power rests with the Speaker to adjourn the House without question put. That power I now exercise, and I declare that the House stands adjourned.

That was in 1905, and a scene somewhat similar occurred a month or two ago, as will be in the recollection of hon. members. That action was taken by virtue of rule 161 while the House itself was sitting, and the Speaker was in the Chair. It had no relevance whatever to any proceedings in the Committee of the Whole, and has no relation to the issue which we are discussing here.

Mr. EMMERSON: What did the Opposition do on that occasion; what was the measure of the disorder?

Mr. MACDONALD: The measure of the disorder was the continued insistence upon the fact that Mr. Balfour should make the statement on behalf of the Government as to their policy in regard to the question of Imperial Preference. So much for the application of rule 161. I think it is desirable in discussing this question to wipe away the extraneous matters in order to see just where we are. I submit that the right of Mr. Speaker to take the Chair does not arise for the purpose of instructing the chairman of a committee to do a certain thing, such as to put a motion. We have heard isolated and antiquated precedents quoted here, but even such worthless evidence cannot be furbished up to justify the proposition that Mr. Speaker can interfere and dictate to the Chairman of a committee as to the putting of a motion. I do not intend to labour that point, because nothing can be found in the rules, either here or in England, to warrant any such assumption. We on this side of the House are sincerely desirous that this question should be settled in conformity with what are the well understood rules of Parliament. We on this side of the House have the right to freely discuss any question that is brought before the Parliament of Canada by hon. gentlemen opposite, whether it be a Government measure or a private measure. It has always been claimed that this is a free country and this a free Parliament where our rights are settled, where the free expression of the opinion of the Canadian people is given, and where legislation is moulded. That has been the history of this Parliament hitherto. We object Sir, to the resurrection of musty precedents, to justify unwarranted decisions. We object to the arbitrary and unjustifiable expansion of the rules beyond the lines which they were intended to follow in this or in any other parliament. We say that we should deal with these questions in the light of experience, and also in the light of what is best for the future. Hon. gentlemen surely do not want to lay down precedents to-day which will meet them perhaps before they think they will, and which, if applied in the way they have endeavoured to apply the rules, they would resent. I have endeavoured to deal with the question, in the light of all the authorities I could find and with the view of finding the proper solution. I submit that there is no parliamentary rule in existence to-day that warrants Mr. Speaker taking the Chair while the Committee of the Whole House is sitting, without a report from the Chairman of the committee. I submit that that is beyond question the rule of Parliament; it is the law of Parliament, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot find anything to the contrary, or any precedent that would justify the subversion or the putting aside of that well-understood principle.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon): The question before the House is, as I understand it, was the Speaker, on the evening of the 15th March, justified by precedent or correct in resuming the Chair when the House was in Committee of the Whole, with a chairman in the Chair, but when there was great disorder? To arrive at a proper conclusion on this question, it is necessary to know what the facts were, and then what is the law applicable to that state of facts. As I understand them, the facts were that the House was in Committee of the Whole, the Chairman was in the Chair, an amendment had been moved, and the point had been raised some eighteen hours before the occurrence out of which the Speaker took the Chair that the amendment was out of order. During the debate the right hon. the leader of the House expressed the view that, as a similar point of order had been decided previously, it was only proper that the Chairman should decide the question. The Chairman, however, did not act immediately on the suggestion, but allowed the debate to continue. The expression of the right hon. the leader of the House was:

> I think it will be desirable to have your ruling on the subject so that it might be decided, if necessary, by an appeal.

As I have said, the Chairman did not act at once on the suggestion; but eventually he rose in order to give his ruling, as will be seen on page 6518 of 'Hansard':

> The Chairman: The question——
> An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman——

I presume that if proper order had been observed, when the Chairman rose to give his ruling, no hon. gentleman should have stood. When the hon. gentleman referred to stood, while the Chairman was standing, some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House called 'order.' Immediately there was a response from the other side of the House in the form of shouts 'free speech' and 'shame.' The hon. member for St. John rose in his place. Was he in order? He knows himself. I imagine that, as he rose in his place, knowing the temper of the gentlemen behind him, he may have thought that he was leading the Tuscans, that before him was Horatius at the bridge supported by Herminius and Lartius guarding the bridge, and that it was incumbent upon him to take the leeadership in the attack; or he may have thought that he was the great Lord of Luna moving with stately stride and, seeing his followers behind him, cried: 'Will ye dare to follow if Astur clears the way? So he moved out of his seat into the gangway. Was that in order? As reported in Hansard, he states: 'I was angry.'

Mr. PUGSLEY: Hear, hear.

Mr. AIKINS: He stated that he was angry, through and through.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Hear, hear.

Mr. AIKINS: Was that in order to proceed along the gangway?

Mr. PUGSLEY: In defence of the rights of Parliament and in defence of free speech.

Mr. AIKINS: When the Chairman was standing, and then what? We find what the hon. member for St. John did when so angry. He said:

> I emphasized in the strongest possible way the fact that the hon. member for Humboldt was on his feet and that he was entitled to some consideration of the Chair.

Was on his feet? During the time that the Chairman was on his feet? That is not being in order. He emphasised it in the strongest way possible. Emphasised how? In what way does an angry man emphasise his anger and indignation in the strongest way possible when he has not a gun? He does that generally with uplifted fists and mighty shouting. How the hon. gentleman did that hon. members of the House know. He says: 'I did not touch the Chairman.' Perhaps not, but here we had this great Lord Luna—I beg Lord Luna's pardon—setting the example to those behind him, enthusing them with that same angry temper, the result being that he starts an uproar that in the annals of British parliaments has scarcely a parallel and is almost without precedent. It was then that the Speaker happening to sit, as he had a right to sit, in the House, rose, advanced with dignity and ascended into the Chair. The impression has been made upon the House by some hon. gentleman opposite that the Speaker immediately said: 'I want the Chairman to rule.' Did he? We look at 'Hansard' and find that the first statement that was made by the Speaker was:

Order; I want the House to come to order. I regret to say I have witnessed tonight a scene not at all creditable to the House. If I see any hon. member acting in open defiance of the Chair, I will name him.

Although the Speaker was on his feet trying to get order, the hon. member for St. John was also on his feet. Was that according to the rules of order? Oh, I would like these hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who are such great sticklers for order at this particular time, to recall the facts of a week ago last Saturday night and see what order they observed then and see how they look in the mirror of their present speeches. Let these Daniels then come to their own judgment in condemnation. The hon. member for St. John said:

Mr. Speaker, will you allow any discussion?

Now, the fact was that immediately before the Speaker went to the Chair, the Chairman was in his place in the committee, and was about to give his ruling. It was the right and duty of the members of the committee, when he was standing in his place, to obey the Chair and wait for the ruling; therefore disorder arose. The Speaker, in answer to that question from the hon. member for St. John, very properly said:

No, I want the Chairman to rule on this point of order.

Why? Because the Chairman had been interrupted by hon. gentlemen opposite and was prevented from giving his ruling. What the Speaker said was simply this: 'I want the Chairman to resume where he was interrupted, and I want the committee and the House to observe the rule and to see that an opportunity is given to the Chairman to give his ruling.' Therefore, his statement:

No, I want the Chairman to rule on this point of order. In my judgment, it has been debated away beyond the usual length——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. AIKINS: I am glad to hear hon. gentlemen say, 'hear, hear;' that means assent. After eighteen or twenty hours of debate they had not reached the issue or succeeded in convincing themselves upon the point of order. These are the facts, and, being the facts, what is the law applicable? In the first place, we turn to the first rule, which provides that:

In all cases not provided for hereinafter or by sessional or other orders, the rules, usages and forms of proceedings of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in force on the first day of July, 1867, shall be followed.

What was the law existing and prevailing at that date? You, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen know that the law of England, as well as the rules relating to procedure in the House of Commons, have been 'broadening slowly down from precedent to precedent.' It is by precedent that the British law has been established in the country and also in the House of Commons. Therefore it becomes necessary for us to consider those precedents. I submit that the inherent authority which the Speaker has would, even in the absence of any distinct provision or rule, empower him to intervene to maintain decorum and prevent disorder. That is what happened in the year 1675, in the case mentioned by Sir Erskine May at page 387, of the last edition. Comment has been made that at page 388 of May it is mentioned that:

The Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again, and 'though not according to order,' he had taken the Chair.

Yet, he was justified even if there was no order existing. I repeat that even if there was no precedent, no order, under the circumstances of Saturday night, by virtue of the inherent authority which he possessed the Speaker had the right to take the Chair and restore order. But it is not necessary to go that far.

Mr. GRAHAM: Hear, hear.

Mr. AIKINS: I am glad that hon. gentlemen say it is not necessary to go that far, and that they are delighted that there are other precedents. That particular case in 1675 is one precedent. I am pleased that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is now satisfied.

Mr. GRAHAM: You will have to do better than that.

Mr. AIKINS: We will do better than that and cite also the case in 1810, which has been referred to already. The report in the Debates is exactly the same as the report in the journals, referred to by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

The said Mr. Fuller returned into the House in a very violent and disorderly manner. Mr.

Speaker resumed the Chair and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

The House in that case was in Committee of the Whole and the Speaker resumed the Chair, and so we have the authority of 1675 confirmed in 1810. The hon. member for Pictou, of course being a lawyer, knows that courts are governed by precedent and authority, and let me ask the hon. gentleman if he can cite any authority reversing these two decisions?

Mr. MACDONALD: What about Sir Erskine May's own statement as to that case, and what about his statement as to the following case in the same book?

Mr. AIKINS: The hon. gentleman has practiced law for a long time, and when he is citing authorities to the judges of the bench he does not cite the text books, but the decided cases?

Mr. MACDONALD: It depends upon what is the principle.

Mr. AIKINS: As I understand it, the judges living in that part of the country in which I have practised follow decided cases, not text books.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend say that in his province the judges take cases in preference to legal principle?

Mr. AIKINS: The judges take the decided cases if they have not been reversed, rather than the comments of text writers, as fixing principles. These are the cases, and the comment of May, that the incident has not been repeated, is an error, for the established authorities show that he is mistaken, for the case of 1675 was repeated in 1810 and confirmed. I challenge the hon. gentleman to show any case or place where these decisions have been reversed. If he can show us we will of course bow to such decisions, but there are none. Then, not only according to the inherent authority in the Speaker, but by virtue of these precedents, Mr. Speaker was perfectly justified in resuming the Chair as he did.

Mr. MACDONALD: How does the hon. gentleman get away from rule 14?

Mr. AIKINS: We have the precedent I have cited; we have the inherent authority of Mr. Speaker, which was simply confirmed by rule 5, and now we come to rule 14, which is interesting:

> 14. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

The hon. gentleman from Pictou has referred to the authority of Redlich and I quote from that author on page 198 where, speaking of the Committee of the Whole House, he says:

> The procedure as the name implies consists in the House regularly in one matter after another appointing itself a committee so that though no physical alteration is made in the deliberative body its legal character is changed.

I quote another sentence at page 200:

> The procedure in committee is the same as that of the House, except on three points: no seconder is required for a motion; the previous question cannot be moved, and members are not confined to one speech on each question.

If these were the only exceptions, the Committee of the Whole House could censure a member if he violated the rules of the House, but rule 14 adds another exception and takes that authority to censure away from the committee; and so the latter part of this rule says:

> But disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House.

In other words, that the committee cannot censure disorder, but the House alone can, and to that extent the powers of the committee are limited. That is the purpose and intention of this particular rule 14. The House alone can censure, and the only way in which the House can have knowledge of what is done in the committee for the purpose of censuring, is by report from the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. AIKINS: I like to hear hon. gentlemen say 'hear, hear,' because it shows they are following and approving my argument. So that, if the Committee of the Whole is about to censure any member, or if the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is about to censure any member, then the Chairman should report to the House and let the House censure. But what were the facts on the occasion we are discussing? The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was not about to censure any member; but, standing in his place, was simply about to give his ruling on a point of order, and therefore section 14 does not apply at all. Consequently, as it does not apply at all, and is not in point, it is entirely outside the argument and inapplicable to the case.

Mr. EMMERSON: What about this part of rule 14:

> The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House.

Mr. AIKINS: The question is academic, for, supposing the Chairman is not able to keep order, what is to be done? That is a subject that is not provided for by rule 14.

Mr. EMMERSON: He could report to the House.

Mr. AIKINS: If he was about to censure he ought. He was not about to censure, and it would be absurd to say the Chairman could report to the House even if he desired, with such a bedlam as was then prevailing. The Speaker, seeing and knowing the situation, followed the precedent and authority and acted with perfect propriety in the matter by taking the Chair. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) also pleases me in his attitude of certainty; the speaks so self-convincingly, and with such cocksuredness that one would imagine he considers he is the Day of Judgment in trousers, and that when he has spoken the last word has been said. But it so happens that this rule 14 is entirely inapplicable as I have shown, and therefore Mr. Speaker properly exercised his authority to prevent the fair fame or our country and the honour of this House of Commons from further blot and greater indignity than was being inflicted upon it when he intervened.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (St. John, N.B.): My hon. friend (Mr. Aikins) has done me the honour to refer to me in terms which I suppose he thinks complimentary.

Mr. AIKINS. Surely.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am sure that the hon. member, with that reputation he has for Christian forbearance towards his fellow men, would not be guilty, even in this Parliament, of using unkind words to any member, and, therefore, I shall take the remarks of the hon. member to be characterized with that innate desire, for geniality which sometimes carries him beyond his surroundings and even beyond himself. You, Mr. Speaker, are probably not oblivious of an occasion during this session when that was the fate which befell my hon. friend. My hon. friend refers to the fact that on one occasion I had advanced in front of my seat. When the hon. gentleman was making the speech to which I have made reference, he was continually out in front, not only of his own seat but of half a dozen other seats, on the floor of the House. So far as I am concerned, I do not regret the part which I took in endeavouring to prevent as far as possible the Chairman of the committee from accomplishing what I thought would be a most serious breach of the rules of this House. There come times in the history of all parliaments when, if chairmen of committees act in a tyrannical and unparliamentary manner, it becomes the duty of those who are called upon to guard the rights of the minority to act as best as they may in defence of those rights. It is an extraordinary fact—indeed, it is a fact which reflects credit upon hon. gentlemen opposite—that not one of those gentlemen, who have spoken upon this question, has attempted to justify the course which the Chairman took in shutting off discussion. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) says: oh, well, if the Speaker had no authority to order him to shut off discussion and to put the vote, what harm would it do? The order of the Speaker would be like waste paper; it would be of no force or effect, and no harm would be done. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White), with that cautious attitude, which I suppose he has learned how to assume by reason of the responsible position in which he has been placed, although he is a lawyer, says that he will not venture to express an opinion one way or the other. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) has not ventured to express an opinion. As one humble member of this House, and having some little knowledge of parliamentary rules, I shall say that the action of the Chairman was wholly at variance with the rules of this House. I am also prepared to say, and I say it with all deference and respect to you, Mr. Speaker, that the order which you gave to the Chairman to continue in his course of shutting off discussion and of taking the vote on that question, was entirely contrary to the rules which ought to govern this House. What were we to do under those circumstances? We were brought face to face with a condition of affairs which, if the views of hon. gentlemen opposite and the course they had outlined and outlined deliberately for the purpose of taking away the right of free speech which belongs to the minority in this House, had been followed out, would have rendered unnecessary any alteration of the rules of the House. They were applying closure against the rules of the House. They were taking a course which would be far more detrimental to the right of free speech than if they had the manliness to amend the rules, to introduce closure and make it one of the rules of the House. Without closure, without the right to shut off discussion, they attempted in violation of the rules of the House to shut off discussion and to deprive the minority of the right of free speech. When they attempted to do that, what were we to do?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Fight.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Were we to allow the Chairman to continue in that unparliamentary course? If he had done so, the gravest possible blow would have been struck at the rights of the minority in Parliament. The right of free speech would have been taken away. There would have been taken away the opportunity to discuss important questions—to discuss them, not for the purpose of convincing hon. gentlemen opposite, but for the purpose of placing the facts before the people of this country, who by reeason of their being your masters as well as ours are entitled to have a hearing and know what are the views which are being presented in this House, and what are the facts which ought to influence them in the decision which they are ultimately to give, because they are the final court of appeal to which you and we must appeal. I pray that the day will soon come when you will be obliged to appeal to that court of appeal. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance stated a night or two ago in Toronto that, if there were an election, the Liberals would be beaten. I challenge my hon. friend to bring on an election.

Mr. WHITE: Without dissenting from what my hon. friend has stated, will he allow me to say that I made no such statement? I said that the Liberals did not want an election. I think it is the last thing under Heaven that they want today.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend can determine very quickly as to whether we want an election or not. Let him offer it to us. He talks about not being able to carry on the Government of this country, because he has not got Supply through, Supply for which he has never asked, Supply one dollar of which has never yet been asked for except for the purpose of closing up the supplementary estimates of the current year. Let my hon. friend make us that proposition. If I know anything of the feelings of hon. members on this side of the House, they will meet my hon. friend quickly, and will give him Supply sufficient to carry on the affairs of the country until there is an opportunity to issue the writs and to have an election. There is a willingness on the part of hon. members on this side of the House for an election. Not only the Liberal members of this House, but the Liberals throughout the country are eager for an election on this question. The people have not had a fair opportunity of considering the questions which are involved in the important discussion which has been gong on.

You will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, if I follow, even although it may be digressing a little from the subject which is immediately before the House, the remarks of my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins). He has called your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the proceedings which took place in committee upon the Naval Bill. Let me call your attention to some things with which perhaps you are not familiar, and which my hon. friend has not thought it worth while to bring to your notice. During these two long weeks, Mr. Speaker, I can well understand that you found it necessary to absent yourself from the House in order to take the rest which you would so much need. My right hon. friend, in one of those extraordinary manifestos which he has recently issued to the country, says that during those two weeks there was the fullest opportunity for discussion—during those strenuous hours when we were forced to remain here day after day and night after night. Does he call that discussion? Does he call that a fair and reasonable opportunity of presenting our views to the people of this country? It is a mockery to call that discussion. Let me call your attention to one fact, which you may not be aware of, Mr. Speaker, but which you are entitled to be made aware of in order to judge correctly of the conduct of hon. members on this side of the House. I remember the first night, when the second clause of the Bill came up for discussion and the committee was called upon to consider whether the $35,000,000 which it was proposed to vote—and with regard to which we made no question so far as the amount was concerned—should carry. There was an amendment which had been moved by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and which raised the question which has been agitating the people of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to a degree to which no other question since Confederation has agitated them—the question whether their taxes to the extent of $35,000,000 should be sent across the water as a contribution to the Imperial Government or whether that money should be spent for the building up of a Canadian navy and encouraging the establishment of a great ship-building industry. We had been discussing that question for some two or three hours, when one o'clock arrived—a reasonable hour when the House should adjourn. The leader of the Opposition, in the most courteous manner, suggested to the leader of the Government that the time had arrived when the committee should rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. But the leader of the Government then announced, in as plain language as any language could be, that the committee would be compelled to sit until they passed that clause. And the right hon. gentleman calls that 'opportunity for reasonable discussion.' He said in effect that we must agree to pass that clause or otherwise we should be kept night and day until the next Sunday morning before he would let the committee rise. He did not say so in so many words, but that was his meaning. That is the way in which, as he says, he left the door open to 'fair and reasonable discussion' for the members of this House. And I am here to say that during that discussion, although hon. members on the other side did not favour the committee with their views, although they did not present any argument for members on this side of the House to reply to, yet, never before in the history of this Parliament were there delivered in this House speeches more full of information, more full of unanswerable argument, than were those presented by hon. gentlemen on this side. That is the feeling of the people of this country. Compelled, as I have said, to discuss the matter under these unfavourable and unfair conditions, hon. members on this side rose to the occasion; they discussed this great question as it ought to be discussed, and as I have said, the speeches they made in the committee were models of parliamentary discussion and are of the utmost value in informing the public mind upon this question. This continued until Saturday night. All hon. members on this side, even then, had not had opportunity to speak. The debate was continued in the following week. And when Friday night came, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers)—who has had an experience in Manitoba which has rather led the people of Canada to believe that his position is that when people stand in his way politically —the proper thing to do is to arrest them and send them to prison—seemed to think that the right way to get this Bill through was to appoint temporary chairmen of the committee whose views would be known and who could be relied upon to rule in accordance with the wishes of the Government on the various questions raised. And what was done first? My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) was one of the first to be appointed temporary chairman. My hon. friend the Deputy Speaker (Mr. Blondin) perhaps, was not in the House just at the moment when the hon. member for Brandon took the Chair, but if my memory serves me well, he was here immediately after.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I myself called the hon. member to the Chair. I was quite exhausted. Really I was sick.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I can well understand that my hon. friend would be sick. But what does he think of the conduct of the majority of the House in keeping the rest of us here all these days and nights? Does he think that we have greater physical powers of endurance than he? Does he think it is our duty to stay here more than it is his duty to stay here? I have no doubt he was sick—sick and disgusted with what was taking place in this House, the majority of the House riding roughshod over the minority and trampling under foot the liberties of the people. No wonder the hon. gentleman was sick. But that is not the question. I venture to say that no temporary chairman should rule upon points of order where the two parties of this House are divided. I venture to say that when an important question arises, when a member takes the Chair, as he does, only temporarily for the release of the Deputy Speaker, if any question of order arises, the temporary Chairman ought to ask the Prime Minister to move that the committee rise, or he ought to ask that the Deputy Speaker take the Chair and rule upon the point. If it were otherwise, what protection would the minority in this House have? Take, as I have said, the action of the hon. member for Brandon. I venture to say, Sir, that the Deputy Speaker will not tell me that he called upon the hon. member for Brandon without suggestion from anybody?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I certainly will.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I accept the statement of my hon. friend. But it struck me as an extraordinary situation. We had had an amendment, moved by the leader of the Opposition, to the resolution upon which this Bill was founded. No objection was taken to it as being out of order, and a vote was taken upon that amendment. Later we had that same form of words moved as an amendment to the second clause of the Bill. That was discussed for nearly a fortnight. And it struck me as peculiar that the hon. member for Brandon should be called to the Chair and that my right hon. friend the leader of the Government should then, after this great length of time and in the absence of the leader of the Opposition who had moved that amendment take the ground that the amendment was out of order, and that the hon. member for Brandon should be so ready in giving decision, to deliver a carefully prepared argument, with as my hon. friend from Rouville reminds me, the authorities which he thought might support him evidently carefully looked up and at hand. There are some things that we cannot know in this world; but if we have any reasonable judgment we can form a shrewd suspicion with regard to them. I leave the situation with the hon. member for Brandon as it is and say nothing further, beyond this—that the hon. member for Brandon, being temporary Chairman for the purpose of relieving the Deputy Speaker, he ought not to have given a decision upon this important question. It is recognized in the British House of Commons that a temporary Chairman must not decide these important questions. Take the matter of closure; the rules specifically provide that no temporary chairman shall have the right to apply closure. And why is it so? Parliament, both in England and in this country, recognizes that after a member is elected to the office of Speaker he ought at least to try to hold the scales evenly as between the two parties. It is not always done, I admit, but Parliament is ready to agree that the Speaker shall keep himself aloof from party, and endeavour always, as I have said, to hold the scales evenly as between the two contentious parties in this House. So with the Deputy Speaker; that is why years ago it was provided that there should be a permanent Deputy Speaker, who should be Chairman of the Committees of Ways and Means, the Committee of Supply and generally the chairman of committee on Government Bills. The principle was that he should always endeavour to remove himself above party, so that the minority in the House, as well as the majority, might be able to look upon his decisions with some degree of confidence. How much more important it is that these decisions should be given either by the Speaker or by the permanent Chairman of the committee when we consider that there is no appeal to you, Sir, from any erroneous decision which the Chairman might give. If there were an appeal to you, you would feel bound to look into the authorities, and your judgment would become of record, and would form a precedent for future Speakers to act upon. But under the rules of this House an appeal from the decision of the Chairman is not made to you, Sir, but to the House, and the decision of the Chairman is invariably sustained. There is no opportunity for discussion; no opportunty to argue the matter with the majority; no opportunity of presenting authorities to them, but an appeal is, without discussion, immediately taken to the House, and a partisan decision, confirming the ruling of the Chairman of the committee, is given. Do you not see, Sir, how important it is, if the Chairman is to have the confidence of all the members of this House, that all decisions which affect any such important matters—the rights of the minority of this House and the rights of the people of this country whom they represent—should be given by permanent chairmen, and not by chairmen who may be selected upon the spur of the moment, and who come to the Chair influenced by all those partisan motives which influence hon. gentlemen upon the floor of this House.

And what next took place in connection with this matter? The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) was in the Chair. I do not know how he got there—

Mr. BLAIN: How does my hon. friend think I got there?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would like to know by what authority he chose a member of this House to take his place? After the amendment of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and the sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) had both been ruled out of order, there being an apparent attempt on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to shut off discussion, and after there was, apparently at the instance of the hon. Minister of Public Works, a determination evidenced to take a vote, by hook or by crook, within the law or outside the law, in accordance with the rules or against the rules of this House, on the second clause of the Bill then under discussion, by Saturday night, my hon. friend for Peel left the Chair, and then without your authority, Sir, or the authority of the Deputy Speaker, my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Robidoux), took his place. The discussion went on, and the point of order was raised as to his right to be in the Chair. I argued the matter, and I was able to submit to the House, the opinion of so old a parliamentarian as yourself, Sir, given in 1896, that even the Deputy Speaker had no authority to appoint a member to take his place. I am always glad to give the authority of strong and experienced parliamentarians in favour of any point which I raise, and in this case our position was infinitely stronger because of the fact that it was not the Deputy Speaker who had appointed the hon. member for Kent to the Chair, but the hon. member for Peel had sent for the hon. member for Kent at the very instant when that hon. gentleman was on his way for the purpose of taking the Chair. What inference, Mr. Speaker, would you draw from that fact? Would you think it was merely a synchronism, to use the language of the Finance Minister, that the hon. member for Kent should be walking down to take the Chair at the very instant when the hon. member for Peel was about to rise to enable him to do so, and was sending for him? Would you not come to the conclusion, particularly in view of what had taken place, and in view of the intention of the Government that by some means the second clause of the Bill then under discussion should be passed before the committee rose, that there was an understanding that the hon. member for Kent at a certain hour should take the Chair?

Mr. BLAIN: Why does not my hon. friend accept my statement in regard to that question made in the House a few days ago?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have accepted my hon. friend's statement. My hon. friend says that he was about to send for the hon. member for Kent when that hon. gentleman suddenly appeared for the purpose of taking the Chair, and that is also the statement of the hon. member for Kent. He stated that he had come down for the purpose of taking the Chair before he had learned that the hon. member for Peel had sent for him. It is true—and I say it in justice to my hon. friend—that the hon. member for Peel stated that the reason why he intended to send for the hon. member for Kent was that the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) had the floor, and he thought it desirable to have in the Chair a member who understood the French language.

Mr. BLAIN: It was because of the request made by hon. gentlemen on the other side a few hours before, in connection with the same debate.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Hon. members on this side have urged that the Deputy Speaker should take the Chair. My hon. friend has given the reason why he sent for the hon. gentleman, but that is not the statement made by the hon. member for Kent, who has said nothing as to why he was coming down to take the Chair, but simply that he was coming for that purpose, and when he got there he learned that the hon. member for Peel had sent for him.

Mr. BLAIN: My hon. friend was in the House when the hon. member for Kent stated clearly and distinctly that my statement of the case was absolutely in accordance with his own.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is true, but my hon. friend from Peel states only half of the case, and it is his half of the case with which the hon. member for Kent agrees. But it is the other half of the case to which I am referring. How did the hon. member for Kent come down at the psychological moment when the hon. member for Peel was sending for him?

Mr. AIKINS: I understand that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has made the statement when I was out of the House that it was by some prearrangement that I occupied the Chair on the night of the 14th of March. The fact was that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) suggested to me that I should take the Chair for a few moments. I then noticed that the Deputy Speaker nodded to me; I went down to him, and he asked me to take the Chair. I was accordingly appointed to the Chair by the Speaker. I did not consult the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers) or any other person about taking the Chair, nor did I expect to take the Chair until within two minutes of the time when I did take it. I do not make any apology for any of my rulings. They were not prepared in anticipation; they were given as the occasion arose.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I will take from the hon. member for Brandon almost anything if he will state it as a matter of fact. But it would take a pretty stiff statement from my hon. friend to make me believe that it was not known in the proper quarter what the view of my hon. friend from Brandon was as to those amendments, before he was called to the Chair.

Mr. AIKINS: Do I understand that a question is asked?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No, I am not asking a question.

Mr. AIKINS: I had not read the amendments carefully until I was in the Chair, and had formed no opinion at all as to the point of order until it was raised.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, the only thing we can say is that my hon. friend can only justify the judgment which he gave upon the ground that it was a hasty and ill-considered judgment.

Mr. AIKINS: I am not ashamed of it, and it was approved by the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Of course it was approved by the House, and the House came pretty near approving of the action of the Chairman, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) when he sought to shut off discussion on a point of order. Fortunately for the honour of this House, the right hon. the Prime Minister happened to come in at the proper moment and prevented such a breach of the rules of Parliament as the committee was about to commit. It only shows that we ought to be exceedingly careful, that all these decisions should be given either by yourself, Mr. Speaker, or by the Deputy Speaker, who have had time to study the rules, who presumably are above party bias, and whose judgment therefore would be of more value than that of the chairmen who are merely called to take the Chair temporarily.

Then we come to my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Robidoux), who took the Chair under the circumstances I have described. Now, Mr. Speaker, do you think that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister would expect a young member like the hon. member for Kent to bring his judgment to bear upon the rules of the House, and upon parliamentary law, so as to enable him to pass a fair opinion upon the request of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to shut off discussion? That is the request which was made to the hon. member for Kent, N.B., when he was occupying the Chair. After the point of order had been discussed for a certain time, the Prime Minister said: Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion has gone far enough. These may not be his exact words, but they give the meaning of what he said. Then occurred an incident which to us upon this side of the House, who had been under a very long strain defending, as we thought, the rights of the minority of this House, standing up, as we thought, for the great and inestimable privilege of parliament, the right of free speech, seemed to menace and which I thought menaced the liberties and rights of the members of this House. When the hon. member for Kent was in the Chair my right hon. friend the Prime Minister made the statement in effect that the discussion had gone far enough. What took place then? Did the hon. member for Kent bring his judgment to bear with regard to the discussion being marked by tedious repetition or not? Did he seek to bring into force the rule of this House which enables the Chairman to call the attention of an hon. member to the fact that he is guilty of tedious repetition, or that he is speaking in a manner irrelevant to the question under discussion? Not at all. Immediately, as if he understood perfectly what the right hon. the Prime Minister requested, and what he was desirous he should do, he turned his back upon hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and proceeded to put the question to the committee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to go back to the days when you were in opposition, and I ask, what would you have done in those circumstances? As one who loves British fair play, as one who has stood with the minority in this House for the rights of the people whom you and they represented, I ask you, would you have remained in your seat silently, and seen the rights of the minority in this House so ruthlessly trampled upon without making a protest? What could we do, Sir? We knew that the Chairman at the behest of the right hon. the Prime Minister was deliberately violating the rules of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would like to remind the hon. member, who is an old parliamentarian, that it is not permissible to impute improper motives to an hon. member of this House. I think he will agree with me that there is no rule better understood than that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not want to impute motives; I do not impute motives. But, Mr. Speaker, I believed then, and I believe now, that the Chairman's action was not accidental. I believe he acted intentionally. I believe he acted in consequence of the suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minister, made openly. I do not use the expression in an offensive sense at all; I am stating facts which everybody on the floor of this House is aware of. It is absolutely correct, and it would be a pretense if I were to try to use other language. I repeat, I do not impute any motives. The Chairman was a young man, unacquainted with parliamentary rules, and perhaps he thought he was bound by the request of the Prime Minister as the leader of the Government and the leader of the House. But he deliberately turned his back on this side of the House, and refused to hear further discussion when the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) was on his feet. Now, in my judgment the rules of this House give to every hon. member the right to speak upon any question which is under discussion. When you, Sir, are in the Chair, a member can speak only once; but under the rules of the House, and under the rules of the British House of Commons, as they existed on the first day of July, 1867, it is the right of every member to speak as often as he likes upon any question which is under discussion in committee. The only right under the rules which the Chairman has to stop him is to call his attention to the fact that he is guilty of tedious repetition, that he is speaking in a manner irrelevant to the debate, that he is repeating either his own arguments or the arguments of others. That is the rule, and the only rule which the Chairman has a right to invoke. He did not invoke it. Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member for Humboldt was, as I remember, speaking for the first time on this question, a question of great importance, the Chairman, in violation, as I thought, of the rules of this House, which as I have said give to every hon. member the right of speech upon any question which comes up, and upon the suggestion of the Prime Minister, turned his back upon members upon this side of the House, refused to hear the hon. member for Humboldt and proceeded to put the question.

Now, what were we to do? Were we to sit silent and see the rules of this Parliament trampled upon in the manner in which it was proposed to trample upon them? We are here to-day not fighting for ourselves. If it were only for ourselves, it would be a small matter, but we are fighting for the people of this country, we are fighting for those who, in years to come, will be represented on the floor of this Parliament and I know of no country in which it is more important that the people should always feel that the minority have the right of free speech, have the fullest liberty of speech and that they have at least an opportunity of presenting their views. Canada is composed of different races. One race is in the majority, others are in the minority and free speech is a great safety valve. The moment you tell the people that the majority can trample upon the rules of Parliament, close the mouths of the members of this House and prevent them from expressing their views, that day you strike a blow against parliamentary institutions from which it would take many, many years to recover.

I felt strongly upon this question and I did the only thing that I could do; I moved forward in front of my seat. I approached the Chairman and, in as strong, as loud and as respectful language as I could use, I called his attention—and I challenge hon. members opposite to deny the truth of what I say—to the fact that the hon. member for Humboldt was upon his feet desirous of being heard upon this question and demanding that he should be heard. The Minister of Finance says that there was disorder in the House, and he refers to the fact that I moved forward toward the Chairman as evidence of it.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to my hon. friend, who was out of the House during the first part of my speech, that I strictly observed the proprieties of parliamentary debate. I did not name my hon. friend in the first instance. I stated that I had seen a member stand up in front of his desk. My hon. friend who has just come in, identified himself as that member. In other words, he put the question in issue, I had to take it up as he left it, and this brought up the whole question of his conduct on that occasion. But in the first instance I simply referred to the fact that a member had stood up.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am not complaining of the form at all of my hon. friend's remarks. If my hon. friend refers to a member, I do not object to his naming me, because I was the one; there is no doubt about that.

Mr WHITE: There is no doubt at all that the hon. gentleman was the member, but I observed the strict parliamentary proprieties as I understood them. I did not name the hon. gentleman as the member, but he identified himself and the discussion proceeded.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not expect that this thing will be repeated; but, if it were repeated I would, under similar circumstances, do the same thing to-morrow. I do not think it will be repeated. We have been told, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen are going to introduce the closure in this House, that they are going to move to amend the rules, but they will not try to break the rules any more They have had enough of that. The hon. Minister of Finance justifies your action, Mr. Speaker, in taking the Chair by the statement that you noticed disorder and that, among other things, you saw me close to the Chairman. I do not believe that influenced you, because, when you took the Chair, you treated me with every consideration. You did not call upon me to make any apology. I am inclined to think that you thought that the hon. member for St. John was doing just the thing that you would have done yourself under similar circumstances. But, if you had looked around you would have seen eighty odd members of this House who, by common impulse, rose to their feet and cried, 'Privilege, privilege; free speech'; all acting as one man in defence of parliamentary institutions and the liberties of the people. I would not think them worthy representatives of a free people if, under similar circumstances, they would not do the same thing again.

The question has been pretty fully discussed and authorities cited as to your right to take the Chair without there being any report from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I only want to deal with one phase of the question. It cannot be said that you took the Chair for the purpose of restoring order in the committee —order which the Chairman was unable to restore. The Chairman could have instantly restored order if he had allowed the hon. member for Humboldt to exercise his right. But hon. gentlemen opposite—I should not say in an exceedingly disorderly manner, but still in a very emphatic manner—were calling out: 'Order, order'; 'sit down'; 'put him out,' and using disagreeable expressions of that character. We did not mind these expressions, but what I complain of is that the Chairman was persisting in violating the rules of the committee. I will not say that he did so intentionally, Mr. Speaker; far be it from me to do so; but through his ignorance of the rules and because of his desire to meet the request which the Prime Minister conveyed to him, a highly improper and extraordinary action, he did so. Therefore, how can you say that the Chairman was unable to restore order? He was the gentleman who was out of order, he was the gentleman who was violating the rules of the House, he was the gentleman who was trying to prevent free speech. It cannot be said that the Committee was guilty of disorder, for what the Committee was seeking to do was to insist upon the preservation of its rights. When you took the Chair, Mr. Speaker, you took it ostensibly for the purpose of having the question put, and with all deference to your honour

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish to say to the hon. member that I took the Chair for the purpose of endeavouring to get the House in order, and for that purpose only.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I accept your statement cheerfully, Mr. Speaker, but assuming that was your object the strong objection I take to your course is that in effect you at once ordered the Chairman to put the question without discussion. Would I not have the right, Sir, to criticise your conduct in that respect?

Mr. SPEAKER: If it is the desire of the hon. member to adversely criticise the conduct of the Chair, he is certainly taking a very improper method of doing so. If the authorities which govern parliamentary procedure count for anything, they clearly and distinctly state, that if the conduct of the Chair is to be impugned, or the Speaker's action challenged, it must be after notice is given, and a substantiative motion introduced upon which the discussion is had in the House. I have mentioned this before, and I think the hon. member for St. John is to old a parliamentarian not to know that it would be improper for me to remain in the Chair and listen to reflections on the Chair made in contravention of the rule.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand the object of allowing the matter to be brought up to-day on the motion that Mr. Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into supply, was to enable the course of Your Honour and the course of the Chairman of the committee to be discussed, and we have been discussing that question during the afternoon and evening. Some gentlemen have been defending Your Honour; I have heard from two hon. gentlemen opposite that Your Honour, on account of the course you took on that occasion, was entitled to the gratitude of the House and of the country, and I did not hear any objection to these observations.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member who initiated the discussion intimated to me that he wished to bring up the question on the motion for adjournment, and this I regarded as not the proper course to pursue. I had the authority of Mr. Speaker Peel to sustain that opinion. The hon. member afterwards assured me that it was not his intention or desire to reflect upon the conduct of the Chair and believing that to be the case I told him that personally I had not the slightest objection in the world that the rules should be discussed with a view to a better understanding of them. I frankly confess that the hon. member who introduced the matter did not reflect improperly upon the Chair but it seems to me that the discussion has been drifting in that direction of late. I deem it my duty to call attention to it because I think that such a course is absolutely improper.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it necessary to reflect upon the Chair if we question Your Honour's judgment—because one cannot discuss this question at all and be honest with himself and with the House unless he says so, if he thinks Your Honour acted in a way that the rules did not permit?

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia and Defence): You can discuss it without calling in question the action of the Chair.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It would be a cowardly way of doing it.

Mr. HUGHES: Not at all; the hon. gentleman does not understand the meaning of the word 'cowardly.'

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) certainly does not judging from his achievements in South Africa, and of course we are all proud of the fact that the hon. member, unaided and alone, rounded up forty Boers.

Mr. HUGHES: He is sorry he did not have the hon. gentleman to round up.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If it is not out of order I call attention to 'Hansard' page 6158, whence I quote:

> Mr. Pugsley: Mr. Speaker, will you allow any discussion?
> Mr. Speaker: No. I want the Chairman to rule on the point of order. In my judgment, it has been debated away beyond the usual length and beyond the usual privilege of debate.

I take that Mr. Speaker to be a distinct ruling and order on your part to the Chairman to pass his judgment on the point of order. I take it to be a declaration on your part that the discussion has gone far enough, beyond the usual privileges of debate, and an order to the Chairman to make his ruling and to make it without further discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I explain to the hon. member my action at that time and why I took it. The hon. member for St. John made a request that I would allow a discussion and my reply was that I would not; the reason being that I simply took the Chair to restore order, and when order was restored I could not remain in the Chair longer and permit discussion. I asked the hon. member who had occupied the Chair, and who was on his feet endeavouring to give a ruling when I took the Chair, to resume the Chair and continue his duties. Having restored order, it was not proper for me to allow discussion at that particular time from any quarter of the House and to remain in the Chair. The Chairman had been on his feet endeavouring to do his duty, and therefore I replied to my hon. friend that it was improper to allow discussion while I was in the Chair.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Of course, all I can do is to quote what you are reported to have said. I perhaps may be pardoned if I took the view that the Chairman would understand your language as an order that he should give his ruling without further discussion. Then on page 6160 of 'Hansard' you are reported to have said in answer to the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland):

Mr. Beland: May I be permitted to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: No, because I asked the Chair to give a ruling. The debate is closed. I want the ruling of the Chair.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that any chairman would likely take those remarks, if your Honour is correctly reported in Hansard, as being an order from you as Speaker that he should give his ruling without further discussion.

I have nothing more to say upon this question; I think it is one of very great importance indeed, because in a body like the House of Commons the only guarantee of freedom of discussion is that there shall be latitude to the members to speak upon the various questions which come before us. The rules of Parliament have been carefully prepared; they have been in existence since Confederation, not always as they are to-day it is true, because in 1910 they were revised in the ordinary and proper manner by a joint committee of the House, which consisted of gentlemen representing both political parties. I remember that on that committee was my right hon. friend the then Prime Minister, now the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and my right hon. friend the present leader of the Government (Mr. Borden). Those rules and amendments were unanimously agreed upon as being best suited to insure liberty of discussion, to prevent matters being discussed in an irrelevant manner, to prevent tedious repetition of argument and to bringing discussion to an end as speedily as would be reasonably possible. I think it was of the greatest importance that we on this side of the House should endeavour to direct, as far as we could do so, the attention of the Chairman, of Your Honour and of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that all that we were standing for, pleading for and demanding, was an observance of the rules of the House. It would be most dangerous —and I think the Speaker of the House should be the very last to countenance such a course—that a majority should be allowed to disregard the rules of the House. If the majority can do just as it pleases, then the minority might just as well go home and leave it to the majority to carry on the affairs of Parliament. These rules are framed for the protection of the minority. When you protect the minority in Parliament, you are protecting the interests of at all events a large number of the people, whose interests have as much right to be protected as those of the majority. Therefore when the Chairman, as we thought, and anyone who reads the rule and has regard to what was the practice of the British House of Commons in 1867, will think, in violation of the rule which permits freedom of discussion, deliberately sought to put the question and refused to give the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) an opportunity of being heard, he was taking a course which certainly endangered the liberty of Parliament, was an infringement upon the right of free speech, and one which ought to be discountenanced not only by yourself, Mr. Speaker, but by every hon. member.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Pugsley) has referred to the part which the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins) played in that memorable scene of some few nights ago, I think it is but fair to you, Sir, to the Deputy Speaker and to the House at large that I should tell what little I know of what then occurred. Hon. members are well aware that the members of this House during the prolonged two weeks sitting had been taking, so to speak, relays in keeping the House in quorum. During the early part of Friday evening, I had been in my room, and on entering this House I received word by a page that the acting Chairman was desirous that I should take the Chair. Having attended the sitting during the entire Thursday night, I told the hon. member for Brandon the circumstances, and said, 'If you are on duty to-night, you had better take the Chair, and not I'; and such word was then taken to the Deputy Speaker, who, so far as I know, requested the hon. member for Brandon to take the Chair, and he did so. So far as my part went in the drama, I had not been consulted by the then acting Chairman as to taking the position of Chairman. I had no knowledge of any preconceived arrangement by which I was to take the Chair, and I am perfectly satisfied from the conduct of the hon. member for Brandon at the time that he was as greatly surprised as I was at being asked to assume the duties of that position. I have listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John. While listening to him, my fancy has perhaps run away with me. I am inclined to think that, if at any time he should sever his connection with this House, an admirable career is open to him on the stage of this country as well as of the old world. When I regard him to-night in that calm, suave, dignified, courteous role that he knows so well how to display, and when I compare it with his conduct here some nights ago, when he assured us that he had himself equally well under control, I realize that there is a magnificent opportunity for him to develop himself as an actor of prominence and pre-eminence.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. NICKLE: Hon. gentlemen opposite say order. I do not entertain the views held by many people that the stage is a discreditable career. I think a man may obtain an honourable distinction on the stage, just as well as in this House. If the exigencies of public life and the overthrows that occasionally meet us all should bring about the time when my hon. friend might find himself severed from this House, he might turn his attention to that sphere of activity, which is useful as well as entertaining.

To direct my attention more particularly to the matter under discussion, if I understand the hon. member for St. John tonight, the main theme of his speech is this, that the right of free speech had been attacked, that the members of the Opposition and th people of this country had not been given an adequate opportunity of having the naval debate discussed, and that there was a preconceived and deliberate attempt on the part of the Government and more particularly on the leader of the Government, to stifle criticism and to prevent discussion. Such a position is absolutely at variance with the facts as they were that Saturday night. The discussion of the naval question was not before the House, that had been before the House and before the country for some three or four months. What was then under discussion was a point of order.

Mr. LANCASTER: Raised by the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. NICKLE: As my hon. friend says, raised by the hon. member for St. John. It was my privilege, perhaps my burden the afternoon in question, to be in the Chair. A somewhat similar point came up for discussion. The question for consideration then was whether or not members were entitled to discuss at length a point of order. Some one raised the question that there was unlimited discussion in regard to a point of order, and the Chair had ruled as follows:

When the hon. member for North Simcoe was in the Chair the other day, appeal was taken from his ruling in the House as to whether any debate was permissible on a point of order. The Prime Minister, prior to the question being put by the Speaker, ruled that it had been the custom of this House to permit reasonable debate on a point of order, and by that decision, of course, as Chairman to-day, I abide. If any hon. member cares to discuss the question briefly as to whether or not the hon. member for Red Deer was in order, the discussion being relevant, I am prepared to hear it, but I am not prepared to hear discussion on any other point.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Who was the Chairman?

Mr. NICKLE: The speaker (Mr. Nickle) was the Chairman. Certainly, that ruling and decision on the point clearly establishes the principle that this House recognizes that on a point of order the question of the length of the discussion was in the discretion and within the control of the Chairman. That is not a question of the right of free speech at all; it is a question as to what length the Chairman thinks the committee should go in setting before him such information as may enable him to correctly interpret the spirit and the rules of this House.

Mr. WILSON: Where is the rule about that?

Mr. NICKLE: I think it is rule 18:

A member addressing the House shall, if called to order by the Speaker or by any other member, sit down while the point of order is being stated, after which he may explain. The Speaker may permit debate of the point of order before rendering his decision——

Mr. WILSON: How about the Chairman?

Mr. NICKLE: I am endeavouring to answer one question at a time. That is the best I can do.

—but such debate must be strictly relevant to the point of order taken.

There is another rule in this book—I cannot give the number which states that the rules that apply to the House with the Speaker in the Chair shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to the Chairman when the House is in committee. Therefore if it is within the jurisdiction of the Speaker to say when a debate on a point of order shall cease, it is within the jurisdiction of the Chairman to apply that same rule on the same principle; and if the hon. member who has interrupted me knows of any authority to the contrary, I will give him the opportunity to state that authority.

Mr. WILSON: The hon. gentleman knows very well that a member is allowed to speak only once when the Speaker is in the Chair, but that he may speak many times when the Chairman is in the Chair.

Mr. NICKLE: I regret that my remarks were not listened to by my hon. friend. I can only express to him, in my vague and unsatisfactory way, what the rules of this House say. I cannot bring to him understanding of their import.

Mr. McKENZIE: I desire to ask a question. Referring to page 4945 of 'Hansard, I find the following:

Mr. Borden: I think it has always been the custom and practice, both in committee and in the House, that there should be reasonable discussion of any point of order before there is a ruling from the Chair.

* * * * * *

Mr. Speaker: Will the House allow me to make an explanation? As the rule is laid down here, it says: 'the point of order may be debated.' I take it that that is the usual phraseology used in Acts of Parliament where 'may' means 'shall' or 'must.'

That has not been appealed from, and must not that be regarded as established?

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not give a ruling at all, but as the appeal to the House had been settled, so that members might understand it, I quoted from Bourinot with reference to a matter which was not covered by the rules, and said that was my understanding of it.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is a ruling.

Mr. NICKLE: So much with reference to what was before the House on that Saturday evening. Now, to come to what I may call the action on appeal. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Robidoux) who was in the Chair, as I remember, had listened with considerable patience to a long and perhaps somewhat tedious debate. He rose to give his decision when, as the hon. member for St. John says, several members on the other side of the House rose to their feet and persistently protested most vigorously against what he was about to do. I have no right to impute motives to hon. members. But it is a well known fact that for some two weeks the stress and strain in this House had been most severe. Members' nerves were frayed and the slightest thing caused apprehension and, to an extent, discord. The rumor had been rife in the corridors that the Government were contemplating some extraordinary move to cut off discussion. I am inclined to think that hon. members opposite, in their anxiety and owing to their loss of sleep, hugged this delusion to themselves till they came to the conclusion that the thought in their minds was the actuality; and when the hon. member for Kent rose they thought that critical moment had come, that the crisis was here, they thought the time had come for a dramatic scene that would permit them to pose before the country as martyrs for free speech. But what is free speech in the deliberations of a body of this kind? Does it consist of tiresome reiterations and repetitions? Does it consist in a multitude of words at times devoid of argument? Is not the very object of free speech that men may be convinced? It seems to me that there are men in this House who come here with the sincere desire to give some of their time and no little service to the country; and I use the expression advisedly, when I say that if there are many sittings of this sort, if the time of this House is to be taken up by numerous and innumerable speeches such as we have had to listen to, the time is not far distant when Parliament will be filled by professional politicians and the business interest of this country will not be represented. There are men on this side, and I know that there are men on the other side, who object most strongly to the terrible waste of time that has gone on here. Of course, ambition carries men away. I have admitted and do admit that it is an ambition that any man may cherish to occupy a Government seat, to be leader of a department and to impress his individuality upon the country. But there does come a time when, in my judgment, discussion should cease. Members who come here, not with the desire simply to advance their political interests but to give some of their time to their country, to their constituency and to the advocacy of the principles which they believe are right, should not be discouraged from entering public life, that the affairs of the country may fall altogether into the hands of the so-called professional politicians. I sympathize with men who have occupied prominent positions, and who, through the irony of fate, or, as they think, the caprice of the electorate, have been hurled from high place and either driven out of this House or left on the Opposition benches. But we have majority rule in this country. That is the principle upon which our government is founded—that the party that leads in an election shall be allowed to rule. And gentlemen opposite should conform to that principle; they should not risk all the principles to which we attach importance on a so-called gambler's chance in the hope that they may lure the electors back to their allegiance and restore themselves to the seats of power. Perhaps I should not go into this matter at such length; but I speak as one who regrets the unfortunate waste of time which has taken place in this House during the past three or four months through the tedious repetition of arguments and weary reiteration of words. As I say, the hon. member for St. John is utterly wrong when he says there was any effort to stifle free speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NICKLE: Hon. members opposite may laugh, but the attitude of the Chairman, as I understand it, on that occasion, was that he had listened to the discussion of the point of order ad nauseam for two hours and a half. Words had been passed two and fro across the Chamber until everybody was familiar with everything that could be said on the subject, and the Chairman then rose to give his ruling. Suddenly bedlam prevailed. The hon. member for St.

John made himself the centre of attraction and stepped out into the spot-light as if in an attempt to say to the House: See what a brave boy am I! He admits that a new man was in the Chair; he admits that he was an old parliamentarian; he admits that bedlam prevailed; he admits that the Chairman was doing the best he could to bring about order, and yet he, an old parliamentarian——

Mr. PUGSLEY: I made no such admission. What I said was that, in my judgment, the Chairman was doing everything to bring about disorder, because he was breaking the rules of the House.

Mr. NICKLE: I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation as far as it goes; but he does not say that an old parliamentarian did not leave his seat and come forward in —certainly to those of us who were opposite—a threatening manner.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I positively deny that. I did not come forward in a threatening manner, and I did not give to any reasonable man the slightest indication that I intended to touch the Chairman. All I did was to demand a hearing for the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely).

Mr. NICKLE: I take this explanation of the hon. gentleman for all it is worth. In this connection I understood him to say: 'I was angry through and through; I rose from my seat and advanced to the centre of the Chamber towards the Chairman.' My hon. friend says he did not do so in a threatening manner; then why did he leave his seat and come towards the Chairman? Was it to prevent the Chairman from giving his ruling? Was it for the purpose of intimidation, or merely to get more, shall I say, notoriety?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Chairman's deaf ear was turned to this side.

Mr. NICKLE: It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to endeavour to make a farce of this matter; but he has been too long in this House not to know that he should not endeavour to twist what took place on Saturday night into a burlesque. It was one of the most serious occurrences that ever took place in this House, and if it had not been for the tact and judgment of the right hon. leader of this Government, we would have witnessed in this House a scene of which Canada would everlastingly have been ashamed. It is to be regretted by every member of this House that the hon. member for St. John has said that not only did he do this gloryingly, but that he would do it again if similar circumstances arose. I trust that there never will be an opportunity for hon. members of this House to witness such a scene as occurred on that memorable Saturday night.

Looking at the question from a constitutional point of view my statements on this occasion are made without careful preparation, although I did look into the question about a week ago. As I understand the rules of this House, the English rules as they stood on the 1st day of July, 1867, have been adopted. A careful perusal of the standing orders of the English House during the year 1867 does not reveal any rule or regulation which would prevent the Speaker, in the case of the House being in disorder, from taking the Chair. If there was no rule of the English House in 1867, and if there is none in this House to-day that prevents the Speaker from taking the Chair when the House or a committee thereof becomes disorderly, then I submit we must go back over the usages and precedents of the English House, upon which the procedure of this House is founded, and be guided by them. In the year 1600 or thereabouts there was a disturbance in the English House on a division, and the Speaker took the Chair and called the House to order; and by referring to the Parliamentary Debates, volume 15, pages 641 and 642, it will be seen that there was another disorder, when the House was in committee and the Speaker took the Chair and called the House to order. I submit, unless we have precedents to the contrary, and in direct opposition to those two precedents, that when the House was in disorder on that Saturday night, you, Mr. Speaker, were entitled to take the Chair, and that you did exactly what you should have done as a responsible officer of this House. You took the Chair, restored the House to order, left the Chair, and the Chairman resumed his position. Your duty is to act as the arbiter of Parliament; we look to you to maintain the dignity of the House, to see that there is freedom of debate and that the rules are observed. If at any time it happens that the House is in disorder, and you, Sir, are not in the Chair, we feel that it is your privilege and your duty again to resume the position of distinction that you occupy, so that the prestige and honour and respect which all houses of parliament feel they owe to their Speaker would at all times bring the House to a sense of its proper position; and this House owes a debt of gratitude to you for having, on the night in question, by your courage and foresight, assumed the responsibility of taking the Chair and having prevented what we all greatly feared would become——

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order. If, Sir, you will not permit any criticism of your conduct, I claim it is out of order to receive praise of your conduct.

Mr. SPEAKER: The words by which I am guided are 'reflection upon the Chair.' I would be very glad if the incident were not discussed at all. I have tolerated a good deal of what in my judgment is not exactly according to our rules—the reference to and discussion of a previous debate; but, as it is a matter concerning myself, from delicacy I have refrained from interfering.

Mr. NICKLE: I had not the slightest intention of using any words of praise in regard to you, Mr. Speaker; I was simply trying to state the cold truth. If the hon. member for St. John objects to that, I must allow your conduct to speak for itself, and I am quite satisfied that the members of this House feel that no words of mine could add any lustre to the course adopted by you on the night in question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: As I rise to discuss the matter which has been engaging the attention of the House for several hours, perhaps I may be allowed to say that I will endeavour to review the discussion in as judicial a spirit as possible. The rules of the House are certainly the bulwark of freedom, and it is the interest of every member, whether he sits on one side of the Speaker or on the other, to preserve those rules, whether it be to his immediate gain or to his immediate loss. For, if there is any endeavour by one side of the House to evade the rules, or to abuse them, the party so guilty is sure to prepare for himself whips of scorpions from which he will suffer sooner or later.

At the present time we are engaged in the task of reviewing a decision taken by Mr. Speaker. Let me say at once, Mr. Speaker, that in so doing, in starting the discussion on this side of the House, there is no intention at all to discuss or to reflect upon the motives which guided your conduct. Even although we may differ from you on the course which you took, we fully recognize that, in acting as you did, you had no motive but what was certainly consistent with a proper understanding of your duty as presiding officer of this House. But, Sir, we are all human, and we are all fallible. The rules of the House have been established because we are human and fallible, and in order to guide us, so far as they can guide us, in the many incidents of parliamentary life. You, Sir, are the first commoner of the land, and we are all delighted to bear testimony to the care with which you have discharged your duties. Even though we differ from you, I repeat, it is certainly not from any desire to reflect upon you, but simply to indicate what we think ought to be a proper discharge of the duties with which you are entrusted.

The question which we have to debate and decide at the present time is as to whether Mr. Speaker had the right, when the House was in Committee of the Whole, to interrupt the sittings of the Committee and to take the Chair. A good deal of matter has been brought into the discussion which I think can be brushed aside; it would be better for us to keep to the point immediately at issue. The point at issue, as I understand it, is whether or not Mr. Speaker has the right to interrupt the sittings of the Committee of the Whole and to take the Chair. This is the point on which we on this side of the House take exception. On a certain occasion, that is to say, on Saturday, the 15th of March, when the House was sitting in Committee, Mr. Speaker interrupted the Committee and took the Chair. At that moment, and on the Tuesday following, some members of the House asked Mr. Speaker what his authority was for having taken that course. With all respect, Sir, in order to state the point and to establish the basis of discussion, I may, with your permission, quote the authority which you yourself gave, and in your own words. On Tuesday, March 18, Mr. Speaker said:

> 'Amongst other things he decides only when questions actually arise. If a member wishes to challenge his action or conduct, he must proceed in the usual way, by giving notice of a motion on the subject.'

That finishes the quotation. Then Mr. Speaker went on to say:

> The quotation which I gave as to the right of the Speaker to take the Chair is in the English rules, number 161, which reads:
> 'In the case of grave disorder arising in the House the Speaker may, if he thinks it necessary to do so, adjourn the House without question.'
> This has been changed a little. The older wording was:
> '—take the Chair at any stage and adjourn the House if necessary.'
> Our rule lays down that in case of grave disorder the Speaker's duty is to take the Chair at any time, and if he is unable to get the House under control, to adjourn the House of his own motion.
> Mr. Emmerson: What is the number of our rule?
> Mr. Speaker: We have no distinct rule.
> Mr. Murphy: Did I understand Your Honour to say in answer to the hon. member for Westmorland that we have no rule corresponding to No. 161 of the English rules?
> Mr. Speaker: I said no exact rule corresponding to that.

That is the authority which was claimed by Mr. Speaker for taking the course which he did. Now, in the light of discussions which have taken place up to the present time, I think, with all due respect to you, Sir, that the rule which you quoted would not warrant the action which you took on that occasion. Rule 161 of the House of Commons of England, which, by the way, is simply the companion of rule 21, is stated in these words:

> In the case of grave disorder arising in the House, the Speaker, may, if he thinks it necessary to do so, adjourn the House without question put, or suspend any sitting for a time to be named by him.

So far as my researches have gone, and I think upon this point they have been complete and accurate, this rule did not exist in 1867, at the time of Confederation. This rule of the House of Commons, which clothes Mr. Speaker with the power to adjourn the House, has been passed since 1867, and, if that be so, it would not apply. Therefore, that authority cannot be authority in this House. Moreover, if the rule were to apply, the authority which it gives to Mr. Speaker is not to interrupt the Committee of the Whole and to take the Chair, but simply to take the Chair and adjourn the House. I believe it has been acknowledged by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken upon the subject during the day that this rule would not apply.

It has been argued by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins) and by others who have spoken on the same side of the House that, from the inherent power vested in his office, according to the law of Parliament, Mr. Speaker has the power to interrupt the Committee of the Whole and to take the Chair, if he thinks it advisable to do so in order to preserve order. I think I put the case fairly, accurately, and exactly as it has been put by those who have justified the action taken by Mr. Speaker. They have not founded his authority upon rule 161, which admittedly cannot apply to our case, since it was enacted subsequent to 1867, but they have founded it upon the inherent power of the Speaker. Now, the law of Parliament is derived from two sources. It is derived from the positive enactments of the House which the House establishes from time to time for its own guidance, and which are the rules which anybody can read, and from precedents which have come to us from the House of Commons in England, the mother of Parliaments, and which, by long repetition have received the sanction of law. It has been argued by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) that the Speaker had such authority, and that he found it in these precedents. He has gone back to the precedent of 1675. I have only to observe to my hon. friend that he can find no authority in the precedent of 1675. It is true that on the occasion to which he referred the Speaker of the House interrupted the Committee of the Whole and took the Chair. That is quite true; but the Speaker did so, not because he had the authority to do so vested in him by reason of his office; the Speaker on that occasion stated positively that he had no such authority. Let me quote to my hon. friend the words which we find in the books upon this point:

> On the 10th May, 1675, a serious disturbance arose in a Committee of the Whole House, which threatened bloodshed; the Speaker thereupon, 'very opportunely and prudently rising from his seat near the bar, in a resolute and slow pace, made his three respects through the crowd, and took the Chair.' The mace was laid upon the table; the disorder ceased; and the Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again, that, 'though not according to order,' he had taken the Chair.

He had taken the Chair although it was not according to order. Therefore, the Speaker of that day himself acknowledged that he was acting without authority. If the action which was taken by that Speaker had been a precedent, and had been followed by other precedents, these precedents would be by Parliament to this day. The rules of Parliament have been brought down from precedent to precedent, and when a precedent has been accepted and followed it becomes the law of Parliament. It is because the Speaker who took that action said that he was acting against the law, and because the incident was an isolated case, that his example was not followed. If that be the case, there is no argument at all in the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. He cannot base the assertion that this power is vested in the Speaker on any such authority as that. There was an incident on a certain occasion afterwards in the British House of Commons, and what took place? Did the Speaker then take the Chair? Nothing of the kind. The conduct of the offending member was referred to and action was taken by the House. A third case of disorder is mentioned, and the question arises as to what then took place—whether the Speaker took the Chair of his own motion or whether there was a report to the House. The Journals of the House have been carefully looked at; but they are not very clear, and, if we are to take the statement that appears in them, it would seem to justify the assertion made by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie that the Speaker had taken the Chair without any report from the Committee. Let us look at the evidence and try to ascertain what the facts are. It is no use trying to delude ouselves by saying that these words have a meaning which a closer examination does not justify. If the matter were absolutely plain, there would be no occasion to discuss it. I will read to the House what the Journals relate of the incident of that day. It took place on the 27th of February, 1810:

The House resolved itself into the committee; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair; and Sir John Anstruther reported from the committee, that they had examined a witness, and had made a further progress in the matters to them referred; and that he was directed by the committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

And the House being informed, that a member of the committee had misbehaved himself during the sitting of the committee, making use of profane oaths, and disturbing their proceedings;

John Fuller, Esquire, member for Sussex, the member complained of, was heard to excuse himself; in the doing of which he gave greater offence by repeating and persisting in his disorderly conduct:—Mr. Speaker thereupon called upon the said Mr. Fuller by his name; upon which Mr. Fuller was directed to withdraw; and he withdrew accordingly.

Ordered, Nemine Contradicente, that the said John Fuller, Esquire, for his offensive words and disorderly conduct, be taken into custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House; and that Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant accordingly.

And the Sergeant-at-Arms having informed the House, that he had, pursuant to their order, taken into his custody the said Mr. Fuller;

Resolved, that this House will, immediately, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, to inquire further into the policy and conduct of the late exhibition to the Scheldt:—The House accordingly resolved itself into the committee; and, after some time spent therein;

The said Mr. Fuller returning into the House in a very violent and disorderly manner; Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and ordered the sergeant to do his duty; Mr. Fuller was accordingly taken out by the sergeant, assisted by his messengers.

Then the House again resolved itself into the committee.

This account would perhaps justify the version which was given by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie, that upon the second occasion, Mr. Speaker had taken the Chair without any report to the House. However, May, who relates this incident, who writes the standard book upon parliamentary procedure, and who is a careful writer, does not read the incident as my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie does, because he says that upon the second occasion there was a report from the committee to the House. Let me read the incident as related by May:

This incident has not been repeated, for subsequently when a member who, for disorderly conduct, had been ordered into custody, returned into the House, during the sitting of a committee, in a violent and disorderly manner, upon a report of progress, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and ordered the Sergeant to do his duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

You see there that, after the member had been taken into custody, he came back into the House while the House was in committee and was disorderly again, and that, upon report, the Speaker took the Chair and ordered the sergeant to do his duty. In this matter it seems to me that we should be guided as to what is the usage of Parliament by May, who is the standard authority, in preference to anybody else. Whatever may be the true history of this incident, it is clear from the testimony of May, the author of the book which we are accustomed to follow, that, under such circumstances, the Speaker has no authority to take the Chair except upon a report. Is this not absolutely in accordance with the spirit of our parliamentary system? The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole for what purpose? In order that a certain measure which is engaging the attention of the House shall be discussed more minutely than it can be with the Speaker in the Chair. It is a rule of the House, well known and never disputed, that when a measure has been committed to the Committee of the Whole, the Committee of the Whole remains seized of it until it has completed its examination of the measure and reported to the Speaker. If this cannot be done in one sitting, the rule is that the Committee must report and ask leave to sit again. It is the rule that, if it does not ask leave to sit again, the measure disappears from the Order Paper, and it cannot be restored unless by special order of the House. These rules are well known. If these rules are well known and cannot be controverted, how can it be contended that at any time the Speaker of the House can come in, interrupt the proceedings of the Committee and assume authority over it? All the authorities I have cited are against that.

Then, we have a third precedent, quoted also by May, which was established in the year 1815. May says:

So also, when during the sitting of the committee on the Corn Bill, 6th March, 1815, tumultuous proceedings took place outside, and one member complained that the House was surrounded by a military force, and another that he had been beset by a mob, on the report of progress, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and, the matter having been considered, the committee was resumed.

That is the law as I understand it. The Speaker, when he is in the Chair, is the supreme judge as between the different members of the House. The moment Mr. Speaker leaves the Chair, he is simply an ordinary member of the House, with the right to sit in the Committee of the House and to take part in the proceedings of that committee. He can debate, he can give his opinion, and the authorities say that in the eighteenth century it was customary for the Speaker to take part in the proceedings of the House. It is well known that in the legislature of Lower Canada Mr. Papineau, when Speaker, left the Chair, took his place on the floor of the House, and participated prominently in the discussions; a course which would not be tolerated to-day. As time went on it was looked upon as unseemly for the Speaker to take part in any proceeding in the House. Of course, on matters which are not of a political nature, or which pertain to the House of Commons in a departmental sense, but not otherwise, Mr. Speaker does give explanations without objection from either political party, and he does so as a simple member of the House or as the head of the department of legislation. But, how can it be contended that Mr. Speaker can at any time, if he thinks the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is not exercising his duty properly, interrupt the proceedings and give direction to the Chairman of the Committee? In my humble judgment, there is no possible excuse for such a proceeding. On Saturday, the 15th instant, when Mr. Speaker took the Chair as he did and interrupted the proceedings of the Committee of the House, I think the House would have been very much astonished, and Mr. Speaker himself would have been very much astonished, if he had been told that the Committee was functus officio, because, having risen without reporting, it ceased to exist. The Committee resumed without that point having been taken, although had it been taken I think it would have been based on very good procedure. If I say this, it is not that I want in any way, Mr. Speaker, to impugn the motive which prompted you to act as you did on that occasion.

I repeat, Sir, that the rules of the House are the safeguard not only of every member of the House but of our parliamentary system of government. They are the result of the wisdom and experience of many centuries in the only country which has ever properly understood parliamentary government. The rules of the House, therefore, have a sacredness which ought not lightly to be interfered with. Not only under the British parliamentary system, but under the British legal and constitutional system, adherence to precedent has been the basis of England's greatness. In the language of Tennyson: and all the precedents we have to guide us on this point are against the action taken by Mr. Speaker; and, unless there is some definite rule to the contrary, precedent is the law of Parliament. The rules may work to the advantage or to the disadvantage of one party or the other to-day; but woe to the party, whether in opposition or in power, which does not abide by the rules. If violation of them is attempted by one side or the other, so sure as the sun will shine again, the party that violates the rules will rue its conduct. If the majority in this House administer the rules as they are conceived, well and good; but so sure as they violate their spirit and letter, so sure will the day of retribution come. I do not say that by way of threat; I say it to emphasize the paramount necessity there is for observing the rules of procedure in this Parliament.

> Freedom slowly broadens down.
> From precedent to precedent.

As to the argument about the inherent power of the Speaker, I was greatly shocked and scandalized to hear the Minister of Finance speak as he did to-day. At one time he would not, I believe, have argued after such a fashion; but to-day he laid down the proposition that it is in the inherent power of the Speaker to dictate to the Chairman of the Committee what should be his ruling—that the Speaker was in effect the censor of the House.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): May I say to my right hon. friend that I do not think I used any such argument?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will you repeat what you said?

Mr. WHITE: I referred to the condition of grave disorder existing in the House at the time, and I said in substance that the Speaker in my judgment was essentially the guardian of order in this House, that he must be the judge in a particular case of how he should enforce order and that, after he had come to a decision as to the mode in which he should enforce order, then there remained only an appeal to the House against his decision. What I emphasized particularly was that which my right hon. friend has evaded discussing altogether, and that was the grave and tumultuous disorder that prevailed in this House on the particular occasion in question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have not discussed that because I was not present.

Mr. WHITE: That is the point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is not the point.

Mr. WHITE: That is the point of my argument.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The point is: whether there was disorder or not, had the Speaker the power to interrupt the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole? I have to tell my hon. friend that the Speaker is not the censor of this House; that he is simply in the Chair to act as umpire between party and party, that he is there to maintain order, and that when he leaves the Chair his power as Speaker is exhausted. There is at the present time a difference between the power of the Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons and the power of the Speaker of the English House of Commons. The Speaker of the English House of Commons has to-day power which the Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons has not. If a member is disorderly in this House, the Speaker can name him, but he can do nothing more; and, having named him, it is for the leader of the House to take action as to the manner in which the member named by Mr. Speaker should be dealt with. The Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons nas no such power as that given to the Speaker of the British House of Commons. He cannot order the removal of a member; he can simply name him and then let the House decide. The anecdote is well known of Speaker Abbott, I think it was, who said that he had threatened Mr. So-and-So, without naming him, and when he was asked afterwards what would have happened if he had named him, he said, 'The Lord only knows.' He could not say himself what would have happened. The member might have been censured; he might have been expelled; he might have been suspended. That matter was in the power of the House. I go further than the argument of my hon. friend: order must be preserved. When the Speaker leaves the Chair and the House goes into Committee of the Whole, there is an authority sitting at the head of the Committee; there is somebody who is clothed with absolutely the same authority, as the Speaker to maintain order namely, the Chairman. The rule is very emphatic on this point. Rule 14 says:

> The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the House.

That is the power of the Chairman, just as the Speaker has the same power to maintain order subject also to an appeal to the House. What would be the consequence if the Speaker could say to the Chairman at any time: You do not understand your duty; let me take charge of the business of the House? There might be very serious confusion, authority against authority, mind against mind, and judgment against judgment. My theory, and it is the theory of Parliament, is that in all these matters neither has any authority over the other. The Speaker has no authority over the Chairman of the Committee. I say most emphatically—and I should be surprised if this opinion were contradicted—that the Speaker has no power to take away authority from the Chairman. The Chairman is the umpire; he is there to maintain order to the best of his judgment and ability. When he has done that, he has discharged his full duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

If he finds that he cannot control his Committee and that disorder prevails, he reports to the House, and it is for the House to come in, to interfere, to pass judgment, to give such orders as it thinks should be given.

If we keep these principles clearly before us, no bad effects can be produced. My hon. friend wants me to discuss what has taken place in the Committee. This is not the time to do that. For the moment the only question on which debate has been started is to ascertain what is the authority of Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I would say, what I said at the beginning, that for my part I bear testimony to the impartial motive of Mr. Speaker; at the same time, I vindicate, as a humble member of Parliament, the right and privilege of this House to be guided, and to be guided only, by rules which have come down to us from the ages.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend has discussed this subject in a very calm and dispassionate manner; and I think he had very properly ommitted any allusion to the particular incident out of which the debate arose. He has paid a very just tribute to the impartiality and fairness of Your Honour, in which I am sure all members on both sides of the House concur. The question for discussion really comes down to the bald technical question as to whether or not the Speaker may under any circumstances resume the Chair by his own authority when the House is in Committee of the Whole, and under what circumstances may he do so. That is the point which my friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) raised. I think that he initiated the discussion in a very proper manner and spirit, assuming that it was desirable to discuss it at all.

Before coming to that, I should like to say that my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) saw fit to make some allusions to myself which I must mention for the purpose of removing any misunderstanding on his part. He suggested that I had attempted to dictate to the Chairman of the Committee, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Robi-doux). I have looked through 'Hansard' and I cannot find any report of my remarks, but the hon. gentleman is correct to this extent, although it does not seem to have been reported that I did say to the hon. member for Kent that I thought that he had received all the assistance that could reasonably be given for the purpose of enabling him to come to a conclusion. I should like to correct my hon. friend in one respect. He intimated to the House that immediately thereafter the hon. member for Kent, then sitting as Chairman of the Committee, declared that he would hear no further debate on the point of order. The hon. member for St. John is entirely in error there. The debate went on for at least twenty minutes after I made that remark. It has been the custom in this House within my recollection, and I think this position is maintained by Bourinot, that even in the absence of any desire on the part of hon. members to debate a point of order, the Speaker may refer to hon. gentlemen of experience, of long standing in the House, either on one side of the House or on the other, and may ask their opinion on a point of order. I have seen that done, and I know that references to such incidents are to be found in Bourinot. I would not accede at all to the view which my hon. friend for St. John seems to entertain that, under the wording of the rule, there is absolutely unlimited debate, that the same thing may be said not only five or ten times but fifty or sixty times with regard to a point of order.

My hon. friend from St. John also alluded to a supposed desire on the part of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to exclude from discussion the measure which is under consideration. I leave that to the judgment of all hon. members. I speak without any exaggeration or any heat when I say that during eleven of the days at least in which this matter was discussed in the Committee, the most absolute freedom of debate was permitted to hon. members on the other side of the House. All reasonable men on both sides of the House will concur in the absolute accuracy of what I am now stating.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not think so.

Mr. BORDEN: Then my hon. friend is the one exception.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does my hon. friend think that that is so, bearing in mind the fact that we were kept here night and day continuously?

Mr. BORDEN: I am very glad that my hon. friend has reminded me of something which I might have forgotten. My hon. friend stated in the same breath two propositions, which seem to me to be absolutely inconsistent. In the first place he said that there had been absolutely no opportunity for discussion of the measure during those twelve days. In the next breath he said that there had never been so illuminating and instructive a discussion as had taken place during that period. How one can reconcile two statements of that kind does not occur to me at the moment; but I have no doubt that my hon. friend from St. John, with his usual ingenuity, would be able to make an argument which he would regard as getting him out of even that dilemma.

My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition professes himself to be somewhat scandalized by some remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not 'somewhat,' but a great deal.

Mr. BORDEN: I accept the correction. I have a very good recollection that my right hon. friend was not very much scandalized on one occasion when a very much more forcible statement was made in this House by one of his colleagues then sitting beside him. I am not able to quote the exact language, but I am able to give the absolute substance of what was said by the predecessor of the Minister of Finance. That gentleman laid it down in so many words as a principle of parliamentary Government that the minority or Opposition in this House had absolutely no greater rights than those which the majority were prepared to concede to them. I have the reference to the language, and if my right hon. friend is not convinced, I will be glad to send it to him. I do not think the Minister of Finance has equalled his predecessor in that regard, because all he said was—

Mr. EMMERSON: Perhaps both are sinners.

Mr. BORDEN: But one very much more than the other, as I think the hon. member for Westmorland with his usual fairness will be prepared to concede—and I take his silence as acquiescence. I will not further dwell upon the remark of the right hon. gentleman, but will simply say that the Minister of Finance was merely laying down the principle that under one of the rules of the House, the Speaker, being responsible for decorum, might well, in the absence of any prohibitive rule take the action he did take on that occasion. Because after all there is a certain law of self-preservation that must be regarded by Parliament as well as by every other institution; and, when a scene of very great disorder is in progress I think that a great deal of latitude ought to be allowed to the Speaker.

And there is a circumstance which seems to have been somewhat overlooked but which should be mentioned in this connection. Hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question on the other side seem to have had it in mind, for some reason which I cannot appreciate, that the action of the Speaker in taking the Chair for the purpose of bringing back the House and Committee to a condition of order was in some way directed against hon. gentlemen on the other side. I do not so regard it. The very premise from which they start would forbid such an assumption, because we have heard the assertions of these hon. gentlemen as to the disorder having prevailed on this side. So, I do not see how the action of the Speaker can be regarded as directed more against one side than the other. I do not wish to discuss the incident further, but I merely desire to emphasize the point that the action that the Speaker took is not to be regarded as directed against one side or against the other; it is not to be regarded as directed against any person; it is to be regarded as action taken in the interest of the House itself for the purpose of bringing back the House and the committee to the order which had been lost for the moment. That, it seems to me, is the ground upon which the action of the Speaker was based on the occasion referred to.

The right hon. gentleman has discussed this question in a very fair way; I concede that at once, and I shall endeavour to follow his example. In the first place, so far as rule 14 is concerned, upon which a great deal has been said, I cannot see that it has any bearing upon the question. The argument, so far as I have been able to understand it—and I hope I understand it correctly—was that inasmuch as disorder in the committee can only be censured by the House on receiving a report thereof, that particular provision contains a repeal of any previous usage which would have enabled the Speaker to take the Chair under the rules which were brought into force as prevailing in the British House of Commons in 1867. There was no proceeding of that kind on this occasion—absolutely none. If the action of the Speaker can be justified, as I think it can, it is to be justified on the ground that a very grave condition of disorder prevailed. True, that condition had not been brought to the attention of the Speaker by way of motion of censure or report. But the intervention of the Speaker was not based on any consideration of that kind. So, it seems to me, rule 14 has nothing to do with the case. The action of the Speaker is to be justified on the ground that a scene of very grave disorder was then taking place, and that the Speaker, being responsible primarily for order in the House, had the right to intervene under the usages of Parliament for the purposes of restoring order which had been lost. Two cases have been cited, that of 1675 and that of 1810. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), has endeavoured to throw more or less discredit upon the precedent of 1675, because he connects it in some way or other with the removal of the mace by the Protector. He is a little astray in his dates; there were a good many years intervening. Further than that, he will remember that the period to which he alludes, the seventeenth century, is celebrated for having created some of the very greatest safeguards of the liberties of the British people, liberties which we have inherited. That is one precedent, an absolutely plain precedent. It is said that the Speaker——

—very opportunely and prudently, rising from his seat near the bar, in a resolute and slow pace, made his three respects through the crowd, and took the Chair.' The mace was laid upon the table; the disorder ceased; and the Speaker stated that it was to bring the House into order again that, 'though not according to order,' he had taken the Chair.

The meaning of the expression: 'not according to order,' is not absolutely plain to me. I do not know whether he meant that it was not according to the order of the House, or whether he meant that it was not according to the order of the committee, that progress should be reported and that the Speaker should be brought in the Chair in the usual way. In the other case to which allusion has been made, I was not able to follow the contention of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who made a very ingenious argument with regard to that particular case, but one which, it seems to me, could not be sustained. There were two distinct breaches of order; the first one had resulted in the Speaker being called to the Chair, and the member being excluded; afterwards when the House was again in committee that member returned, and the Speaker, without progress having been reported or any report having been made to him, resumed the Chair and took proceedings which resulted in the member in question being removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The hon. member for South Wellington, as I understand his statement, said the Speaker might regard that as a continuing disorder, but I cannot see why he could so regard it, because there were two scenes of disorder, each absolutely and distinctly separated from the other. The first incident had been absolutely closed before the second took place, and the doctrine of continuing disorder which my hon. friend has invoked does not seem to me at all applicable to the case. It has been said by my right hon. friend that May has not read it that way. So far as I am concerned, and, I think, so far as my right hon. friend is concerned, we should agree that if the journals of the House say one thing, and Sir Erskine May says another, the journals of the House should be accepted as the authority. We are all capable, I assume, of reading and understanding the record of the House in that regard, and the record of the House, according to the plain and lucid statement which it contains, declares that the Speaker did resume the Chair, but does not indicate in any way that the Committee had risen for the purpose of reporting progress, or for any other purpose. Hon. gentlemen opposite take very strong ground in that regard, and my right hon. friend, as I understood him, said that it is absolutely impossible for the Speaker to resume the Chair, under any circumstances whatever, after the House has been resolved into Committee of the Whole, unless that committee carries a motion to report progress, or that the Chairman should leave the Chair, or for the purpose of reporting the conduct of any hon. member to the Speaker. We could give many illustrations which would indicate that that is not the case. For example, within the last week or two a message came to this House from the Senate. The House was in Committee of the Whole at the time; I consulted the officers of the House as to whether or not progress should be reported on that occasion, and I was assured by them that it was not necessary, and the Speaker therefore resumed the Chair. My right hon. friend would encounter another difficulty. Suppose some sudden illness prevented the Chairman of the Committee from taking any action at all? Something would have to be done in such a case, and it would seem to be proper that the Speaker should be ready to see that the proceedings of the House do not become absolutely futile, and that he should take such measures as would be necessary for putting the business of the House in order again. It seems also, following these two precedents, as well as following the dictates of common sense, that when disorder takes place in the Committee to such an extent that the Speaker observes that the House and the Committee are getting absolutely out of hand, the Speaker should take exactly the course which Your Honour did take on the occasion to which reference has been made. That is the way in which the matter impresses me, after having paid careful attention to all that has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

After all, what is the evil that is to result from a course of that kind? It is perfectly well known by every member of this House that the Speaker, from his position in the House and the character of the duties with which he is invested, commands the respect and the obedience of the House to a greater extent than any chairman of a committee, whether regular or temporary. When you have a condition arising, therefore, in respect of which the hon. gentleman who is in the Chair, whether he be the regular or a temporary chairman, is unable to control the committee, it seems to me to be a very strict and a very dangerous principle to adopt, that the Speaker could not, under such conditions, come to the rescue of the House and restore the order which for the time being has been lost. It would appear that, so far as danger to the credit, the reputation and the authority of the House is concerned, that danger is to be found not in the rule which we have been advocating on this side of the House, and which Mr. Speaker followed, but in the rule advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite. I submit, therefore, while it may have been proper and even desirable that the hon. member for Westmorland should bring this matter to the attention of the House, especially in view of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite have felt themselves aggrieved by what has taken place, that, after the very full and reasonable discussion which has ensued has had its full effect, we will come to the reasonable conclusion that the course which His Honour the Speaker did take on the occasion in question was not only in the interests of this Parliament, was not only in the interests of the credit of this House, was not only dictated by common sense, but is also supported by precedents which enable it to be regarded as a proper course, even from strictly technical and constitutional standpoints.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair).

Royal Northwest Mounted Police, $19,300.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before the committee enters in consideration of this item, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can give me the information which he said he would obtain? My information is that there is a very considerable sum of money due the creditors of the Government for work done during the current fiscal year. My hon. friend said he would make enquiry about it. If possible, I think we should first make provision for closing up the accounts of the current fiscal year before we enter upon the estimates for the next year. I am told that it would amount to several hundreds of thousands of dollars. My hon. friend said he was going to find out.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I inquired about it the next morning, because it appeared to me that my hon. friend was deeply interested. I confess I cannot understand why he was so deeply interested as he appeared to be. However, I made inquiries at the Department of Public Works, and was informed that work has been done in connection with these dredging contracts for which there is no appropriation in the supplementary estimates that were under consideration on the day before the House rose for the recess. The explanation given is that it was impossible at the time the supplementary estimates were in preparation, to estimate with any degree of accuracy, the amount which would be required for the dredging which would be done before the end of the fiscal year. As I said to my hon. friend, it is the proper practice, so far as we find it feasible and practicable, to insert in the supplementary estimates which close the estimates for the fiscal year under consideration, all items for that particular year. But I find, as I have indicated, that there has always been considerable overlapping, and necessarily so. There was one item to which my attention was called by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), and into which, at his request, I also looked. In the last set of supplementary estimates, which we had under consideration the other day, reference is made to the report of the Auditor General, and to a certain amount representing excess expenditure. I was unable at the moment to explain it to the hon. member for Edmonton, but I found, and this will explain what I am endeavouring to bring to the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), that during last year, 1911-12—the item to which I referred, and which appears in the report of the Auditor General relates to that fiscal year—the Consolidated Fund expenditure authorized was $130,000,000, while there was an actual expenditure of only $100,000,000. But while that was the fact, in two principal items, one in connection with the post office administration, and another which I have forgotten at the moment, there was an excess of $95,000, and that appears in the supplementary estimates for 1912-13, which I last presented, and provision is made for the payment of that $95,000. I am informed, and it is quite reasonable, that that occurs every year. The House will readily believe that in carrying on a business so extensive as that carried on by the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in public works and otherwise, there will necessarily be a certain amount of expenditure which cannot be comprised in the accounts of the current fiscal year. I think it is a desirable and proper practice without question that all the expenditures which can be properly accounted for should be shown in the supplementary estimates, but occasions will arise when it is impossible to estimate the amount on particular contracts, or when through inadvertence, estimates are exceeded, and these have been taken care of in the way they are taken care of in the supplementary estimates which we had last under consideration. The particular item to which my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) called my attention is in the supplementary estimates item 479.

To cover unprovided items 1911-12, as per Auditor General's Report, page B—5, $95,289.77.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

The reason I referred to that is that it is cognate to the matter to which my hon. friend has called my attention.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the amount substantially outstanding for work to do during the present fiscal year for which no money is provided. My hon. friend said he would find that out.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend must have misunderstood me. I told him that so far as I was aware all the expenditure of the current fiscal year was represented in the main estimates, the first supplementaries, and the second supplementaries, but that there would be an expenditure of the amount to which he has called my attention, and other expenditures of which I was not aware. I am not in a position to give the information he desires, nor do I believe that at the present moment the department would be able to give it, because it would be impossible to estimate with precision the amount that is due on 31st March. These estimates are certainly intended to close the fiscal year, and to present to the House the details of expenditure which will be made during that fiscal year, so far as that expenditure can be estimated at the present time, and subject to the necessary overlapping which has always taken place and which I believe will always take place.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I suppose we shall have, later on, details of that expenditure, that $95,000 ?

Mr. WHITE: I should think that next year, just as this year, you will have such items to provide for in the supplementaries. The Auditor General's report will show a corresponding item next year, I presume.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Here we have a large item, covering several departments, which we are asked to vote en bloc. Of course I accept willingly the explanation of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I think he is right, but at the same time, during the present session, when we are in committee, we should have from my hon. friend the Postmaster General an explanation as regards his part of that item. We have no detailed account for each department, and I understand that the sum of $95,000 is distributed over several departments. I do not press for it to-night.

Mr. PELLETIER: I will place it before the deputy minister, and I think it will be an easy matter to get the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend the Minister of Finance said he did not understand why I was so interested in finding out if there was not a very considerable sum of money due by the Government for work actually done during the present fiscal year, and for which no provision has as yet been made. I may tell my hon. friend that every one of the dredging contractors in New Brunswick is, so far as I am aware, a political opponent of mine. The Mayes Dredging Company, the Maritime Dredging Company and the Northern Dredging Company, of which Mr. Tennant and Mr. O'Leary are managers, were brought under the control of our Conservative friends and they to-day practically control the dredging business in New Brunswick. The manager of a financial institution which has advanced money to these contractors called my attention to the fact that the Liberals were blocking the estimates and blocking the payment of the money which was due to these gentlemen, and by them due to the bank. I explained that we were not, that this should be provided for in the supplementary estimates, and that if the Government would bring in an amount to meet this expenditure I would only be too happy to do everything I could to expedite its passage. I would say to my hon. friend frankly that these amounts which, according to my information, totalled a few hundred thousand dollars, should be provided for in the supplementary estimates for the current year. I do not think this committee should be asked to make provision for carrying on public works during the coming year until we have discharged our obligations and the obligations of the country for work which has been actually done by the contractors during the current year. Let me take another question; are there or are there not, large amounts of money due to contractors for work already done upon the Transcontinental railway and for which no provision has been made in the supplementary estimates for the current year.

Mr. WHITE: Not to my knowledge. It is possible that contracts have been made in connection with the Transcontinental railway and that there may be some contractors who are waiting for the necessary certificates upon the presentation of which they will receive payment. But I am not aware that large sums are held up improperly. I understand my hon. friend to suggest that that the members of the dredging companies had changed from Liberals to Conservatives?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes.

Mr. WHITE: Does my hon. friend say that all the members of the dredging companies in his time were Liberals and, if so, why? I am surprised to learn that they were all Liberals and my hon. friend rather shocks me by the suggestion that they have changed their memberships to Conservatives, because, by imputation they were all Liberals before.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I will be very glad to give my hon. friend the information. In the city of St. John there were two Liberals who were interested in dredging. There was another gentleman who was a little bit variable—generally speaking a Conservative, and sometimes a little inclined towards the Liberal party. But after the election and, indeed, just before the election, there was no question about his being a Conservative. Since the election I may say that the dredging business has been entirely under the control of ardent supporters of the Government. Upon the Miramichi there was a large company controlled by the Messrs. Loggie—no relation of the hon. member for Northumberland. These gentlemen are very keen merchants, worth a great deal of money, if report is correct, but they have never taken any active part in politics. Since the election of 1911, very active Conservatives bought out the dredging company which was controlled by the Messrs. Loggie and, as appears from the records of this House, in an answer kindly given by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers), when Messrs. Tennant, O'Leary and others bought out Messrs. Loggie, who had a contract for dredging in the Miramichi at 11 cents per cubic yard, they at once applied to the Government to be allowed to cancel their contract and forfeit their deposit of about $3,500. They were permitted to do so, tenders were invited for this work and these same gentlemen, whose contract was cancelled and who were allowed to forfeit a deposit of $3,500, tendered for the work again and got it at twenty cents per cubic yard, or a difference of nine cents per cubic yard. I think that, if I remember the figures correctly, they would forfeit about $3,500 and they would make an additional profit of $40,000 or $50,000 out of the Government. My hon. friend (Mr. White) is surprised to find that Liberals have been engaged in dredging under the late Government. What does he think of that? That was done when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was Minister of Public Works. I do not want to attack the late Minister of Public Works and I do not want to attack the present Minister of Public Works, because he is not responsible, but what I do say is that the controlling spirits in the Conservative party in New Brunswick who have brought about that operation, under which there is an absolute steal from the treasury of this country of somewhere between $40,000 and $50,000, certainly do not deserve very much consideration from this Government. Notwithstanding that these gentlemen were all Conservatives, as I have said, the manager of a certain banking institution called my attention to the fact that there was a large amount advanced to these dredging companies for work done during this current year and he suggested that I and others on this side of the House were blocking the estimates by which they would be unable to get their pay. I said to this gentleman that if the Government would put this in the supplementary estimates for the current year I was sure that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would be willing to facilitate the voting of the money in order that the Government could discharge its obligation. We ought to see that our debts are paid first before we proceed to vote moneys for next year. Let us wipe out the obligations of the current year. In regard to the Transcontinental railway I think there is a very serious condition of affairs existing. I am told that there are large contractors who have done their work months ago to whom vast sums of money are due, as well as to the banks which are carrying them, and that these gentlemen cannot get one dollar of the money which has been due for months for work that has actually been done for the Government of the country.

Mr. WHITE: Have the accounts been certified by the commission or its engineers?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am told there is no reason whatever for refusing payment.

Mr. BORDEN: Who are they?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am not going to mention names. I am told that the chief engineer, the sole commissioner, went off on a trip to Europe and that these gentlemen were obliged to wait months and months for the money which is due them. I think that before we proceed to vote moneys to carry on the work for the coming year, it is our duty to see that the obligations of the present year are properly met.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) is good enough to say that he does not wish to attack my predecessor, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, but I must confess that he rather does that in a statement which he has made regarding the Miramichi dredging contract. No person knows better than my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) that this contract had been let by himself when in charge of this department provided for a certain amount of dredging, a portion of which was in shallow water, leading out into deeper water, and that a contract had been let by him for dredging at the further point out in the water at forty or forty-five cents a yard, while the other was let in the portion near the shore at eleven cents per cubic yard. This work was carried on for a considerable time and the contractors were complaining, and my predecessor undertook to deal with them and they forfeited the amount of their deposit and forfeited their contract. There was no other course open to the department than to forfeit the amount of the deposit. That deposit was forfeited to the Government, the Government have it, and the Government were obliged to ask for tenders for the dredging in the deeper water. The second contract was let at twenty cents a yard, as compared with forty cents a yard under the contract let when my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) was minister. The hon. gentlemen referred to certain contractors not receiving payment in connection with work they are doing. Let me tell him that as Minister of Public Works I have yet to see one letter from any contractor under the department saying that he has not received his money when his accounts were properly and honestly presented to the department for payment. I am surprised that my hon. friend from St. John should hear of conditions which I as minister have had no notice of.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend (Mr. Rogers), I regret to say, has attempted to make a defence of the action of the dredging contractors who have received the new contracts for work upon the Miramichi. I am sure my hon. friend cannot be correctly informed as to the two dredging contracts which existed. When I was Minister of Public Works there were two situations with which we had to deal; one was what was called the Grand Dune Flats, which is inland and protected, and the other was a bar which was at a considerable distance out and which was exposed to storms. Tenders were called for the work separately and the lowest tender for dredging the bar was at forty-five cents per cubic yard, the tender being that of the W. J. Poupore Company, and the lowest tender for the dredging of the Grand Dune Flats, which is comparatively easy dredging was a tender by a Company controlled by Messrs. Loggie, at eleven cents per cubic yard. The lowest tender in each case was accepted, each tender being entirely for a separate class of work, the conditions being different with regard to each so far as exposure to storms and the kind of soil is concerned. The Messrs. Loggie are absolutely responsible people, reported to be worth at least one million dollars, and they are the gentlemen who entered into a binding contract with the Government to do this work of one million cubic yards at eleven cents per cubic yard. Their contract was for a lump quantity of one million yards at that price. The Messrs. Loggie worked for one season and they never kicked, or never urged that they were getting too low a price, but were prepared to stand by their contract whether they made money or lost money. After the general election of 1911 a company composed of Conservatives, Mr. O'Leary, of Richibucto, and Mr. Tennant, of St. John, a leading Conservative worker, and possibly some others whose names I do not know, was formed, and they bought out the dredges of the Messrs. Loggie and took over their contract. My hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) will see that the original contractor was liable on this obligation and contract with the Government, and the Government had the right to tell the Loggie Company to perform the work. After the company organized by Messrs. Tennant and O'Leary had taken over the dredges and the contract, they applied to the department to be permitted to cancel their contract by forfeiting their deposit of I think $3,500.

Mr. ROGERS: $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My recollection is that the answer of the minister was that the deposit was $3,500.

Mr. EMMERSON: Poupore is not a Liberal?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Poupore was not a Liberal; he used to be the Conservative member for Pontiac.

Mr. STANFIELD: He was a good Liberal under the last Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend may know as to that, but I do not. However, I am not concerned with Mr. W. J. Poupore's contract because that was done on public tender and the work was in a different place and done under different conditions entirely. I do not hesitate to say that when the company which was organized by Messrs. O'Leary and Tennant, applied to the Government to be allowed to cancel their contract and forfeit their deposit, it was with a view of their getting a new contract for this identical work at an advanced price. They took over the dredges for the purpose of doing the work and they set out to see if they could get a higher price from the Government. The contract with the Loggie Company was for one million cubic yards and at that time there could not have been performed much more than one-half the work. These gentlemen applied to the Government and they were released from that contract by simply forfeiting $3,500, the amount of the deposit. Tenders were then called for the work. I do not know whether there were any other tenders. I doubt if there were; I think they arranged so that there would be no other tenders; I think the time was short; the dredge owners in the upper provinces could not come down to tender; the result was that for that work which they were bound to perform under covenant with the Government at eleven cents, they got that part of it which remained unfinished at the time they became the owners of the dredging plant, at nine cents per cubic yard more than the price at which they were bound to do the work. I would estimate from my knowledge as minister, that there remained in the vicinity of half a million cubic yards to do, and it would mean that their profit beyond that which they would receive if they carried out the contract they were under obligation to carry out, would amount to $45,000. They forfeited $3,500 to make a further profit of $45,000.

Mr. CURRIE: I understand that the amount of the first contract was one million cubic yards at eleven cents, or $110,000. The custom of the Government is to exact 10 per cent as a deposit, which would amount to $11,000. Where does the hon. gentleman get the balance of $35,000 which he stated was profit to the contractors? That does not look right on the face of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The custom is to exact a deposit in respect to the particular works. It is not 10 per cent which is exacted; it is a certain definite sum which is always named in the advertisement for tenders.

Mr. CURRIE: Can my hon. friend not recall to mind a case where the Government cancelled a number of contracts for dredging on the lakes and then re-let them at a larger figure? What about the towns of Midland and Port Arthur where complaints were made about the cost of dreging? The hon. gentleman cancelled the contracts and let them at a larger amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. gentleman knows, or he ought to know as he was in Parliament at that time, that those contracts were for the season of navigation, and then they could not be extended unless the minister extended them by order endorsed upon the contract. In the particular case to which my hon. friend refers, there was a good deal of criticism on account of the contracts having been extended the previous year, and I decided not to extend the contracts but to call for new tenders, as it was proper that I should do. This case was different. Here was a definite contract to dredge a stated quantity, one million cubic yards at eleven cents a yard. The same company was relieved of its contract and succeeded in getting a new contract to do the same work at an advanced price of nine cents, making a loss, asssuming that there was about a million cubic yards still to be done, to the country of about $45,000; and to get this the company forfeited their deposit of, I think, $3,500. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers) says that Parliament was bound to give them that advance. Why? Supposing a private individual had a contract to build a house for you and he said, I am strong financially; I am wealthy; it is true that I could build the house, but I want to get out of my contract. He says, I have made a deposit, but I will forfeit that and I shall not go on with the work. If my hon. friend was a private individual, would he give the contract to do this work to the same contractor at a price nearly double what he had originally contracted to build the house for? I am sorry that my hon. friend defends that position, because I do not think it can be defended at all. The only excuse to be given is that the minister of the day knew nothing about it. The position of these gentlemen in New Brunswick, who brought about that extraordinary situation, under which they were able to get this large sum of money to do work that they were bound to do at a lower price, is utterly indefensible; and for that conduct these gentlemen ought to be punished, if it is possible to punish them. Shortly after the elections in 1911, these gentlemen formed a company to buy out Messrs. Loggie with a view to that very contract to dredge the Grand Dune flats. Having organized the company, they at once set to work to see how they could get this identical contract at an enhanced price. They did so at a cost to the country of about $40,000 or $45,000.

Mr. EMMERSON: When the new contract was let was it——

Mr. BORDEN: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to gag hon. gentlemen with regard to the Northwest Mounted Police, but I should like to have a little attention directed to that particular estimate.

Mr. ROGERS: I really cannot allow the exaggerated statement of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) to pass without some notice. At one point of his remarks, he left at all events, the implied insinuation that some attempt was made by my predecessor, the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to ask for tenders in such a hurried manner that no other person could tender except those particular contractors. That statement is absolutely incorrect. Tenders were called for in the most open manner.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What length of time was given?

Mr. ROGERS: A very considerable length of time.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will my hon. friend tell me what length of time?

Mr. ROGERS: I cannot tell you exactly, but I am satisfied that ample time was given, not only that, but the tender was something like twenty-three or twenty-five cents a yard. My predecessor (Mr. Monk) felt that this was too much; he and the officers of the department examined the work and he had a report from the man who was in charge of the dredging under the management of my hon. friend the member for St. John. He reported to Mr. Monk that twenty cents a yard was fair and reasonable and very cheap for the completion of this work which had become more expensive as the work went on.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When the new tenders were called for, were there any other tenders except those gentlemen, the Northern Dredging Company?

Mr. ROGERS: I think there was only the one tender, if I remember correctly. I have not looked into the matter very carefully, because it did not come under my administration. At the same time my hon. friend undertakes to state the case in a very exaggerated form when he says that the loss to the country will probably be forty or forty-five thousand dollars. The facts are that something like six hundred and eight thousand yards of this dredging had been completed leaving something over three hundred thousand yards to be completed when the change of contract took place, which would, according to the figures of my hon. friend, mean a loss of about $25,000. I answered the question put upon the Order Paper by the hon. member for St. John some time ago, and my answer gives the exact figures.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend did not give the quantity still remaining to be done. I remember there was a million yards altogether. My idea was that it was about half done at that time.

Mr. ROGERS: Your idea was incorrect. Only some three hundred thousand yards remained to be done. My predecessor, Mr. Monk, found himself in an unfortunate position, owing to the very elastic contract made by my hon. friend for St. John, that there was no power vested in the Government to exact anything from the contractors except the deposit, namely $5,000, when the contract was let. That was forfeited to the department, and the only power which the department had to secure any return from the contractor who wished to give up the contract at any time he saw fit.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend says that owing to there being an elastic contract—there was a firm, binding contract.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that the minister just wished to answer the hon. member. I am afraid that he is commencing to discuss the contract. I draw the attention of the hon. member that he is out of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend calls the contract an elastic contract. It was the ordinary contract of the department, which contained an absolutely binding covenant on the part of this company to do the work. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the Government found itself in this unfortunate position, that the company 'fell down' and asked to be released from their contract? If so, they soon 'fell up' again, because they got the contract at an increase of nine cents per cubic yard. The object of the covenant was to oblige them to do the work, and if they did not do it, the Government could do it and charge them with the difference, just as with any other contractor. The contract was definite and distinct—that they were to do 1,000,000 yards of dredging at eleven cents a yard. And there would be the drawback, of course, as security for the Government—the drawback of ten per cent.

Mr. EMMERSON: I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that Mr. O'Leary who has this contract, was the disburser of funds for the Conservative party in the last local election. He figured in the northern counties of Restigouche, Gloucester, Northumberland and Kent. And he speaks proudly of what he accomplished and of his openness—there is no secret about it. I understand that he is the leading spirit in this dredging company, and it may be that the renewal syncronises with the election.

Mr. LEMIEUX: With all due respect for the Halifax platform, I think that this ought to go before the public accounts committee.

Mr. BORDEN: I have not the slightest objection to the fullest discussion of the transaction referred to, but I think it would be more convenient to deal with the item before the committee and bring up this other question at a time when the minister has the paper and his officers here. The item under consideration, which I brought up because the right hon. the leader of the Opposition was then in his place, is the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal): (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I shall speak French, considering that the right hon. the Premier understands this language. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the estimates have not been printed in French. It is now eight days since I have pointed out to this House the fact that the supplementary estimates have not been printed in French. I have just inquired about this and I was told that they were not and would not be printed in French. I am opposed to our voting the estimates for 1914 this evening because they are not printed in French, so that we may follow the work done by the committee and know what sums we are called upon to vote. I shall not allow these estimates to come under consideration until we have the French translation. We have a right to it, and this right must be respected. I am asking this because there seems to be no attention given to the French language at all.

Mr. BORDEN: (Translation.) The hon. member is right, the estimates must be printed in French and I thought they had been printed in this language.

Mr. MARTIN: (Translation.) No, these estimates are not printed in French, and the evidence is that I have sent some one for both the English and the French copy and I have been told in answer there was no French copy. Since Tuesday of the last week the supplementary estimates have not yet been printed in French, even though the hon. Minister of Finance has promised that they would be in a couple of days.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am sure the hon. gentleman wishes to be fair. He was told the other day that this work is not under the Minister of Finance nor under the Government, but is done by officers of this House. When he brought the matter up the other day, I at once asked the officer, Mr. Laframboise, what the matter was. And Dr. Flint, the Clerk of the House, sent upstairs to ask the reason why this had not been printed in French. We got the answer a few moments after the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) left the Chamber. But the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland) had spoken about it, and I gave the statement as given to us by the officers that this matter had been sent to the Printing Bureau but that the proofs had not yet come back for reading. This was about seven or eight days ago. I was surprised to hear from the hon. member for St. Mary's that it was not going to be printed in French. I think we should go to the bottom of that to see what there is in it; because if officers of the House are going to authorize the hon. member for St. Mary's to declare that such work will not be done——

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member never said that.

Mr. MARTIN: The supplementary estimates are not printed——

Mr. PELLETIER: Here are the main estimates printed in French. The Clerk of the House has just handed them to me.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not the supplementary estimates.

Mr. PELLETIER: But the hon. gentleman said he was going to object to the main estimates until they were printed in French, and here they are.

Mr. MARTIN: But these are for next year.

Mr. PELLETIER: But these are the estimates we are now considering, and to which he said he was going to object because they were not printed in French.

Mr. BUREAU: Surely, the hon. Postmaster General does not want to be unfair. The hon. member for St. Mary's said that he had sent upstairs for the estimates in French and had received the answer that they were not printed. A member can only take the facts as reported to him by the officers of the House.

Mr. PELLETIER: He said more than that—that they were not going to be printed in French.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MARTIN: A few moments ago, I called a page and asked him to bring me the estimates in the two languages. He came down with a copy of the English version and said that the French estimates were not printed. That is why I said that if they did with these estimates as they have done with the supplementaries I would object to their passing until they were printed in French.

Mr. PELLETIER: They are printed in French.

Mr. MARTIN: Then, a copy should have been sent to me.

Mr. WHITE: I understood my hon. friend to complain in some respects of my action in this matter as Minister of Finance. Let me assure my hon. friend that I followed what I believed to be the universal practice in regard to this matter. I submit to the House the message of His Royal Highness in both languages, and I lay on the table of the House the estimate as prepared by my department, which can be taken up by the officers of this House and translated into French. I desire to assure my hon. friend that this has been the practice, as I understood it, and I should like him not to think that I have in any way discriminated against the French language in the presentation of the estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: In this connection I would throw out the suggestion that a little care might be taken with regard to the distribution of copies of the estimates to the members. Evidently they have been printed, but have not yet been distributed to the members, and I think we are entitled to receive them as soon as possible after they are printed. Is the whole of this item to pass, or only a proportion of it?

Mr. BORDEN: The whole item.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As the Postmaster General mentioned my name in connection with the objection raised by the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin), I may say that I did make a complaint the other day about the distribution of the supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, and I explained to the hon. member for St. Mary's that this year the delay was due probably to the overwork at the Printing Bureau on account of the unusually long sittings of the House.

Mr. PELLETIER: The reason for the delay was the one suggested by my hon. friend—that so much of the time of the Printing Bureau was occupied with the printing of 'Hansard' during the extended sitting of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM: I had entertained the idea that a certain percentage of the estimates would be taken up and passed, but I did not know that any were to be put through in their entirety.

Mr. BORDEN: It has always been the practice, even where it is expected that a vote on account will be taken, that such items as are not of a controversial nature—such as Civil Government—shall be passed in their entirety.

Mr. GRAHAM: I find in the report of the Northwest Mounted Police for 1912, on page 8, this paragraph:

> On May 15, 1912, the Act extending the boundaries of Manitoba to the north and east came into force, thus annexing a portion of the Northwest territories which had been policed by this force. In accordance with your instructions, I proceeded to Winnipeg, in June, to interview the honourable the Attorney General of Manitoba. The result of the interview was that the services of the force would be retained by the Government of Manitoba, on similar terms to Saskatchewan and Alberta. No term of years was fixed, as it was thought that railway development might, later on, make it undesirable.

Is the Government of Manitoba assuming the expense of the Northwest Mounted Police in the new province?

Mr. BORDEN: An arrangement has been made by the Comptroller with the Government of Manitoba which is that they pay $5,000, annually on account of the expenses of a small detachment. The arrangement has not been made for any definite term.

Mr. GRAHAM: But they are paying $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN: Yes. Before the item passes, I would like to express my appreciation of the services of Col. White, who, for many years, was at the head of the force. He first entered the service as clerk in the Department of Justice in 1869. Shortly afterwards, he took up administrative work at Ottawa in connection with the establishment of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police force. In 1878 he was given the title of Comptroller of that force. In the inception of the force he had almost complete charge in every respect. We all know that the force has been a very great credit to Canada and has done work in connection with the development of the West, which, I think, has not been surpassed by any force employed for similar purposes in any other part of the world. Very great credit indeed is due to Col. White for his services. I would like to express my appreciation of his services during the time he was Comptroller of the Northwest Mounted Police after our advent to office. He obtained leave of absence with a view to superannuation on the 1st July, 1913. He desired to be relieved from active duties, and his superannuation took effect on the 1st January, 1913. His retirement from the service was entirely on his own initiative and at his own desire. He has had a total service of nearly forty-four years, and during all that period, as I know from my own experience, and from what has been said of Col. White by my predecessor, that his devotion to his public duties was all that could be desired. His very great ability and long experience in public affairs have made that service one of very great value indeed to the country. I think I am voicing not only my own opinion, but the opinion of all members of this House, who have any knowledge of his public services, when I say that the thanks and gratitude and appreciation of the people of Canada are due to Col. White for the splendid work which he did in connection with that force.

Mr. GRAHAM: Hear, hear.

Progress reported.

On the motion of Mr. Borden for the adjournment of the House:

Mr. GRAHAM: What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN: We will go into Supply again to-morrow.

Mr. GRAHAM: What department?

Mr. BORDEN: We will take the Civil Government estimates for the different departments, and after that I would like to take the main estimates for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and any other estimates that more particularly concern me. It is desired, I think, that some explanation should be given with regard to some items in the capital account of the Intercolonial railway, and some reference was also made to the desirability of a statement with regard to the Transcontinental railway. The Minister of Railways and Canals is absent, and I do not think he will return until Thursday. It is possible, however, that in the course of to-morrow I may be able to give explanations with regard to some of these matters. I am not absolutely sure of that; it will depend on how far progress has been made in the department with regard to preparation. I would not undertake it, of course, unless everything were pretty clearly put before me in writing, as I am not familiar with the details of the department; and I would only do so for the purpose of expediting business. But if it should be desired by hon. gentlemen on the other side, I would make an effort to give certain explanations to-morrow as to some of these matters. I would be very glad if my hon. friend the member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) would ascertain whether there is any misunderstanding with regard to these items of Civil Government to which allusion has been made. I did not understand it precisely in the way in which it has been presented by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I thought we would proceed in the way in which those matters have always been dealt with in the past, that we would pass, in their entirety, such of those items as we could, after proper discussion, and that these would be coupled with the vote on account as has been the practice in other years.

Mr. GRAHAM: The right hon. the leader of the Opposition will be in his seat to-morrow and we will have a clear understanding arrived at.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.37 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

(b) The chief duty of the helpers is to assist in the opening and closing of packages at points where large quantities are aggregated. They are chosen, therefore, with special reference to their proficiency in this respect.

RIDING MOUNTAINS DRAINAGE.

Mr. CRUISE:

1. Has there been brought to the attention of the Government the desirability of co-operating with the provincial Government for the construction of drainage works along the northeast base of the Riding Mountains, for the purpose of protecting from the flow of water from the mountains the land occupied by settlers, which at intervals is overflowed in whole or in part, with great injury and loss to them?

2. Is it the intention o fthe Government to make provision for same?

Mr CROTHERS:

1. Representations have been made by persons residing north of the Riding Mountains that it would be advisable to construct a drain in connection with the making of a fire guard along the north side of the mountain.

2. The representations are being looked into.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM IN DAUPHIN.

Mr. CRUISE:

Is it the intention of the Government to establish an experimental farm in the Dauphin district?

Mr. BURRELL: The question of the establishment of additional experimental farms in Manitoba is under consideration. Nothing definite in regard to the Dauphir district has been decided.

ST. CHARLES RIVER DREDGING.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. Has any dredging of the river St. Charles been done since the 1st November, 1911? If so, what was the quantity of dredging and what amount of money have these works cost?

2. Was the dredging of the river St. Charles done prior to the 1st November, 1911? If so, when was it commenced, what quantity of dredging was done and how much has it cost?

Mr. ROGERS:

1 .(a) Yes; (b) 397,078 cubic yards at a cost of $35,736.12.

.2 (a) Yes; (b) 15th August, 1910; (c) 738,-106 cubic yards at a cost of $66,430.51.

MORTIMER PRINTING AND LITHOGRAPHING COMPANY.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to purchase or lease the whole or any part of the plant of the Mortimer Printing and Lithographing Company?

2. If so, what are the terms of such purchase or lease?

3. Has the said company offered to sell its plant or any part thereof to the Government? If so, what are the terms and conditions of the said offer?

Mr. BORDEN: In reply to this question, I understand that the company has expressed itself as willing to dispose of its plant to the Government. The offer has not been considered, and I would think that it would be quite unlikely that the Government would be prepared to entertain it.

FENIAN RAID VETERANS.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Hughes), and, in his absence, that of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), to the question of the bounties to Fenian raid veterans. The rumour is abroad in Nova Scotia that all parties who were ordered out to drill at the time the Fenian agitation was on in 1866, are to be included in the bounty that is to be given to Fenian raid veterans. We were told last year that only such veterans as had been engaged on active service were to receive that bounty. I understand that the Governor of Nova Scotia issued a proclammation in 1866 authorizing preparations for meeting the Fenian raids that were expected at that date. Very many people turned out, underwent drill for several weeks, and subsequently, when the draft was made, certain people were selected out of the number that had been engaged in drill to go to the front if they were required. As the Prime Minister knows no steps of that kind were necessary, and no person from that province went to the front. Are the parties who subjected themselves to drill and who made preparations to go to the front if they were required entitled to share in the bounty that is to be given to Fenian raid veterans?

Mr. BORDEN: I regret that I am not in a position to give my hon. friend any very definite information on the subject, as the question to which he has alluded has not been brought to my personal attention. I would suppose that it would depend upon the terms of the statute and upon the construction placed upon the statute by the legal advisers of the Department of Militia and Defence. However, I shall direct the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence to my hon. friend's question, and would ask him to give all available information as soon as possible.

JAPANESE TREATY.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville): I call the attention of the First Minister to an article published in the Ottawa Citizen this morning concerning the Japanese treaty. I see by the Votes and Proceedings that notice has been given that the matter will be introduced by the right hon. gentleman to-morrow, but I was rather surprised to find an outline of the proposed legislation in the press before the House had been informed of it? I do not blame the right hon. gentleman, as I suppose some of the officials may have given the information to the press. I would ask my right hon. friend if the statement is true that the proposed legislation will make provision that nothing in it shall affect the terms of the Canadian Immigration Act?

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): My hon. friend is mistaken in supposing that information has been unduly given to the press, because in this day's Votes and Proceedings he will see everything that has been published. I will read to my hon. friend the proviso to which no doubt he alludes:

> Nothing in the said treaty, or in the Act to be founded on this resolution, shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS.

On the motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) for Committee of supply:

Mr. W. A. BUCHANAN (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy a very few minutes in bringing to the attention of the Government a matter of urgent importance to my constituents. Some time ago I questioned the Ministry as to the exportation of natural gas from Alberta, and the Government, in answer, assumed responsibility for the exportation, and acknowledged they had authority to prevent natural gas being exported from the province. This is a question of vital importance to many communities in the district of Medicine Hat. I quote from 'Hansard' of February 24 last:

> *Mr. Buchanan:
> 1. Has the Government received petitions and resolution from board of trade and municipal councils of Alberta, asking that the piping of natural gas out of the province of Alberta should be prohibited?
> 2. Does the Government consider that the Dominion has the power to prohibit the exportation of natural gas out of Alberta?
> 3. If so, does the Government intend taking action to meet the prayer of these petitions and resolutions?
> Mr. Coderre:
> 1. No such petitions or resolutions have been received.
> 2. Under the provisions of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act (chapter 16, 1907), the Governor in Council has power to regulate or prohibit the exportation of natural gas.
> 3. Answered by No. 1.

The reason I bring this matter before the House to-day is to impress upon the Government, if I can, the importance of protecting the natural gas fields in Alberta and of limiting its exploitation as much as possible to its present area. Efforts have been made recently by certain companies towards piping gas from southern Alberta to some of the cities in southern Saskatchewan, and also to Winnipeg. As a result of the movement in that direction, an agitation has commenced in the city of Medicine Hat and other adjoining communities served by natural gas, to prevent the exportation of this gas out of Alberta.

As those who have travelled through western Canada know, Medicine Hat is being developed into one of the most important industrial centres west of the great lakes, as the result of its possessing this natural gas field. Last year, no less than eighteen concerns were either established in the city of Medicine Hat, or had come to an agreement with the city to establish industries there, due absolutely to the fact that Medicine Hat, because it possesses this natural gas, was able to offer inducements to manufacturers that no other city in western Canada could offer. The city of Medicine Hat has at the present time, or will have in existence within the next year at least twenty-five industries large and small. I want to point out briefly the effect that the possession of this natural gas is having on the industrial development of that part of Alberta. In Redcliffe, the neighbouring town to Medicine Hat, seven industries have been established during the last year on account of the deposits of natural gas. These towns, which to-day are having rapid natural industrial development, feel that the Government should make a declaration of policy in regard to this matter to the effect that the gas should not be allowed to be exported out of that district, for the reason that the history of natural gas fields has shown that the supply is very rapidly depleted, and they want some assurance of the permanency of this gas field so that they will be warranted in encouraging manufacturers to come there. Of course, that guarantee cannot be given if the gas is allowed to be exported all over western Canada, which is the object of some of the companies incorporated for that purpose. My request to the Government is not because of selfishness on the part of southern Alberta; it is merely a desire to conserve this great natural resource and to guarantee its existence as long as possible. As I have said, towns in that district are being built up industrially by reason of this gas. At Bow Island in my constituency they have very probably the greatest flow of natural gas to be found in all western Canada. There is the possibility that that town will become a great industrial centre. You will probably remember, Sir, an article written by Rudyard Kipling after he visited western Canada a few years ago, in which he stated that Medicine Hat and the district surrounding, had 'all hell for a basement.' There is good deal of truth in that, and while we are trying to improve the conditions on the top of the earth so as to make the place as much like heaven as possible, still we are anxious to retain hades for a basement, and to restrict its confines to the neighbourhood of Medicine Hat. Some gas has been piped from these wells in southern Alberta and a company is now operating a pipe line from Bow Island to the city of Calgary. The company which supplies that city also supplies most of the villages and towns between Bow Island and Calgary. There is no certainty as to the extent of the supply of natural gas in southern Alberta. It is important, in discussing the question of natural gas and the possible duration of the supply, to look at the records in some states of the American Republic where natural gas has been of great value in industrial development. I should like to point out the record in the state of Indiana. It is only a few years ago since one company, which was incorporated in that state to supply gas to certain cities in Indiana, had to abandon its wells and to develop artificial gas plants in order to carry out its franchise. The records of that state show that the gas supply has diminished very rapidly during recent years. It is in order to prevent such a possibility in Alberta that I am calling the attention of the House to this matter, so that we may learn a lesson from the experience of other countries. In the state of Indiana, the production of gas rose gradually in value from $300,000 in 1886 to its maximum of $7,254,539 in 1900. Since that time there has been a steady decrease, as shown by the following table:

1900	$7,254,539	4,546
1901	6,954,566	4,572
1902	7,081,344	5,820
1903	6,098,364	5,514
1904	4,342,409	4,684
1905	3,094,134	3,650
1906	1,750,715	3,523
1907	1,572,605	3,386
1908	1,312,507	3,223
1909	1,616,903	2,938
1910	1,473,403	2,955

This shows that the production of natural gas in Indiana has dropped in value over $6,000,000 in ten years, and that there has been a falling off in producing wells of almost 2,000. Therefore it is most important that we should protect our natural gas fields and should guarantee to communites, which have been created out of the possession of natural gas, that there will be no waste or allowance of gas to be exported.

A striking example of the exhaustion of a gas field is that furnished by the Essex field, Ontario. This lay in South Gosfield. It was opened in 1889, and a number of wells were bored that had a capacity of several million cubic feet of gas per day; for example, one on lot 6, concession 1, had a flow of 6,422,000 cubic feet; one on lot 7, concession 1, a flow of 5,877,500 cubic feet; one on lot 8, concession 1, a flow of 5,700,000 cubic feet, and one on lot 9, concession 1, a flow of 7,000,000 cubic feet per day. In 1894, a pipe line to Detroit was completed and gas was supplied to that city. For a time it was piped even to Toledo. Pressure began to fall off and, through the influence of Canadian consumers, an Order in Council was passed in October, 1901, revoking the license of occupation by virtue of which the gas was exported, and the supply to Detroit was cut off. After this the production rapidly fell off, and in 1904 the pool was practically exhausted, the supply to Windsor ceasing on April 1, of that year.

Realizing the conditions in other gas fields, people in my constituency, in communities where natural gas exists, feel that we should safeguard ourselves at the present time and that the Government should give the assurance which I have asked for to-day. On this matter of conservation, I should like to quote an authority, who is noted in that regard, Dr. Chas. R. Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin, who, in a recent work on the conservation of natural resources in the United States, had something to say in regard to this matter of natural gas. He deals rather extensively with the subject, but I wish to quote only a few paragraphs:

Natural gas is the most perfect form of fuel which nature has furnished us; it is indeed the ideal fuel. This becomes evident when it is recalled that the best known way to produce power from coal is to transform it into 'producer' gas, before it is burned to produce energy either below the steam boiler or in the combustion engine. This is true, although the manufactured gas used for power is mixed with much inert nitrogen. The natural product is practically free from the element nitrogen, and thus has a much higher efficiency than producer gas.

He says further:

It is impossible accurately to estimate the amount or the future life of natural gas, but it is certain to be short. According to Day it cannot be expected that it will last for more than twenty-five years.

Day is an authority on natural gas and one of the officials of the United States Government. (Reading):

That the supply of natural was will not last long is shown by the fact that the older wells have been exhausted and others are yielding a diminishing flow. Not only is this so, but whole districts have been practically exhausted in a score of years or a few decades. Only a few years ago from the gas fields of Indiana great quantities of natural gas were piped into the city of Chicago to be used for manufacturing and for heating purposes. The supply has gone down until the amount which comes into that city at present from this source is insignificant.

In another part of this chapter, he remarks on the waste of natural gas by transmission:

In addition to the great waste in natural gas at the well, there has been large loss in transmission. Many of the pipes through which the gas is carried are carelessly constructed, and there is much leakage from the joints; this is a loss which can be made wholly preventable.

I mention this to show that, in the transmission of gas especially over long distances, the loss would be much greater. There is a danger of waste in the exportation of gas from the fields in Alberta into Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In another place he says:

Of all the pieces of extravagance of which the American people have been guilty, perhaps their reckless and wasteful use of natural gas is the most striking—not the most important—but the most striking. This product, severely limited in quantity, which can last only a few years at most, has been handled by us as if it were illimitable. No serious attempt has been made in any other state than Indiana to control the awful waste which has been described.

Certain it is that if we wait another score of years before effectively handling the question of this waste, there will be no necessity for handling it at all. For if past practice is continued, the amount of natural gas which will be available at the end of another twenty years will scarcely be worth consideration. Immediate action on the part of legislatures is required in all those states producing this material. Every session gone by without action represents a great and irreparable loss. It stands as evidence that one more legislature has been incompetent to administer the trust that is imposed upon it by the people.

The Government of Canada has assumed the responsibility under the Act passed in 1907, as I have said, for the exportation of natural gas. I think it must be clear from the quotations I have given of the views of authorities and the experiences of other countries, that it is most important that Canada should now act in this matter to guarantee the sections of our country in which natural gas fields exist that these fields should be protected. And, as I have said, the people of the constituency of Medicine Hat are not selfish in this regard, but they believe that nature has given them a great asset in this natural gas and they are desirous of protecting that asset, and they wish to impress upon the Government the great importance of the matter. It has been strongly urged that industries should be established in western Canada to meet some of the grievances of the people in that country. In this respect the supply of natural gas has been of great value because it has enabled manufacturers to come into the West and establish industries there, because it made cheap power available, and as a result of this we have in my constituency, I think, the greatest industrial centre of that section of Canada in the city of Medicine Hat. The natural gas area of that section has a supposed length of one hundred miles and a breadth of sixty miles, but the extent of the supply is unknown—there is no certainty about it. By some people who have studied the matter the supply is regarded as inexhaustible. But we know that that was the opinion in other communities where natural gas fields existed, and these communities have learned that the supply was not inexhaustible, but that by the exportation of this gas, by using it over a large territory it was very rapidly depleted. The industries established in western Canada in the cities of my constituency have been established practically on the possession of natural gas and the fact that this fuel afforded them cheap power. And the people in the city of Medicine Hat and other places whose development has been assisted by natural gas feel that in order to guarantee their growth and to protect their industries the Government of Canada should make it clear that the exportation of natural gas, the piping of natural gas, shall be confined within certain limits and that no permission will be given to deplete the gas fields. Even at the present time in Alberta there is great waste in this regard, and I believe that under this Act which was passed in 1907 and under which the Dominion Government took the responsibility for issuing licenses to parties seeking to pipe gas, they should have a very close inspection of the gas fields of Alberta, that the pipes should be properly inspected and the wells also, so that there may be no waste in the gas fields that it is possible to prevent. For the records of other countries, especially that of Louisiana in the United States, shows that great waste is started at the wells themselves. I feel the Government ought to act and appoint inspectors to look over the gas area, to watch the pipes and wells and see that there is no unnecessary waste. We are anxious that that should be done. For, as I have said, there is waste already. In the city of Medicine Hat, the gas burns all day in the streets, because it is found to be cheaper to allow it to burn than to pay a man to go around and turn it out and again to light it at night. Medicine Hat possesses natural gas within its limits, and owns that gas, and this fuel has been a source of great profit. Natural gas is possessed by other communities also in a small way, with a possibility of it being found in still larger quantities. We are anxious that it should be preserved within Alberta, if possible, that it should be safeguarded as much as possible, so that these communities may be assured of the continuance of the natural gas which has brought about their industrial development; and we look to the Government to make some announcement in this regard.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour): I am sure we all feel indebted to my hon. friend from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) for the information he has given us on this very important and interesting subject. I regret very much that he did not intimate to me that he was going to bring the matter up to-day, in order that I might have familiarized myself with it and been in a position to make some observations. I listened with pleasure to the remarks he has made, and I assure him I will give the subject such consideration as I am able to give it in the near future.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): It occurs to me that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers), living as he does in a natural gas belt, should have sufficient first-hand knowledge of this very important matter to give his views on the question without having to have notice of the proposition which the hon. member for Lethbridge has brought to the notice of the House, and which is an exceedingly important one. All along the north shore of lake Erie at any rate, there is a natural gas belt. There has been natural gas produced in the county of Welland for about twenty-five years. In 1893, I think it was, there were two companies operating in the county of Welland, and they put in large force pumps by which they forced gas out of this country for the use of the people in Buffalo. We made a determined fight at that time for the Government and the province of Ontario to have this prevented, and after a long-extended struggle, we succeeded in preventing the exportation of natural gas into the United States. Natural gas is an exhaustible commodity. As was stated by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, it is one of the most excellent types of fuel that has ever been discovered, and those sections of the country which have the advantage of producing natural gas are indeed exceedingly fortunate. When a gas well is exhausted, it cannot again be drawn upon or operated, and the present supply is not so great as not to be exhausted within a reasonable time—probably in the lifetime of hon. gentlemen who now sit in this House. In the county of Welland, which I have the honour to represent, the supply is becoming greatly depleted, as well as in the county of Haldimand, although in that portion of the province the supply has not been drawn upon to a very great extent. As I have said, natural gas, which is a magnificent fuel, should be kept entirely for the advantage of the people of Canada, and should not be exported from the country, particularly for the reason that the owners of the wells, and those who have invested their money in their development, can receive as much profit from their investments by keeping the gas in Canada and selling it to Canadians as by sending it to the United States. They would not get their returns so quickly, but they would get them as surely as if they sent the product to the Republic to the south.

Very closely connected with the export of natural gas is another matter which, I think, should very seriously occupy the attention of this Government and the people of Canada generally, and that is the manufacture and export of electric current, which is being developed to a very large extent on the Canadian border at Niagara Falls. There are at Niagara Falls at the present time three large companies manufacturing electric current—the Canadian Niagara Power Company, the Ontario Power Company and the Electrical Development Company. The Canadian Niagara Power Company and the Ontario Power Company are both United States concerns; the Electrical Development Company is a Toronto firm, and does not export electrical current to the United States, although the other two companies do. The Canadian Niagara Company exports all the current produced in Canada to Buffalo, Tonawanda, Lockport, and communities in that vicinity. The Ontario Power Company exports a large proportion of its products to the United States, besides supplying the Hydro-Electric Commission of the province of Ontario with a limited amount of electric current. These companies are reaching practically the limit of their capacity to develop electric current, particularly the two United States firms. As I have said, I think that the matter of the exportation of electric current to the United States is one which should occupy the attention of this Government, or of any other government of this country, because the matter of power production is one of the greatest importance to Canada at the present time, and will be of increasing importance to this country as the years go by. In Canada we have not got the supply of coal which we should have for all purposes, and to take the place of coal we must have electric current. It therefore behooves us, as true Canadian patriots and believers in the success of the ultimate destiny of our country, to see to it that all the natural resources of Canada are used in this country for the purposes of its development. Ever since I have been in Parliament and in the local legislature I have used my best endeavours to secure that end. In 1893 I struggled as strenuously as I could to secure the passage by the Ontario legislature of an Act to prevent the exportation of natural gas. I strove to secure and did secure the destruction of a monopoly agreement existing between the Ontario Government and the Canadian Niagara Power Company for the development of electrical power at Niagara Falls, thereby securing the development of that power by other firms. I have in the past taken a very great interest in that matter, and I feel that same interest still. I believe it is our duty, as true Canadian citizens, to conserve, as far as possible, our natural resources, prevent them from being sent to the United States for the benefit of the people of that country, and keep them in Canada for the benefit of Canadians.

Mr. BUCHANAN: If I am rightly informed, this matter of the exportation of natural gas comes under the purvey of the Department of Inland Revenue, not the Department of the Interior, and I would like to have the views of the Minister of Inland Revenue in regard to the matter.

Hon. BRUNO NANTEL (Minister of Inland Revenue): No application has been received by the department for license to export natural gas from Alberta, and consequently no license has been issued. Since 1910 the Government has prohibited the export of natural gas from Ontario by cancelling the license, for the reason that the gas was needed in Canada. As to electricity a certain quantity of the surplus electricity produced in Canada is exported to the United States. If my hon. friend had given notice that he intended to bring this question up to-day I would have been in a position to give more information. I shall read his speech carefully and give to the question the full consideration which it deserves.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT (Calgary): I venture to make a few observations on this question, as it is one that affects vitally certain interests in southern Alberta. The question of the exportation of natural gas in Alberta is not at all the same question as that referred to by the hon. gentleman from Welland (Mr. German). The question which is raised by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) refers only to the exportation of natural gas from one province to another. No question has yet arisen in western Canada with regard to the exportation of natural gas from the Canadian provinces to the American Republic, the single question has been whether those who have obtained licenses from the Department of the Interior to sell natural gas should be permitted to export it into the neighbouring provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. It is a well-know' fact that the whole of southern Alberta is underlaid with coal measures, perhaps the greatest in extent that are known in the world. I believe that geologists have now gone that far. In the southern portion of Saskatchewan, fuel is very scarce and it is unquestioned that a very great demand has arisen on the part of many of those who live in southern Saskatchewan, where the winters are long and severe, for some benefit from the large supplies of natural gas which unquestionably are to be found in the southern portion of Alberta. A great effort has been made by those who live in the vicinity of Medicine Hat and Bow Island to have it appear that the supply of natural gas might be readily depleted. The reports that were made to the large natural gas company now carrying on operations in southern Alberta would indicate that, so far as it is possible to ascertain the supply of natural gas is well-nigh inexhaustible, and a very eminent French scientist has expressed the opinion that probably the supply of natural gas will be continuous, that it is being produced now from time to time. I do not know whether that view is correct but it is held by some scientists, notably this very eminent scientist resident, I think, in Paris. Personally, I think that the largest measure of care should be exercised in conserving the natural resources of our country and it was to me a great satisfaction to hear the hon. member for Welland speak so strongly in regard to the orders and regulations of the department in relation to our natural resources and their preservation for those now resident in Canada and those who may reside here in the future. It is in somewhat striking contrast to the policy of his party some few months ago but it is pleasant at least to know that he still holds the same opinion as he did then on that question.

I would remind you that in dealing with a question of this character we in western Canada are surrounded by many difficulties. In the province of Ontario it might be easily possible to prevent the exportation of natural gas to the neighbouring province of Quebec, but, unfortunately, the late Administration did not see fit to give to the western provinces of Canada their natural resources; when they created us provinces they denied us equality with the other provinces and we have no power to legislate on this purely local matter as has been done by other provinces. As the western provinces at that time accepted certain cash compensation as being a sufficient payment for the resources which were retained by the Dominion, the question as to what our future shall be is one surrounded with many difficulties. I hope the day is not far distant when negotiations will be again carried on between the federal Government and the governments of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan looking to our acquiring control of our own natural resources, although I will say that if the natural resources of Alberta had been handled exactly in the same manner as its credit has been handled in the last few years there probably would not be many of those natural resources left under the control of the Crown at this time. Be that as it may, I still believe that we who live in the western provinces have the same right to the control and government of our natural resources as those who live in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and I do not believe that this Parliament dealt fairly with Alberta or with Saskatchewan when it practically compelled those provinces—because they had very little representation at that time—to barter away their future in the way of natural resources for a few paltry dollars. I can at least say that I have always held a consistent opinion so far as that is concerned, and I think that this Government will ultimately have to deal with that question. I again remind this House and the Government that so far as we who sit on this side of the House are concerned we are committed by definite and exact promises to hand over to the western provinces, at some time, their natural resources. I agree that the question is not now free from difficulty, because the matter having once been made the subject of a bargain, it is exceedingly difficult to open the whole question, to re-fix the amount of the subsidies to the new provinces and to place a proper value on the natural resources which may be restored to us, because we cannot hope, in the words of an eminent statesman, 'to eat our cake and have it,' to obtain the same money subsidies that we now have and also obtain possession of our natural resources.

The question as to the exportation of our natural gas to the neighbouring province of Saskatchewan is one which I think this Government may find it somewhat difficult to deal with. The regulations under which natural gas is now obtained and piped to Calgary and other cities are issued by the Department of the Interior and so I take it that the matter is still under the control of the federal Government and will remain there so long as control of our natural resources rests in their hands. The hon. member for Lethbridge is right in bringing to the attention of the House the serious agitation that has been going on in some portions of southern Alberta with reference to possible results that would follow if the supply of natural gas were depleted. Medicine Hat has grown up entirely because of the cheap natural gas and the facilities which it affords for manufacturing and industrial enterprises. We, in Calgary, are now consuming natural gas piped from Bow island and sold at an average price, for domestic and power purposes, of twenty-five cents which is a very low price as hon. members for Ontario will know. I know, and I fancy this is what the hon. member for Lethbridge has in mind, that there was a proposal made to the towns of Regina, Moosejaw and Winnipeg on behalf of those who had obtained certain rights to a supply of natural gas in southern Alberta, and I thought at the time there was no possibility of the matter taking serious form. The question of financing the project was brought to my attention and it was pointed out that the cost of construction of a pipe line capable of carrying gas from Alberta to Regina and Moosejaw would be so great that the project was practically an impossible one.

I desire to utilize this opportunity to press on the attention of this Administration the promise outstanding as part of its programme to see that the western provinces receive that measure of consideration, so far as the obtaining of our natural resources is concerned, as may be necessary to place us on an equality with the other provinces of this confederation and in doing that I desire to point out the great wrong and injury done to the western provinces by the late Administration and to point out that what was once a matter of little difficulty has now become one of extreme difficulty because of certain financial considerations that will have to be dealt with. By reason of the manner in which the finances of at least one of the provinces have been dealt with, it will be exceedingly difficult to lessen the subsidy we obtain from the Dominion and pay the interest charges on our public debt without resorting to direct taxation.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take any part in this discussion, and anything I have to say even now will be very brief. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) with respect to the exportation of natural gas from that province. In Saskatchewan, and particularly in the southern part of the province, we have been somewhat interested in obtaining a supply of natural gas. Up to the present time we have not been able to obtain any supply within the limits of Saskatchewan. There was a proposition last year for the exportation of natural gas from Alberta, in the vicinity of Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, but I believe that what the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) has said is correct that, after investigation as to the expense of piping the natural gas all these hundreds of miles, it was found that it was practically beyond reason to expect that we should obtain a supply in that way. We have in southern Saskatchewan a fairly large coal-producing area and, judging from the reports of engineers which have been submitted in the last few months, we believe that we will obtain a sufficient gas supply from the coal found in that part of the province. My reason for saying anything on the question at all has been the fact that the hon. member for Calgary has ventured here, on the eve of the Alberta elections, to make something in the nature of a campaign statement with respect to the natural resources of the western provinces. I have lived in western Canada for some years now and I had lived there for some years previous to the time when the provinces were established and we were given autonomy in 1905. I believe that I voice the views of the large majority of the people of Saskatchewan and of the people of Alberta, and that it will be so proven on the 16th of April if this question is discussed in the Alberta elections, when I say that the western provinces were very liberally treated with the cash grants that were given to them in lieu of their land in 1905. In 1905, when these provinces were carved out of the vast Northwest, there were no provincial organizations in western Canada and it was in the interest of the western provinces that the administration of the land should be retained by the Dominion Government. These provinces have grown strong in the last seven or eight years, and they have completed their provincial and municipal organizations. The people believe that they are just as capable of handling their natural resources as the Dominion Government is. I notice a statement in the papers which, I believe, is correct, that one of the ministers in the Alberta Government has stated that if they are returned to power, and if the natural resources are handed over to the province, they will deal with the question of the exportation of natural gas in Alberta and deal with it effectively, which I take to mean that they would prevent the exportation of natural gas.

Why does not this Dominion Government, pursuant to the promise made during the last Dominion election, hand over to these provinces their natural resources? You may say that I have changed my position on this question. I have not. I say again that in 1905, when these provinces were formed, it was in the interest of the provinces themselves that they should get a cash subsidy in lieu of their land; but now, when the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta have capable and efficient organizations of their own, why should they not have their natural resources? They are going to develop the great northern area of Saskatchewan, and that area requires draining. Is the Dominion Government going to undertake the drainage of that country? In the Alberta and Saskatchewan legislatures, on two or three different occasions, resolutions have been passed practically unanimously asking this Government for their natural resources. I remember that, when the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) was in Regina last summer, he was reported there, as elsewhere, to have stated that instead of giving the people wider markets he would give them their natural resources. I am informed that the Government of the province of Saskatchewan has been seeking an interview with the present Government for many months, but that up to the present time it has not been able to obtain even an interview to consider the question of handing over the natural resources to the province. It does not come very well, from the hon. member for Calgary, on the eve of an election in Alberta, to get up in this House and make a campaign speech on the question of natural resources. The question is a most important one in the interests of Canada and I would suggest to my hon. friend to use whatever influence he has with the present Government in urging them to fulfil the most definite and distinct promises that were ever made to an electorate in the Dominion of Canada when the right hon. the Prime Minister told the people that if he and his friends were elected on the 21st September, 1911, they would hand over to Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba their natural resources. Nothing further has been heard of that promise and up to the present time the Government have not seen fit to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan. If we are to judge from the terms upon which the boundaries of Manitoba were increased last year, I venture to predict that it will be a long time before these provincial governments get their natural resources from this Government, notwithstanding the fact that, in the forthcoming elections in the province of Alberta, the Conservative politicians will tell the people, as they told them in the Saskatchewan elections last summer, that if they want to get their natural resources they should elect a Conservative Government.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would not have intervened in this debate if some remarks had not fallen from the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett). With regard to the exportation of natural gas from one province to another, I have never, myself, been oppressed with any fear about the exhaustion of natural resources. I never heard of anything serious happening along that line. If we run out of gas, we may strike upon some other method of getting heat and light. Providence has altered the methods by which people have got illumination and heat during the various generations that human beings have occupied the surface of the earth. I have a happy belief in Providence still, for which I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will commend me. As a free-trader I think I will be prepared to sell gas from Alberta to another province.

I only intervene to express my satisfaction that my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is still pledged to the policy which he has several times advocated in local and Dominion elections. He has a way of renewing his pledges, as my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) has said, just about election time and it is natural, even if one is in a very charitable frame of mind, to suspect that the mention by that hon. gentleman of resources in natural gas has some little political meaning just as this particular time. Not only is my hon. friend pledged, but the party with which he is associated on, the other side of the House, is very distinctly pledged to the giving of the natural resources to Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is only now, as far as I know, that we have heard from any hon. members opposite about the extreme difficulty of the process. It was the easiest process before the last election that one could conceive of. I have seen the time when every three-cent advocate who came from Calgary to oppose me in my riding went over on the ends of his fingers the things that would be done if the people only refused the market to the south of them. They were to have their natural resources and a great many other things besides for which they are looking and there was nothing extremely difficult about it then. The pledge was given unreservedly; I think my right hon. friend nibbled at the question anyhow, but there was no nibbling on the part of his followers in the province of Alberta. Why should the party in power with forty or fifty majority be repelled from a correct course of action because of its extreme difficulty? Why should an hon. gentleman like my friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett), be repelled by difficulties. The trouble with the party opposite is that they too easily see difficulty in things. The building of a Canadian navy, for instance, did not hurt them at all when they were in opposition; but the moment they are in power they say it is an extremely difficult thing, and run away from it. So with the giving of the natural resources of the provinces. If there were any sincerity in the pledge; if it were not a mere vote-catcher, give up remodelling the British Empire for a moment and do something for the people of these provinces. If a political party in Canada should start remodelling the British Empire every time it comes into power, there will always be extreme difficulty in looking after things purely Canadian. I am tempted to quote the Book of Proverbs, but my hon. friends opposite do not always take Scripture in the way they should. There is a passage in the Book of Proverbs which says: 'The eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth.' I would not venture to quote that, Mr. Speaker, did I not know that you would smile at me so long as I kept to quotations from Scripture. One of the evils of this remodelling of the British Empire from time to time, and looking after the business of the Admiralty, and other things, is, that it withdraws the attention of my hon. friends opposite, and their capacity which, after all, is limited, as all human capacity is, from the things which are their proper business. Surely if a political party has any proper business in the world it is to fulfill its pledges. Extreme difficulty, forsooth; why, the joys of conquest, somebody has said, are the joys of man, and the average Canadian is the very man who goes for a thing if it is extremely difficult, and so is the average Britisher. This Government wants to get over the importation of difficulties into things. As to the pledge of my hon. friend of course the people of Alberta at this time will weigh it for what it is worth; they will compare it with the same pledge given nearly two years ago and they will say: Well, if our hon. friend from Calgary only gets busy at election times with these pledges, he is too easily repelled by extreme difficulties.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): He is noted for being repelled by extreme difficulties.

Mr. CLARK: I do not know that it is a thing that anybody gets any particular note for, but my hon. friend has just proclaimed that he is in this particular case repelled by the extreme difficulties of it and if he takes on the general description I have no quarrel with him; if the cap fits he must put it on.

THE TARIFF.

On the motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Supply:

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): There is another matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the House before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker. Some of the remarks of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) illustrate a matter which I think should engage the attention of the House at this time. Hon. gentlemen opposite are so busy reforming the British Empire that they have been neglecting the very essential concerns in which the Canadian people are much interested, including, as my hon. friend from Red Deer has so very well emphasized, the fulfillment of their many pledges given before they came into office. We have been sitting here now for four or five months, and so far we have not heard from hon. gentlemen opposite anything in regard to what they purpose doing with reference to their tariff policy. They have been in office for a year and a half, and if there was one thing that was the special care and devotion of these hon. gentlemen before they assumed office, it was the tariff. It may be said that in previous sessions the budget speech has been delayed as now, but that is true only in regard to sessions of Parliament when it was well recognized what the tariff policy of the existing Government was. Where there had been a general revision of the tariff some time previously, and where the Minister of Finance of the day had announced there would be no tariff changes the next year or the year after, the business men of the country knew where they stood in regard to tariff matters. Under the tariff policy of the Liberal party which had been in existence since 1897, the very tariff policy which the Government is using to-day and under which this country is prospering, the people of Canada were able to make their business and financial transactions in safety. And, until a stage was reached where the Conservative party indicated it had some views upon the question, there was a certainty as to the future which was of advantage to the business men of the country. But, hon. gentlemen opposite had definite views with regard to this question which they gave pronouncement to before they came into power, and, as we know, they inserted this plank in their platform:

To inaugurate a fiscal policy which will promote the production within Canada of all useful articles and commodities that can be advantageously produced or manufactured from or by means of our natural resources, having due regard to the interests of the consumer as well as to the just claims of our wage-earning population.

I am bound to point out a conspicuous illustration of where hon. gentlemen opposite have deliberately run away from this plank in their tariff policy, when they decried the idea that Canadians could build ships as well as the men of any other nationality, and when they set their face against producing in Canada these ships which can be advantageously produced here by means of our natural resources. I wish to point out also that the question to-day before the people of Canada as to the cost of living is most serious, and the Conservatives specially pledged themselves to deal with it, hon. gentlemen opposite sit still and go on to discuss academic questions as to reforming the Empire while the problem of the cost of living has no concern for them. While the business people of Canada are waiting to see what the Government is going to do in regard to the tariff, the Government is occupying the complete attention of Parliament with an effort to carry out their pledges to their Nationalist allies in the province of Quebec. The budget has been delayed in previous sessions, but there has not been in the history of our Parliament an instance in which a government has come to power pledged to deal with tariff matters, which has so long postponed action as in the present instance. The Liberal party came into power in 1896, and in 1897 they came down with their tariff policy of British preference. They dealt with that problem promptly and the people of the country were satisfied with their action. Hon. gentlemen opposite came into power in September, 1911. This is now March, 1913, and the beginning of a new financial year; yet not a word has come from the mouths of these oracles; the Sphinx remains absolutely silent in regard to any changes which might be made in the tariff policy of the Liberal party under which this country has been prosperous for the last fifteen years.

Mr. BEST: Tell us about the tariff of 1911.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend had better wrestle with the Government which has to deal with these questions. My hon. friend supports a number of men who purport to govern this country. What I am pointing out to them is this, that the question with which we are dealing to-day is whether or not this Government has any views on the tariff, and whether or not it proposes to put them into effect. When this Government brings down a tariff policy, we shall compare it with the policy of 1907 and with all the magnificent results which have followed from the tariff management of the Liberal party. I should like to direct the attention of the House to a statement which was made by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. White) at the beginning of this session in regard to this question. I have pointed out the absolute inaction of these gentlemen who were pledged to deal with the tariff. All over this country hopes had been raised in different industries in regard to what these gentlemen were to do. Here and there throughout Canada assurances had been given and understandings made that anomalies would be removed, and this, that and the other change proposed. My hon. friend the present Minister of Finance, speaking in this House on this tariff question, said——

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not permissible to quote from a previous debate in the present session on the same subject.

Mr. MACDONALD: We have been accustomed lately to have rules laid down within very narrow lines. Perhaps we had better observe them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD: You touch the button and hon. gentlemen opposite shout, 'order.' It seems to be an automatic performance these days, Mr. Speaker.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, on a previous occasion, lauded the stability of tariffs. Last year, although certain changes ought to have been made in the tariff, on account of the great desirability of having a stable tariff and because a tariff commission was to be appointed, nothing was done. Hon. gentlemen opposite have accepted with great complacency the fact that they have no tariff commission. They seem to be willing to accept the tariff of the Liberal party if they were only left alone and if nothing were said to them in regard to it. I fancy that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would be perfectly willing to take the tariff brought down by the tariff minister of this country in 1907 and to go on with it, if he could only get rid of the importunities of his friends in the country. Stability of tariff was a great virtue with him a few months ago, and anything that interfered with it was, according to my hon. friend, a vice, a great evil, and liable to create uncertainty in the country. Let us accept that proposition. What is the condition of affairs throughout this country to-day? Hon. gentlemen opposite have raised the hopes of certain gentlemen in this country that changes were to be made in the tariff. It has been rumoured all over the coun' y that here and there changes were to be made.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): What authentic rumours ?

Mr. MACDONALD: Well, it is rather invidious to my hon. friend to give names, but let him ask some of the hon. gentlemen from the province of Ontario, who sit behind him, as to whether or not assurances have not been given to them in regard to such changes. Am I to understand that we are not to have any changes?

Mr. ROGERS: You are fishing a little. Is the fishing good?

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): I thought the hon. gentleman was asking me a question. I only wish to remind him that possibly it was a steel company that received the assurance of bounties. He is an authority on steel companies.

Mr. MACDONALD: As my hon. friend was not asked any question, I thank him for his gratuitous information. Let me say to him, however, that he need not worry about me, in regard to steel interests in this country. I have stood for the steel interests in this country during my political career; I stand for them now, and I shall stand for them in the future.

Mr. BENNETT: It was the hon. gentleman's assurances that I referred to.

Mr. MACDONALD: Let my hon. friend rest satisfied. I have no assurances from any minister in regard to this matter, and I am not speaking in regard to any interests which have my sympathy. Does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance pretend to say to this House that there are no interests in this country to-day that expected to have favourable treatment from him in certain particulars?

Mr. WHITE: None.

Mr. MACDONALD: It is just as well to have that on record, because common rumour in regard to the matter has certainly gone far astray. If, as a matter of fact, there is no business interest in Canada to-day which expects from the Minister of Finance favourable treatment in regard to the tariff, let us have that definitely on 'Hansard' so that we shall understand it. My hon. friend intimated last year that he thought several changes should be made in the tariff, but he postponed the making of them on account of the benefit and advantage of stability in the tariff. He asks if assurances were given. If he looks at 'Hansard,' he will find that he gave an assurance that it was his opinion that changes should be made. This brings me to the point that I am making that the business interests of this country have been improperly postponed all through this session of Parliament, and that up to date no statement has been made by this Government as to whether or not it proposes to deal with the tariff question. It is rumoured that financial conditions are not satisfactory in certain localities. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance knows that well. Yet, in spite of the fact that difficulties of that kind are more apt to arise from uncertainty as to what tariff imposts are to be in this year of 1913, and that nothing would more accentuate financial difficulties than that very problem of uncertainty as to what the tariff is to be in the future, he is perfectly willing that to sit quietly, to make no move and to give no intimation to the country as to whether he intends to stand by the policy of a stable tariff or whether he proposes to make changes. The stable tariff, that he is standing by, is the much-abused tariff of 1907 of the Liberal party. When my hon. friends came into power, with the views they were supposed to entertain, I would have thought that what they intended to do would have been done in the session of 1911-12, that they would have proceeded at once to remove the anomalies in this tariff to take away the difficulties that existed, and to give to those who were relying, upon them, the remedy to which my hon. friends declared that they were entitled. But hon. gentlemen opposite did nothing of the kind and every day that they have sat in office since October, 1911, they have been paying the strongest possible testimony to the wisdom and judgment of the Liberal party and to that party's tariff policy under which Canada has prospered. I should be satisfied, and I think that the whole business interest of this country would be satisfied, if the Minister of Finance would tell us that the stability of the tariff is to be maintained. The hon. Minister of Finance should make a statement on this question at the earliest possible date, on account of the situation of the country and on account of the fact that throughout Canada business interests are wanting to know the policy of the Government on this question. Let me point to another matter. These hon. gentlemen came into power pledged to this:

> The promotion by negotiation, legislation and other constitutional means of a system of mutual preferential trade within the Empire.

That was a part of their tariff policy. What have they done about it? They have signed an agreement with the West Indies which was merely putting the finishing touches to negotiations which had been carried on by the Liberal Government. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has gone to Australia—for what? For the purpose of dealing with any scheme that has been originated by these hon. gentlemen? For the purpose of developing any policy that they ever created or imagined? Not at all; he has gone to Australia and New Zealand for the purpose of carrying out the plans of a tariff commission which was brought into existence as the result of a motion moved by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he represented Canada at the Imperial conference in 1911. And even the West Indies agreement is not completed. It remains in the doldrums, waiting, waiting, without being brought to a conclusion in Parliament. Why is this proposition delayed? Why is not the third reading of the West India Bill proposed? And outside of this West India matter and of the mission of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Australia and New Zeeland, what have these hon. gentlemen been doing to carry out the proposition of a system of preferential trade within the Empire? I would like to hear from these hon. gentlemen whether they have any understandings with any public men in England on this question on their visit of last year. We have heard a great deal for the last four or five months of their conferences and discussions on other questions, but not a word about the policy of mutual trade preference. Have they done anything? Do they intend to propose at this session of Parliament that anything should be done in this matter? They have not laid before Parliament anything that indicates that on this question they have any views whatever. Here is the position: Up to this very late date the Minister of Finance has failed to bring down his budget, has failed to lay before the people of Canada the statement of their own affairs to which they are entitled; on Tuesday next we start a new financial year. We have in power, a Government which, when in opposition was pledged by the declaration of their leader in a special platform to a tariff policy which, by necessary inference was different from that which up to that time prevailed. Yet to-day they keep the financial and business interests of this country in a state of uncertainty, because they are unwilling to indicate in the slightest degree what they intend to do in regard to the question of the tariff. On this question of mutual preference within the Empire what are these hon. gentlemen going to do? Is there to be a decrease of the British preference at this session? Why should these hon. gentlemen keep the House and the country in a state of uncertainty for so many months? Conditions in the financial circles in certain sections of this country, conditions of which the Minister of Finance is aware, may create a financial situation at any moment of the utmost danger and of the greatest moment to the Canadian people. But the hon. gentleman sits tight, unwilling to assist the business interests, unwilling to place them in such a position that they may know what they should do in this year of grace. One of the few impediments we have to our industrial life in this Canadian land is our winter season. We are opening up now for the summer. Every phase of business life is waiting for the starting of the increaing currents of trade which come with the springtime, and plans for this business year are being made all over the country. Yet the Minister of Finance keeps all these interests in a state of uncertainty. The hon. gentleman wants to reform the Empire, but he is unwilling to tell this Parliament what he is going to do about the tariff. I submit that any further delay on the part of the Government or the Minister of Finance in bringing down the budget and telling us what this Government's policy is to be with regard to the tariff matters, is a menace to the business of the country; and I submit that there should not be a day's further delay in telling us whether they intend to introduce changes in the Liberal policy of 1907, whether they intend to do anything about carrying out the planks of their platform, or whether these two planks are like almost every other plank in that platform, put there to talk about and not with any idea of being carried into effect.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford): I would join my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) in urging the Minister of Finance to bring down his budget and his tariff as soon as possible. I am quite in earnest when I tell him that at this time of the year many manufacturers throughout the land are accustomed to order their supplies for the next year's manufacture, and it would be very convenient for them to know if there was going to be any change in the tariff. It is impossible for them, if they think there is going to be a change in the tariff, to buy raw material properly. I have also had numerous letters from farmers, not only in my own riding but in other parts of the country asking me to find out whether or not the duty was to be remitted on ditching machines. Ditching by machinery is a practically new operation in the province of Ontario, and is now very largely practised; but no ditching machinery is manufactured in Canada, at least so far as I am aware. The farmers are very anxious that the duty on this machinery should be remitted, and, as the matter is not very serious as far as the income from the duties on that article is concerned, I hope the hon. minister can see his way clear to grant this wish of the farmers. I quite appreciate the fact that the minister cannot tell us whether or not he intends to do so, but at the same time I may suggest that if he would bring down his budget speech as soon as possible, the farmers would then know whether or not he intends to take any action in the matter to which I have referred. Another matter I desire to mention is in connection with the fact that last year the duty was remitted on cement for a short time. The farmers of this country are extensive users of cement, and I understand that they have got it into their heads that it is the intention of the Government this year to reduce the duty on cement. If that is the case, it would be a great convenience, particularly in view of the fact that this is the time of the year when the farmers are in greatest need of cement; if the hon. minister would make known his intentions in regard to the matter. I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate that what I have said in regard to this and other matters is absolutely correct, and that it will be wise on the part of the Government to let the people know, as soon as possible, what changes, if any, are to be made with reference to the tariff. I do hope that my hon. friend will seriously take into his consideration the matters I have mentioned, and give us an early answer.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): As I have stated before in this House, it is a tradition, and a very commendable one, on the part of the Finance Department that no announcement with regard to the tariff should be made except to the House and in the budget speech. As I have said, that is a very wise tradition, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to depart from it. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) have complained that there has been some delay with regard to the bringing down of the budget. Whose fault is it, I ask, that up to the present time, the budget has not been brought down? It is an encouraging sign that my hon. friend is beginning to realize that there may be serious consequences attendant upon the obstruction that has taken place in respect of the business of this House. Even belated repentance is praiseworthy, and I can only hope that in the next couple of weeks there will be manifested some of the fruits that are generally considered to be meet and proper results of that repentance in the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the deliberations and discussions in this House. My hon. friend from Pictou is getting into a rather dangerous frame of mind. He lives in a very invigorating atmosphere in the eastern province, and, during his stay in that portion of the country, he lays in a varied store of physical and intellectual energy. He comes up here with a chip on his shoulder; but by the time spring arrives the chip disappears, and he goes back in a chastened frame of mind. The attitude of my hon. friend reminds me very strongly of a Shakespearian quotation: 'I am Sir Oracle, and when I ope my mouth let no dog bark.' Although I atttribute to my hon. friend a great degree of intellectuality, I would suggest that one of the things he lacks is a befitting sense of humour, because it is recognized that a humorous man is able to see himself as others see him. My hon. friend presents many matters to this House with a great deal of vigour; and, I may say, with a certain amount of arrogance, and he seems to have the faculty of deluding himself into the belief that anything he brings to the attention of the House is an entirely new discovery of his own, no matter how obvious it may be. With reference to his remarks as to the confidence of the business interests of this country in the Government of the day, let me tell my hon. friend that the business interests of this country, rather than being in the least degree uneasy, have the most perfect and profound confidence in this Administration. I am in touch with these interests from day to day through my office, and the statements the hon. gentleman has made as to uneasiness with regard to this Government are entirely unfounded. I commend to my hon. friend a more moderate style of debate in this House, or he will become known as the Bombastes Furioso of this Parliament. Coming to a discussion of this matter in a sense in which it has not been dealt with by my hon. friend—that is a sound business-like standpoint—let us consider for a moment why the budget has not been brought down. It was said by Lord Brougham that if he knew a little about the law he would know something about everything, and my hon. friend, who evidently assumes to know something about everything, would have been in a better position in this matter if he had consulted his colleague, the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), before bringing the matter to the attention of the House. The hon. member should know that the budget should not be brought down until the West Indian trade agreement has been translated into law, until the Act has received validity by the sanction of the Senate. In other words, the budget this year, as I have stated on more than one occasion, should, to use a word which is a favourite one on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, synchronize with the going into effect of the West India trade agreement.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why did you not pass the West Indian trade agreement?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend says why have we not reached the third reading of the West Indian Trade Agreement. If he had been in the House when I spoke about that to the hon. member for Halifax the other day or had inquired of that hon. gentleman he would have been told that I offered a month ago to move the third reading of the West Indian Trade Agreement, if hon. gentlemen opposite would indicate anything as to the probable length of discussion, in the midst of the naval debate. I said that to the hon. member for Halifax, and I gathered that he was entirely willing.

Mr. MACDONALD: That is no reason.

Mr. WHITE: That is a very good reason. The second reading of the Bill had taken place after discussion; it is a simple Act validating the agreement but the junior member for Halifax told me afterwards that as a matter of fact the Opposition were not willing that the Act validating this agreement should be passed into law in this House without further discussion; in other words obstruction was to take place with regard to the discussion of the West Indian Trade Agreement just as it was taking place with regard to the Naval Aid Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WHITE: I think I am entirely in order.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I raise the point of order. I ask your ruling Mr. Speaker as to whether it is in order for the hon. minister to charge the whole of the Opposition with being guilty of obstruction.

Mr. SPEAKER: On the point of order I think that the term obstruction is not regarded as a permissible parliamentary expression.

Mr. WHITE: I have, of course, so much regard not only for your ruling but for the sensibilities of the hon. member for Red Deer that it gives me the greatest pleasure possible to withdraw the word. Of all men in the House the hon. member for Red Deer is the last who would be guilty of obstruction.

I do not intend to refer to the debate on the Naval Aid Bill except in so far as my hon. friend has said that we do not desire to build ships in Canada. My hon. friend gave me no notice of this debate, and I could not surmise that he would draw into question the ship-building policy of the Government. I happen to have in my pocket a statement handed to me by the officers of the Marine Department and I shall point out to my hon. friend that this conversion of hon. gentlemen opposite to the policy of Canadian ship-building is almost as sudden as the conversion of Saul on his way to Damascus, because I have here a list of ships in the Marine and Fisheries Department, the Naval Service, the Department of Agriculture, the Post Office Department and the Public Works Department, and I find that they were built in the following places during the time that the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power: Kiel, Germany; Paisley, Great Britain; Inverness, Great Britain; Dantzig, Germany; Dundee, Newcastle and so on down the line. Why in the world did not hon. gentlemen opposite, when on this side of this House, institute their ship-building industry and build ships for the services of the Dominion? We never heard of such a thing until we proposed to build three dreadnoughts for the Admiralty.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why did you not speak on the navy?

Mr. WHITE: If I have a chance—

Mr. MACDONALD: You had lots of chances.

Mr. WHITE: It goes to show the entire lack of appreciation of the refined courtesy that we have extended during all this time to hon. gentlemen opposite. I have been extremely solicitous that hon. gentlemen opposite should have no cause whatever for complaint, that they might not be able to say that we had limited the freedom of discussion, or that we had applied the gag—because they have said all that—they said all that to a patient Government, which has been sitting up at night with them when they were sick and petulant and irritable and yet the hon. member actually says to me, as being a reproach: You have not spoken on the naval question. We have been giving hon. gentlemen every opportunity; I have listened to my hon. friend speak four or five times on the naval question, not always with pleasure and yet he actually has the temerity to reproach me with not having spoken on the naval question. It seems to me that the position of my hon. friend is absurd in the extreme. As I have said, in general terms, the entire community of Canada has the most supreme confidence in this Government and there is none of the uneasiness that my hon. friend has attempted to proclaim. I have stated upon more than one occasion, I stated it during the discussion of the cement duty, that this Government, as the late Government, has stood for reasonable stability of tariff until a general revision took place and yet my hon. friend to-day complains that the budget has not been delivered when in reality that is his own fault owing to the delay caused by the Opposition.

The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) comes in and you would think he too was a second Columbus, just making a discovery with regard to ditching machinery. Ditching machinery has been brought to my attention by the Department of Agriculture of Ontario and by at least a dozen hon. gentlemen on this side of the House; but apart from that I am reasonably wide awake and I know the situation with regard to ditching machinery. I am not going to be drawn even by my hon. friend so as to announce in advance any tariff changes. That has not been done and is not going to be done. If my hon. friend wants to know what we will do I have stated that it is well known to the business community that we stand for reasonable stability of tariff and if he wants to know particularly what we are going to do with regard to the tariff I say to him: Wait and see. If he wants the budget brought down, if his professions are genuine and sincere, if he is interested in the business community and believes that there is any uneasiness, which there is not, I say let his acts correspond with his words and let us see if we are going to have the business of this House blocked. We have had discussions day and night, four thousand pages of 'Hansard,' ninety per cent of it by the Opposition, and yet he says we are applying the gag to the Opposition. If that is gag what is free speech?

Mr. MACDONALD: It would only take an afternoon.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend took his time and I will take my time in replying. We will have to give some extra attention to my hon. friend; he is getting into a dangerous frame of mind. He has some of the pride that goeth before a fall and it may be necessary for some hon. gentleman on this side to give special attention to him, in his own interest, so that he will not appear so headstrong, arrogant and confident in the statements he makes to this House. Let me commend him when he desires to deal with questions of tariff, in which he is not a specialist—he told us yesterday among other things—

Mr. MACDONALD: Do not refer to a past debate.

Mr. WHITE: All right, I will let my hon. friend down; I am generous; he cries for quarter and I will give him quarter but on some other occasion I shall discuss the matter with him. When he comes to me again with questions of tariff about which he does not know very much although he thinks he does, I would advise him to speak to his colleague the junior member for Halifax, who is better posted, who is the financial critic of the Opposition and who should bring this matter to the attention of the House. He is a specialist and, with great deference to my hon. friend's knowledge on all subjects, very much better posted with regard to the tariff than my hon. friend.

A division of labour, of governmental work and discussion in the House is very proper, and I would commend to my hon. friend, before he brings this matter again to our attention, to discuss it with his colleague the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) and ascertain something as to the propriety of a debate upon tariff matters, and as to when the budget shall be brought up. I do not know that there is anything else that the hon. gentleman has said of any consequence. He spoke about the commercial situation first and then about the financial situation. He seems to indicate that, because the financial situation appeared to be somewhat troublous, the tariff had a good deal to do with it. As a matter of fact we all know there has been a financial stringency and that it has been world-wide. It has been occasioned by many circumstances. World-wide commercial expansion has had a good deal to do with it, but unquestionably, the immediate cause of the world-wide money stringency has been the war between Turkey and the Balkan States. Happily that war appears to be near its conclusion, and I have every confidence in the future. I do not get stampeded, like my hon. friend, because money is tight. We have seen tight money before, we will see tight money again, and we will see easy money again. We must not forget that a tight money situation has within itself the seeds of its own cure. Everybody is endeavouring to relieve the situation, and it will only be a matter of time until the money stringency will ease off and disappear. I do not know what my hon. friend has gained by this——

Mr. MACDONALD: You have not yet told us when you are going to make your budget speech.

Mr. WHITE: I will tell my hon. friend now that the budget this year should synchronize, to use an expression that he has made his own, with the going into effect of the West Indian trade agreement. I ask my hon. friend now; I ask the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as to whether it is proposed to obstruct the business of this House by a debate on the third reading of the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WHITE: Well, I will withdraw that.

Sir WILFIRD LAURIER: There is no intention whatever.

Mr. WHITE: I am very glad to hear my right hon. friend make that statement. He is another recent convert. He says that there is no intention whatever. I am very glad for this reason, that the business interests of Canada concerned in the West Indian trade, have been very much disturbed by the fact that the business of this House has not proceeded as it should have done recently for reasons that I will not refer to for fear that I might be ruled out of order. Just as soon as I can get this Bill through the House and the Senate, and just as soon as it is assented to by the Governor General and proclaimed, I propose to bring down the budget. There are in the trade agreement a number of changes necessitating changes in the tariff. There are some changes specified in the agreement itself. There are a few changes of a minor character and the budget must await the passing into law of the West Indian trade agreement. If my right hon. friend will facilitate the passing of the Bill—and I was told that hon. gentlemen opposite will not facilitate the passing of this Bill—we will endeavour to get it on as soon as possible.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in the end the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) has given the House information which was sought by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) when he opened the discussion on this matter this afternoon. I think it would have been better if the Minister of Finance had given the answer in the first instance instead of in the concluding language of his speech. The impression he gave me throughout his remarks was that he was making a very tame reply to the criticism which was fairly levelled against him by my hon. friend from Pictou. I sometimes wonder just what is the frame of mind of the Minister of Finance when he discusses matters in this House. When I find him arising in his own place and discuss questions calmly and without excitement or attempts at wit or humour, I think that he is not on very sure ground, that he is rather uncertain of himself. But when he boldly walks forward and hammers the desk of the Prime Minister, instead of his own desk, he assumes an air which is rather ex cathedra. To-day he certainly hammered the Prime Minister's desk to his heart's content and I suppose the statement which he did make to the House was ex cathedra. The business that comes before this House is under the control of the Government and not of the Opposition. The Government is responsible for the programme from day to day throughout the session, and if the budget has been postponed for good reason or bad reason, the Government is to blame for the postponement. It is a poor, quibbling excuse for the Finance Minister backed by a majority of between forty and fifty in this House to say that they cannot do this or that, or that they cannot bring forward this or that measure, because the minority on this side of the House will not allow them to do so. If these hon. gentlemen cannot govern under these circumstances they should allow people who can govern to take their places. My hon. friend (Mr. White), in closing his remarks to-day, stated that he proposed in the near future to bring down his budget. The country is waiting for the budget—I do not say with anxiety, but I say with a considerable amount of interest—waiting to know whether, after all, the present Administration is going to carry out what is known as the Fielding tariff which has existed since 1897.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Certainly, that is the fiscal policy of this country to-day and it is a matter of considerable interest to the country to know whether that policy is to be remodelled, changed, or left as it is. I believe the time has come when there might be some modification of that policy. I believe that the policy has worked so well, and has been so conducive to trade posperity, that the time has come when there might be some modification of the burden which it imposes. There are a great many people in the country at the present time who, as they see the cost of living rising, and rising and ever rising, and wages not rising at the same time, are inclined to think that, with a surplus in the treasury of some $50,000,000 this year, the time has come when there might be some lessening of the burden of taxation. For that reason, if for no other, I think the Minister of Finance would do well to bring down his budget at the very earliest opportunity. His excuse that he has not done it because it is necessary in the first instance to give a third reading to the West Indian Trade Bill is absolute nonsense, an excuse of the flimsiest kind. He seriously tells the House that someone has told him that my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is going to oppose the third reading of the Bill. I challenge him to say who told him that.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I had communication both in the House and outside with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). He stated to me as I understood, both in the House and outside of the House, that, so far as he was concerned, he would facilitate the third reading of the Bill but that there was a desire on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to discuss the Bill further.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: In the course of the Naval Bill discussion. What did that mean?

Mr. GUTHRIE: From any information the Finance Minister received from the hon. member for Halifax he must have concluded that the Bill was being favourably considered by this side.

Mr. WHITE: By him.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Finance Minister had no reason to believe that any one on this side looked at the Bill unfavourably. The truth is that the Government deliberately made up its mind, on the 5th December last, that first and foremost they would force through the Naval Bill and put all other legislation aside. They knew the Naval Bill was going to be strenuously opposed; opposed on a great question of principle. But notwithstanding that knowledge, they made up their mind they would by hook or crook, by brute force or otherwise, by day and night sittings, put that Bill through.

Mr. WHITE: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the expression 'brute force or otherwise' is not parliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER: The expression is not considered parliamentary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I withdraw it and I substitute ' physical force.' That is the reason the budget has not been brought down; that is why the West Indian Trade Agreement Bill has not had its third reading; that is the reason the Banking Act has been sidetracked; that is why public and private legislation has been deferred, and the whole responsibility rests upon the Government, who have absolute control of the business programme of this House. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he take the first opportunity to bring down his budget and the West Indian Trade Agreement Bill, and while we may discuss it the discussion will not be lengthy. We look upon that measure as a creature of our own.

Mr. WHITE: Do I take that as an assurance that there will be no blocking with regard to the West Indian Trade Agreement Bill?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There has been no blocking in the past.

Mr. WHITE: But there will be in the future.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There will be reasonable and proper discussion, I assume, but I do not think it will take very long. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance in his ex-cathedra fashion to say that the business communities of the country have absolute confidence in the Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the Minister of Finance has absolute confidence in one thing, and that is in himself, but I do not know any great reason why he should make the other statement. There is uneasiness and uncertainty in the country and if the Minister of Finance does not know it he ought to know it, and the Prime Minister knows it and gentlemen sitting immediately behind the Prime Minister know it. We want to assist in avoiding everything detrimental to the business or financial interests of the country, and we do not desire to be kept here day in and day out, week in and week out, considering an unnecessary measure at the present time, to the exclusion of measures which are exceedingly necessary for the welfare of the country. Look at the despatch published in this evening's Citizen in regard to a phase of the naval question that has occupied so much of our time, and that has been pressed upon us as an emergency measure. Here is a despatch in this evening's Citizen, dated London, 26th March, this very day:

Naval Holiday in Building of Ships—Hon. Winston Churchill has a New Proposal on Naval Question.

London, March 26.—A naval holiday for a year as far as new construction is concerned was the offer made to the world today by Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, when he submitted the British naval estimates to the House of Commons.

In this way, he says, the peoples of the world would obtain an almost instantaneous mitigation of the thraldom in which they had been involved by the evil and insensate folly of the present acute rivalry in armaments. Scores of millions, he declared, were being squandered year after year without making any real preference in the relative naval strength of the nations. His proposal, he argued, would involve no alteration in the relative strength of the world's navy, and added:

We address this proposal to all nations, and to no nation with more profound sincerity than to our great neighbour over the North sea.

Mr. Churchill concluded with a graceful recognition of the sensible improvement that had taken place in Anglo-German relations.

A naval holiday in ship-building; a whole year and nothing doing.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would you please state if this is the same Mr. Churchill who has been advising gentlemen on the other side of the House?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Here we have been kept in session day in and day out, night after night, day after day, having forced upon us a naval measure for the construction of three dreadnoughts, and the First Lord of the Admiralty is proposing to-day a whole year's holiday in ship construction.

Mr. PELLETIER: Mr. Churchill is not proposing that; he is making that offer to the other nations.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I say to the Minister of Finance, bring down your budget so that the people may know what the tariff changes are to be, and whether there is to be increased taxation or lessened taxation.

Mr. GUTHRIE.

Mr. BELAND: And take a holiday in naval matters.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, and take a holiday in naval matters, and go forward with this Bank Act and the private legislation and the other pressing measures which are before the country and which have been held up by the Government.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Yesterday, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) drew attention to the French translation of the estimates for 1913-14. I I have made inquiry and I find that French copies of the estimates in question were received at the Distribution Office on February 27, 1913, quite a month ago, and one copy was placed in the post office box of each French-speaking member. I think my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) has confused the main estimates with the last supplementary estimates for 1912-13.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal): I am perfectly satisfied with the explanation given by my hon. friend.

Civil Government—High Commissioner's office, London—contingencies, $28,074.

Mr. EMMERSON: Have any changes been made in the personnel of the clerical staff in the High Commissioner's office? In previous years, some complaint was made that no distinctive Canadians were connected with that office.

Mr. BORDEN: I can only say to my hon. friend that I am not aware of any changes, and I do not think that any changes have been made. The complaints which he has mentioned have not come to my attention.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The item under consideration includes rent and insurance on office. The last time when we were discussing the salaries, I branched off and spoke about the proposed central building which Canada intended to have in London. My right hon. friend was kind enough to give the committee the necessary information for the time being. I do not object to what he said or to what he did not say then. I understand that, when the Government intends to buy land, it must act very discreetly. Since that discussion, the right hon. gentleman must have seen in the papers that our former Governor General, Lord Grey, obtained from the London County Council an option on a certain site in London near Kingsway, with the object of establishing a central building where all the overseas dominions would be located, and where permanent exhibitions of the products of the various dominions would be placed. I saw in a dispatch that the option had been obtained at a rather moderate figure, because the London County Council viewed that idea with favour. Is there anything in that dispatch which comprises some of the intentions of the Government as regards our offices in London?

Mr. BORDEN: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything of the proposal alluded to, except that which I have observed in the public press, as my hon. friend has done. I do not know that I have anything to add in reference to the building in London beyond what I said last year. I think I indicated then that there had been some idea of erecting a very large building in a very prominent place. The difficulties, which stood in the way of that, were that, so far as our own staff in London was concerned, a building of that kind might not be suitable for all purposes. For example, the particular location suitable for the High Commissioner's office might not be suitable for the immigration office. The project of erecting a very large building would involve also the leasing of a very considerable portion of it. Up to the present time the provinces seem disposed to erect their own buildings instead of joining in a project of that nature. As I said last year, the fact that a proposal by this Government had been advertised to a certain extent had not tended to decrease the values put upon available properties in London. I examined a number of sites during the past summer, but I really cannot say that the project has advanced very much beyond the stage which it reached last year.

Mr. NESBITT: Is it proposed to buy freehold property or to lease property?

Mr. BORDEN: As regards all property in London, you have to take what title is offered. A great many properties there are held on long leases. It is not always very easy to get a freehold. My hon. friend from Red Deer would know more about that, perhaps, than I do.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I quite realize that there are difficulties in the way, and these are succinctly stated by the right hon. gentleman. But if we can find in London, at a reasonable figure, a proper site for a Canadian building, I would earnestly ask him and his Government to do their utmost to bring under the same roof the offices of the various provinces. I am most strongly provincial in matters of provincial rights, but in London what predominates is the name of Canada. We should bring under the same roof the Dominion and the provincial offices. There is no reason why there should be at one end of the Strand an office for the Ontario Government, and on King's Way an office for the Quebec Government, and somewhere in Lennox Gardens, an office for Prince Edward Island. I think that is not conducive to the best interests of Canada.

Mr. BELAND: I do not see the salary paid to the High Commissioner stated here. What is the amount?

Mr. BORDEN: It is fixed by statute. The amount, I believe, is $10,000.

Mr. EMMERSON: I confess absolute ignorance as to the personnel of the staff in the commissioner's office, but complaint has been made to me in the past by those visiting that office that there are none there who are at all familiar with local conditions from a Canadian standpoint, particularly with the conditions in the maritime provinces. The officers seem to be informed with respect to western Canada in a general way, but as to the eastern provinces there seems to be a lack of the knowledge of the conditions which prevail.

Mr. BORDEN: Is my hon. friend speaking of the High Commissioner's office or of the immigration office?

Mr. EMMERSON: Of the High Commissioner's office. Complaint has been made to me; I do not vouch for its correctness. Friends of mine who have been in the office think that there should be a little more distinctively Canadian atmosphere there than there is. It is, they say, wholly English.

Mr. BORDEN: The hon. gentleman will recollect that the secretary, Mr. Griffiths, is a Canadian.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not a Canadian by birth, but he was a long resident of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN: I thought he was born in Canada. At any rate he lived in Manitoba a long time. So far as my own experience is concerned, Mr. Griffiths has been most painstaking and indefatigable in anything I asked of him. I am not so familiar with the other gentlemen employed in the office. There are seven of them, I think.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am glad to add my own testimony to that of my right hon. friend with regard to Mr. Griffiths. Mr. Griffiths is not a Canadian by birth, but was long in Canada, a resident of Manitoba, and I think he is thoroughly familiar with everything that concerns Canadian life. He is most painstaking and devoted to his duties, and during the many years I was connected with the Administration, I found him always willing to do everything in his power to make his office of real service to the public.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I did not understand my hon. friend from Westmorland to criticise Mr. Griffiiths, just now, but he said that the atmosphere of the office on Victoria street was distinctly English and that information regarding Canada, more particularly regarding eastern Canada was difficult to obtain there. This only emphasizes what I brought to the notice of the Prime Minister—that if we had a central office in London with the provincial officers under the same roof, this difficulty would be overcome. And particularly would this be the case if you had there a man like Mr. Obed Smith, who is at the head of the Department of Immigration in London and who is certainly one of the best informed men in England as regards Canadian conditions. If you go to the Canadian office on Victoria street, you get more information about the West than about the East of Canada, but if you go to Mr. Obed Smith at the Immigration office, you get information about the whole Dominion. There is an office for Quebec on Kingsway where you can get information about Quebec, another office for British Columbia, and another office for Ontario, and so on. It would be excellent policy for the Government of Canada to have all these offices under the same roof. And if there is to be a new building for Canada, all these offices should be brought together.

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not wish to be misapprehended. I have not had personal experience with regard to the London office and I am not making personal complaint but only stating to the committee the observations made to me by those who have been at that office.

At six o'clock, House resumed and then took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock, and again went into Committee of Supply (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair).

General consulting engineer to Dominion Government—salary, $7,600.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is that the item relating to Mr. Schreiber?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: Can my hon. friend give me any information as to Mr. Schreiber's report regarding the condition of the western section of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway?

Mr. BORDEN: I think I cannot now give any special information with regard to Mr. Schreiber's report, but if my hon. friend desires any special information I will try to have it brought down in connection with the discussion of the Transcontinental estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: There were quite a number of miles of railway constructed eastward from Prince Rupert through the Rockies, and the difficulties of construction, I understand, chiefly consisted in the forwarding of supplies. The last report I saw in the press with regard to the matter was that they were rushing the work with a good deal of success, and intended to have it completed within a year.

Mr. BORDEN: The reasons why I have not more information on the subject is that we have relegated consideration of such reports to the Department of Railways and Canals. Mr. Schreiber is technically placed under the supervision of the Prime Minister, but, as a matter of fact, as his reports relate more especially to technical matters, this subject has been discussed as relating to the Department of Railways and Canals, and I have been consulted when any matter of special importance required to be considered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Did Mr. Schreiber make a report last year?

Mr. BORDEN: He has made several reports. His usual course is to make a report every time he goes over the line for purposes of inspection.

Department of External Affairs—contingencies, $7,500.

Mr. GRAHAM: What do the contingencies consist of?

Mr. BORDEN: Printing, stationery and sundries.

Mr. GRAHAM: There has been no change in the staff?

Mr. BORDEN: None that I am aware of.

Conservation Commission—salaries, $28,862.50.

Mr. GRAHAM: I understand that there is a health department in connection with the Conservation Commission. Did the commission not take some part in the discussion with reference to the water supply of the city of Ottawa?

Mr. BORDEN: I think so. I believe they have done a valuable work in connection with matters of that kind all over the country.

Mr. GRAHAM: In this connection I may say that I saw a report in one of to-day's papers saying that the Government was considering the establishing of a health department, and I was wondering if that would be really necessary if the Conservation Commission, through its health department, could perform all the work that would be necessary for the preservation of the health of the public, so far as the Dominion is concerned. There is, I suppose, the possibility of a slight conflict between the provinces and the Dominion in regard to health matters, if the Dominion undertakes to go too much into detail. Speaking of the province of Ontario—and I think the same system is in vogue in the other provinces—we have our various local health boards and medical health officers in each municipality, who get instructions from the provincial authorities. I do not think that so far there has been any friction between these officials and the Conservation Commission, but if we are to have a health department in the Government it would almost seem as if there might be an overlapping of work, unless the health department is to obsorb the Conservation Commission, or the work being done by them through their health department. If there are to be so many health departments, we may be doctored to death.

Mr. BORDEN: There has been no conclusion reached with regard to that subject. We have heard delegations—notably one delegation at the time of the medical conference in Ottawa a few months ago—when medical men urged upon us very strongly the necessity of establishing a department of health which would gather within its jurisdiction a great many matters now dealt with in the different departments of the Government. I realized that there was a great deal of force in some of the representations that they made, but, speaking quite frankly, I have not yet been able to give to the subject the consideration which I think it should receive before we undertake any reorganization of that kind. So far as the Commission of Conservation is concerned, my hon. friend will remember that that commission is purely an investigating and advisory body, and is not invested with any executive or administrative functions. The work of the health department, therefore, which would include certain matters which are now regularly under the jurisdiction of the various departments of the Government, would not, it seems to me, conflict with the idea of having this commission carry on the work it is now doing. My hon. friend will, of course, agree with me that, while we do not want to be doctored to death, one of the most important subjects to which the principle of wise conservation can be applied is the health of this country. The subject has been brought to our attention not only by the delegation to which I have allluded but in other ways as one which should engage the attention of the Government, and if it should be possible to bring under the jurisdiction of a single department to be established as a department of public health, the various matters to which I have alluded which are now scattered among several departments of the Government and in that way to carry on more efficiently and perhaps to extend this work, we might eventually make such proposals to the House, but we have come to no conclusion up to the present time, because as I have already said, there has not been sufficient time to consider it.

Mr. GERMAN: Will the minister explain why it is necessary to spend $28,000 on the office of the Conservation Commission when the officers of the commission are not paid anything?

Mr. BORDEN: The members of the commission are not paid.

Mr. GERMAN: Why is the $28,000 necessary?

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend will find the information in regard to that in the report of the commission.

Mr. GERMAN: I have looked at the report of the Conservation Commission and I have failed to see wherein they have given $28,000 worth of information or anything that would entitle them to any such amount of money. I cannot see where the money has been earned. While the people have strong views concerning the conservation of our natural resources and want anything necessary to be done in that direction, they want more information as to what has been done, as a consideration for the payment of this amount of money. I fail to see where, up to the present time, the Conservation Commission has done anything to earn this money. It is not necessary to spend $28,000 to get a theory when you can get that from a Finance Minister.

Mr. BORDEN: For less than $28,000.

Mr. GERMAN: Yes, and much more useful. I think we should consider carefully before voting $28,000 for a purpose which, under the circumstances, has been of no utility to Canada.

Mr. BORDEN: The organization of the staff of the Conservation Commission was fixed under the late Administration and we have not made any change in it.

Mr. GERMAN: Perhaps so but they were not always right.

Mr. BORDEN: At the time of the establishment of this Commission I gave it my very warmest support.

Mr. GERMAN: Also the Naval Bill.

Mr. BORDEN: Not just at that point. I think my hon. friend gave it his support at the time.

Mr. GERMAN, Oh, well, probably.

Mr. BORDEN: Perhaps we might be quits so far as that is concerned. I would not agree that this Commission has not been of benefit. I think it has been a very distinct and great benefit. I know that the members of the Commission have taken a great interest in securing the conservation of our forests and they have interested themselves greatly in all questions of public health. I do not think the officers of the Commission have enjoyed a pure sinecure by any means. They have an efficient secretary, Mr. White, who, I know, is a very busy man. For example, in connection with several matters coming under the consideration of the International Joint Commission I have received valuable assistance from Mr. White and in everything that concerned the proper development of our public resources I can assure my hon. friend that, speaking from personal experience, I have received invaluable assistance from the Conservation Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The idea of the Conservation Commission when it was first laid before the House was approved by everyone, and rightly so. The Commission is destined to serve a very useful public service. If it has any fault it is that its members cannot give all their time. They are not paid, and can only give the surplus time at their disposal. The report for this year has been laid on the table, and I have taken a glance at it. As I am told it has not yet been printed, I think my right hon. friend would do well not to press this item, but to allow it to stand over until we can look at the report. I must say that the Commission to my certain knowledge and to the knowledge of everybody, has done good work.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The sittings of the Commission, which take place in Ottawa, have been public. They have discussed most important subjects, amongst others, public health and the conservation of forests and water. The advantages in these two respects alone are enough to justify all the expenditure that has been made on the Commission. We have no more important subject than the preservation of our forests and waters. The Commission has presented certain views on this subject. I do not know how far they have been acted upon. As my right hon. friend has stated, the Commission has no executive authority: it is merely advisory; it collects information. The information it has collected with regard to forestry would go naturally to the Department of the Interior, where there is a Forestry Branch. The department has done very valuable work in this connection, and I believe that during the last two years great progress has been made in the preservation of our forests and in guarding them against fire. Last year and the year before there was a marked decrease in the number of forest fires. For instance, in the building of the Transcontinental railway through New Brunswick I do not think there has been a single fire. When the Minister of Marine was Premier of New Brunswick we made an arrangement with his Government whereby a body of fire rangers were engaged to look after the railway roads, and the result has been most marked: not a single tree has been burned as a consequence of the building of the railway through the forest. This is the first time in the history of the country that such a thing has taken place. This result is due to the work of the New Brunswick Government, the Government of Canada, and the Conservation Commission. If I have any criticism to make, it is that perhaps it would be well to have a permanent chairman of the Commission. Mr. Sifton is a most experienced man, and no man could perform greater services than he could if he were free to give all his time to the work of the Commission; but he is a man of business and, being frequently away from Ottawa, he cannot give to the work of the Commission the time that it requires. I do not know but that we shall have to have a permanent paid chairman to look after the work of the Commission.

Mr. BORDEN: I think I should say in justice to Mr. Sifton that, when he is in Ottawa, he does give a great deal of time to the work of the Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear; I know that and he does good work too.

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend has suggested that the item should stand until the report is distributed; I have no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Sifton, as chairman of the Commission, has done a good deal of work that perhaps is not apparent to the public. When I was Minister of Railways and Canals, for example, Mr. Sifton, as chairman of the Commission and one or two other gentlemen whose names I cannot recall at the moment, held several meetings in my office and out of those meetings resulted an amendment to the Railway Act giving the Board of Railway Commissioners power to pass regulations compelling the railways to make every effort to protect property from fire along their lines, not only during construction, but during operation as well. I do not know what extent that has been made operative, but a few months ago I noticed in the press that these regulations were being enforced in connection with some of the railways. When this item comes up I will ask for some information as to how these regulations have been enforced and whether they have worked successfully. At the same time it was suggested, and I agreed with the suggestion, that while the Intercolonial railway did not come under the Board of Railway Commissioners, that railway should be put under the same conditions, as far as protecting property from fire along its line was concerned, as other railways. I would like to know whether that has been carried out.

Mr. BORDEN: I will have the request of my hon. friend for information on these points brought to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Speaking from memory, I do recollect that the Commission brought to my attention some few weeks, or some few months, ago the fact that they had engaged a very experienced and capable man who was to be entrusted with the duty of seeing that these regulations were carried out by the railway companies. If I am not mistaken, his salary is to be provided for, in part by the Commission, and in part by the Department of Railways and Canals. I think the purpose of his appointment is that the regulations shall be carried out.

Mr. GRAHAM: There was a question as to whether the enforcing of such regulations by the Board of Railway Commissioners might not interfere with certain regulations or enactments of the Department of the Interior. There are some regulations, or it possibly might be a statute, under which a branch of the Department of the Interior protects certain property through which railways run. In discussing these regulations with Mr. Sifton at the time, mention was made of the possibility that there might be an overlapping of jurisdiction and work between the two. I hope that the hon. Minister of the Interior will be able to speak about that when he comes to his estimates. I agree with the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition that one of the most useful works in which the Government, of Parliament, or the Conservation Commission, or the Board of Railway Commissioners, can be engaged is the preservation of the forests of the Dominion. Anything that the House can do to encourage that work, it ought to do.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend (Mr. Graham) is quite right in suggesting that there may be an overlapping in so far as the forestry branch of the Department of the Interior and the Conservation Commission are concerned, and it is a matter well worth looking into, because, undoubtedly, the work might be duplicated by these two services.

Mr. HAZEN: The right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has referred to the good results that followed in the way of the protection of forests and the prevention of forest fires along the line of the National Transcontinental railway through the centre of the province of New Brunswick as the result of an agreement entered into between himself when he was Prime Minister and the Government of New Brunswick at the time when I was premier of that province. I would like to endorse everything that the hon. the leader of the Opposition has said. The result was most satisfactory, and one has only to consider the small amount of damage that has been done by fire along the line of the National Transcontinental railway, compared with the damage that was done in the construction of other railways in the forest sections of New Brunswick, to appreciate the great advantage which has resulted from that arrangement. I am satisfied that the public discussions that have taken place on this subject of the prevention of forest fires, not only through the Conservation Commission, but at the conventions held each year by the Dominion Forestry Association, have attracted attention to the question, have caused men to think about it and the result is that means for the prevention of forest fires have been taken which have saved immense timber areas from destruction and which will be of incalculable value to the Dominion of Canada.

As to the Conservation Commission, I may say that about a year ago, as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I was charged with the management of the preparation of the case to be submitted to the Secretary of State for War in Washington in opposition to the application of the Chicago Sanitary Commission for the privilege of withdrawing 10,000,000 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan. It was felt that if that permission were granted the result would be prejudicial to the shipping and navigation interests of the great lakes and of the St. Lawrence. In the preparation of that case, I would like to bear testimony to the fact that I received very valuable assistance and information from the Conservation Commission, which was thoroughly alive to the importance of the question and whose secretary, Mr. White, rendered assistance that, I can speak of, without any exaggeration at all as being of the most valuable character. There is no doubt in my mind that the Conservation Commission, while it has done very good work in the past, is capable of doing very good work in the future, and I believe that the chairman and members of the Commission should be paid salaries and devote their whole time to the important work that they have undertaken.

Mr. CARVELL: Mr. Chairman, I would not like to say anything to mar the harmony of the mutual admiration society that has been established between my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), but I am afraid that both are giving a great deal more credit to the Conservation Commission for the absence of fires along the line of the National Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick than is really due to it. I believe, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has stated, that the mere fact of the public discussions that have taken place through the Conservation Commission and the statements that are being put forth in the newspapers are doing an immense amount of good. But we do not want to forget that the Commission should not receive very much credit for the absence of fires along the National Transcontinental railway through New Brunswick during the last three years. In 1910 some of the most serious forest fires in the history of New Brunswick took place along the line of the National Transcontinental railway at three or four different points. At one place an area of from seven to ten square miles of valuable timber land was absolutely destroyed, and at another place, on the Miramichi river, three or four square miles. It was said that these fires had spread from camp fires along the line of the National Transcontinental railway, but I believe that is not correct. My impression is that the fires originated through sportsmen. The matter has not been settled yet; it will have to be inquired into by the courts and possibly we may find out the exact cause of these fires. We have been fairly free from forest fires since 1910; in 1912 it rained so much that you could hardly light a fire in the woods if you wanted to, and in 1911 the immunity from fire was almost wholly due to the very effective protection supplied by the railway contractors who felt that a great deal of loss had occurred the year before and that it was up to them then to do everything in their power to prevent a recurrence. I fear the public might be left in a false state of security if the statement were allowed to pass without explanation. What has been done by the Conservation Commission towards protecting the forests in the province of New Brunswick? The provincial Government have a number of fish wardens who I think are fire guardians to some extent, but so far as I know the Conservation Commission has taken no active part in the prevention of fires in that territory.

Mr. HAZEN: The work done by the Conservation Commission in this respect is largely in the line of educating the people to the importance of protecting the forests from fire. As I understand it the arrangement entered into between the late federal Government, the National Transcontinental Railway Commissioners and the provincial Government was that the commissioners should supply fire wardens during the construction of the railway and pay them, and the Government of New Brunswick vested these wardens with authority and power under the laws of New Brunswick. I would remind my hon. friend that the damage done to the forest wealth of New Brunswick during the construction of the Transcontinental railway is small compared with the tremendous loss of forest wealth during the construction of the Intercolonial railway and other railways in that province. Under the System in New Brunswick, every man who is a fish guardian or a game guardian is also sworn in as a fire warden. The guides are also sworn as fire wardens and no class of men are more interested in preventing forest fires, because if you destroy the forest you destroy the home of the game and indirectly deprive these guides of their means of livelihood. Each succeeding year a greater number of persons are attracted to New Brunswick in pursuit of game; the guides make a very good living out of their business and are an important influence in protecting the forests against fire. I have no hesitation in saying that admirable results followed on the arrangement entered into by the late Government with the Transcontinental railway contractors and the province of New Brunswick in regard to preventing fires.

Mr. CARVELL: I would point out to the minister that the arrangement he refers to provides that these fire wardens shall be paid by the contractors, so that no very great credit is due either to the federal Government or to the provincial Government in that respect, except, that the precautions taken may have been a means of educating the people to the importance of preventing forest fires. I do not want the committee to get the idea that the Conservation Commission has done much towards preventing forest fires in New Brunswick, nor do I know it is their duty to enter into that field of work, nor, that they have money supplied them to employ fire wardens. From the information which has come to me in the course of certain arbitration cases I believe that not only the Conservation Commission but the federal Government and the local Government and the owners of timber property could learn a great deal if they studied the precautions taken in the State of Maine, not only by the Government but by private owners who employ wardens by the hundreds, who have a regular telephone system through the woods, and depots with fire-lighting appliances at regular intervals. They go about the business there in an intelligent and effective manner. If the Conservation Commission would establish a system such as that in New Brunswick we could well afford to vote them twice the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. BORDEN: The commission is not doing any executive work at all.

Mr. CARVELL: I suppose they could not do executive work, but they could conduct an educational campaign.

Mr. BORDEN: I think they are doing that.

Mr. GRAHAM: As I had the honour of making that agreement referred to when I was Minister of Railways, I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) that the Government of New Brunswick and the Dominion Government, through the Railway Department, came to an amicable arrangement, by which this Government agreed that this line of construction would be thoroughly patrolled. Fire rangers were engaged to protect the forests from any fires that might arise owing to the construction camps, although they would follow fires wherever they started. I am in favour of the work done by the Conservation Commission, and I think we ought to encourage it in its work. During the past two or three years, it was realized that some improvement was necessary in the way of forest protection in the forests of Ontario. The Conservation Commission and the Government of Ontario had some correspondence in reference to the matter, with the result that there may be a uniformity of action. In years gone by, the trouble was that the timber areas of Ontario were not sufficiently manned with fire rangers.

There is another point on which I would like information. I think Mr. White and another gentleman waited on the various departments and asked for a list of the water powers under the control of each department, the names of the people to whom each power was leased, the date of the lease, the price per horse-power and so on. I presume that my right hon. friend, if it is not in the report, will give us some idea of just what we own in that respect. In this report we have the various rates, a synopsis of the terms of the leases and the dates of the water powers under the control of the Railway Department. It will be very interesting, because conditions are so different, to work out, whether these leases are equitable or not. Some water powers in the Railway Department are leased for a long term of years; the original lessors are getting practically nothing, but the water powers are sublet several times until the sub-leases reach quite a large sum. Under the old leases in perpetuity, the Government was getting practically nothing for the water powers that are being enjoyed by the people at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN: It is a very proper request; and, if the information is not in the report, I shall apply to the Secretary of the Commission for all available information on the subject. The item in the meantime can stand.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) has stated that if we went to the State of Maine or some other state, we might get pointers. No region in Canada has had to suffer so much from forest fires as the St. Maurice region. The lumbermen there have formed what they call the St. Maurice Forest Protective Association. In conjunction with the local Government this association has done more to prevent forest fires than anything done by the Conservation Commission or by any government. Instead of choosing men itself, the Government takes the recommendation of trusted employees of the lumber company. The men are sworn in as fire rangers; a telephone system has been installed; on the highest peaks in the forest are observation towers, and at different points tools are stored. Sand or earth is used in some places where it is difficult to get water. Whenever a man sees smoke, he telephones to the station, and the rangers run to put out the fire. Since the organization of this association, there have been no great fires as they have been kept under control. I think the example of this association ought to be followed.

Mr. MURPHY: Could my right hon. friend inform the committee why the Conservation Commission, in making its annual report, follows a practice different from that followed by each of the departments and commissions of the Government? I think it is the custom or the duty of each department or commission to make its annual report to the responsible minister. The Conservation Commission passes over the Minister and makes its report direct to the Governor General.

Mr. BORDEN: That matter has not been brought to my attention. I shall make inquiry about it.

Mr. BELAND: I understand that the Conservation Commission is under the control of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr BORDEN: My recollection is that an Order in Council was passed connecting it in some way with the Department of Agriculture, but I cannot say just in what way. By the terms of the statute, the Conservation Commission is not technically under any minister. For purposes of convenience of administration, I think it was identified in some way with the Department of Agriculture. If my hon. friend wishes, I shall bring down the Order in Council.

Mr. BURRELL: When I took office, I found that I had something to do with the Conservation Commission, but I did not quite know what the position was. After making enquiries, I found that it was not a department or a branch of any department, but that the Minister of Agriculture was made an intermediary between the Conservation Commission and Parliament in Council. I do not think my hon. friend is quite correct in stating that the Conservation Commission is under the control of the Minister of Agriculture. So far as I am concerned, I must confess that I have no control over it.

Mr. BELAND: The reason I said that was that the late Administration paid particular attention to this matter of conservation. And I might add, before you leave the item, that there is a great deal in what the right hon. the leader of the Opposition has said, that as long as the members of the commission are not paid they cannot devote much of their time to the work of the commission. A great deal of work has been done by the Chairman, the Hon. Clifford Sifton. I believe that he is the chairman no longer—I am not positive—

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, he is chairman.

Mr. BELAND: He was absent and Senator Edwards was acting chairman during his absence. I may add just a few words for the information of my hon. friend from Welland especially. The members of the House are, perhaps not wholly conversant with the work of the Commission. It consists especially in gathering information to direct the action of the Government in securing the conservation of the natural resources of the country, including water, forests, land, minerals, fisheries and health. While some hon. members contend that the report of the Commission was rather meagre, may I be permitted to say that special reports are periodically published by the Commission. For instance. an extensive and very elaborate report was published a few months ago—perhaps over a year ago—on the water-powers of Canada, a very carefully prepared document and a most valuable source of information for everyone in this country. Then, the services of Dr. Robertson have been secured by the Commission to investigate by what means the resources of our soil could be best conserved, and I believe that a very important report has been published on that subject. Then, regarding forests, of course the jurisdiction of the Commission of Conservation does not directly extend outside the forests that are under the care of the Dominion Government; but the Commission has been instrumental in bringing about the creation, or if not the creation, the perfecting, of what is known as the Rocky Mountain Forest Reserve, which I understand, is the most important forest reserve in the country. And the Commission has secured the services of Mr. Campbell, one of the officials of the Interior Department, a very able man and one eminently qualified for this kind of work; and he has suggested to the Commission some plan, I believe, by which the conservation of that important resource can be attained. I am not positive, but I think that another important report or bulletin has been issued by the Commission regarding the conservation of minerals. Everyone in this House realizes what an enormous waste of natural resources goes on in this country. I remember hearing Mr. Pinchot, whom everybody knows and who was an important official under the Roosevelt Administration in the United States, state that the waste of coal in the United States amounted to $300,000,000 a year, the waste of land to $500,000,000 a year, the waste of forests to $500,000,000 a year and so on. I have not figures which would show the waste that goes on in Canada, but I do not doubt that they are proportionately large. That work of the Commission is carried on in different ways—by securing the services of experts such as Dr. Robertson to investigate the subjects, by carrying on extensive correspondence, and otherwise. I am quite sure that this item, $28,000, is a rather small amount for the work that is being done by the Commission. I am a member of the Commission but we receive no allowance whatever, and I thoroughly believe that the work of the Commission is a most important one for the country. This item, I take it, is not the whole amount that is being expended through the Commission, but there must be another item elsewhere in the estimates; this amount, I understand, covers only the salaries of the employees in the office. As I recollect it, last year or the year before last we appropriated somewhere about $50,000 for the Commission of Conservation. A similar commission exists in the United States. It is considered there an important part of the Government, and it should be considered in the same light in Canada. If the right hon. gentleman is ready to allow this item to stand, I have no objection, but, so far as I am concerned, I should have no objection to having it go through.

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition suggested that the item should stand until the report had been distributed. I assented at once; and when the item comes up again, I will have more exact information as to the work of education and investigation which the Commission has carried on. In the meantime, I would like to express my thanks to the hon. member for Beauce for the very useful information he has given respecting the work of the Commission, and I would like to join with him and other hon. members who have discussed the question in appreciation of the excellent work which the Chairman of the Commission has done. I know personally that he has devoted a great deal of his time when in Ottawa to the work of the Commission, and has always taken a great interest in it. He has brought to that work all the great ability and energy which he possesses.

Item stands.

Civil Service Commission—salaries, $29,025; contingencies, $50,500.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Might I ask if appointments are made to the inside service without the authority of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BORDEN: So far as I am aware, they are not. I could not understand how, under the law, they could be made without application to the Commission.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are promotions being made which are not authorized by the Commission?

Mr. BORDEN: I am not aware that they are, and if my hon. friend will direct my attention to anything of the kind, I will make inquiry as to the matter. I do not understand how it could be done except in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If my memory serves me rightly, my hon. friend obtained authority last year by statute to increase the number of the Civil Service commissioners, and, although a year has elapsed I am not aware that the number of the commissioners has been increased.

Mr. BORDEN: I had expected before this to have made considerable progress in extending the scope of the Civil Service Act. My right hon. friend will remember that I went away almost immedately after the session last year and was absent until the autumn. When the autumn arrived, we secured the services of Sir George Murray for the purpose of investigating Civil Service conditions, and he has made a report which has been laid on the table of the House. We hope to give that report consideration in connection with the extension of the Civil Service Act, and, possibly, in connection with some revision of that Act, which is not in all respects absolutely satisfactory in its operation. In the meantime, until that extension does take place, and until the consideration of that report can be made, it is not thought necessary that a third commisioner should be appointed. The appointment will, however, eventually be made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend had not thought of the report of Sir George Murray when he obtained power to increase the number of the commissioners. When my hon. friend last year introduced the Bill authorizing the Government to increase the number of the commissioners, we offered no objection. We assumed at that time that my hon. friend had made up his mind to have a third commissioner, and although the reasons given were rather meagre, we took it for granted that there were good reasons for this change. Perhaps we too readily took matters for granted, because my hon. friend has now been deliberating for a year, and I do not understand that he is even at the present time in a position to say that the third commissioner will be appointed.

Mr. BORDEN: A third commissioner will be appointed in due course, but I think it is desirable that, before doing so, the operation of the Act should be carefully reviewed and the recommendations made by Sir George Murray with regard to the working of the Act and the efficiency of the Civil Service generally should be fully considered; and also that his suggestions pointing to the possibility of greater efficiency should be considered by the House and by the Government.

Mr. GERMAN: I understand that under certain circumstances the commission can appoint officers to positions without reference to the Government or the ministers thereof. I would like to know whether, if in those circumstances the Commission has appointed a man to a position, it is within the power of the minister of the Crown in whose department he may have been appointed, to dismiss him without the consent of the Commission?

Mr. BORDEN: My recollection of it is that when an officer is required, application is made to the Commission, who send to the department one of the applicants who is selected according to the efficiency attained by the candidates in the regular examinations. He goes to the department for a certain period on approbation, and, if his services are unsatisfactory, the commission will name some one else, who also takes the position on approbation before receiving a permanent appointment.

Mr. MURPHY: In putting through an item a few days ago, the Postmaster General explained that the amount of money covered by the item was required for the salaries of persons who had been appointed outside of the Civil Service Commission, that is, by some departmental or ministerial Act; and he mentioned that the Commission had been unable to find persons qualified to fill the requisite offices in the Post Office Department. At that time we did not get any explanation as to how these persons were appointed, if it were not on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission. Does my right hon. friend know anything about that?

Mr. BORDEN: No such matter has been brought to my attention, but I will be very glad to mention the matter to the Postmaster General.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have had persons come to me in reference to obtaining positions in the Civil Service, and I have informed them that they must pass an examination, and that the candidates obtaining the highest number of marks would get the first appointments. To my surprise, some of these persons have turned up in the department, and laughed at my advice to go before the Civil Service Commission. If the Civil Service Act is to be of any value, it will have to be adhered to, and if it is wrong it should be changed, but no member of the Government should attempt to evade the Civil Service Act. I have always maintained, however, that the private secretary of a minister should not come under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and I maintain that the private secretaries of the ministers of the Crown should be selected and appointed absolutely at the discretion of the ministers. The relations existing between the minister and his private secretary are of such a confidential nature, that I do not think any outside party should be allowed to make the selection for him and, whether or not he has passed an examination, if, in the opinion of the minister whose private secretary he is to be, he is the man who will best suit the minister's purpose, the minister ought to be allowed to select that person. The present Government did bring in their own private secretaries through some clause. I go so far as they say that they were right in doing this.

Mr. BORDEN: We brought in private secretaries under a provision of the Act of 1908 which my hon. friends passed. It was amended last year, but not in principle. The provision was that a minister might appoint a private secretary without resort to the Civil Service Commission, but not in a class higher than the class named in the statute, and that after serving for one year as private secretary to the minister the person so selected and appointed would be permanently a member of the Civil Service on that salary for the time being and subject to promotion in the ordinary course. We amended the Act last year by fixing a higher class, because we found it impossible to get efficient private secretaries at the maximum salary which was fixed by the enactment of 1908. A Bill was presented to the House for that purpose and passed without a great deal of discussion.

Mr. GRAHAM: My difficulty would be only partly solved by that explanation. It was impossible under that statute as it then existed to engage as private secretary the man you wanted because you could not pay the salary required. I am of the opinion that the Civil Service law ought to have very little to do with a man's private secretary except that it should protect him and ensure that he should continue to be a member of the Civil Service even should the minister retire and he be not continued as private secretary to the incoming minister. Only to that extent should the private secretary be under the Civil Service law.

Mr. BUREAU: I absolutely endorse what the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has said. I think the minister who employs a private secretary should have absolute choice of the man he is to employ. We might extend this principle to the members of the House. There are a lot of stenographers here, employed in common; the members have nothing to say as to their selection. It may be on a smaller scale, but the business of the members is as important to them as that of the ministers. This is not the proper way to handle correspondence. I may say that I have my secretary outside of those employed by the House. This service is apart from that of the sessional writers who do general work. The men and women downstairs are supposed to be secretaries of members. I think the members of the House will admit that it is very difficult for any member who has private correspondence, even although it may not be directly on matters relating to the House, but on other political matters, to trust a stranger perfectly unknown, with it. Some change ought to be made. If you cannot supply a secretary to each member, do as they do in the United States, allow each member a certain amount, $100 or $200, and let the member have his own choice of the secretary who will be called upon to do his work. I have found it impracticable to send work down to the room where thirty or forty are working together, and where your letters are lying around loose so that any one passing can read them.

Mr. GERMAN: Several years ago I was in the Ontario Legislature when government by commission was first inaugurated and it has been growing since. I remember the time when the Government of the Dominion and of the various provinces was carried on by the responsible ministers of the Crown and we had no commissions to carry on the various branches of government. It appears to have reached this stage now that, although we have responsible ministers of the Crown not only in the Dominion but in the provinces as well—and the Liberal party are not exempt from the criticism I am making, because they established the system in Ontario many years ago—everything appears to be done by commissions, and not under the responsible ministers of the Crown. We have a Conservation Commission at an expense of $50,000 and a Civil Service Commission at an expense of $44,000, and I fail to see of what benefit the Civil Service Commission is in so far as the Government of Canada is concerned. What better inside or outside service have we than we had before the Civil Service Commission was appointed? We had good officers then, we have good officers now, but we have no better officers now than we had before the Commission was appointed. I fail to see the benefit to Canada of all these commissions which are appointed to relieve the ministers of the Crown from the responsibility which is on them to govern this country properly and to make the appointments.

It has been suggested that the Civil Service Commission should not only have jurisdiction over the inside service but over the outside service as well. I wish to express my positive conviction that the Civil Service Commission could never, with any degree of satisfaction, control the outside service. I fail to see where they have controlled the inside service with absolute satisfaction, but I am positive that they cannot control the outside service. How could the Civil Service Commission possibly know who was the best man to appoint to a position in the custom house, or in the immigration department, say, in the county of Welland, or Lincoln, or any other county? I know that I have appointed officers that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) have seen fit to leave in their positions. I have heard the opinion expressed frequently in various parts of Canada that we are having too many commissions appointed to control affairs that should be controlled by the responsible ministers of the Crown. These commissions are appointed at large salaries and we have not only the salaries of the commissioners, but the salaries of the staff, which will continue to grow until they reach a figure that will be staggering. The time has come when we should call a halt, because we cannot govern this country by commission.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would the hon. gentleman give us some of the reasons which were advanced why the Civil Service Commission should be appointed, and which reasons evidently influenced him in supporting the appointment of such a commission?

Mr. GERMAN: It was the unanimous opinion of the House that the appointment of Civil Service employees should be taken out of politics as far as possible and that a Civil Service Commission should be appointed who would have the right to appoint men to the Civil Service by reason of competency rather than by reason of any political influence that should be exercised. That was the object of appointing the Commission; but, as far as my information and observation go, I cannot see that the appointments to positions have been made any differently since the Commission has been appointed than they were before. They are made by reason of political influence now just the same as they ever were.

Royal Northwest Mounted Police—pay of force, $425,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I noticed yesterday that my hon. friend paid a very well deserved tribute to the late comptroller, Mr. White. I would like to ask him if Mr. White has been replaced as comptroller.

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, by Mr. Fortescue, who was formerly the deputy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has he been formally appointed?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Fortescue is a very good officer, he has had large experience in the department, and I do not think that my right hon. friend could have selected a better man. I find that there is an increase of $85,000 this year; that is by reason of the increase in the pay of the force. In looking over the report, I have found that there is very little change in the organization of this force, and in reference to that I certainly do not complain. I presume, however, that my right hon. friend will be obliged to extend the force northward. At the present time settlement is going on in the territory north of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and especially of Alberta, along the Mackenzie river and the Peace river, and around Great Slave lake. The mounted police has certainly been the best asset that we have had in connection with the settlement of that western country. I am sure that my right hon. friend is besieged with demands to extend it northward. I believe that he cannot resist doing so, but I presume that the time will come when he can transfer some of the force from the older provinces to this part of the country. Out of a force of about 700 men he has about 300 in Alberta, 200 in Saskatchewan, 20 in Manitoba, and between 40 and 50 in the Yukon. He may have also to increase the force in Manitoba. Settlement will go on along the line of the Hudson Bay railway, and, as it goes on probably he will have to establish new stations along the railway up to the Churchill river where we have a force at the present time. The same thing will apply to the territory north of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I notice that the commissioner complains that the force is not sufficient in the Yukon. I am not quite sure that I would agree with the commissioner as to that. The population is not increasing in the Yukon, as far as my information goes. I notice that the commissioner recommends that the force of about forty should be increased. I do not know whether my right hon. friend has given any attention to that or not.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon): The numerical strength of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police force in the Yukon has been reduced to a point below that at which it should be maintained in a territory so far removed from the centre of Government. Some of the members of the force have retired and others, when their time expired, did not re-enlist. The Yukon territory is over 200,000 square miles in area, with scattered settlements which in some instances are two hundred or three hundred miles away from the larger towns and villages. It is extremely necessary that such a territory should be well policed, and I am glad to know that the strength of the force is to be increased. At the very least we should have fifty men, whereas, at present, we have less than thirty. The mounted police have done splendid work in that territory; they have enabled the people to live under the protection of the law and to be assured that life and property are as safe there as in the most law-abiding communities. So long as I am a member of this House I shall press upon the Prime Minister the necessity for keeping the Yukon force up to its full strength.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Could my hon. friend give us information as to the recent statement in the newspapers that a dredge had been dynamited in the Yukon, and that there were anarchists in that district?

Mr. BORDEN: I am informed that an arrest has been made.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where did this outrage take place?

Mr. THOMPSON: Within two miles of Dawson. I may say it is the first instance of the kind that has ever occurred in that territory and it affords a further reason why it should be well policed. I never have been in favour of reducing the mounted police force in the Yukon to a mere skeleton.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the extent of the damage done?

Mr. THOMPSON: An arrest has been made but the trial has not advanced sufficiently to bring out the reasons for the dynamiting. An anonymous letter was addressed to the manager of the company which owned the dredge but no specific reasons were given.

Mr. BORDEN: The number of men at present in the Yukon is twenty-six and this estimate is based on an increase to fifty.

Mr. BUCHANAN: The Northwest Mounted Police have been in my constituency for a great many years and the people have a very high regard for the work they have done in the past, and the work they are now doing. I know nothing in western Canada which makes a better impression on the new settler than the presence of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and the guarantee which they give of the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order. For some time past there has been a demand that the force should be increased in Alberta to meet the requirements in the new sections of the country which are becoming populated. I had occasion this year to bring two or three cases of this kind before the commissioner at Regina, and his complaint was that it was impossible to get men to meet all the demands in western Canada. We have not yet in Alberta complete municipal organization and the enforcement of the law in districts which have not come under the Rural Municipalities Act rests practically in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. I would urge that efforts be made to send members of the force to these new districts. We have still a few cattle rustlers in that country and ranchers need police protection. The people in the West believe that the members of the force should be paid sufficiently to induce men to enter the service. The province of Alberta is being developed in the far north and there will be need there of the Northwest Mounted Police for many years to come. I urge upon the Prime Minister the necessity for placing members of the mounted police force in these new settlements as promptly as possible.

Mr. BORDEN: I entirely concur in the appreciation my hon. friend has expressed of the work which the Northwest Mounted Police have been doing in the past and are at present doing. What he has said as to the good impression made upon new settlers by the presence and efficiency of this force in a country of vast extent and sparse population, is undoubtedly true. My hon. friend is aware that an Act has been passed this session by which the pay of the force has been increased. The force at present numbers 671 and this estimate will provide for 760 which is a very considerable addition. I imagine that as communities become established and municipally organized in the more thickly settled portions of the province the police will be transferred to the more remote districts. That will be in the ordinary course of events, as my hon. friend will realize. Applications are continually being made to the department from various new communities for small detachments. We have endeavoured to meet those demands as best we can, and in that matter I am altogether guided by the advice of the Comptroller and the Commissioners of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Some difficulties have arisen under the arrangement which was made between the Government and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The guard rooms of the force have been rather overcrowded, and I think it will be necessary to take that matter up with the governments of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to see whether we cannot secure some arrangement by which the provinces will undertake to provide for the custody of these prisoners to a greater extent than they are doing at present. It is thought that the increase in pay will be of very great assistance in keeping the force up to the strength which I have mentioned. I understand from the comptroller that very satisfactory results have already made themselves manifest in the re-enlistment of men who otherwise would probably not have re-enlisted. I hope that, under the statutory provision to which I have alluded and with the policy which I have outlined, we shall be able to get the force up to seven hundred and sixty, and to do more in the way of satisfying the demands of new communities than we have been able to do in the past.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In my experience of the force, I never found that recruiting was a serious difficulty. The pay is not very large, but connected with the force are some advantages, which have always been found sufficient to keep it up to its maximum. The men are boarded and lodged, and they receive a pension after twenty years' service. A man, who enlists at twenty years of age can retire on a pension at forty. He knows the country thoroughly; he can go into business, and get on very well. The force has been an anomaly from the first, but still it has been a very useful and very creditable anomaly to Canada. When it was first established in 1873-4, the object was to protect settlers against the Indians. The Indians ceased to be a danger many years ago; but the force has been such an asset to the country and such protection to the settlers, that whenever we have thought of removing it, at once protests have been raised which no government could resist. The sight of the uniform, whenever it appears in the back territory, carries a sense of security to the settler. The force itself is dispersed over what is practically a continent, from the southern boundary to the mouth of the Mackenzie river and from the Yukon Territory to Fort Churchill in small detachments of five or six, and sometimes two, or even one. These few men scattered over that vast territory have preserved law and order in a manner altogether unknown on the other side of the line; and their work is appreciated by American settlers perhaps more than by anybody else. When we established the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan we might have altogether removed the force from those two provinces. We might have told them: You are setting up houses for yourselves; you have all the advantages, and you must assume the responsibilities, and look after law and order in your own provinces. Settlement, however, is going on there, and will be going on for many years; and it would not be good policy to reduce the force. The demand made by my hon. friend from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) shows that, instead of contemplating the removal of the force, we should rather increase it. In course of time some of the larger settlements may be left to the policing of the local authorities, and the force may be pushed northward. Settlement is going on at Grand Prairie on the Peace river, also on the Mackenzie river, and gradually from the northern boundaries of Saskatchewan and Alberta towards Hudson bay. More posts may have to be established. I only hope that under the management of my hon. friend the force will be kept up to its normal standard, and that it will continue to be a credit to the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The right hon. gentleman has referred to the sense of security which the force carries with it. It was hinted last year that the Government contemplated the creation of a subsidiary police force to wear civilian clothes. Has anything been done in that regard?

Mr. BORDEN: I never heard of it before.

Mr. BUCHANAN: For the information of the Prime Minister, I might state that the province of Alberta is preparing to enlarge the present provincial jail at Lethbridge, and to establish another jail in the northern part of the province, to meet the congestion in the guard rooms of the mounted police. It is intended to erect a new jail at Fort Saskatchewan this year.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon): The force has impressed itself upon the citizens of the United States, who reside in the Yukon territory, during the early days when the duties of that force carried it into the different parts of that territory, and with them went law and order. The United States are giving local government to the district of Alaska. The residents of that great territory, which is some 600,000 square miles in extent, are impressing upon the Government the advisability of creating a force similar to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police to police the district of Alaska.

Royal Northwest Mounted Police—subsistence, forage, fuel, light, clothing, buildings, repairs and renewals, horses, dogs, arms and ammunition, medical stores, billeting, transport, water service, stationery and contingencies, $410,000.

Mr. BOULAY: (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, with the kind permission of the committee, I wish to call your attention to the following fact: I understood that the estimates were going to be voted virtually in the same order as they were submitted to us, that is to say, consecutively, as in the Budget Blue-book. I noticed that you had changed this order, that you were passing from one subject to another, taking up different pages and leaving aside several items. I would beg of you, Sir, when such changes happen, to repeat in French the number and item under consideration, so that we may understand the estimates we are voting.

Government of the Northwest Territories—salary of Mr. Fred. White, C.M.G., commissioner of the Northwest Territories, $1,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Does Mr. White still remain commissioner of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Government of the Northwest Territories—schools, $3,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Can the right hon. gentleman give me the number of schools under the authority of the commissioner?

Mr. BORDEN: I could not, but I will let the item stand if my right hon. friend desires.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes.

Item stands.

Maintenance of insane patients, $900.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where are the insane patients maintained—in Manitoba?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, at Selkirk.

Maintenance of prisoners, $500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Are these maintained at Selkirk also?

Mr. BORDEN: No, in the guard rooms in the territories.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Perhaps it would be better to let all these items regarding the Northwest territories stand until the information is available.

Item stands.

Government of the Yukon territory, $303,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think we are entitled to some information with regard to the administration of the territory. I understand that since we met there has been quite a change in the personnel of the administration. In the first place, I understand, we have a new commissioner, and all the officers of the Government there have been dismissed and new appointments made.

Mr. BORDEN: I think that matter has been dealt with by the Department of the Interior. The Minister of the Interior is not here at present. If the right hon. gentleman desires the information, I will let the item stand.

Item stands.

Pensions—Mrs. Fitzgerald, $525.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina): There is a matter I wish to mention; probably I should have brought it up on one of the items already discussed, but perhaps I may be allowed the privilege of speaking of it now. There was a man employed by the North West Mounted Police in the barracks in Regina. I do not think he occupied the position of constable or sub-constable, but was an ordinary employee around the barracks. While operating his wagon two years ago, ice being on the wagon, he fell and ruptured himself very badly. I took up the matter of getting some assistance for him with the commissioner in Regina, but the commissioner was under the impression that nothing could be done with such a case. The man is entirely out of employment at present, and is not able to work by reason of his injuries. He has a wife and three or four children to support. The man has been a number of years in the employ of the Government and was injured in the course of that employment; and, though not an officer of the post, I think the matter is worthy of a good deal of consideration, and I would urge it upon the Prime Minister. If there are other facts that he needs I shall be glad to give them at any time.

Mr. BORDEN: If my hon. friend will be good enough to send me a memorandum of all the facts within his knowledge, I will be glad to confer with him as to whether this is such a case as would justify us in asking Parliament for a special vote.

Offices of Assistant Receivers General and country savings banks—salaries, $58,700.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for South Renfrew has asked for an explanation of an increase of $4,000 in respect of this item, and I may say that it is due to an increase in the staff of the assistant receiver general at St. John, and of other small increases in the offices of the receiver general throughout the Dominion.

Mr. GRAHAM: How many additions have been made in the staff of the office at Toronto?

Mr. WHITE: Four or five.

Mr. MURPHY: How many of these outside offices are there?

Mr. WHITE: There are offices at Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Victoria. Further answering the hon. member for South Renfrew, I may say that the accountant at Toronto resigned a month or so ago for the purpose of taking another position, and I am under the impression that the vacancy was filled by promotion.

Mr. CARVELL: Prior to the time the Post Office Savings Banks were established, there were a number of these Government banks scattered throughout the country, but after the establishment of the Post Office Savings Banks, a large number of them were abolished. There seems to be a few of them left; can the minister tell where they are, and why they are still in existence?

Mr. WHITE: They are in the maritime provinces, I think principally in Nova Scotia. My hon. friend has correctly stated that there were a number of them in existence some years ago, and the business connected therewith is being gradually transferred to the Post Office Savings Banks. The policy which I found in vogue in my department when I took charge was that when those in charge of the Government saving banks in the maritime provinces deceased or gave up the positions, the business was transferred to the Post Office Savings Banks. I have hesitated to change the policy which has been in vogue, and I have allowed the matter to continue as it has been.

Mr. SINCLAIR: At this stage I would like to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that these savings banks are a great accommodation to some of the smaller towns in Nova Scotia. Under the Post Office Savings Bank system, it requires quite a considerable time to draw money out. Notice has to be given to the post office in the locality; it has to be sent to Ottawa, and as a rule it usually takes about ten days to withdraw a comparatively small amount of money. That is very inconvenient to the farmers who live twenty-five or thirty miles from the towns, and in some isolated places these small banks, from which the money can be drawn at once, are very useful indeed. It is not costing the Government a great deal, and I hope the minister will consider the matter before he abolishes these smaller stations that are scattered throughout the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. WHITE: I am glad indeed to have the views of my hon. friend with regard to the continuance of these savings banks. As I have said, I have no intention of changing the policy which I found in vogue, and I can understand from what my hon. friend has said that these banks may serve a very useful purpose throughout his province.

Mr. GERMAN: In view of the discussion which has taken place in the country with regard to this matter, has the hon. minister any intention of increasing the rate of interest that the Government is paying through the Post Office Savings banks, or these particular banks under consideration at the present moment?

Mr. WHITE: I dealt with that question in a general way in answer to a query on the part of the hon. member for Rouville the other day, but no doubt the hon. member for Welland was not in the House at the time. I stated that the matter had not been under consideration by the Government, and I pointed out that it was a matter that required very careful consideration before the Government would feel justified in taking the action suggested by my hon. friend. My hon. friend probably knows that in London the securities upon which we borrow money for public purposes run for forty years, and up to the present we have been able to borrow on a little higher than a three and a half per cent basis for a period of forty years. We pay three per cent in the Government and postal savings banks, but we are required by statute to maintain a ten per cent gold reserve against these deposits. That gold brings us no interest, and that increases the cost to us by one-third. Add to that the cost of administration of the Government and post office savings bank, my hon. friend will see that the money for which we pay three per cent to the depositors in the Government savings banks and postal savings banks costs three and a half per cent. In dealing with this matter, we would unquestionably have to consider what would be the effect upon our securities in London and the price which which we would obtain—which is an extremely important matter to this Dominion—if we increased the rate of interest that we pay for demand money here so that we would be paying more for demand money than we would pay for forty-year money in England. That is one of the considerations to which careful attention would have to be given. What the banks say is one thing, and what the Government says is another. I also pointed out to the hon. member for Rouville that my predecessor reduced the rate in 1898 from three and a half per cent to three per cent, and, according to my recollection, he stated that it had been drawn to his attention that the discount rates were high throughout Canada, and he was of the opinion that the rate established by the Government—three and a half per cent—which, I think, was also the rate paid by the banks, made it necessary for the banks to charge higher discount rates to their borrowers throughout the country. That is another feature that has to be taken into consideration, and which was given attention by my predecessor. Whether the interest rate will be higher or lower in the immediate future I, of course, am unable to say. We have been passing through a very tight money period, and all high-class securities in London have been selling, as my hon. friend knows, upon a higher interest basis than in the past. It may continue for some time, or it may not. At the present time, having regard to all the considerations I have mentioned, I am sure my hon. friend will agree that in considering the questions he has brought to my attention, very many factors have to be taken under review and given careful attention, but my answer is that the matter has not been actively under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. CARVELL: We have heard this statement before, and I am well aware that is one of the reasons advanced why the rate should remain at three per cent. My recollection is that the moment the Government reduced the rate which they paid for money in the savings banks, the banks reduced the rate which they paid to the depositors, and I do not think there is a man in Canada who could say he borrowed money any cheaper from the banks by reason of that fact. It may have been the argument used by the late Minister of Finance, but I think that any business man in Canada will know that the Minister of Finance was wrong in his supposition of what might happen. I think the banks are probably charging more for money to-day in Canada than they were in 1898, notwithstanding the fact that they were at that time paying three and a half per cent interest, while to-day they are paying only three per cent. It seems to me that if the Government thought it best to increase the rate to three and a half per cent, the banks would be compelled to pay three and a half per cent for the money they are receiving as special deposits. I think this Government should consider, in view of the high rates charged by the banks, and the amount of money they are making, whether people should not receive three and a half per cent instead of three per cent for their deposits. Another matter which should receive consideration is whether or not it is necessary for the Government to maintain this ten per cent gold reserve for the money which is deposited with the Government in the Dominion savings banks and postal savings banks. It does seem to me that the credit of Canada ought to be sufficient, and I am sure that no person in Canada will refrain from depositing money with the Government simply because that gold reserve is not there. I do not suppose there is one man in a thousand who makes a deposit in the Government Savings Bank who knows that there is a ten per cent reserve. You will get as much money without the ten per cent as with it and you will take away the argument that you are really paying three and a half per cent for money. If the people of Canada continue to prosper as they have done in the past you will find that by increasing the rate to three and a half per cent you will get a great deal more money than you do to-day even if you should do away with the ten per cent reserve. Perhaps we have not reached the point where we can frunish all the money the Government needs to borrow, but we can furnish quite a lot of it and I am satisfied that if the rate were increased to three and a half per cent it would result in more being deposited in the Government Savings Banks.

Mr. GRAHAM: Money is always tight with me so I can discuss it freely from that point. It has always struck me that if money is worth four per cent when John Jones has it to lend to the Government it should be worth the same when some other person has a deposit with the Government. If the Government were buying any other commodity I am not prepared to say that they buy it cheaper than other persons would buy it, but when they go to London to borrow money they pay three and a half per cent and four per cent although if I had a few dollars which I wanted to lend them I could only get three per cent.

Mr. WHITE: We do not pay four per cent in London.

Mr. GRAHAM: You pay whatever the market price is. Sometimes in the bank the Government has paid as high as four per cent. That is on a temporary loan, but why am I on business principles not entitled to the value of that money which I lend to the Government? It is the only commodity I know of in which the individual is discriminated against. I am of the opinion that the Government ought to pay residents of Canada as high a price for money as any person else and that no argument can be brought to bear that will be convincing to the people to the contrary. We discuss navies and other questions in this House but if the Minister of Finance will put his ear to the counter in the grocery store and other places where the people congregate in the country he will find that this question is discussed almost more than any other.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: The Government could no doubt get a very much larger sum of money from the people of Canada if they paid a larger rate of interest, but every dollar that the Government takes is put into permanent work and is not loaned out again in Canada. Supposing the Government took one hundred million or two hundred million of the deposits of Canada, they would withdraw so much money from the lending power of the banks or other financial institutions of the country and make the public rather than the Government borrow abroad. The Government can borrow cheaper than the individual can borrow abroad and I think that is the reason why the Government do borrow abroad rather than at home where they can borrow money for very little more than they pay for money at home.

Mr. GERMAN: Then why does the Government take anything on deposit at all?

Sir EDMUND OSLER: You might carry it out in that way if you chose.

Mr. CARVELL: I can point out a way: that is for the Government to so amend the Bank Act that the banks can not lend outside of Canada. If we had the money that the banks lend in Mexico, Cuba and New York, financing cotton plants, &c., I think there would not be such trouble. The moment the banks start to talk you commence to see special privilege. I appreciate the force of what the hon. gentleman says that if the Government raise the rate of interest and take a lot of money it is put into permanent work, but it gets into the country again and is circulated. The hon. gentleman says that the banks may have to borrow money abroad. That may be a misfortune to the banks, but if the Government will stop the banks from sending out money we will be able to have all the money that is required.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina): I see that certain points are added for the delivery of Dominion notes; Regina and Calgary are named as additional points where Dominion notes will be delivered in exchange for gold. Will offices of the Assistant Receiver General be established at Regina and also at Calgary?

Mr. WHITE: That item would not include salaries for these two officers. The new Bank Act will come into force on the 1st of July and it will take some time to get suitable premises in those two cities. If we decide that there should be inserted here an item for salaries in the two offices in question it will appear in the supplementary estimates for 1913-14. My hon. friend is correct in the statement that it has been customary to have in each province, when the population warrants it, an office of the Receiver General. After making as careful inquiry as I could I came to the conclusion that offices in Calgary and Regina would best serve the purpose.

Mr. MARTIN: We have the assurance of the hon. gentleman that offices will be established in these two places?

Mr. WHITE: That is my intention.

Contingencies, printing Dominion notes, $325,000.

Mr. MURPHY: Does that item relate to the contract with the American Bank Note Company, and if so, what is the reason of the increase?

Mr. WHITE: This is a very substantial increase of $50,000. It is principally due to two things. First, my hon. friend (Mr. Murphy) may be aware that I have been endeavouring to improve the character of the Dominion note circulation, particularly with reference to Dominion one and two dollar bills, which constitute the small change, in the way of notes, used by the Canadian people. Early in the year I took the matter up with the several banks and asked them to co-operate, so that when any of their branches received a soiled, torn or defaced note, they would forward it to the nearest office of the Assistant Receiver-General and receive a new note in exchange. So successful has that been, that, during the past year, the circulation of ones and twos has been almost completely renewed. I do not mean to say that there are no outstanding soiled, defaced or torn bills. On the 31st December, 1912, there were, of one dollar notes, $12,000,000 in circulation and new notes had been issued to the amount of $11,572,000. We redeemed over $10,000,000 of ones last year. Of twos there were in circulation, on the 31st December, 1912, $9,000,000; we issued $7,000,000, and in that case we redeemed $7,000,000. It will be seen that the circulation of ones and twos has been almost completely renewed during the past year. That necessitated the printing of new notes. In addition to that we withdrew the four dollar bill and substituted the Dominion five dollar bill. There was a very great demand for these Dominion fives last fall during the crop-moving period when the call for circulation is at its greatest. We issued $13,000,000 of these new five-dollar notes. It has been in connection with the redemption of the ones and twos and the issue of the new fives that this increased cost has been incurred.

Mr. MURPHY: It has already been incurred ?

Mr. WHITE: The expenditure has been incurred and this estimate is based on that.

Mr. CARVELL: What is the custom adopted by the department in calling in these worn and filthy one and two-dollar Dominion notes ? I presume there must be some regulation and I would like to see it made stricter than it is. I do not think that anybody will object to the extra cost of printing these notes if we can have a cleaner currency. One of the things that impressed me more than any other when I came back from the other side of the water was the filthiness of our currency, and I presume that it has impressed every man who has travelled abroad. I never realized before how filthy it was and I think that the ones and twos are the worst of all.

Mr. WHITE: There is no legislation, nor can there be any legislation, that will compel, let me say, my hon. friend, who may have a soiled two-dollar bill in his possession, to exchange it for a new note. There are deposits taking place in the various branches of the banks throughout the Dominion from day to day. We requested the banks to actively co-operate with the department in the attempt to improve the quality of the Dominion note circulation and I must say that they very willingly responded and the result has been on the whole most gratifying. I think that the quality of the Dominion notes will be substantially improved, within the next year or so; in fact, it has been substantially improved up to date as has been attested by the figures which I have given. The several branches of the various chartered banks forward, to their head offices, any soiled, torn or defaced notes. When they come to the principal offices in the various centres, such as Winnipeg, Victoria, St. John, Toronto or Halifax, they send them to the offices of the assistant Receiver General which have supplies of new one and two-dollar notes, and which take in these old notes, cancel them in the cutting machines and issue new notes in their places. Then the old notes are forwarded to Ottawa, the necessary entry is made in our books, the notes are burned and a record is kept of the amount so destroyed. All we can do is to work through the banks in order to get new notes into circulation. You cannot compel an individual to exchange notes.

Mr. GERMAN: Why cannot the notes and bills in circulation in Canada be issued and made redeemable by the Dominion Government and pass current in any part of the world in the same way as bills or notes issued in the United States pass current? If a bill or note is issued in the United States it is issued by the Government of the United States.

Mr. CARVELL: No, the National Banks issue notes.

Mr. GERMAN: But they are all guaranteed by the United States Government. The Government of Canada issue one, two and five-dollar bills. Why cannot they issue all the bills and distribute them among the banks, the Government being responsible for the notes and bills which they issue, so that when a man goes to New York, Washington or Philadelphia, or any other place away from the International boundary line, with bills in his pocket people will take these notes at par? At the present time, if you have a note of any one of the banks of Canada, you cannot pass it a hundred miles south of the international line. In many places they will not take it at all. In some of the hotels in New York, where they have a large Canadian business, they will take our Canadian bank bills, but in Philadelphia or Pittsburg you cannot pay your hotel account with a Canadian bank bill. Why is that? I think it would be different if these bills were all Canadian Government bills, because they would know that the Canadian Government would be responsible for them. I am not a banker and I have not had very much business with banks except to lose money with them, but it does seem to me that the Government of Canada could just as well issue all the bills and be responsible for them, and make the banks responsible to the Government in exactly the same way as they are responsible at present.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has raised a large question, which has been very much discussed by financial men, and on which a very great variety of views prevails. Neither Canadian bank notes nor Dominion notes are legal tender in the United States, nor would my hon. friend be compelled to accept notes of the national banks of the United States in payment of a debt unless he chose to. Our people seem to take United States bank notes without question, and on the other hand in the United States, in some places, they take the notes of Canadian banks. Here, from day to day, the notes of one bank, received by another bank, are presented, and clearance is made in gold as between the banks. If my hon. friend presented a Dominion Government note in any city of the United States one hundred miles south of the boundary, that note would have to be returned to Canada for redemption, and I suppose that is one reason why it is not accepted. Another reason is that in the United States they do not extend to us the courtesy we extend to them, although, in 1907, we had no difficulty in cashing our bills in New York or elsewhere. Questions of this kind will be fully discussed in the committee on the Bank Act, and at this late hour I do not suppose my hon. friend (Mr. German) would expect me to enter into a dissertation on such a very wide question.

Mr. GERMAN: Is it absolutely necessary that the Dominion Government should keep a reserve of gold to redeem the notes, or, is not the credit of Canada good enough without the gold behind it? It has always seemed to me that we should have some way of issuing notes which the people of the United States would take, so that when we get away from home with ten or fifteen dollars of Canadian money in our pockets, we could pay our hotel bill without having Canadian notes refused or having to pay a discount on them.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: If the hon. member has ever tried to pass a Dominion Government note in any town south of the border he will find that it will not be taken any more readily than a Canadian bank note. A Dominion Government note has no more credit anywhere in the United States than has a note of a Canadian bank.

Mr. GRAHAM: Some of the leading Canadian banks have branches in United States cities, and if they could let it be known that Canadian notes would be taken at these branches, that might help to solve the difficulty.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: That might be all very well in New York; but when you went to some small town in the United States you would have the same difficulty as at present.

Mr. GRAHAM: My trouble is about New York; I never spend my money in a small town if I can get as far as New York. It does strike me that banks with branches in the United States cities could relieve the situation without inconvenience and probably with profit to themselves.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: The Bank of Montreal in New York will redeem Bank of Montreal notes.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no question about that, but there must be some lack of knowledge that the Bank of Montreal is there or else leading business men in New York would not hesitate to take Bank of Montreal notes at par.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: In Canada we require a great many American bills to supply travellers who are going to the States; and in fact it is very often difficult for a person going to New York to get a sufficient quantity of American bills to pay his expenses.

Mr. GRAHAM: The difficulty sometimes is to get enough of any kind of bills.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: The consequence of that demand for American bills here is that Canadian business people are ready to take American notes because they can always get rid of them.

Mr. CARVELL: It occurs to me that if the Bank of Montreal, for example, would make it known in an American city in which it has a branch, that it would redeem Canadian bills at par, it would facilitate the taking of Canadian bank notes by the business people. We know that a Canadian branch bank in an American city can receive Canadian money but it cannot issue its own currency. It seems to me it would cost only the merest trifle to get that money back to Canada. In some places, in the New England States, they will take Canadian Government bills, but they will not take Canadian bank bills. My experience in Boston is that you can get rid of Canadian Government bills at their face value. That may be because there is so much intercourse between the maritime provinces and that city. In Portland, which is 100 miles from Boston, Canadian Government bills pass at their face value in the stores and elsewhere. If Canadian banks, which have agencies in the large centres of the United States, would exert themselves a little, they could remedy this difficulty, and perhaps the Minister of Finance might have some influence in the matter.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: They would not be allowed to do business in any state of the Union, if it was known that they had an office there for the redemption of notes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I think my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) is misunderstood. His proposal is that the banks of the United States should be induced to do what we are now doing in Canada. In the same item, we are proposing to expend $15,000 for the purpose of sending American coin back to the United States. Could a similar arrangement be made with the banks of the United States by which they would return Canadian currency to Canada, so as to promote the circulation of our money in the United States?

Sir EDMUND OSLER: The Americans want to prevent the circulation of our money there absolutely. While the banks can redeem notes as a matter of courtesy, if they did it as an established business the United States would prevent them from doing business. It cannot be done officially.

Mr. CARVELL: I realize that the member for Toronto West (Sir Edmund Osler) knows a great deal more about banking than I do. Does he mean to say that it would be contrary to the license under which the Bank of Montreal does business in New York to redeem $1,000 of Canadian bills, if brought in there by a United States bank, by a hotel company, or someone else? It is only a matter of exchange of money. If my friend from West Toronto says that it is a condition of the license under which the Bank of Montreal is doing business there, I accept his statement, but I am very much surprised to hear it.

Sir EDMUND OSLER: No Canadian bank can have an office under its own name in the United States. The Bank of Montreal is not really the Bank of Montreal there, but carries on business through certain agents. The bank might redeem notes as a matter of courtesy; but if they did it as part of their business and advertised that they were redeeming their own notes, or in other words were circulating Canadian money in the United States, they would be turned out and their license cancelled.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the hon. member to state that the Bank of Montreal is not doing business in New York under its own name?

Sir EDMUND OSLER: No; two or three men act as its agents. Their names are on the door, not as the bank, but as its agents.

Charges of management—printing, advertising, inspection, express charges, &c., $30,000.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the $5,000 increase?

Mr. WHITE: That is in connection with the distribution of Dominion notes. In the supplementary estimates for 1912-1913, there was a similar item for printing, advertising, inspection, express charges, &c., further amount required, $5,000. It is on account of the demand for $5 notes. There are insurance charges and certain other charges in connection with them, and we estimate that for 1913-1914 a further increase of $5,000 will be required for that purpose.

Charges of management—commission for payment of interest on public debt, purchase of sinking funds, $50,000.

Mr. MACDONALD: Where is that commission paid and is it paid under some fixed agreement or does it depend on fluctuations in the market?

Mr. WHITE: It is paid under a fixed agreement which we have with the Bank of Montreal. As I stated to the House the other day, I negotiated a new agreement with the Bank of Montreal for a period of five years, and the rate was to be the same as during the past ten years with the exception of two items. There is a reduction of one-half of one per cent on overdrafts, and a provision, that we pay one-eighth of one per cent upon drafts cashed by the Bank of Montreal in London, has been cancelled, so that the new agreement is to that extent more favourable to the Dominion than the agreement which terminated at the end of last year.

Mr. MACDONALD: Did any other bank compete for a share in that agreement?

Mr. WHITE: As I stated the other day, the Bank of Montreal had rendered excellent service to the Dominion, and I was very glad to renew the arrangement with them. We did not call for tenders from other banks, nor were any representations made by other banks with respect to the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD: As a result of that arrangement, there is a saving of $10,000?

Mr. WHITE: No. There will be a saving in connection with the two items that I have mentioned; but this commission for payment of interest on the public debt, purchase of sinking funds, depends on the amount of interest paid on the public debt and the amount of sinking funds purchased. There has been some reduction in the public debt during the past year, and we estimate that for the year 1913-1914 there will be a less amount by $10,000 paid by way of commission for payment of interest on the public debt and purchase of sinking funds than for the past year.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I understand this is commission which we pay on interest payable in London on our bonds. What is the rate that we are paying to the Bank of Montreal when it meets our liabilities there?

Mr. WHITE: We have an arrangement with the Bank of Montreal by which they discharge our debt at the rate of £150 per million dollars of debt. They pay the interest as it matures, that is apart from these other charges that I have mentioned Brokerage on purchase of sinking funds, $5,600.

Mr. BUREAU: There are two items: 'Commissions for payment of interest on public debt purchase of sinking funds,' and 'Brokerage on purchase of sinking fund.' Why the second one?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend knows that in the operation of a sinking fund you buy your own securities on the market. These are bought through a broker. The Bank of Montreal, our fiscal agent, let us say, desires to expend certain moneys in sinking fund operations. They give an order to a broker to buy, and this money is for the brokerage charges in such a case. These are listed securities.

English bill stamps, postage, &c., $20,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is an increase there of $8,000. Does that mean that the minister is going to borrow a great deal more money, and so needs more bill stamps?

Mr. WHITE: No, that means that during the past year, we have been, and will continue to be, remitting money to London to meet our maturities. We purchase exchange on London—sixty-day bills; that is the usual way in which it is done. In that way you make on interest. Last year, we made $100,000 by buying sixty-day bills. We will begin to buy soon to meet our July maturities.

Removal of foreign and uncurrent coin from circulation, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How much of that coin does the minister remove in a year?

Mr. BUREAU: Before the minister answers, perhaps I may be allowed a question. Reference here is made to 'Uncurrent coin.' I suppose that includes coins that are defaced. Sometimes there you are offered a coin that is so defaced you cannot see any stamp on it at all. Is there any understanding with the banks in relation to defaced coins such as there is in the case of bills?

Mr. WHITE: Yes, to some extent they present them. With regard to the removal of foreign coins, the committee is aware that there is a seignorage or profit upon the silver coinage that we issue. That is one reason for the arrangement we have that American silver is to be exported—it is profitable to us that our own silver should be in circulation, and it is not desirable that the American silver should replace our own. The American silver exported in 1909, amounted to $900,000 and in 1912-13 to $1,700,000. We pay express and a commission of three-eights of one per cent to the exporting bank.

Mr. BUREAU: And Canadian coins are returned to the Receiver General's office?

Mr. WHITE: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think the minister has understood the question of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau). I think the hon. gentleman wishes to know if the Government is doing anything to call in silver coins that have become badly worn and are not really worth their value as silver. He asks if this is being done as it is done with regard to bills. The minister explained that the banks are encouraged to bring in worn bills and have them re-issued. I do not suppose he has that arrangement with regard to silver coins.

Mr. WHITE: No.

Mr. GERMAN: I do not understand what this item means, and I ask the minister to explain it to me. Why is the Government of Canada expending fifteen thousand dollars for the removal of foreign and uncurrent coins from circulation? Are they buying them?

Mr. WHITE: There is a great deal of American silver in circulation in Canada. I pointed out that there was a profit on the coinage of silver; that profit amounts to forty or fifty per cent—I have forgotten exactly. If American silver replaces our own silver, it means that we lose the profit upon that amount. Therefore, it is in the interest of the Dominion to export American or other silver that is in circulation here. So an arrangement was made with the several banks under which they agreed that for a commission of three-eighths of one per cent and the payment of the express charges, as American money comes in, deposited in the usual way, they would send it to the United States where it is current and get its equivalent in gold.

Mr. GERMAN: But if you get it back in American gold or silver that means bringing it back into Canada?

Mr. WHITE: Not necessarily. The hon. gentleman now gets into the field of exchange, which is a pretty wide field. It does not necessarily come back in the form of gold; it might come back in the form of manufactured articles, or settlers' effects, or anything else.

Mr. GERMAN: But so long as American silver passes currently and is allowed to be taken, what in the name of common sense is the use of the Government of Canada paying out money to keep it out of Canada? I should think the Government would either declare that it shall not be current at all or else give up paying out fifteen thousand dollars to export it out of the country.

Mr. WHITE: The hon. gentleman confines his attention to the fifteen thousand dollars paid out, and overlooks the profit which is more.

Mr. BELAND: How much more?

Mr. WHITE: I have stated that the profit is forty or fifty per cent upon the silver, and the amount of the silver exported last year was $1,700,000. So, this is a profitable arrangement for the Dominion Government. American silver is not, of course, legal tender in Canada. It is taken only because some of the people along the border accept it and obtain its equivalent. The fact of the matter is that it is profitable for the Dominion to pay the banks to do this.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the hon. Minister of Finance inform me if the Government is still issuing twenty-five cent paper notes and twenty-cent pieces?

Mr. WHITE: I think that very few, if any, of the twenty-cent pieces are issued. It was my intention to have discontinued the issuing of the twenty-five cent notes, but taking the whole matter into consideration, and especially having regard to the fact that a large number of people make use of them for the purpose of ordering goods, I thought it inadvisable to make any change at the present time.

Mr. BUREAU: With reference to my question a few moments ago, what I wanted to know was if the Finance Department had made any arrangement to redeem or call in used Canadian coins. It is well known that, with regard to many of these coins, their value cannot be ascertained, owing to the extent to which they are worn. The Minister has explained that, so far as the Bills are concerned, there is an understanding to the effect that they shall be sent back to the Receiver General to be destroyed, and I think these coins should be sent back to the Mint and new ones issued against them.

Mr. WHITE: We continually exchange defaced coins; what I said was that I had not made any special arrangement with the banks with regard to getting them back.

Mr. BUREAU: Is it the intention to do this?

Mr. WHITE: We have not had it in mind, but I shall be very glad to give the matter consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: At the last Imperial Conference the British post office authorities insisted on having the privilege of circulating their postal notes in Canada, and a resolution was, I think, passed by the conference to the effect that in every post office in the Dominion where postal notes are issued and sold, these postal notes should be issued according to the English currency. When I was Postmaster General I objected to that demand being carried into effect, because I thought it would create confusion in view of the fact that we had our own decimal currency. However, the British post office authorities insisted to such an extent that I believe, as I have said, a resolution was carried at the last conference, and I would like to know if any arrangement has been made to carry that agreement into effect.

Mr. WHITE: Not to my knowledge. I laid on the table of the House last year, I think, a copy of the contract entered into with the American Bank Note Company, but, further than having negotiated that contract, or at all events, having called for tenders and accepted one of them, the matter has not been under the control of my department.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose my hon. friend has not appointed any person in his department except under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. WHITE: Not to my knowledge. The Deputy Minister looks after the appointments. They have been simply of temporary clerks or help.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. White (Minister of Finance), House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 27, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BATHURST LETTER BOX SERVICE.

Mr. TURGEON:

Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to ask for tenders for the letter box service at Bathurst, N.B., at the expiration of the present contract held by Jos. J. Roy?

Mr. PELLETIER: The contract of J. J. Roy expires on the 30th June next. The department has arranged a new contract from 1st July with Narcisse Lavigne at the same price as now paid to Roy, viz: $150 per annum. Inviting tender is not necessary since contract is under $200.

PURCHASE OF ROSS RIFLES.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. How many Ross rifles have been purchased by the Militia Department since the 1st January, 1912?
2. At what cost have they been supplied?
3. Are there any orders under way from the same source?
4. What is the date of each order given and the price paid in each case?
5. Have said rifles been distributed to the various militia corps? If so, to which?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. 3,000 Ross rifles Mark II.
2. $25.00, plus $1.90 extra for Long instead of Short rifle; and for extra rear aperture sight base and chargerguide.
3. 8,000 Mark III rifles are still due on an order for 10,000 given November 3, 1911.

4. Date of order first above mentioned--March 21, 1912. Same as No. 2.
5. None have been distributed.

BRITISH-JAPANESE TREATY.

On motion of Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden, (Prime Minister) the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows:—
That a treaty signed at London on the 3rd day of April, A.D. 1911, between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan be sanctioned and declared to have the force of law in Canada, provided that
(a) Nothing in the said treaty, or in the Act to be founded on this resolution, shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act.
(b) Article VIII of the said treaty shall be deemed not to apply to Canada.

Mr. BORDEN: Hon. members are aware that the former treaty between Japan and Canada was denounced, and that a new treaty was entered into on the 3rd of April, 1911. So far as the interests of Canada are concerned, the new treaty does not differ very materially from the former treaty. This resolution is for the purpose of having founded thereon a Bill to ratify the treaty, subject to the provisions which are set forth in the resolution. I shall be prepared to give full explanations with regard to the matter on the second reading.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think it would be more advisable to have the discussion on the second reading, when we shall have the full text of the treaty before us.

Mr. MACDONALD: Are copies of this treaty, which my right hon. friend proposes to ratify, obtainable by hon. members?

Mr. BORDEN: A copy is set forth in the schedule to the Bill, which I will introduce in a moment, and the Bill will be ready for distribution almost at once.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill, No. 156, respecting a certain treaty of commerce and navigation between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan. He said: The Bill is precisely in the terms of the resolution, except that section 1 given a short title, and that section 3 provides that the Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation by the Governor in Council, and published in the Canada Gazette. The adhesion of Canada to the treaty must be notified in Tokio on or before the 5th day of May.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Can my right hon. friend give us any idea when he intends to take up this Bill for the second reading?

Mr. BORDEN: I will meet the convenience of my right hon. friend in that regard. For the reason that Canada's adhesion is to be notified on or before the 5th day of May, I would like to take up the second reading at some conveniently early date.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

QUEBEC PILOTS' EYESIGHT TEST.

Hon. H. S. BELAND: I call the attention of the Government to the following dispatch which appeared in this morning's Citizen:

Quebec, March 26.—Dr. H. B. Fritz, oculist, of St. John, N.B., and Wreck Commissioner Lindsay, from Ottawa, arrived here to-day and commenced to test the eyesight of the Quebec pilots. It is said the old test is being used. There is some dissatisfaction existing at bringing an outside oculist here to perform the duty when there are so many capable members of the profession here.

I ask the hon. Minister of Marine whether Dr. Fritz is permanently attached to his department or to any other department of Government, and, if he is not, I ask for what particular reason the oculists and opticians of the city of Quebec have been overlooked in this matter.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN: The statement read by my hon. friend is quite correct. The appointment of an outside oculist was made on the unanimous request of the commission which is investigating the pilotage conditions below Quebec and which commission comprises Captain Lindsay, Wreck Commissioner of Canada, Mr. Adjutor Lachance, Chairman of the Pilots of Quebec, and Mr. Robb of the Shipping Federation. These gentlemen sent a unanimous request, signed by all three, that an oculist who was not local and who was outside entirely of Quebec should be employed to examine the pilots as to their eyesight. That recommendation, I say, was unanimous by the members of the Commission including the presidents of the pilots. Dr. Fritz is a gentleman of excellent standing in his profession and is far enough removed from the scene to be beyond any suspicion of being influenced by local considerations.

Mr. BELAND: Was there any reason specified in the report why an outside oculist should be selected?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think the commissioners gave their reasons; they made the unanimous request that it should be done.

Mr. BUREAU: Did they ask that an expert should be chosen outside of the province?

Mr. HAZEN: Outside of Quebec.

Mr. BUREAU: Outside of Quebec province or city?

Mr. HAZEN: I am not able to answer that.

Mr. BUREAU: It seems to have been interpreted against the province.

Mr. HAZEN: Their evident desire was to have someone appointed from outside who would not be influenced by local considerations.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will the minister place that report on the table of the House?

Mr. HAZEN: I shall be very happy to.

SACKVILLE WHARF.

Hon. H. R EMMERSON: An order of the House was passed on the 12th of February for a copy of all correspondence, &c., in the Department of Railways at Ottawa or in the office of the Intercolonial at Moncton relating in any way to the new public wharf at Sackville, N.B. The return brought down contains the papers on file in the office of the Intercolonial at Moncton, but does not contain a copy of the documents on file in the department at Ottawa. I have been advised by parties in Sackville that they have sent petitions and memorials as well as correspondence to the department at Ottawa, and it probably has been an oversight that this has not been brought down.

Mr. BORDEN: I shall be pleased to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to the observations of my hon. friend.

CHARGE OF OBSTRUCTION.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (St. John, N.B.): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to rise to what I think probably is a question of privilege. It is with reference to a statement made yesterday in the House by the Minister of Finance. I was not present at the time; but, speaking in regard to the third reading of the Bill to ratify the agreement between Canada and certain of the West Indian colonies, the Minister of Finance is reported in 'Hansard' to have said:

> The second reading of the Bill had taken place after discussion; it is a simple Act validating the agreement but the junior member for Halifax told me afterwards that as a matter of fact the Opposition were not willing that the Act validating this agreement should be passed into law in this House without further discussion; in other words, obstruction was to take place with regard to the discussion of the West Indian Trade Agreement just as it was taking place with regard to the Naval Aid Bill.

I was one of those who informed the Government that it was my intention to discuss, not at length, but briefly the West Indian treaty upon the third reading. I so informed the Minister of Customs, who at the time was acting as Minister of Trade and Commerce, after Mr. Foster had left for Australia; and I told him that my intention was to move that the Bill be referred back to the committee for the purpose of inserting a section providing that whenever the British West Indian colonies offered to Canada a preference of fifty per cent, the goods the product of the colonies enumerated in schedule 'B' should be admitted into Canada free of duty. I thought it was very important to test the sense of the House upon the question of the admission of West Indian products free of duty, particularly in view of what is recognized as the high cost of living in Canada and the desirability of reducing it as much as possible. But there was no thought, so far as I was concerned, of obstruction, and I am sure that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) had no thought of that. Has it come to this pass, that no member of this House can discuss a Bill during its various stages without being charged with obstruction? If so, I wish to protest against such an idea. It does not follow at all that because any member of this House desires to discuss the West Indian Trade Treaty Bill or any other Bill upon its second reading or third reading or in committee stage, that we should be charged with obstruction. It looks to me very much like an attempt on the part of the Minister of Finance to prevent freedom of discussion in respect to important measures which come for the consideration of the House.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I do not at all dissent from the view of the hon. member for St. John that Bills may be, and ought, if members so desire, to be discussed at all stages. That is so obvious that it needs no comment from me. But we have to take situations as we find them. I made the statement yesterday that obstruction had taken place in this House in connection with the Naval Aid Bill and I withdrew that statement because it was challenged as unparliamentary. I meant it in no offensive sense. I am not going to recall the circumstances of the past two or three weeks, but I must state my view that, as a matter of fact, obstruction did take place in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw. Order.

Mr. WHITE: Before you decide, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PUGSLEY: I submit that the hon. minister is out of order in charging members of the House with obstruction.

Mr. WHITE: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss very briefly the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member is within his rights to make the explanation or to discuss the point of order.

Mr. WHITE: I have taken the trouble to look up the matter since yesterday; and I believe, although I leave the decision entirely to you, Mr. Speaker, that if I make the statement that obstruction did take place as a matter of fact, I am not using an unparliamentary expression, especially if I say as I do say, that I am not using the word in any offensive sense. I therefore desire to have your ruling as to whether the word 'obstruction' used in the sense which I attribute to it is parliamentary.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The question my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has raised is quite an important one. In considering the weight which will be given to the remarks of my hon. friend, it is necessary to have regard to what he considers to be obstruction. I find that yesterday he made the statement that, as he had been informed that some members of this House desired to discuss the West Indian Trade Agreement, upon the third reading of the Bill, that meant obstruction. Therefore, I take it that the view of my hon. friend is that, even although there may be reasonable discussion of the Bill, if that discussion is continued for a length of time which my hon. friend may think too long, that would be obstruction. There is no warrant at all for my hon. friend making the suggestion that, simply because it was intended to discuss the West Indian Trade Agreement on its third reading and to move an amendment, that meant obstruction.

On the point of order, I submit that my hon. friend must obey Your Honour's ruling of yesterday. If he, because he is an important member of the Government, is not bound to obey that ruling, then, Sir, it will be equally free for every member of this House to disobey the ruling of the Speaker and to refuse to be bound by such ruling. This question came up yesterday, any my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) raised the point of order. He said:

> I raise the point of order. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether it is in order for the hon. minister to charge the whole of the Opposition with being guilty of obstruction.

Mr. Speaker: On the point of order, I think that the term obstruction is not regarded as a permissible, parliamentary expression.

Surely my hon. friend ought to bow to that ruling, to treat it with the respect and not to discuss it. My hon. friend's idea of what is obstruction seems to be very hazy. If my hon. friend had his way, members on this side of the House might just as well go about their business and let hon. gentlemen opposite carry on the parliamentary work of the country.

Mr. WHITE: In view of the delicate susceptibilities of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) whom I would not for the world offend in any way, and as the word 'obstruction' seems to be objectionable, I shall withdraw it, and say that——

Mr. PUGSLEY: Let us have the point of order.

Mr. WHITE: I have withdrawn the word, because it is objectionable to my hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WHITE: I had every reason to believe, from the course of the debate previous to a week ago Saturday night, that it was not the intention of my hon. friend to facilitate the passage of the Bill validating the West Indian Trade Agreement. I still believe that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Upon what does my hon. friend base that belief? I can say to my hon. friend that I took an active part in the discussion on the West Indian Trade Agreement, and I never hesitated to say that I would facilitate in every way the passage of the Bill. There was one phase which I wanted to discuss. The same explanation holds good for my hon. friend who represents the city of Halifax (Mr. Maclean). Long ago I urged the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) to bring on the third reading of the Bill, and I told him that there would be no disposition on my part not to facilitate its passage, subject to making some remarks on the question of increasing the preference and of bringing in certain West Indian products free of duty.

Mr. WHITE: I am still of the opinion that my hon. friend from St. John was not disposed to facilitate the third reading of the West Indian Trade Agreement. My hon. friend stated that was his intention, but I think that both this House and the country are entitled to rely upon what was done and not upon what was said.

Mr. PUGSLEY: May I ask my hon. friend what was done?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am afraid the discussion is getting beyond reasonable bounds.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): Might I be allowed to say a word or two on this matter?

Mr. SPEAKER: No motion is before the House, and it would be quite irregular to discuss the matter. That could only be done by permission of the House as a matter of privilege, because the hon. gentleman's name was mentioned.

Mr. MACLEAN: As a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It has been called to my attention that the matter of the passage of the West Indian Trade Agreement was under discussion yesterday, and my name was mentioned to the effect that I intimated to the Minister of Finance that the Opposition contemplated such obstruction as to cause the Government to defer consideration of the third reading of the Bill. Such is my information, although I have not had an opportunity of reading 'Hansard' very carefully. I hope, however, I am stating the facts correctly. I notice that on page 6595 of 'Hansard' the Minister of Finance said:

> The second reading of the Bill had taken place after discusssion; it is a simple Act validating the agreement but the junior member for Halifax told me afterwards that as a matter of fact the Opposition were not willing that the Act validating this agreement should be passed into law in this House without further discussion; in other words obstruction was to take place with regard to the discussion of the West Indian Trade Agreement just as it was taking place with regard to the Naval Aid Bill.

I might observe that the deduction or inference which the Minister of Finance made in the latter part of his statement seems an unfair one, namely, that my information to him was that the Opposition were not willing that the Bill should be passed into law without further discussion. There is certainly a distinction between discussion and obstruction. About two weeks ago—speaking from memory; I do not pretend to be accurate as to the date—I suggested to the Government and the Minister of Finance the desirability of immediately validating the West India agreement, and I gave some reasons for so doing. One reason was that some of my own constituents were exporters and importers of the products mentioned in the schedules of the agreement, and therefore were very much interested in securing as quickly as possible the tariff advantages afforded by the agreement. The Minister of Finance, I think, intimated on that occasion that if the Opposition were agreed that the Bill should go through the third reading pro forma, he would bring it up; and I think he said upon the floor of the House that he would confer with me upon that matter. I think we did have a personal interview later, and I assured him there would be no lengthy discussion on the measure. I think I clearly intimated to him that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and myself, so far as I knew, were the only members who would engage in any lengthy discussion of the matter, and that it would not take any great length of time. I am not sure that I said to the Minister of Finance anything to indicate what, in my judgment, would be the time consumed, but I have an impression that I said half a day or something like that. However, so far as I am concerned and so far as hon. members on this side of the House are concerned, the idea of obstruction in any such sense as suggested by the Minister of Finance was quite remote from our minds. It is in the interest of many of my own constituents, and of many other people in the province of Nova Scotia, that the Bill should be proceeded with and passed quickly, and I think I personally intimated to the House that I would abandon any debate upon the West India steamship service and would take that up when the estimates were reached. I trust I have made it clear that, so far as I was concerned and so far as hon. gentlemen on this side were concerned, there was no intention to obstruct the Bill in the sense that the Minister of Finance intimated.

Mr. WHITE: Just a word of explanation. I have no exception to take to the statement of my hon. friend except in one respect, in which his memory, I think, is at fault. He stated that he intimated to me that there would be no lengthy discussion. He has overlooked the fact that we had a discussion of the matter in the first instance, and then, just before he left as he he says, we had another discussion about it, a very brief one. It was in the discussion which took place the day before he left for the Easter holidays that he intimated to me that the discussion which he had in mind would not be lengthy. Previous to that, he had nothing to say about the length of the discussion; he merely said that the discussion was intended. I am not going into the question of what I gathered as to the purpose of the Opposition or whether it was properly gathered, but he is correct in stating that, so far as his own position was concerned, he certainly gave me the impression that he was in favour of facilitating the passing of the Bill. But unmistakably he also intimated that the discussion would take place, without any intimation as to its limitation, except on the occasion just before he left for the Easter holidays.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Just a further word. The Minister of Finance stated on the floor of the House some two or three weeks ago that he was quite willing that the Bill should go to its third reading, provided that we would practically guarantee on this side of the House that there should be no discussion, that no time would be consumed. I think that in the personal interview with the Minister of Finance, he further desired that statement from me. I think I stated to him that some little time would be required for discussion, but I think I made myself clear—I certainly intended to do so—that, while some little time would be consumed in the discussion of the Bill, nothing like obstruction was within the mind of any person on this side of the House.

Mr. CARVELL: May I rise to a question of privilege? I was not here yesterday afternoon when the Minister of Finance made the statement referred to. But apparently a new doctrine has been promulgated in this House, the doctrine that the members of the Opposition have no right to discuss a Bill——

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is going beyond the question of privilege.

Mr. CARVELL: All right, I will keep to the question of fact. As a matter of fact, I do not consider myself bound by any arrangement between the hon. member for Halifax and the Minister of Finance. In the second place, I have been carrying around for over a month an amendment which I intend to move when the third reading of this Bill is proposed. This amendment, in my opinion, is vitally important to my constituents. I wholly dissent from the doctrine that I have no right to discuss the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: Before the Orders of the Day are called, in view of the statements made here—and I can see no other conclusion to be reached than that there is no obstruction intended by the Opposition—may I ask the Minister of Finance when he intends to bring on the third reading of the West India Bill?

Mr. WHITE: I will announce that in due course.

THE NORTH ATLANTIC ROUTE—ICE CONDITIONS.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville): May I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he has any statement to make to the House with respect to the ice patrol in the St. Lawrence? I see it stated in the papers that Canada is co-operating with Great Britain in regard to this matter.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman the information he desires. I presume he has seen the announcement recently made by the Marine Department of the Imperial Board of Trade, that arrangements had been concluded for reporting the location and the movements of ice along the route of trans-Atlantic steamships during the spring months. This announcement is one of very great importance to shipping interests. The Titanic disaster of last spring and the subsequent inquiry respecting it made the desirability of this step abundantly clear. For this purpose the Scotia was despatched on the 8th instant to latitude 44° north, longitude 60° west, with instructions to report on the way any ice met and also to endeavour to note its southern limit. After having done so, the Scotia will proceed to St. John's, Newfoundland, noting and reporting ice conditions met with. While at St. John's the Scotia will get into communication with all wireless stations on the Newfoundland, Labrador and Canadian coasts, and as accurately as possible ascertain existing conditions and the direction in which the ice has commenced to move. From St. John's the patrol boat will proceed to and report the southern limit of the driftng ice. Having located and reported the southern limit, the patrol will be northward to report icebergs or field ice along the coast of Newfoundland, and as far as Hamilton inlet. From this point, a return will be made, locating the eastern and southern limit of the ice and constantly advising in respect to the same.

The patrol is specially charged to be vigilant in the observance of ice nearing the steamship routes. The chief object of the expedition is to give warning to the steamship lines of the probable quantity of ice that will be in the vicinity of the track, and to give them any information that will assist them to form a judgment as to the advisability of giving any instructions for the greater safety of their vessels. On board the Scotia there are three scientists, the senior of whom will direct the movements of the vessel. They will take observations of the directions, velocity and depth of currents, together with the temperature and salinity of the water. In addition, meterological observations of the upper air, including the investigation of the currents and temperature, will also be carefully taken. Acting in conjunction with the board of trade, I have concluded an arrangement whereby all messages from the patrol boat will be forwarded to the signal office at Quebec and from there promptly furnished to all interested parties. In this way the shipping interests at all the river St. Lawrence and Atlantic ports will be kept informed of the prevailing ice conditions.

To supplement the work done by the Scotia under the direction of the board of trade, I have made arrangements whereby the Marine and Fisheries Department will, immediately after the opening of navigation on the river St. Lawrence, despatch the C.G.S. Montcalm to patrol Cabot strait, at the entrance to the gulf, from Sydney harbour to the south coast of Newfoundland. The location and movements of the ice in this region will be reported and full information will be furnished daily, or more frequently if found necessary, to the steamship companies. I have also arranged that Professor H. T. Barnes, of McGill University, who has, during the past several years, conducted experiments on one of the departmental steamers, shall be on board the Montcalm while performing this patrol service in Cabot strait. By means of his invention, the microthermometer, Professor Barnes has demonstrated the possibility of determining the approach to ice by any vessel equipped with his apparatus. Eager to avail myself of any scheme that promises to further safeguard navigation to the river St. Lawrence, I have directed that Professor Barnes, with a staff of assistants, shall join the ship in order to further demonstrate the utility of the invention, and with a view to its general adoption by shipping interests.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I think that is highly satisfactory to all the commercial interests of this country. I would simply suggest to my hon. friend that he should take into consideration the advisability of extending the Marconi system to Bird's Rock, which is the first point sighted by incoming ships. I mention this because of the fact that some members of the shipping federation have expressed such a desire.

Mr. HAZEN: I will be very glad to discuss the matter with the Deputy Minister of the Naval Service and the director of wireless telegraphy, and ascertain whether or not this is desirable.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If my hon. friend will also take into consideration the fact that the cable connecting Bird's Rock with the mainland often becomes broken through the action of the ice, thus working a great disadvantage to navigation, he will render a great service to the marine interests of that locality.

FISHERIES PROTECTION.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if any progress has been made with reference to the proposed treaty between Canada and the United States relating to the protection of fish in boundary waters, and if he will be able in the near future to make a report to the House in regard thereto?

Mr. HAZEN: I would rather not make any definite statement in regard to the matter at the moment, but I may say I have reasonable grounds to expect that action will be taken in the matter in the near future. I do not want to make that statement with any positiveness, as the conversation I had with President Wilson in connection with the matter was largely of a personal character, but I would be pleased privately to inform my hon. friend fully in regard to the matter.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Can my hon. friend give the House any information with regard to the present condition of the treaty concerning the suspension of pelagic sealing?

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend knows that a treaty was entered into with regard to pelagic sealing, and that it provided that the sum of $200,000 as the first instalment in connection therewith should be paid to the Dominion of Canada. This sum was paid, but when the treaty came before the Congress of the United States it was provided that there should be a total prohibition of sealing for a period of five years. The treaty provided that fifteen per cent cent of the seals killed on the United States islands should go to Canada, as well as fifteen per cent of those killed on the Russian islands and ten per cent of those killed on the Japanese islands. The effect of the action taken at Washington would be that for four years there would be no revenue to Canada from that source. This action is based on the idea that it is very much in the interests of seal life that there should be a total prohibition of sealing for a certain period of time, so that the herds, which had become seriously depleted, might largely increase in numbers. That view, I may say, is not the view entertained by a good many writers on the subject, and is not the view entertained by the fishery officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department of Canada, for although the male seal is polygamous and is usually surrounded by a harem of six or seven females nearly as many males are born as females and unless the males are constantly killed off they do a great deal of injury and kill many of the young seals in fighting for the possession of the cows. Another point with regard to the matter is that the skin of the seal is not of much value till after the third year. We have made representations to the authorities at Washington embodying our views in this connection, and the possible effect may be that this prohibition for a period of five years will be dispensed with, or the length of the period considerably shortened.

FENIAN RAID VETERANS.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I made an inquiry yesterday as to whether the policy of the Government in regard to the distribution of bounties to the Fenian raid veterans had been relaxed in any way. I notice in the papers that not only those parties who actually took part in the conflict at that time, but those who had drilled preparatory to going to the front, were to participate in the bounties. I would ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence if any change has taken place in his policy in that regard?

Mr. HUGHES: There has been no change whatever.

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATER LEVELS.

On motion for Committee of Supply:

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a dispatch which appeared in the morning papers and which is of such vital importance that reference should be made to it at once. I find in the Montreal Gazette:

One of the most important investigations yet held into the water levels on the river St. Lawrence at and below Montreal will be undertaken in the course of the summer by a board just constituted by Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The announcement is made to your correspondent that Professor Eugene E. Haskell, Dean of the School of Engineering of Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y., William J. Stewart, chief hydrographer of the Department of the Naval Service, and Victor W. Forneret, superintendent engineer of the St. Lawrence river ship channel, have been constituted a board for the purpose of investigating and reporting to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the whole questions of the water levels of the river St. Lawrence at and below Montreal.

This action on the part of the Marine Department is brought about by the contention in some quarters that further dredging of the ship channel will result in an easier flow to the sea, which would produce a diminution of the water levels afterwards. As the season for dredging is approaching and as the ambition of the department is to have a thirty-five-foot ship channel, the question is of great importance. The question of providing 'compensatory' works will also be considered. In certain parts of the river, where shallow water prevails, the necessity of erecting barriers to make the channel deeper will be considered. These barriers are called 'compensatory' works. The question of the relation existing between the Chicago drainage scheme and its relation to the depth of the water in Montreal harbour will also be reported upon.

The substance of the balance of the report is that Professor Haskell has been at Ottawa and is interested in this matter and that he is reported to be a person eminently qualified to give an opinion upon it. He has decided to come here and spend his holidays next summer and to act in conjunction with two officers of the department. He does not intend to make any charge except the ordinary expenses of his holiday trip. In my opinion, it is a matter of such grave importance that we require more than a holiday investigation by some professor of an American university.

Mr. HAZEN: Do not take it for granted that these statements are all correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is in the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. HAZEN: Even the Montreal Gazette may be mistaken.

Mr. CARVELL: I have also a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen, which is usually pretty well informed. The Citizen says:

Providing for an investigation into the levels of the St. Lawrence river, and the effect thereon of further dredging operations, an Order in Council was passed yesterday appointing a commission consisting of Professor Eugene E. Haskell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.; W. J. Stewart, chief hydrographer of the Government service, and V. W. Forneret, superintendent of the ship channel, to make the inquiry.

The memorandum of the order states that the contention has been advanced that the flow to the sea will be facilitated by further dredging with the consequential effect of lowering levels of the water above.

The commission also will report as to the need of compensating works to deepen the channel where the water is shallow. Further investigation likewise will be made into the effect of the Chicago drainage canal on the lake and river levels, for while the application for an increased flow was refused at Washington, it is claimed that even now the canal diverts a greater quantity of water than it is entitled to.

The commission will start work about the 1st of June Professor Haskell, who will be associated with the departmental officers, comes highly recommended as a scientific and hydraulic expert, and peculiarly qualified to direct the inquiry.

The only difference between the two reports is that the Montreal Gazette says that Professor Haskell is doing this during his holidays and makes no charge except his ordinary expenses. I have been given figures during the last three or four days that are of such tremendous importance that I would not care to take the responsibility of placing them in 'Hansard.' The minister will know whether the dredging or other operations or natural causes in the past have reduced the level of the water in the harbour of Montreal, in the last seven or ten years. The figures given me are astounding. It is argued that the great change which has taken place in the level of the water of the harbour of Montreal is due to the dredging operations and not to natural causes. That is a matter for argument. I sincerely hope that it may be due to natural causes and not to dredging operations. It is a most remarkable thing that this drop in the level at Montreal has been coincident with the making of a thirty-foot channel. The natural conclusion is that the channel has something to do with the change in the level of the water.

I need not urge on the minister the importance of the St. Lawrence channel to the people of Canada as a whole. It is the great artery through which the commerce of Canada must pass during seven or eight months in the year. While the passenger business can be handled from Quebec in the summer, and I even hope that some time it may be handled from the maritime ports, as I believe it might pay the great steamship companies if the passenger business was handled all through the year from a maritime port, the St. Lawrence channel to Montreal is essential to the carrying of the great foreign commerce of Canada. As our commerce develops it becomes more and more necessary that the channel should be deepened to thirty or thirty-five feet at almost any cost. That opens up the question of the deepening of the channel and canals to get to the great lakes. But I am now only discussing the deepening of the river channel from Montreal down to Quebec.

I find by reference to the last report of the Marine Department that the channel has practically been deepened to thirty feet. There have been sixty-five miles of this work done, seventy-two million cubic yards of material have been removed, and there remains only about two million yards to be taken out in order to complete the channel to a thirty-foot depth. Therefore, we may take it for granted that this has been completed. I find that very little has been done towards deepening the channel to thirty-five feet, some five million cubic yards have been taken out and some fifty-six millions remain to be taken out. If it be true that the deepening of the channel has simply created a bed through which the water runs, and the water simply drops down into the bed and we have no greater depth than before, our expenditure has been in vain. That seems to be the suggestion. Twenty years ago we had eighteen to twenty feet of water in the St. Lawrence and I am afraid that we have not very much more than that now although we have spent something like $14,000,000 and cut the channel down to thirty feet. The argument is that if you make a channel one thousand feet wide and thirty-five feet deep you take out the natural obstructions in the bed of the river and simply create a channel one thousand feet wide and thirty-five feet deep through which the waters run to the sea. If that channel were made deep enough and wide enough, the whole river would go into it, and therefore you would have, not an increase in the depth of the water, but a diminution, because you would accelerate the running water to the sea; you would have a greater current and less depth of water. In fact, I am told by people who think they know that even the present operations have increased the current very materially from what it was eight or ten years ago. I only mention these facts to show the enormous importance of this work. If it be a fact that the dredging operations have not increased the depth of the river to any appreciable extent, then there is something wrong with the plan which we have been following, and with the policy of the department. I am not saying this in a fault-finding sense, because it has been going on for a good many years. If the operations have had the effect which I have indicated, we need a more accurate, more scientific, and more authentic report than we will get from this commission.

I do not know the American professor; he may be one of the best men in the world. I do not know anything whatever about the two gentlemen who have been appointed to act with him. I understand that Mr. Stewart is the chief hydrographer of the department, whose duty it has been to keep the Government instructed as to the levels of the great waterways of Canada. Mr. Stewart may have instructed the department as to the water levels of the river St. Lawrence, or he may not. One would almost imagine that he had not kept the department instructed, or something would have been done before this. If the level of the St. Lawrence river has dropped to the extent which I am informed it has, some one has been remiss in his duty. The other gentleman, I understand, is the superintendent of all the dredging works. I believe that he also is a very well qualified man for the position, one of the best men in Canada I am told. Mr. Forneret is probably a very able man; I have nothing to say against him. But this work is of such importance to Canada that I do not think we should have it undertaken by a commission of gentlemen who have been carrying on the work for the last eight or ten years. I think we should go beyond these gentlemen, and beyond American professors, and go to Europe, or all over the world, in order to get the very best men available.

If it be true that our dredging operations are not giving us greater transportation facilities, then they are not only of no service but an actual injury, and we had better get the work done along different lines such as I see suggested in this dispatch, that is, along the lines of compensation in some way. I presume that would mean building obstructions in the bed of the river, and it might even mean going so far as to build a dam across the river to form a lock. That perhaps would be the most complete way of doing it, but I understand that would be attended with great engineering difficulties, not only in connection with the building of the dam, but in connection with its maintenance in the future, as against the ice and so on. There might be some way of putting obstructions in the form of wing dams. However, I am not an engineer, and I am not trying to suggest what should be done. But if the dredging is not increasing the depth of the water, something ought to be done that will increase it, even if it takes $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 to do it.

Mr. EMMERSON: Why not $35,000,000?

Mr. CARVELL: If I mentioned $35,000,000, I would be charged with obstruction and declared out of order. I will say that if it takes $40,000,000 to create a thirty-five foot channel in the river St. Lawrence, to Montreal, it is the duty of the Government to do it, because it is of more importance than a navy or anything else I know of, not only to keep that channel but to make it so that it will accommodate the largest ship afloat to-day. In view of these facts I think we should have some statement from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I trust he will see his way clear to have this matter investigated by men who are entirely independent, who have no interest whatever except to give us the benefit of their scientific and practical knowledge, as to how to make the St. Lawrence river the great waterway of Canada.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I do not think anybody in this House, or anybody in Canada, would dissent from the statement made by my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), with regard to the very great importance of creating and maintaining in the most efficient manner possible, a waterway on the St. Lawrence from the sea up to the city of Montreal. The importance of that I think has been recognized for many years past, with the result that very large expenditures have been made, year in and year out, for the purpose of improving the St. Lawrence channel, and of providing better means of access to the great port of Montreal for the ships which, during the open season of navigation, seek that port in order to bring commerce to the whole of Canada. It is not very many years since that the largest ships that were able to use with safety the channel in the St. Lawrence from below Quebec to Montreal, were vessels drawing only fourteen feet of water. But the country has gone on with the work of dredging that channel, deepening and widening it, until to-day ships drawing thirty feet of water can proceed with safety up to Montreal from the city of Quebec.

Mr. CARVELL: Does the hon. minister say that at low water periods during the last three or four years, ships drawing thirty feet of water have been able to get to the city of Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN: That has practically been the case, I believe, except during one short period of exceptionally low water. It has cost a great deal of money to accomplish that. When I came into the Department of Marine and Fisheries I found that the thirty foot channel was nearly completed, but owing to the fact that larger vessels will very soon be seeking a port at Montreal, it will be necessary, unless we intend to adopt a policy by which they would have to stop at the city of Quebec, to deepen that channel to thirty-five feet. The efforts of the department, and of those responsible for the dredging of the St. Lawrence channel, are now being directed to the undertaking with a view to having that channel deepened, as soon as can be with the equipment that we have, and that is being provided for us, so that vessels of thirty-five feet will, in the near future, be able to reach the port of Montreal during the open season of navigation. In the future it may even be necessary to deepen the channel to a greater extent, but as we go on deepening the channel, the question arises whether we can continue to do so, unless we provide some compensating works for the purpose of holding back the water at different points and without lowering the level of the water in the harbour of Montreal, and at other points along the St. Lawrence, thereby causing damage to shipping and to commercial interests.

I have discussed this matter a great deal with the officials of the department since I have been in office, and I came to the conclusion this year that it was very desirable that we should get information of the very best kind, and the very best opinion possible, so that in going on with the work, we might guard against doing injury as the result of deepening the channel in future. Discussing that matter with the officials of the department, with Mr. Stewart, who is a most capable man in my opinion, a man of highly scientific characteristics and scientific knowledge, who is chief of the hydrographic survey, and who has been in charge of that survey for some years past; and also with Mr. Forneret who, I think, is also a most satisfactory official, and I believe, a very capable man, and who is in charge of the dredging staff of the St. Lawrence river, I asked them if they could not undertake the work of thoroughly investigating the conditions and of taking the readings of the gauges that have been kept on the St. Lawrence for some years past, and if they could not, from a thorough study of the data and information available, make a report that would be of service in this work in the future.

These gentlemen very strongly urged upon me as did other officials of the department that to have this work done as it should be done it would be necessary to go outside of Canada for an engineer who was a specialist in this work. It was represented that while we have in Canada engineers of very great ability and learning we have not engineers whose energies have been directed in a course which would render them best qualified to deal with such a problem. It was pointed out that engineers in the United States had similar problems to deal with in connection with the Hudson, the Mississippi, and other rivers, and they strongly urged upon me the advisability of getting a man of great experience and great learning to act in concert with our own officials. Mr. Stewart had personal knowledge of Professor Haskell, dean of the Engineering School of Cornell University, having sat with him on the Waterways Commission, and I was advised that he was the best man in the United States, if not the best man in the world for such work. I was told that Professor Haskell was deeply interested in such work, that it was in fact a hobby with him, that he had great experience on rivers in the United States, and it was said that though a busy man he would come here and give us the value of his knowledge and experience. I concluded that there was no better man for this work than Professor Haskell, and that the work would be best done if he were associated with Mr. Forneret and Mr. Stewart, both of whom had local and scientific knowledge concerning the St. Lawrence river. I asked Mr. Haskell to come to Ottawa; he came and I discussed the matter with him; and the result was I made this report to council:

To His Royal Highness the Governor in Council:—

The undersigned has the honour to submit that he has had under consideration, a report from the superintending engineer of the river St. Lawrence ship channel, recommending that the services of an expert hydraulic engineer, experienced in the study of rivers and river improvements be engaged by the department to make, in conjunction with two engineers in the Government service, a careful and thorough examination of the water levels in the river St. Lawrence at and below Montreal, and to submit a comprehensive report on the subject to the undersigned.

Immediately following the receipt of the report alluded to, the undersigned caused inquiries to be made, and learned from reliable source that Professor Eugene E. Haskell, dean of the School of Engineering of Cornell University, Ithica, New York, was universally regarded as one of the foremost experts on the continent of America on all questions relating to water levels. On his invitation, Professor Haskell recently visited Ottawa, and fully discussed the project in hand with him and the technical officers of the department. The superintending engineer of the river St. Lawrence ship channel recommends, in view of the eminent qualifications of Professor Haskell, that his service should be retained to act in conjunction with two engineers from the Government service.

The undersigned, concurring in this view, recommends that Professor Haskell, dean of the Engineering School of Cornell University, William J. Stewart, chief hydrographer of the Department of the Naval Service, and Victor W. Forneret, superintending engineer of the river St. Lawrence ship channel, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, be constituted a board for the purpose of investigating and reporting to the undersigned the whole question of the water levels of the river St. Lawrence at and below Montreal.

The undersigned further recommends that an allowance of $25 per day, inclusive of reasonable travelling and living expenses, be paid to Professor Haskell during the time that he is actuallly engaged in Canada as a member of the said board.

There is nothing in the report about the Chicago sanitary canal. That question is not to be dealt with by this board. This board will confine itself to the water levels from Montreal to the city of Quebec, with the special purpose of discovering the effect upon these levels of the dredging operations in the St. Lawrence, present and past. There is no reason for such an alarmist view as my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has gathered from a statement made to him by some gentlemen whom he did not name. If the experts find that the result of the dredging operations is to lower the level in the harbour of Montreal and to affect the river St. Lawrence in other respects, they will suggest what should be done by way of compensating work to prevent danger in the future. There have been different suggestions made for some years, one, that there should be a dam built across the St. Lawrence at a point somewhere below Verchères so that the water would be held back, and the ships pass through locks, which would obviate the necessity for enormously expensive compensating work. That suggestion has never been taken very seriously by those administering the affairs of the department. The work on the St. Lawrence channel has not been done in any haphazard way. When the river was first dredged the channel was found not to be wide enough and the work in later years, not only represents extra depth by dredging the channel, but it also includes the widening and straightening of the channel. In some places sharp curves have been straightened and in other places the channel has been widened so as to enable ships of large size to pass each other in safety. The hon. gentleman will see that the large expenditure to which he has referred has not been incurred for deepening the channel alone, but that a great deal has been expended in widening and straightening it.

Mr. CARVELL: I had no intention to find fault with the manner in which the work has been done. On the contrary, I think the work has been so well done that I fear it may result in giving the water easier flow towards the sea, and in that way lower the depth of water in the river.

Mr. HAZEN: I did not wish to convey the idea that the hon. member was finding fault, but I did get the impression that he considered the expenditure very large for the deepening of the channel. The men in charge of this work have been scientific and able men, and as the material has been removed from the dredged portion of the river it has not been deposited haphazard at the most convenient place, but placed so as to form bars to keep back the water, and in that way establish compensating works to a considerable extent. These gentlemen who have had charge of that work in the St. Lawrence were strongly of the opinion, and it was on their advice largely I acted, that in dredging the river St. Lawrence it was most desirable that we should get a report from the best possible authority. They were unanimous in saying that we had no Canadian engineer who had the kind of experience that was specially wanted, and they recommended Professor Haskell. Mr. Stewart told me he knew him personally; that he had discussed questions of this sort with him; that he sat with him on the Waterways Commission, and that he considered him one of the best men possible for the work. I am informed that there is probably not an engineer even in England who would have the necessary experience, that in the United States the engineers have been dealing with river conditions which are more analagous to the conditions in the St. Lawrence than would be the conditions on any of the rivers in the British Isles. My hon. friend stated that Professor Haskell was going to make this a holiday trip, and that he was making no charge for his services. That is not correct. Professor Haskell purposes to give to the consideration of the question all the time that is necessary. He believes that he will not require more than three months, with the data now available, with the gauge records that have been taken in the past, with the information in the possession of Mr. Forneret, Mr. Stewart, and the different departments here. For that work he makes, for a man of his attainments, the extremely reasonable charge of all his expenses and $25 a day. As the other members of the commission are both government servants, there is no provision for any extra remuneration for them.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What experience has Professor Haskell had in connection with this class of work?

Mr. HAZEN: He has had experience in connection with conservation work on the Hudson, the Mississippi, the Gulf stream, and so on. His experience has been of the most extensive character.

Hon Wm. PUGSLEY: The question of the St. Lawrence river ought to be dealt with as one question—the waters above Montreal as well as the waters below. It is the waters above Montreal that feed the harbour; therefore, if you can hold back the waters of the upper St. Lawrence and the waters of the lakes in the wet season, that is the best way to supply waters to the lower St. Lawrence in the dry season. Is my hon. friend not aware that, when this Government came into office, there was a commisssion appointed for considering a certain section of the St. Lawrence river? On that commission was Professor McLeod of McGill University. He is one of the best qualified engineers that can be found in America, and he has had a great deal of experience. I should be very reluctant to suppose that a professor of Cornell University, even with the experience which my hon. friend says Professor Haskell has had, would be better qualified to act upon a commission of this kind than Professor McLeod.

Mr. BORDEN: As far as I remember, the work which was to engage the attention of the commission to which my hon. friend refers, was not precisely of the same character as that with which the present commission proposes to deal. My impression is that the area to which the work of that commission was restricted was too small, and when the work proceeded it was found necessary to extend the area over a very much greater portion of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does my right hon. friend not agree with me that all portions of the waters of the St. Lawrence are intimately connected? To get a greater share of water past this city in the dry season could not be accomplished by building conservation works below the Ottawa river, but by the conservation of the headwaters of this great river, two or three hundred miles above this city, with a view of utilizing the forces of nature in the spring of the year when the great floods are on, by holding those floods back by means of dams, and in the dry season by opening the flood-gates and letting out the water gradually for the purpose of increasing the flow of water below. Above the city of Montreal, we have in the vast St. Lawrence system with the great lakes, millions upon millions of cubic feet of water which in the flood season are going to waste. If that water can be conserved by dams on lake Erie or on lake Huron, or perhaps by a dam at Niagara Falls, and can be let out in the dry season, you will get a good flow of water during that season. This problem cannot be solved by simply appointing a commission to study the situation between Montreal and the sea. You have to study the situation on the upper waters as well. There is a serious objection to the appointment of a foreigner, and more particularly an American citizen to consider this question, no matter how eminent he may be.

In my judgment, one of the greatest evils we have to-day in connection with the water supply of the St. Lawrence system, has been caused by what is called the Livingstone channel, which was dredged by the United States Government, without making proper provision for compensation works. The water of lake Huron is to-day at least eighteen inches lower on an average than it was thirty years ago. The lake St. Clair flats operated like a mill dam, holding back the waters of the two lakes; but, since that channel has been dredged out by the United States Government, the water has lowered. I do not know whether this work was done under the supervision of Professor Haskell or not, but I know that it has been done without a just regard for the rights of the Canadian people who are interested in preserving navigation. It might also interfere with the rights of American citizens, but they seem to have been more interested in getting a good channel for navigation that in preserving the water system.

With regard to the St. Lawrence generally, the commission to which I referred was appointed to consider a part of the St. Lawrence system. Professor McLeod was one of the principal members of that commission, and was appointed by reason of his scientific knowledge. Before recommending him to my colleagues, I made very careful inquiry, and I was informed that there was probably not upon the American continent any gentleman better qualified than Professor McLeod to occupy a position, in which the question of hydraulics was important. As that gentleman has been engaged already on work of a similar nature on the St. Lawrence, I think it is a pity that my hon. friend has found it necessary to overlook his qualifications and to appoint a foreigner. This commission was appointed to investigate the water levels of the St. Lawrence above Montreal and to consider what might be the effect of developing water-power and of constructing dams and other compensation works in order to hold back the water during the flood season and to improve the flow of water during the dry season. As I have said, it does seem to me that the whole question of the St. Lawrence system ought to be considered together. Now, just a word or two with regard to dredging operations——

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that the House is not in Committee of the Whole. It seems to me that we are drifting into rather bad habits. It is permissible for the hon. member to speak once——

Mr. PUGSLEY: But this is a different subject I am speaking upon.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood it was the same subject. The hon. member spoke, and the Prime Minister answered him.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend has technically the right to speak only once on the motion to go into supply, no matter how many subjects may be brought up. But no one is raising that question. I think the hon. member for St. John had not concluded his remarks, but proposed what I understood to be a question; but his question has extended to a very remarkable length.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The question is a big one. With regard to the dredging below Montreal, I do not understand that the whole channel has been dredged; some portions have the requisite depth without dredging.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: But one of the most important dredging operations to be carried on was that through lake St. Peter, where the depth was only about eleven feet. Above lake St. Peter there was a greater depth, perhaps thirty or thirty-five feet. I suppose that the dredging out of a place like lake St. Peter has the same effect as the dredging across the St. Clair flats east of lake Huron, which some think has had the effect of lowering the water of lake Huron. What I rose for was to express my view that in order to do effective work in connection with the preservation of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, you cannot deal with a part by one scheme and another part by a different scheme. The St. Lawrence should be dealt with as one great system, the various parts of which are intimately connected with one another, and there should be complete investigation of the system with a view to conserving the whole waterway.

Mr. MURPHY: Before the hon. minister replies may I ask, if the commission of which Professor McLeod was a member, has made a report?

Mr. WILCOX: Did I understand the hon. member for St. John to say that the dredging of the Livingstone channel had affected the level of lake St. Clair?

Mr. PUGSLEY: What I said was that, from information I received from engineers, the dredging of the channel through lake St. Clair flats that, I understand, is not the Livingstone channel, but the channel across lake St. Clair had had the effect of lowering the water of lake Huron.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy) asked me about the report of the commission of which Professor McLeod is a member. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) also referred to that. But until the hon. member spoke, I had never heard that Professor McLeod was a member of a commission. I can only say that the commission referred to was not under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The commission would be one, I suppose, appointed by the advice of the hon. member for St. John when he was Minister of Public Works. I do not agree for a moment with the opinion of my hon. friend from St. John to the effect that it would be more desirable to appoint a commission to investigate the whole question of level of water of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes. The commission under consideration was appointed for a special purpose. The Marine and FisheriesDepartment is engaged under the direction of this Parliament, in the great work of maintaining and improving the channel of the river St. Lawrence. That gives rise to questions as to whether it is safe to go further in deepening the channel than we have already gone. The commission is for the distinct purpose of giving us information to guide us in carrying on that work. We want to know from them whether the work can be gone on with to a greater depth having regard to the safety of the protection of Montreal, and if this cannot be done without compensating works being constructed, what the nature of those compensating works should be. We want that information as soon as possible. The work of dredging the St. Lawrence cannot be allowed to stop even for a single season; it must be continued and gone on with as fast as possible. We cannot keep pace with the increased trade every season coming up the St. Lawrence to Montreal, and we cannot afford to delay the work; and therefore, with as little delay as possible, we should get information on the subject submitted to this commission. If a commission is appointed to consider the whole question of the water levels on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, that will involve a work of years. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) when Minister of Public Works was instrumental in the appointment of an international commission consisting of two from Canada and two from the United States to consider questions relating to the river St. John. That was three years ago and the commission has not reported yet. If a commission cannot report in less than three years on the river St. John, how long will it take a commission to report upon the whole question of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There was a change in the personnel.

Mr. HAZEN: With one exception, the personnel of the commission is the same. One commissioner resigned and another was appointed in his place.

Mr. CARVELL: They had to go over all the work in that case.

Mr. HAZEN: The man appointed was a very able lawyer and would be able to work it out very quickly. I am finding no fault with that commission, nor am I saying that they have been too long in making their report. I am only citing it in support of my argument that a commission appointed to consider the whole question of the levels of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes must take a long time to make a report. Such a commission would have all sorts of questions to consider. The level of the water in the lakes varies. Some tell us that on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes for a period of years the water will rise and rise, then after seven years or so the high point is reached and the water begins to go down. The reason for that no one is able to tell with certainty. Then there is the question of the effect on the water levels of the clearing up of the country, the effect of the snow in the spring rushing out quickly as against the snow slowly melting in a country covered with thick woods. Then there is the question of the diversion of the water by the Sanitary Commission of Chicago. There are questions such as that referred to by my hon. friend with regard to the Livingstone channel which is to-day occupying the attention of the International Waterways Commission. All such questions would have to be considered by a commission that had to report upon the question of the water levels on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes; and years would pass before we could get a report. This would have to be considered if we appointed a commission for the purpose of dealing with the whole question of the water level on the St. Lawrence or the great lakes, and it would be a matter of years before we could obtain a report. We do not want to wait for years; we desire to carry on with all possible expedition the work of improving the channel, and that is the reason why I differ from the views of my hon. friend. I think it is better to limit the matter to an inquiry as to the changes brought about by the construction of the St. Lawrence channel.

Mr. PUGSLEY: For how long a period of time each year is there a scarcity of water in the harbour of Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN: It has not yet been satisfactorily demonstrated that there has been any lowering of the level of the water in ordinary years—of course the rainfall varies —as a result of the operations which have been carried on. As I have said, during some years there is an ample supply of water, and in others it is low; this applies to all our harbours and rivers. In the case of a great harbour like that of Montreal, every effort should be made towards ensuring that, no matter how light the rainfall or how dry the season, there will be ample water for the largest vessels that seek that port. Some alarm—perhaps I use too strong a word—some concern, at least, is being felt that if this work goes further serious difficulties may arise, and it is in order that we may have such information as will guide us in going on with the work that I recommend the appointment of this commission. We have had interviews with shipping interests in Montreal, and it is with a view more to guarding against what may occur in the future than to provide means to remedy any injury that has occurred in the past that the commission is appointed.

Mr. M. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as a representative of one of the Montreal divisions, allow me to say a word or two on the question now before the House. There is no doubt at all that the fact of having deepened the channel to 30-foot depth has had the effect of considerably lowering the water level. To be satisfied of this, you have only to look at the shallows on each side of the St. Lawrence river. Look, for instance, at the island of the St. Helen's, from the south shore; while, a few years ago, one could reach it in a boat, to-day one can go across on foot, at certain times in the year, between that island and St. Lambert.

The only means, in my opinion, when we have a thirty-five foot channel, will be to deepen a basin to thirty-five or forty feet, in order to enable the ships to reach the wharf.

I think the commission which is about to be appointed will have no trouble in solving this problem.

Although I am not an engineer, I perfectly apprehend that when you have a thirty-five foot channel, the front of the island of Montreal will also have to be thirty-five feet, in order to keep the water all the time. In my opinion, there is no other means of preventing the harbour of Montreal being flooded and facilitating the natural flow of the waters.

Mr. L. A. LAPOINTE (Montreal, St. James): I must congratulate the Government on having named a commission of this kind, in view of the necessity of studying the matter of the level of the river St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. I have no objection to this course, in view of the fact that the Government has found good men for this purpose, and I hope that a report will be made as soon as possible and that the Government will act upon it.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX: Personally I know the officials of the Canadian Government who have been appointed to form part of this commission and I can testify as to the great ability of Mr. Stewart and Mr. Forneret to deal with such matters. I regret, however, that the Government has not thought it proper to appoint Mr. McLeod, of McGill University, who is an engineer of the highest experience. Some two years ago, when work was contemplated on lake St. Francis, above Montreal, the Government of the day appointed a commission at the head of which was Mr. McLeod of McGill. He was recommended not only by the engineers of Montreal, but also by the shipping federation. The works contemplated in this instance were in connection with water-powers on the Beauharnois canal, and at Cedar rapids. We appointed Messrs. McLeod and Gear, of Montreal, and Mr Surveyer, also an engineer of great ability. There will certainly be some surprise that my hon. friend has thought it proper to go beyond the boundaries of Canada to obtain an engineer for the work that is now being contemplated. I agree with my hon. friend that the lowering of the level on the river St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, whilst it might be due to the dredging which has been extensively carried on during the last twenty-five years, might also be attributed to the depletion of our forests, and to the drought which takes place at certain periods of the year. Speaking as a Montrealer, however, I wish to say a good word for our port, and to state that notwithstanding the spasmodic lowering of the water levels, Montreal still remains the leader of our Canadian ports. Looking at the statistics, I see that our business men in Montreal are having vessels loaded with the products of other countries, passing Quebec and coming directly to Montreal, even though they have a larger draught than the vessels which stop at Quebec. Coming up to Montreal we have the White Star liners, which are of a much larger draught than the Empresses, which shows that notwithstanding, the spasmodic lowering of the water level, the port of Montreal can still receive vessels of a large displacement. In the Commercial Review of last year, published by the Montreal Gazette, I find the following:

The feature of the navigation season of 1912 has been the increase in the passenger traffic and the enhanced rates for freight, consequent on the present dearth of tonnage throughout the world. The passenger traffic increased eastward as well as westbound, but the latter increase constitutes a record for the port of Montreal, and is only approached by the returns for the year 1907. Another feature of navigation, and one that is likely to be more and more accentuated as time goes on, is the increasing size of tonnage of steamers. Not only have passenger liners increased, but the tonnage of colliers is also greatly in excess of former years. The Dominion Coal Company having invested in new steamers with a carrying capacity of eleven thousand to twelve thousand tons, the necessity for the deepening and widening of the ship channel,——

Which justifies the remarks of the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin)— —a work upon which dredges have been engaged daily throughout the season, is made manifest by this increase in the size and tonnage of steamers.

Vessels of the largest tonnage come to Montreal; notwithstanding the work in the channel the level of the water will permit them to enter the harbour. However, I quite agree that this commission is needed. It is certainly a national work of the greatest importance and I only regret that my hon. friend, who generally administers his department so well, and who comes from such a stout loyalist stock, has thought fit to go beyond the boundaries of Canada, has disregarded the ability and capacity of our Canadian engineers and has selected an American to preside over the commission.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): I do not rise to express an opinion as to the deepening of the St. Lawrence below Montreal, although I apprehend that is a very important and necessary work, nor does it make much difference to me whom my hon. friend appoints as commissioner; but I think that the navigation of the St. Lawrence above Montreal is as important as that below Montreal and that the Government should at once take steps, by a commission, or by appointing engineers, to ascertain the best and most practicable means for securing a deep water channel from the foot of lake Ontario to Montreal. The Welland canal is to be constructed with a depth of thirty feet. That work, I hope, will be begun this summer. The engineer in charge says that it can be completed in five years. To make the money that is to be expended in deepening and enlarging the Welland canal useful and beneficial to the country the navigation of the St. Lawrence from lake Ontario to Montreal must, in some way, be improved, either by the construction of new canals paralleling the present canals which are fourteen feet in depth or by deepening the channel of the river itself, putting in dams across the river above the rapids and building locks in the river. I have heard eminent engineers say that that is the best means of improving the navigation between lake Ontario and Montreal. By building dams and locks in the river you will not only make a thirty-foot waterway available to Montreal but you will develop or give the opportunity for the developing of enormous hydro-electric power. Hundreds of thousands and I daresay millions of electrical power can be developed, sufficient I should think to pay the interest on the cost of the construction of such a work.

The Welland canal will be completed in about five years, and to make that as useful as it can be made, and should be made, you must extend the deep water navigation to Montreal. Then why not begin at once? Select your engineers, have the river thoroughly examined, have a full investigation made and ascertain what is the most practicable way of extending the deep water navigation to Montreal. If you do that I submit that the Government will be doing something which is an imperative necessity in the interests of navigation, of shipping and of transportation in Canada. It will cost a great deal of money, no doubt; but it is imperative that it should be done, and the sooner it is begun the better. The country can afford to begin now, and by commencing now it will be completed within a few years after the completion of the Welland canal. Then you will have a complete line of transportation, from the head of lake Superior to Montreal and to the Atlantic ocean, of at least thirty feet depth. Vessels can then load at Fort William or Port Arthur, 200,000, 250,000 or 300,000 bushels of wheat and discharge it in Liverpool. I would respectfully urge on the Prime Minister and his colleague the Minister of Public Works, who has charge of that river, that steps should be at once taken in this direction.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of Public Works): There seems to be some confusion of ideas in respect to these commissions in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. As I understand, the commission appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a temporary commission for the purpose of seeing to the matter of the deepening of the St. Lawrence by dredging. This in no way conflicts with the proposed commission, in connection with which Mr. McLeod was named, to carry out a work such as has been so well described by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). I recognize the importance of the work that was necessary to be taken in hand by such a commission as that, and to that end I have offered the position to Mr. McLeod and to Mr. Surveyer, and I am now in correspondence with those gentlemen. The only difference between them and myself is that they want to give only a portion of their time, and I think that the importance of the work is such that we should, if possible, have the full time of both of them for the commission to study the question of power in connection with the waters of the St. Lawrence as well as the storage of waters in the Ottawa river and the great lakes. We are to-day offering the position to those gentlemen and are hoping to secure them. The only question is that Mr. McLeod is tied up with his university work and he is afraid it would be impossible for him to give us all the time that we think we should have. I expect to see him shortly and we hope to arrange some basis to secure his services and go on with the commission for which $40,000 was voted last year and is to be re-voted this year. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Welland that this is a very important undertaking, and that it is necessary for us to avail ourselves of the services of the very best men to look into it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, the commission of which my hon. friend has just spoken, was appointed by the late Government, and was composed of Professor McLeod, Mr. Gear and Mr. Surveyer. It had for its object the determination of the effect of certain electrical works which were contemplated at the foot of Cedar rapids, upon the navigation of the river at the Soulanges canal. It did not go beyond that. But there is a great deal in the suggestion made, I think, by my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should not be content with the commission which he has appointed, the object of which is quite laudable, but that he should appreciate the fact that the problem is much larger than the examination of the waters below Montreal. The object which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has in view now is to determine what is the effect upon the levels of the river by the development of the channel which was commenced some sixty years ago in the St. Lawrence, and by cutting the bar at lake St. Peter. The expansion of the St. Lawrence by lake St. Peter, causes a difference in the level between the main river and the lake of some thirty or forty feet. The depth of the channel thirty years ago was not more than ten or twelve feet, but it was sufficient for the navigation of that day. As the tonnage of ships increased, however, it was determined to deepen the channel from eleven to fourteen feet; and again as the tonnage of ships increased, it was deepened from fourteen to eighteen feet, from eighteen feet to twenty-five feet, and from twenty-five to thirty feet, and now it is proposed to deepen it from thirty feet to thirty-five feet. It is remarkable that all this work was done without any preliminary scientific report. The reason is obvious. The Government of the day, whichever it was, was anxious to provide for the immediate facilities of trade, and without looking at the consequences of the work, the channel was deepened and again deepened, until from being eleven or twelve feet it is now proposed to make it thirty-five feet. Anybody who is not an engineer apprehends that as you deepen the channel you will likely empty the basin which is formed by the harbour of Montreal. The object which my hon. friend has in view is to ascertain the effect of that, and quite properly too. As to the personnel of the commission, I know Mr. Forneret and Mr. Stewart, and both are certainly most competent officers. No better selection could have been made. As for the American representative, perhaps he would be as competent as anyone we could select, because of the character of the waters to be examined, as the Mississippi and the Hudson are very much of the same character as our own St. Lawrence. But there is more than that in the problem. My hon. friend has very properly stated that there is no subject, of which so little is known, as the rise of rivers at certain seasons. What he stated a moment ago struck me very forcibly. During certain years the water level will go down, and down, and then rise without any apparent reason. It is impossible to find the cause of the river levels going down, and then going up during a succession of years. It is very important to study this subject, and I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be well advised, not to be satisfied with the commission he has named, but to embrace the whole of the St. Lawrence system from the upper lakes to the city of Montreal. He will have to come to that sooner or later. Of course the level of the river is not affected by the work which is going on at lake St. Peter, but by other influences of which we know very little, and which will have to be studied again and again, not for one year, but for many years, and by men of the widest experience and knowledge.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): I think there is no doubt whatever that the work to which the right hon. gentleman refers must be undertaken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN: But the object of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was to ascertain in the most expeditious manner whether or not the dredging of the St. Lawrence channel between Montreal and Quebec has produced the result which some persons have claimed. If it is producing that result, then it seems to me it would be the absolute duty of the Government to come to Parliament and present some proposal by which compensating works would be constructed in order that the work which has been carried on in the past, and which must be carried on in the future, will not be thrown away. That is the object which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had in view. With regard to the personnel of the commission, I can only say that I do not know Mr. Forneret very intimately, but I have heard nothing but good reports of his ability. So far as Mr. Stewart is concerned, I have personal knowledge of his very great ability and of his great devotion to the public service. The other gentleman who has been appointed, Professor Haskell, of Cornell, has been selected for the reason that he seemed to have a unique experience in respect to matters of this kind. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, acting upon information which was given to him by the technical officers of his department, took the only course he could have taken in appointing him.

The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), has alluded to a very important matter indeed, the construction of certain works on the St. Lawrence river, that would create a substitute for the channels which are created by the canals. That subject has been brought to the attention of the Government on more occasions than one since we have assumed the responsibilities of office. Of course my hon. friend will realize at once that the conditions requiring attention are very comprehensive. Further than that, no such work could be undertaken without the consent and probably the co-operation of the Government of the United States, or, at least of the Government of the State of New York. There is some reason to believe I think, that the Government of the State of New York would be prepared to consider co-operation.

Mr. GERMAN: Have they not offered co-operation?

Mr. BORDEN: I would not like to put it so broadly as that; certainly not in any official way, but informally, I think, it has been stated that they would be prepared at least to consider co-operation, and to consider it favourably. So far as my limited knowledge and study of the subject would lead me to have an opinion at all, I am very much disposed to agree that there is a great deal of force in the observations which my hon. friend from Welland has addressed to the House this afternoon. So far as the water levels upon the river St. Lawrence, from Montreal to the great lakes, and up to the head of navigation, are concerned, there are a great many considerations to which attention must be given. There is the question which has arisen with regard to the diversion by the Chicago sanitary authorities, which was brought to the attention of the Secretary for War in the United States, at the hearing held last summer, when the sanitary authorities of Chicago sought for a permit from the Secretary for War to increase their output from lake Michigan, through the canal, from 4,163 cubic feet per second to, I think, 10,000 cubic feet per second. The permit was not granted by the Secretary of State for War, who afforded to the representatives of the Government of Canada a very courteous hearing indeed. In the result, the permit was not granted, although there is a rumour—I cannot say it is anything more than a rumour—that the application may possibly be renewed. The diversion is said, upon very good authority, to be very much in excess of the number of cubic feet per second which are allowed by the terms of the permit. The whole subject, I believe, was somewhat under consideration by the International Joint Commission at a recent hearing in reference to the compensation works which the Government of the United States desire to have constructed, partly upon Canadian territory, in connection with the Livingstone channel. The view was put forward by counsel representing the Government of Canada at the hearing, that it would be better to have the commission take into consideration the whole subject, and particularly to take into consideration the effect of the diversion through the Chicago canal. It would not be proper for me to make any further observations upon the subject because the determination of the International Joint Commission has not yet been given, but will, as I understand, be given at Washington on the 1st of April. I can only say that the discussion has been very interesting and very instructive and I would like to assure the House that the considerations which have been brought to our attention in connection with this most wonderful and important waterway, will not be lost sight of.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright): It is not my intention to criticise any appointment to the commission, but, as the discussion has taken a rather wide range, I may be permitted to say something on a matter which has a direct bearing on our waterways system. The discussion has taken a wide range, and in fact hon. gentlemen opposite have talked of water, its power, its navigability, its depth, and they have wandered from the upper lakes down past the city of Quebec to Cape Race. They have, however, forgotten the Ottawa river which is the real connecting link between the upper lakes and the St. Lawrence. I was greatly interested, and somewhat amused at some of the remarks of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. He said that the discussion was certainly very interesting, and, no doubt, it was extremely so; and he proposed to take the improvements of the river St. Lawrence into his very serious consideration. But, he has been doing that for the last two years, and no doubt he will continue to do so, but I was waiting for him to say that there was another very important matter which has been brought to the attention of the House on several occasions, amongst others by his very worthy supporter from North Renfrew (Mr. White) and by other gentlemen interested in the development of the trade of this country, and I was waiting for a promise from the Prime Minister that he would take this also into his serious consideration. My hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White) will notice that the Prime Minister, finding it was spring, thought it not safe to skate on very thin ice, and so he avoided, very ingeniously indeed, referring to the Ottawa river.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew): We will get that all right.

Mr. DEVLIN: I am glad you say so.

Mr. WHITE: You were in power sixteen years, and what did you fellows do?

Mr. DEVLIN: I am now addressing myself particularly to the Prime Minister in connection with the Ottawa river improvements. I do not know what my hon. friend says we will get. Will the hon. gentlemen tell me?

Mr. WHITE: I will tell you later.

Mr. DEVLIN: I wish my hon. friend from Renfrew would tell me what we are going to get?

Mr. HENDERSON: You are going to get left.

Mr. DEVLIN: I am afraid the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has spoken very truly indeed. However, I would like to tell the Prime Minister that the improvement of the Ottawa river is a matter which should engage the attention of his Government and engage it very seriously. I quite understand that the matter is not in the department of the Minister of Marine and that his commission cannot possibly cover it, but there was a commission appointed by the late Government in 1905 which amongst others made these recommendations in connection with the St. Lawrence:

> There is an improvement that the Government has already decided on and undertaken under the able supervision of Mr. F. W. Cowie, government engineer, concerning matters in the lower St. Lawrence, especially in making the depth of the channel thirty feet at lowest water and the width not less than five hundred feet, with ample additional width at the bends and the removal of the shallows in certain points of the river. The commission do not therefore feel it necessary to make any recommendation as to these matters further than to suggest that the works already decided upon be pushed to completion at as early a date as possible.

I understand it is that recommendation which the commission now appointed is prepared to follow.

Mr. HAZEN: That work is being pushed.

Mr. DEVLIN: There is this further recommendation by this same commission:

> As it is necessary for the safety and efficiency of the route that the above improvement should be made in connection with the St. Lawrence route, your commission would recommend that these matters that have already been decided upon should be undertaken by the Government and carried to completion with the least possible delay; your commission being strongly of opinion that the Government should not lose a minute of time and should not spare any expense whatever in making the aids to navigation from Belle Isle to Cape Race to Montreal as thorough and complete and up-to-date as possible.

I understand that the minister has also carried out that recommendation in the report. But, my object in referring to this section of the report was to call attention to the fact that in this report which was very ably prepared there is a further recommendation to be found at page 24 in connection with the deepening of the Ottawa river. When this report was prepared, it had not been decided whether the work of deepening the Ottawa river was feasible, but since then it has been proven to be feasible and to be of great commercial value. I would like the Minister of Marine to call the attention of his colleague the Minister of Public Works to the fact that while the deepening of the St. Lawrence is a work of very great importance to the Dominion, unless you deepen the Ottawa river from the St. Lawrence up to the lakes you are not going to have the best and cheapest system of transportation in this country, and that is what the aim of the Government should be. As to the deepening of the St. Lawrence in connection with the Welland canal, the Prime Minister seemed to have doubt whether the Government of the United States or the Government of the state of New York might possibly consent. I think I can assure the Prime Minister that he need have no fear as to that. I believe that if the Government of Canada goes to the Government of the state of New York and asks them to stand one-half the expense of deepening the Welland canal, the state of New York will be quite ready to do so. The Government of the United States and especially the Government of the State of New York, view with a great deal of appreciation any movement upon the part of this Government towards the deepening of the Welland canal. The deepening of that canal is very important indeed; the enlarging of all our canals is of very great importance.

In discussing the question this afternoon, the right hon. the Prime Minister might have given us some information as to what were the intentions of the Government in regard to the Ottawa river. It is not a branch of the St. Lawrence; it is a main waterway and a most important one. I would commend to the attention of the Minister and his colleagues the great importance of spending a good deal of their energies upon the development of the Ottawa river. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the Georgian Bay canal, as I think that would be rather out of place this afternoon. I hope the right hon. Prime Minister, the next time he speaks upon the question of the deepening of our waterway systm between Cape Race and the upper lakes, will not forget to say a word about the Ottawa river.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I think every member should take an interest in this discussion. I do not want to be provincial or parochial in regard to the question. I wish to get more information, if possible, from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I should like to know what is the scope of investigation of this commission. Are they to study only the St. Lawrence river or are they to study the tributaries of that river, such as the Rivière des Prairies and the Rivière Jésus.

Some hon. gentlemen referred this afternoon to dredging rivers. I should like to know if it is possible for my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to tell me whether this matter is in the scope of the investigation by Mr. Haskell.

Mr. HAZEN: The scope of this commission is simply to consider the conditions on that part of the St. Lawrence river which is traversed by the ship canal from Montreal down, for the purpose of ascertaining what effect the deepening of that channel has had or what effect its future deepening may have on the level of the water in Montreal harbour or above. If it is found that it has the effect of reducing the levels, then the commission will make a report as to the character of the compensating works that should be introduced for the purpose of preventing damage resulting from that lowering.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): With your permission, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. It seems to me that members are drifting into a very bad habit. Questions are asked of ministers, and with each question a speech is made. While the motion is to go into Committee of Supply, and while it is permissible for any member to speak on that, it is not permissible for a member to make two or three speeches, even though he changes from one subject to another.

Mr. WILSON: I simply got up to ask a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must say that the hon. member has spoken already. When he got on his feet before, it was to ask a question and he made a speech. I think he can scarcely expect to make another speech.

Mr. WILSON: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet now to ask the hon. minister a question. He gave me an answer which, in my opinion, was not complete.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WILSON: If I am out of order, Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member is not in order.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM: The difficulties surrounding the question of the proper depth of water in the St. Lawrence and through what process that depth may be obtained, are not new. A few years ago, this matter was under discussion, the question arose as to the St. Lawrence west of the city of Montreal. It was said that work done there might interfere with the depth of water in Montreal harbour. When the new Soulanges canal was built, and the Beauharnois canal was leased to a company, that company proceeded to develop the water-power in that old canal to a marked extent under their lease. The question was raised as to whether that development would interfere with the depth of water in the lake feeding that canal. At a later date, other water-power privileges were granted, and an alarm was sounded by navigation companies as to the effect that all this use of water from the river might have. I remember listening to deputations from Montreal and other places along the St. Lawrence river, urging the Government to make full investigation before it allowed the works that were then contemplated, to be developed, to say nothing of granting any additional powers. A commission was appointed to investigate. The point I wish to make particularly is this: In investigating the water level east of Montreal, my hon. friend will hardly be able to confine his investigations to that locality or to the river east of Montreal. If he will look over the discussions and reports, he will find that several of the engineers contended that, if certain development work were done on the river west of Montreal and if certain water were allowed to be diverted from its natural course in the St. Lawrence, it might have the effect of lowering the levels east of Montreal. Take the proposal that was at one time discussed, for the construction of a dam at the Long Sault, particularly in the north channel. The State of New York gave certain rights for the development of water-power on the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault. At that point the river is divided into two branches, the north Sault and the south Sault. The south Sault is the smaller stream of the two. Down that channel the smaller craft have always gone. As a matter of fact practically no steamers except the Richelieu and Ontario passenger steamers use the north channel. It was proposed at one time by a company, not only to dam the south Sault and to have a lock placed there for the development of water-power, but also to extend a dam across the north Sault. Hon. gentlemen will remember the discussion which took place, which was very interesting and at times somewhat heated, as to the advisability of allowing any person to undertake that work. The navigation companies were interested, particularly, the Richelieu and Ontario Company, as they thought it would detract from the scenic beauty of the tourist trip if the North Sault were interfered with. But, in addition, very strong representations were made to this Government, and I think Montreal was also represented at Washington, against allowing a dam to be constructed at the Long Sault. The two reasons given, in addition to the one to which I have alluded, were, first, that it would destroy property west of the dam to an extent that people, perhaps, did not realize, and, second, that it would tend to lower the level of the water east of that point and might affect the harbour of Montreal. I am pointing this out to show to my hon. friend that if it is to accomplish anything the investigation will have to extend west of Montreal on the St. Lawrence as well as east. I have seen in the press items relating to this matter to which I would like to refer. I do not wish to violate the rules, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to get the information if I can. One item gave the interesting information that the right to construct a dam at the Sault held, or sought to be held, by certain companies as granted by the state of New York had been cancelled. I think that was some months ago. And the same was revived in an item the other day to the effect that the decision previously given had been maintained. That would indicate that the rights of this company, and on the strength of which they had expended a large amount of money on the south side of the river, had been taken away from them rightly or wrongly, and that point I am not discussing now.

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): At the Long Sault? They expended no money there.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM: They did at the South Sault.

Mr. HUGHES: That decision does not imply that their rights were taken away.

Mr. GRAHAM: But it would affect their position with regard to the north Sault and the south Sault. The point I am now discussing is not how much they have expended, whether much or little. But in another item, I think it was stated as from Toronto that the Dominion Government had now under consideration the advisability of constructing a dam at the north Sault and developing water-power in connection with the United States authorities either federal or state, for the production of electrical energy for the people on either side of the river. The object was the same as that sought by the company, but, this being an international stream the rights upon which involved many complications, it was thought advisable by many people that if this work were to be undertaken, it should be undertaken by the two countries jointly. There is a good deal of argument in support of the idea that if the work is to be undertaken it should be in this way; but that brings us back to the advisability of undertaking the work under any circumstances. If it be true that a dam on the St. Lawrence would adversely affect the residents not only on the west but on the east, then the fullest investigation of the situation ought to be held before the Government either undertakes such a work or allows anyone else to undertake it. It would afford unlimited energy for this part of the country, and I admit that some parts of Ontario are badly in need of cheaper power. But I would like to ask the Government if this item is true;—is there any foundation of fact for the statement that the Government has under consideration the construction of a dam at the Long Sault, on the north side in connection with authorities in the United States?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think there is any proposal of that kind contemplated by the Government. I have not heard of it. If such a thing is proposed it would be known by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Minister of Public Works has just entered, and I would put the question to him. I was discussing the question which has been before the House this afternoon, the question of the water levels on the St. Lawrence, and was pointing out that if it were thought necessary to have an investigation as to the water levels east of Montreal, it would be necessary to extend that investigation west also, because the information that we had in the past was to the effect that obstructions or dams, or works, carried on west of Montreal would affect the water levels of Montreal harbour.

Mr. HAZEN: What kind of dams? Did the hon gentleman say 'obstruction' dams? That is a dangerous word.

Mr. GRAHAM: I put the 'obstruction' first. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if there is any truth in an item that appeared in the press that the Government was considering with the United States authorities, either federal or state, the construction of a dam at the Long Sault.

Mr. ROGERS: I never heard of it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I was saying when the hon. gentleman came in that it was important to have an answer to that question. The item is going the rounds of the press, and even the method of distribution is being described. Neither the former Government nor this Government has been convinced that there should be a dam across the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault. There are also other big questions involved in the subject that has been under discussion. My hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin) discussed the enlargement of the canals. That may be apropos of the present question, but I would prefer to make any remarks I have upon it at another time.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): I hope the Prime Minister will take the opportunity of making a definite statement regarding the question of damming the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, and so will other hon. members who were in the last Parliament, that we had at one time a rather long discussion on the subject. Nearly every member who is now sitting on the other side of the House objected in very strenuous terms to any dam being constructed across the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault or anywhere else to interfere with the navigation of the river. On that occasion I joined with them, and did my best to oppose any action that was contemplated by the late Government at that time tending to make it possible in any way for a company that had certain rights and privileges under an act of this Parliament from going on and carrying out any such work. One would hardly expect, therefore, that the present Government would favourably consider the proposition of damming the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault. I have seen many statements in the newspapers during the past year, having regard to the various power companies in the city of Montreal which have franchises, conveying the impression that the companies had secured or intended to secure authority from the Government to construct a dam across the canal, thus establishing one huge power plant in that locality. There is no question about the fact that that could be done, but the matter for consideration is whether we should allow the navigation of the St. Lawrence to be interfered with in any way. I understand that power can be developed to the extent of some six or eight hundred thousand horse-power, but if that were done, we in Canada could use but a fraction of our portion of that power in Canada at the present time. The result would be that the power, in the meantime at all events, would be sent across to the United States and used to build up and develop the industries of that country. If the time came, possibly in twenty-five, fifty, or one hundred years, when our descendants should claim the right to have the benefit of power—assuming that it would be deemed advisable to dam the St. Lawrence at that point—the power would in the meantime have been transferred to the United States. Our past experience in connection with Niagara, Fort Francis, and the western part of Ontario, leads us to believe it would be a most difficult matter for Canada to get the power back, notwithstanding the fact that it was our own property, and had in the meantime been exported to the United States and used to build up industries in that country. To my mind, this is a question of very great importance, and I have intended for some time past to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the subject. As I think it is a matter upon which some definite information should be given, in order that the people would feel secure in regard thereto, my present purpose is simply to ask if the Government will give some definite assurance as to what their policy is in this connection.

Mr. ROGERS: So far as the damming of the Long Sault is concerned, I have never heard of it in connection with my department. It has never been considered, and no one has spoken to me in reference to the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But would you consider it?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know that I would, so far as I understand the matter. In answer to the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham)—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I be permitted to say that it seems to me that we are getting far away from the natural order of business. Hon. members are asking questions of the ministers which are of such a nature as to bring them to their feet several times, and each time a speech is made. Of course, if that privilege is extended to one member, and not to another, it is entirely unfair, and I would like the House to support me in trying to maintain the rules of debate as regularly as possible.

Mr. ROGERS: With the permission of the House, I will answer the hon. member for South Renfrew in reference to the question he brought up regarding the Waterways Commission, of which Mr. McLeod was named as the head. An examination of the estimates for this year will reveal the fact that we have in mind the same idea as that suggested by my hon. friend. The commission which was named by our predecessors was one constituted simply with reference to the river St. Lawrence; but in the estimates for this year we have designated the commission as being the River St. Lawrence and Great Lakes Waterways Commission, in order that we can extend the scope and usefulness of the commission, in the manner suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. BELAND: In the event of there being a diversion of 10,000 cubic feet of water from lake Michigan, to what extent would that affect the level of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. HAZEN: The question as to how the diversion of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second from lake Michigan for the purposes of the sanitary drainage canal would affect the level of the St. Lawrence is a matter with regard to which there has been a tremendous amount of discussion, and opinions in connection therewith differ very widely. On the application before the Secretary of War it was contended, on behalf of the Canadian shipping interests and the Canadian Government, that the effect would be an appreciable lowering of the water—so appreciable that many of the harbours of the great lakes, which are now sufficiently deep for the purposes of ordinary commerce, would have to be dredged to a considerable great depth. It was argued on behalf of those who were asking for this permission that no such result would follow, but my belief is that the diversion of this water would have a very appreciable effect, and would undoubtedly materially affect the conducting of business in the harbours and channels of those lakes during the season of navigation. I could not off-hand say to my hon. friend what the general consensus of opinion is as to the actual number of inches the level would be lowered.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken this evening. He may now desire to speak on a different subject, but the only question before the House is that the Speaker leave the Chair, and upon this subject every member may speak once, and not more than once.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a very important statement that I saw in the Evening Journal, and I desire to ask the right hon. leader of the House —

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. member to observe order. I am endeavouring as best I can to keep the discussion within the rules. I would like to be able to say that greater latitude is allowable to a minister of the Crown, but it does seem to me that it is a growing abuse of the rules that a minister of the Crown, by reason of the questions asked, should be obliged to be so often on his feet, making several speeches on the question before the Chair.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I accept your decision, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

APPOINTMENT OF ANDREW LANDRY.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond, N.S.): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion that you do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, I desire to move an amendment, a copy of which I placed in the hands of the Prime Minister this afternoon. I desire also to place before the House some facts which will enable the members to pass intelligently on the amendment which I shall move. During the period that hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition, we were regaled from time to time with statements of principles and ideals as to the conduct of public affairs —principles which it was complained the Government then in power did not carry out. Among other subjects that came up for discussion and criticism was that of appointments to public offices. The right hon. the leader of the Government, then the leader of the Opposition, issued several platforms and manifestos during fifteen years, in which he set forth his policy and the principles which he said would guide him in the administration of public affairs if he were returned to office. One plank in the Halifax platform, so-called, issued previous to the last general election, read:

> Appointments of public officials upon considerations of capacity and personal character and not of party service alone.

When the right hon. gentleman was called upon to head the Government of the country the people of Canada no doubt expected a rigid adherence to that principle by the right hon. gentleman and his Government. The facts which I purpose stating show that he departed very widely from these principles under circumstances that I believe call for criticism not only by the country but by Parliament itself. I intend to read to the House certain documents which have been brought down by the hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Marine and Fisheries with respect to certain dismissals and appointments in the county of Richmond.

On December, 1911, two months after the present Government was formed, Mr. J. A. Gillies, the defeated Conservative candidate in the county which I have the honour to represent, addressed this letter to the Minister of Marine:

Arichat, N.S., Dec. 8, 1911.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—At a full meeting of the executive of the Liberal-Conservative Association held here yesterday, a resolution was unanimously passed asking for the dismissal of Dugald R. Boyle, of West Arichat, fishery inspector on Isle Madame. Mr. Boyle is a noted political partisan and was most active at the last election. He attended meetings of the Liberal party, canvassed openly and actively, and was the sworn agent in the poll at West Arichat on last election day of the Grit candidate. His position is indefensible and deserves and expects instant dismissal. The executive recommends the appointment of Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, to this position, and I now endorse that recommendation.

Yours truly,
J. A. Gillies.

It will be observed from this that Mr. Gillies demanded immediate dismissal of a very efficient officer of the Department of Marine on the ground that he was an offensive partisan, among the complaints being that he had represented the Liberal candidate at the poll on election day.

To that letter the Minister of Marine replied on December 13, 1911:

December 13, 1911.

Dear Sir:—

I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 8th instant, stating that at a meeting of the executive of the Liberal-Conservative Association of Richmond county, held at Arichat, a resolution was unanimously passed asking for the dismissal of Mr. Dugald R. Boyle, of West Arichat, fishery overseer, Isle Madame, on the grounds of offensive political partisanship, and that the executive recommend the appointment of Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, to this position, which recommendation you endorse.

In reply I may say after an examination of the existing organization of the outside staff of the fisheries branch, I am quite convinced that it is not the best one that could be devised in the public interest ,and I have therefore in view, just as soon as time will permit, going thoroughly into the matter with the object of completely reorganizing that branch of the service. I have in the meantime taken your letter into consideration, and hope to be in a position to advise you further in regard thereto in the course of a few days. Yours faithfully,

J. D. Hazen.

J. A. Gillies, Esq.,
Sydney, N.S.

On December 18, 1911, the following letter was written to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

The Honourable
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Honourable Sir:—

Permit me the following: I have it from a reliable source that a Mr. Andrew Landry has been recommended for the office of fishery inspector for this county. Being pastor of a parish in this county of sixteen hundred souls, I am greatly interested in its progress and in having as public officers men worthy of the confidence of the people and a credit to the Administration that has named them.

Consequently I think it is my duty to the interest of your Administration, to inform you that the above mentioned Mr. Landry is not a man for any public office in this county. Would you think a man who has a case pending against him for a forged notes worthy of a public office and our confidence? Believe me, honourable Sir, your Administration will be lauded by rejecting this demand.

I know you will believe that a good purpose animates me in laying this information before you, and that you will give this matter your attention.

Humbly yours,
Wilfrid A. Boucher, P.P.

Descouse, Richmond Co., C.B.
Dec. 18, 1911.

P.S.—The office above related to is now in hands of a Mr. Boyle, of West Arichat.—W. A. Boucher.

The minister replied as follows:

Reverend and Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 18th instant, stating that you have received information from a reliable source to the effect that Mr. Andrew Landry, of Descouse, has been recommended for the office of fishery overseer in the county of Richmond, in lieu of Mr. D. R. Boyle, of West Arichat, and I note you state as you are a pastor of sixteen hundred people you are interested in their progress, and in having as public officers men worthy of the confidence of the people, and a credit to the Administration, and you therefore deem it your duty to inform me that the above mentioned Mr. Landry is not a man for any public office for many reasons (inter alia) that he has a case pending against him for forged notes.

In reply I beg to thank you for your letter, and state that it is the desire to have thoroughly competent and worthy officers, and I have therefore caused your letter to be filed for consideration in the event of a vacancy occurring in the position now held by Mr. Boyle.

Yours faithfully,
J. D. Hazen.

Reverend W. A. Boucher,
Descouse, Richmond Co., C.B.

From this correspondence you will see that the Minister of Marine, as early as December 18, was warned against appointing this Captain Landry to any public office in Richmond County for the reason that at the time charges were pending against him for forgery.

I have here a certified extract from the minutes of a meeting of the treasury board held on January 15, 1912, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General in Council on the 20th of January, 1912:

Marine and Fisheries.

The board recommend that the services of Mr. Dugald R. Boyle, of West Arichat, who was, by Order in Council of the 6th of November, 1896, appointed a fishery overseer in and for the county of Richmond, in the province of Nova Scotia, be dispensed with on the ground of offensive political partisanship.

Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The Honourable
The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The following letter was written on January 26, 1912, by the superintendent of Fisheries to Mr. D. R. Boyle:

Sir,—I beg to inform you that by Order in Council of the 20th instant your services as fishery overseer have been dispensed with on the ground of offensive political partisanship. You will please continue to act until the end of the present month, up to which time your salary and regular expenses incurred on official business will be paid.

Any documents or other property in your keeping which are official in their nature you will please immediately forward to the inspector of fisheries at Englishtown.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
W. A. Found,
Superintendent of Fisheries.

Dugald R. Boyle, Esq.,
Fishery Overseer,
West Arichat, N.S.

It will be observed from this communication that the Minister of Marine lost no time in carrying out the recommendation of the defeated Conservative candidate in the county of Richmond that Mr. Boyle, who was an efficient public officer, should be dismissed in order that Mr. Gillies might receive satisfaction for Mr. Boyle's having voted against him.

On January 26, 1912, the following letter was addressed by Mr. Found to Mr. Morrison, inspector of fisheries at Englishtown, N.S.:

Sir,—I enclose herewith a copy of a letter to-day written to Mr. Dugald R. Doyle, of West Arichat informing him that his services as fishery overseer have been dispensed with from the end of the present month. The department is not at the moment prepared to say who will be employed to succeed him, and you will therefore arrange that the nearest fishery officers or guardians, who may still be engaged in the district, in order to prevent any violations of the law.

I am sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. A. Found,
Superintendent of Fisheries.

J. G. Morrison, Esq.,
Inspector of Fisheries,
Englishtown, N.S.

On the 26th of January, 1912, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed the following letter to Mr. J. A. Gillies:

January 26, 1912.

Dear Sir,—Adverting to your letter of the 8th December last, recommending for reasons contained therein, that fishery overseer R. R. Boyle, of West Arichat, be dismissed, I beg to inform you that an Order in Council was approved by His Royal Highness on the 20th instant dispensing with Mr. Boyle's services, and he has been notified that his engagement with the Department will determine on the 31st instant.

In your letter you recommend that Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, should be employed to fill the vacancy. Subsequently I received a letter from Reverend Wilfrid A. Boucher, of Descouse, in which he expressed the opinion that Mr. Landry is not a suitable man to be employed in any public office, and I gathered from his letter that action is pending against him for having forged notes. It may be that this information was not before you when you made your recommendation, and before proceeding with employment of a successor to Mr. Boyle, I shall await a further letter from you.

Yours faithfully,
J. D. Hazen.

J. A. Gillies, Esq.,
Barrister, &c.,
Sydney, N.S.

In reply to that letter, Mr. Gillies despatched the following telegram:

Sydney, N.S., Feb. 16, 1912.

J. D. Hazen,
Ottawa.

Please send Andrew Landry his appointment fishery overseer immediately, no foundation for charges against him.

J. A. Gillies.

On February 21, 1912, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed the following letter to Mr. Gillies:

21st February, 1912.

My Dear Sir,—In the absence of the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is at present in Washington, I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 19th instant, with reference to Captain Andrew Landry.

As soon after the minister's return as convenient your telegram will receive his attention.

Yours very truly,
A. Johnston.

J. A. Gillies, Esq.,
Barrister,
Sydney, N.S.

On February 21, 1912, Mr. Gillies addressed the following letter to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Sydney, N.S., February 21, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Re appointment of Captain Landry.

Dear Sir,—I wired you the other day asking you to be good enough to forward Captain Landry's appointment as fishery overseer at Isle Madame. I have made very careful inquiry respecting the matter touched upon in your letter and I have no reason whatever to withdraw my recommendation of him. It is simply bad blood between different factions at Descouse, and some of the parties are trying to damage the Landrys. I have known them for over twenty years and during that period of time I have found them absolutely straight and correct in every particular. Please send on his appointment at once as it is important that the distribution of the bounty cheques should be in the proper hands.

Yours very truly,
J. A. Gillies.

From this correspondence it is perfectly manifest that no mistake could have occurred in the mind of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to who this Captain Landry was, and as to the particular complaint that was made against him. He informs Mr. Gillies that the man recommended by him for the position of Fishery Officer, was charged by the Rev. W. A. Boucher with having had a complaint of forgery laid against him and that he was not a fit and proper person to be appointed to a public office. Mr. Gillies discussed the subject with the hon. minister in letters and telegrams, and went so far as to admit that there was some trouble in the community in which Captain Andrew Landry was involved, but he assured the hon minister that there was nothing in it, that it was simply the result of bad blood between different factions in the community where he lives. On March 2, 1912, Mr. Gillies addressed the following letter to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Ottawa, March 2, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Hazen,—Will you kindly drop me a line stating whether Captain Andrew Landry's appointment as fishery overseer has been yet sent to him?

I wrote you on the 19th February—before leaving home—your acknowledgment thereof dated 21st of February has been received by me here.

As the bounty will soon be distributed I will be very glad to know that Captain Landry has been duly installed in his position before the distribution begins.

Yours very truly,
J. A. Gillies.

P.S.—Please address to Russell House.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Gillies was very insistent that this appointment be made without delay. In reply to that letter the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed the following letter to Mr. Gillies:

March 6, 1912.

Re Captain Andrew Landry.

Dear Sir,—I have to acknowledge yours of the 2nd instant with further reference to the above.

In reply I beg to say that pressure of sessional work has made it impossible for me to overtake this and a number of other matters of a similar nature.

At the very earliest opportunity I shall give it consideration.

Yours very faithfully,
J. D. Hazen.

Now there was another officer in the district of Descouse whom Mr. Gillies desired to have dismissed. He was Captain Leon N. Poirier, a wharfinger. On December 8, 1911, Mr. Gillies addressed the following letter to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries with respect to that officer:

Arichat, N.S., Dec. 8, 1911.

Dear Sir,—I hereby recommend Captain Andrew Landry as wharfinger of the public wharf at Descouse. The present wharfinger, Leon Poirier, acted the offensive political partisan at the last election and at every election for years past. At the last election in September he had his horses out driving voters to the poll and doing all in his power in the loudest way for the Grit candidate.

Yours truly,
J. A. Gillies.

The Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

It will be observed that no suggestion was made that the charges of partisanship against these officials should be investigated. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries was willing to accept the recommendation made by Mr. Gillies for the dismissal of those officers, notwithstanding the fact that there was a great difference of opinion between the Rev. Mr. Boucher of Descouse and Mr. Gillies as to whether or not Captain Andrew Landry was a fit and proper person to be appointed to a public office. It will be observed that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did hesitate for some little time about appointing Captain Landry to the office of fishery officer on the recommendation of Mr. Gillies. But there was no hesitation on the part of the minister in accepting the recommendation for the dismissal of this man upon the unsupported statement of Mr. Gillies that they were offensive partisans. On December 12, 1911, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed the following letter to Mr. Gillies:

12th December, 1911.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of yours of the 8th inst., recommending the dispensing with the services of Leon Poirier as wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, owing to offensive political partisanship, and the appointment of Captain Andrew Landry as his successor. Your request is receiving attention, and I hope to be in a position shortly to advise you further with regard thereto. What is Captain Landry's post office address?

Yours very truly,
J. D. Hazen.

J. A. Gillies,
Commercial House,
Arichat, N.S

I have here the minute of council dismissing the wharfinger at Descouse, a certified copy of the report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General on December 19, 1911.

The Committee of the Privy Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries advise with reference to the Order in Council of 31st May, 1906, appointing Leon N. Poirier wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, N.S., that the same be cancelled and the services of Mr. Poirier dispensed with owing to offensive partisanship

The committee on a further recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries advise in accordance with the provisions of chap. 112, Revised Statutes, 'An Act respecting the Government harbours, piers and breakwaters,' that Captain Andrew Landry be appointed wharfinger at the Government wharf at Descouse, N.S., in the room and stead of Leon Poirier, and that he be allowed to retain as remuneration for his services 25 per cent of the wharfage collections.

(Sgd.) Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

There is no mistaking the fact that this is the same Captain Andrew Landry against whom the minister was warned by the letter addressed to him by the Rev. Wilfrid A. Boucher a few days before. The Rev. Wilfrid A. Boucher addressed that letter to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the 13th day of December. On the 23rd day of December, ten days afterwards, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed the following letter to the agent of the department at Halifax:

Sir,—I have to inform you that by Order in Council of the 19th December, 1911, the services of Mr. L. N. Poirier as wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, N.S., have been dispensed with, and Captain Andrew Landry has been appointed in his room and stead, and that he is allowed to retain as remuneration for his services twenty-five per cent of the wharfage collections. Mr. Poirier and Captain Landry have been so advised, and Captain Landry has been directed to enter upon his duties.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd). C. Stanton,
Assistant Deputy Minister.

The Agent,
Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Halifax, N.S.

On the 23rd December, 1911, ten days after receiving the letter from Rev. Mr. Boucher, the following letter was addressed to Mr. Gillies:

23rd December, 1911.

Dear Sirs,—Referring to your letter of the 8th instant recommending the dispensing with the services of Mr. Léon N. Poirier, wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, N.S., and appointing Captain Landry thereto, I am to inform you that by Order in Council of the 19th December, 1911. Mr. Poirier has been removed from the office of wharfinger and Captain Landry appointed thereto. Captain Landry is allowed to retain as remuneration for his services 25 per cent of the wharfage collections.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) A. Johnston.

J. A. Gillies, Esq.,
Arichat, N.S.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman says: On the 23rd day of December, ten days after the letter was received from Father Boucher. Father Boucher's letter was written on the 18th of December.

Mr. KYTE: I may have made an error in the date of the letter, but if so it was unintentional. On the 23rd of December, five days after Father Boucher's letter was written, the following letter was sent to Captain Poirier, wharfinger, Descouse:

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, 23rd December, 1911.

Sir,—I have to inform you that the Order in Council of the 31st May, 1906, appointing you as wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, N.S., has been cancelled and your services as wharfinger dispensed with owing to offensive political partisanship.

Captain Andrew Landry has been appointed in your room and stead to whom I have to request you to give up possession of the wharf and of all government supplies pertaining thereto when required.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) A. Johnson,
Deputy Minister.

Mr. Léon N. Poirier,
Descouse, N.S.

To show how well founded was the charge made by the Rev. Wilfrid Boucher against Captain Landry in his communication to the Minister of Marine, on the 18th day of December, 1912, Captain Landry was on the 1st of February arrested on a complaint charging him with forgery; he was brought before the stipendiary magistrate in Arichat and committed to stand his trial in the Supreme Court for that offence. On the 4th day of June, 1912, the court presided over by Mr. Justice Graham sat at Arichat and investigated the complaint made against Captain Andrew Landry with the result that a true bill of indictment was found against him and that indictment I shall read:

Prosecuting Officer,
County of Richmond.

This indictment was tried and on the 5th of June the petty jury convicted Andrew Landry of the said offence and I have here the record of his conviction:

In the Supreme Court.
Arichat, 5th June, 1912.

The King vs. Andrew Landry.

On indictment for forgery and uttering the sentence of the court is that you be imprisoned in the county jail in Arichat for the term of one year.

(Sgd.) D. H. Campbell,
Acting Clerk of the Crown.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that the charge made against Landry was tried in the Supreme Court at Arichat on the 4th and 5th days of——

Mr. McKENZIE: Was he sentenced the same day he was tried ?

Mr. KYTE: He was tried on the 4th and 5th days of June and convicted on the 5th day of June, and sentenced by Mr. Justice Graham to serve twelve months in the common jail of Arichat for the said offence. One would imagine that was the last we would have heard of Captain Landry as candidate for public office in the county of Richmond, and one would have thought that was the last we would hear of recommendations coming from Mr. J. A. Gillies, the defeated Conservative candidate in the county of Richmond, to appoint Andrew Landry to office. One would also imagine it was the last time an attempt would be made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to appoint Landry to public office in view of all the circumstances and in view of the fact that a conviction was recorded against him and he was serving a sentence in jail for the said offence. On the 28th day of May, seven days before Landry was convicted of forgery, the following letter was addressed by Mr. Gillies to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Sydney, Cape Breton, May 28, 1912.
Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Mr. Hazen:—

Capt. Frederick Poirier's contract for placing out the Lennox Passage buoys expires on the 15th of June, and I wish this service to be performed from that date by Capt. Andrew Landry, of Descouse, C.B. He will carry on the contract at the same rate as is now paid Poirier.

Will you please give direction in this matter so as to have this suggestion carried into effect?

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. A. Gillies.

On the 7th day of June, 1912, two days after Landry was convicted of forgery, and when he was serving sentence in the common jail at Arichat, the following letter was addressed to Mr. Gillies by the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Dear Sir,—I have by direction to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 28th ultimo, addressed to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, relating to the buoy service at Lennox Passage, and in reply I have to inform you that instructions have ben issued to place this service in charge of Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, C.B., when the present agreement terminates, at the same price as we are at present paying, namely, $240 per annum.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. Johnston.

On the same day, the following letter was addressed by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to his agent at Halifax:

Sir,—I have to inform you that it has been decided to tranfer the buoy service at Descouse and Lennox Passage at present performed by Mr. Frederick Poirier to Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, C.B., when the present agreement terminates, namely, on the 15th instant.

Be good enough to notify Captain Landry and the former contractor, and have the names of two good sureties forwarded to the department in order that a new agreement may be prepared.

Yours very respectifully,
J. D. Hazen.

On the 11th day of June, 1912, in accordance with the instructions given in the letter which I have just read, the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Halifax addressed the following letter to Captain Frederick Poirier, the buoy contractor:

Marine and Fisheries Department.
Office of Superintendent of Lighthouses,
Agency at Halifax, N.S., June 11, 1912.
Mr. Frederick Poirier, Descouse, Richmond Co., N.S.

Sir,—It has been decided to appoint Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, to maintain the buoys which you have a contract for, and which terminates on the 15th inst., you will therefore be good enough to transfer the service to Captain Landry, giving him all the spare buoys that are now in your charge. You are supposed to have all the buoys in good order before transferring them to him.

I am sir,
Yours sincerely,
P. C. Johnson,
Superintendent of Lights.

Upon the same day, Captain Frederick Poirier addressed a letter to the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Halifax, in which he stated that it was impossible for him to carry out the instructions contained in that letter, namely, to hand the buoys and moorings over to Captain Landry, inasmuch as that gentleman was in jail serving a sentence for forgery.

The facts and conditions being such as I have described, one would imagine that Mr. Gillies, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and other hon. ministers who are sitting in the present Government would have had nothing to do with Captain Andrew Landry. His friends and Mr. Gillies, however, were not to be outdone. They were not to allow the trifling circumstance of his having been committed to jail for forgery to interfere with his capacity for filling public office in the county of Richmond. It was openly boasted at that time by Landry's friends that he would not be long in jail, that there was now a Government at Ottawa friendly to him and his party, and that they would appeal to the Government to release him from jail, so that his duties as a public officer might be resumed with the least possible delay. The whole difficulty, in which the departments of the Government have been placed, is due to the new precedent which they established in accepting recommendations for dismissals of men from public office and for appointments to public office from defeated candidates in the province of Nova Scotia. Such a course was not followed, at all events in the county which I have the honour to represent, during the fifteen years that the Liberal party was in power. During all that time, only three or four dismissals were made and then only after full investigation by commissioners appointed for the purpose of holding court and of giving the charged officials ample opportunity of appearing with their witnesses for the purpose of disproving, if possible, the charges made against them. To entrust defeated candidates with the responsibility of recommending the dismissal of men from public office and the appointment of other men is a precedent which must inevitably lead to trouble for the Government which accepts such recommendations. It is not so objectionable to accept recommendations of hon. members, because they must defend their conduct and their recommendations in this House, as they might reasonably expect that these recommendations would be challenged by persons who felt that the dismissals had been improperly made and not based upon sufficient evidence. There is no such check on defeated candidates. They are for the most part political castaways, whose milk of human kindness, if they ever had any, is soured and curdled by defeat. And to these men this Government issue letters of mark by virtue of which they plunder, destroy and prey upon public officers in their constituencies, who are unfortunate enough to be within the scope of their power or within their reach. The only excuse offered by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries for making the appointment of Captain Andrew Landry to public office, after the warning that had been given to him by the Rev. Wilfrid Boucher, is that he did not know it was the same Captain Landry. Throughout all the correspondence that took place between Mr. Gillies and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and also in the letter from the Rev. W. Boucher to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he was referred to as Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was good enough in his reply to the Rev. W. Boucher to say that he would take his recommendation into consideration; and that he would see that this man, if unfit to hold public office, would not be appointed. One would imagine that the incident was so far fastened on his mind that it would be impossible for him to forget the protest, which was made to him a few days before, and that he would not by any possibility appoint any person of the name of Captain Andrew Landry to public office in the county of Richmond, until he had investigated whether he was the identical Captain Andrew Landry that he had been warned against by the Rev. W. A. Boucher.

I stated a moment ago that an application for the release of Captain A. Landry from jail was threatened by his friends the day after he was committed to serve sentence in the common jail at Arichat. Upon this subject I have some more letters which throw a flood of light upon the whole iniquity, and which must fasten the responsibility of having Captain Landry released from jail by virtue of his political affiliations in the county of Richmond. Here is a letter addressed by the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the deputy minister:

Agency at Halifax, N.S., June 19th, 1912.

Sir,—Mr. J. McL. Fraser, accountant of this agency has just returned from a short inspection trip that I requsted him to make to Cape Breton points; and he informs me that Mr. Andrew Landry who is the wharfinger at Descouse, is not attending to his duties owing to his being confined to jail. As there is considerable activity at Descouse during the season of navigation, it is very important that a vigilant wharfinger should be in charge at this place, and I ask that immediate steps be taken to secure a competent man for the position of wharfinger at Descouse, either in a temporary or permanent capacity.

I remain yours faithfully,
Charles H. Harvey,
Agent of Marine and Fisheries.

Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
Ottawa, Canada.

Upon the receipt of that letter, the deputy minister addressed the following letter to Mr. Gillies:

26th June, 1912.

Dear Sir,—It has been reported to the department that Captain Andrew Landry, wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse is not attending to the duties of the position. Would you be good enough to advise me as to the name and post office address of the person you desire appointed to take the place of Captain Landry whose services it is proposed to dispense with. The wharfinger is allowed to retain 25 per cent of the wharfage collections.

Yours faithfully,
A. Johnston.

J. A. Gillies, Esq., K.C.,
Sydney, N.S.

You will observe how careful the Department of Marine and Fisheries was not to wound the susceptibilities of Captain Landry and his friends. While the agent states the reason for Captain Landry not attending to his duties, the deputy minister in writing to Mr. Gillies refrains from making such explanations, but simply states that Captain Landry is not attending to his duties. It would appear that a certain code is established in that department that though men are criminals and are serving sentences in the common jail, if they are of the proper political stripe the fact that they are in jail must be suppressed to all intents and purposes by the officials. In reply to that letter Mr. Gillies wrote the following:

Sydney, C.B., July 3rd, 1912.
Alexander Johnston, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of 26th June respecting the wharfinger at Descouse, I wish to say that the duties of this position are being well attended to by Captain Aime Langlois, of Descouse.

There is no record of Captain Langlois having been appointed up to the 3rd of July, 1912. Mr. Gillies appears to have been running not only the patronage in the county of Richmond but the whole department in that county, because he takes upon himself to appoint a wharfinger in place of Captain Landry while the latter was suffering a trifling restraint upon his liberty by reason of the sentence of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

—as probably you are aware Captain Langlois is a leading and highly respected citizen of that community,——

I am glad to be able to testify to the high standing of Captain Langlois in the district of Descouse; but I venture to say that Mr. Gillies' recommendation of him ought not to carry much weight in view of the recommendation he gave to the same minister of Captain Landry while under a charge of forgery.

—and will give every satisfaction in this temporary position. Captain Andrew Landry will be home in the course of a few days,——

Mr. Gillies, no doubt, had paid a visit to Ottawa and learned that Captain Landry would be home in a few days. As a matter of fact he was home in a few days.

Mr. MURPHY: How much had he served?

Mr. KYTE: Three days less than one month.

Mr. MURPHY: Of a year's sentence?

Mr. KYTE: Yes.

—when he can resume his duties as wharfinger. I presume this will be satisfactory to the department. If however it is absolutely necessary to appoint a wharfinger I reccommend Captain Langlois for that position, but I do not wish this done, as Landry himself will be home in a few days as I have stated. Please let me know if this it satisfactory.

Yours very truly,
J. A. Gillies.

That was dated the 3rd of July, less than one month after the sentence of one year had been imposed.

Captain Landry's friends transferred their activity to the Department of Justice at Ottawa. I said a moment ago that the boast was made by Captain Landry and his friends that he would be out of jail in a very few days. That boast was repeated and stated in writing by Mr. Gillies in the letter addressed to the deputy minister to the effect that Captain Landry would be home in a few days. I am aware that certain recommendations were made by friends of Captain Landry in the town of Arichat, which were forwarded to the Department of Justice, asking for his release. I hold that it speaks well for humanity that people always sympathize with a neighbour who is in trouble. There is scarcely to be found an instance of a man falling upon evil days and misfortunes overtaking him that his neighbours will not sympathize with him and do what they reasonably can to alleviate the blow which has fallen upon him. It is not extraordinary that certain men with tendencies towards humanity, in Arichat should send recommendations to the Minister of Justice asking for Captain Landry's release. That happens in every case. In fact, men who have committed the most revolting crimes have had the sympathy of the people of the community in which they lived, and representations have been made that if the convict were released from jail he would commit no other offences to bring him under the condemnation of the law. It is generally represented in such cases that a man's family needs his support, that his circumstances are such that they will suffer from want if the term of his sentence is carried out. Therefore, having regard to the long experience of the Minister of Justice as a judge in Montreal, it would not have seemed strange to him that recommendations should be made to release Captain Landry. That was to be expected; it happens in nearly every case. But these alone ought not to prevail with the Minister of Justice. They ought not to prevail with any person having the responsibility of carrying out the law and whose responsibility imposes upon him either the sentencing of a criminal for his offence or the releasing of him from custody. It is the prerogative of people having no responsibility to give advice to those who have responsibility, as to what ought to be done under certain circumstances. That is all the good people who signed recommendations to the department did. They set forth that this man Landry has suffered enough; and that he had lost his good name in the community; that his family needed his support, and therefore he ought to be released from jail.

In addition to the very humane appeal which was made by these people in the town of Arichat for the release of Captain Andrew Landry, a second appeal was made for his discharge. It was stated in an informal way to the Department of Justice that this man Landry was suffering from a serious ailment which necessitated a surgical operation, and that unless he was released from jail the operation could not be performed, and his life would be in danger. I quite concede that that was an appeal which should have had some weight, in the mind, I was going to say, of the Minister of Justice; but I will be frank enough to admit that the hon. Minister of Justice was not in Ottawa at the time, and the circumstances connected with the application for the release of this man were not brought to his attention. The acting Minister of Justice at the time was the hon. Minister of Finance, but I think the fact that he was merely the acting minister did not relieve him from the responsibility of having a thorough inquiry and investigation made as to the truth of the representations made on behalf of Captain Andrew Landry, looking to his discharge from jail. Therefore I say it was the duty of the acting Minister of Justice to have instituted an inquiry as to whether or not it was true that Captain Andrew Landry's condition of health was such as necessitated a surgical operation, and that, if that surgical operation was not performed, his life or health would be in danger. But, as I stated a moment ago, no steps were taken by the acting Minister of Justice to ascertain whether or not these statements and representations were true. There is in the town of Arichat a municipal health officer, who is also the jail physician, and one would have imagined that the acting Minister of Justice would immediately have communicated with the municipal health officer and jail physician for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not Landry's condition was such as necessitated a surgical operation. There are other doctors resident in the town of Arichat, one of whom is a nephew of Captain Landry, and there are two other doctors not connected with him in any way, one of whom is the jail physician. Is it not a very significant fact that the only representation made to the Department of Justice by any physician as to the necessity of Landry's undergoing a surgical operation was an informal communication by Dr. B. A. LeBlanc, Landry's own nephew, and that that statement was not supported in any way by the statements of the other two doctors living in the town? Surely the acting Minister of Justice knew, or, if he did not know, he could have ascertained, that there were other doctors living in the town of Arichat; and, if not, that there were doctors living elsewhere in the province of Nova Scotia with whom he could have communicated to ascertain whether or not the representations made by Landry's own nephew were true. But the representations were not true. It was not necessary for Landry to undergo a surgical operation, and he never underwent a surgical operation. He was discharged by the Department of Justice on the 3rd day of August, less than sixty days of his sentence of twelve months having expired, and instead of going into an hospital or receiving medical treatment, he resumed his duties as wharfinger in the town of Descouse, and carried on his avocations as a citizen of that community. I have no particular complaint to make in respect of Landry's discharge, provided that a proper case had been made out for his release, but what I do find fault with is that an active supporter of the present Administration, having been convicted for the crime of forgery, was appointed to a public office, and that, after he had been committed to serve a sentence of twelve months in jail, he was released by one of the ministers of this Government upon information entirely inadequate to justify them in taking such a course. It is true that Landry resumed his duties as wharfinger after he was released on the 3rd day of August, and on August 6 he addressed the following communication to Captain Frederick Porrier, of Descouse:

Descouse, August 6, 1912.

Captain Frederick Poirier,
To Dominion Government wharf,
Descouse, Dr.

To wharfage on buoys and moorings for winter seasons 1909, 1910, 1911 and 1912 at $10 per season, $30 E. & O. E.

Immediate settlement is requested by order of department.

(Sgd.) Andrew Landry,
Government Wharfinger.

If paid at once I will settle for $10, otherwise I am instructed to press the claim for $30.

(Sgd.) Andrew Landry,
Government Wharfinger.

It is known that my good friend the hon. Minister of Finance was making rapid progress in dissipating the comfortable surplus that he discovered in the treasury, the result of fifteen years of Liberal administration, but I had not imagined that he had gone so far in the path of the spendthrift that in the month of August, 1912, he was willing to compromise a bill of thirty dollars by the payment of ten. That is the case as I have given it, which I have made out from the documents of public record. There is one other circumstance which I feel I am justified in pointing out in connection with this matter. It has been stated that the acting Minister of Justice and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheres could have had no knowledge of the political proclivities involved in the prosecution of Landry, and in extenuation of the manner in which this case was dealt with, it has been said that there was no means of ascertaining whether Landry was a Conservative or a Liberal, and, therefore, that political considerations could not have entered into the matter. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance, who was at that time the acting Minister of Justice, if information did not come to him that Captain Andrew Landry was a strong Conservative, and that the man who laid the information against him was a strong Liberal?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): When this matter was brought up by my hon. friend on a previous occasion, I said it was not in my mind or memory that the name of Landry had ever been before me; that I had no knowledge whatever as to whether he was a Liberal or a Conservative, nor, at the time my hon. friend brought it up, was I aware that the matter had been in any way dealt with by me, until the next day, when the hon. Minister of Justice directed my attention to the fact that it was a case which had been dealt with by myself during his absence in England.

Mr. KYTE: The fact, then, remains that information did come to the department as I have stated, and that is not denied by the hon. Minister of Finance. But there is another circumstance which I state as a matter of fact, and that is that the officer of the department to whom the matter was referred was of the opinion that Landry was not entitled to his discharge upon the merits of the case, but, if the surgical operation was necessary to save his life, he thought it would be humane to release him. Did the acting Minister of Justice institute that inquiry? I stated a moment ago that he did not, but he accepted an unofficial telegram, from a man who was totally unknown to him, as to the truth of the statement, and no independent inquiry was instituted by him. Therefore, the very point upon which his release was permitted was not investigated by the Department of Justice, but the ex parte statement of a political friend, the nephew of Landry himself, was accepted as the only testimony upon which the action was based. I said that Landry resumed his occupation as wharfinger in Descouse. The remuneration, as was stated on a former occasion by the Prime Minister, was very trifling, so trifling that he could not live upon it, and he left Descousse a few weeks after, and took a position at the steel works in Sydney, where he has been ever since.

I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Martin, of Regina:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Andrew Landry, of Descouse, in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia, was on the 8th day of December, 1911, recommended to the Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, by J. A. Gillies, defeated Conservative candidate in the county of Richmond, in the last general election, for the position of 'fishery officer' in the place of Dugald R. Boyle, dismissed for alleged political partisanship.

That on the 18th day of December, 1911, the Hon. J. D. Hazen was notified in writing that the said Andrew Landry was not a fit and proper person to appoint to any public office.

That on the 23rd day of December, 1911, the Hon. J. D. Hazen appointed the said Andrew Landry, wharfinger of the Government wharf at Descouse, Nova Scotia, in place of Léon Poirier, dismissed for alleged offensive political partisanship.

That on the 1st day of February, 1912, the said Andrew Landry was brought before a stipendary magistrate on a complaint charging him with forging the signature of one Paul LeBlanc to a promissory note and uttering the same.

That on the 4th day of June, 1912, the said Andrew Landry was tried in the Supreme Court at Arichat before Mr. Justice Graham and a jury on an indictment for forgery as above set forth, and he was on the 5th day of June found guilty and sentenced by the court to serve twelve months in the county jail at Arichat for the said offence.

That on the 7th day of June, 1912, the said Andrew Landry was by the said Hon. J. D. Hazen given the contract for the buoy service in Lennox Passage without tender at $240 per year in the place of Captain Frederick Poirier.

That the said Andrew Landry was on the 3rd day of August, 1912, when but two months of his sentence had expired, released from jail by the Department of Justice and resumed his office as wharfinger.

That in appointing the said Andrew Landry to public office while under committment and sentence for the commission of a serious crime and in releasing him from jail after his conviction for the said crime, the Government under all the circumstances is deserving of the severst censure.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): It is only right that I should place before the House a plain statement of the facts in regard to the matter which forms the subject of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) to the motion that you leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply. When I have made that plain statement of fact, it will be for the House to judge whether the Government is deserving of censure because of its action in regard to that matter. This subject does not come before the House now for the first time. The hon. member for Richmond brought it before the House on one previous occasion this session when he laid before the House the statement as he has given it to us to-day. When I heard the hon. gentleman then I was convinced and I am more convinced now that while as a member of the Opposition he would like to bring before the country anything that in his opinion would reflect on the conduct of the Government or any department of it, he is more anxious to make an attack upon Mr. J. A. Gillies, barrister, of Richmond, who was his opponent in the last campaign and who may be his opponent in the next campaign. On this occasion I hold no brief for Mr. Gillies, I do not wish to shirk one atom of responsibility attached to me as head of the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but while I hold no brief for Mr. Gillies I would say, having sat in the House with him, that he is a gentleman of reputation and position in the part of Nova Scotia from which he comes. He has been twice honoured by being elected a member of parliament in the county now represented by the hon. member for Richmond. He has sat for several terms in the House of Commons and he has been an active man at the bar of Nova Scotia and in the political life of the county from which he comes. It is my firm conviction that in making the representation which he did to the department with reference to Mr. Landry he was acting in good faith, believing that Mr. Landry was a reputable man and believing the facts set out in the very strong letters in Landry's behalf and filed in the department, copies of which have been laid on the table of the House.

I wish to take up this question in a little different manner from my hon. friend and to avoid any confusion in its presentation. The hon. member first referred to the facts in connection with the recommendation of Mr. Landry for the position of fisheries overseer and the letter received from Father Boucher in regard to the appointment. The first knowledge that the department had of the matter was the receipt of a letter from Mr. Gillies dated December 8, in 1911, in which he forwarded a letter advising that at a full meeting of the Liberal Conservative Association held at Arichat on the previous day a unanimous resolution had been passed asking for the dismissal of Dougald R. Boyle, fishery overseer of West Arichat. Mr. Gillies pointed out in the course of his letter that Mr. Boyle was a noted political partisan who had been most active during the recent election. He represented that he attended meetings of the Liberal party, canvassed openly, and was the sworn representative of Mr. Kyte on election day at West Arichat. On these grounds Mr. Gillies asked for the dismissal of Mr. Boyle, and recommended as his successor Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse. My hon. friend (Mr. Kyte) says we acted on that recommendation of Mr. Gillies' without investigation, and without inquiry. In making that statement, the hon. gentleman is incorrect. No doubt he believed that what he stated was correct, but it was incorrect. We had right here at hand in the city of Ottawa the opportunity of verifying one of the statements contained in Mr. Gillies' letter, and we caused inquiry to be made, and the correctness of the statement contained in Mr. Gillies' letter that Mr. Boyle was the representative of Mr. Kyte on election day was verified by reference to the records in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It has been laid down in this House by no less an authority than the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, that acting as scrutineer at the polls is sufficient evidence of political partisanship to justify the removal of an official from office, and here we have the records in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in the city of Ottawa showing that the statement made by Mr. Gillies to the effect that Boyle had acted as the representative of Mr. Kyte at the election of 1911 was correct. That being the case, I had no hesitation in recommending to council that the gentleman named, who held this office, preferring to be a politician rather an official of the Government, should, in the language of my right hon. friend, be given every opportunity of being a politician. Therefore, I recommended his dismissal, and an Order in Council was passed removing him from the position.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the date of the Order in Council?

Mr. HAZEN: The Order in Council issued on 20th January, 1912. Mr. Gillies' letter recommending the appointment of Mr. Landry was on the 8th. On 18th December, I received a letter from the Rev. Wilfrid Boucher, the parish priest at Descouse, to which reference has been made by my hon. friend from Richmond, and which he read to the House, calling attention to the character of Captain Landry. That letter having been read to the House, it would simply be occupying time to read it again, or to give the substance of it. But that letter from Mr. Boucher was written on the 18th December. It was received at and opened in the department on the 22nd of December, and I ask hon. gentlemen to bear these dates in mind. That letter having been received from Father Boucher, its contents were ackonwledged and its contents conveyed in a letter to Mr. Gillies. There was correspondence about the matter, Mr. Gillies asserting very positively in his letter that the reverend gentleman, in complaining of Landry's conduct, must be mistaken and the information he had received was incorrect. But in consequence of that letter, and as a result of the information it contained and of the correspondence that followed, I refused to appoint Landry to the position of fishery overseer. Another gentleman was appointed to that position, not Mr. Andrew Landry. So far as the office of fishery overseer is concerned, which is the important office, and the office about which Father Boucher wrote to us, the matter stands simply this way: Landry was recommended by Mr. Gillies, exception was taken to his appointment by Father Boucher who wrote to me giving his reasons for so doing; I had correspondence with reference to it, and I did not appoint Landry to the office, but another man, by the name, I think, of Boudreau. These are the facts connected with the position of fishery overseer. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) would leave the impression on the minds of hon. members, rather by what he did not say, than by what he did say, that Andrew Landry had been appointed to the position of fishery overseer. The resolution which he moved contains this preamble:

Andrew Landry, of Descouse, in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia, was on the 8th day of December, 1911, recommended to the hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, by J. A. Gillies, defeated Conservative candidate in the county of Richmond in the last general election, for the position of fishery officer in the place of Dugald R. Boyle, dismissed for alleged political partisanship.

That on the 18th day of December, 1911 the hon. J. D. Hazen was notified in writing that the said Andrew Landry was not a fit and proper person to appoint to any public office.

The preamble of the hon. gentleman's resolution is silent with regard to the fact that Landry was not appointed to this position, and that representation by Father Boucher was regarded by the department. But the hon. gentleman goes on to say that Andrew Landry was appointed wharfinger, after the date on which Father Boucher had communicated with the department with regard to his fitness for the position of inspector of fisheries. Let us analyse that statement for a few moments and see whether it is correct. Andrew Landry was recommended by Mr. Gillies for the position of 2wharfinger at Descouse on the 8th December. On the 14th day of December, four days before Father Boucher's letter was written, I sent my recommendation to council for the appointment of Andrew Landry to the position of wharfinger as recommended by Mr. Gillies in his letter of December 8th. On the 19th December, three days before Father Boucher's letter was received by and opened in the department the Order in Council passed appointing Landry wharfinger at Descouse. The hon. gentleman will therefore see that he is entirely incorrect in stating that Andrew Landry was appointed wharfinger at Descouse after the information conveyed to me by Father Boucher in his letter had reached me or the officials of the department. On the contrary, my recommendation was made one week, practically, before that letter was received from Father Boucher, and when not a single word had reached me reflecting on the conduct of Landry and the Order in Council was passed on the 20th of December, two days before Boucher's letter was received at and opened in the department. That being the case, I submit that my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) is entirely unjustified in making the assertion that on the 23rd day of December I appointed Andrew Landry wharfinger at the Government wharf at Descouse in place of Leon N. Poirier dismissed for offensive partisanship. The Order in Council having been passed in the ordinary course of events, one of the officials in the department, who looked after the matter, wrote a letter on the 23rd day of December notifying Andrew Landry of his appointment, which as I have said had been made by Order in Council on the 20th day of December. I have to say this to my hon. friend and I say it in all sincerity, that the probability is that, if the matter had occurred to me, or had been brought to my attention by an official of the department that this letter of Father Boucher referred to the man who had been appointed wharfinger by the Order in Council of the 20th December I would have held up the appointment until further inquiry had been made into the matter. Discussing the matter yesterday and to-day with the deputy minister of my department, to whom matters of this sort go, he assured me that he had no recollection of the matter at all and it never occurred to him for one instant that the man about whom Father Boucher had written was the same who had been appointed wharfinger by Order in Council on September 19.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the date of the letter written by the minister to the Rev. W. A. Boucher?

Mr. HAZEN: Father Boucher's letter came to the department, it was opened, it was brought to me, and I dictated the reply that went to Father Boucher, dated the 22nd of December. It may seem extraordinary to hon. gentlemen opposite, but nevertheless it is the fact, that when I was dictating that letter to Father Boucher on the 22nd of December it did not occur to me that this was the man whom I had recommended to council on the 14th day of December as wharfinger.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood, from the correspondence read by my hon. friend (Mr. Kyte), that on receipt of the letter from Father Boucher the minister had communicated with Mr. Gillies in regard to that letter.

Mr. HAZEN: After writing to Father Boucher acknowledging the receipt of his letter—this had reference to the appointment as fishery overseer—I did write to Mr.

Gillies telling him of the letter I had received from Father Boucher, and I referred him to the fact that perhaps he did not have the information contained in Father Boucher's letter at the time he recommended Mr. Andrew Landry to this position, Mr. Gillies wrote me back stating that Mr. Andrew Landry was a most respectable man; referring to the political dissensions which had occurred there, and stating there was nothing whatever in this charge against Andrew Landry which had reached the ears of Father Boucher. But what we were considering, was the appointment of overseer of fisheries, and the result was that in face of that letter from Father Boucher we did not appoint Landry and we asked for another nomination and appointed the other nominee instead. When my right hon. friend asked me the question I was referring to the position of wharfinger for which Landry was recommended on the 8th day of December. to which position I recommended his appointment on the 14th December and to which position he was appointed by Order in Council on the 19th of December, two days before the letter from Father Boucher arrived at the department. The position of wharfinger at Descouse is not very important as may be judged by the remuneration which the wharfinger receives and I can well understand the statement of my hon. friend that the remuneration is not sufficient to permit of a man living on it without other occupation. The remuneration which the wharfinger at Descouse received in 1909-10 was $9.05; in 1910-11 $18.29; in 1911-12 $22; and in 1912-13, $17.08; and the amount received by Landry during the time he occupied the position was $9.60. It may be that being a small matter very serious consideration was not given to it and it certainly did not occur to the department that the same man who had been appointed wharfinger was the man who had been recommended for the position of fishery overseer. On the 8th day of December Landry was recommended as wharfinger by Mr. Gillies and on the 19th he was appointed to the position by Order in Council. Up to this time no statement of any kind had been received at the department with respect to Captain Landry. It will be noted that the letter written by Father Boucher, charging improper conduct on the part of Captain Landry was written on the 18th of December, the day before that on which the order issued appointing Captain Landry wharfinger; it will be noted further that Father Boucher's letter had reference to the appointment of Captain Landry as fishery overseer in succession to Mr. Boyle at West Arichat and not in any way to his appointment as wharfinger.

The correspondence of the Fisheries Branch of the Department—as my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux), who was minister will know—is kept entirely separate from the correspondence of the Marine Branch and is attended to by an entirely different set of officers. As a matter of fact the officers of one branch have no knowledge whatever of the correspondence received in the other branch, nor did it occur to me or to any of the officers of the department when Father Boucher's letter was received, that the Captain Landry referred to in connection with the position of fishery overseer was the same Captain Landry who was recommended for the position of wharfinger. In connection with the position of wharfinger, the first information received at the department relative to improper conduct on the part of the wharfinger, was a letter from the agent of the department at Halifax written on the 19th June, 1912, and which letter advised the department that Captain Landry had been sentenced to a term in jail. At the date this letter was received at the department I was making preparations to leave for England and the matter never came under my observation at all. On the 26th of June, the Deputy Minister, I being then absent, having sailed for England—I do not wish to cast any responsibility on my Deputy Minister, I take full responsibility for everything that was done, but I mention that at the time I was in England and had no knowledge of it—on the 26th day of June my Deputy Minister, in the discharge of his duty, wrote the letter to which my hon. friend (Mr. Kyte), has referred as evidence of the fact that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was very desirous of regarding in the easiest possible way the susceptibilities of people with whom the department had to deal and who were accused of crime. The point of that statement of my hon. friend is rather impaired by the fact that I was not in Canada at the time that letter was written. I repeat that I do not wish to throw the slighest responsibility on my Deputy Minister.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Who is the Deputy Minister?

Mr. HAZEN: The Deputy Minister is the same gentleman who has filled the position for a number of years, and who for a number of years previous to that was a member of this House. On the 26th of June Mr. Gillies was advised in this letter from the Deputy Minister that it was proposed to dispense with the services of Captain Landry, and the Deputy asked that a suitable successor be recommended. On the 3rd of July Mr. Gillies wrote the department to say that the duties of the position were being attended to by Captain Langlois, whom he represented as a thoroughly respectable member of the community. Mr. Gillies was advised that the duties of wharfinger as discharged by Captain Langlois were satisfactory to the department until such time as it would be found convenient to further deal with the matter, and at the earliest possible opportunity the acting minister, the Hon. Mr. Perley, forwarded a recommendation to council dispensing with the services of Captain Landry as wharfinger. There was some delay in dealing with this owing to the fact that at that season of the year most of the ministers were out of town and for some time a Cabinet Council was not held, but on the 26th of August, three days before I landed in Quebec on my return from England, an Order in Council was passed dismissing Captain Landry from office and appointing Captain Langlois in his place. These are all the facts in connection with the matter and what do they amount to when summed up? They amount to the fact that having taken the recommendation of a gentleman who had been our candidate in Richmond and who previously had been a member of this House, without one word against the reputation of the man whom he recommended at that time in so far as the department knew, we appointed on the 19th of December Captain Landry to the position of wharfinger. Some days afterwards a letter was received protesting against the appointment of Captain Landry to the position of fishery overseer. It escaped the attention of the department that this was the same Captain Landry who had been appointed wharfinger a few days before. Even if that had come to the attention of the department, in view of the insignificance of the office to which he had been appointed and in view of the fact that Mr. Gillies disputed the correctness of the statement made by Father Boucher, it is very doubtful whether the department would have been justified in removing Captain Landry from that office until further evidence of his unfitness had been produced. The very moment it came to the attention of the department that Captain Landry had been sent to jail, my deputy minister acted in my absence, and at the earliest possible moment an Order in Council was passed removing Landry from that position and appointing a thoroughly creditable man in his place. As far as the position of wharfinger is concerned, that is all there is in regard to the matter.

In regard to the position of buoy contractor at Decouse, the history is this: In 1906, a gentleman named Captain Poirier had a contract which he had held for three years. At the expiration of his contract, upon the recommendation of Mr. Finlayson, M.P., without calling for tenders, the department renewed his contract. On the expiration of this contract in 1909, on the recommendation of my hon. friend from Richmond, Captain Poirier's contract was renewed for a further period of three years.

Mr. BORDEN: Without tender.

Mr. HAZEN: Without tender. On the 28th day of May, 1912, the department was advised as to the date when this contract expired; and Mr. Gillies recommended that a contract be entered into with Captain A. Landry, on the same terms as with the previous contractor, provided he gave proper and sufficient sureties for the carrying out of the work. On the 7th day of June—it is true that this is after the date when my hon friend says Landry had been found guilty, but the department had no information from any source of any trial or of Captain Landry having been found guilty of any crime—the department gave instructions that a contract be entered into with Captain Landry provided he gave proper and sufficient sureties for the carrying out of the work. A very few days later, on the 10th or 11th of June, a report reached the department with regard to Landry's trial; we at once wired to the agent of the department at Halifax to defer action, and on the following day we directed the agent to at once countermand the instructions which we had given. On the 15th day of June, a contract was entered into with Charles Fougere. I have given a fair, unvarnished statement of the facts with regard to the case.

To sum up, what do they amount to? In the first place, with regard to the position of fishery overseer, we refused to appoint Captain Landry to that position and we did not appoint him. In the second place, with regard to the position of wharfinger, in which he received the insignficant sum of nine dollars and sixty cents, he was appointed before we had any word of protest from Father Boucher or anybody else; and he was removed from that position, during my absence in England, on the recommendation of the gentleman who was acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as soon as the facts of the case and of the trial became known to him. So far as the position of buoy contractor is concerned, no contract was ever entered into with him. The moment we got information of what occurred at the trial, of which we knew nothing at the time when we gave these instructions, the instructions were countermanded and the contract was never entered into.

It has been spread broadcast throughout the country that the Department of Marine and Fisheries, knowing the character of this man, appointed him to three different positions in the gift of this country. No statement can be further from the truth. The only position to which he was appointed was the position of wharfinger, and he was removed from that position as soon as the department learned the facts with regard to the case. In view of that statement of fact, it seems to me that there are certain statements in this amendment of my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) that he ought to eliminate before he asks this House to vote upon it. He makes the statement:

That on the 18th day of December, 1911, the hon. J. D. Hazen was notified in writing that the said Andrew Landry was not a fit and proper person to appoint to any public office.

The impression which he would leave upon the public mind is that on the 18th day of December, I received a notification to the effect that Landry was not a fit and proper person to appoint to any public office. The fact is that the 18th day of December was the date when the letter was written by Father Boucher in the county of Richmond in the province of Nova Scotia. That letter was not received and opened in the department until the 22nd of December. If my hon. friend wishes to do what is fair, he ought to amend that statement by saying that I was notified on the 22nd of December, or else he ought to say that on the 18th of December a letter was written from the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia, giving that information. To allow that statement to go out to the public, in the way in which it stands at present, would make it appear as though I had this information on the 18th of December and that on the 19th of December I was party to passing an Order in Council appointing Landry to a public office at Descouse.

In the concluding part of the amendment of my hon. friend, he refers to the appointment of Captain Landry to public office while under the commitment and sentence for the commission of a serious crime. Captain Andrew Landry was not appointed to public office while under commitment or sentence for the commission of a serious crime or any other crime. He was appointed an officer long before he was tried or committed for this crime. The only public office to which he was appointed was the position of wharfinger. In view of that, I think my hon. friend, in order to be just and fair to myself and to the members of this House, ought to omit that statement from his amendment.

There is another inference and a veiled insinuation in the speech made by my hon. friend. An insinuation has been made in the press of this country that, acting in collusion with the Department of Justice, the Department of Marine and Fisheries endeavoured to obtain the discharge from jail of Captain Landry before the expiration of his sentence. Not one title of evidence can be produced to support any such statement. I desire to make the statement here on my responsibility as a minister of the Crown that neither the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, nor any officer in that department was aware that any application was being made to the Minister of Justice for the release of Andrew Landry on ticket-of-leave. They knew nothing about it; they had no part or lot in it; they did nothing to bring about or accomplish that result. As to whether Andrew Landry was discharged from jail before the sentence expired, that is a matter which the Minister of Justice will explain to this House. I understand that the Department of Justice acted in this case just as they have acted in other cases. My hon. friend from Richmond says they were imposed upon, that Andrew Landry was not in the state of health represented. If the Department of Justice was imposed upon—and I have no knowledge in regard to that—it is not the first time that the department has been imposed upon, or has been alleged to have been imposed upon, in a matter of this kind. I look back a few years to the time when I was Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, and prosecuted in the city of St. John for defamatory libel against many of the best citizens of the province, the publisher of a scurrilous paper in the city of Moncton. The man was found guilty of defamatory libel, and Mr. Justice White sentenced him to the common jail for seven months. If my memory is right, after serving less than two months, the man was discharged by direction of the Department of Justice in Ottawa, though the universal feeling of those responsible for the administration of the law and of the community generally, was that the sentence had been an extremely lenient one considering the gravity of the offence. It was represented on behalf of the Department of Justice that medical certificates had been filed that the condition of this man's health was such that if required to serve his full sentence, his life would be in peril. But the jail doors had hardly closed behind him before he was back in Moncton and publishing another paper called the Vindicator, and of the same nature as the first, for publishing which a jury of his countrymen had found him guilty so that he had been sentenced to jail by a judge of the Supreme Court. That was when Sir Allen Aylesworth was Minister of Justice in the Government led by my right hon. friend who now leads the Opposition in this House. And if I was seeking for another instance I could find it in the case of a man named Sperdakes convicted in St. John of tapping the wires belonging to the street railway company and stealing electric current from them. He was sentenced to jail and was released just on the eve of the elections. What the reasons for his release were was never stated by the department, but he was released after only a very short part of his sentence had been served, and the general impression was that that release was not altogether apart from political considerations. However, I do not feel called upon to enter upon a defence of the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Finance, who was acting at the time in the absence of the Minister of Justice, will no doubt explain fully and to the satisfaction of the House what reasons induced them to allow Mr. Andrew Landry to leave the prison before the full term of his sentence had run out. I feel that the consideration of the facts of this case will convince any hon. gentleman who does not view it from a party standpoint that there is no reason why the House should pass the vote of censure which it is asked to pass.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I confess that it was with a considerable degree of surprise that I found the hon. member for Richmond coupling in the motion which he placed before the House the action of the Government as he describes it in ordering the release of this man Landry with the action of the Government and of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and asking this House to declare that the Government is deserving of severe censure in connection with both of these actions. My colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has dealt with the accusation which the hon. member for Richmond has thought proper to bring against that department; and, so far as I am concerned, I am satisfied with his defence. I rose to make answer to the motion and to the speech of the hon. member for Richmond so far as he impugns the action of the Department of Justice in connection with the release of this man Landry.

First—I would like to call attention to the terms of the motion itself, the allegations of fact from which the hon. member deduces the conclusion that the Government is deserving of censure by reason of the release of Mr. Landry. So far as that release is concerned, there are in this motion precisely two allegations bearing upon it,—one, that this man was a convict, and the other that this man was released. All the other allegations go to show that this man was an employee of the Government of Canada and that he was improperly appointed to his position. I ask this House whether it is a reason why the Government should be censured that this man, having been convicted of crime, was released upon a ticket-of-leave under the law providing for the issue of tickets-of-leave. Are we to understand that the proposition of the hon. member for Richmond is that the granting of the ticket-of-leave to a convict is unjustifiable and deserving of censure if and because the man happened to be an employee of this Government; and, if you will, because he should not have been an employee of this Government? Unless that be so from beginning to end of this motion, there is no allegation of fact reflecting on the Government as regards the clemency shown to this man. There are the allegations that he was convicted of forgery; that he was guilty of that offence, and that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was informed and yet that this man was given an appointment under this Government. Then, there is the allegation of conviction and sentence, the allegation of release; and, therefore, the hon. member for Richmond says that the Government is to be condemned for releasing him. So far as the allegation that he was guilty and conviction is concerned, that is the very basis of a ticket-of-leave; that is the very beginning of the whole operation. You cannot release a man who has not been convicted, and surely it cannot be argued that, because the man in this case was convicted, the Government is to be censured for granting him a ticket of leave. The law provides for the granting of tickets-of-leave to persons who have been convicted, and, indeed, it is impossible to conceive of their being granted to anyone else. There is no statement of fact in this motion impugning the motive or the action of that department of the Government which is responsible for the advice given to His Royal Highness the Governor General to grant this man a ticket-of-leave. If one considers the motion only, and looks upon it as a lawyer would, it is absolutely demurrable so far as that branch of the case is concerned. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Richmond found no statement of fact that he could put down in his motion in black and white as justifying censure upon this Government by reason of the action of the Department of Justice. He could put down in black and white no statement of fact as justifying the conclusion of his motion in that regard because there was no fact justifying censure in that connection which could be truthfully stated. After having listened to the speech in which he has supported this motion, I think I am quite within my rights in saying that this House has heard the statement of no adequate reason to justify it in pronouncing censure upon this Government because a ticket-of-leave was granted. At the very most, what we have heard is that the judgment of the hon. member for Richmond as to the information upon which that ticket of leave was ordered to issue does not coincide with the judgment of the Department of Justice and of the Minister of Justice as to whether or not that man should have been released. But what I feel justified in saying is that there is an absolute unfairness—I do not charge that the hon. gentleman is intentionally unfair, but I think if he reads his motion carefully, and calmly reflects upon it, he will see there is an absolute unfairness in coupling with this motion, so far as it censures the Government by reason of the action of the Department of Justice, all these statements of fact with regard to this man's appointment to office, when it is not even suggested that the Department of Justice had the remotest knowledge of the existence of those facts, even if the knowledge of those facts should have affected its judgment in the matter. Let us look at what did happen, irrespective of what this motion states; irrespective of what the hon. member has said in his speech, and with respect only to what happened so far as the Department of Justice is concerned. At the outset, I defy anyone to say that there is one tittle of evidence that any of the alleged facts in connection with this man's appointment ever were within the knowledge of the Department of Justice, and I undertake to say absolutely that they never were. Certainly, for myself, I knew nothing of them; certainly, from my communication with the officers of the department, they knew nothing of them, and certainly the hon. gentleman does not mean to impugn the veracity, the truthfulness, the honour and the impartiality of the officials in that department, who, through so many years, have served this country under the one party and under the other, and who have enjoyed the confidence of successive Ministers of Justice belonging to one party or the other? I venture to say that to no one in the department who ever had to deal with this question were any of the alleged facts in connection with this man's relations with the Department of Marine and Fisheries known. Inasmuch as in this motion the facts in connection with the release of this man and with his appointment are placed together as the actions of the Government—which no doubt, they are, in the sense that they are actions for which the Government is responsible—but, inasmuch as they are coupled in that way, I desire to point out that the action of the Department of Justice in dealing with matters of this kind is in no sense the action of the Government in so far as that implies that the Government as a whole takes any part in that action. The release of this man was granted under the Ticket of Leave Act, and that Act confers no power upon the Governor in Council, and, therefore, gives no power to the Government to release this man. The power conferred under that Act is upon the Governor General, and it specifically provides that, with regard to its application, the advisor of the Governor General shall be the Minister of Justice, and nobody else. I desire to point out—not because I think it is necessary that the hon. member who makes this motion should be enlightened as to the distinction which ought to be made, but because he has seen proper to couple both these things as being the action of the Government, and because his motion will go out to the public, who may not understand the distinction, as indicating that it was precisely the same body of men who dealt with the two matters and suggesting that there was some presumption that the man who dealt with the one knew of the other—that this action of the Department of Justice is exclusively the action of that department and of its minister, and for it, he, and he alone, is responsible. I do not mean to question the fact that this Government, endorsing what he did, stands responsible for him. I have no intention of intimating that any of my colleagues are afraid to take the responsibility for it any more than I am myself, although, as it happens, it was not my personal action. I do not refer to that as in the least diminishing my responsibility; I mention it only because it is, perhaps a fact which entitles me to expect that in dealing with this question I will be looked upon not as endeavouring to make a defence of my own personal action, but as dealing with it as one might deal with a question in regard to which he is called upon rather to review the individual action of another than to justify what he himself has done. But, so far as the absolute responsibility for it is concerned, I am as ready and as willing to take it as if it had been my own personal action. I am sure all hon. members sitting in this House want to be fair in this matter, and I ask them to look at this case as it presented itself to the Department of Justice. Have we heard even one word of an assertion that the case as it presented itself to the Department of Justice demonstrated these alleged facts with regard to this man's employment in the Department of Marine and Fisheries—not merely showed that there was anything wrong about it, but that the appointment itself had ever been made? We have not heard a word or a statement to that effect. I stand here to say that there came no communication to the Department of Justice, from the gentleman who is evidently the bête noir of the hon. member for Richmond, in regard to this entire matter. That there is no communication from Mr. Joseph Gillies, that there is no communication from any politician of any stripe or description, that there is absolutely nothing that came before this department that would imply in any way that Mr. Landry had any connection of any kind with any department of this Government.

I was sorry to hear the hon. member for Richmond make a point of the fact that to his knowledge there was in that record a statement that Mr. Landry was a strong Conservative and that the gentleman who was his adversary in these proceedings was a sturdy Liberal.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the minister state that there is not a document in his department making that very observation about this gentleman?

Mr. DOHERTY: What observation?

Mr. CARVELL: That Mr. Landry was a Conservative and the other a Liberal?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have not stated that and I am not going to—

Mr. CARVELL: I would like the minister to tell whether there is.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am going to tell you, I am not afraid to tell the truth. I said that I was sorry to hear the member for Richmond make a point of that and I am sorry to see that the hon. member who has just taken his seat has the same conception of this matter that he thinks there is a point to be made out of it.

Mr. CARVELL: I would like the answer to the question.

Mr. DOHERTY: You shall have the answer. There is a statement in a letter to the effect that the prosecution of Landry was the result of a political squabble between him and the man to whose place he was appointed. The gentleman who makes that statement describes that quarrel as having taken place, Landry being a strong Conservative and the other man a sturdy Liberal.

Mr. CARVELL: Who was the gentleman?

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall not tell you who the gentleman was, but I shall appeal to the hon. member for Richmond who knows who he was and ask that hon. member if he thinks that that gentleman offered me the insult of making that statement because he thought it would make any difference in the result?

Mr. KYTE: I am not thinking anything about it, I am stating the facts, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have little doubt that the hon. member for Richmond had not thought very much about it when he took the responsibility upon such flimsy grounds of impugning the honour of the Department of Justice of this country. It is a pretty serious thing to do and it behooves men who propose to do it to do some thinking before entering upon such a course. The great misfortune of all this matter is, and I say it in no feeling of unkindliness towards the hon. member for Richmond for whom I have great respect, that he has not done sufficient thinking about the gravity of the accusation that he is throwing out. As I say in the first place no politician said one word to the department on this subject nor was there any reference to anything political beyond the statement that I have read, coming from a gentleman whom the hon member knows would be quite incapable of trying to make an appeal to political feeling on behalf of this man. Apart from that statement there was nothing to show what the political stripe of either gentlemen might be, absolutely nothing to show any connection of this man with any public office whatsoever. But there was what comes very often to the department and what the hon. member for Richmond says is entitled to very little consideration, that is the strong representations, I would say the eloquent pleadings of men of standing and position in the county, of clergymen of one church and of another church, pleading for clemency towards this man. They were not saying that this man was innocent, they had come to a tribunal that did not deal with the meting out of justice to the criminal, but with the question whether, under given circumstances, there was ground for extending clemency to the admitted criminal and they came and put before the Minister of Justice considerations which the hon. member for Richmond says should have been absolutely brushed aside. They did put before that minister the statement that this man was the father of five children, the youngest nine months old and the eldest eleven years old, that he had a wife who suffered with a spinal disease and was in bed most of the time.

Mr. KYTE: Was that verified by any inquiry of the department?

Mr. DOHERTY: It was verified by the statement of the gentleman to whom I have referred, but I was not present and as a matter of fact that was not verified by any further inquiry. The hon. gentleman says that these are things that should not be consdered; he did not say that representations of that kind might not rule but he said that they should not be considered. All I am concerned about is to state the nature of the representations.

Mr. KYTE: I did not say that these considerations ought not to be taken into account; I said that the department should have had some inquiry instituted to verify them. They were false in one notorious particular at all events.

Mr. DOHERTY: Were they false in any other particular?

Mr. KYTE: I say in one particular at least they were false, that is as to the necessity of his undergoing a surgical operation.

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall come to that in a moment; all I am interested in now is to point out what the department had before it on which to exercise its judgment and I venture to say that this department and the Government are not to be censured merely because their judgment of that material may not have been the judgment of the hon. member for Richmond. The man who has to determine whether or not clemency shall be exercised is exercising what, after all, is a judicial office and he has to deal with the information that is before him and must bring to bear upon it the best judgment that Heaven has bestowed upon him. He has to weigh the representations made to him and then to decide, and he does not always have a month to decide. He is entitled to the assumption of action in good faith and honesty until someone is willing to make some statement of fact that would show the contrary. What I am interested in pointing out is the utter and absolute unfairness of coupling with a request for condemnation of the Department of Justice all this alleged material about this man's appointment, none of which was before the department, and the additional unfairness of taking the sayings of people in the street in the county that this man would not be in long and asking the House to censure the Government because men said that and also invoking against this Department of Justice the statement of Mr. Gillies in his letter of July that the man would be home in a few days and then going on to make a perfectly gratuitous assumption that Mr. Gillies had been to Ottawa and had had authority for making that statement. Let me say that no man in this case or in any other case, has ever had from the Department of Justice, since I have been responsible for it, information as to what would be done until the case had been most maturely and carefully considered and disposed of. I thoroughly and firmly believe that this is the tradition of the Department of Justice, and have enough respect for the men who preceded me in my office to believe that that was true of them and the officers under them, as it is true of myself and of the officers under me. If the hon. member has any information upon which he bases what I must otherwise call his reckless statement that Mr. Gillies had been to Ottawa and had got information, I would ask him to give me that information, and I can tell him that if he can bring home such a statement to anyone connected with the department, the connection of that official with the department will be very short-lived. What else was there before the Department of Justice, because the department can only judge of what was before it. Apart from those representations made by men, who even in the opinion of the hon. member for Richmond are men whose representations are entitled to respectful consideration, apart from the petition of the convict himself, and apart from the representations of his counsel, there was before the department, among other things, the report of the judge who presided over the trial. There was the perfectly averred and established fact, for what it is worth from the point of view of clemency, that no man had lost a dollar by the crime. I do not say that as altering the guilt of this man. The department does not determine innocence or guilt, the court does that; the department considers whether there are reasons for clemency being exercised. In addition to that there was the absolute and positive statement of a physician in the village or town, a physician whom I have not heard the hon. member describe as otherwise than a reputable physician, that this man was suffering from a most serious disease, and that unless it was made possible for him to be operated upon, he would be exposed to the most serious consequences. The hon. gentleman says that further inquiries should have been made. He says that the doctor was Landry's nephew. He does not say that the Department of Justice knew that. He says there was no inquiry. He does not tell us that before action was taken on that first certificate, that doctor was communicated with again and asked whether arrangements could and would be made for this man to go to the hospital at once, if necessary. In answer to that communication, the department was assured that arrangements could be so made, and it was conceded that it was among the possibilities that proper treatment, under proper circumstances, might render that operation unnecessary. The hon. member does not tell us that. He goes on to tell us about what he says happened after the man came out. In the first place, I would like to point out that what may have happened after the man came out can be no ground, it seems to me, for condemning the department that ordered him to be released. At the very most, it might show that the department had been deceived. The department is responsible for what it did on the evidence it had, and it must carry that responsibility. But that responsibility is neither greater nor smaller by reason of what followed after the man was discharged. The hon. member contents himself with telling us what happened afterwards, and he says in his motion that this man resumed the performance of his duties as wharfinger. He tells us that for the purpose no doubt of creating the impression that man was in perfect health. What is the evidence of the perfect health of this man that the hon. member produces to show that he was performing his duties as wharfinger? He says that the man was actually able to sign his name to a sheet of paper, because the one act he is said to have performed, was the signing of a bill for thirty dollars, with an offer to take ten dollars if he got it quickly. I do not think that the document proves anything, unless it be that Mr. Andrew Landry knew how quickly my hon. friend the Minister of Marine was coming after him, and that he had to be in a great hurry to get his collection made. But to invoke that as justifying the assertion and as conveying the idea that he was in perfect health to perform his duties as wharfinger is absolutely absurd. If I were to call witnesses to answer the statement in this motion that Landry resumed the performance of his duties as wharfinger, I might call the hon. gentleman himself to give his testimony. He told us, the last time he spoke on this subject, what the man did after he came out, and what did he do, according to the hon. member for Richmond? In a speech of December 10, 1912, as reported on page 954 of 'Hansard,' the hon. member said:

With respect to the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister, and repeated by the hon. Minister of Justice, to the effect that Mr. Landry had to undergo a serious surgical operation, I am bound to say that suggestion makes it all the more desirable and necessary that we should see the papers upon which the hon. Minister of Justice acted. Mr. Landry is a man not unknown to me. He lives in the county of Richmond, and I frequently visit the district in which he resides. I know that Landry has not been afflicted with any serious illness during the last twelve months, and I know that as soon as he was released from jail he proceeded to the city of Sydney and obtained employment there in the steel works.

Are we to be condemned because he went to resume his duties as wharfinger—

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to remind the hon. minister that it is scarcely permissible to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg pardon Mr. Speaker; I withdraw the reference to the previous debate. I simply invoked the testimony of the hon. member for Richmond to confront it with the statement in his motion. What are the facts in connection with what did happen after this man went out? I have here a letter which I will read, because it forms no part of the record upon which action was taken in this matter, and therefore no part of anything which, as I pointed out before, I deemed it my duty, as the previous Ministers of Justice deemed it their duty, to treat as confidential. When the hon. member for Richmond made those very positive statements, I thought it was proper and the officers of the department thought it was proper, that the doctor who had certified that if we kept this man in jail we would add later on another invalid to a family already in destitution, and one with an invalid mother and young children, should be applied to, and the statements of the hon. member for Richmond should be pointed out to him. He wrote:

Arichat, N.S., January 20, 1913.

To Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of December 27, 1912, I beg to state that as represented by me Andrew Landry while a prisoner here he suffered from a severe attack of stone in the kidney brought on from the insanitary conditions and diet of jail life. Landry previous to his incarceration had on more than one occasion attacks of this kind. On this occasion, Landry could only be relieved from the very severe pain of the attack by the administration of heroic doses of morphine and I may say that in my opinion his condition was so precarious that had he not been incarcerated I should have sent him to the Victoria General Hospital for treatment. Thanks to nature and morphine, Landry passed in his urine the stones, the cause of his intolerable suffering, which speaks as to whether he was sick or not. Landry did not go to work immediately after his release but was under my care for about two months and was in such a condititon that necessitated help from his friends for himself and family. Finally, he had to remove to Sydney to seek a miserable living for his large family and only lately has again consulted me for the same sickness, stone in the kidney, which he finds is making his life intolerable. The hon. Minister of Justice certainly when he granted Landry's release gave liberty to a man who had only escaped death from one of the most painful diseases known to medicine.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) B. A. LeBlanc, M.D.

So much for that. I put it to the House in all fairness if it is just to couple the Department of Justice with these statements about this man's appointment, as to which the Department of Justice did not and could not have knowledge; and, having done so, to seek to draw the inference that there is some connection between the two things. And further, to try and put condemnation upon the Department of Justice, based on the assumption that somebody came to Ottawa who said he could get this man out in two or three days; and again, to seek to base the assumption of some wrong-doing on the mere incidental statement — purely incidental to the other statement of fact as to the quarrel between them,—that one was a Conservative and the other a Liberal, and then adding the further fact, utterly unknown to the department, that the doctor who certified happened to be a nephew of this man, without venturing to say that he is not a reputable doctor; invoking that fact quite unknown to the department and coupling with it the statement that there was a municipal health officer in Arichat who we are told was the jail physician, and drawing certain inferences because we did not go to him. These jails are not under the control of this Government, and it is a lamentable confession of ignorance to make, but it must be made, that we do not know the municipal health officer in every municipality throughout this Dominion, and we do not know and did not then know who is the jail physician at Arichat. That is all there is in virtue whereof this House is asked to send out its vote of censure upon the Department of Justice, and to tell the people of this country that in its Department of Justice, when it is a question of exercising the power of clemency, this country has fallen so low——

Mr. CARVELL: The Department of Justice, not the country.

Mr. DOHERTY:——that this country has fallen so low that the majority of its people have elected a majority of members to this House who would entrust the administration of justice to a man capable of using it for political purposes. I say to men sitting on the other side of the House, as I say to men sitting on this side of the House, with absolute confidence: You do not believe that. I say it with the more readiness as I am not speaking at the moment about my own personal action, I say: You do not believe it. You do not believe that either party in this country has fallen so low that it cannot find a Minister of Justice who can be trusted to put aside political considerations when he is dealing with the advice which upon his conscience he is called upon to give to his Sovereign as to the exercise of the sublime prerogative of clemency. You don't believe it, and I shall be disappointed if by your vote you say you do believe it. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I have very much more to say. In my experience I do not know that I have ever witnessed a case in which upon such a flimsy pretext a responsible man, or responsible men, have taken upon themselves to throw in the face of any respectable citizen an accusation so grave as is involved in the imputation which in this motion is put upon the Department of Justice of Canada. I have had occasion personally, Sir, to go through in the records of that department, large numbers of cases in which clemency has been asked and I stand here to bear testimony to the fact that these records are living evidence of the fact that the men who preceded me, without distinction of party, so far as I have gone back, have endeavoured to do their duty with perfect impartialty and have spared no pains to arrive at a just conclusion. And yet, may I tell the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) that these records are full of petitions and full of letters in which a despairing father or a heart-broken mother has put up the appeal to the preceding ministers of justice: my son who is a good Liberal, or my husband voted for you in the last election, or my boys, if you let them out before the 21st of September, will vote good Liberals. Those things are all on file there, and could I conceive myself being so small as for one moment to suppose that they produced any effect upon the decisions of the Minister of Justice for the time being?

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does the Minister of Justice think of the reflection cast a moment ago by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on Sir Allen Aylesworth in connection with the St. John case?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not understand that the Minister of Marine mentioned that case as casting a reflection upon Sir Allen Aylesworth. What I did understand was that the Minister of Marine mentioned it as the sort of case that people, small enough to impute that kind of motive to our public men, might have invoked as indicating such a motive.

Mr. HAZEN: What I said was, that if the Department of Justice had been imposed upon in this case it was not the first time the Department of Justice had been imposed upon and I instanced the case of MacDougall, when Sir Allen Aylesworth was Minister of Justice.

Mr. CARVELL: You said Sir Allen Aylesworth was imposed upon.

Mr. HAZEN: I said that if the Department of Justice was imposed on it was not the first time, and certainly the department was imposed on in that case, because MacDougall was let out on the ground of illness and he went to work in the most active way possible.

Mr. EMMERSON: And died shortly afterwards.

Mr. CARVELL: Was he not dead in six months after being released?

Mr. HAZEN: He was dead as the result of an accident.

Mr. EMMERSON: He continued very ill in the interval.

Mr. DOHERTY: For my part, I have said what I have said just to point out what my appreciation is of the broadness of mind of people who draw the conclusion that, because an odd letter in a record said that a man was a Conservative and that another was a Liberal, that had anything to do with the decision of the case. I am glad to be able to think better of my fellow members than to believe that any one of them, occupying the position which they occupy, would stoop so low as to be influenced by a statement of that kind. I am sorry that the conception of the hon. member for Richmond, and I judge also of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., is as regards the present Minister and the acting Minister in this matter of that character. I venture to hope that, however strong the party feelings of hon. members will be, they will hesitate before, upon what is before them, they undertake to say, as they virtually will say, if they vote for this motion, that the Department of Justice in this matter acted with any political consideration whatever, and not upon what appeared on that record on its face as making for the exercise of clemency. I leave the case in the hands of this House, and I leave it with perfect confidence that the good judgment and the sense of fairness of the members of this House will do justice to this motion in so far as it concerns the administration of the Department of Justice.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal very briefly with the statements made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, although in my judgment the appointment of this man to these different positions is in itself not one-half as serious as the letting him out of jail when he was properly incarcerated. I can quite understand that, in the orgies of political decapitations that were going on in the months of November, December and January after the Conservative party came into power, it is quite possible that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries —and I think he was the greatest sinner of them all—could not keep in his mind the name of every man that had been recommended for decapitation or for appointment to office. He ought to have had the names, and there is no use of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Minister of Justice, or the Minister of Finance coming here and saying: Oh, well, I was not here and I do not remember, thus putting it on somebody else. They are the responsible ministers of the Government. It is their duty to know these things. If they do not know them, they are not doing their duty to the country. If their officers are not giving them the proper information, it is their duty to get the men who will give them information. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries made the best of a bad case in defending a shady transaction, for this is unquestionably a shady transaction.

On the same day, the 8th day of December, 1911, two letters were written by the defeated candidate for the county of Richmond, one recommending this Captain Andrew Landry for the position of fishery officer. This man is always referred to by Mr. Gillies as Captain Andrew Landry. It seems to be a distinctive name and one which would attract the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in all the orgies that were going on at that time. The other letter recommended him for the position of wharfinger. Later on my hon. friend received a letter from Father Boucher informing him that this Captain Andrew Landry was not a fit and proper person to appoint to any public office. My hon. friend was so taken with this letter that he wrote to Mr. Gillies stating that the charge made against this man was sufficient to debar him from appointment as fishery officer, but it entirely escaped his attention so far as the position of wharfinger was concerned. He tries to get out of it by saying that Captain Landry received only $9.60 as remuneration. That is not the point. The point is that he was appointed to the position. My hon. friend endeavours to justify himself by saying that he did not get the letter from the reverend gentleman until the 22nd day of December, whereas the Order in Council appointing this man was issued on the 19th day of December. That is true, but he did not tell this House that the agent at Halifax, that Mr. J. A. Gillies, the gentleman who recommended him, and that Leon N. Poirier, the previous officer, the man who was displaced, all received their notification of the change on the 23rd day of December, the day after the hon. gentleman received the letter from Father Boucher and the day after he acknowledged it. My hon. friend did not tell the House all these facts.

Mr. HAZEN: I certainly did.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not catch it, and I thought I took down a chronological statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries remarks. Of course I am bound to take his word that he did mention it. It only shows that the immutable law of nature holds good that you cannot commit a sin but you will receive punishment for it in some way or other. If this Government will go into a condition of affairs with their eyes wide open as they did in the first five or six months of their administration it need not be surprised if it gets into trouble of this kind.

My hon. friend made another statement which I thought was rather a case of special pleading namely, that this man was never appointed to the position of buoy contractor. They claim that this man was never appointed to the position of taking care of the buoys. They say he was buoy contractor. Well, that is not true; there never was a contract signed with him. But that is not because the Marine and Fisheries Department did not want him to sign it, but because the man was in jail and could not sign it. As a matter of fact, after the man was put in jail, and three months after he was sent up for trial, he was appointed by Order in Council to this position.

Mr. HAZEN: What position?

Mr. CARVELL: The position of buoy contractor.

Mr. HAZEN: Not by Order in Council. He was not appointed to the position, but a contract was entered into.

Mr. CARVELL: If that is not special pleading, I do not know what it is. I did not think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would come down to that; I gave him credit for being a bigger man. The minister says the man was not appointed to the position but was given a contract, and then because the man was in jail and could not sign the contract he says the Government is not responsible. That is a distinction without a difference. This man was sent up for trial on the 1st of February, 1912. On the 28th of May, Mr. Gillies recommended him for the position of buoy contractor. My hon. friend need not tell me that Mr. Gillies did not know the man had been sent up for trial. I know that Mr. Gillies was hanging around Ottawa looking for a senatorship at that time, but I have no doubt he was kept well informed of what was going on in his county. But, though he knew the man had been sent up for trial, he did not hesitate to recommend him for this position. On the 7th of June, this letter was sent to Mr. Gillies by the deputy minister:

Dear Sir,—I have by direction to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 28th ultimo, addressed to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, relating to the buoy service at Lennox Passage, and in reply I have to inform you that instructions have been issued to place this service in charge of Captain Andrew Landry, of Descouse, C.B., when the present agreement terminates at the same price as we are at present paying, namely, $250 per annum.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. Johnston.

J. A. Gillies, Esq., K.C.,
Sydney, C.B.

On the same day, the agent was instructed to enter into this contract with Landry—and the man was actually in jail at that time. I do not know that the department was aware of that fact, but I can tell the minister that the man from whom they were taking their instructions, knew it,—and from whom they are still taking instructions.

Mr. KYTE: And making dismissals on his recommendations.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes. And the minister must be in pretty close quarters when he is trying to justify his taking recommendations from a man when he knew that the person recommended by that man for a position had been sent to jail. Whatever comfort the minister can take out of the fact that he was on the ocean at the time he is welcome to. If I were going to tender advice to my hon. friend the minister—and I would do it as a friend—that advice should be to dispense with the recommendations of Mr. Gillies in relation to patronage. The sooner he gets rid of men of that kind, the sooner he will get out of trouble. But if the minister wants to continue transactions of this kind, I suppose men of the Gilies stamp are the kind he wants to deal with. Now, I come to the statement that as soon as they could find time or could get together in council meeting they removed this man from the position. The man was put in jail on the 4th of June, and the department was officially notified of the fact on the 19th. The hon. minister was anxious that we should remember dates; I want him to remember them. His department was officially notified by letter dated Halifax, 19th of June, which must have come here on the 21st of June, that this man was in jail and could not perform the duties of his office. Yet he was allowed to retain the office until the 26th of August, or for two months from the time of the notification. If hon. gentlemen opposite had been as anxious to do what was right in this matter as they are now to rid themselves of the stigma of what they have done, I do not think they would have waited two months to get the man out of office. But this case only goes to show that in the Department of Marine and Fisheries the policy which they adopt is that the end justifies the means. When the thing was getting so hot they could not decently keep the man any longer, they screwed their courage up to the sticking place and passed an Order in Council removing him from office. I leave the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to settle this with himself and the country as best he may. I want to come now to what I consider the gravamen of the charge. The other is bad enough, but I think every person who looks at this thing fairly will agree that when we come to the action of the Department of Justice we have something that really challenges the attention of the people of this country, a condition of affairs which I am very sorry to see. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries adduced his characteristic argument by saying that if they are guilty we are guilty. He said: You let Bruce Macdougall out of jail after he had served two months out of a six months' sentence—I think it was six months.

Mr. HAZEN: Seven months.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, it does not make much difference. But suppose that Bruce Macdougall were let out of jail by gross corruption, is that any reason for letting Andrew Landry out of jail by gross corruption? We have listened to this argument so often that I am amazed that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries brings it forward again.

Mr. RHODES: He did not.

Mr. CARVELL: Who says he did not?

Mr. RHODES: I do.

Mr. CARVELL: I say you do not know what you are talking about. I say it is a gross piece of impertinence for any one to say——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Other hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. CARVELL: I will not take it back; he has no right——

Mr. SPEAKER: The word 'impertinent' as applied to another member is laid down as strictly improper. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. CARVELL: I withdraw the word under your ruling, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RHODES: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CARVELL: There is no point of order. I am addressing the Chair. I have withdrawn the statement.

Mr. RHODES: What statement?

Mr. CARVELL: I have withdrawn the statement which the Chair asked me to withdraw.

Mr. RHODES: My point of order is—

Mr. CARVELL: I object; I want to know what my rights are

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Cumberland has risen to a point of order, and has a right to state his point of order.

Mr. RHODES: My point of order is that the hon. member for Carleton made an assertion of fact with respect to a statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He said that the hon. minister had justified the Government's action by a similar action in the case of Macdougall. That is not an accurate statement of the case. The minister made no such assertion.

Mr. CARVELL: That is not a point of order.

Mr. RHODES: It is; because the hon. member has stated as a fact that which is not a fact. That is why I took exception to it.

Mr. CARVELL: I wish to discuss that point of order—

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CARVELL: Now, perhaps my hon. friend from Cumberland will be a little more courteous in debate in the future and not interrupt a member in the manner he did a few minutes ago. If I trespassed upon the strict rules of debate, I think that the justification was so great that it is remarkable that I did not say anything more severe to him than I did. The hon. member ought to be highly gratified that he was let off so easily, and I hope that he will not repeat the offence. I repeat, that, as I understood the minister he did justify the letting of this man out of jail by the fact that Bruce Macdougall was let out of jail. And he quoted the case of another man in St. John who had been guilty of robbing the electric company of power. But that is no justification for the conduct of the Government with regard to this man Landry, and it is this man of whom I am talking at the present time. I might give my hon. friend many illustrations of the manner in which men are released from jail; he knows that his Tory friends in my constituency do not apply to the judicial machinery when they want to get a man out of jail for the purpose of voting. They take him out, have him vote, and put him back again. My hon. friend will readily understand that I am now referring to the case of Angel Armstrong—he knows all about it; but that does not justify the Federal Tory Government in taking a man out of jail because that course more particularly suits their political convenience. We all listened to—I was going to say the pious hypocrisy, but I think it would be unparliamentary—to the pious pleadings of the hon. Minister of Justice this evening as to why we should exonerate him and his department from any imputation of wrongdoing in connection with this transaction. It would seem to be working on the nerves of the hon. Minister of Justice that every time he is compelled to speak in this House he does so under the impression that an imputation has been made as against his honour, and that we should be above imputing dishonourable motives to him and his department. Perhaps we would be, if the facts were not such as to compel us to draw certain conclusions; but if our statements lead the hon. gentleman to believe that we are imputing dishonest motives, I am sorry that the facts make this course necessary. Even if it has not been stated that any particular action of the Minister of Justice is a dishonest one, the matter seems to appeal to him so strongly that every time he gets on his feet he thinks it is an outrage that hon. gentlemen should impute to him any dishonest motives. We are merely stating facts; let him draw his own inferences. The Minister of Justice treated us this evening to a speech which was representative of the utterances of that hon. gentleman. He is surprised that any hon. gentleman on this side of the House should stoop so low as to intimate that any members of his department would be guilty of letting a man out of jail through political motives, or that they would allow political reasons or considerations of any kind to sway their actions. And this from the hon. gentleman who has been guilty of cutting off the heads of hundreds of the employees of the Justice Department during the past year! There is no penitentiary in Canada that has not felt the sweep of his powerful political axe. In the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, men have been swept from office who have dependent upon them families of eight or ten children; and yet the hon. gentleman comes here and pleads with members on this side of the House because of the fact that Landry had an invalid wife and a family of five little children! I think the hon. minister should defend his department in a straightforward manner, not appealing to the sympathies of hon. gentlemen, but rather dealing with the subject as a matter of logic and from a business standpoint. Men have been hanged in the British dominions during the last two or three hundred years, and are being hanged at the present time on circumstantial evidence, and convictions have been made on a chain of circumstantial evidence not half as strong as that which has been established against the Justice Department to the effect that this man was released for political reasons. I cannot prove it, because the hon. minister will not bring down the documents. The Minister of Justice has done to-night—I have no hesitation in condemning his action in strong language, as strong as I am permitted to use—what no Minister of Justice ever did before in this House; he has refused to bring down the documents in connection with a particular matter, and he has been unfair enough to give to the House the substance of those portions of the documents which suit his convenience, withholding those which he thinks might injure his case. If it is under these circumstances that the hon. minister is appealing to the House not to impute dishonest motives to his department, I think it would be advisable for him to change his methods. The hon. minister intimated—I do not know with what truth—that the member for Richmond had some additional knowledge in regard to this matter. I can only say that if the hon. member for Richmond knows anything about these documents, he has taken very good care to treat his information as absolutely confidential, because I do not know anything about them, and I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman on this side of the House who knows anything about them.

The facts in connection with this case are very simple. The man was sent to jail on the 3rd or 4th day of June, 1911, for a very serious offence. I think every lawyer in the House will agree with me when I say that the crime of forgery is considered to be one of the most serious known under the law, and I think no crime mentioned in the criminal code is punishable with so severe a penalty. No crime is more easily committed than that of forgery, and, as a deterrent against this sort of crime, the penalty is unusually severe. I think that the man was let off with a very light sentence when he was committed to the common jail for one year, and yet I have no doubt that the presiding justice took into consideration all those circumstances, so eloquently portrayed by the hon. Minister of Justice, in regard to Landry's having an invalid wife and a family of five small children. The Minister of Justice waxes very indignant when hon. members on this side of the House intimate that political influences were brought to bear in connection with this matter by the Department of Justice. How does my hon. friend the Minister of Justice meet the statement made by Mr. Gillies in his letter of July 3? The Minister of Justice stated that the hon. member for Richmond comes here and asks us to believe that there is something wrong in the Department of Justice because somebody on the street said: This man will be out of jail in a few days. I would call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that it was not a man on the street who said that; it was the man who put Landry in his position; the man who controls the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and who handles the patronage of the Government in one of the constituencies of this country. He is the man, I say, who, less than one month after the man had been incarcerated, made the statement that he would be out in a few days. When we consider all the circumstances surrounding the appointment of the man to these various positions, and his release from jail, I am inclined to think, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that Mr. Gillies knew what he was talking about. I am afraid if the minister would bring down all the papers we might get some confirmation of that suspicion. I admit that I have not the evidence because they will not bring it down but there is enough in the papers that have been brought down to make any member suspicious, and we on this side are suspicious. We cannot understand how Mr. Gillies cold make the positive statement, not to the public but to the Deputy Minister of the Department of Marine, within a month after the man was put in jail, that he would be home in a few days and able to attend to his business.

This was on the 3rd of July or less than a month after he was incarcerated. The man who appoints the officers, whose recommendation the department takes or who can appoint them without the recommendation of the department, in one short letter to the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries which has been read stated three times that Landry will be out of jail in a few days, asks them to hold his position and not to make any trouble. Then the Minister of Justice gets indignant because members on this side have a suspicion that all is not right in a man getting out of jail under those peculiar circumstances. If there is any question of indignation surely we on this side of the House should be indignant that the Minister of Justice will make statements such as he has made to-night, giving part of the evidence and witholding the rest. That is where the indignation should come and I hope it will be the last time that we shall receive such treatment from the Minister of Justice. We have heard from the Minister of Justice this evening the fact that a petition was sent in signed by a number of prominent citizens, I think clergymen of two denominations. I do not suppose that there is a man incarcerated in any place in Canada who could not find somebody to sign a petition for his release. I never knew a man to be hanged for murder for whom there were not petitions sent in, or to whom ladies did not send bouquets, &c. That is human sympathy coming out and I do not think we should find fault with it, it is a tribute to humanity that they are capable of these things. But sympathy should not play much part in the administration of justice. We lawyers know that sympathy plays a strong part in the case of juries and that far more guilty men are set free than innocent men convicted. When a man gets a trial in Canada and is convicted and sentenced, the time for sympathy has gone by. When it comes to the Department of Justice giving that man his liberty, they should do it on a stronger ground than sympathy. There ought to be, and I know that there are, some well-settled rules of procedure in the Department of Justice regarding the letting out of people on ticket-of-leave. I have not had much experience; in my practice as a lawyer I have applied two or three times to have men released on ticket-of-leave. Sometimes my application has been granted and sometimes not, and I know that the last time I applied I was told on two or three occasions that the rule of the department was that a man could not be released or would not be released on ticket-of-leave until he had served at least one-half of his sentence. I think I am voicing a statement of fact well known to many lawyers in this House that the department will not release men until they have served one-half their sentence. Then they release them under conditions laid down by chapter 150 of the Revised Statutes, known as the Ticket-of-leave Act. It is true that this is done without an Order in Council on the initiative of the Minister of Justice, advising His Excellency to exercise the power of clemency conferred upon him by this Act, but it seems to me a very small distinction which the Minister of Justice tries to make when he says that because it did not go to Council therefore the rest of the Government should not be held responsible for it. I have never seen a case in my parliamentary experience where two ministers of the Crown have tried to shirk responsibility for what seems to be a pretty shady transaction such as we have seen here this afternoon. Before admitting a man to his liberty on ticket-of-leave they must have a report from the presiding justice. I do not think this man was let out of prison without a report from the presiding justice, but we have no evidence of it. As the case stands to-night we might argue, and very reasonably argue, that he was let out of prison without even a report of the presiding justice. I cannot believe that, it is only another reason why the evidence should be brought down. I do not think you can find another instance, and I make the statement advisedly, in the record of the Justice Department, where a man has been let out of prison on ticket-of-leave that the department have not instituted some proceedings to get information for themselves. That is where I consider the Department of Justice has been guilty of gross negligence, if it should not be characterized by a stronger term. What have we got? According to the evidence furnished we have a petition filed by certain gentlemen, two of whom were clergymen. We have a telegram signed by a man who styles himself medical doctor, and we have no evidence that he possesses those qualifications. That is a man who is represented to be a nephew of the prisoner, stating that this man was suffering and should be released from jail in order to undergo an operation. The minister took no pains whatever to find out in the first place whether this man was really a medical doctor. In the second place he took no pains to find out whether the man was suffering from a disease. He took no pains to justify the statements made by the petitioners. The acting Minister of Justice does not even remember the transactions at all. He stands up here to-night and confesses that he knows nothing whatever about it. The thing went through in such a perfunctory manner that the acting Minister of Justice did not know what was going on. Gillies knew a month before that the man was going to be released. How did Gillies know, I would like to know? Did Gillies know they were going to take the advice of a man who in a telegram styles himself a medical doctor? Did he know that Landry was going to be released without the department adopting the elementary principle of investigating the statements in those petitions? Evdently Gillies must have known because the man was released without the department making the faintest effort to find out the truth or falsity of those statements. It turns out now that they are absolutely false, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is driven to the undignified course this evening of trying to bolster up the case by producing a letter written by this man in the month of December. He produces a letter purporting to be that of a medical doctor who says that the man was on the verge of collapse and would have died from stones in the kidneys, but that fortunately they had been removed by the use of morphine, and that these stones had been brought on by the food given to the man in the jail. The hon. the Minister of Justice has the nerve to read a letter of this character as justification for his conduct. It is no wonder that the hon. minister saw fit to hie himself away to some other part of the building. I do not wonder that he did not want to stay here to listen to what hon. gentlemen on this side of the House might say as to the character of his justification for his conduct. If we had no other evidence than that letter we would be justified in saying that the case is bristling with suggestions of improper methods on the part of the Minister of Justice or his department. I repeat that the letter alone is all we want to show that something was wrong. It does not take a medical doctor or even a lawyer to know that that letter is the merest nonsense. It is all that any man wants to justify the belief that this matter requires not only an airing but an investigation. I think the duty of the hon. member for Richmond is not to censure the Government, but to move for an investigation of the Department of Justice as to the conditions under which this man was released from prison. That letter convinced me beyond a shadow of doubt that there was something crooked in the release of this man from jail, I do not say crooked in the Department of Justice, but crooked in the county of Richmond. I say that the Government released that man on crooked evidence, and some investigation should take place to find out who is guilty, and all the facts of the case. As a rule, when people are wrong, the more their conduct is investigated, the more information is obtained. This man got out of jail exactly as Gillies said he would. After all these crooked transactions being aired and brought to light in this House we still have the Government taking their instructions from a man like Gillies, dismissing them from positions on the ipse-dixit of a defeated candidate of the character of Mr. J. A. Gillies. I think that if any further evidence were required that this Government have gone beyond the bounds of reason in their mad career of dismissing officials, it would be found in the evidence produced here to-night. Instead of being satisfied with an ordinary vote of censure on the Government, I think that something should be done by way of a motion to investigate this matter, or we should have the promise of the Prime Minister himself that steps will be taken to investigate and report to the public all the true conditions under which this man was released from jail, after he had served less than two months of a sentence of one year.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on account of being the minister principally concerned in this matter, and having made the recommendation upon which His Royal Highness the Governor General exercised the prerogative of clemency, and issued the ticket of leave to this man, Captain Andrew Landry, it is my purpose to make a statement of the facts. As I have stated, I was the acting Minister of Justice and was responsible, and I now assume full responsibility for my action in making the recommendation. I affirm that the recommendation was properly made upon the absolute merits of the case. Now what is a ticket of leave? Chapter 150 of the Revised Statutes of Canada provides for the conditional liberation of convicts:

> The Governor General by an order in writing under the hand and seal of the Secretary of State may grant to any convict, under sentence of imprisonment in a penitentiary, jail or other public or reformatory prison, a license to be at large in Canada, or in such part thereof, as in such license shall be mentioned, during such portion of his term of imprisonment, and upon such conditions in all respects as to the Governor General may seem fit.

There are other provisions as to revocation and the forfeiture of licenses, and clause 13 provides:

> It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise the Governor General upon all matters connected with or affecting the administration of this Act.

Now what is the administration of this Act? As I pointed out on the last occasion when this matter was brought to the attention of the House, there are continually in the office of the Minister of Justice applications by convicts and their friends for licenses or tickets-of-leave. Those applications and the documents connected therewith, which are usually incorporated in files, are examined first by the responsible officers of the department. The officer who is particularly charged with the duty of looking into those applications for tickets-of-leave is Mr. Coté. Mr. Coté is a man of whose judgment and impartiality I have formed a very high opinion. He has enjoyed the confidence of Ministers of Justice, I believe, for a period of twenty years.

Mr. CARVELL: I too have a very high opinion of Mr. Côté and if my hon. friend would bring down Mr. Coté's report, it might clear the atmosphere to quite an extent. It is the absence of these reports which makes members on this side of the House look upon the matter with suspicion.

Mr. WHITE: I will clear the atmosphere myself to the entire satisfaction of the House. The responsible officer who is in charge of this duty is Mr. Côté, who not only examines applications for tickets-of-leave but reads through all the evidence in connection with capital cases, which of course are the most important criminal cases that are dealt with in the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice takes Mr. Côté's report and recommendations, looks over the evidence, and if he agrees with Mr. Côté he writes the words 'I concur' and the recommendation of Mr. Côté with the words 'I concur' written by the Minister of Justice upon it is passed on to His Royal Highness the Governor General in Council who may then exercise the discretion of clemency. That is the procedure. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has called attention to the fact that it had escaped my mind that I had dealt with this particular case, but let me tell him that there are hundreds of applications made to the Department of Justice for tickets-of-leave and out of these hundreds of cases which are dealt with in a routine way only a very small percentage are favourably regarded by Mr. Côté and by the minister. There may have been cases in which Mr. Côté's recommendation has not been concurred in by the Minister of Justice, but I know of none such. What I did during the period I occupied the position of acting Minister of Justice, the responsibility of which I fully realized, was to discuss each case fully with Mr. Côté, to read over the files, and endeavour to form an impartial judgment upon the application. I say that was done in this case, and I think the statement will clear the air at the outset, because my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has made some statements which rather surprise me, amongst others, that Landry had been let out of jail because of gross corruption; I do not know whether the hon. member intended to impute gross corruption to myself or not.

Mr. CARVELL: I was very cautious to say that it was in Richmond county.

Mr. WHITE: I accept my hon. friend's explanation.

Mr. CARVELL: I said, I think, that it was through gross negligence of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WHITE: I took down the words of the hon. member and they were that Landry was let out of jail by gross corruption.

Mr. CARVELL: And I added, negligence of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WHITE: I take it that the hon. gentleman did not intend to impute corruption, because, personally, I should take it very much to heart if without any more evidence than is presented here any hon. gentleman in this House should entertain the view that I had been guilty of corruption in connection with a judicial matter of this kind. I do not think any gentleman in this House on either side would hold such a view, and I accept the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) that he had no intention of imputing any corrupt action to me. The hon. member has said: why not bring down the papers, and I assure him that nothing would give me greater satisfaction in the world, in view of the discussion that has taken place here, than to be able to bring down the papers. Why are not the papers brought down? It is because the Minister of Justice, of this Administration, and the Minister of Justice of the last Administration concurred in the view, which is also shared by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, that the papers in these matters should not be brought down. Let me say to my hon. friend (Mr. Kyte) that I saw the right hon. the leader of the Opposition on this matter when there was a motion upon the Order Paper for the production of these papers, and said to the right hon. gentleman: unless I can bring down these papers I am going to be put in the position of having to argue this question before the House without being able to show the material upon which I acted; and I further said to the right hon. gentleman: I shall have Mr. Côté of the Department of Justice wait upon you and present the file of papers to you in order that you may see all material upon which action was taken—and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) was put in the same position. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has said that these papers might show some confirmation of Mr. Gillies' statement that this man would soon obtain his liberty. I ask my hon.

friend to ask the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and to turn around now and ask the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) if there is anything in the papers that mentions Mr. Gillies by name or suggests in any way confirmation of the statement he is alleged to have made.

Mr. CARVELL: That is nice gallery play; that is no good.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. WHITE: Let me be fair with my hon. friend. My hon. friend has stated that the papers might contain some confirmation of the statement made by Mr. Gillies that he had information in advance that this man would be released, and is it not fair for me to ask under these circumstances the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Richmond, who have seen these papers which I am precluded from bringing down, whether these papers do contain such confirmation.

Mr. CARVELL: Do not discuss it then.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has raised the question; I did not. After having indicated how these applications for tickets-of-leave are dealt with, let me tell the House what happened in this particular case. On July 12, 1912, Mr. P. M. Côté of the Department of Justice, the officer who has dealt with applications of this kind ever since the Act was in force, who has dealt with capital cases under both Governments, and who is one of the most trusted and responsible officers of the Department of Justice, laid before me a recommendation in writing in the usual course recommending that a license should be granted to Andrew Landry, sentenced for the crime of forgery and of uttering, on June 5, 1912. Outside of Mr. Côté, nobody before or since, until the hon. member for Richmond brought this matter up in the House, ever spoke to me with regard to Andrew Landry or his release from prison on ticket-of-leave, or wrote to me, nor did I receive directly or indirectly any communication either from a colleague or a member of Parliament, or one of the public, with respect to Andrew Landry, except the recommendation of Mr. P. M. Côté in pursuance of his duty and in the ordinary course. I make that statement without any qualification or reservation whatever. I venture to say that if the matter referred to by my hon. friend from Richmond relating to the dismissal of the predecessor of this man as wharfinger, and the appointment of this man in his place, had not been coupled with this granting of a ticket-of-leave, and if the granting of the ticket-of-leave stood alone and on its merits, nobody would dare get up in this House and question the justice of it. On July 12 Mr. Côté recommended in the usual course in writing that a license should be granted to Andrew Landry. As acting Minister of Justice I examined all the papers on file and July 19, seven days after Mr. Côté made the recommendation, I concurred in the recommendation and in due course the prerogative of the Crown was exercised. Landry was unknown to me. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) thinks I should know every wharfinger in the Dominion of Canada; he says I should know Landry because he was a government employee, and I suppose because he drew $9.60 for the time he was wharfinger. I have a fairly good memory both for things and names; but I confess that I have not been able to hold in my mind the names of all the employees of this Government from the Atlantic to the Pacific including those who draw as much as $9.60 from the Government.

Mr. KYTE: You might remember all those who are in jail.

Mr. WHITE: That might be rather difficult. What is the history of this case? The Department of Justice, in considering applications for ticket-of-leave, takes many things into consideration. In the first place they ask, as my hon. friend has stated, for a report from the judge. Before the Minister of Justice left for England, he obtained a report from the judge upon this case. In the second place, petitions had been filed and representations made on behalf of this man from different gentlemen, in the place he lived, that his family was in most destitute circumstances. The Minister of Justice stated that he would look into the matter. The report of the judge is important. The condition of health of the man is important. The condition of his family as to poverty is also important. What is the purpose of a ticket-of-leave? A criminal is granted a ticket-of-leave in order that he may be reformed, that he may be set in the right path, that he may assist his family. The ticket-of-leave is conditional. If he falls again into the way of crime, he may be reincarcerated and be compelled to serve out the sentence for which the ticket-of-leave was granted. The crime was for the forging of a fifty-dollar promissory note. As the Minister of Justice has said, no money was lost. Even although that is the case, I do not for one moment desire to minimise the crime. The crime and the circumstances of the crime are all taken into consideration. The previous character of the man is also taken into consideration. The report of the judge and the evidence of parties in the community, who are known to be reputable, are taken into consideration in exercising the prerogative. Before the Minister of Justice left for England, he received letters from clergymen of different faiths, unquestionably reliable men. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte), who has seen the file, will not deny that the clergymen of different faiths, who sent these letters to the Department of Justice, are men of high standing, who would not misrepresent the situation. My hon. friend has spoken of their sympathy. Apart from that, they stated the unquestioned fact that this man had a family of five small children, that he had a sick wife and that they were in destitute circumstances, when this man only received $9.60 for the position of wharfinger, and anything else that he could pick up? Here are the circumstances: five small children, the youngest an infant in arms, a sick wife and a husband in jail. What does the judge say? My hon. friend would no doubt be pleased; but I do not think it very fair to say, on the one hand, you cannot bring down the papers, and on the other, you cannot quote from the papers.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say that you cannot bring down the papers. I want to see the papers.

Mr. WHITE: It has been stated by the Minister of Justice, and the right hon. leader of the Opposition concurred in that statement, that these papers should not be brought down, for the reason that a number of these communications are confidential and that it would be against public policy that the files of the Department of Justice should be brought down.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why do you quote from them then?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has made suggestions against my honour.

Mr. MACDONALD: If my hon. friend resents them, he ought to give the report to the House.

Mr. CARVELL: I have made no imputation against the hon. the Minister of Finance. It is the Minister of Justice with whom I find fault.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend is certainly putting the responsibility on me. I assume responsibility. I say that that recommendation was properly made on the merits of the case, and I stand by that. Notwithstanding all the debate here tonight, on the same set of facts any minister of justice would be justified in making the recommendation that I made. I defy anyone to contradict that after all the facts are set before the House. My hon. friend from Richmond, a big upstanding man, pleasant faced, broad breasted with a big heart inside, is yet so biased by political partisanship that in a case like this that should appeal to his sympathy, he wants his pound of flesh with regard to this unfortunate man, incarcerated in jail, with five children and a sick wife at home.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend know that the wife of this man is the owner of valuable property and that this story of destitution is hardly correct, or did he make any inquiries?

Mr. WHITE: I do not know, and I do not think my hon. friend knows.

Mr. MACDONALD: I do know.

Mr. WHITE: The information in the office of the Department of Justice from these two clergymen, in my opinion, cannot be impeached. The destitution of his family may be taken into consideration. Not only that, but one of the clergymen said that, owing to their destitute circumstances, it is impossible for these people to subsist if the prisoner remains in confinement. In addition to that, we have the report of the judge, another factor always taken into consideration. At the conclusion of his report, the judge says this——

Mr. CARVELL: Read the whole of it.

Mr. WHITE: I am precluded from bringing down the papers, but I shall quote this. Judge Gray says:

To his appeal for a suspended sentence, I said he could apply to the Department of Justice for clemency.

Mr. MACDONALD: Did the judge recommend to the department that clemency should be granted?

Mr. WHITE: The judge made the statement of facts, stating the sentence which he had imposed and said:

To his appeal for a suspended sentence, I said he could apply to the Department of Justice for clemency.

If that is not suggesting that the Department of Justice might properly exercise clemency, I do not know why it was written.

Mr. MACDONALD: Simply for the purpose of intimating to the prisoner what his rights were.

Mr. WHITE: His counsel knew his rights. My hon. friend is a counsel. Why should the judge suggest that he should apply to the Department of Justice for clemency?

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend not know that, when a judge wants to recommend clemency, he says so in his report?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend suggests that there is uniformity. As a matter of fact there is no uniformity at all in the reports of judges even on capital cases. One judge will make a statement of fact; another will suggest doubt, and another will make a positive recommendation. In this case the judge says that he could apply to the Department of Justice for clemency. In this case you have these elements: In the first place you have a case in which there is no money lost, although as I have said I am not minimizing the crime in any way. In the second place, you have a sick wife and five children in destitute circumstances. What else have you? You have a very sick man. My hon. friend has stated that the man was not sick, and he made that statement with all the assurance of certainty. How does he know he was not sick?

Mr. KYTE: I know he was able to go to work after he was released from jail.

Mr. WHITE: That is what the hon. gentleman says, but that is absolutely contradicted. The statement read by the Minister of Justice was that two months afterwards he had gone to work. The hon.member for Richmond said that this man made out some accounts as wharfinger after he had been released on ticket-of-leave and had offered to take $10 for an account of $30. That, no doubt, was because he was in destitute circumstances. It never came to my knowledge that he was attempting to compromise a debt of $30 for $10. And that is evidence of the man's condition, and confirms the statement concerning the condition of the family.

Mr. EMMERSON: That was a debt due to the Government.

Mr. WHITE: May be so. But at all events that was not brought to my attention until the hon. member for Richmond spoke about it. On the 10th of July, B. A. LeBlanc, who I understand is a reputable physician in the county of my hon. friend, and who, as a matter of fact was not known by any member of the department or by myself to be in any way related to this man Landry, wired to the department stating that this man was suffering from stone in the kidney. Mr. Côté of the department believed, and had reason to believe from the report signed by the warden of the jail, that the man who signed himself as physician was the jail physician. My hon. friend says he was not the jail physician; I accept that, but Mr. Côté believed that he was. The whole matter was one that went through in the ordinary course. Application was made; the papers were looked into; the recommendations made by proper officers who looked into all these matters; it was brought before the minister in due course, and approved. That is the state of affairs. The destitute circumstances of the man, his previous good character, his sickness with a very serious disorder, led to a request, for what? A pardon? No, but release on a ticket-of-leave. Tickets-of-leave are issued to criminals almost daily;—that is the intention of the Act. Under these circumstances, I say that no blame attaches to the Department of Justice in the absence of something showing collusion, or corruption. And I do not believe that Mr. Côté or any one else in the Department of Justice colluded or conspired with anybody, or was corrupted by anybody. My hon. friend has said that he has confidence in Mr. Côté. I certainly have. If he desires an explanation of the case it is competent for him to see Mr. Côté, and no doubt he will show him the papers, as he showed them to the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. CARVELL: It is no use my seeing them; it is the public that is interested in this matter.

Mr. WHITE: Then, the hon. gentleman is of a different opinion from the former Minister of Justice and his own leader. I would not like to impute such unfairness to the hon. gentleman as to suggest that he says that the minister is precluded from bringing down the papers, yet must not make a statement without them. The minister must be in a position to defend himself. That is one reason why, unless there is positive evidence of corruption, no case of this kind should be brought up in the House. I do not think the hon. gentleman thinks there is corruption in this case so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, yet he does not hesitate to send it out to this country that the prerogative of clemency has been exercised corruptly. And that is necessarily his position unless he withdraws this motion. I do not think he will say that there has been corruption, and I defy him to produce a tittle of evidence to show that there is collusion or corruption on the part of the Department of Justice or the minister in charge. I put that strongly. This application was taken up and put through in the usual way; yet hon. gentlemen do not hesitate to try to make political capital out of it. That is not fair; it is not fair to the Minister of Justice to attack him in this way unless on the basis of some positive act, or to put him on his defence when he is debarred from bringing down the papers.

Mr. CARVELL: You have the right to bring them down.

Mr. WHITE: But the papers, as I say, are mainly confidential.

Mr. CARVELL: That is all right in honest cases, but this is an exceptional case.

Mr. WHITE: But these papers are confidential, and that is the reason the former Minister of Justice declined to bring down such papers and the reason why the present Minister of Justice takes the same position. It is in the public interest that men should be able to communicate their views with respect to criminal cases to the department without incurring the risk of the publication of their views later. The case of a criminal may be worthy of consideration, and yet a citizen may hesitate to have it made known to the public that he had interested himself in bringing to the attention of the Minister of Justice the facts upon which the Minister of Justice would be justified in making a recommendation in favour of that criminal. I look upon this motion as merely political; I do not think any hon. gentleman opposite believes there is anything in the way of corruption. It is merely a political plea to discredit the minister and injure the Government; there is no sincerity back of it.

Mr. MACDONALD: I rise to a point of order. The minister has no right to say that the hon. gentleman who makes this motion does so without sincerity.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the point is well taken. It is contrary to the rules to insinuate that a member is not sincere in what he does.

Mr. WHITE: It gives me great pleasure to withdraw the word, Mr. Speaker, though I might point out that the smiling countenance of my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) shows that he does not take it very seriously.

Mr. KYTE: I am not taking the minister seriously.

Mr. WHITE: I have no desire to use language that is not parliamentary, and if I have spoken strongly upon the subject, it is because I am convinced that the Department of Justice acted not only in the usual course but with entire sincerity and good faith in this matter. As I have shown, the application was received in the usual course, the papers were subject to the usual scrutiny, and the recommendation followed in the usual manner. There was another matter—and I desire to discuss the subject in absolute sincerity and fairness—referred to by the hon. member for Carleton, and that was the letter of Gillies of July 3, in which Mr. Gillies indicated that, in his opinion this man would be released. My hon. friend says how did Gillies know the man would be released; my answer to his is that he did not know.

Mr. CARVELL: He did know.

Mr. WHITE: He did not know. Mr. Gillies may be interested, with others, in making such representations to the department as, in his opinion, would obtain the release of a prisoner, but Mr. Gillies did not know, nor did anybody else, whether or not he would be released. I never saw Mr. Gillies in my life, or anybody else in connection with this case, except Mr. Côté, the responsible officer who made the recommendation to me. I make the statement without any reservation of any kind that, as I have said, no communication came to me from any source except from Mr. Côté, and these documents to which I have referred. The papers I have submitted to the scrutiny of the hon. member for Richmond, and also to my right hon. friend the leader of the House. I leave this case with some confidence to the House, because I do not believe that, on the statements of fact as made, supported as they are by the material upon which the recommendation was founded, any hon. gentleman in this House will say there is a tittle of evidence to support the statement that any responsible officer of the Department of Justice to such an extent as to make any recommendations or representation that would not otherwise have been made. All my dealings were with Mr. Côté, and he was of the opinion that LeBlanc, who I understand, is a reputable physician, followed the usual course in making his recommendation. The Minister of Justice presented to-night a statement signed by the physician to the effect that this man was sick for two months after he was released; that he did not go to work during that period; that after two months had elapsed he went to Sydney to obtain employment; that he had previously suffered and has suffered since with stone in the kidneys; and there is not one tittle of evidence before this House to support any contrary view. Under all these circumstances, I am quite content, as I have said, to leave this matter to the judgment of the House and of the country.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland): It is not my in intention to discuss the merits or demerits of this case, nor to take into consideration the facts in connection with it. I would not feel called upon to make any observations were it not for the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with the C. Bruce Macdougall case. Mr. Macdougall, who has since gone to, I hope, a better world, where he may have less trouble than he had while in this, was a constituent, and I go further and say a friend, of mine. There was one thing about him that was worthy of commendation: he was a faithful friend and true, and I think my hon. friend in bringing his case before the House to-night could have had but one purpose, and that was to indicate that something improper was done by Sir Allen Aylesworth, as Minister of Justice, in advising that his sentence be commuted.

Mr. HAZEN: If my hon. friend had listened to my remarks he would know that I said that if the Department of Justice has been imposed upon in the present case, it was not the first Government in respect of which the Department of Justice had been imposed upon, and I cited the Macdougall case as an instance.

Mr. EMMERSON: I observed closely the remarks of my hon. friend, and I propose to show wherein Sir Allen Aylesworth was not imposed upon. That case was one of defamatory libel. Mr. Macdougall was tried in the city of St. John, and I think my hon. friend had much to do with that trial. I was in no way connected with it, either on behalf of the defence or of the prosecution, but the facts of the case came under my observation, and it was recognized that the man was prosecuted with considerable heat by the officers of the Crown in New Brunswick at that time. Mr. Macdougall had his weaknesses, as we all have, and he paid the penalty, with the result that he was committed to jail in the city of St. John. My hon. friend has said that because of his illness, or the representations made in regard thereto, his sentence was commuted and he was set at liberty. In that particular case, however, evidence was taken with regard to his condition. It was found that he was seriously ill, and the Justice Department referred the matter to the jail physician. My hon. friend is familiar with the character and reputation of the jail physician of the city of St. John—Dr. James Christie—than whom no more eminent physician, I think, lives in St. John, and, so far as I am aware, he certainly never was of the political faith which I hold. When I was attorney general of the province of New Brunswick, I knew him as being associated with the Conservative party, and I am sure that any representation which he would make to Sir Allen Aylesworth would be wholly desinterested and be worthy of credence, and would be accepted as the downright truth. At any rate, representations were made in respect of the prisoner's illness, a certificate was issued and attested by Dr. Christie to the effect that the life of Macdougall would be imperilled by his continued incarceration, and that, from the standpoint of humanity, he should be released. He was, accordingly, released from custody. My hon. friend says he came back to the city of Moncton and resumed his newspaper work. He did go back, but broken in health, and remained so until his death. It is true that he died as the result of an accident, but I am satisfied that that accident was due to the condition of his health. I think it is very unfair for my hon. friend to refer to the case and, in justice to the memory of Mr. Macdougall, and to the action of Sir Allen Aylesworth—and I know something of the moving causes that led to Macdougall's release—I have felt it necessary to set forth some of the facts connected with the matter. I had occasion to make inquiry after the event had transpired, although I was not in any way a party to soliciting the favourable consideration of the minister. Whatever the facts of that case were, they are no justification of the present case. The Minister of Finance has spoken of this motion as being out of the ordinary and has unfairly and unfortunately imported into the discussion the suggestion that we on this side of the House in supporting the amendment are acting simply from political motives, and not from any higher motives, my hon friend is more free in that regard than others. Such motions are not exceptional in this Parliament. I remember but a few years ago when the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce), then in opposition, took similar action against the Department of Justice in connection with the release of some prisoners who had been convicted and sentenced for the circulation of some improper literature. The papers were not produced on that occasion, and I remember that the hon. member for West Algoma, supported by his party friends, on that occasion imputed improper action on the part of the Department of Justice. I do not know that it has been laid down that the papers cannot be produced, and I am speaking only from memory when I say that there have been cases where papers have been brought down. There may be certain papers that may be deemed confidential that it may be proper to withold, but official papers which are not confidential, reports from officials, &c., might very properly be brought down. The minister has quoted an excerpt from the report of one official. Then why should he not produce the whole report? It was stated by the Minister of Justice that it could not be done, and yet the acting Minister of Justice took occasion to shield himself behind an extract from that report. If it is improper to bring down the whole report it is more improper that an extract should be read to the House, and my hon. friend would have stood in a better position in his defence of the subject had he avoided shielding himself in that way by using part of the papers and refusing to produce the others. I can understand why on grounds of public policy it would not be advisable to bring all the papers before Parliament, but certain papers should be produced.

As to what transpired in connection with the appointment of officers, I shall say nothing, because I have not made myself familiar with the situation. I take my hon. friend's word and his statement. He has said that he has not communicated with anybody or allowed anybody else to communicate with him with regard to this case, but this is another case of synch-ronism. Mr. Gillies is not unknown to us, he was formerly a member of this House, and during the last year he has been around Ottawa seeking a high and honourable position in connection with the Parliament of Canada. His statement that the man would be home in a few days, knowing that he was then in jail, and had been sentenced for a year, and that only about a month of his sentence had expired, synchronizes with the fact that the man was set free and did go home. How or why, is left to conjecture to a large extent, and perhaps it would not be left to conjecture wholly if the Government had placed all the papers which are not confidential, before the House.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I shall not occupy much time. The debate has made clear to every one in this House that this resolution offers one of the flimsiest excuses for wasting the time of the House, ever presented.

Mr. LALOR: Obstruction, all right.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. member for Carleton, N.B., flew into a rage because of an interruption from the hon. member for Cumberland and applied to him the word, 'impudent,' which you properly asked him to retract. Immediately after his retraction of that word he proceeded to read a lesson to the hon. member for Cumberland on courtesy in debate. I appeal to members on both sides, and I believe that members on both sides will agree, that there is no member in this House who, judging by his conduct, is less qualified to speak in regard to courtesy in debate than the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B., blamed the Minister of Justice for making some dismissals of officers. Without going into the matter, I would say that if I had any fault to find with the Minister of Justice it would be that he has not gone far enough in that direction.

Mr. CARVELL: I believe that.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. member for Carleton says that sympathy should not play a very large part in the Department of Justice. I think the people of this country may be glad that the hon. member for Carleton does not occupy a position on the bench, and he is never likely to occupy such a position. God help any person who would come under his sway, and depend on him for justice or sympathy. Why has this matter been brought before the House at the present time? I dare not say it is to waste the time of the House. I dare not say it is for obstructive purposes, because if I did I would be called to order. One reason I think may be found in the fact that the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), is not only making accusations against a certain department of this Government, but is calling in question the conduct of the man who was his opponent at the last election, and who is likely to be his opponent at the next election.

Mr. KYTE: I hope he will be.

Mr. EDWARDS: I think I am justified in regarding that as one reason why the question has been brought before the House. But I think there is another reason. The Liberal party of the Dominion of Canada have a good many misdeeds to their credit or discredit, which they cannot cover up. They would like if possible to get a 'you're another' argument to put up against those misdeeds. It seems to me that it comes with very bad grace from hon. members opposite, especially from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), to pose as political purists. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have a very unenviable record in that regard. Might I call their attention to the fact that there was a man of the name of J. B. Jackson who tried to deprive a man of his seat in a legislature in this country by perjured evidence. The conduct of the Liberal party in regard to that man's action was to reward his infamous conduct by giving him a good fat position in the Old Country. Might I call their attention to a certain man of the name of Wagner who, having served a term in prison in the west for robbing immigrants was, on his release, given by the then Minister of the Interior, the present member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), two better positions than he had before as a reward for his conduct. Might I call their attention to a man named W. T. R. Preston, who was organizer for the Liberal party in the province of Ontario, who figured in a certain constituency known as West Elgin and in other constituencies in the province of Ontario and was known to fame as 'Hug the machine Preston' and who was rewarded for his conduct by an appointment to a responsible position in the Old Country. Might I call their attention to their connection with the bogus ballot box manipulators? This should be a matter of special interest to the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham). He might give some very interesting information to this House about that. He might tell of the little friendly calls that were made by the ballot box manipulators on their trips from Watertown to Kingston by way of Brockville, when they stopped off at his residence, and were entertained by him. These are things which hon. gentlemen opposite would like the country to forget, and against which they would like to have something to put up, so that when they are called to the attention of the electors, they could refer to something such as they have tried to place on record here to-night, and have miserably failed. I do not intend to follow the bogus ballot box affair. I repeat that the hon. member for South Renfrew could give very interesting talks to this House with regard to that. He might tell us for instance where the bogus ballots were printed, and I think it would not be far from the printing office in which he has a very great interest.

It has been stated by the hon. member for Richmond, and by the hon. member for Carleton that the Government should have known all about this man Landry, and they blame the Department of Justice in that regard. They blame the Department of Justice and this Government for having accepted the recommendation of the defeated candidate in the county of Richmond. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when the Laurier Government was in power, and Sir Allen Aylesworth was Minister of Justice, that minister, on the recommendation, not of defeated candidates but of an hon. member of this House, who sat behind the right hon. present leader of the Opposition then Prime Minister of this country, the then hon. member for Kingston, Mr. Wm. Harty, appointed to a position in Kingston penitentiary a man who had served a sentence in Belleville jail, who had served a sentence at the Central Prison at Toronto, who had twenty-three convictions in the police court in Kingston, and who was out on suspended sentence, when he was appointed. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the Minister of Justice should have known all about this man who was recommended by the defeated candidate in Richmond county. If the present Minister of Justice should have known about him a short time after taking office, surely Sir Allen Aylesworth should have known about the man who was recommended by the then member for Kingston and who had twenty-three convictions in the police court in Kingston and was out on suspended sentence at the time of his appointment. These hon. gentlemen, like the hon. member for Carleton, dare get up in this House and talk political purity. The hon. member for Richmond says that it is a new policy for the Government to take the recommendation of a defeated candidate in appointing a person to office. It is no new policy.

Mr. KYTE: I said it was a new policy so far as my county is concerned.

Mr. EDWARDS: I can assure my hon. friend that it is not a new policy so far as the county of Frontenac is concerned. Of course in the county of Frontenac, during all the years that the right hon. the present leader of the Opposition led the government of this country, we were in the habit of sending Conservative members to this House, and we knew perfectly well that the defeated candidates in that county during all those fifteen or sixteen years, were in the habit of handling the patronage of that county. When the hon. member for Richmond takes exception to the Government accepting the nomination of a defeated candidate, let me call his attention to what his own party have done. What have they been doing all these weeks and months? It is common knowledge that the defeated candidates of the Liberal party in the last election, men who were discredited by the electors of this country, men like the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Hon. Mackenzie King and other ex-ministers, who are political cast-offs, have been sitting in caucus with hon. gentlemen opposite, giving them advice and dictating to them, I think I must say, the policy which they have followed during the past few weeks.

So far as this matter is concerned, we have the recommendation to an insignificant position worth nine or ten dollars a year, made by the defeated Conservative candidate in the county of Richmond, a gentleman who formerly occupied a seat in this House and it seems to me that it was a very natural thing for the Government to recognize the recommendation of Mr. Gillies. It has been clearly shown that so far as the appointment of that man was concerned the Government acted in good faith and that as soon as they obtained information in regard to his wrong-doing he was removed from office. I say, Sir, that the facts, as have been clearly set forth by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, by the Minister of Justice, and by the Minister of Finance, go to show that this resolution should not be supported, not only by members on this side of the House but by members on the other side, not even by the hon. member for Richmond himself, who has brought it forward. It has been clearly shown that so far as the hon. member's statement of the case goes as contained in the resolution, it is not a statement of fact. The Minister of Marine has clearly demonstrated that, and the hon. member for Carleton did not and could not controvert the facts as stated by that hon. gentleman. That of itself is sufficient reason why this resolution should not receive the support of this House. I said in rising, Mr. Speaker, that I did not propose taking up more than a few minutes speaking on this subject, and I shall be as good as my word.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): I wish to speak on a matter which though perhaps not directly concerned with the question before the House may be treated as within the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. About twenty years ago I defended a man in the county of Welland for an offence for which together with two other men he was convicted and sentenced to penitentiary for life. That man is now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary at Kingston. Before he committed the crime with which he was charged, this man whose name is Dullman was a bank manager of one of the national banks in the United States. He was an intelligent man and why he committed the offence charged against him I never was able to discover from anything he said to me or from anything the two men convicted with him said to me. This man has now served twenty years in the penitentiary at Kingston and it appears to me he has served long enough. I have discussed this matter with the previous Government and I am willing to go on record as saying that in my opinion Mr. Dullman has served as long in the penitentiary for the crime for which he was convicted as he should serve. I ask that the Minister of Justice, with the concurrence of his colleagues in the Government should now pardon this man. I mention this matter now because I wish to go on record as stating that I am in favour of having Mr. Dullman pardoned. My connection with Mr. Dullman as counsel was severed at the end of his trial and I have only seen him once since he went to the penitentiary. I have spoken with gentlemen who knew Mr. Dullman, not only on this continent but in England, men who knew of his capacity, and perhaps the particular reason why he was induced to get into this difficulty, and they say that his previous record is that of an able and respectable man. He has now served twenty years' imprisonment and in all sincerity I suggest to the Government that he has served long enough and should be pardoned. At another time I shall avail myself of any opportunity offered me to present my reasons to the ministers as to why clemency should be extended to this man.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that this discussion on your right hand side has taken such a wide field and such a departure from the very important motion that is before the Chair. I cannot understand why the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) should take such a wide circle and pay such attention to decorum in debate and germaneness of subjects that should be brought up before the Speaker on particular occasions of this kind. I have followed the career of the Conservative party for the last thirty years. If my hon. friend from Frontenac will burnish up his political history for the last thirty years, he will find a lot of skeletons in his own closet, a lot of things to prune over and to furbish up in that political house without going beyond the immediate range of his own party. It ill becomes him or any other gentleman of his party to try to throw stones across the floor at hon. gentlemen in respect to their political limitations, either as individuals or as a political party. As an individual member of this party, I am quite prepared to compare the conduct of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House with that of hon. gentlemen opposite, individually or collectively.

Mr. CARVELL: Do not take it seriously.

Mr. McKENZIE: Possibly I should not take it seriously. I am sure that the country will not take it seriously. I remember well, when the hon. member from Frontenac had a seat on this side of the House, what his attitude was on such occasions. I have no fault to find with it. He was then strong on the question of charges against individuals and against the Government, which he was then opposing. He was telling the country and this House, give us the machinery; give us the opportunity of unmasking the hypocrisy and the corruption on the other side and we will unfold a tale that will shock the modesty and nerve of the people of this country. The opportunity has come to my hon. friend. He is sitting behind a Government with a large majority. They have all the machinery for any investigation which they may choose to instigate in this House or out of it. The records of the country are before them. Everything that was done during the last fifteen years is and always has been open to them . I ask my hon. friend from Frontenac and the Government, what have they discovered? What have they investigated? Where have they put their finger on one single instance of wrong-doing by the party which I have the honour to support, and which has been in power for the last fifteen years? They have not been able to find a single instance. Yet this is the treatment to which we are subjected. I ask the hon. member if he has any charges to make against any person on this side of the House or against this party. He has the opportunity and the machinery with which to make them. Let us have none of this side-show insinuation with nothing to back it up.

Mr. EDWARDS: I rise to a question of privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out more particularly—

Mr. EDWARDS: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not think it is an opportune time to raise a question of privilege. If the hon. member were rising to a point of order, he would be within his rights.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. gentleman asked me a direct question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal particularly with the question which is before the Chair. It has been said by the Minister of Justice that the hon. member for Richmond should be rather ashamed of himself, to put it mildly, to bring this matter before the House. I come from another part of the same province. I know the hon. member for Richmond; I know Mr. Gillies; I know the circumstances quite well. I am quite prepared to put myself in the same category as the hon. member for Richmond; I stand by the course which he has taken. I would be sorry indeed to be placed on any lower scale in the judgment of the hon. Minister of Justice; but I submit to him, with my experience as a lawyer, as he is a lawyer himself, that enough has been disclosed to justify any hon. gentleman, who is interested in this matter, in bringing it to the notice of the House and of the country. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), enough circumstantial evidence has been brought forward to cause us to suspect that things are not as they ought to have been, and we are entitled to know the whole facts of the case. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to an experienced jurist like the Minister of Justice, that people cannot blow hot and blow cold in a matter of evidence. You cannot appropriate and reprobate, according to an old saying in the courts. The gentleman who was acting Minister of Justice at that time cannot come here with snacks of evidence that make out a case for him, from which he tries to justify the exercise of a judicial function on his part, and then refuse to give us the rest of it. Whoever heard of jurors or arbitrators or any other court being asked to pronounce judgment upon a case after only one side or part of one side of the evidence had been presented to them. That is what we are asked to do in this case. When the hon. gentleman, who was acting Minister of Justice at that time, says that his honour is impugned, he thinks that it is permissible for him, in order to escape that situation, to bring down parts of the report of the judge and snacks of evidence here and there from people who are called reputable. We know nothing about them. It is for us as the jurors; it is for you, Mr. Speaker, as the presiding genius in this House, to judge of the weight of such evidence as has been brought down. Members of the Government say that we must take their word on this, and that we must condemn not only the whole case but the hon. member for Richmond, who brought it on without a scintilla of evidence being brought before us. We have been told by the Minister of Justice that the function discharged by the Minister of the Crown, who advises His Royal Highness, or His Excellency the Governor General to exercise clemency, is a judicial function. Now, probably the legal fraternity will understand better than laymen can what is meant by a judicial act. It is an act of justicial functionary upon hearing legal evidence. The Minister of Justice knew what he was saying when he spoke of a judicial Act, for he is an old judge——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McKENZIE: I mean old in experience; I would not say old in sin. If this expression 'A judicial act' were used by some hon. members of this House, I would not have taken it very seriously. But when the Minister of Justice says that his friend the Minister of Finance when acting as Minister of Justice was discharging a judicial act, that means something. Judicial acts should be based upon judicial evidence. Let us consider the character of the court from which this man came before the Minister of Finance. I have practiced before the Hon. Mr. Justice Graham. He is one of a long line of distinguished men who have adorned the Supreme Court bench of Nova Scotia. He is known on the bench and off the bench as a most humane gentleman, and before him criminals want to be tried if they must be tried. Now, the criminal law is the same all over the Dominion. What steps must have been taken before the case reached the acting Minister of Justice? These steps the acting minister should have considered. The evidence was gone over in the first place before this man was deprived of his liberty. Then, it was reviewed before he was sent up for trial. A third time it was before the judge and he read it and gave his address to the grand jury. As the judge found there was a prima facie case, the witnesses went to the grand jury and for the fourth time this evidence was reviewed. Then the fifth time, when they found the bill, it was gone over and sworn again before the petit jury. That is, five times this evidence had received careful investigation before a competent tribunal, and at the fifth time, the judge and jury found this man guilty of the offence cahrged. Nor was that all. There was a right of appeal on any point of law or evidence, an absolute right that could not be denied. Or if the judge had refused, the Supreme Court could have given it. But he did not ask for it and that is the evidence that he was properly convicted. If the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia had not given him what he thought was justice, then, in case of a division of the court, he could have appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, and got a new trial. But nothing of that kind was done. And the minister should have remembered when a case of this kind came before him that it had been within the power of the trial judge to suspend sentence upon this man.

Mr. WHITE: Does the hon. gentleman understand that this is a case of granting a ticket-of-leave under the statute, not a question of conviction?

Mr. McKENZIE: That does not make any difference. How does that change my position?

Mr. WHITE: The hon. gentleman is dealing with the conditions under which the man was convicted. But does he realize that the statute which gives the right to issue a ticket-of-leave presumes that that right would be exercised on proper occasion? The question is not whether the man was properly convicted but whether it was proper to issue the ticket-of-leave.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not say it boastingly, but I know the criminal law of Canada very well. I know what a ticket-of-leave means, and have had to deal with tickets-of-leave. The point I make is that when the hon. gentleman knew the opportunities which this criminal had had and the latitude allowed to the judge in dealing with him, he should have hesitated before he interfered with the conclusion reached by proper machinery established by this country to deal with cases of this kind. We had it laid down here the other day by the Minister of Justice that when there was a court to deal with a subject, that subject should be left to that court and the court should deal with it finally, fully and absolutely. That was the law, the practise, the gospel, laid down in the Coderre case a few days ago. There was certainly power here to deal with the Coderre case, but it was thought by hon. gentlemen opposite that it should be submitted to the court. I submit to the hon. gentleman particularly responsible for the action complained of in this Landry case that he must excuse us if we are suspicious of the position taken by the gentlemen who had been pushing this man Landry upon the Prime Minister for an office of emolument. This case is political in its conception and political throughout. The gentleman who was recommending Landry was told that there was something the matter with his character, but he insisted upon Landry's appointment to office. The gentleman who was supporting his claims comes to Ottawa. He was around here some days, and did not see the acting Minister of Justice; I take his word for that. He may have seen many other gentlemen in the Department of Justice; we do not know. Mr. Gillies is not ignorant as to conditions in Ottawa; he was in this House for many years, and he knows Ottawa just as well as any of us——

Mr. DOHERTY: Do I understand my hon. friend to affirm that Gillies was in Ottawa at that time?

Mr. McKENZIE: That is the report.

Mr. DOHERTY: The report of whom, might I ask?

Mr. WHITE (eeds).

Mr. McKENZIE: The report of one whom I have reason to believe, but whose name I cannot give. I am informed it was after Mr. Gillies went back from Ottawa that he gave his friends to understand that this man would soon get out, and it was then that he wrote the letter. There is no question about the position taken by Mr. Gillies. It is a most extraordinary matter of record that he undertook to say: 'Do not dismiss this man; do not nominate another in his place.' At that time the man was in jail serving a year's sentence, yet Gillies said: 'Do not dismiss him; he will be home in a few days.' I am told that that information was affirmed by Mr. Gillies after he returned from Ottawa. He is a gentleman of mature years, bright and intelligent; I studied law in his office, and know him very well.

Mr. DOHERTY: If he came to Ottawa, why did he carry the information back with him instead of communicating it here?

Mr. McKENZIE: There may be much ingenuity and logic in the remarks of my hon. friend, but there is no want of logic in Mr. Gillies' writing to the Marine and Fisheries Department about the business that he had with the Department of Justice, if he had it all. It is quite possible that Mr. Gillies might have obtained information from the Department of Justice, somehow or somewhere, through the many officers who could give him information in the absence of the minister, that would enable him to say to the Department of Marine and Fisheries: 'This officer will be out of jail in a few days.' Mr. Gillies was interested in the fortunes of this man, and was so anxious to get him out that it is said he made a trip to Ottawa for that purpose. I do not assert this as a fact, but simply give the statement according to the information I have received. I am quite willing to give Mr. Gillies due credit for doing everything in his power to get his friend out of jail if he could properly do so; I would do the same thing myself if I could do it with any degree of safety but the Minister of Justice will excuse me and the hon. member for Richmond if we try to find some ground for the statement of Mr. Gillies, particularly when it turned out to be true. Gillies does not claim to be a prophet, but he makes an extraordinary statement about the release of a man who is serving a year's sentence, saying that he would be out in a few days, and, sure enough, out he comes! How did he know? We have a right to assume that he found out, from some authoritative source, that the prisoner was going to get out. I would like to point out to the Minister of Finance that the crime of which this man was convicted is one which, according to the code, is deserving of life imprisonment, which is the maximum sentence. This man was unquestionably found guilty of the crime of forgery, and this would entitle the judge to send him to jail for the balance of his natural life. That is the law, but the judge who tried the case cut the sentence down to one year. Surely there could not be a more glaring case for the consideration of the minister than that of a man who, although unreservedly found guilty of a crime for which he could be imprisoned for life, is sentenced by this humane judge to the common jail for a period of one year. I was astonished that hon. gentlemen should dwell on the fact that this crime was connected with a note amounting to only $50. Is that a proper argument to be used by those responsible for the administration of justice in this country? Is the fact that a man has committed forgery in connection with a note for $50 any reason why he should not receive punishment? I suppose if it were a matter of $5 or $10, he would not be punished at all! I always understood, judging from the class of literature the Prime Minister has been wont to distribute broadcast throughout the country, that the men he would appoint to office would be above reproach in every particular. It has been mentioned also that this man got only $9 for one particular service rendered, and $240 for another, and the matter of the amount of money he was receiving was allowed to over-shadow the principle under which he was employed. I suppose we can have in the employment of the Government men who are forgers or perjurers or anything else—it is entirely a matter of how much money they get. If it is a small amount, he cannot be punished for stealing it; if the position pays a small salary, anybody will do. I would call the attention of the hon. member for Frontenac to a remark made by the hon. Minister of Justice the other day. Speaking of a man who is a cousin of the Secretary of State, he referred to him as a personator, perjurer, blackmailer, and something else, and when the Minister of Justice was so characterizing him he was, I am told, carrying in his pocket a letter from the Department of Marine and Fisheries promising him an office; he was carrying in his pocket letters from the Secretary of State to 'My dear Cousin,' saying: 'I could not put you in the Department of Public Works, but I am going to get you a nice comfortable nest in my own department, or somewhere else.' Is that the kind of man that comports with the manifesto of my right hon. friend? Is that the type of official he and his government would appoint? I would not have said anything about this matter were it not for the unjustifiable tirade on the part of the hon. member for Frontenac, which although it had nothing to do with this case, we cannot allow to be sent broadcast throughout the country without answering in a most emphatic way. I submit that if the acting Minister of Justice had followed the character of this crime and the consideration which it had received in Nova Scotia from the different tribunals to which it had gone, he would have been more careful in acting upon a mere telegram from some doctor who turned out to be a relative of the prisoner. If any danger to life had been proven to the Minister of Justice, no person would more readily come to his aid in acting on that than myself. We are told that this was a ticket-of-leave. If I understand the Act it is in the power of the Minister of Justice to bring this man back to jail. If he got out of jail by misrepresentation or fraud it is within the power of the minister to take him back and make him serve the balance of his term. If he had been pardoned he would be beyond the power of the minister. Why was he not brought back to jail?

Mr. WHITE: What authority has the hon. member for the statement that the department was, as a matter of fact, imposed upon? I say that this was a sick man, that he suffered before and since from stone of the kidney.

Mr. McKENZIE: The only way in which I, as an individual, can let him out is on the supposition that the minister was imposed upon and that he believed statements to be facts which were lies. I say there was nothing the matter with that man and the minister never took the trouble to verify the stories submitted to him. He should teach gentlemen of that kind a lesson and show them that they cannot impose on his department as they did. I am told that Mr. Côté simply said: Upon the facts this man is not entitled to be released but if it is true that he is suffering as they say he is and his life is in danger, that is another matter. Mr. Cote did not pass judgment on that.

Mr. WHITE: Mr. Coté recommended distinctly that the ticket-of-leave should be granted in view of the communications and the position as to the condition of this man.

Mr. McKENZIE: That if it turned out there was no truth in the statements as to his condition, when it was brought to the knowledge of the minister that this was questioned, if I had had any responsibility as a minister I would have taken the earliest possible opportunity to ascertain whether the statement was correct or not. The one question was whether or not the statement in the telegram from that doctor was justified by the physical condition of the prisoner. If the minister can satisfy me that the physical condition of the prisoner was such as it was represented to him to be there would be no cause for criticism but we are told that the physical condition of the prisoner was what it was when he went to jail. The letter read by the Minister of Justice was just such a letter as a doctor who had sent that telegram would have to write in order to support his position; had it been desired to have the letter of this doctor substantiated it would have been an easy matter to have called in one or both of the two doctors residing at Arichat.

I submit that the whole case bears a tinge tint and current of suspicious circumstances which justify the position taken by hon. gentlemen on this side in regard to it.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Government of Northwest Territories—schools, $3,000.

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition asked for information about the schools. I have a statement here from the department which is as follows:—

LIST OF SCHOOLS IN THE NEW NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

Place.	School.	Number of Pupils.	Yearly Grant.
Roman Catholic— Fort Providence	Sacred Heart	15	$ 400 00
Roman Catholic— Fort Resolution	St. Joseph's School	20	400 00
Episcopal— Great Slave Lake	Hay River School	29	400 00
Episcopal— Fort McPherson	St. Matthew's Mission	20	200 00
Episcopal— Herschel Island	Herschel Island School	26	200 00
Episcopal— Mackenzie River	Fort Simpson School	10	200 00
			$1,800 00

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Are these white children or Indians or Halfbreeds?

Mr. BORDEN: There are some of all these classes attending the schools, I think, but I have not absolute information on the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Perhaps my right hon. friend could give me the information later.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I noticed an item in the estimates for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police for compensation for injuries to a member of the force received in discharge of duty. How is it in the case of a policeman who is killed? Is any compensation given to his family? I have in mind the case of a policeman who happened to belong to my own province, and who lost his life in the Northwest.

Mr. BORDEN: There have been a number of grants to families of members of the force who have been killed in the discharge of their duty, or who have died in the discharge of their duty through accident. For example, in the case of Inspector Fitzgerald, who my hon. friend will remember died in the discharge of his duty, Parliament made provision last year. I think it is usually done by special vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I had rather in mind the case of an ordinary policeman who loses his life in the service, and I desire to know whether it is understood that some provision is made for his family, say for six months or for three months.

Mr. BORDEN: I think there is a provision of that kind, but I am not able to state the exact amount.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 28, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

THE COST OF LIVING—REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to table a special report just issued by my department, which seems to be particularly opportune at the present time. Its subject is the important one of the rise in the cost of living, in which everyone is interested and naturally so in view of recent developments. This is not the first report on the subject to be published by the department.

A report issued in 1910 gave a review of the course of prices in Canada from 1890 up to the preceding year. Since then annual reports have been issued bringing the statistics up to date, the first covering the year 1910, and the second the year 1911. The present report covers the year 1912. I think I may say that it is a much better document than any of its predecessors. During the past year I have very materially strengthened the statistical branch of my department, which is in charge of Mr. Coates; and the result has been a marked increase in the efficiency of its work, as will be seen by comparing the report with its predecessors in the same field. I may add that it is only the precursor of a considerable programme in statistics which the department has mapped out.

The report gives a detailed review of the movement of prices, wholesale and retail, in Canada during the past year. Altogether, nearly three hundred articles, selected on account of their representative character, have been covered. The movement as a whole has been analyzed from various points of view. For each article a considerable mass of information has been assembled, covering such points as production, demand, trade conditions, &c., &c., facts bearing not only on prices but on the causes of the recent advance. Grains, live stock, meats, dairy products, fish, groceries, textiles, leather, lumber, fuel, housefurnishings and chemicals are only a few of the classes of articles thus covered. The retail prices given in the report are collected from every locality in Canada having over 10,000 inhabitants. There is an appendix to the report which treats of the similar movement in Great Britain, the United States and Australasia, and another appendix in which statistics and other matter illustrative of the effects of gold production on prices have been brought together. I might say that the general result of the inquiry shows that prices went up by probably over six per cent, in 1912.

For the first six months the advance was due chiefly to short world supply of foodstuffs on the back of which came a severe winter. There was a recession from this in the summer due to good crop prospects the world over, but in the autumn the rise set in again, being due this time to increases in materials rather than foods, and being indicative of the widespread prosperity of industry which prevailed not only in this country but in Great Britain and the United States.

Hon. members may have noticed in the press yesterday that the question of the high cost of living has been actively debated in the Ontario legislature, and that the opinion was expressed that the subject was one that could be more effectively handled by the Dominion Government. My own personal view is that the problem is one that is world-wide in its extent, and that what is really required is an investigation on an international scale. As hon. members know, Mr. Taft, when President of the United States, sent a special message to Congress, now about a year ago, recommending that the United States take a lead in such an inquiry, and that the sum of $20,000 should be voted by Congress to defray the expense of calling a preliminary conference. The project was overwhelmed in the rush of business that accompanies the closing of one presidential regime and the beginning of another, and it has not yet reappeared under the Wilson administration. Until some such inquiry is made the application of the remedies will be difficult. Most of the great staple commodities have their prices fixed in the world markets and the effect of such a phenomenon as the recent remarkable increase in the gold output can only be observed on a world-wide scale. The present report will supply some very valuable information for the discussion of this question in Canada. It will be ready for general distribution early next week.

PILOTAGE COMMISSION.

Mr HAZEN. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition yesterday asked me if I would bring down the report of the Pilotage Commission upon which I ordered a test of the eyesight of the pilots of Quebec. Other hon. members have asked questions on the same subject. I have the report here, and as it is very brief, I might read it.

Mr. SPEAKER: It seems to me a very irregular practice to read and analyze reports in presenting them to the House. As I understand the rule, it provides that the name of the report shall be given, and that is all that is permissible. It would become very inconvenient if any other course were followed.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Speaker, I bow at once to your ruling, and lay this report upon the table of the House.

DISASTROUS FLOODS IN THE UNITED STATES.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Prime Minister if it would be suitable to express sympathy with our neighbours to the south in the disaster that has recently overtaken them. I refer to the matter because the President of the United States has characterized the catastrophe as a national calamity. It seems to me that we should express some kindliness towards them at this time.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): I am sure that not only every hon. member of this House but all the people of Canada have heard with the deepest regret the tidings of the disaster to which my hon. friend alludes, and that we all sympathize with those who have suffered in that disaster. My hon. friend speaks of some formal expression of sympathy by this House. I will take that into consideration. In the meantime I do not think it is necessary at the moment to say more than I have already said,—that in a disaster of such apalling character as that which has come upon the people of the neighbouring nation, people of our own kith and kin, the sympathy of the people of Canada goes out in very large measure to all who have suffered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I may say to my hon. friend from West Peterborough that I have a very vivid recollection that when Chicago was destroyed by fire in 1871, the business men of Chicago met in the ruins of their city and issued a statement to the people of the United States telling them that the best way to afford assistance would be by at once extending business to the people of Chicago. Extending business is a very good way of helping. But I do not know that it would be agreeable to my hon. friend.

ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond): Once again, I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when we may expect to resume the adjourned debate on the motion for papers on the subject of the acquisition of lands owned by J. A. Gillies, at St. Peters, N. S., for canal purposes.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): I will be glad to go on with that discussion whenever we can reach it, and will be glad to give some of the hon. gentleman's own affidavits at the same time.

Mr. KYTE: I am anxious to have some particular day fixed for the debate, because I wish to have the papers brought down before the estimates are discussed.

SUPERIOR COURTS OF ONTARIO.

Bill No. 155, respecting the Superior Courts of the province of Ontario—(Mr. Doherty), read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1—changed name of Ontario Court of Appeal not to affect references under existing law:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understand that this Bill is simply to accommodate our legislation to the new condition of things established in the province of Ontario. The second section, I understand fairly well; that has reference to reserved cases. Reserved cases in the criminal courts were referred to the High Court of Justice for Ontario. I understand that now all reserve cases will go to the High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, or to a judge thereof. But I would like an explanation of the first section. The first section provides that:

> Where by any Act of the Parliament of Canada heretofore passed provision is made by which any jurisdiction, power or authority is conferred upon, or provision is made for an appeal to, or the stating a case for the opinion of, or for any proceeding, matter or thing being had, taken or done by or before the Court of Appeal for Ontario, such jurisdiction, power and authority shall be deemed to be conferred upon, such appeal shall lie to, such case may be stated for the opinion of, and such proceeding, matter or thing may be had, taken or done by or before a Divisional Court of the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if he has in mind any such statute as that which is referred to in this section, and which confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Appeal of Ontario.

Mr. DOHERTY: I cannot point out at this moment any provision conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Appeal for Ontario, but as a matter of fact, there is such a case now actually pending and it has been argued before one of the divisional courts of appeal of the Supreme Court of Ontario as designated in the New Ontario Act. I am quite clear that there are provisions providing either for the stating of a case or an appeal to the Court of Appeal as it stood before this change. I cannot at this moment point out the particular statute conferring the jurisdiction, but from the fact that I have it from the Attorney General of Ontario and from the fact that the judges of Ontario have considered that it was necessary that this provision should be made, I have no doubt that, if one looked up the statute, one would find that there are cases to which it would apply. In any event, if there be no provision of our statutes conferring any jurisdiction upon the Court of Appeal of Ontario, the worst that could be said of this section would be that it was unnecessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know of any statute of our own which gives to the Court of Appeal of Ontario such a jurisdiction as would be supposed from the wording of this section. I understand that my hon. friend has no such statute in his mind at the present moment. May I ask him what is the nature of the case which would, in his opinion, necessitate this jurisdiction being given to the divisional court of Ontario ?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have to confess that I assumed from the action of the Attorney General and the judges of Ontario that there were cases which made such legislation necessary, and I may say that a case has been brought and has actually been heard by one of the divisions of the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Ontario. That case would only be brought under the law conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Appeal of Ontario.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The explanation is not very satisfactory. I shall not press the point, because, if we err we cannot do any wrong, but I think my hon. friend will agree that it is not satisfactory to go it blind without information, as we appear to be doing in this case.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that any doubt arises in view of the position of the Attorney General and the judges of Ontario, but I admit that it would have been more satisfactory to have verified the facts.

On section 3—commencement of Act:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I see you are making the Act effective. Is that necessary?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is necessitated by the fact that one case has been actually taken and argued before the Appellate Division.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have not followed this Bill very closely, but I understand that quite recently the point was raised at Osgoode Hall in the argument of a case under the Winding Up Act, that the new division of the Appelate Court hearing that action has no jurisdiction. Is it the intention of the present Bill to remedy that defect, if there is a defect? Will not that affect the rights of litigants in litigation now pending? If that defect exists, if the court has not the proper authority I think that litigants should have the benefit of the exception they have already taken. Would it be right of this Parliament to pass a clause that is retroactive in its effect to cure defects in the law affecting a particular case now pending?

Mr. DOHERTY: Unless it would be considered desirable to attach to the mere change of the name of the court a deprivation of the right to appeal, I do not see that anybody would have ground to complain. Because of the fact, that any doubt whether the giving of a new name to the Court of Appeal of Ontario altered the jurisdiction of that court, should be removed, I do not see that anyone would have any just ground of complaint. If it should be considered that this legislation modified the position of any litigant, I have no doubt that the court, as far as the question of costs is concerned, would feel perfectly free to deal with that matter equitably. But, if it should be considered that the change of designation of the court deprived the court, under its new name, of jurisdiction, the result would be that unless we do this, the right of appeal to which parties were entitled under the law enacted by this Parliament would be destroyed and the right would be destroyed merely by the change in the designation of the court. As I have said, the judges of the courts of Ontario have thought it desirable that any doubt upon this question should be removed by legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the legislation of this House tribunals have been prescribed in which certain proceedings may be had, as in the case I mentioned as coming under the Dominion Winding Up Act. It is prescribed under that Act that there shall be an appeal to the Court of Appeal for Ontario. In Ontario, the Court of Appeal, as formerly constituted has gone out of existence, and a new tribunal has been established under the authority of the legislature of the province of Ontario. By the Act constituting this authority it is provided that all matters which heretofore went to the Ontario Court of Appeal shall now be determined by the new appellate division of the Superior Court as reconstituted by the recent legislation in Ontario. I do not know that there is any great objection to that course, but it changes the whole of the original intention of this House when it fixed the jurisdiction and powers of the appellate division of the Superior Court in the province of Ontario. Having regard to the point that has recently been raised in the province of Ontario regarding the jurisdiction of the new courts to hear appeals in cases provided for by Dominion legislation, I do not think it would be wise on the part of this House to pronounce on that question by the introduction in this Bill of a retroactive clause. I think this Act should be allowed to take effect in the ordinary course, from and after the date of its passage. It looks to me as if that clause had been inserted simply to overcome some difficulty which has been brought to the attention of the Government by the Attorney General of the province, or perhaps, some of the judges in the city of Toronto. There has been a good deal of criticism in Ontario by the bench and by the Bar as to the advisability of reconstructing the Ontario courts, as has been done during the past year. If difficulties followed that reconstruction, I do not think, in the absence of more information than we now have before us, that we should pass a retroactive clause and validate something which is wrong, if there be anything wrong.

If the Minister of Justice would be good enough to tell us the precise reason for inserting such an unusual clause in a public Act, we would be in a better position to deal with the matter, but, to use a commonplace expression, there must be a nigger on the fence somewhere, and as such unusual clauses are considered to constitute very questionable legislation, I think we ought to have a plain statement, before the clause passes in committee, as to why it was inserted in the Bill.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I understand it, the reason why that clause has been inserted is to make it quite clear that during the period since the change in the designation of the Court of Appeal in Ontario became effective, all parties who were entitled to an appeal to the Court of Appeal of Ontario have not been left with no tribunal to which that appeal could be taken, and, therefore, have not been deprived of their right to appeal. Our legislation as it stands clearly expresses the intention that in all matters to which it refers, the Court of Appeal of Ontario shall be given jurisdiction to hear appeals. The name of the Court of Appeal of Ontario has been changed, it is true, and the court has been differently organized, but the fact remains that that court is the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and, therefore, is the court contemplated and intended by our legislation. It would seem to me to be a greater evil to concede that a consequence certainly never contemplated by the Ontario legislature—namely the deprivation of parties of the right of appeal which our laws gave them—has resulted from its legislation than the possibility that somebody may be deprived of the benefits of an exclusively and absolutely technical objection. As I said a moment ago if the court should come to the conclusion that the objection was well founded, no doubt they would feel at liberty to deal with the matter so far as costs are concerned, but it does seem to me to be a substantial injustice to allow this mere change of name to deprive people of a right which our laws intended to give them, and, unless this clause is inserted, if it should be held that the designation in name makes any difference, the situation created would be that from the 1st of January until to-day—though undoubtedly our legislation intended that there should be an appeal, and though undoubtedly the Ontario legislature did not intend to deprive the Court of Appeal, though it gave it a new name and organized it differently, of any of its jurisdiction—during that interval the right to appeal would have ceased to exist. I think it would be a substantial injustice that such an effect should be attached to the legislation in Ontario which most certainly was never contemplated, and that consideration is a quite sufficient justification for our making the Act applicable from the time the new legislation in Ontario came into force. The purpose is precisely to prevent that legislation having the effect of depriving persons of the right of appeal during that period of time

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand that the intention of the minister is to cure any defects that may arise between the 1st of January and the time this Bill ordinarily goes into force. But why not let the present appellate division of the court, before which an action is pending, decide whether it has proper jurisdiction at the present time, without inserting this clause in the Bill. As I have said, the question has been brought up, and I understand that some of the judges have refused to decide it. There is no doubt about the fact that the reconstruction of the appellate division of the Superior Court in Ontario is not meeting with universal approval, either by the judges, the barristers, or the public. Much has been said in the newspapers concerning the matter, and, while I do not desire to enter into any lengthy discussion, I think that the provincial authorities have probably fallen into an error, and they are now urging this Government to let them out of the error into which they have fallen. Pending litigation may be seriously prejudiced by the insertion of this clause, and while I have no great objection to the Bill in itself, I do think that objection can be taken to this particular section.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think the greater prejudice and the more serious injustice would be to allow the legislation of Ontario—which certainly is not intended to produce that effect—to deprive people of the substantial rights which our laws gave them during that period of time. The result of the application of this Bill will be that the courts of appeal which Ontario furnishes are now given a certain designation. Our legislation provided for an appeal to the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and the purpose of this Bill is to see that people shall not be deprived of their right in this regard.

Mr. CARVELL: I presume that this legislation has been the result of representations made to the minister by somebody. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) states that his recollection is that the matter was raised in court by some litigant. I can understand quite well that the object of the Minister of Justice is to make perfectly clear the rights of parties but my friend will remember that naturally, when retroactive legislation is proposed, men ask why it is necessary. There must be some personal or private interest involved or the machinery of Parliament would not be in motion to pass a law of this kind and the only question we have to decide is: Is it fair and proper to all parties concerned that this legislation should be passed. The Minister of Justice argues that it is necessary, and if we are to accept his argument, probably every member of the House would agree that had this matter come up in December, we would all have agreed to it; because, as I understand the Ontario legislation did not become effective until the 1st of January. Evidently since the 1st of January this objection has been taken in the court and my friend the minister, who was a practising barrister at one time, knows that a barrister does not like to have an important point taken away from him. I have never had that experience; but I think if I felt that I could win a case and if I saw the legislature legislating away my right, I would consider it an unwarrantable interference with my affairs. That point should be looked into carefully before the legislation is passed. Personally I doubt if it would make much difference. I believe that the Ontario courts would hold that parties had the right to apply to whatever might be the proper appellate court. I do not think the mere fact of changing the name of a court would take away the right of appeal. When the Judicature Act was introduced in my own province two or three years ago a great many of these technical appeals and objections were raised but our court had not any difficulty whatever in brushing them all aside. One of the first cases I had to contend with after the Appeal Court came in was an application made by a very prominent barrister to set aside a matter in which I was interested on the ground that I had improperly designated the court, but the court did not listen to him and did not even call on me to answer the argument; they simply brushed it aside and said they would not stand on such trivialities as that. I am of opinion that that would be the case here and it seems to me it is rather dangerous legislation to pass a retroactive clause to a Bill which evidently must be inspired by some person or private interest. You may say that it works out to the public good in the end; but there is no doubt that we are helping some barriester or solicitor out of a difficulty in which he finds himself, and if we are doing that we are taking away from another barrister or solicitor a right to which he thinks he is entitled. Therefore the Minister of Justice should consider carefully before asking Parliament to pass retroactive legislation such as this.

Mr. DOHERTY: I was thinking of the clients rather than the barristers.

Mr. PARDEE: It appears to me that the whole trouble might be overcome by putting in at the end of the last clause of the Bill the usual saving clause providing that nothing herein shall affect pending litigation. That would amply preserve the whole ground. This is ex post facto legislation and consequently something that neither the House or anyone else cares particularly about and it appears to me that there could be no harm in the Minister of Justice putting in such a clause.

Mr. DOHERTY: The only purpose is to prevent there being an interrregnum during which no right of appeal would exist and if we introduce the clause I am now asked to insert it would produce the result that there would be such an interregnum as regards all pending cases.

Mr. PARDEE: I suppose such a technical question has been raised. Is it right by this to take away from whoever has raised that question his right to raise it or to stand on it by passing such legislation as this?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think it is right to prevent the party who had a right of appeal being deprived of it by an interpretation attached to a law which law was never intended to deprive him of his right and I think that the substantial right of appeal is vastly more important than the alleged right of a person to invoke that unintended consequence to relieve him of his action being susceptible of appeal when the law intended it should be susceptible of appeal.

Mr. PARDEE: There has hardly ever been a statute passed on which different interpretations have not been placed. Surely you would not then pass in a statute such legislation as is in this Bill but would enact such a clause as I suggested. If you put in the saving clause it is a mere matter of construction and it should be left to the court.

Mr. DOHERTY: We want to give them their rights as they were prior to the 1st of January.

Mr. CARVELL: I have always felt that too many appeals are provided for in Canada. I do not think we will do any harm to litigants and perhaps not much harm to solicitors themselves if we take away a lot of the rights of appeal which are given not to litigants but to solicitors and counsel. I do not think we will be doing much harm if we curtail to some extent the possible right of appeal by refusing to pass this retroactive legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us understand the effect of this thing. I have no objection to clauses 1 and 2 of the Bill; I think they are proper enough. We have so many Acts in the Revised Statutes of Canada which provide that an appeal may be had to the Court of Appeal for Ontario that it becomes of some consequence to consider what that court is. Up to the 31st of January last it was a judicial entity which we all recognized. It was abolished, as a matter of fact on the 31st of December. There is to-day no court of appeal for Ontario; consequently in all Dominion Acts where that expression is to be found the tribunal before which appeals ought to be taken has gone out of existence. Now, a new arrangement has been made under legislation of the province of Ontario whereby two appellate courts have been constituted. The names have been changed from the 'Court of Appeal of Ontario' to the 'Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario.' I do not think there is much objection to clauses 1 and 2, giving to the new Appellate Division the jurisdiction formerly possessed by the Court of Appeal of Ontario, which has gone out of existence. But I know that within the past three weeks a case was before one of the Appellate divisions, and during the argument of the appeal, a very able counsel in the province of Ontario took the objection that the court, as now constituted, had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The judges themselves, who constitute that Appellate Division, should have decided that point I think. It may be that their decision would have been that they had jurisdiction, or it may be that they would have decided they had no jurisdiction. They should have come to some decision upon the point, and they did not come to a decision on the point. It is common rumour, it is more than that, it is well defined knowledge on the part of the Bar in the province of Ontario and on the part of most people that the present rearrangement of judges in the appellate divisions is not uniformly acceptable. It is supposed that it is not a very great improvement on the former system, and questions have arisen as to how such a scheme was evolved in the first instance and as to its objects. A good many opinions were offered as to that; certain it is, that some correspondence has been published within the last five or six weeks, which leads one to believe that we have more judges in the High Court in the province of Ontario than we require for performing the work. Why it was that in the face of the opinion of the judges themselves that no more were necessary, more were demanded by the Ontario legislature and appointed by this Government, I cannot say. The point pending for decision is that the new Appellate Court has not the necessary jurisdiction, and I submit that we should not confer that jurisdiction upon it now when litigation is pending. I think that the clause suggested by the hon. member for Lambton would meet the situation, certainly so far as I am concerned. It is the usual saving clause that the previous Act should not affect the rights of pending litigants. I do not think the Government should go the length they are going now, because it is retroactive legislation. It is a principle that has always been condemned here and everywhere, that unless in cases of the gravest danger retroactive legislation should not pass.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is well understood by the minister that the establishment of the jurisdiction of appellate courts is not a provincial matter except as we might refer it, and except in criminal cases. That is our position. We simply say they shall have jurisdiction to deal with certain matters. That jurisdiction was created long ago, and I presume that appeals have been dealt with under that jurisdiction and direction. Was it not a matter for the new legislation of the province of Ontario that created the new court, to state that the jurisdicion heretofore exercised by the old Court of Appeal would be exercised by the new court?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am surprised that the hon. gentleman thinks that the legislature of the province of Ontario should have transferred the jurisdiction from one court to another. We are now saying that these are different courts upon one of which this Parliament had conferred jurisdiction. The suggestion of the hon. member is that the legislature of Ontario should have transferred that to some other court. I cannot agree with him at all.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am sorry the Minister of Justice does not understand me. It is perhaps a little regrettable that he should be so willing to transfer his regrets in the way he has been transferring them to-day. There is no question but that when jurisdiction was conferred upon the old court by this Parliament, all matters were referred to that jurisdiction, and when there was nothing but merely a change of name, if the act creating that court had shown that it continued to have the old jurisdiction over every matter with which up to that time it had had to deal, no judge in Ontario would say that that jurisdiction did not exist. So, I am not subject to any sympathy from the hon. Minister of Justice when I make that statement.

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not understand that I had expressed any sympathy for my hon. friend.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The contention of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) is certainly, in my humble judgment at all events, a proper one. We have no federal courts except the Supreme Court; the other courts are under provincial jurisdiction. I think that if a provincial court is charged by us to interpret our laws, and that court afterwards changes the interpretation of those laws, they set up a new court. We are remedying a deficiency in the Ontario Act. But the one practical point in this matter is the point raised by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). The Act is made retroactive. I understand from his statement that cases are pending at the present time in which the very question is raised whether or not the court, as constituted, has the power to try certain cases. Under such circumstances, is my hon. friend the Minister of Justice prepared to override this, and to say there will be jurisdiction from the first of January, when the point is at issse in the courts now?

Mr. DOHERTY: There may be two opinions as to whether the legislation is desirable, but its purpose is to make it clear that from the first of January last this court had jurisdiction. I understand that one of the reasons why this legislation was asked for was that there is now pending a reserved capital case, and argument has been heard before the appellate division of the High Court of Ontario. I understand that the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) said that there is pending a case under the Winding-up Act in which the question has been raised as to whether jurisdiction existed or not. That may be a doubtful question; I am very much inclined personally—I am speaking offhand, without examination of the question—to agree with the view that probably the change of name did not modify the jurisdiction. But the question which this House has to deal with is: is it more important to make sure that a man who had a substantial right of appeal given to him by this Parliament is not deprived of that right by an unintended effect of the Ontario legislation, than to secure that the man against whom such an appeal may be taken shall if that first effect is attached to the legislation be by accident, if I may so express it, placed in such a position that he is not liable to be brought before the Court of Appeal? In my humble judgment the first evil is the greater, and the one we ought to remedy, and while no doubt it is not desirable to enact retroactive legislation, except where a substantial evil is to be remedied, I submit to this House that this is a case where there is a substantial evil to be remedied. If it should be held that the change in designation and the division of work in the Appeal Court of Ontario has constituted an entirely new court the legislation is necessary. If that should not be decided, then our legislation is unnecessary. But should we wait to have this decided, the judgment that will be rendered will be final and the man who had given to him by this Parliament that substantial right of appeal will have suffered the injustice of having had it finally determined as regards himself that the uncomtemplated effect of the legislation of the province of Ontario has been to deprive him of his right of appeal. There is actually pending a reserved case a capital case. Do hon. gentlemen contend that it is desirable that we should so enact this legislation that a man who has been sentenced, or is liable to be sentenced to death, shall have no right to appeal at all? If it should be held that this appellate division of the Supreme Court of Ontario had no jurisdiction, there would be an end to his appeal and there would be no court which had jurisdiction. That is a pretty serious matter from that point of view. I instance that as it happens to be an existing case, but on general principles, if there is any doubt as to whether a man has lost the substantial right of appeal, I think that is precisely a case where retroactive legislation is justified. As regards the power of the province of Ontario, by its statute, to enact that all jurisdiction which the court of appeal previously had, including the jurisdiction which this Parliament conferred upon it, passed to the new court, I had no intention, in expressing a difference of opinion with my hon. friend from Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie), to do it in any disrespectful way, but notwithstanding what the right hon. the leader of the Opposition has said, and notwithstanding the great respect which I have for his opinion, I still adhere to my view that the jurisdiction which could only be conferred by this Parliament only could be transferred by this Parliament. If the present court has jurisdiction it would not be because the legislation of Ontario gave it in the creation of the new court. It would only be because the fact that the legislature of Ontario chose to designate, under a new name, the court to which appeals in Ontario go, the legislation enacted for that purpose would not deprive that court of the jurisdiction which this Parliament conferred upon it. But to my mind, if legislation is necessary to confer any jurisdiction which originated in this Parliament upon the newly designated court, then this Parliament alone should pass it. But even conceding that there should be some doubt upon the question, I confess it seems to me clear that the interests of justice require that these doubts should be removed and the purpose of this legislation is to remove them. It may ultimately transpire that this legislation was not necessary, that the law would not in any way affect the jurisdiction of this newly designated court. But after all, if it is true that the result of this legislation will come about without our saying anything, I think it is pretty safe to say that things that will come about without saying anything will come about a little better and, at all events just as well, if you do say something. The whole purpose of this legislation is to remove any doubt on the question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am going to test the thing by moving:

That section 3 be amended by adding thereto the words following: 'but the provisions of this Act shall not apply to litigation now pending except the proceedings under the Criminal Code, 1902, and amendments.'

We will let it apply to the criminal cases.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps I may be allowed to intrude into the sacred circles of the law. Probably I will call things by their real names with less delicacy than some members of the legal profession would in discussing the result of this change in the arrangement of the courts in Ontario. First, there is dissatisfaction with the change, of which I am aware; second, it provides two vacancies for friends, of which I am aware; and, thirdly, it makes another chief justiceship, of which I am aware. These are the concrete results of this legislation. I have had considerable discussion and some correspondence with leading members of the Bar and I know that this whole arrangement is eminently unsatisfactory. I wish strongly to protest against retroactive legislation unless there is a clear and distinct case made out in favour of it. I regret to say I do not think the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) has made out that clear case. It perhaps will not be out of place for me to say that I think the Ontario powers have not been as careful in some of their legislation as to existing rights as this House has always been. I have had experience where legislation was passed after suit had been entered and for the sole purpose of influencing the decision in that suit. I do not think that in this Parliament we ought to countenance any legislation looking in that direction. This retroactive legislation must be enacted to affect some case or cases. My contention always has been, since I have been in a legislature, that no parliament, no government, has any right to intervene, unless under the most extraordinary circumstances, in the rights of parties to any litigation. If they take the step once they will find that it is very difficult to refuse to take a similar step for other parties when they ask them to do so. What right can be affected if the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is adopted? It will be a safeguard to this Parliament for all future legislation. My own opinion, in what I have heard, is that there is a distinct request for this legislation from a certain direction and I do not think that we ought to countenance a request for this kind of legislation. Might I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice if the Ontario Government itself has asked for this legislation; and, if so, what reason does it give?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have been requested by the Ontario Government to enact this legislation. The Ontario Government gives reasons substantially the same as I have given myself, that, in its judgment and in the judgment of the judges of Ontario, it is desirable to remove any doubt as to whether the legislation changing the designation of the court has deprived that court of jurisdiction which it formerly had. I would thoroughly agree with what was said by my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), if this was a question of retroactive legislation which was intended to deprive people of their rights. This, however, is legislation intended simply to prevent people from being deprived of their rights, which unquestionably they had on the 31st of December, by the issue of a proclamation by the Ontario Government, bringing this law into effect. If the bringing into force of the Ontario Act prevented the court under its new name from having jurisdiction, then on the first day of January the people were deprived of their rights. The purpose of this Bill is to remedy that uncontemplated and unintended effect, and to prevent people, to whom this Parliament has given rights, from being deprived of them by an unintended consequence of an Act passed by the Ontario legislature.

Mr. CROTHERS: My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has expressed his conception of the motives for passing the provincial legislation which has given rise to this Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: I said this was the result; I did not say anything about motives.

Mr. CROTHERS: The result. I could understand a lawyer objecting to the new statute passed by the legislature of Ontario, but I cannot understand a layman doing so. What was the object of that legislation? Any member of the Bar of Ontario knows that for many years there was a great outcry amongst the people owing to the extraordinary cost of litigation and the number of appeals. The Supreme Court of Ontario, prior to the passing of the Act, was composed of a court of appeal and a high court. The High Court was divided into four divisions. There was an appeal from a trial judge to one of these four divisions, another appeal from the judgment of the Divisional Court to the Court of Appeal, another appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, and another appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This Act was passed primarily to cut out one appeal, owing to the objections of the laymen of the province to the extraordinary cost of so many appeals. Under the new Act, we have simply the High Court of the Supreme Court and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The appeal under this present law will go directly from the trial judge to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The cost of one appeal is thereby cut out. The Act was passed, if I remember right—and I speak with some diffidence in regard to this—in the year 1909, and it probably was the duty of the Government then in power at Ottawa to see to it that legislation was passed by this House to meet the proposed altered conditions in Ontario.

Mr PROULX: This legislation was to be brought into force by proclamation.

Mr. CROTHERS: I was just about to say so. Although the Act was passed in the year 1909, provision was made that it was not to come into force until after proclamation by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and that proclamation was issued to take effect on the first day of January of this year. That fact would not prevent this legislature from passing the Act to provide for the altered conditions, when they might be brought into force by the proclamation. The net result is that one weapon, provided by the province for determining legislation passed by this House, that is, the Court of Appeal, now called the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has, according to the suggestion of my hon. friend, been knocked out of existence on the first day of January. Take, for instance, a case depending upon a statute passed by this House, where a notice of appeal was given on the 1st day of December last to the court then in existence in Ontario, namely, the Court of Appeal, and that appeal comes on for hearing on the 10th day of January. The argument is: you are out of court; there is no such thing as the Court of Appeal now, although you gave the notice to the court that was in existence at the time you gave the notice. Do my hon. friends opposite desire to bring about such a result as that? Do they desire to do away with the weapon which we have chosen for the determination of legislation passed in this House? That may be the effect of what they are proposing. Who is injured? Is it the lawyer, who, according to my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), is engaged on one of these appeals, and who desires, upon a technicality, to secure a little fame and a good deal of costs; or is it the people who are interested in seeing that justice is done and that the laws made by this legislature are carried out in the same court under another name? If we are here for the purpose of lending our influence to the administration of justice and to the execution of statutes passed by this House, it seems to me that we should accept this proposition at once. Any other course can only tend to prevent the carrying out of our laws, and to that extent to do an injustice to the people at large.

Mr. BORDEN: If my hon. friend who moved this amendment had given a little consideration to the principle which governs the prospective or retrospective construction of the statute, he would hardly have taken the trouble to press it. There is a very clear distinction which, I think, is known to most lawyers, that while statutes are not construed retrospectively with regard to the rights of parties, they are construed as applying to the pending actions if they relate only to the practice and procedure of the courts. I am not at all sure that the clause which the Minister of Justice has inserted in this Bill is necessary, but whether it is necessary or not it simply carries out a principle which ought to be applied in such cases. The amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington is in direct abnegation of the principles which, under authority that could be easily quoted, would apply to such enactments. It is hardly necessary to quote authority for so simple a proposition, which I have heard ever since I was a student-at-law. But if authority is necessary, I would quote the last edition of Maxwell on the 'Interpretation of the Statues,' one of the best recognized authorities on this subject in which this is laid down:

> In both of the above cases, however, the construction, though fatal to the enforcement of a vested right, by shortening the time for enforcing it, did not in terms take away any such right; and, in both, it seems to fall within the general principle that the presumption against a retrospective construction has no application to enactments which affect only the procedure and practice of the courts, even where the alteration which the statute makes has been disadvantageous to one of the parties. Although to make a law for punishing that which, at the time when it was done, was not punishable, is contrary to sound principle; a law which merely alters the procedure may, with perfect propriety, be made applicable to past as well as future transactions; and no secondary meaning is to be sought for an enactment of such a kind. No person has a vested right in any course of procedure. He has only the right of prosecution or defence in the manner prescribed for the time being, by or for the court in which he sues; and if an Act of Parliament alters that mode of procedure, he has no other right than to proceed accordingly to the altered mode.

So, if this provision were not in the statutes, then from the time the statute is enacted the parties must proceed in the courts according to the law as it has been altered. Therefore the provision which my hon. friend seeks to introduce by his amendment would interfere absolutely with the principle of the law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My right hon. friend says 'from the time this statute was enacted,' I admit that.

Mr. BORDEN: But my hon. friend says that that ought to be interfered with. What the Minister of Justice is doing is to make it applicable to litigation from the time that the law was altered in regard to the Ontario courts. He is not extending the principle but he is applying the same principle to the date when the Ontario Act took effect, because these cases now pending in the courts of Ontario ought to be subject to the provision of this enactment not only from the day it received the assent of Parliament and of the Crown, but from the day that the Ontario Act took effect. So, there is no violation of any principle. Further than that, it seems to me purely a formal matter. The legislature of Ontario, acting absoutely within its jurisdiction, has seen fit to alter the constitution of its courts and to give certain courts a new designation. It is necessary as a matter of conformity, and in order to prevent confusion, and in order that parties may not lose their right of appeal, that we should make our statutes conform to the statutes of Ontario. If this had not been a federation, if there had only been one legislature to deal with the whole matter, it would have been dealt with in one Act. But, inasmuch as we here have jurisdiction over criminal matters and Ontario has jurisdiction over certain matters of procedure, it is necessary that there should be an enactment of Parliament as well as of the legislature. I cannot see that any objection ought to be made against the application of this statute to the date at which the constitution of the courts in Ontario was altered and at which the title or designation by which these courts are known to the law was changed in certain respects which did not in the slightest way affect the rights of any suitor in those courts but was merely for the convenient administration of the law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If I understand my right hon. friend's argument it is that as this is merely in the nature of a change of procedure of the courts, it would be viewed, as a matter of course, retroactively and retrospectively, and would be made applicable to the practice of the courts even if clause 3 were not in the present Act. That being correct, there can be no necessity for clause 3.

Mr. BORDEN: There can be no harm in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It validates that to which exception has been taken in the pending litigation. That is the principle which I would like to have cleared up. I do not altogether agree with my right hon. friend in his interpretation of the matter; but, without discussing that, I would suggest to him that, on the strength of his own opinion, which is a strong, bold, well-put opinion, we should strike out clause 3 and allow clauses 1 and 2 to go into operation. If he is right all the difficulty is overcome. Otherwise, I think the rights of pending litigants should be protected.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DUTY ON DITCHING MACHINERY.

On motion for Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (West Kent): Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I have a matter of considerable importance to my constituency and to the people of the province of Ontario generally to refer to. It has been drawn to the attention of the House by the resolution I placed on the Order Paper some time ago. I refer to the duty of 27½ per cent on ditching machinery. I would like to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments, in an endeavour to explain why I believe the Government should relieve the people of this unnecessary charge.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that there is a notice on the Order Paper in connection with this matter, and it would not be permissible for him to take it up and discuss it, as he would be anticipating a notice on the Order Paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There is no notice on the Order Paper to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: My attention was drawn to the matter, and I find that a notice was on the Order Paper yesterday. This brings up another matter which, it seems to me, it is desirable to mention at this stage, that is, with regard to the right to drop notices from the Order Paper without their being called in the House. If I understand it correctly, when a notice is put on the paper it can only be disposed of by the House, or, after it is called, on the request of the hon. member who has put it there to have it dropped, which is done with the consent of the House. I do not know whether there is a notice on the Order Paper to-day with regard to this matter, but it seems to me it would be in violation of the rules to discuss the subject upon the motion to go into Committee of Supply. The rule with regard to the matter is very plainly set out by Bourinot as follows:

The rule which requires a strict adherence to the Order Paper is absolutely necessary to prevent surprises. So rigorously is it enforced in the Imperial Parliament that even when it has been admitted that a day has been named by mistake, and no one has objected to the appointment of an earlier day, the change has not been permitted. It is quite irregular, even if a member proposes to conclude with a motion, to introduce and attempt to debate a subject which stands on the orders for another day.

Mr. NESBITT: The notice on the Order Paper was not withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: No, because we did not reach the notices of motion yesterday, and consequently it could not be dropped not having been called. It seems to me that the only way in which the matter could be dealt with would be with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BORDEN: If it is to be as short a discussion as I understand from the other side of the House it will be, I would suggest that the consent of the House be given to the hon. gentleman to discuss the matter.

The consent of the House having been granted:

Mr. McCOIG: Owing to the fact that private members day was withdrawn by the Government before we reached this motion, it was impossible for me to bring it to the attention of the House previously; but I am glad to have at the present time the consent of the House to direct the attention of the Government to the importance of granting the request which I am about to make. The resolution placed on the Order Paper on December 10 last by myself was as follows:

That, whereas tile drainage machinery is very extensively used in the whole of Canada and more particularly in Ontario by the farmers of the southwestern portion of the province;

And whereas the same is not now manufactured in Canada, but is brought from the United States in spite of a heavy duty and at a great sacrifice for those having to use it;

And whereas on account of the scarcity of labour, it is impossible for the agricultural communities to dispense with the use of machinery, it having become an absolute necessity for the proper tile drainage of land in connection with successful farming:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is the duty of this Parliament to put the said machinery on the free list until such time at least as it is manufactured in Canada.

The traction ditchers, in respect of which I am asking that the duty of 27½ per cent be removed, are not manufactured in Canada, and other agricultural implements which are manufactured in Canada are subject to a duty of 17½ per cent. It really appears to be unfair, therefore, that this implement, which is so badly needed for the digging of trenches and for the purposes of tile drainage, should be subject to this unnecessary tariff, in view of the fact that it is not manufactured in this country.

Mr. BLAIN: Does my hon. friend intend to move a motion in regard to this matter?

Mr. McCOIG: No, it is not my intention to conclude with a motion, but I desire to have a friendly discussion in regard to the matter. I believe my request should have the hearty endorsation of members on both sides of this House, and I am sure it will have the hearty endorsation of both Liberals and Conservatives. Since this resolution was placed on the Order Paper, I have received scores of letters from both Conservatives and Liberals, assuring me that everything possible should be done to bring the matter prominently before the attention of the Government. That is one of the reasons why I do not propose at the present time to divide the House on this question, as I think it is a matter which should be dealt with in an absolutely impartial and non-political way, and I believe that, before the discussion is closed all hon. gentlemen who are interested in this important matter will join with me in trying to influence the Government to grant the request. Not only have I received letters from scores of prominent farmers, but I have also received resolutions which were passed at the meeting of the Corn Growers' Association in the city of Windsor a short time ago, by representatives from the counties of Essex and Kent. These resolutions heartily endorsed the scheme, and, in addition to these, there was a resolution presented by the County Council of the county of Kent. I have forwarded these two resolutions to the hon. Minister of Finance, so that he can see how important this matter is to the people of the southwestern part of Ontario. Almost every municipal council in the western part of Ontario has sanctioned the idea. I have received copies of other resolutions, but, as I am not in possession of the originals, I am not in a position to present them to the hon. Minister of Finance. During the Fat Stock Show held recently in the city of Ottawa, Mr. W. H. Marcell, a prominent farmer in the township of Tilbury East, who was very anxious to have his farm tile-drained, and who had purchased tile for his 200 acres of land, was unable last fall to obtain the necessary help to do the tile draining, and he assured me that, although he had expected to get help to do the work, he was unable to do so. He had to purchase a traction ditcher at an expense of some $2,000, and the duty he paid thereon amounted to $500 or $600. Hon. gentlemen will readily perceive the hardships under which this gentleman laboured, carrying out his desire to have his farm properly drained. This is only one instance of many which I desire to quote in order to show hon. gentlemen of the Government the importance of having this duty removed. I have been assured by a good many men who are desirous of securing these traction ditchers that if the tariff is removed they will secure the machines and proceed with the work so badly needed in different sections of Ontario. Not only are the farmers in sympathy with having this duty removed, but I notice that the agricultural press are advocating this reform. Shortly after the resolution appeared on the Order Paper the Farmers' Advocate published the following article, dated January 19, 1913:

The movement for the removal of the duty on traction ditching machines, imported into Canada, is steadily gaining support, as readers of the Farmers' Advocate are aware. It is satisfactory to note that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which formerly took the attitude of simply 'not opposing' the proposition, have again considered the subject and have decided to 'recommend the removal of the duty.' During the unsuccessful negotiations, which took place in recent years, with a view to promoting the manufacture of the machines in Canada—

They have found it impossible to manufacture in Canada and they have decided to join with the farmers in asking for the removal of the duty.

—a fact was brought out the significance of which should be carefully borne in mind in connection with the working of our fiscal policies. The United States makers and every Canadian manufacturer or capitalist with whom the situation was discussed, in estimating the probable profits, determined the selling process in Canada of a Canadian-made ditcher by adding the duty (27½ per cent) to the United States selling price since they would have no competition. Under these conditions it appears that establishing a factory in Canada would not have cheapened the machines to any appreciable extent.

Mr. MUNSON (Northumberland): Do you not think that if, as you assert, you could build dreadnoughts in Canada, you might be able possibly to build these ditching machines?

Mr. McCOIG: I said that I hoped this matter would be dealt with in a non-partisan way and that I do not wish to divide the House. The question is of great importance to the people whom I represent and I am afraid that the hon. gentleman, who has nothing else but dreadnoughts in his mind, will have to wait until the important question of the construction of dreadnoughts in Canada or elsewhere comes up for consideration. The article goes on:

A further point deserving consideration in regard to duty-removal is this—that the number of Canadians who might be employed in the manufacture of these ditchers would be less than the number of men who would be employed in producing the increased number of tile owing to the use of the ditchers, and less likewise than would be employed in building the extra tilemaking machinery that would be required. Persons in all sections of the country interested in encouraging this all-important work of drainage would strengthen the hands of the House of Commons by asking their local representative at Ottawa to give hearty support to the resolution on the Order Paper of A. B. McCoig, M.P., that traction ditchers be placed upon the free list. That is a proposal upon which, in their own interests, farmers can unreservedly unite.

The Advocate also has been considering this matter in a non-partisan way. I received this letter from Mr. W. H. Day, Professor of Physics at the Agricultural College, Guelph:

Dear Sir,

Can you give me any idea as to whether the movement for the removal of the duty is likely to be successful?

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Wm. H. Day.

This goes to show that the Professor of Physics at the Agricultural College, who has given considerable attention and time to the advancement of tile draining in Ontario, is also anxious that this duty should be removed so as to assist in the carrying on of that work. The provincial Government have done much to encourage tile draining. In 1897 they passed an Act known as the Drainage Act whereby farmers could secure money at about four per cent on loans to carry on work. In 1909 the Act was revised so as to make it more acceptable in the matter of getting money, and large sums have been given by the provincial Government for that purpose. Unfortunately the amount voted is not sufficient to meet the demands in many sections of the province. The provincial Government are also sending lecturers around the country to educate the farmers on the importance of under-draining, and surveyors to assist in laying out sections of drainage. They have also issued bulletins, some of which are of great interest. I have here bulletin No. 174 which gives the experience of a number of farmers with tile drainage. One farmer quoted is James Clayton, of Cedar Springs, who says:

In 1901 I drained 8 acres, at a cost of $112, or $14 per acre; 8 acres right across the fence was not drained. In 1902 both fields were sowed to beans; 8 acres drained land gave 302 bushels, which sold for $456; 8 acres undrained land gave 24 bushels, which sold for $37.

Grain, $419, nearly four times the cost of drainage.

Mr. J. A. Fletcher, of the county of Kent, is quoted as follows:

This section of the country (Tilbury East Township) is on a fair road to improvement. Farmers are beginning to realize in hard cash that they cannot farm without drainage; a photo (Fig. 1), taken on my farm (cutting wheat), which shows the advantage of thorough drainage. This farm was practically a mud-pond seven years ago, when I bought it, and to-day I completed harvesting one 18-acre field of corn, which gave me the handsome return of over 3,000 bushels.

I know that the Minister of Agriculture will be glad to know that on tile-drained ground we can grow such good crops in the county of Kent.

Mr. J. C. Thomas, Blytheswood, Essex, gives an experience which I think will be of interest to the member for North Essex.

Part of my seed-corn plot this year was on drained land and part on undrained. The results were as follows: Stalks, per acre, 4,000 lbs. on drained and 2,320 lbs. on undrained. Shelled corn, per acre, 82 bushels on drained, 29.7 bushels on undrained. In my general corn crop I got the following results: Stalks, per acre, on drained 2,970 lbs., on undrained 1,420 lbs. Shelled corn, per acre, 53.3 bushels on drained and 18.9 bushels on undrained.

So the House will see the advantages that are derived from lands which are tile-drained. There is no question that it is extremely important that every possible assistance should be given to farmers to encourage them in this important work. An article appeared in the Farmers' Advocate recently which goes to show the importance of this work. This article appears on August 8, 1912. It is as follows:

Careful and long-continued work done by the drainage authorities at the Ontario Agricultural College has demonstrated that, taking into consideration both wet and ordinary farm lands, drainage would give an average crop increase valued at a trifle over $20 per acre. There are probably 4,000,000 acres of land in what is known as 'Old Ontario' urgently needing underdraining, and probably 5,000,000 acres of slush, swamp or waste land, of which at least 3,000,000 acres might be reclaimed by drainage, the crops from which, added to the increase from lands already under cultivation, would make a grand total increase of $100,000,000 per year. Such an increase would go far to solve the high cost of living problem and materially benefit all classes of people. The drying up of wet or swamp lands would also prove of greater benefit from a sanitary standpoint, removing many causes of disease and mitigating others, such as those of a tubercular nature. What is true of Ontario is also to a greater or less extent true of the other provinces of Canada, excepting such areas as those of Alberta.

So you see that this is not entirely a provincial matter. It is extending from one province to another, and as the agriculturists of this country find out the importance of tile draining, they will all adopt it.

When the needs of drainage are so evident and the benefits so immediate and lasting, how is it that the work is not more generally done? By the staff of the Physics Department at the Guelph College, and by the county representatives of the Department of Agriculture, a great deal of drainage-survey work has been performed. By the urgent request of farmers who realize the need, proper systems of drains have been laid out, but, unfortunately, in too many cases it has been found impossible to carry on the undertaking to completion. In the year 1910 as many as 15,000 acres were surveyed on four hundred farms in thirty-seven different counties, and last year it was continued at about the same rate. Less than half the progress in drainage is being made that should be done, and Ontario is suffering a loss annually of probably $1,400,000 for that reason. Naturally, the provincial Government does not see its way clear to undertake the work of draining individual farms, and farmers themselves confronted by the appalling scarcity of labour, are unable to grapple with the problem. So, over the country, valuable land is reverting to pasture, and but little is realized from some of the richest soils that are among the most favourably situated in the world.

The land cannot be properly worked and everywhere weeds are gaining ground for the same reason. Time was when in every locality there were men ready to handle drainage tools, but it was heavy labour, and now the ditcher is practically non-existent. Skilled and unskilled labourers have been drawn away to the cities, whose industries thrive at the expense of the soil. Tillage and harvesting machinery has enabled farmers to overcome some of their obstacles with less manual labour, but ditching has not been so relieved to any extent.

Lack of tile is not the real impediment. Clay from which tile can be made is to be found in nearly every township, or at least in every county, and tile-making machinery is not difficult to procure and operate. In Ontario alone there are probably over 200 tile yards, the number and capacity of which might be vastly increased, along with the related industry of tile-making outfits. But neither the one nor the other will be developed unless the trenches to receive the tile can be made. Labour for this work, as we have stated, is practically impossible to obtain.

This is practically true in our province; we have been unable to get sufficient men to do the ditching. We have in the province of Ontario two hundred and fifty tile plants which in the last five years have increased their output from 15,000,000 to some 35,000,000 tiles, and that notwithstanding the fact that the farmers cannot get men to do the ditching. The output of these factories has continued to increase in the county of Kent. Last fall when driving round the townships, I noticed three or four plants starting up to build tiles for the farmers. Lowes & Sons, Harwich, have spent thousands of dollars in establishing a plant, and last Saturday, the senior member of the firm called at my office to find out whether there was any likelihood of the duty on traction ditchers being reduced, as they have the factory to supply the tiles. Then at Tilbury, a plant has been established by an enterprising young man of the name of Armstrong, and in the township of Dover, Mr. Montgomery, a young farmer has established a plant. So that, there is no question that plants can be established very easily. In having a large number of these plants available the farmers would very easily get the tiles, and so far as the labouring men of the country are concerned, it would mean additional employment. In removing the duty of twenty-seven and half per cent on traction ditchers, which are not manufactured in this country, we would not be establishing a precedent. We have in our customs tariff many articles which are not manufactured in this country, and which are allowed to come in free of duty. I might just instance printing presses costing over $1,500 which are admitted without duty, and there is mining machinery; in fact in general articles that are not manufactured in this country are admitted free. The removal of the duty on these ditchers would be of such universal benefit that I do not see how the Government can refrain from agreeing to it. It would meet with the endorsation of men irrespective of political leanings, it would benefit the labouring men and the agriculturists of the country, and it is not opposed by the Manufacturers' Association, who are in sympathy with the scheme. I sincerely hope that the Government will give this matter their most favourable consideration and have this tariff removed so as to give the farmers the benefit of these ditchers, and then the important work of tile draining will develop to a greater extent than it has done in the past.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): A matter of this kind relating to the tariff is generally discussed in connection with the budget debate, but of course it would have been quite in order for my hon. friend to bring it before the House had his notice of motion with respect to it been reached. I may say for myself, and on behalf of the Government, as indicated by the right hon. the Prime Minister, that we were very glad indeed to acquiesce in a brief discussion of the subject this afternoon in connection with the motion to go into Supply. My hon. friend (Mr. McCoig) refers to the item of traction ditchers, or to machinery which would comprise traction ditchers in the tariff, and he has correctly stated that the duty is twenty-seven and a half per cent under the general tariff. These traction ditchers are purchased from the United States, and, therefore, the general tariff applies. What my hon. friend has said in respect to this matter has, as I stated the other day, been brought to my attention during the past year by many members on this side of the House, representing rural constituencies of the several provinces, some of whom may desire to speak on the subject. That shows as my hon. friend has said that it is not a provincial matter, but a matter of Dominion wide interest. In addition, I have received during the past year, and I find on record in the office, petitions and resolutions from farmers' institutes and communications from the agricultural colleges of the Dominion, principally I think from the Agricultural College of Ontario, some of which were received during the time of my predecessor. During the past year, the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario also brought the matter strongly to my attention. Quite apart from that I had been aware myself of the importance of it. On an occasion of this kind it would not be proper, in fact it would be quite improper for me, to even indicate my view as to the propriety or probability of any tariff change. I must follow policy and tradition in that respect. All I can say at the moment to my hon. friend is what I have stated to several hon. members on this side of the House, to the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who also brought the matter to my attention, and to others who have discussed it with me, that this is one of those matters that is under the consideration of the Government in connection with the general question of the tariff. As I understand the matter, underdrainage is of very great importance to the agricultural community, speaking generally, and of especial importance to the districts in which it is particularly required. I think that we are all on common ground as to that. We all admit that the fertility of land is greatly increased by tile drainage. On account of the high cost of labour that prevails throughout the country, the cost of constructing ditches for underdrainage without the use of machinery is almost prohibitive to farmers and it is of very great importance to them to be able to obtain these ditchers. They are not manufactured in Canada, as my hon. friend has stated. I looked into the matter during the past year and I found that only a comparatively small number were used in Canada. In 1911 only about sixteen were purchased. The question of the effect upon the revenue is therefore not of great moment. These large ditchers are very powerful machines. On ground free from stones I understand that in a day they will ditch one hundred rods, or one-third of a mile and on stony ground probably half that.

Mr. BELAND: To what depth?

Mr. WHITE: The depth varies. There are machines that will ditch to a depth of seven and a half feet. There are varying widths to the ditches. I am not sure that the machine will ditch to a depth of seven and a half feet for any width, but I know that the average machine will do the amount of work that I have indicated. There are various widths and depths and the sides are sloped. Altogether it is a most ingenious piece of mechanism and of very great value on the farm. This discussion more particularly belongs to the budget debate than to an occasion of this kind although, as I have said, the hon. member would have been quite within his rights had his motion been reached, to bring the subject up and have it discussed in the House before the budget is brought down. I can only repeat that this is one of the matters that, during the past year has engaged my attention, and that has received attention on the part of the department. I think that is all I can properly say at the present time.

Mr. O. J. WILCOX (North Essex): Mr. Speaker, for the reason that my hon. friend (Mr. McCoig) represents a sister riding, and for the reason that the district which we represent, from its physical and geographical position and climatic condition, is one of the finest from an agricultural point of view in Canada, it will be proper for me to make a few remarks on this question. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he came to our part of the country, to use his picturesque eloquence against us, said that Providence always shone on him in southwestern Ontario and that nothing would suit him better than to spend the declining years of his life in that southwestern part of our great province. I welcome my right hon. friend and I can tell him that when we get him with us among the tall corn, and when we have the duty removed from ditching machines, we will be perfectly happy.

I agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) that it is a rather unusual thing in this House to discuss a question affecting the tariff before the budget speech is brought down. I will not, upon this occasion, deal with the question of the tariff generally as I would desire to do, and will possibly do, upon a later date. Let me say as a farmer in Canada that I have never been connected with any corporate interest and that, if I were biased at all—and I try not to be—it would be in the interest of the agriculturists. I am not by any means a free trader although I can see no reason in this particular case why the duty should not be removed from ditching machines for reasons to which I wish subsequently to allude. During the session of 1910 I had a little experience in this House to which I now wish to refer and I do not think I shall ever forget it. The question was brought up by my hon. friend (Mr. McCoig) of the great grievance that the farmers of Essex and Kent were suffering because of certain rights which had been retained by the Canada Company. A resolution was introduced into this House on which I had a few words to say. I had only been in the House a few months; I had no other object than to discuss that resolution upon its merits and to point out to the Government of the day what I considered to be its weak points. Every Liberal paper in the southwestern portion of this province placarded me as an enemy to the farmers' interests, and ever since then I have inquired, in fact this forenoon I made a special trip to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I find that not one cent has been paid under the provisions of that legislation to the farmers of southwestern Ontario. It was brought up before the electors, before the election; it was a beautiful picture, its panels were of jasper, its frame was of pure gold. It was dangled before the electors the day before the election, and it died the day after. I must say to the leader of the Opposition that it had a political effect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not quite enough.

Mr. WILCOX: Possibly not quite enough to meet the views of my right hon. friend. Of course, I recognize that under the rules I am not permitted to discuss the motive that actuated my hon. friend to word the resolution in this way and to bring it up under the conditions in which it was brought up, a little out of its order, and before the Minister of Finance brought down his budget; but I think a little politics underlay this resolution. This is the resolution which Mr. McCoig proposed:

> That, whereas tile drainage machinery is very extensively used in the whole of Canada, and more particularly in southwestern Ontario——

Mr. HAZEN: What is the date?

Mr. WILCOX: I took it from the Order Paper of December 10. That is to remove the duty on ditching machines. The first resolution that I referred to provided for the payment of one and one-eighth cents per gallon to the farmers whose mineral rights were retained by the Canada Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Gallon of what?

Mr. WILCOX: Gallon of raw petroleum. In the first place, nobody was entitled to the bounty, unless he had a producing well. A great portion of the land that was owned by farmers was not originally held by the Canada Company, and consequently there were no rights to retain. On those lots, upon which those rights were retained, it would be possible for the company to bore; but no farmer could avail himself of the Act unless he had a producing well. Under the operation of the Act ninety-nine per cent of the farmers were debarred from obtaining any benefit. After three years of its operation, not a cent of the bounty has been paid by the Government to a farmer; but it was a glorious thing, Mr. Speaker, for the election of 1911. The resolution that we are dealing with to-day provides:

That whereas tile drainage machinery is very extensively used in the whole of Canada——

The fact is that last year sixteen of these machines were imported. The very fact that those machines will not, in my judgment, be used extensively enough to warrant any manufacturer entering into the manufacture of them, and the fact that they are not manufactured in Canada to-day, are sufficient reasons why the tariff should be removed, more particularly in the interests of the farmers of the southwestern portion of the province of Ontario. I remember that this same clause was at the end of the other resolution:

And whereas the same is not now manufactured in Canada, but is brought from the United States in spite of a heavy duty and at a great sacrifice for those having to use it;

That, in the opinion of this House it is the duty——

And so on.

I just wish to refer to one or two more points. Since 1906 every few years we have had an agitation with respect to a reduction of duty, which was to be of great benefit to the farmers in our part of the country. I remember one election which was run practically on the question of the duty on binder twine. The argument was this: binder twine was at such a low price in the United States; it cost so much more in Canada; we will take the tariff off, and thereby your farmers will get your twine so much cheaper than you are getting it at to-day. The duty was taken off a few years ago; to-day we have the result. What is it? Binder twine has been higher in price since the duty was taken off. At the time the duty was removed, thirteen industries in Canada were manufacturing binder twine; to-day they have all gone into liquidation.

Mr. TURRIFF: Why do you not put the duty on again?

Mr. McCOIG: Are you in favour of putting the duty on?

Mr. WILCOX: When the time comes for dealing with that question, I shall give it my earnest and careful consideration.

Another item in the budget that proved to be a gold brick was the reduction of duty on coal oil. When I was first taking a little part in politics, and not as well posted in the various subjects as I am to-day, and when some of my Liberal friends, who represented constituencies in my province at the time, could put it all over me in an argument at a public meeting, I remember that we were discussing this question. We were told we would get our coal oil at five cents a gallon. The duty was taken off. John D. Rockefeller and his trust came over to Canada and practically put our Canadian refiners out of business. In order that they might be able to continue in business the Laurier Government gave them bounties to the extent of $1,204,135.39 in four years.

The figures are as follow:

1905-6	291,157 20
1906-7	266,553 98
1907-8	296,377 96

The price of oil has been increased to the consumer, and the business of refining oil in Canada has been greatly handicapped. Now, under the principle in our fiscal system established, as I understand, by Sir John Macdonald, when he was Prime Minister nearly forty years ago, that which was then expressed was this: If we had a protective system in this country, if we had a developed capital, we could give our manufacturers a reasonable hold on our home trade and could attain a higher position among the nations of the world. That great statesman was able then to look into the future with prophetic vision and foretell the result of this national policy almost forty years ahead. And to-day in Canada we are enjoying the fruits of that policy, that splendid fiscal system of modern protection which we have established.

Now, with regard to this particular item of ditching machinery—to come back to it—there is no manufacturer in Canada of machinery of this kind. And there is not likely to be such a manufacturer in Canada, because the demand for that machinery in this country, I am informed, will not be sufficient for a good many years to come to warrant any manufacturer in undertaking its production here. There is no reason, in my judgment, therefore, why the duty on this particular article should be maintained. On the other hand, if a benefit is to be derived by the farmers of this country by the removal of that duty, I say, give them the benefit. If we had a manufacturer of this machinery of anything like the size of our manufacture of binder twine when the duty was taken off that article, I should be very sorry to see this duty removed. But as no manufacturer is likely to undertake the production of these machines in Canada, I am willing to coincide with my hon. friend in supporting the removal of this duty.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford): I fully endorse what my hon. friend (Mr McCoig) has said. He has gone into the question fully and has shown what would be the effect on the farmers' interest of the removal of this duty. I am sure my hon. friend is correct when he says there is not enough demand to warrant manufacturers in establishing the industry of producing these machines, I should not be surprised if before long some agricultural implement manufacturers or some producer in similar lines were to undertake the manufacture of ditching machinery in Canada. Certainly, I think there is a large enough profit in the goods at the prices charged in the American market and I think there would be a large enough profit even without the protection—certainly it is not necessary to have 27½ per cent. Answering my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) with reference to binder twine, I am not going to wander off into a long discussion; but I doubt if the present Government or any other government that might exist in Canada would dare put a duty on binder twine. I believe that the benefit to the people at large in taking the duty off binder twine was greater than would have come from any manufacture of binder twine that might have been established. I doubt if any person could manufacture binder twine at present prices at a profit in Canada. As to coal oil, the hon. gentleman says it was increased in price in this country by the establishment here of the Imperial Oil Company, a branch, it is generally understood, of the great Standard Oil Company. As a matter of fact, the price to the consumer has been reduced by the establishment in Canada of the Imperial Oil Company. I remember distinctly—for I had the pleasure of selling coal oil for many years—that we could not get a first-class oil in Canada but had to import American oil in order to provide consumers with a first-class article; and we paid a high price and the duty besides. But since the Standard Oil Company have established a branch here they have been able to make just as good oil out of the Canadian crude as was formerly imported made from the crude oil of Pennsylvania. So, I do not think the consumers have anything to grumble at because the Standard Oil Company established their industry in this country. Returning to the question of ditching machinery, the Minister of Finance has described accurately how the work is done. The use of these machines would enable the farmers to ditch a great deal where it is absolutely impossible for them to ditch now. This use of ditching machines is practically a new industry in this country; until four or five years ago they were not used. They come into more extensive use every year. I agree with what has been said that it is almost impossible to engage ditchers at the present time. I have had to postpone putting in drains for over a year because I could not hire ditchers, though I paid them double the amount I had to pay them twenty-five years ago.

Mr. SMITH (South Ontario): How are you going to get men to enlist in the navy if you cannot get them to dig ditches at those wages?

Mr. NESBITT: I am sure the House, and you, Mr. Speaker, will excuse me if I do not enter upon a discussion of the navy question to-day. My hon. friend, I hope, will not think that I am discourteous to him, because that is not my desire. At the same time, the free admission of these machines would save the labour of ditchers to a very great extent, and would certainly be of immense benefit to the farming communities not only of that section of the country represented by the hon. member for Kent, but that particular portion of it from which I come. These machines were used with a great deal of success last year in my section of the country. I will not go into the matter of the tariff generally, and will not endeavour to answer the statements of the hon. member for North Essex in that regard. With my hon. friend from Kent, I thank the right hon. Prime Minister for giving us an opportunity to discuss this matter at the present time, but I am sure he would not have done so had he thought we would have drifted so far in to other matters.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey): I think everything should be done that possibly can be done with a view to alleviating the great difficulties of existing conditions in the matter of agricultural labour in this country, and I think that the admission of ditching machines into Canada free will to a great extent relieve that tension. In my own riding I have been consulted by many agricultural societies in regard to the matter. The county council of the county of Grey passed a unanimous resolution, signed by John Rutherford, county clerk, requesting that the Government remove the duty on these ditching machines. In supporting this request, I think that no hon. member on this side of the House shall be in any way violating his principles in respect of moderate protection for home industries, because, as I understand it, none of these machines are manufactured in the province of Ontario or in the Dominion of Canada. As the basic principle of a protective tariff is the protection of home industries, and as we have no home industries to protect, so far as this implement is concerned, I do not think it would be violating our principles if we were to vote for the removal of this duty, which involves nothing more nor less than a tariff for revenue. To my mind, the removal of this duty will have the effect of opening up our richest districts in Ontario and other provinces, because it is well known that many of the lands which are now absolutely useless would be the richest lands in the country if they could be given tile drainage. They are practically in a natural state, having all the strength and fertility of the richest lands, and for that reason, if for no other, we should be justified in removing this duty. I have also had presented to me a petition from the Farmers' Institute of the township of Kemble, in the county of Grey, signed by William Bunt and James Gardner, committee. I think the reasons set out in these petitions are sufficient to warrant hon. members in coming to the conclusion that this duty should be removed. I have also a petition from the West Derby Farmers' Club, signed by J. E. Dolphin and W. F. Munson, giving other reasons for the removal of this duty, and also a petition signed by A. F. Donald, secretary of the North Grey Farmers' Institute. These represent practically all the agricultural societies in my riding, and I have therefore very much pleasure—although I know the Government cannot at this time make any announcement as to what they propose to do in the matter—in saying that I shall be ready to support any astion taken by the Government to remove the duty on ditching machines.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton): I desire to endorse all that has been said with regard to the duty on ditching machines, particularly the remarks of the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. McCoig), I have received several petitions from interested parties in my county in regard to this matter. The county council of the county of Lambton have forwarded me a petition asking me to support any resolution for the removal of the duty on these machines, and I have received several petitions from the township councils of the county of Lambton asking that I should do the same thing. We recognize the fact that there must exist a revenue for the purpose of carrying on the affairs of the country, and I do think, as the hon. Minister of Finance said this afternoon, that in cases where the revenue will not be particularly affected, or where it is in the general interests of the people that an article which is not manufactured in Canada, and which is required to a very large extent in this country, should be allowed to be imported upon terms as reasonable as possible. Without reiterating the arguments of the previous speakers this afternoon, I think it will be agreed that the Minister of Finance and the Government, prior to the bringing down of the Budget, should very seriously consider the question of placing ditching machinery upon the free list. I was much amused upon hearing the statement of the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox), in which he dealt with the subject of the duties on oil, saying that by reason of the action taken by the late Government the manufacture of oil in the Dominion of Canada had been very much handicapped. I can hardly conceive upon what premises he can base such an opinion, given to this House and the people of the country, and, if he knew how much the action of the Government—which, I think, was sanctioned by both sides of the House, —had benefited the people and the consumers of oil in this country, he would realize that this action not only reduced the price of oil to the consumers in Canada, but resulted in the employment of thousands of men in connection with the manufacture of oil. Industries have grown up, and, speaking from a local standpoint, so far as my own county of West Lambton is concerned, I can say that the action of the Government at that time with regard to the tariff on oil has been of greater advantage to the people of West Lambton and of other parts of the country, than perhaps any other step taken in regard to the lowering of the tariff. How the hon. member for North Essex could make such an assertion is a matter which I cannot understand, and I think it was made wholly in ignorance of the subject he was discussing.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I also have received petitions from my county in regard to this matter. I may say that if the discussion had been deferred until the bringing down of the budget speech, it would have been a more proper time for its consideration. I do not, however, find fault with my hon. friend from Kent for introducing the matter. While he may be a little premature in bringing it up at the present time, it should be remembered that he did not evidence any of these signs of interest when his own party was in power. He had the opportunity then of having the duty on these machines reduced or removed, but he did not avail himself of it. I think it was Abraham Lincoln who, in pressing his views with regard to protection, said: 'If we buy a machine in England and pay $100 for it, we in the United States get the machine, and the people in England get the $100. If we make that machine in the United States, and pay for it here, we have both the $100 and the machine.' That argument would hardly apply in this case, because at the present time the machines are not manufactured in this country, and no industry can therefore be affected by the removal of the duty. I entirely endorse the arguments which have been advanced by the previous speakers that the Finance Minister, in dealing with this question, should give very earnest consideration to the fact that labour on the farms of Ontario and throughout Canada is extremely scarce, and the fact that this machine is a labour-saving device is a strong argument in favour of the removal of the duty on it. Personally I have no hesitation in saying that I feel inclined to favour very strongly the reduction or removal of the duty upon these machines.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): In the discussion this afternoon there has been some suggestion that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McCoig) has brought this matter up prematurely and should have waited until the Minister of Finance had brought down the budget. As I understand the matter if he had waited until that time it would have been rather too late for the minister to take action. By bringing it up to-day hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have been afforded an opportunity to express their views and the Minister of Finance will be able to give the matter fair consideration and reach a decision before bringing down his budget. The matter has been dealt with largely from the standpoint of the farmers of Ontario. They are not the only people using these machines. In our western country, while these machines have not been used for the draining of land, I know that a very considerable number are in use in various towns and cities of the West for putting in water works and drainage systems. I have seen a considerable number of them at work during the past summer and it will be of great advantage to the people of the western cities as well as to the farmers of Ontario who desire to use these machines to have them placed on the free list. The duty of $500 on each machine is a very considerable item and the removal of that duty will be a benefit not only to the people of eastern Canada but of all Canada, and therefore, on behalf of the West, I would ask the minister to give it his very best consideration and if possible I hope he will have the duty removed.

THE FENIAN RAID BOUNTY.

On the motion for Committee of Supply.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss very briefly a matter relating to the Fenian Raid Bounty Act which was passed by this Parliament last session. I do so for the purpose of securing from the Minister of Militia a statement as to what is the departmental interpretation of the sections of that Act which qualify persons for the bounty, and also as to what is, or will be, the departmental practice in the matter. Section 2 of that Act reads as follows:

> In this Act 'volunteer' means any person who was regularly enrolled or enlisted in and served with any militia corps which the Government of Canada, or of Nova Scotia, or of New Brunswick called out for active service in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, or which the Government of Canada called out for active service in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy, excepting, however, the two battalions of riflemen formed for service in the 'Northwest.'

I think it has been the interpretation of the department in the past, perhaps not in the immediate past, that only those who had been called to the front and had actually performed service were entitled to the Fenian Raid bounty. I also understand that the members of any volunteer regiment who performed garrison duty in the place of any regular regiment which was moved to the scene of actual operations were entitled to the bounty. Earlier in the session I asked the hon. Minister of Militia a question as to the departmental interpretation of the section, but unfortunately I cannot place my hands upon the answer which he gave and which is to be found in 'Hansard.' My recollection is, and I think that it is a fair inference from the answer given, that it was the intention of the department to pay the bounty only to those who had active participation in the events of the years 1866 and 1870. Recently, however, I have had reason to believe that the department were interpreting the provisions of the Act more generously, so as to include a great number of possible applicants, and in the province of Nova Scotia particularly, a class of persons who never saw active service in the two years mentioned, but who, nevertheless, belonged to the Nova Scotia militia and were called out for service in the event of being needed. I am led to believe this by reason of the fact that recently there has been issued by the department, or, at least, with the knowledge of the department, certain forms to be used by applicants for the bounty, which rather satisfy me that it is the intention of the department to pay the bounty to a great number of persons other than those who were actually at the front. I have had placed in my hands by a fellow member of the House a form to be used by applicants, which is as follows:

> I, , of , , in the province of Nova Scotia, do hereby apply for a grant under the provisions of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act.
> The grounds of my application are as follows:—

I was enrolled in regiment of county in the province of Nova Scotia, and served with it at Lunenburg, in the said province of Nova Scotia, under the command of , from 18th March, 1886, for the period of ten days, on active service, in obedience to the proclamation issued by the Governor of Nova Scotia under date 17th March, 1866, and on that occasion arms and ammunition were served out to me and the other men of the said regiment to enable us to perform our said service.

Accompanying this form of application, is a form of declaration to be made by the comrade of the applicant in arms, and that form is as follows:

I, of the county of , in the province of Nova Scotia, do solemnly declare that I personally know , in the province of Nova Scotia, who has applied to the Militia Department for a grant under the terms of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act, on account of service performed by him with the regiment of county, and I identify him as the who served as a private militiaman in and with the said regiment on active service under arms at , in the province of Nova Scotia, in the month of March, in the year 1866, under the command of , when called out by the Governor's proclamation, dated 17th March, 1866.

Now, I understand that in the province of Nova Scotia practically all the regiments and all members of the regiments were called out for active service in the year 1866. By active service, I do not mean that eventually they were asked to go outside of their province, or that they were engaged in actual military service; but after being called out they were obliged to engage in drill, were furnished with a certain amount of arms for a limited period of time, and afterwards were permitted to return to their homes. So far as I can gather, that is about all the military service which they performed.

The matter which I bring to the attention of the Minister of Militia, and in regard to which I desire from him a statement, is that, up to a very recent date at least, I do not think it was clearly understood in my province that such persons were entitled to the Fenian Raid bounty, although that was always my personal opinion. I am not at all protesting against their receiving it, if, under the provisions of the Volunteer Bounty Act, they are entitled to it. What I do say is that if they are entitled to it, it should be made known in the most public manner possible to everyone in that province who was a member of the Nova Scotia militia and who was called out by the Governor's proclamation in 1866. I have reason to believe that the intention of the department to pay the Fenian Raid bounty to those who were called out in 1866 in Nova Scotia has been conveyed in a quiet and almost secretive manner to certain persons in the province.

I rise to discuss this matter largely for the purpose of registering my protest against that. In one or two cases Conservative members from the province of Nova Scotia, who appear to have had this information in advance of any other person, have constituted themselves advance agents or attorneys of possible applicants, and, with a great deal of display, are securing applications in some of the counties and having them remitted to the Militia Department here. I know that this has been done by one or two members of the House and in one or two counties which are not represented by members supporting the Government. The duty seems to have been placed upon their shoulders of notifying everybody who was called out under the proclamation of 1866. I do not say the minister, or his department, is responsible for this; I am not making that charge, but I do say that if, under the provisions of the Volunteer Bounty Act, all persons who were called out by the Governor's proclamation in 1866 in Nova Scotia are entitled to this bounty, the department should take steps, in an official manner, to acquaint everybody in the province entitled to the bounty, of this information, and it should not be left to members of Parliament to convey the information to applicants because one can easily see that it might be used with some political effect by friends of the Administration. While that may not be the intention of the minister, yet I think he will recognize that there is some force and validity in the statement which I make and the situation might be cleared up by his making in Parliament a statement to that effect, and further by communication to the colonels or official heads of the several regiments in Nova Scotia so that this information can be disseminated in a proper manner and given to every person who could possibly be entitled to it.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Before the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence gives his answer, I may be permitted to say that at the time that the Bill was introduced last year, I took occasion to ask the minister the scope of the Bill, and the question which is now brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) was at that time asked by myself. I inquired of the minister if it was his intention to provide a bounty for such volunteers as did perform drill at that time, but had not been called to the front, or had not been engaged in what might be called active service. I was familiar with what happened in Nova Scotia, and I was aware that a very large number of volunteers had subjected themselves to drill for two or three weeks in 1866 in response to the proclamation issued by the Government of the province. It was expected that a fenian raid was to take place and these preparations were made for it. In the various counties of Nova Scotia the militia were called out. Four or five regiments in the county that I represent met in different places and sergeants were provided by the military at Halifax to carry on the drill. They subjected themselves to two or three weeks drilling in preparation, but they were never sent to the front and never engaged on active service. I asked the minister if the Act would apply to a case of that kind and his answer was that it would not apply unless they had been engaged in active service. From the reply which I then received from the minister, no person in Nova Scotia would be entitled to this bounty at all because there was no actual service performed outside of the preparations which were made in the way I have mentioned.

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): Perhaps the hon. member would read what I said.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I have not the exact words, but I remember very distinctly that I was told that the Act would not apply to volunteers who had not been engaged in active service or who had not performed some services in anticipation of active service. It was a little indefinite to my mind as to what it meant. My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has quoted the words of the statute that:

Volunteer means any person who was regularly enrolled or enlisted and served with any militia corps which the Government of Canada or Nova Scotia or New Brunswick called out for 'active service' in the year 1866 or in 1870.

The whole crux of the question is, what is the meaning of 'active service'? Does drill, in preparation for going to the front, constitute what the minister understands to be active service? I took occasion the other day to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) what was the construction the Government intended to put upon that clause, and he admitted that he was not very familiar with what was being done in the Militia Department, and referred me to the Minister of Militia. Yesterday I again drew the matter to the attention of the hon. the Minister of Militia, and made inquiry as to whether the policy of the Government in regard to the distribution of bounties for Fenian Raid veterans had been relaxed in any way. I told the minister that we had noticed in the papers that not only those parties who actually took part in the conflict at that time, but those who had drilled preparatory to going to the front, were to participate in the bounties, and the minister's reply was:

There has been no change whatever.

I have been informed as has been related by my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax, that in the province of Nova Scotia certain members of Parliament and certain hon. gentlemen of the other Chamber have asked their friends to send in applications for this bounty, and they imply, in their advertisements, or letters, given to the press, that there has been some relaxation in the rule, and that it is now open to these parties who had performed drill to apply. For example, I find in the Antigonish Casket a statement issued by an hon. gentleman of the other Chamber in which it is said that he:

—informs us that according to the interpretation likely to be put upon the Fenian Raid Bounty Act, passed at the last session of the Dominion Parliament, it appears that a number of people of this country will be able to qualify for the grant.

In the year 1866, the year the Fenian scare, there were in the county four regiments of volunteers, which had been organized under the Nova Scotia Militia Act. In each regiment there were a number of companies (the number varying from four to ten), each with its own captain. In that year the Government of Nova Scotia issued a proclamation calling out for active service all able bodied men belonging to these divisions. This must not be confused with the regular annual autumn drill, which took place every fall in accordance with the conditions of the above mentioned Militia Act. This was a special proclamation, issued because of the alarm that was felt and to meet a possible danger of invasion. All those who responded to that special call should secure the proper application forms, have them filled up according to requirements, and forwarded to Ottawa.

That statement was published in the local papers in Nova Scotia, and, as a result, a very large number of letters have been written to members. I have received a large number of them myself, asking for an explanation as to whether these people who had performed drill at that time are entitled to the $100 that is to be given to these veterans. My hon. friend from Halifax has drawn attention to the fact that certain members of this House have issued statements in the press of Nova Scotia above their own signatures, appointing men in various places to receive the claims and to forward them to the department. A good deal of interest is felt in that province in regard to these statements. I have always understood that the Militia Department was run on non-partisan lines and that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would be given every information that is open to members opposite. I presume that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia intends to carry out that policy. It is the one department in the Canadian service that I think has always been free from partisanship The fact that an hon. gentleman supported the Government has never, so far as I know, given him any advantage whatever in regard to matters carried on by the Militia Department. We have some reason to enter our protests if it be true that information has been handed out to hon. gentlemen opposite that has not been given to us on this side. I should like to join my hon. friend from Halifax in the hope that the Minister of Militia will to-night make a clear and distinct declaration in regard to this matter,—that he will inform the House and the country what persons have a right to this bounty, so that there may be no doubt about it, and that he will assure us that the friends of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will be treated in exactly the sam way as those of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): I think there is some misapprehension in the part of the province of Ontario from which I come, as to the interpretation which should be put on the Volunteer Bounty Act. There is a rumour that some relaxation of the conditions has been or is contemplated, and that some parties who under the fixed reading of the Act would not be entitled will in the near future, if not now, be entitled to that bounty. In my constituency are four worthy citizens who are entitled to any consideration that can be given, namely: Mr. J. C. Walker, Mr. Henry Boulton, Mr. Joseph Beechy, and Colonel Walter Clarke. I think the last-named gentleman is well known to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia. These four men actually went to the front and performed active service at the time of the Fenian Raid in 1866. They came to Canada in 1861 or 1862 with the British regiment which came out at the time of the Trent affair. They continued in Canada and were stationed at various places in Ontario at the time of the outbreak of the Fenian Raid in 1866. when they were at once sent to the front. After performing the service required of them and after putting in their time, they obtained a discharge from their several regiments and they became active settlers in Canada. They have resided here ever since and are, to all intents and purposes, Canadian citizens. I am informed that the reason why they have been refused the bounty is that they did not comply with section 2 which prescribes:

> Volunteer means every person who was regularly enrolled or enlisted and served with any militia corps which the Government of Canada, or of Nova Scotia, or of New Brunswick called out for active service in the year 1866 or which the Government of Canada called out for active service in the year 1870.

These men were not enrolled or enlisted, but they did serve with the militia of Canada. If any relaxation of conditions is proposed, I think the men who actually served should be entitled to any bounty that is paid. If, under the fixed reading of the law, these four men are not entitled to it, I think the law might be amended so as to enable veterans of British regiments who did service to be treated as native-born Canadians and to be paid the bounty on the same scale. I understand that the survivors are not many, that only about seven or eight or nine hundred British regulars who actually did service are now living. Some of these men have seen me, and they have heard rumours that the conditions are going to be relaxed.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is most desirable that the Minister of Militia should make a statement which would settle misunderstandings which have certainly arisen in regard to this matter.

Before dealing with that particular phase of the question, I would like to refer to a proposition made by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). Certain hon. members in the province of Quebec, who are not here to-night, asked me, in anticipation of this matter coming up, to call to the attention of the minister the cases of about twenty men in some of the border counties, who formed themselves into a volunteer corps and who actually performed active service in these counties at the time of the Fenian raid. I am free to say that I think that the men who actually performed active service at the time of this incident ought to be especially considered, even if those who were called out were prepared to go. If the minister intends to amend the Act in any way, cases such as I have mentioned should come under his particular attention.

With reference to the alleged misunderstanding as to the meaning of the Act, I am bound to say that I cannot see any necessity for the circular letters that have appeared in the press of Nova Scotia in regard to this matter. It looks like an attempt to make political capital out of a question in which there ought not to be any. The wording of the Act is very clear and there cannot be any misunderstanding about it. It has been quoted by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) and by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). The important words are these: that the person who was called out for active service and who was enrolled as a member of the militia was entitled to receive that bounty. That language is clear and definite. It conveys to anybody, who knows anything about militia work or anything about active service, a proposition which is self-evident, namely, that the man who is going to receive this bounty must be specially called out for service. I personally never had any misunderstanding in regard to the subject; and to those who have inquired in regard to the mattter in my own constituency or other constituencies, I stated what the law was. I was therefore surprised to find that some hon. gentlemen alleged lately that they had by their influence, succeeded in getting the Militia Department to put some new interpretation upon this statute; and that certain other people, who it was thought at first were not entitled to receive this bounty, as a result of the efforts of these gentlemen who were supporting the Government, were going to receive it. We all knew that the minister was bound by the terms of the Act and could not pay a dollar to anybody who did not come within this section 2; and all the influence of all the hon. members supporting this Government could not have succeeded in getting the minister to give a bounty to a single man who did not come within the terms of the statute. Consequently, all these letters upon this subject have been entirely erroneous, and have resulted in misleading a large number of people in the province of Nova Scotia by causing them to believe that there were certain friends of this Government in Ottawa who, by some superhuman efforts, had succeeded in bringing about a condition of affairs that would enable some to claim this grant who could not otherwise have received it. The result is that a large number of men in the province of Nova Scotia who were not called out for active service, but who attended the annual drill in 1866 and 1870, are writing to hon. members of this House on the subject. I am sure the Department of the Minister of Militia is receiving applications from these men in good faith and relying upon these statements in the party press of hon. gentlemen opposite, that something had been done by which the men who had drilled in 1867 and 1870 were going to be entitled to $100. The Guysborough Times contains a statement on the subject. A copy was forwarded to me by a constituent of mine who stated that he had drilled in 1870, and says that under the terms of this document he is entitled to the money. The special part of this is the newspaper notice that accompanies the letter of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson). The Guysborough Times says:

We are glad to note from the letter in the Spectator of Mr. Davidson, M.P., for Annapolis, that all those who drilled in 1866 and again in 1870, for the Fenian Raid scare are qualified to draw the bounty of $100. Mr. George T. MacNutt has written several communications—

Mr. DAVIDSON: Has the hon. gentleman the letter of mine which appeared in the Annapolis paper?

Mr. MACDONALD: Yes.

Mr. DAVIDSON: The hon. gentleman, then, will notice that no such representation was made.

Mr. MACDONALD: I will come to that. I am reading the statement of a paper friendly to the Government as a result of the letter of my hon. friend from Annapolis. The Mr. MacNutt referred to was the candidate of the Conservative party for the legislature two years ago. (Reading):

—along this line to the Truro News, and no doubt is qualified to advise his friends on the matter. We hope all the veterans in the county of Guysborough will have their papers made out at once and forwarded to the Militia Department at Ottawa.

The Guysborough county veterans are in precisely the same position as the veterans of Annapolis county.—(Editor Times.)

I warn my hon. friend the Minister of Militia that all the good old gentlemen in those counties of Nova Scotia who drilled in 1867 and 1870 are going to send in their applications to him, and his department will be very busy refusing them under the terms of this Act. A large percentage of the volunteers of that province must have been called out for active service, because at that period in our province there was practically compulsory service, and almost every man of twenty-one years or over went out to annual drill. My hon. friend from Annapolis called attention to his letter. What does he say?

Dear Sir:—As your readers are doubtless aware, an Act was passed at the last session of the feredal Parliament entitled 'The Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act.' which provided that volunteers called out for active service in the year 1866 were entitled a bounty of $100. As first interpreted the Act did not appear to cover the case of volunteers in this province, who were merely called out for drill during the year and who did not actually encounter the enemy.

You will notice that that statement is very equivocal; for his interpretation does not cover the men called out for drill in 1866. (Reading):

The Government members from Nova Scotia, however, have brought to the attention of the department the fact that on the 17th of March, 1866, a proclamation was issued by the Governor of Nova Scotia calling out volunteers for active service, and the department is now inclined to the view that members of regularly constituted militia corps, who turned out in obedience to the above mentioned proclamation are entitled to receive the bounty.

He goes on to ask the people in his county to send in applications to certain gentlemen who are named.

I am sure the minister will agree with me that there has never been but one interpretation to this Act; there could be but one, and that was that the men who were called out for active service, and they alone, were entitled to receive the grant. What has occurred is this: The local representative for Yarmouth writes to a paper in his county a circular letter calculated to lead every man in the county of Yarmouth who went out to drill in 1866 and 1870 to believe that, as a result of the vigorous efforts put forward by the Government supporters from Nova Scotia, all he had to do was to send in his application to the Minister of Militia, and back would come $100. Of course, this is poor politics, after all; it is silly, ridiculous. The policy of the department on this question has been settled, and there ought to be no misapprehension. The only result will be that many will be disappointed who ought not to have been misled; for a man who only went out to drill in 1870 could not possibly be considered in this connection, because the only proclamation calling out men for active service in Nova Scotia was the one issued in 1866. So, if I am accurate in my statement—and the minister will state whether I am right or not—no matter who drilled in 1870, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, he was not called out for active service. The only men in Nova Scotia who could be entitled to receive this $100 were those who came out in response to the proclamation in the spring of 1866. The man who drilled in the autumn of that year, or any other year, in that province, but who did not come out in response to the proclamation for active service, was outside the list of those for whom Parliament intended this benefit. In a matter of this kind, where Parliament has willingly come to the conclusion that the men who responded to their country's call in this period of our history should receive some recognition, it seems to me there ought not to be such misapprehension raised.

To show what is attempted to be done in relation to this matter, I would refer to a printed form which has been issued in the county of Yarmouth by the Conservative local member, the result of his advertisement. Any person who wishes to put in a claim for this grant can get one of these forms on making a requisition to the department. This, I assume, is the official form containing the data upon which the department acts. But, as a result of the interference of these gentlemen in the matter, we have this special form which differs in very material respects from the one provided by the department I would like the hon. minister to tell us whether there is in circulation in Nova Scotia a form which is being used for the purpose of getting applicants for the bounty to make proof of their claims, and whether or not that form has received the sanction of his department? If that is the case, I think it is unfair, if an applicant in one county writes to the hon. minister or an official of his department for a form which he is expected to fill out in order to obtain the bounty, that he should receive the official form, and that at the same time the people should be informed through the press that there is another form that may be obtained by application to these local offices, which, I must say, are unquestionably being utilized for political purposes. I would like the hon. minister to tell us also whether or not the department has made any regulations under chapter 53 of the Act of 1912. The statute does not provide for the making of any regulations by the department, and I cannot conceive why any should be made. The statute provides that such proofs shall be submitted as are prescribed by the Governor in Council, but the hon. minister or the Governor in Council would not prescribe any proofs which are at variance with this statute. My hon. friend or the Governor in Council could say that a statutory declaration setting out certain data would be satisfactory. I assume the Governor in Council have not put their impress upon the method which is being employed in the province of Nova Scotia of circulating a form which is different from the one issued by the Department of Militia. If there are any regulations—and I am advised by the department that there are not—I would like the hon. minister to tell the House whether or not any interpretation was put upon this matter different from the one which was self-evident—namely, that the men called out for active service in this province were entitled to the bounty? If there was any interpretation put upon it different from what is self-evident on the face of it, was that interpretation made as the result of any legal advice, and, if so, who gave the advice? If there was any such interpretation, when was it changed, and as a result of what advice or whose opinion? I apprehend, of course, that the minister will say there has been only one opinion in regard to this matter. Active service is, as the minister knows, well defined in military circles, and nothing could, in my opinion, change that definition in any way. The allegation was made that the department intended to pursue a parsimonious course in regard to the matter, and limit the circle of people entitled to this bounty. For some reason, however, they have changed their minds, and have very materially widened this circle.

Will the minister state explicitly whether he regards it as possible that any person in the province of Nova Scotia who drilled in the year 1870 can obtain the benefits of this Act and be entitled to the bounty, if there was no proclamation issued calling them out for active service in that year? The hon. minister should make an authoritative statement as to whether or not anyone in the province who did not respond to the call for active service which was made under proclamation in the spring of 1866, but who did perform military service in that year, is entitled to receive anything under the Act. The interpretation of the Act seems to be reasonably clear, and I ask these questions for the purpose of adding the weight of the authority of the hon minister to the information already at hand, so that Parliament and the country will understand exactly what the policy of the Government is on the subject.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton, East): I have a personal recollection of many of the events of the year 1866, and I do not remember that there was any invasion of Canada by Fenians in that year except at Fort Erie in the county of Welland, province of Ontario, early in June, 1866. I was an officer of the active militia in that year, and for many years previous to that. In the early part of March, 1866, there were disturbing rumours in circulation, largely in the press, because of the fact that in Buffalo the drilling of certain irregular bodies, supposed to be Fenians, and who no doubt were connected with the Fenian movement, was going on. During March, April and May of that year, that drilling was carried on in the city of Buffalo, and I doubt very much whether anywhere else, except perhaps on the border of lake Ontario, there had been any such organization. In March, April and May, the 7th Regiment of London turned out every day to drill. I would be surprised to hear that there was any general order of the Government or of the adjutant of the militia calling them out; my impression is they turned out voluntarily. At that time we had two regiments in London, where I then lived, including a battery of artillery; there was a good deal of military feeling throughout that district, and we had very little difficulty, four, five and six days a week, in getting fifty per cent of the regiments to turn out to drill. I am the only surviving officer of No. 3 Company of the 7th Regiment of that day; my two companions are dead and gone. I am taking into consideration the possibility of mistakes in dealing with this matter, but I think I am quite clear in my recollection. We met every afternoon during March, April and May. The three officers of my company were young law students or lawyers and we went every day to drill and each day for three months a considerable portion of our men, not always the same men, turned out for drill. Every now and again someone in the city of London would be arrested by the police as a Fenian and there would be a little excitement but that was all there would be about the invasion of Canada at that time. In the first week of June, 1866, the regiment was drilling in the drill shed one Friday evening about half past eight. Colonel Hawley, who commanded the Prince Consort's Own Rifle Brigade rode into the drill shed and called aside the colonel of our regiment. We had no order from the Government, there was no word of authority for drilling, we had been voluntarily drilling all the three months. Colonel Hawley, as I say, called aside the colonel of our regiment and had a few words with him. The colonel came over to the regiment and said we were ordered to the front. Colonel Hawley said that one-half the regiment was to go. There was a little dispute as to whether any of our volunteers should be left behind, and Colonel Hawley said: You are only half a regiment anyway and I will take it on myself to say that you shall all go. There was a cheer. There was no headquarters order for us at all at the time. Colonel Hawley rode in from the 60th rifle barracks and gave that order and within an hour and a half we were on the train. We were marched down to the station and on the way down were joined by some more of our men who had heard that we were going to the front and who rushed out with their uniforms under their arms and their rifles in their hands. We got on board a freight train at nine o'clock on Friday night and at one o'clock on Saturday morning were at Paris, Ontario. We were detrained at Paris. At six o'clock in the morning we were called up by bugle and went out again. We waited for orders nearly all of Saturday. We did not leave Paris until about noon. We got to Port Colborne that evening about eight or nine o'clock in time to see some of the 13th regiment of Hamilton coming in from the fight at Ridgeway. That is what occurred. I am speaking now not of orders, but of facts. The only regiments that turned out on that occasion, were the 10th of Toronto, the Queen's Own, of Toronto, the 13th, of Hamilton, and the 7th, of London. They were at Ridgeway. The 7th did not arrive until the fight was over; I want to admit that. The fight was over before our train arrived at Port Colborne. At two o'clock on Sunday morning we were again called up and at four o'clock we marched through swamps to where we supposed the enemy was and we got to Ridgeway on Sunday morning about eleven or twelve o'clock. The company of which I was an officer marched over what was called the orchard. We marched over five dead bodies of Fenians lying there. After an hour's rest we went on to Fort Erie and arrived there that evening. We saw there a battery of the regular artillery and the 10th regiment and some of the Queen's Own. We were all assembled there and the Fenians were on a Government revenue vessel out in the river. That is all the fighting that was done. We returned on Monday night to London. I have since had many a letter, some within the last week, from men who were there and if there is any complaint which I could make about the minister's management of this question, which is a very difficult one, it is that I am told that some men who I firmly believe were there and who are in correspondence with me to-day are not being paid because their names did not appear on a pay-list. I doubt very much if we had a pay-list in those days. I doubt if a pay-list could be found. My recollection is that the regiment did not have a paymaster until that spring when Judge MacMillan,, at one time a member of this House, was appointed paymaster. I never heard that Nova Scotia or New Brunswick had been invaded.

Mr. CARVELL: Oh, yes, New Brunswick was.

Mr. BARKER: I am not disputing; I am only saying that at that time we heard nothing of any invasion there. There was that one invasion of the Fenians. The 16th regular regiment was there and some of these men, it has been said, afterwards left the regiment and remained in Canada but they were there as British soldiers, under the pay of the British Crown. None of our regiment ever thought of a day's pay at all but the men of whom my hon. friend from Wellington speaks as regulars who remained in Canada were regular soldiers and did not do very much work either. I do not want to cast the slightest slur upon the British soldiers but the 16th Regiment did not do much on that day, unfortunately for themselves. I believe that the unfortunate 16th's had the reputation of never having been under fire. That was nobody's fault, it was just a misfortune. But the regular soldiers who remained in Canada were men who were there receiving pay from the British Government as soldiers; they were not there as volunteers.

After that we were expecting a further invasion. Sixteen or eighteen months after that it was alleged that General O'Neill, the great general of those days as some of you recollect, and his adjutant were bringing other men over to Thorold and then and for the first time, I think, the Government of Canada ordered a number of volunteers down to Thorold. I need not say that there was no invasion it was only a rumour, but the men were then ordered down to Thorold. I went there. I must confess that after the first fight, at which I was not present, I was obliged, owing to the necessity of my profession, to give up volunteering, but when, a little afterwards, we heard that there was likely to be another invasion, one of my brother officers and myself enlisted as privates and went to the front. I recollect very well that I was promoted to be a sergeant in about two months and that I commanded a squad of the Elgin men who went down to Thorold and I had charge of four of the most drunken men I ever saw in my life. We went down to Thorold. my two brother officers and I—we were rankers at that time—and then crossed to the other side of the Niagara river, and at the International Hotel there dined in our uniforms as Canadian soldiers. The Fenian officer was General O'Neil. He was Adjutant General. and everything was as friendly as could be. I recollect very well one poor fellow of the Queen's Own who was shot, I think, through the heart. He was the first man killed at Ridgeway, and I saw five Fenians lying there. They were not in any uniforms; they looked like cab drivers or men of that class. They had been left there by the men who bolted to the States after the Saturday fight. We marched all over their country. and the road was strewn with paper collars and worn-out boots and other articles that had been thrown away by the Fenians on their rush for home. That was the battle of Ridgeway. I will say this for the Queen's Own, that after the fight I never saw young fellows so anxious for a fight or so keen to catch up with those fellows, but they were too late. Coming to business, I am firmly convinced that the men of the 7th Regiment were never on any pay-list. They were a good class of men, and included mechanics, law students, and medical students, and I do not think they looked for pay. At that time I doubt if we had a pay-list in that regiment. One man has written to me saying that he did not mind so much about the money but that he wanted recognition. It is a little hard on many of them. I have had a letter from a man named Sleeman in Michigan who I have no doubt was at Ridgeway and went through the fight, and I have seen a letter to him to the effect that because he was not on the pay-sheet they could not pay him the bounty. I think there should be a little more relaxation of that rule. No officer ever got a cent, and no officer ever asked for it, but I think that the men who were actually present should be paid without too much strictness. I do not want to find fault with the members from Nova Scotia, but I think they ought to be very happy that they did not have one man killed. We went through that swamp, and I know our officers and men were black up to their necks as the result of walking through the swamps.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South): I have no criticism whatever to make of the Department of Militia or of the Minister of Militia for any relaxation which the Department may have made in connection with this Act but it does seem to me that there is a misunderstanding somewhere. Several weeks ago, in the month of January I think, I asked the Department of Militia for forms to be supplied to people who thought they came out under the proclamation of the the Fenian Raid bounty. Those forms were supplied to me, twenty-four or twenty-five of them, and I distributed them among the people who asked for them. One person in particular, a gentleman who lives in the town of Glace Bay, and who undoubtedly come out under the proclamation of the Governor of Nova Scotia in 1866, made application on that regular form. I think on that form it is implied that no person will get this bounty unless he holds a Fenian Raid medal. That was, I think, part of the form and part of the affidavit which had to be signed. Now, the gentleman I refer to did not have a Fenian Raid medal. He sent his application to the department, and shortly afterwards I received a letter saying that he could hardly receive the bounty because his name did not appear on any pay-list in the province of Nova Scotia or elsewhere. Now, at that time I do not think there was any regular enrollment in the province of Nova Scotia, and yet for the reason I have mentioned this man, up to the present time, has been debarred from receiving his bounty. I think that 'active service' under the terms of the Act applies to any person who came out under the proclamation issued in Nova Scotia in 1866, and I think there should be some uniform regulation. Here was a man who came out under that proclamation. He put in his application, which has been turned down for the reasons first that he could not swear to certain parts of the affidavit, in that he did not have a Fenian Raid medal, and secondly that he was not enrolled. Personally I would be in favour of almost every man who belonged to the regular militia organization in the province of Nova Scotia of that day receiving this bounty, but I do not think that the Act as it stands now entitles them to it. There seems to be some misapprehension. There is one little town in the county which I have the honour to represent, where a gentleman is sending out letters to various people in the constituency asking them to call at his office in order that they may fill in applications for the Fenian Raid bounty. Up to the present time, two hundred people have made application through that gentleman. I have no fault to find with that at all, but that gentleman seems to use a certain sort of discretion as to the parties he notifies to make application. The fact is that there has been no uniform understanding as to who shall, and who shall not get this Fenian Raid bounty. As was pointed out in Nova Scotia in the years mentioned there was an annual drill, and I have not met a gentleman down there who having been called out does not think that he is entitled under this Act to receive this bounty. I try to be fair with them, and last year I tried to get an interpretation placed on the Act by the Minister of Militia that it applied to those who belonged to the active militia. Of course, it is a matter of opinion as to what active service really means. That seems to be the difficulty. I have nothing more to say regarding the matter except that the department should make regulations which are uniform, and that the applications and affidavits should be uniform, so that there could be no misunderstanding, and applicants would not be turned down because their applications were not technically in form. I believe that every person who was called out in Nova Scotia under that proclamation is entitled to the bounty under the Act; I believe the Act will bear that interpretation. Like other hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, I hope the minister will make some public announcement so that there will be no misunderstanding in the future as to who is entitled to receive this aid.

Mr. PIUS MICHAUD (Victoria, N.B.): I live in a county which borders on the state of Maine for a distance of one hundred miles, and I remember well hearing people speak of a great organization in the state of Maine to invade the northern part of New Brunswick. When that organization took place in the state of Maine, a company was organized at Grand Falls in the counties of Victoria and Madawaska, under Captain Bossé. Grand Falls is about three or four miles from the boundary of the state of Maine. I have here the names of some citizens who were under arms for a certain length of time, preparing for possible invasion. There are such names as Robert Malcolm, Adam H. Caldwell, Bernard McLaughlin, Manus McCluskey, George Sirois, Archibald Pelletier and James P. Kelly. Mr. Kelly is a magistrate at the town of Grand Falls. There are other names that I could mention, such as Alexandre Marquis and Theodore Marquis who were under arms for a certain length of time and who went to Niagara Falls. These gentlemen feel that they are entitled to consideration. If the Act does not permit the Minister to pay them the $100 bounty, it should be amended in such a way that these people may be compensated for the service which they performed at the time of the Fenian Raid. I hope that the minister will give earnest consideration to the representations which have been made to him this evening on behalf of those who served their country when it was threatened by invasion.

Mr J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I want to say a word in regard to this matter inasmuch as there have been a number of claims sent to the Department of Militia and Defence from residents of the county that I have the honour to represent and which claims have been disallowed on the ground that the names of the claimants do not appear on the pay list. It is only fair to say that I think the officers of the Militia Department are endeavouring to deal with these claims fairly and in the only way in which they can deal with them according to the letter of the Act. But, I agree with the statements that have been made by gentlemen on both sides of the House, that some greater latitude than appears to be given by the Act should be allowed in its interpretation. The Militia Department might better pay several claims which were really unjust than refuse to pay one just claim. I cannot think that men, whom I know to be reputable citizens in my county, are entirely mistaken in regard to having served during the time of the Fenian Raid. I know a great many men who have a distinct recollection of having been called out and having served in 1866 or 1870, whose claims have been disallowed on the ground that their names do not appear on the pay lists. I can only conclude that there is something wrong with regard to these pay lists or that they have not the authentic pay lists in the department. I know of a number of cases in my own county which I am satisfied are bona-fide cases and which have been disallowed. One thing which makes the matter a little more difficult is that a great many Fenian Rail veterans were granted medals by this Government and this is regarded by these men as an acknowledgment by the Federal Government of the justice of their claims. When, therefore, a man presents his claim to the Government for his bounty and is told that his name is not on the pay list, although he has received from the Federal Government a medal for his services, I feel that there is strength in such a case. The very fact that this Government granted him this medal was an acknowledgment of the justice of his claim and must be regarded as very strong evidence that he was at the front at that time whether his name is on the pay list or not. Another thing that I think is a little harsh is this: A man gets his application form, fills it out and gets a statement of one or two comrades certifying that he was out in 1866 or 1870; notwithstanding that, they refuse his claim because they say his name is not on the pay list. Then, they ask in some cases that the man produce further evidence. He may produce one or two affidavits of reputable persons and still they ask him to tell some little incident that occurred in 1866 or 1870. It seems to me that this is carrying the matter a little too far. I think that when a man has made his application, has received from the Ontario Government his land grant has received from the federal Government his medal, has himself taken a declaration that he was out on a given date and has backed that up with affidavits from two to three others that he was out, that ought to be sufficient evidence for the Militia Department, whether his name is on the pay-list or not.

Mr. H. B. MORPHY (North Perth): Mr. Speaker, in line with what the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) has said, I would like to say that I have in my county, living in the city of Stratford, a gentleman of the name of Walter Runcey, He has made application and he was at the front at the time of the Fenian invasion, under arms with other gentlemen with whom I have spoken. They have received their pay, they stood in the ranks with this man at the front and yet he is denied his pay because his name is not on the pay-list. That is one isolated instance of probably a defective pay-list. Probably some one, whose duty it was to put that man's name on the list, neglected it. All these probabilities are taken against the man although indubitable evidence can be furnished, and has been furnished, I believe, to the department, that he was at the front, sworn to by companions, he has received his medal, he has received his land grant from the Ontario Government, but he cannot get a dollar from the present hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Hughes). It seems rather hard that the Minister of Miltia is subjected to attack from both sides of this House. I cannot myself say that the hon. gentleman is altogether to blame but, from the instances which have been given to the House, it seems to me that it would be reasonable to ask that some amendment be made to this Act to give the minister more latitude in dealing with these cases.

While I am on my feet, I desire to point out another instance that appears to be a great hardship. In the city of Stratford there was a well ogranized, fully equipped company known as the Grand Trunk Railway Brigade. It is true that it was only a company, but in the early days it took upon itself the name which I have just mentioned. These men, as a recognized unit wearing the Queen's uniform, I am informed, were called out for active service by some authority—I am not in a position to say what authority—but were sent to the front. When I speak of the front I understand they were sent to the town of Sarnia on the border. They performed their drill and other military functions and did military service in that way. In the village of Millbank, in North Perth and in the adjoining county of Waterloo, there was a company known as the Crosshill company, about which I may apply practically the same arguments as I have attempted to adduce in favour of the Grand Trunk Railway Brigade. They organized and equipped themselves at their own expense. In this latter case they performed the drill that the authorities asked them to perform and they took the stations that they were asked to take. In both of these cases, it was thought at the time that the stations which they took were just as hazardous and as dangerous as any other station to which a soldier was asked to go. Therefore it seems to me that they were entitled, from the point of view of national spirit and patriotism, to be recognized in some way by this Government for the willingness which they displayed in doing their duty, although they never came under fire. The way in which the Act works out is peculiar in some respects. In the city of Toronto, in connection with the Queen's Own Rifles, one company known as the Toronto University Company, was called out. Probably, Toronto being at that time more of a military centre, had better military organization than other centres, and knew the Queen's regulations better. It had the facilities and the officers to do things properly and regularly. This company, I understand, was called out legally under the Queen's regulations; but men in that company had their pay who were never near the firing line. They happened to bury the dead after the engagement. That was a military service laudably performed, and I think the country was entitled to pay for any such services. What have we to say, however, in regard to the non-payment of a man who was at the front, whose companions have certified to him, but who was refused payment because he could not prove that his name was on the pay-list of the Militia Department. I think that the whole Act should be amended, that there should be no hesitancy at all to enlarge it so as to include every reasonable, honest, decent claim. This country can afford, in a case of this kind, to show some reasonable generosity, in this its day of expanding bountiful returns. The Act should be extended to include the widows of the men who lost their lives in vicissitudes of that campaign. There are to-day, to my knowledge, many such widows who are dependent upon a cold world for the charity which will give them sustenance. Let us in this case be a little generous. I think every Canadian, no matter what his political proclivities may be, will applaud loudly if this Act is largely extended so as to be generous rather than parsimonious.

Mr. MORPHY.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton, North): I should like to call the Minister of Militia's attention to a point in section 2 of the Act. It appears that two classes of persons are recognized in the Act, the militia and those who served with them. I would imagine that, if it were militiamen altogether that were recognized, the Act would say: 'those who served in the militia.' The word 'in' is not used, but the word 'with.' This is the way the section reads:

> In this Act volunteer means any person who was regularly enrolled or enlisted and served with any militia corps which the Government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or of New Brunswick called out for active service in the year 1866, or which the Government of Canada called out for active service in the years 1870, excepting, however, the two battalions of riflemen formed for service in the Northwest.

Possibly the language is understood by military men in a different way, but 'serving in a battalion' and 'serving with a battalion' are two different things. I should like the Minister of Militia to give us some idea as to whether he recognizes two classes of men in that connection.

I should like to call to his attention further, that two different forms of application are issuing from his department. I think I am justified in supposing that nothing is issued from that department without the sanction and approval of its head. I have under my hand two forms of application, one of which, the first one that was issued by the department, is altogether in compliance with the Act. The other, a more recent one, is different from the language of the Act. It says that any persons who were in any of the corps, the names of whose officers appear in a certain copy of Belcher's Almanac, come within the provisions of the Act, and are entitled to receive the bounty. It is stated in some literature issued by the department that certain letters have been written by members of Parliament supporting the Government. According to those letters, the warrant for the $100 bounty will issue upon certain forms, which are not mentioned in the first application, being complied with. In 1866, there were three or four regiments in the county of Cape Breton under the colonelcy of Col. Reid, Col. Graham and some others. These regiments were called out for regular drill at that time, and the proclamation of 1866 by the Governor of Nova Scotia received a very general response. I think that a uniform interpretation should be put upon this Act, so that we may all understand it. There seems to be different understandings in different places.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton): I wish to discuss briefly two or three of the applications that the department has received, on which it has not issued bounties. I wish to support the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), that at the time the volunteers were called out in 1866 and 1870 there was no pay roll. In that connection I refer particularly to one James E. McKelvey, of Sarnia, who was out in 1866 and again in 1870. His application was received; it was practically all right, and I fancy that the bounty was about to be paid to him when the department discovered that he was not on the active service pay-list for the period for which he claimed the bounty, and that therefore the bounty could not be paid. I think it highly probable that the very same circumstances applied to Mr. McKelvey and to the company with which he served as to the company with which the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) served. There were no papers. But when all the other conditions have been complied with, it seems to me it would be a reasonable thing for the department to accept other evidence that would show that the men had seen active service. It does not seem to me that it should be a condition precedent that the name of the man should be upon the payroll. I asked for the papers in this case, and they have been brought down, and that is the net result of the refusal to pay the bounty. It seems to me that the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) has spoken properly when he said that the Act should be enlarged. If a man can show that he was called out, that he was forced to give up what he was then at to go out in the service of his Queen and country, whether he saw active service or not, surely the statute should give him the bounty. There are some cases in which the proofs have been left with the department and the department has not so far taken any recognition of them at all. There are the cases of Simon Blunden, Humphrey Blunden and John Blunden. These men were all out in 1866. They were called out for duty, and served with their company, patrolling the shore of the river St. Clair and lake Huron, doing what they were called upon to do as good Canadians will. Having done that, they are entitled to what the Act calls for without going into minute particulars on technicalities by which they are debarred. I would call the attention of the minister to another case, that of A. C. Pousette, M.D., appointed surgeon or medical officer at Sarnia and on service for a considerable time. He was appointed on the 28th of December, 1865, and served as medical health officer until the end of the trouble. He was continually called out to duty—so he writes the department and has given a specific statement of affairs. He was required to be on parade. The smallpox broke out and he was called upon to attend the patients. He acted as surgeon for a time and was compelled to provide his own uniform; and he thinks he is entitled to the bounty provided under the Act. The only other person from my section who has sent in a claim, so far as I know, is John MacMillan. He was with Grand Trunk Company number six which was organized at Fort Edward on the lake shore. He was captain, and the commanding officer was Major Wylie. He says the company drilled daily and patrolled the lake and river shore, and at one time they were called out and entrained, went as far as Camlachie sixteen miles up the line, because they had heard that the Fenians were about to land on the lake shore and raid the country. I am not finding fault with the minister or the department; I fancy that they have a great number of claims and a great correspondence. But I wish to convey to the mind of the minister that I do not think this Act ought to stand on any technicality so far as the payment of these claims is concerned. The whole spirit of the Act was that anyone who could show bona fide that he was called out and responded to repel any raid, who gave up his ordinary occupation, and, as I have said performed service for Queen and country, is entitled to receive the bounty. I call the attention of the minister to the matter and I feel satisfied, knowing his broadmindedness and his fairmindedness, that he will see to it that the men who can show that they responded to their country's call, shall receive this grant.

Hon. SAM HUGHES (Minister of Militia): I am very much pleased with the spirit which evidently actuates hon. members in this matter. I can assure them that this is a difficult matter to manage. Many of these claimants are very old, and their memories, even under the best of circumstances, are not as acute as they were. But let any of us try to recall what transpired four or five years ago, and we will find it not easy to say who was present with us on any particular occasion. The officers of the department allow every reasonable latitude in this matter. But let me assure hon. gentlemen who have been criticising the department that we have had scores of cases much clearer than that presented by my hon. friend from North Perth or my hon. friend from West Lambton, and when they come to face the music, in every instance, they have been proven to be wrong or to need to get further evidence. I have had members come to the department, good Christian Tories, and be simply wild at the way my officers were managing affairs. In order to make sure, on one or two occasions, I have gone with them to the officer. I have said: I will see whether this man is doing as you say. In one instance, I found that the man had given the wrong company and the wrong town, and we were being condemned for what was really due to his own stupidity. Instance after instance of that kind occurs. We have the pay sheet in almost every instance. One instance, was that of two brothers who were enrolled. One of these gentlemen has since died, and a third brother, protests most vigorously that he was out. What are we to do? There were two brothers, and surely if they are on the payroll and forty or fifty of their neighbours it is strange that this other man was not on the payroll if he was really out. And surely, we are justified in such a case in asking this gentleman to furnish more evidence. We do demand the evidence, and let me say in all fairness, we intend to demand the evidence. This money is not mine; it belongs to the people of Canada. But where indubitable evidence is furnished there is not a case that is refused—not one. In one case a gentleman reported himself as a trooper, signed as a trooper, swore he was a trooper. It turned out that he was an officer. When we wrote him and told him we had no such name down on the payroll as a trooper, and asked if he was an officer, he did not deign to reply but got his member to try to raise cain over the matter. In these cases there are only two things asked, in fact only one, that the party should prove his claim. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the general question. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Michaud) has brought up some cases. One case from the eastern townships was brought up, I think by the hon. member for Pictou. The farmers there turned out and actually did first-class duty. A body of farmers along the border at Missisquoi who were not enrolled, and when the Fenians crossed, they found these fellows ready to meet them.

When the Fenians crossed the boundary they found these men ready to meet them. Unfortunately, these men had not been sworn in as volunteers, and I understand that some militiamen who lost the opportunity of distinguishing themselves because these farmers had already repelled the Fenians thought of having them arrested for murder, and the poor old fellows were afraid to admit that they were connected with repelling the invasion. That is a case in which I think payment should be made, but the law does not meet it. In the case of the Kingsville Company, all the volunteers declared that they were at the front, and were regularly enrolled, but no order of enrolment or organization was apparently issued to them until weeks after the Fenian Raid. A case of this kind can be dealt with only upon the due receipt of proofs.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The hon. minister referred to the fact that the name of the applicant was supposed to appear on the pay-list.

Mr. HUGHES: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Then I misunderstood him. In the province of Nova Scotia there were no pay-lists at all, as the volunteers were not paid, but there would be some kind of a list of the men who were in the different regiments and companies. Can the minister tell us if these lists for the province of Nova Scotia are in his possession?

Mr. HUGHES: There were pay-lists in Nova-Scotia. Where there is a pay-list, and a man says he was in the company, we take it as evidence that he was not in the company if his name does not appear on the pay-list, and we therefore ask him to furnish collateral proof. In every instance where this proof is furnished the man is given his warrant. We are getting from the archives and from the Nova Scotia authorities returns in connection with the matter.

Some fault has been found by hon. gentlemen opposite because some circulars or forms have been issued among their constituents. In my opinion, very few members of this House know the circumstances under which the volunteers in Nova Scotia were called out in the year 1866. On the 17th of March of that year there was a rumour afloat that a number of vessels had left United States ports and were about to invade the coasts of the province of Nova Scotia. That province was not then a part of the Dominion of Canada, and the Governor of Nova Scotia on the 17th day of March issued a proclamation calling out the volunteers of that province for active service on the 18th. They had only twenty-four hours' notice, but the men turned out in large numbers, and drilled for a few days until the scare was over. At the time the Act was passed I had not read the proclamation, but my attention was drawn to it by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Tremain); and the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) also drew my attention to the fact that the proclamation issued to the people of Nova Scotia actually called them out for 'active service.' Every man, therefore, who can prove that he was called out, and that he turned out to drill under that proclamation for active service, is, under the law, entitled to a bounty.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would like to tell the hon. minister that this information was in his department years ago. It was one of the grounds upon which the person most prominent in Nova Scotia in asking for the payment of the Fenian Raid bounty based his claim. The hon. minister will find that the correspondence and proclamation were filed in his department quite a number of years ago.

Mr. HUGHES: We knew the proclamation had been issued, but we did not know that its terms were as general. These men have only to prove their claims under the law; there has been no change in the regulations of the department. The junior member for Halifax spoke of some questions which he asked in the House in December last, and I now desire to read them and the answers thereto, from page 826 of Hansard:

Mr. Maclean (Halifax):

1. What is the interpretation of the Department of Militia and Defence of the provisions of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Act, 1912, as to what services qualify a person for the bounty?

2. If an enlisted volunteer of a militia regiment was called out for regimental drill, and did undergo drill, but whose company or regiment was ordered from the drill grounds for active service elsewhere, is he entitled to a bounty under the provisions of said Act?

3. What is the departmental definition of 'Active Service' as used in clause 2 of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act?

Mr. Hughes:

1. That a volunteer must have been enrolled in a corps called out for active service and have actually served with that corps during the period of a raid, in pursuance of the order or proclamation which called it out.

2. If the corps was called out for active service and the drill or service was performed in connection with such calling out, yes; but the order for more annual training, or drilling without the order for active service does not count. Verification must be by declaration of applicant and of at least one comrade; and the name must appear on the service or pay roll for the period—or other equally satisfactory evidence must be given.

3. Active service means service performed in response to the order or proclamation which called out the corps for the purpose of repelling invasion.

These are the answers that were given on that occasion, and they are the identical answers we give to-day. No change has been made in the regulations. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has correctly interpreted them. The consideration of the subject involves the question of active service as compared with annual drill. The orders for the annual military meets state explicitly that the men are called out for annual drill or training, but when these officers and men were called out in 1866, the proclamation read for active service the object being to repel an invasion. Accordingly, under the law, these men, as I have said, who turned out and who can prove their case will be entitled to their bounty.

Mr. MACDONALD: What about the 1870 men in Nova Scotia?

Mr. HUGHES: If they were called out for active service as of course they were they are entitled to the bounty; but, if they were called out for annual drill, they are not. So far as I know, there was no order issued in 1870 calling the men out for active service.

Mr. MACDONALD: Your opinion, then, is that no one is entitled to a bounty by reason of any claim based upon his action in 1870?

Mr. HUGHES: I have never seen any proclamation issued in 1870 in Nova Scotia. Some reference has been made to very distinguished soldiers who are probably entitled to this bounty. Let me point out that no Canadian regular soldier, no Canadian Northwest mounted policeman, no British regular, has ever participated in the bounties given for the Fenian raid, the Red river rebellion, or the northwest rebellion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Might not the Act be amended to include them?

Mr. HUGHES: If the House and the country choose to amend the Act, and if I happen to be Minister of Militia when the change is made, I shall be only too glad to carry out such a provision; but I do not think that the Act should extend to these people.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am not quite clear as to whether the minister has in his possession a list of the men who were called out for active service in Nova Scotia. For example, if a member of Parliament receives a letter from a constituent stating that he thinks he is entitled to the bounty, it would be a great convenience if we could go into the minister's office and find out if the man's name is on the list before we send down affidavits asking him to make statements that possibly he could not make.

Mr. HUGHES: Much as we would like to see members of Parliament around the Militia Department, I am satisfied that they would gradually become a nuisance, coming in to find out if this or that man was on the list, and we would require to increase the staff by fifty or sixty to accommodate them. The simplest way, the only business way, is that the man knows whether he was called out for active service or not, he should be called to prove his case. If he cannot prove it, and there are some little technical difficulties in the way, we will go as far as possible to assist him in proving his case. In many cases where the applicant has been an old man, not very well able to attend to the matter for himself, we have written to some one in the neighbourhood asking him to see if the man is justified in the claim he makes or if he is only talking through his hat, and has only performed annual drill. Now and then, I am sorry to say, there are found men whose consciences will allow them to go just a little beyond the fact, and declare that they were out in 1866 or for the Fenian raid when the lists show that they were not out for the Fenian raid, but were out for the annual drill later on. I think you will find that the Act has been pretty well administered, taking it all in all.

Mr. MACDONALD: How many claims have been paid up to date?

Mr. HUGHES: I think 10,000 or 12,000.

Mr. BELAND: I understand that these claims are passed upon in the order in which they are received.

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: In case a claim is rejected, does the department communicate with the party advising him of that fact and of the ground on which the rejection is made?

Mr. HUGHES: I understand so.

Mr. BELAND: Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. HUGHES: The instructions are and to my knowledge the practice is in many cases to send on such information, because the men's friends come back at us again.

Mr. BELAND: I myself filed a good many claims for my constituents. Some of those claims have been paid, some have not, and I have received communications from those who have not been paid complaining that they had had no information whatever.

Mr. HUGHES: If my hon. friend will bring a list, as other members do, I am sure that the officer in charge, Mr. Panet, will satisfy him in a few minutes. While it is not customary to show lists, I have given instructions that any member who comes in shall receive all possible information and every courtesy.

The Grand Trunk Brigade has been spoken of. The Grand Trunk Brigade were uniformed and enrolled by the Grand Trunk railway for the protection of its own property. I regret that they are not under the law. They were a fine body of men all over the country, but they do not come under the law as technically construed, and therefore I am powerless in the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD: Would the minister bring down a statement of the number of claims paid?

Mr. HUGHES: At any time.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): As far as my constituency is concerned, I think the minister has tried to administer the law as fairly as possible, and therefore anything that I have to say is not in a fault-finding mood. It seems to me from the discussion we have had that it must be apparent to the minister that the law should be amended to some extent, especially with reference to the Nova Scotia claimants to participation in this fund. I do not profess to have any more foresight than an ordinary member of Parliament and if the minister would refer back to the debate upon the committee stage of this Bill on March 27, 1912, he would find that I pointed out to him some difficulties that I feared he might encounter in the administration of this law. The discussion to-night has fully demonstrated the wisdom or the opinion that I gave to the minister at that time. I told the minister that I felt the whole difficulty would arise over the definnition of the words 'called out' and I pressed the minister as closely as I thought courteous to give some particular definition of those words. I could foresee difficulty then and I see that this difficulty has been greater than I supposed it would be. Take the case of the Nova Scotia militia: it turns out now, according to the statement of the minister, that a general proclamation was issued by the Governor of Nova Scotia calling out the militia force of Nova Scotia for active service. Now, the minister says: As I interpret the law, I am bound to recognize the claims of every member of the active militia of Nova Scotia. Compare that with the position of other provinces. There was no invasion in Nova Scotia, there was an invasion in New Brunswick. I do not know to what extent an actual invasion of New Brunswick took place, but down along the St. Croix near St. Andrews or St. Stephens there was an invasion. Members of the New Brunswick militia were taken from various points of the province to that particular place. A regiment came from St. John, a company or two from my town, Woodstock. I believe that the Charlotte county militia, around St. Stephens and St. Andrews, were enrolled and went to the front. At the same time that these three or four corps were acually taken to St. Andrews there were corps all over New Brunswick under arms performing their drill. I do not say that they were called out in the sense that the Governor of Nova Scotia called out his men but they were called out by some proper authorities or rather they were under arms and ready to take part in the fray if necessary. Surely, as a matter of justice and right the men who did not actually go to St. Andrews in New Brunswick but were under arms are as much entitled to this bounty as the militia of Nova Scotia who answered the call of the Governor, which happened to say 'for active service.' The Minister can see the position in which he is placed and in which the militia of Nova Scotia are placed as compared with the militia of other provinces of Canada. It seems to me that even at this late date the minister could well afford to modify this law to such an extent that he would do justice, make it more definite, do the things that I tried to impress on him a year ago as necessary to be done. Take, for instance, the case detailed by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). I was very much interested in his narration of events there. I was somewhat surprised that we had among our members a gentleman who had the proud distinction of being a participant of these events. Surely the men who went from London on three hours' notice, as the hon. member for Hamilton has said, are entitled to participate in this bounty if any person in Canada is.

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): All get it.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr Barker), seems to be able to give cases in which they cannot get it, and the hon. member for Perth also pointed out some cases. Surely those men are entitled to participation in the bounty to a far greater extent than are the ordinary militia of Nova Scotia who answered to the call to perform their annual drill.

Mr. HUGHES: My hon. friend says annual drill.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes.

Mr. HUGHES: I agree with him.

Mr. CARVELL: I see the distinction, but I venture to say that in the province of Nova Scotia there was not one militiaman out of one hundred who knew the difference between being called out to annual drill and being called out to active service. Since this discussion started this evening, an hon. member has informed me that in a great many cases when the militia are called out in ordinary years, they are called out for active service. I do not know that; that is what I am told. The point is that the ordinary militia man does not know the difference. The ordinary militia man in Nova Scotia answered the call of the proper authorities to go under arms, just as the militia answer the call of the proper authorities to go under arms every year. By an accident perhaps, the words 'active service' were incorporated as regards Nova Scotia, and were possibly left out as regards New Brunswick. That seems to me to be creating a condition of things which is not fair and which was not the intention when this Bill was introduced. I am satisfied that the Minister was actuated by proper motives, and that he did not intend that such a condition of affairs should exist. But it is not too late to remedy the difficulty or to introduce during this session an amending Bill clearly defining what class of persons are entitled to participate in this bounty. There is no use of the hon. minister saying that if this House determines to pass a law, he would be willing to enforce it. We know that it would be useless for any hon. member on this side of the House, or on the other side for that matter, to attempt to introduce an amendment to this Act without the consent of the minister. The only way we can have this matter dealt with is by the Minister of Militia, and we know that if the minister introduced a Bill it is pretty certain to become law. We may as well get back to the fountain head of military authority in Canada and give credit where it is due, or blame if necessary. Therefore I think my hon. friend the minister must take the responsibility of saying whether this law should be amended or not.

A question was raised by some hon. gentlemen as to whether the Nova Scotia militia were entitled to any consideration on account of having been called out in 1870. There can be no question whatever that the Nova Scotia militia are not entitled to participate in this fund by reason of anything that took place in 1870. Even if they were called out by proclamation of the Government for active service, for section 2 of the Act which is the section that gives the authority provides for any volunteer who was, > —regularly enrolled or enlisted in and served with any militia corps which the Government of Canada, or of Nova Scotia, or of New Brunswick, called out for active service in the year, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, or which the Government of Canada called out for active service in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

The only people who were called out in 1870 and who are entitled to participation in this bounty are those who were called out by the Government of Canada and not by the Governor of Nova Scotia, or by the Governor of New Brunswick, so that I think we can dismiss that branch of the matter, so far as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are concerned.

Some question has arisen as to the difficulties of enforcing the Act. I quite appreciate that. I can well understand the minister having plenty of difficulties. No doubt, once in a while, he finds some person whose conscience permits him to make statements which in the case of a younger man might be regarded as being not exactly true. But I think the minister has tried to meet cases as fairly as possible, and I want to give him credit. So far as my province is concerned, I do not think that any great attempt has been made to introduce politics. After the passage of the Act last June, an old military officer tried to take upon himself the entire control and enforcement of the Act in New Brunswick, but he was not sustained by the department. I tested it myself, and I found that I was able to get replies to my applications, and we were treated just as if we were good Tories. It is nice to be able to say pleasant things about the Minister of Militia; it is really a pleasure to give him some credit. I want to give another illustration to show how carefully the minister has tried to do justice. I had a case where a gentleman now living in my county, an old man nearly 80 years of age, who claimed that at the very last moment he was induced to take the place of a man who had failed to turn up before the corps were ordered off to St. Andrews. The change was not made in the service roll or in the pay list. This man went to St. Andrews and served his month or six weeks, but the change in the roll was not made. He made application, and he was informed that his name did not appear on the pay list or on the service roll. I wrote to the minister, who replied asking me to send a copy of the man's handwriting, which I did, and the minister promptly satisfied himself that the application was genuine, and the $100 was sent. Under those circumstances I think I can say that the minister has tried to enforce the Act fairly, but I think it would be, not an unfair interpretation, but an unfair piece of legislation if every militiaman who is alive to-day in the province of Nova Scotia is regarded as entitled to participate in this fund, when the militiamen of other provinces, who did just as much as the Nova Scotia militiamen, perhaps more, are not entitled to the bounty. My own father did more perhaps than those Nova Scotia militiamen. His farm abutted on the boundary line, and I am told that for three months he and his neighbours were organized into a militia company, and met day after day and night after night to patrol the border. Those men did more than the militiamen of Nova Scotia, but I cannot say they were called out, as my hon. friend says they had to be under this Act. My father has been dead many years, and I am not making any claim on this fund; I simply use his case as an illustration of what took place in my own part of the country and probably in other parts of Canada. Some change should be made by which the men who are entitled to this bounty should receive it, and the men who are not entitled to it should not receive an advantage over others.

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): In justice to the Nova Scotia people, I may say that the time of the raid in New Brunswick, if I remember rightly, was June, 1866, while the time of the raid or expedition in Nova Scotia was March 17, 1866. As I understand the situation, telegrams were received stating that vessels had left on a marauding expedition for various parts of the province of Nova Scotia, and therefore the Government at that time called out all the troops of Nova Scotia to man the ports in every part of the province. They turned out on the morning of the 18th all over the province. Just as the clans in the Highlands of Scotland used to turn out in response to the Fiery Cross, so the people of Nova Scotia rallied at once to repel the invader. I just mention that in passing.

Mr. CLARENCE JAMESON (Digby): I must dissent from the opinion of the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, (Mr. Carvell) that the militia of Nova Scotia did not know, at the time they were called out in 1866, whether they were called out for the usual annual drill or for active service. At that time, as I have been informed by those who participated in the movement, there was general knowledge throughout the province of Nova Scotia that there was likely to be a descent made upon the coast by privateers and vessels which were being fitted out in the United States and the militia came out with the expectation of having to repel an enemy. They were for a number of weeks under arms at almost every seaport, and, in the county that I have the honour to represent in this House, I know that the militia took a very active part in making the necessary preparations to repel the expected invaders.

I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that he had failed to find that, in so far as his experience went, there had been any politics in connection with the Militia Department in regard to this particular matter. Some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who preceded him, however, seemed to think that there had been some politics in this matter in so far as Conservative members were concerned. I think that perhaps there is some slight misapprehension in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the position of hon. members from Nova Scotia upon this side of the House with respect to this matter. The fact is that, when this proclamation of the 17th of March, 1866, was rediscovered, it became necessary, in the opinion of some hon. members on this side of the House, who had consulted together, to have a special form of application prepared to meet the peculiar circumstances which resulted from the form of proclamation of the Governor of Nova Scotia in 1896. In view of the fact that this was necessary, it was not unnatural that, in corresponding with those in our constituencies who were interested in this matter, we should have desired to lay before them all the information which was available and that we should send them a draft of this form of application. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has said that he thinks there should be one set of regulations and affidavits and one form of application. I might point out to him that it is impossible there should be only one form of application for the reason that the circumstances were different in Nova Scotia from what they were in New Brunswick. In Nova Scotia there was a proclamation calling out the militia for active service and in New Brunswick I understood the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, to say that was not the case, nor was it the case in Ontario.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say that there was no such call in New Brunswick. I said that I had no knowledge of it. It seems that the whole thing is shrouded in mystery to some extent. We know that the militiamen were out and performed their drill for a length of time but, whether they were called out or not, we do not know.

Mr. JAMESON: In Ontario, at all events, I understand from my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), who spoke a few moments ago, that there was no proclamation calling out the militia.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The hon. member refers to me as speaking about the uniform regulations.

Mr. JAMESON: It was the hon. member for Cape Breton, South (Mr. Carroll) I referred to.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I said the same thing and I took it that the reference was to myself. I sent to the department for a form two or three days ago and I was given the old form which is entirely different from the form that has been prepared for the province of Nova Scotia. I cannot, therefore, understand why the later form should not have been sent to me in order that I might send it to parties who wish to make application in my province. I was given the old, or universal, form and not the recent form which was made to comply with the proclamation of the Governor of the 17th of March, 1866. That is what I thought should be regulated as far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned.

Mr. JAMESON: The form which I have sent out has been sent out after consulting with other hon. members on this side of the House. It was drafted by ourselves and we did not secure it from the department. It is true that it contained only the alterations which were necessary in order that it should conform to the proclamation issued by the Governor in 1866.

Mr. SINCLAIR: May I ask the hon. member if he knows if the form which was drafted by hon. gentlemen opposite will be acceptable to the department if used?

Mr. JAMESON: I have no reason to suppose that, if it embodies all the necessary facts and proves the claim, it will be rejected. I may say that I have not had a claim returned and decided under the new form. The form includes, in so far as it possibly can, all the essentials of the form that the department has been giving out and it includes further the facts which are necessary in order to show that these people claim to have been out on active service as a result of the proclamation of the Governor of 1866.

My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) said that hon. members on this side of the House were endeavouring to make political capital out of this matter. I would be sorry to think that there should be any impression of that sort. As far as I am personally concerned, I have studiously avoided anything which might be so construed. The first claim to be paid in my constituency was a claim which was paid to Major John Daley, who was for many years president of the Liberal Association in the county. He was a very active opponent of mine in the last election and I am sure he will never vote for me, or any other Conservative candidate. Yet, he was the first gentleman in that county to receive recognition and a cheque for $100. I might point out to the hon. member for Pictou, who has said that we were introducing politics into this matter, that it is not so very long ago since he and his friends opposite, when they were in charge of the political affairs of this country, voted down a resolution introduced by the Conservative party when in opposition, to the effect that this relief or some similar relief, should be given to the survivors of the Fenian raid.

Mr. MACDONALD: As certain hon. gentlemen were creating a wrong impression in Nova Scotia as to who were entitled to receive this money, I asked the minister to make an authoritative statement as to who were and who were not.

Mr. JAMESON: I am glad that my hon. friend will limit his criticism to that. If that is the only criticism he has, I have no fault to find with him whatever. But I do not think, taking the circumstances as they have been in my county and as far as I know them to have been in other constituencies in Nova Scotia, represented by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, that there has been any attempt to mislead anybody. On the contrary, in every case I have pointed out distinctly that those who make application should not confuse annual drill, with active service under the proclamation issued by the Governor of Nova Scotia, and that they should always be prepared not to be disappointed in the event of the department not being able to recognize their claims, as undoubtedly some claims would creep in which they would not be able to recognize.

I think that the minister is giving careful consideration to all claims which are sent in to his department; and, although I do not go to the length to which some hon. gentlemen have gone of asking that the Act should be enlarged, at the same time I do trust that he will be able to give most favourable consideration to all claims filed, and which have merit; although, strictly speaking, the evidence may not be so complete as it would have been, had the opportunity been afforded these gentlemen years ago of making the claims which they are now making.

Mr. A. L. DAVIDSON (Annapolis): I should like to say a word or two, inasmuch as I have been made the subject of criticism by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and by some other hon. gentlemen opposite. I propose to make my remarks very brief indeed. It strikes me that hon. gentlemen opposite have an entire misapprehension in regard to the attitude of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House from the province of Nova Scotia. They seem very much concerned indeed that we should notify our constituents that there was a possibility of their claiming under this Act. As I understand the situation, it is this: At the last session of this Parliament, an Act was placed upon the statute-books. It was not the duty of the Government, which was given power to pay out money under this Act, to go out into the highways and byways in order to try to find people who were qualified to receive the bounty provided for. The onus was absolutely upon the persons who wished to apply. I think it was the duty of persons, who desired to claim under this Act, to prove their claims. I conceive it also to be the duty of hon. gentlemen, representing constituencies in Nova Scotia, to try to aid their constituents as much as possible in that regard. The only difference between hon. gentlemen opposite representing constituencies in Nova Scotia, and hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, is this: Hon. gentlemen opposite, when their constituents went to them and asked them about this matter, looked over the Act in a very careless manner, decided that there was nothing in it, and passed it by. We, on this side of the House, made up our minds that, if there was any possibility of any of our constituents getting the money legally from the Government, we would do the best we could to obtain it for them. We studied the records, and we found that we could make out a good case. In the first place we consulted the officials of the department. They were of the opinion that the volunteers in Nova Scotia were not qualified, because they had not been called out for active service. Later on, we were able to prove to them that the Nova Scotia militia had been called out for active service by a royal proclamation. When we got that information, we went to work to make it as public as possible. We did not introduce party politics into the matter. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) read a portion of a letter which I addressed to my constituents. I defy him to find there a single line which shows that I was trying to introduce party politics in any way. Had I wished to make political capital out of this matter, I could very easily have done so. I could have pointed out to my constituents in Annapolis that this Act was placed upon the statute-books entirely by reason of the efforts of the Liberal-Conservative party and despite the opposition of gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. MACDONALD: Who opposed this last year?

Mr. DAVIDSON: I was referring to the Parliament of 1911, when the same principle was involved, when hon. gentlemen opposite had it in their power to pass an Act of this kind, and refused to do so, but voted down a resolution proposed by members of the then Opposition.

Mr. MACDONALD: You said we opposed the Act.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Opposed the principle of the Act.

Mr. SINCLAIR: We did not oppose the principle of the Act.

Mr. DAVIDSON: My hon. friend from Pictou is altogether too suspicious in regard to the action of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. We have still got to learn the "A. B. C's." in the game of politics if we are to take the hon. gentleman for our model. During the time that he has sat in this House, there has not been anything that he has not turned to political account. The Department of the Interior issued a special atlas for the school children of Canada. Hon. gentlemen are aware that any school child or any person can apply for that atlas and get it. The hon. gentleman from Pictou discovered this fact and wrote an open letter to the school children of Pictou county, informing them that through his influence, they might obtain this boon.

Mr. MACDONALD: Would my hon. friend be good enough to read the letter if he has it?

Mr. DAVIDSON: I did not regard the letter as valuable enough to treasure it.

Mr. MACDONALD: You are speaking from a very bad memory.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Will my hon. friend deny that he wrote such a letter as that, or to that effect?

Mr. MACDONALD: The statement which my hon. friend attributes to me is entirely incorrect. No such language was used in the letter.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Will my hon. friend deny that he wrote a letter advising the school children of Pictou that, due to his efforts, they could obtain such an atlas from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MACDONALD: If my hon. friend wants an explanation of the matter, I wrote a letter to the press in the county of Pictou stating that school trustees in that county could obtain this atlas on application to the department. They did apply. Many hon. gentlemen, including hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, have done the same thing. My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) probably did so himself.

Mr. DAVIDSON: My hon. friend said that it was due to his efforts as member for Pictou. The hon. gentleman stated that party politics were not introduced into the Militia Department in the days of old. I have a very different story to tell. In the year 1904, there was established in the constituency, which I have the honour to represent at the present time, a regiment of King's Canadian Hussars. The officer who recruited for that regiment went out into the county which I represent and promised commissions to people absolutely upon the condition that they would support the Liberal party. No Conservative got a commission in that regiment, and the young men who asked for commissions were told that the condition of obtaining such a commission was allegiance to the Liberal party. I am very glad that an hon. gentleman, who does not have a reputation for very tender esteem towards the Conservative party, who is not supposed to be particularly friendly to this side of the House, nevertheless is driven to-night to make the statement that in this matter no politics had been introduced by the Minister of Militia. That is something which cannot be said of the former Administration.

Mr. CARVELL: That is casting pearls before swine.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am giving it all possible notoriety. When the hon. gentleman gives information which deserves commendation, I commend it; but it is not often that I am called upon to do so. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) struck me as exercising the characteristics of his race to a remarkable degree to-night. He showed a wonderful sagacity. He asked the Minister of Militia if he could find out from him who could take this affidavit, before advising his constituents what to swear to. I do not think he does his constituents any justice in that regard. I know the people of Guysborough to be a fine, sturdy, class of people, who would not take a false declaration. I do not believe he has to go to his constituents and advise them first what it is safe to swear to.

Mr. SINCLAIR: My hon. friend is altogether misconstruing my remarks. I simply asked the minister if he was in possession of any list in the province of Nova Scotia that would enable hon. members, who were asked to make inquiries, to find out whether these parties were enrolled on the list or not. We are told by some members who have spoken that it was necessary to be named on the payroll and I knew that there were no pay-lists in the province of Nova Scotia; and that is the reason I have asked the minister to tell me whether he had any kind of list for the province of Nova Scotia. The hon. member has no right to make such an inference from what I said.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I may be wrong, but I am in the judgment of this House, and I think the records will show that I have done the hon. gentleman no injustice. I think that a fair construction of what he said was that he wanted to find out if there was a list in the department to which he could refer, so that he could tell his constituents whether it was safe for them to make a declaration or not. The hon. gentleman wants to know whether there were pay-lists. He is anxious to ascertain that fact. There were pay-lists in Nova Scotia. In the county I have the honour to represent we have no difficulty in establishing who served at that time by reference to pay-lists, and I have no doubt that there were pay-lists in the county of Guysborough also. I think that before he induces his constituents to make application he should assure himself that the pay-lists are in existence and that names of possible applicants are upon those lists. At any rate, I do not think his constituents will be inclined to take declarations of the truthfulness of which they are not assured. I think it will be a surprise to the good Liberals in the county of Annapolis whom I represent, and who will benefit by this, to know that I was subject to criticism by gentleman opposite because I advised them of the law and provided means by which they could have their applications made out and put before the department.

DISMISSAL OF CHARLOTTE DEVEREUX.

On the motion for Committee of Supply:

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond): I desire to call attention to the case of Miss Charlotte Devereux, the teacher lately in charge of the Indian school at Salmon river, Richmond county, Nova Scotia. On the 4th of December last I put some questions in the House which were answered by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche). The report of the questions and answers in 'Hansard' is as follows:

Mr. Kyte:

1. Have any charges been made against Charlotte Devereux, teacher in charge of the Indian school at Salmon river, Richmond county, N.S.?

2. Have any communications been received asking for the dismissal of Miss Devereux?

3. By whom were the charges made, and from whom were the communications received?

Mr. Roche:

1 and 2. Information was received by the department that Miss Devereux's services were not satisfactory, and asking that she be not re-engaged.

3. Communications were received from J. A. Gillies, K.C., Sydney, Cape Breton, as well as a report from the agent.

Two days afterwards I addressed a letter to the Minister of the Interior requesting him not to dismiss Miss Devereux from the service of the department without having an inquiry as to whether or not the charges made against her were well founded. I did not receive an answer to this communication. In making this remark I do not wish to be understood as imputing any discourtesy to the hon. Minister of the Interior. I have pleasure in testifying to the uniform courtesy the hon. gentleman has always shown to myself and to other members on this side of the House and to his uniform good-nature in all relations I have had with him. We, on this side deeply deplore the cause which compelled him to leave the city of Ottawa a few weeks ago, and I am sure I voice the sentiment of every member on this side of the House when I express the fervent hope that he may be speedily restored to health and to the discharge of his duties in this House and in his department. It is probably due to some accident in the transfer of letters to my home during the Christmas holidays that I did not receive an answer. At all events, no inquiry was held as to the foundation of the charges made against Miss Devereux and she was dismissed from her position as teacher about the first of the year. The Minister of the Interior was good enough to give me a copy of the report made by the Indian Agent at St. Peter's on which this dismissal was made. I will read the report:

Mr. DAVIDSON.

Indian Agent's Office,
St. Peter's, N.S., Nov. 12th, 1912.

Sir,—In reply to yours of September 5th, 1912, 119, 707-1, requesting me to forward you more detailed information than is contained in my monthly school reports in regard to the way in which the Salmon river school (Indian) has been carried on since Miss Devereux has had charge of it, I may say that I have gone into the matter carefully and examined the case thoroughly and I have arrived at certain conclusions more or less definite which I shall now place before you. These may give you to understand my delay in answering you.

In the first place, then, I have interviewed the leading Indians on the matter and I find them absolutely opposed to a lady teacher. They claim that the children do not make the progress under them that they did when they had men. By an examination of the old registers I found this was not too true. Since 1904, when lady teachers were introduced, I find that only three pupils reached standard IV, while previous to that date I find that better progress by far was made than is now being done, many of the pupils being entered on the registers in the sixth standard. From an examination of the registers I find the above amply proven.

In the second place, I find that a goodly number of the Indians who attended school say, thirteen or fourteen years ago, and before that time, are able to read and write. Some of them subscribe for the newspapers. I have received letters from them written in fair English and they speak English better than those who are younger. The influence and the lasting work of the old teachers: Johnston, McMillan, Murphy, Campbell, McInnis, Langley—all men—can clearly be seen here. Many of the class of Indians mentioned have expressed to me their surprise at the Government in late years forcing lady teachers upon them when their results are so different from those of the male teachers of years ago.

In the third place, I find that the Indians show want of confidence in the ability of lady teachers to show and exercise disciplinary powers. The captain of the band, who is the spokesman of the band, assures me that he found it necessary not so long ago to remind a lady teacher that the teaching hours and proper discipline were not kept, but to no avail. If you ever had anything to do with the teaching profession you can easily understand that the child very readily knows what its parents' opinion of the teacher is and that it is next to impossible to advance the child unless the teacher has the sympathy of the parents and public opinion behind him. In this school, then, I find public opinion adverse; I find that necessary sympathy between parents and teacher conspicuous by its absence. It is one thing to try to show a good attendance by handing out cheese and crackers; it is quite another thing to lead Indian children along the flowery paths of knowledge. After the bills were rendered you this year, your department brought to my notice, through the Indian superintendent, the fact that too much cheese was purchased, at least at one time. I was never advised what quantity was considered allowable, but it is evident that quite a considerable attention was paid to this part of the programme while other things more necessary in the opinion of the true educationist were neglected.

In the fourth place I must say that among many of the whites contiguous to the reserve, Miss Devereux's teaching and teaching hours are regarded as a joke. Her boarding house is three-quarters or a mile from the schoolhouse. She is known to have left her boarding house as late as 9.30 a.m., call at the post office after that, and often call at another house, which we may call Mr. A.'s, on her way to school. In fact she spent so much of her time at Mr. A's, going and coming, that the joke came to her ears from the white people that the Indian children would not get their grade this year, but Mrs. A. very likely would. Now, since I began to make inquiry, the Indians who are close to school tell me that for only one month did she keep proper school hours. I furnished her with your circular, 'Indian day school regulations,' as soon as I got it last year. She has the school hours to be kept before her there in black and white, but what do we find? On the 29th of October last I passed the school after 10 a.m. and the teacher was not there. On November 24 I went to visit the school after 10 a.m. and she was not there. On November 7 another man passed the school at 10.15 a.m. and she was not there. On another occasion after 10 a.m. she was not in school. Her excuse on the 29th October to me was that 'all the clocks in Burradfrad were astray.' This held no water. The 28th was Thanksgiving. She was in St. Peters that day where she could have got the true time and surely her watch would not lose one hour in twelve. Many of the white people now tell me of the poor hours she keeps and has kept all along, but they do not wish their names disclosed as it is nothing to them whether the Government maintains a school there or not.

In opening school in Sepember, she could not go back to her boarding house of last year. Why? Now, I do not vouch for the truth of this as I did not have it direct from her last year's boarding mistress, but she is represented as having said that under no circumstances would she have her again to board on account of the trouble she gave in often sitting down to breakfast after 9 a.m. You may take this for what it is worth; that is how it reached my ears. She certainly never got back to her former boarding house and it looked one time as if she could not get a place at all.

Now, do you consider this sufficient for you to act upon? I notice you ask for no recommendation from me and I accordingly make none. I should like to remind you that the Indian school is about eight miles distant from here, and I cannot always have my eyes on the school, and unless I have a teacher there who shows some willingness at least to keep proper hours that I cannot always force him.

In consideration I must say that I would thank you more had you given the making of this report to someone else. Miss Devereux is one of my parishioners, and as such she is one member of the spiritual family under my charge and care. You can perhaps understand then that in making this report condemnatory of her I am doing what I certainly do not relish, but I recognize too that I have duties to perform towards the department, as well as towards the Indian children whom she is paid to teach.

I remain,
Your obedient servant,
Rev. R. L. Macdonald,
Indian Agent.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that one of the charges made against this young girl upon which her dismissal was requested was that she was not opening the school at nine o'clock in the morning and closing it at four in the afternoon, in accordance with the printed regulations forwarded to her through the agent. I will now read a statutory declaration made by Miss Devereux with regard to the facts:

In the matter of the dismissal of Charlotte M. Devereux, teacher of the Indian school at Salmon River Reserve, Richmond county, N.S.

I, Charlotte M. Devereux, of St. Peter's in the county of Richmond, province of Nova Scotia, school teacher, do solemnly declare: That I was appointed teacher of the Indian school at Salmon River reserve, Richmond county, Nova Scotia. on or about the 13th day of January 1912, and I entered upon my duties as teacher an January 16.

That at the time I took charge of the said school, and for many years previous thereto, the hours for teaching were from ten o'clock a.m. till noon and from one o'clock p.m. till three o'clock, with a recess of fifteen minutes during the forenoon session.

That I was not furnished with any written regulations by the department as to the teaching hours, and on applying to Mrs. Henrietta Cameron, the teacher who immediately preceded me, I was informed by her that the hours were as hereinbefore stated.

That Reverend R. L. Macdonald, of St. Peter's, was appointed Indian agent for the said Indian Reserve in or about the month of March, 1912.

That the said Indian agent gave me a pamphlet containing the instructions issued by the Department of Indian Affairs respecting the conducting of the school and the hours during which the school was to be open on or about the first of April, and that was the first knowledge I had that the school hours were changed.

That the said Indian Agent told me at the time he gave me the regulations that he did not approve of the school hours as they were too long and said that I need not mind them but I was to teach the hours as formerly.

That thereafter I continued to open the school at ten o'clock, but on several occasions I endeavoured to keep the children in till four o'clock in the afternoon, but I was unable to do so successfully, for as soon as the clock struck three they became restless and made excuses to go home.

That on or about the 2nd day of September last I called upon the Indian Agent at his house at St. Peter's to discuss school matters, and I was accompanied by Mrs. Henrietta Cameron the former teacher; I told the agent of the difficulty I had in keeping the children in the school for a longer time each day than they had been accustomed to. He replied: I do not approve of these hours at all, continue the old hours, and if a kick comes I will see what can be done.

That on or about September 25th last the Indian Agent sent for me and I went to his house to see him. He told me that he had been to Ottawa and that they were after me at Ottawa. I asked him what he meant. He replied that I was to be dismissed, that Joseph A. Gillies was pushed to dismiss me and give my place to another because all my people were Liberals. He said there was no complaint whatever against me at Ottawa, and that he was was perfectly satisfied with me and my teaching, but that I was to be dismissed on account of politics and that they told me at Ottawa to be on the lookout for a teacher. He said Ernest McNeil is to be the man to get the school. He told me I had better resign and not to give them to say that they would dismiss, for they were bound to dismiss me anyway. I told him he had the doing of the whole thing in his hands, as he was the Indian Agent. He replied he could not interfere between me and Ernest McNeil as we were both his parishoners.

That previous to the 12th day of November, 1912, the date of the Indian Agent's report against me to the department, he never told me that I should keep the school open from nine o'clock to four o'clock, and he never intimated to me that complaint was made because of the hours I taught.

That I did not open the school and close it at the hour prescribed by the regulations of the department was solely because the agent told me not to do so. And I make this declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and of the same force and effect as if taken under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Charlotte M. Devereux.

Taken and declared before me on the 4th day of January, A.D. 1913.

C. P. Bissett.

Commissioner for taking oath in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia.

I have here a statutory declaration from Mrs. Henrietta Cameron, which is as follows:

In the matter of the dismissal of Charlotte M. Devereux, teacher of the Indian school at Salmon River reserve, Richmond county, N.S.

I. Henrietta Cameron, of St. Peter's, in the county of Richmond, married woman, do solemnly declare:

That I taught the Indian school at Salmon River aforesaid for four years and three months immediately preceeding the 1st day of January, 1912.

That during all these years the school hours were from ten to twelve o'clock a.m., and for one to three o'clock p.m.

That I was present in the house of the Indian agent at St. Peter's on the 2nd day of September with Miss Charlotte M. Devereux, lately teacher of the Indian school aforesaid.

That I heard her tell the agent the difficulty she had to get the children to remain in school beyond the hours during which the school was formally open, and I heard the agent say to her: 'I do not approve of these hours at all. Continue the old hours and if a kick comes I will see what can be done.'

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and of the same force and effect as if taken under oath, and by virtue of the 'Canada Evidence Act.'

Henrietta Cameron.

Taken and declared before me this 2nd day of January, A.D. 1913.

C. P. Bissett,

Commissioner of the Supreme Court in and for the county of Richmond, and commissioner for taking affidavits in the said county.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that another ground upon which Miss Devereux's dismissal is asked for by the agent is the allegation that the attendance at the school under lady teachers had dwindled down almost to the minimum, and the successful teaching of the male teachers in the past and the larger attendance obtained by these teachers is compared with the results attained during Miss Devereux's term of office. On December 16 last I asked the following question in this House for the purpose of ascertaining in what respect the attendance in the Indian school at Salmon River in the last three or four years under lady teachers differed from the attendance in the early days of the schools when they were in the charge of male teachers. I have here the question and answer, and I will read them to the House:

1. What was the number of pupils enrolled in the Indian school at Salmon river, Richmond county, in each school year from 1890 to 1911 inclusive, and the grade of each?

2. What is the number of pupils enrolled there at present time and the grade of each?

3. What was the number of adult Indians of both sexes at the Indian reserve at Salmon river during each year of the years from 1890 to 1911 inclusive?

4. What is the number of adult Indians of both sexes at the reserve at the present time?

5. What was the average school attendance in each year from 1890 to 1911 inclusive?

6. What is the average attendance at the present time?

7. What is the number of children between the ages of 5 and 15 years on said reserve in each year from 1890 to 1911 inclusive?

8. What is the number of children between the ages of 5 and 15 years on the reserve at the present time?

9. What are the hours each day during which teaching is to be carried on?

10. Is the school conducted under the regulations of the Nova Scotia Council of Public Instruction?

11. If not, who prescribed the regulations governing the school, the grading and the course of study?

12. Is the school under the inspection of the public school inspector for the district?

Mr. Roche:

From this answer it would appear that the attendance during the last four years at that school, under the teaching of these girls, was quite equal to that of any other period in the school's history. The answer also shows that during the last four or five years the number of school-going pupils upon the Indian Reserve was less than in the earlier days of the school but, notwithstanding that, the average attendance was quite as good as in any other period of its history.

I have here a letter written by the department on October 8, in reply to a letter forwarded by Miss Devereux stating that she had learned from the Indian agent that the department was about to dismiss her anyway and she had might as well resign in order to save her reputation from being besmirched by the fact of her being dismissed. The letter is as follows:

Ottawa, October 3, 1912.

Madam,—

In reply to your letter of the 27th ultimo I beg to inform you that the department has no intention of dispensing with your services as teacher of the Salmon River Indian School so long as they are satisfactory. I may state, however, for your information that Mr. Agent MacDonald has been asked for a report on the manner in which you conduct your school and I can assure you that you will not be dismissed without sufficient cause.

Your obedient servant,
J. D. McLean,
Asst. Deputy and Secretary.

Miss Charlotte M. Devereux,
Teacher, Salmon River Indian School.
St. Peter's, N.S.

On October 3rd, 1912, Miss Devereux received the following:

Madam,—I have to inform you that it has been decided to dispense with your services as teacher of the Salmon River Indian school at the end of the present quarter, December 31. The Indian day school regulations require the school to be opened at 9 A.M. and it has been shown conclusively that you have been constantly late.

Your obedient servant
J. D. McLean,
Asst. Deputy and Secretary.

Therefore the reason why Miss Devereux was dismissed from the school was because she was not opening the school at nine o'clock and closing it at four, whereas it appears from the statutory declaration I have read, the reason why she did not open it at nine and close it at four was that she had received no regulations from the department when she began to teach the school, and she had simply taught the hours prescribed ever since the school was established; then without her knowledge a report was sent in against her after, as she asserts she had been assured that it was unreasonable to keep the school open during the hours prescribed by the regulations and that the department was to be requested to change them. The secretary of the department of Indian affairs communicated with Mr. M. J. T. MacNeil, public school inspector for the County of Richmond requesting him to take charge of the inspection of the Indian schools, Mr. MacNeil replied to that request by a letter which I have here.

River Bourgeois, N.S., Dec. 23, 1912.

J. D. McLean, Esq.,
Assistent Deputy and Secretary,
Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa.

Sir,—Your letter in reference to Indian schools has been lying on my desk so long unanswered that I owe you an apology and an explanation.

A good many years ago, I used to visit those schools till I found that I had little or no influence over them or control over their teachers; so I ceased to inspect them. In recent years, I was under the impression that Mr. Boyd, the superintendent of agencies, was doing the necessary inspection.

There being no trustees or other local control, over these schools, I should like to be informed as to:

(a) What are supposed to be the relations between the teacher and the inspector,

(b) How far is the former responsible to the latter for the management of the school, and

(c) On whose recommendation is a teacher to be appointed or liable to be dismissed?

I may state that I have just been informed that the teacher of the Salmon river school, this county, Miss Devereux, has been dismissed to make room for a young man having neither license experience nor professional training; whereas the deposed teacher is an experienced and capable one, having a Normal College Diploma—a young lady of irreproachable character in every respect, and (though, I presume, this does not count) an orphan—fatherless and motherless. Is it too much to ask the reason for this change and at whose instance it was made? Because if it is as is commonly reported. I would like to say that I should much prefer to have nothing to do with these schools if they are to be controlled by political influence. The schools of Nova Scotia are not managed on those principles.

I was informed by Mr. Boyd, some weeks ago, that the school at Malagawatch, Inverness county, was closed, not to be re-opened till some time in January. Hence I should not have been able to visit that one, in any case, before now, so I decided to visit neither till I heard from you.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
M. J. MacNeil,
Inspector of Schools.

From this letter it would appear that Earnest MacNeil, who was appointed by the department to succeed Miss Devereux has neither license, experience nor professional qualifications and at this moment the Department of Indian Affairs is conducting an illegal school in Richmond county by reason of the teacher at present employed there not being qualified. I have here the reply of the secretary to Mr. M. J. MacNeil.

Ottawa, January 7, 1913.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd ultimo in reference to the inspection of the Indian schools in your inspectorate. In reply I beg to say that the department desires to have these schools inspected by you under the arrangement made with the Department of Education of Nova Scotia. In reply to your questions I would say that the duty of the public school inspector is to visit the school, as stated in official letter to you of June 29 last, report fully upon the class-room work as performed by the teacher and condition of the building, &c., using forms provided by this department for the purpose, a supply of which is being sent you. While the teacher is not directly responsible to the public school inspector, as the school is conducted and managed solely by this department, nevertheless teachers are supposed to carry out the instructions of inspectors in regard to their work and general management of the school, and any failure to do this should be reported to the department.

With regard to the appointment and dismissals of teachers, I may say that these are matters which rest solely with the department. Recommendations for the appointments of teachers may be made by any person interested, but, as stated above, final decision rests with this department.

With regard to the discharge of Miss Devereux I beg to say that the action was taken by the department on a report made by its agent.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. D. McLean,
Asst. Deputy and Secretary.

M. J. T. Macneil, Esq., B.A.,
Public School Inspector,
River Bourgeois, N.S.

That completes the documents which I have, but I have here under my hand the last annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs in which Miss Devereux's competence and success as a teacher is commented upon, not only by Mr. A. J. Boyd, the Superintendent of Indian Agencies for the maritime provinces, but by Mr. Scott the Superintendent of Indian Education as well. Mr. Scott, in his report of the Salmon River school says:

Miss O'Toole who conducted this school successfully for a number of years, resigned in December of last year and Miss Devereux was appointed as her successor. Miss Devereux is the holder of a second-class certificate and is meeting with success in her work. She also teaches sewing to the girls.

Here is the report of Mr. A. J. Boyd:

It seems to be no easy matter to get a good teacher now for any school, whether Indian or white. At one time Indian schools were in favour with the majority of our teaching fraternity on account of the superior salaries attached to them; but at present there appears to be no particular desire among the successful class of our teachers to occupy such schools. This changed attitude is due, no doubt, to the fact that employment in most other occupations in this country to-day is more remunerative than teaching; and I think the inference is that the department will soon be obliged to advance its 'minimum wage' for teachers, if it wishes to continue in its employ those worth retaining, or to engage others whose services are worth having.

Experience forces me to the conclusion that females succeed better than males as Indian teachers. At any rate, there can be no doubt that the schools at Truro, Sydney, Bear River, New Germany, and New Glasgow, which have always been conducted, so far as I am aware, by ladies, are distinctly ahead, in the matter of education, of those that have always been conducted by men; and the most backward of the Indian schools is one that has always been in charge of a male teacher. The standing of the Middle River and Chapel Island schools, taught by Mrs. Annie McNeil, and Miss Charlotte M. Devereux, respectively, is equal to that of the best school taught by a male teacher; so that the evidence would seem to be very much in favour of the ladies as Indian teachers; and their superiority in that respect has impressed me from the beginning of my experience with Indian education. Therefore, in filling vacancies that will, no doubt, occur from time to time on the department's staff of teachers in Nova Scotia, I would strongly urge the selection of ladies, who possess the necessary qualifications.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that one of the complaints made against the Indian school is that Miss Devereux was a lady teacher, and it is stated that male teachers were very much more successful than female teachers. The minister replaced this qualified teacher Miss Devereux, having a Normal school diploma, by a young man having neither license, qualification, nor professional training. The agent refers to the fact that one of the captains of his band recommended the dismissal of Miss Devereux, and that he wanted a man. It would appear that the whole educational policy of the Department of the Interior is to be set aside upon the suggestion of one illiterate Indian, notwithstanding that the well-qualified and highly paid Superintendent of Education of the Indian Department, and the well-qualified and experienced Superintendent of Indian Agencies in the maritime provinces, both recommend Miss Devereux, on account of her superior training and of the success which had attended her conduct of the school. I have not much fault to find with the Department of the Interior. I stated at the beginning that I had no criticism to make against the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Department of Indian Affairs. I do say, however, that the department ought to have instituted an inquiry as to whether or not the allegations made against Miss Devereux in the agent's report were well founded. Had that been done, an opportunity would have been given to summon before the commissioner appointed to investigate the charges those persons who are best qualified to say whether or not Miss Devereux's conduct of the school was a success. The commissioner would have had an opportunity of summoning before him the inspector of schools for the county of Richmond whose testimony to the superior character and qualifications of Miss Devereux I have read here this evening. He would have been able to summon Mr. A. J. Boyd, superintendent of Indian agencies for the maritime provinces, and he would also have had an opportunity of learning that the young man who was appointed to take the place of Miss Devereux was not a qualified teacher and therefore ought not to be employed by the department. However, an inquiry was not held, and I ask the acting Minister of the Interior, who is here to-night, to give this matter his serious consideration, and to see if he cannot right the wrong that has been perpetrated upon Miss Devereux. The letter which I read from Mr. MacNeil indicates that Miss Devereux is an orphan; that is true. Her father and mother are both dead, and she has no immediate relatives to whom she can apply for succour should she be unable to obtain other employment. According to the statement made by Miss Devereux in her statutory declaration, she was dismissed, or at all events her dismissal was recommended, because her people were Liberals. I stated a moment ago that her father is dead. Her grandfathers are both dead, and she has no brothers who ever polled a vote up to the time this report was written. She has no first cousins who ever polled a vote up to the time the report was written. The nearest relatives Miss Devereux has, who ever polled a vote in their lives are her second cousins, and I can say from personal knowledge that the majority of her second cousins voted for the Conservative party and not for the Liberal party. I would be sorry to believe that the department would knowingly dismiss Miss Devereux because her relatives were Liberals. If they did, they went very much farther than I believed they are capable of going. I have some knowledge of the precedents that hon. ministers have established during the last eighteen months with regard to dismissals, but I never believed, and I do not believe now that they would dismiss an orphan girl merely because her relatives happened to be Liberals. Miss Devereux was dismissed at a time when the public schools were all taken up for the school year. The school year in Nova Scotia begins on the 1st September and ends on the 1st July. Any teacher desiring a school in the province of Nova Scotia who does not apply for one at the beginning of the term, is obliged to go without employment during the whole of that school year. Miss Deveraux was dismissed about the 1st of January, as I have said, and the public schools of Nova Scotia are closed to her. She cannot get any position that is worth having in the service of the public schools of Nova Scotia, owing the fact that all the good schools were taken up for the year. Miss Devereux was told that she must be dismissed because her relatives were Liberals, and according to the information given by the hon. the Minister of the Interior, she was dismissed upon the recommendation of Mr. J. A. Gillies, and of the Indian agent.

Mr. CROTHERS: Do you say that he told her that she was dismissed because her relatives were Liberals?

Mr. KYTE: That is the effect of it. She sets out in her statutory declaration that that was the effect of what he told her. I stated a moment ago that I refused to believe that that was the ground upon which she was dismissed. I am somewhat familiar with the length to which the minister will go to secure the dismissal of a Liberal official, but I refuse to believe that he would go to such a length to secure the dismissal of an orphan girl, still wearing the emblems of mourning for her dead father, simply because her relatives in a remote degree had voted for the Liberal party. It is surely not too late to give this young lady redress now that all the facts are known. It is not my desire to unduly criticise the conduct of the department or of the gentleman who presides over the department interested. I regret that he did not take my suggestion and have an inquiry as to the genuineness of the charges made against her and upon which she has been dismissed; but he has not done so and there is nothing more to be said. There is the further fact, to which I now direct the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior, and it was brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Department of Indian Affairs by the inspector of schools, that the young man, who is now in charge of the public school at Salmon river, is not a licensed teacher, he has not the experience and has not the professional qualifications to suit the inspector of schools, and surely the minister will find in that sufficient reason for relieving him of the school and restore Miss Devereux to her rightful employment, because I believe that, under the circumstances, she was dismissed without a full knowledge of all the facts by the Minister of the Interior. I have no more to say on the subject at the present time further than this; there is a very considerable feeling existing in the neighbourhood of the Indian reserve and in the town of St. Peter's, where Miss Devereux lives, and the Prime Minister could do nothing better in the way of commending himself to the people in that locality for his fairness and his desire to do justice to the orphan who has been wrongly dealt with, than to order that she be immediately restored to her position in this school.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Acting Minister of Interior): It is very much to be regretted that my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte), has felt it to be his duty to expose to the House and the public some of the facts and circumstances in connection with this matter. I regret it very much because it seems to me that the result of making public the facts must necessarily be injurious to the young lady who is particularly interested in this case.

Mr. KYTE: That was probably the purpose of making the complaint.

Mr. CROTHERS: The charge made by the hon. member is, in substance, that this young lady was relieved from any further work in connection with this school from political motives and in collusion with the Indian agent. Who is the Indian agent? The Indian agent is the Rev. Father R. L. Macdonald, parish priest, of whose church this young lady is a member.

Mr KYTE: And of whose church I am a member.

Mr. CROTHERS: Are we to believe that the Rev. Father R. L. Macdonald, parish priest, entered into a conspiracy with Mr. Joseph A. Gillies to secure the dismissal of one of his own parishioners? That is the substance of the charge.

Mr. CARVELL: It looks very much like it.

Mr. CROTHERS: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) says it looks very much like it. Why do you not come out in the open and charge the Rev. Father McDonald with having been guilty of that crime?

Mr. KYTE: I have read his report; I have read the evidence and the House can draw its own conclusion.

Mr. CROTHERS: I am going to read some of it, too. I am informed that the hon. member had an opportunity in the Department of the Interior to read the whole of this file which is under my hand, but he has, for his own purpose, declined to read some of the important parts of it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Joseph A. Gillies was the man under whose influence this young lady, Miss Devereux, was appointed to this office.

Mr. KYTE: That is possibly true.

Mr. CROTHERS: I understand that a young lady named Miss O'Toole who, I understand, was married afterwards to a man named Cameron, taught that school in 1911 and that, on behalf of her friend, Miss Devereux, she wrote to Mr. Gillies. She had resigned herself and she was writing to Mr. Gillies a letter in behalf of Miss Devereux. This is the answer that Mr. Gillies sent to Miss O'Toole on the 18th December, 1911, which my hon. friend very carefully declined to read.

Mr. KYTE: I had no opportunity of reading anything. I only asked for the agent's report, and the minister was good enough to let me have it.

Mr. CROTHERS: I was informed that this file was placed at the disposal of my hon. friend in the Department of the Interior and that he had an opportunity of looking through the whole file.

Mr. KYTE: I had not. I was given an opportunity of looking at the report of the Indian agent. I did not ask for the other papers because I was not told that I might read them. I did ask for the letter that Mr. Gillies wrote, and which is referred to in the answer of the Minister of the Interior, but I was told that I could not see it.

Mr. CROTHERS: I am simply stating what I was told in the office in regard to the matter, and it is that the file was placed at the disposal of the hon. gentleman and that he had an opportunity of reading the whole of it. I now propose to read the letter written by Mr. Gillies on the 18th December in reply to one which he had received from Miss O'Toole asking him to use his influence to get her friend, Miss Devereux, appointed to the position in the school:

Miss Henrietta O'Toole,
Barra Head, Richmond Co., C.B.

Dear Miss O'Toole,

I am in receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, and I am indeed very favourably impressed with the fair and cogent manner in which you have presented your case on behalf of the party you mention. I may say at once that your dismissal never occurred to me for a moment, nor had it ever entered my mind. I will be very glad indeed to do what I can to secure Miss Devereux the position provided she has requisite qualifications. You had better tell her to see the Reverend R. L. Macdonald, P.P at St. Peter's in this matter as his certificates will assist very materially.

Your reference to the political affiliations of the late Mr. Devereux were entirely unnecessary. He had a perfect right to think politically as he pleased and act accordingly at least while he kept within legitimate limits, and this I think he always did. In any case the past should be forgotten. I will be pleased to do anything I can to secure for his daughter the position mentioned provided she be qualified to fill the same.

I thank you cordially for your kind expressions in your letter towards myself.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) J. A. Gillies.

That is the man that my hon. friend now accuses of conspiring with the parish priest to put this orphan girl out of the position which she had.

Mr. KYTE: I do not think it is right for the hon. minister to put words into my mouth or to impute anything to me that I did not express. I read the documents and I leave the House to draw its own conclusions. I ask the hon. minister to withdraw his statement.

Mr. CROTHERS: I did not say that my hon. friend accused Mr. Gillies and the parish priest of acting in collusion for the dismissal of that lady.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. KYTE: I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend says that I have accused Mr. Gillies and the reverend father of conspiring together for the dismissal of Miss Devereux. I made no such statement, and I ask my hon. friend to withdraw it.

Mr. CROTHERS: I did not make any such statement. I said the substance of his conclusions was that they must have acted in collusion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If the point of order is raised, I think it would be more appropriate simply to deny the statement, and then the hon. member would be bound to accept the denial.

Mr. KYTE: I have denied it, Mr. Speaker. Still the hon. acting Minister of the Interior repeated it. I made no such charge; I made no such imputation, and I trust the hon. minister will not repeat the statement.

Mr. CROTHERS: I said that my hon. friend did not make any such charge, but that that was the inference from his remarks. I submit to the House whether it is a fair inference or not. My hon. friend read a declaration, or what purported to be a declaration, made by the young lady, in which she stated, if I remember rightly, that she was told that she was to be dismissed because of politics. I do not charge my hon. friend with saying that. It appeared in a document that he read. I said before and I say now that the fair inference from his remarks is that the young lady was dismissed for politics and that the parish priest acted in collusion with Mr. Gillies in order to carry out his design to remove from the position a young lady who was a member of the parish priest's church. The young lady was appointed teacher and was paid at the rate of $350 a year, beginning about January 1, 1912. That is the sum and substance of the matter. At the end of the year she was told that her services would not be required after the first of the next year. That is done every day of the week by ordinary school trustees. It is true that charges came to the department in a general way, stating that complaints were being made against this young lady. The department also received a letter from her, which I think my hon. friend read, saying that she had heard something to the effect that her services were to be dispensed with at the end of the year. She was advised by the department, according to the letter which my hon. friend has read, that her services would not be dispensed with except for cause. The department refused to recognize the complaint until it asked the Indian agent, the parish priest, to investigate the matter and make a report.

Mr. KYTE: Will the hon. minister concede, if it were not for that charge, that her services would not have been dispensed with?

Mr. CROTHERS: I submit that, if it had not been for the report that was made by the parish priest, the Indian agent, saying that she was not qualified to discharge the duties of her position, she would not have been dismissed.

Mr. KYTE: That is the point.

Mr. CROTHERS: My hon. friend has read the report sent in by the agent, the Reverend Father Macdonald, in reply to a request from the department. I think I shall read it again and see whether or not the department was warranted in acting upon it. As my friend would have it, the point is not merely that she was opening the school at nine o'clock in the morning and continuing there until four o'clock in the afternoon; she had not the confidence of the parents of the children whom she was teaching. Whether that non-confidence was the result of any fault on her part or not was immaterial. We all know that if the parents of children have no confidence in the teacher, the teacher has survived his or her usefulness in that school, whether or not he or she has been guilty of any fault. That is quite a sufficient reason to warrant anyone refusing to continue a teacher in a school.

Mr. McKENZIE: Before the minister reads that report, will he give us the substance of the request that was made for that report. I take it that the department asked for that report.

Mr. CROTHERS: Yes, the department asked for that report.

Mr. CARVELL: There must have been something that necessitated the department asking for it.

Mr. CROTHERS: Here is a letter asking for the report, dated September 5, 1912:

September 5, 1912.

Reverend Sir,—I have to request that you will report very fully in regard to the way in which the Salmon river school has been carried on since Miss Devereux has had charge of it. The department wishes ot have more detailed information than is contained in your monthly reports on this school. You will be good enough to give this matter your attention.

Mr. CARVELL: In order to have the record fairly before us, would the minister give us the letter that preceded that request? There must have been a letter from somebody preferring charges.

Mr. CROTHERS: I do not propose to read the whole file. This is the letter in reply from the Indian agent:

November 12, 1912.

In reply to yours of September 5th, 1912, requesting me to forward you more detailed information than is contained in my monthly school reports in regard to the way in which the Salmon river school has been carried on since Miss Devereux has had charge of it, I may say that I have gone into the matter carefully and examined the case thoroughly, and I have arrived at certain conclusions more or less definite which I shall now place before you. These may give you to understand my delay in answering you. In the first place, then, I have interviewed the leading Indians on the matter——

Not merely one, as my hon. friend stated.

—and I find them absolutely opposed to a lady teacher. They claim that the children do not make the progress under them that they did when they had men. By an examination of the old registers I found this was but too true. Since 1904 when lady teachers were introduced I find that only three pupils reached standard IV while previous to that date I find that better progress by far was made than is now being done, many of the pupils being entered on the registers in the sixth standard. From an examination of the registers I find the above amply proven.

In the second place, I find that a goodly number of the Indians who attended school say, thirteen or fourteen years ago, and before that time, are able to read and write Some of them subscribe for the newspapers. I have received letters from them written in fair English and they speak English better than those who are younger. The influence and the lasting work of the old teachers,—Johnston, McMillan, Murphy, Campbell, McInnis, Langley—all men—can clearly be seen here. Many of the class of Indians mentioned have expressed to me their surprise at the Government in late years forcing lady teachers upon them when their results are so different from those of the male teachers of years ago.

In the third place, I find that the Indians show want of confidence in the ability of lady teachers to show and exercise disciplinary powers.

I do not think the Indians were very far astray in that.

The captain of the band, who is the spokesman of the band, assures me that he found it necessary not so long ago to remind a lady teacher that the teaching hours and proper discipline were not kept, but to no avail. If you ever had anything to do with the teaching profession you can easily understand that the child very readily knows what its parents' opinion of the teacher is, and it is next to impossible to advance the child unless the teacher has the sympathy of the parents and public opinion behind him. In this school, then, I find public opinion adverse.

Is that true, or is it false? It comes from a Minister of the Gospel, a man, I am told, of great ability, a man who is regarded as perfectly fair-minded; and he is speaking of one of his own parishoners. Are we to conclude that he is reporting something that is untrue? If it be true, then this dismissal was justifiable; if the dismissal was not justifiable, we must come to the conclusion that the parish priest is not—

Mr. KYTE: Why not ascertain the facts by the investigation I asked for?

Mr. CROTHERS: The hon. gentleman did not ask for the investigation until after the lady had been notified that her services had been dispensed with.

Mr. KYTE: What was the date?

Mr. CROTHERS: The hon. gentleman wrote on the 5th of December, and she was notified on the 3rd of December.

Mr. KYTE: Did the minister——

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member had an opportunity to speak, and, when the minister is on his feet, it is not permissible to interrupt.

Mr. TURRIFF: The minister asked him a question.

Mr. CROTHERS (reading):

I find that necessary sympathy between parents and teacher conspicuous by its absence.

Is that statement true or false? If it is true, that warrants the teacher's dismissal; if it is not true you have a charge against a man who has been there for years, and who enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him, as I am advised.

It is one thing to try to show a good attendance by handing out cheese and crackers—

I was surprised to find that it was the custom there to provide the Indian children with lunch.

Mr. KYTE: It is the custom in all the Indian schools in Nova Scotia and has been for twenty years.

Mr. CROTHERS: I never heard of it before. I have no doubt you could get a good attendance for a short time each day by handing out cheese and crackers.

It is quite another thing to lead Indian children along the flowery paths of knowledge. After the bills were rendered you this year, your department brought to my notice through the Indian Superintendent, the fact that too much cheese was purchased, at least at one time. I was never advised what quantity was considered allowable, but it is evident that quite a considerable attention was paid to this part of the programme, while other things more necessary in the opinion of the true educationist were neglected.

In the fourth place I must say that among many of the whites contiguous to the reserve—

The evidence does not come from the Indians alone.

—Miss Devereux's teaching and teaching hours are regarded as a joke.

Is that true, or false? It comes from the white people who are looking on.

Her boarding house is three-quarters or a mile from the school-house. She is known to have left her boarding house as late as 9.30 a.m., call at the post office after that, and often call at another house, which we may call Mr. A's, on her way to school. In fact she spent so much of her time at Mr. A's, going and coming, that a joke came to her ears from the white people 'that the Indian children would not get their grade this year, but Mrs. A. very likely would.'

Now, since I began to make inquiries, the Indians who are close to school tell me that for only one month did she keep proper school hours.

She began on the 1st of January and this report was made on the 4th of November.

I furnished her with your circular 'Indian Day School Regulations' as soon as I got it last year. She has the school hours to be kept before her there in black and white, but what do we find? On the 29th October last I passed the school after 10 a.m. and the teacher was not there. On November 7 another man passed the school at 10.15 a.m. and she was not there.

This is not hearsay. Is there a gentleman within the sound of my voice who is prepared to believe that this minister of the Gospel told her she was not to begin school before ten o'clock? Did he purposely visit the school at an hour when he knew she would not be there, when, according to the declaration we have had he had told her she should not be there.

On another occasion after 10 a.m. she was nor in school. Her excuse on the 29th October to me was that 'all the clocks in Burradfrad were astray.'

Is the Rev. Father Macdonald telling the truth when he says that on the 29th October she had told him, what—that he had told her she need not to be there until 10 o'clock—no but that all the clocks were wrong. Is he telling the truth or is he putting in lasting form, in writing something which is not true? First from the very calling of the Rev. Father Macdonald, and second from the high character I hear of him, and from what he has put here in writing, I choose to believe him in preference to any statutory declaration gotten up and read before this House.

This held no water. The 28th was Thanksgiving. She was in St. Peter's that day where she could have got the true time, and surely her watch would not lose one hour in twelve.

Many of the white people now tell us of the poor hours she keeps and has kept all along, but they do not wish their names disclosed as it is nothing to them whether the Government maintains a school there or not.

In opening school in September, she could not go back to her boarding house of last year. Why? Now I do not vouch for the truth of this as I did not have it direct from her last year's boarding mistress, but she is represented as having said that under no circumstances would she have her again to board on account of the trouble she gave in 'often sitting down to breakfast after 9 a.m.' You may take this for what it is worth; that is how it reached my ears. She certainly never got back to her former boarding house and it looked one time as if she could not get a place at all.

Now, do you consider this sufficient for you to act upon? I notice you ask for no recommendation from me and I accordingly make none. I should like to remind you that the Indian school is about eight miles distant from here, and I cannot always have my eyes on the school, and unless I have a teacher there who shows some willingness at least to keep proper hours that I cannot always force him.

In conclusion I must say that I would thank you more had you given the making of this report to some one else. Miss Devereux is one of my parishioners, and as such she is one member of the spiritual family under my charge and care. You can perhaps understand then that in making this report condemnatory of her I am doing what I certainly do not relish, but I recognize too that I have duties to perform towards the department, as well as towards the Indian children whom she is paid to teach.

I remain,
Your obedient servant,
Rev. R. L. Macdonald,
Indian agent.

Is that report of the Indian agent, whose character I described a few moments ago, true or not? That is the whole question. If it is true, the department was amply justified in dispensing with Miss Devereux's services, and in securing the services of someone else. I do not choose to believe that it is false; I do believe it is true, and that the young lady's services were not dispensed with on account of any political partisanship on the part of Mr. Gillies or anyone else. My hon. friend from Richmond seems very determined to use every possible means to blacken the character of his opponent in the late election. The letter I have read from Mr. Gillies written to Miss O'Toole when she appealed to him on behalf of her friend Miss Devereux, amply establishes that Mr. Gillies was not actuated by any political motives. It should be remembered that politics was not overlooked in that letter, as Miss O'Toole evidently referred to the matter in her letter to Gillies. The writing of that letter on the part of Mr. Gillies does him great credit, and I do not believe that he exercised any political influence to get rid of this young lady. I do not believe any man in this House will entertain such an idea; it is inconsistent with the letter he wrote in the first instance.

Mr. CROTHERS.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the Minister now produce the letter written to the department which caused them to ask the Indian agent for this report?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken on the motion before the House that the Speaker leave the Chair; therefore it is not permissible to speak again.

Mr. CARVELL: Have I not the right to ask a question, if the minister is willing to answer it?

Mr. SPEAKER: No, I think not. If I read the rule correctly, it states that when a member is speaking, no member shall interrupt him except to a point of order.

Mr. TURRIFF: Will you apply the same rule to members on the other side of the House if they ask questions of hon. gentleon this side when they are speaking?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. TURRIFF: It will never do—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has no right to reflect upon the Chair.

Mr. TURRIFF: The Chair should do what is right.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CROTHERS: The whole matter was reported upon by the deputy superintendent of Indian Affairs, Mr. Pedley, but the substance of that report has already been placed before the House. The action taken by the department in dispensing with Miss Devereux's services was based entirely upon the report made by the Indian Agent at the request of the department, and I think no one connected with this whole transaction, from the time of Mr. Gillies' first recommendation of this young lady until her services were dispensed with on the strength of the report of the Indian agent, has been guilty of any wrong-doing except the young lady who was principally interested in this inquiry. I will close with the observation I made at the beginning that it seems to me my hon. friend has done Miss Devereux a very questionable service in bringing this matter up and forcing the department to spread throughout the country the report made by the Rev. Mr. Macdonald, her parish priest, whose statement I accept as being literally true from beginning to end, and whose report fully and amply justifies the action of the department in dispensing with Miss Devereux's services. Having that report in their possession, the department would have been guilty of grave negligence of duty had they not acted upon it. What loss has the young lady sustained? She was getting a salary of $350 a year; is it possible that any young lady possessing the qualifications attributed to her by my hon. friend cannot earn $350 a year in any other school in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. KYTE: Just a moment—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. KYTE: When I rose to put some questions to the hon. minister your Honour told me I would have the right to reply. I would not insist except that Your Honour informed me that I would have the right to reply.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is entirely mistaken; I made no such statement. I knew it was not a substantive motion, nor was the hon. member making a motion; the only motion was that I should leave the Chair, to which the hon. member has spoken once.

Mr. KYTE: I simply wanted to make an explanation with reference to the date of my letter to the Minister of the Interior. The acting minister stated that it was too late to have an investigation, inasmuch as the letter of dismissal was dated December 3rd. My question was on December 4th and the answer I received from the minister did not indicate that she was dismissed, it simply stated that communications were received from Mr. Gillies, as well as a report from the agent making complaints against her. There was no intimation that she was to be dismissed, but even if she had been dismissed we are not without precedent of inquiries being made into the truth of charges even after officials have been dismissed.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Civil Government—officers of the Conservation Commission—salaries, $28,860.50.

Mr. BORDEN: When this item was up the other evening, I promised to bring down information as to the work of the commission. With the permission of the House, I shall hand in a statement which has been furnished me:

Work of the Commission of Conservation in 1912.

A review of the work of the Commission of Conservation must necessarily be prefaced by a statement that its functions are wholly investigatory and advisory. It does not appoint a staff of fire-rangers to protect forests, nor inspectors to protect men engaged in mining operations, nor doctors or sanitary engineers to carry out public health regulations, nor engineers to administer water-powers, nor inspectors to grade grain, nor officials to administer fishing regulations. But it can, and does, investigate methods of protecting the forests, methods of preventing loss of life and waste in mining, methods of preventing the spread and dissemination of disease, the conservation of waters and water-powers, and methods of increasing the yield of agricultural products and, at the same time, conserving the fertility of the soil.

If the commission undertook administrative work, it would be responsible for administrative work. Standing aloof and occupying the position of impartial critic, it is able to investigate and report upon any subject without being hampered by any administrative acts of its own or of any allied organization.

To get a comprehensive view of the work of the commission, it is necessary to review the work that is being carried on under the direction of the various committees.

Committee on Lands.

The agricultural survey was continued throughout Canada on thirteen hundred farms. This survey is being conducted in order to secure an accurate diagnosis of agricultural conditions, in order that the future operations of this branch of the commission may rest on a scientific basis of fact. Special attention is given to the preservation of soil fertility, crop yields, pests, fuel, power and water supplies, and instances of good farming that might serve for demonstration purposes.

As a result of the survey, thirty-one illustration farms were established in the various provinces this year. The object of this work is to encourage the adoption of methods that will increase the quantity and improve the quality of the products of the farm, while maintaining and increasing the fertility of the soil.

The illustration farm is made the centre for neighbourhood meetings and demonstrations, and as the work on it is conducted by the owner, an average farmer, under the scientific supervision of the commission's experts, the results show the farmers conclusively that the adoption of scientific methods can be made profitable with the means available on the ordinary farm.

The alfalfa investigation work conducted in Quebec last year, was this year extended to the Maritime provinces. This work, which consists of an investigation into the conditions under which alfalfa can be successfully grown in these provinces, is designed to impress the farmer with the value of this crop for forage and soiling purposes.

Committee on Forests.

The principal line of forestry activity has been in connection with the development of better methods for the prevention and control of fires along railway lines. The commission assisted materially in the preparation of the draft of Order 16,570 of the Board of Railway Commissioners which prescribes fire protective measures to be taken by railway companies under the jurisdiction of the board. In accordance with a plan of co-operation the chief forester for the commission, Mr. Clyde Leavitt, was also appointed chief fire inspector for the board and has spent the summer in organizing this work. A protective organization has already been perfected in the western provinces, and has done effective work during the past season. As a result of the experience of only one summer, the railway companies are heartily co-operating in the measures of fire prevention. While conserving a great natural resource, they do not impose any considerable burden upon the railways while preserving what must always be a very important source of revenue.

To avoid any clashing or overlapping of work, is was arranged that certain officials should, upon recommendation by the department of the Interior, be appointed assistant fire inspectors with authority to carry out the provisions of the Railway Commission's regulations, the chief fire inspector giving a general supervision.

The various provincial governments have either passed or will pass, legislation respecting railways with provincial charters along the same lines as the Railway Commission's regulations.

In Peterborough and Haliburton counties, an investigation of forest conditions has been carried on under the direction of Dr. B. E. Fernow. This region has been selected as typical of a large area of cut-over territory, and the investigation is intended to ascertain to what extent reforestation is possible, and to what other uses such desolate territory as this can be profitably put.

The report of a forest survey of Nova Scotia conducted under the direction of Dr. Fernow, at the expense of the province, has been published by the commission.

An investigation of forest revenue and taxation is being made by Mr. Donnell, in order to determine to what extent existing methods of taxation affect the practice of forestry by private owners. Taxation in the United States has been derogatory to forest conservation, but no attempt has hitherto been made to ascertain its effect in Canada.

Committee on Minerals.

The investigation conducted last year in the province of western Canada, to ascertain the efficiency of coal mining methods, the utilization made of by-products and the safety afforded the miners, was extended this year to the coal mines of eastern Canada. Mr. Dick, mining engineer of the commission, visited all the principal coal mines, coal-briquetting plants and coke-oven plants in Nova Scotia, during the past summer. The results of these investigations are now being embodied in a report, and will be available for publication early in 1913.

A report on mine rescue work in Canada has been printed. Until recently, little has been done in Canada, to further the establishment of mine rescue stations. This report was, therefore, written for the purpose of encouraging the work done by the provincial governments, mine operators and employees, in establishing mine rescue stations and forming trained corps.

Committee on Waters and Water-powers.

The officials connected with this division of the commission's work have been engaged in obtaining data for the report on 'Water Powers of Western Canada.' Mr. Denis, the commission's engineer in charge of water-powers spent the summer in investigating the water-powers of the northern portions of Alberta and Saskatchewan, where there is much more power available than in the southern portions of these provinces. Mr. Denis' work included an investiagtion of the water-powers of the Peace, Slave, Clearwater and Churchill rivers.

In British Columbia, Mr. A. V. White has measured the powers of the upper Fraser of the west coast of the mainland and on Vancouver island.

Information has been collected in tabular form respecting the water-works plants in all the municipalities in Canada. The report is now completed and will be issued in a few weeks.

A report embodying all the important available information regarding the proposed damming of the St. Lawrence river at the Long Sault rapids is in progress of publication.

Committee on Fisheries, Game and Fur-bearing Animals.

In June last, this committee met to hear addresses of experts and to outline work of investigation. The report of the proceedings at this meeting has been published.

An investigation of fur-farming in Canada, with particular reference to the black fox industry, was made during the past summer by Mr. J. Walter Jones. A report on it will be published in a few weeks.

During the year, the Dominion Government gave to each of the oyster-producing provinces the undisputed right to issue leases to oyster areas for cultural purposes. Mr. Patton, who had previously reported on the jurisdictional dispute, was sent to Prince Edward Island to investigate the oyster fishing there, and assist the provinical Government in formulating the regulations for the leasing of oyster bottoms. While there, Mr. Patton also gave some attention to the lobster fishery.

Committee on Public Health.

The public health work of the commissison has been directed to the compilation of reports and data in respect to the sewage disposal and water supplies of the chief cities of the world.

An examination of the Chicago drainage canal, as well as of the proposed extension of the same by the Calumet-Sag channel, was made and reported upon by Dr. Hodgetts, medical adviser to the commission.

For nearly two months the commisison, through its medical adviser, took over the management of the health department of the city of Ottawa.

The most important public health questions were discussed on the public platform, in different parts of the Dominion, the provinces visited being Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta and Nova Scotia.

Clearing-house for information.

A notable feature in the work of the commission during the past year has been the increase in the number of inquiries from all parts of the world asking for information and reports about Canada. Careful attention has been given to these, the required information either being compiled from the commission's records, or obtained from the Government departments.

Publications of the Commission of Conservation Since January 1, 1912.

Since January 1, 1912, the Commission of Conservation has issued the following reports:

1. The Game Resources of Canada.
2. Third Annual Report.
3. The Prevention of the Pollution of Canadian Surface Waters.

4. Forest Conditions of Nova Scotia.
5. Protest Against Further Diversion of Water from Lake Michigan for the Chicago Drainage Canal.
6. Papers relating to the Application of the Sanitary District of Chicago for Permission to Divert 10,000 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan. (This report was published under the name of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but was compiled and edited by the Commission of Conservation.)
7. Supplement to Animal Sanctuaries in Labrador.
8. Sea-Fisheries of Eastern Canada.
9. Ottawa Typhoid Fever Epidemics.
10. Instructions relating to the Gathering of certain Preliminary Information respecting Water-Powers.
11. Agricultural Conditions in Canada, 1911.
12. Mine Rescue Work in Canada.
13. Catalogue of Publications.

In addition to these, the following reports are now in the press and will be issued in the course of two or three weeks:

14. Fur-Farming in Canada.
15. The Water-Works of Canada.

The following reports are in various stages of preparation and, it is expected will be issued in the course of the present calendar year:

1. Fourth Annual Report.
2. Papers relating to the Proposed Development of Water-Power at the Long Sault rapids of the St. Lawrence river.
3. Water-Powers of Western Canada.
4. Some Farm Crops and How to Grow Them.
5. Sewage Disposal in European Cities.
6. An exhaustive report on Forest Conditions in Canada.
7. Conservation of Coal in Canada.

Besides having published the above-mentioned publications, the commission issues a monthly publication for eight months in the year, which contains items of current interest on the various phases of conservation work. It was designed primarily to supply the newspapers with ready-made articles on conservation topics. The demand for it, however, became so large and insistent that besides being forwarded to all newspapers in Canada, it is now being sent to the leading libraries, the clergy of Canada and many private individuals who have requested it. The school teachers of Canada are also to be soon added to the list of those receiving it.

To sum up, the Commission of Conservation has, since January 1, 1912, issued thirteen reports on various conservation subjects; two more will be issued in two or three weeks' time and an additional seven will be published by the end of 1913. Besides this, a monthly publication is issued for eight months in the year.

Respectfully submitted,
James White,
Secretary.

Reference is made to the annual report of the Commission not being available. The secretary informs me that every year this report has been out within two months after the close of the fiscal year, whereas the reports of other departments are not available until seven or eight months after the close of the year. I am laying on the Table a full list of all the publications that have been issued by the Commission. Copies of this may be obtained by any member on application to the Commission.

Department of Militia and Defence—salaries, $161,800.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are all the increases given in accordance with the Civil Service Act?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: Perhaps the minister would explain why there is such a substantial increase in the amount. In the salaries of clerks of the first division of subdivision B there is an increase of $1,000 and in the second division, subdivision A, there is an increase of between $3,000 and $4,000. In the next subdivision there is an increase of almost $5,000. We know that this is a growing time in Canada, especially in the matter of military and naval expenditure, but this is certainly going some.

Mr. HUGHES: I have not the detailed information at hand to-night, but in nearly every case these are ordinary statutory increases. There are a few appointments of extra clerks. In the second division there is an increase of four in the staff and in the second division subdivision A there is an increase of two. In the third division there is an increase of four. We have had to add a large number of clerks for the handling of the Fenian Raid bounties, and in almost every branch of the department we have had to add one or more clerks.

Mr. CARVELL: Has there been an increase in the number of clerks?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is there a special staff which deals with the Fenian Raid Bounty claims?

Mr. HUGHES: We need a special staff; we cannot take them off the ordinary work.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am very glad my hon. friend has added to his staff for that purpose, for I have just received a letter from an old elector of mine who is a claimant under the Act. For a number of years this gentleman has been imploring the department to look after his claim, and I have joined my voice to his in an effort to obtain justice. This old soldier served first in 1861 in the Zouaves of the Holy Church of Rome, and after serving the church he wanted to serve the state and he went to Quebec, during the time of the Fenian Raid. My hon. friend has all the details in his department. Last year the minister appeared to be as anxious to do justice as he is now, and this old soldier, having written in the interval, has sent me a letter in which he says 'I have sent my application, but I never received a letter.' I understood that my hon. friend had not the proper staff to look after the Fenian Raid claims, but now that he has such a staff perhaps he will consider the claim of Louis Letourneau of Mont Louis, in the county of Gaspé. He has written several letters, but he has had no answer, and I believe he made his claim in the regular form. I invite the attention of my hon. friend to this case.

Mr. CARVELL: Perhaps I am transgressing the rules of the House in calling my hon. friend's attention to a matter which I placed upon the Order Paper some weeks ago, but which, unfortunately we have not been able to reach. While it does not come under the item under discussion I wish to remind my hon. friend of the fact that there is a claim by a gentleman for loss occasioned by his horse contracting some sort of disease at Petawawa camp. Perhaps my hon. friend will take notice of motion No. 15 standing in my name in the list of motions for the production of papers, and perhaps he will give the information when the estimates are reached another time.

Civil Government—Department of Miltia and Defence—Salaries and contingencies, $178,300.

Mr. CARVELL: What is the explanation of that increase of $4,500 for sundries? It is almost double what it was before?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it for the private car?

Mr. HUGHES: I have not the details of this item, as I did not expect it to come up. I think, however, that it is in connection with some transport, not in connection with the car I may say.

Mr. CARVELL: Does it not occur to the minister that it is a pretty substantial increase?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am very anxious to know the details of those sundries. In my experience when a gentleman was in favour of the abolition of the bar, his sundries account was usually pretty large. My hon. friend abolishes the canteen in the camps, and this item quite perplexes me. There is something very mysterious about it. If, what I hear of the Oriental car of the hon. gentleman, this item may have reference to the Oriental life in that car, I think we had better leave this item till we get the details.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): Pass the item and we will get the details later.

Mr. HUGHES: I will bring the details, but it is a matter of no consequence to me whether the item stands or passes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I think the item for sundries had better stand.

Item stands.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Civil Government—Department of Trade and Commerce—Salaries and contingencies, $118,237.

Mr. PERLEY: There is no change, except that the census and statistics branch has been taken over from the Department of Agriculture by the Trade and Commerce Department.

Mr. BELAND: Has the number of clerks in the census office been diminished?

Mr. PERLEY: Some of the temporary employees that were there for the purpose of the census, have been dispensed with, but this item provides for the permanent staff which is just the same as it was under the Agriculture Department.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that the officers of the Government Insurance branch have been transferred to the Post Office Department.

Mr. PERLEY: Yes.

Department of Agriculture—salaries, including F. Torrance at $5,000, $373,925.

Mr. CARVELL: In the first division of subdivision A there is an increase of $11,000.

Mr. BURRELL: Last year there were twelve and now there are thirteen officials in this subdivision, the one extra being Mr. W. T. Macoun who has been in the service as Dominion Horticulturist since 1887 and who has gone up into the A class.

Mr. CARVELL: There seems to be a very large increase in subdivision B. There is an increase in the number of clerks and an increase of nearly $11,000 in salaries.

Mr. BURRELL: We have five promotions there and four new appointments—Mr. T. R. Arkell, from the outside service, as special sheep expert attached to the live stock branch, an assistant pathologist, Mr. A. Watson, B.S., in the veterinary branch, Mr. A. E. Eastham as seed analyst in the seed branch, and Mr. F. C. Elford poultry expert who is take charge of the poultry branch at the farm.

Mr. McKENZIE: How are these gentlemen transferred from the ouside to the inside service?

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): After they have been three years in the outside service they can be transferred to the inside service according to the Act of 1908.

Mr. CARVELL: Does that take the place of the examination?

Mr. REID: Yes, that saves the examination; that is the way they get in.

Mr. CARVELL: Take the next item, second division of sub-division A. Are all those increases statutory?

Mr. BURRELL: In the second division A we had forty-seven clerks last year. There were seven vacancies during the year and there are fifty-eight clerks required this year. There were a number of promotions from 2A to 1B and eight new appointments are proposed to 2A, as follows. A dairy expert, a poultry expert, for the live stock branch, Mr. W. A. Brown having been appointed to this position from the outside service, an assistant to the Dominion cerealist, assistant to the Dominion botanist, assistant horticulturist, a specialist in plant breeding, and an assistant pathologist, from the outside service, in the veterinary branch for laboratory work. In the expansion of the work of the Agriculture Department there is necessitated a considerable increase in the Civil Service estimates. I can assure my hon. friend that there is not a single appointment but what is warranted in view of that expansion.

Mr. CARVELL: There may be some mistake in these figures but they seem to be rather singular. There is only an increase of three officials; last year the number was fifty-five and this year it is fifty-eight, yet the increase in salaries is over $11,000.

Mr. BURRELL: Which branch?

Mr. CARVELL: Two A.

Mr. BURRELL: That is a mistake; last year there were forty-seven and there are fifty-eight this year.

Mr. McKENZIE: Did any clerks get into the department during the past year except by virtue of passing the competitive examination qualifying them for the positions which they occupy?

Mr. BURRELL: No. We do receive temporary clerks without examination but when they enter the service permanently they have to pass an examination.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Temporary clerks, I understand can only be employed for four months.

Mr. BURRELL: Six months.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I see that the minister has fourteen messengers. Are all these messengers employed in Ottawa?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, they are all in the inside service.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend always has his staff of lecturers going about?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many are there?

Mr. BURRELL: It would be impossible for me to say because a great many of our men that we use on that kind of work are permanent officers in the inside service who are detailed for that duty.

Legislation—printing, printing paper and binding, $200,000.

Mr. PERLEY: That is the usual vote in connection with the Parliamentary Committee on printing.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are any of the lists being printed just now?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. CODERRE: Some of them are typewritten for the benefit of a few members. About five requests have been received from members on both sides and one from an ex-member of the House, that the lists in force should be typewritten. Mr. Foley has been ordered to do that as soon as possible.

Mr. PARDEE: Can any member have the list printed by merely making a request to the Secretary of State?

Mr. CODERRE: The list should be printed every year; but, as a general election is not expected this year, of course we shall have to abide by the custom, which is that, if a member needs a list, it can be typewritten by order given to Mr. Foley.

Mr. BELAND: Would it be the list of one county or the whole list?

Mr. CODERRE: One county.

Mr. BELAND: Do I understand that any member, who asks for a copy of the list for his constituency may get it now or hereafter?

Mr. CODERRE: If we knew beforehand that every member will ask for a list, and then it would be better to have the whole list printed. That is not what I said. I said that a few members had asked for lists, and the department had decided not to have them printed, as that would be too costly, but to have them typewritten.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It would be very convenient for members, who are sending out literature to their constituents, to have a printed list, instead of going to the county, getting it printed and paying for it. I was not aware that you could get a list unless in such years as the department had decided to print the whole list.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. gentleman is quite right. It has not been the custom to print the whole list except in the event of a general election.

Mr. CARVELL: As I understand the minister, all a member has to do is to apply to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for a list and it is typewritten. I presume that is news to many members of this House.

Mr. CODERRE: The country will understand that to have a list printed would cost some $75,000. It has always been the custom not to print it, except of course when a general or bye-election is expected. I do not wish to mention names, but Mr. Fisher, for instance, has asked for a copy of the list. I have been allowed to request Mr. Foley to have the list typewritten for this gentleman. There are two or three others that I could name.

Mr. VERVILLE: Has the Government received lists of different cities which are supposed to be in force on the first of April next?

Mr. CODERRE: I could not answer that question just now. They must be here, because the clerk of Montreal, for instance, was obliged according to law to send his list as soon as possible after the coming into force of the list. I could inquire, and give an answer later.

Mr. VERVILLE: If I was to ask the Secretary of State to-morrow for a list of the 40,000 electors in my riding, would he be good enough to give it to me, as he has done to other members? If so, I shall ask him for it now.

Mr. CODERRE: The hon. member had better see me.

Legislation—House of Commons, $460,320.

Mr. PERLEY: In reference to item 39, in connection with the Banking and Commerce Committee, there will be some expense of witnesses coming here and appearing before that committee, and also expenses of other committees. I think it might be as well if we could pass item 39, or part of it at all events, for the purpose of providing for that expense. This item is simply for the expenses of the House of Commons—the salary of the Deputy Speaker, expenses of committees, and publishing the Debates. If this item were passed, I think it would be in the public interest.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would agree to that, with the understanding that we may come back to it.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Perley, House adjourned at 12.37 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

APPOINTMENTS TO HOUSE STAFF.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have directed the clerk to lay on the table particulars in reference to the appointment of Mr. Ernest Harman as Speaker's steward and of Mr. F. C. B. Greer as night watchman.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT, 1899.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 161, to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899. He said: This Bill is a very simple one. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, of 1899, provides that the Quebec Harbour Commissioners may 'maintain harbour tracks and harbour lines. They have always considered that this authorization enabled them to operate shunting engines within the limits of the harbour yard, and they have so acted. The object of the Bill is to remove any doubt on the point. An exactly similar Bill, relating to the Harbour of Montreal, was introduced by Mr. Brodeur, when Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on April 23, 1909, and was passed by this House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEATH OF FIELD MARSHAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this opportunity to make a brief reference to the death of Field Marshal Lord Wolseley. The funeral, I think, takes place to-day. We all know that Lord Wolseley had a very long and very distinguished career in the service of the Empire. He served first, I think, in the Burmese war, then in the Crimea, afterwards during the Indian Mutiny, subsequently in China, in Egypt and in Ashantee. His name is associated with the early history of this country, inasmuch as he commanded the Red River Expedition in 1870. His services to the Empire have been so great, and they have had such intimate association with the early history of this Dominion, that it seems only proper that a reference should be made to him to-day and that we should express our appreciation of the distinguished services this great soldier rendered to the Empire in so many ways, and our sorrow at the loss the Empire has sustained in his death.

The Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The remarks which have fallen from my right hon. friend the Prime Minister are most timely and undoubtedly express the views entertained on the loss which the British Empire has suffered in the death of Field Marshal Viscount Wolseley. I am old enough to remember the early days of Viscount Wolseley, when, as a young officer in the Crimean war, he gave the first evidence of the courage and ability which marked his career. And, of course, I cannot fail to remember that he was long associated with Canada as one of the permanent officers in the garrison stationed, I think, in Montreal, and afterwards at Ottawa. He took an important part in the Red River expedition, when it was his privilege and his work to establish peace and harmony in that then distracted part of our country. The services he rendered to the British Empire in different parts of the world made his name known to all who appreciate courage and British valour, of which he was one of the most prominent examples during the last century. He was not only a great soldier but a distinguished man of letters, and, in his personal relations with all who came in contact with him, a perfect gentleman.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): May I ask if the report of Chief Justice Meredith in regard to the Farmers' Bank is being printed, and if so when will it be available for distribution?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The House, two or three weeks ago, on my motion, ordered that the report with the evidence and the exhibits should all be printed. I am glad my hon. friend has brought the matter to my attention, because it transpires that it will take two or three months to have the evidence and the exhibits translated. I consulted with some members on this side whose consituencies were more particularly interested in this matter, and with one or more of members on the other side of the House, and they stated that they would be quite content with the report itself, without the Government incurring the expense, which would be very considerable, of printing the evidence and the exhibits. If any considerable number of members of the House desire that the evidence and the exhibits should be printed in full, of course, I shall be glad to have the order of the House carried out; otherwise it was my intention to move that the order of the House be rescinded in so far as regards the publication of the evidence and the exhibits. I understand the report has been printed and distributed. Whether my hon. friend has obtained a copy, I do not know.

Mr. NESBITT: I have had a copy for some time.

Mr. WHITE: The report is printed, and I think I had better allow the matter to stand for a day or so to hear from gentlemen who may be interested in having the evidence and exhibits printed. So far as I have been able to gather, the opinion of those who are interested in the matter is that they do not think the evidence and the exhibit should be printed, having regard to the delay that would take place by reason of the necessity for translation, and the very heavy expense.

WEST INDIAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I noticed a statement in the press to the effect that a contract has been made with Messrs. Pickford and Black for a West Indian steamship service. If this is correct, I would ask the acting Minister of Trade and Commerce if he would be good enough to lay on the table of the House at a very early day a copy of the order in council awarding that contract.

Mr. PERLEY: The report is incorrect. The matter has not yet been decided, and is still under consideration.

EAST RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. MACDONALD: I noticed a statement in the press that the Department of Public Works have awarded the contract for the improvements in the East river. Might I ask the minister if that statement is correct?

Mr. ROGERS: The report is correct.

BRITISH COLUMBIA CLAIMS.

Mr. MACDONALD: I have noticed a statement in the press to the effect that an order in council has been passed providing for the settlement of certain claims made by the province of British Columbia against the Dominion with regard to the matter of increased subsidies, and I would like to ask the minister if that statement is correct. If so, is this inquiry to be held under the authority of any particular statute? If not, what is the nature of the inquiry and the terms under which the matter is to be considered, and who are the gentlemen composing the board authorized to inquire into the matter?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have noticed lately an increased desire on the part of hon. members to ask a great many questions which, according to the rules, cannot be asked when the Orders of the Day are called. They are such as to cause the ministers to enter into long explanations in regard to them, and frequently a discussion across the floor of the House takes place. This, in my judgment, is improper; these questions should be put on the Order Paper. It is quite proper, of course, to make inquiries with regard to papers which have been moved for and have not been brought down, but it seems to me that inquiries of such a nature as those asked to-day should not be brought up on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. BORDEN: I can answer in a very few words the inquiry of the hon. member for Pictou. An Order in Council has been issued under the Inquiries Act, constituting a commission which is to consist of Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., of Toronto, and Mr. E. F. Bodwell, K.C., of Victoria. A third commissioner is to be appointed by agreement of these two, and, failing their agreement, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. I shall bring down to-morrow a copy of the Order in Council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Aside from the Order in Council, there must be a lot of correspondence which ought to be brought down.

Mr. BORDEN: I think the right hon. gentleman will find that this covers everything that is material, but if there is any further correspondence I shall have it brought down.

DISMISSAL OF MARTIN LANIGAN.

Mr. EMMERSON: I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not it would be possible to resurrect the motion for the papers relating to the dismissal of Martin Lanigan. I think my rt. hon. friend will appreciate the fact that I am simply desirous of having the motion go through in order that the papers can be brought down. I spoke to the hon. member for Kent, and he raised no objection whatever.

Mr. BORDEN: I have not yet spoken to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Robidoux) in regard to the matter.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DIVORCE COURT.

Mr. SCHAFFNER moved the third reading of Bill No. 147, for the relief of Fanny Maria Gogarty.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): We have just passed twenty-two divorce Bills, nine for the relief of women and thirteen for the relief of men. I hope that before long the laws of this country will be changed so that divorce will not be tried in Parliament, but that another means of trying them will be found. In England a royal commission has recently been investigating the question of divorce. That commission has made a report and has widened the reasons for divorce. When the legislation dealing with divorce is passed in the Imperial Parliament, this Parliament should consider the whole question and act along the same lines. It is becoming rather a scandal the way that divorces are being tried in Parliament here. The trial of them ought to be taken out of Parliament. The reasons for divorce should be carefully thought out and accurately defined, and the procedure to be followed in investigating these cases should be the subject of most careful consideration. Once a rule and practice is fixed, it ought to be most carefully observed. If we are to have divorce under carefully prepared rules, then it ought to be a simple matter if the law is absolutely complied with. The costs should be such that the poor as well as the rich might avail themselves of this relief. The number of divorce cases before Parliament is increasing every year, but of course the population is also increasing, and we are in some of the provinces trying divorce suits in the courts. A great many persons go to the United States and elsewhere in order to get a divorce, which should not be the case. Parliament is responsible for that condition of things and ought to find a way of dealing with it. This question has been discussed here before; and I trust that after this report is presented in England, we will have some guidance as to a better way of dealing with divorce and of avoiding having the reflection made that the Canadian Parliament seems to be able to do more in the divorce line than in anything else, and that the crop of divorces in one day in this House is twenty-two. I do not think any Canadian is proud of that condition of affairs. I hope that at an early date some way will be found to take these cases out of the jurisdiction of Parliament.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): I agree with my hon. friend from South York in a good many of his statements, but I desire to take exception to his idea that we should follow the line of the Parliamentary Committee now investigating this matter in England.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): All I wished to say is that we might get some guidance therein in dealing with the question. I do not propose to follow along the same lines.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend comes to the conclusion that the reasons for granting divorce should be accurately defined. I think the reasons are sufficiently defined in Canada to-day. I should be sorry to see the reasons extended. For my part, I see only one reason for granting divorce. One only has to live along the American boundary, as I do, to see how divorces are granted there for any conceivable reason.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): Canadians are going over there.

Mr. CARVELL: We cannot help that. My friend is perhaps not aware that the courts of New Brunswick and I think of some other provinces try divorce cases. Although Canadians go over to the United States for the distinct purpose of obtaining divorces, our courts are not willing to recognize those divorces. All that has to be done is to prove that one or other of the parties was actuated by improper motives, or that there was collusion in going to the United States and residing there for sufficient time to bring them under the jurisdiction of the American courts, and our Canadian courts refuse to recognize such divorces. In my judgment the causes for divorce are now sufficiently broad. I think this Parliament should divest itself of the right to try these cases and should hand them over to the ordinary courts. In the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and I believe British Columbia divorce courts existed prior to 1867, and by the British North America Act those courts continue to exist until such time as this Parliament sees fit to abolish them. I hope Parliament will never take such a step. Although the Senate is carrying out the functions assigned to it in as proper a manner as possible, yet it is impossible for any committee or legislative body to so effectually and fairly try a divorce case as a court can, where gentlemen learned in the law are there to see that the case is properly tried. In the province of New Brunswick, the hardest case to win is the undefended one, for the simple reason that the assumption is raised in the mind of the court that there is collusion and that probably both parties are interested in obtaining a divorce. Under such circumstances it becomes the duty of the judge to act almost as counsel for the defence.

Another great objection which I have to the present method is the matter of expense. Once the law is laid down that divorce is right, provided the necessary grounds are proved, then that law ought to be put within the power of the poor man or woman as well as of the rich. Divorce can not be cheapened by coming to the Senate or to Parliament as at present. I do not want to see the grounds for divorce extended, but I do want to see this matter taken out of the hands of Parliament and the proper tribunal found.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

2. If so, (a) from whom did the offer come, (b) what is the description of the property offered, (c) the price asked for same, (d) and the name of the owner?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. (a) La Compagnie, (b) a triangular piece of land, with building thereon on Church and Circulaire streets, (c) $5,500, (d) La Compagnie Champoux.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—BRIDGE AT RIVERSIDE, SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. Has the Government entered into any arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company whereby the Government has agreed to pay the said railway company the difference in cost between a bridge on the Saskatchewan river at Riverside, and one at Elbow, province of Saskatchewan?

2. Has the Government agreed to give the said railway company any assistance towards the construction of a bridge across the Saskatchewan river at Riverside? If so, what assistance?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. The Government has no information on this subject.

2. Answered by No. 1.

LOCKS FOR MAIL BAGS.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has the Post Office Department recently purchased new locks for mail bags?

2. If so, how many, at what price, from whom, and when?

3. Who is the inventor of said lock?

4. Is there any royalty paid to the inventor? If so, what is the amount of the royalty so paid?

5. Were any tenders invited? If so, in what papers were such tenders advertised, and at what date in each case?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1 and 3. The Post Office Department has been continuously purchasing locks for mail bags for a great number of years. The previous lock having proved unsatisfactory, the department last year asked the contractor to supply a better one, and in the month of October last, he undertook to provide a much better one for four years. This lock is patented under number 142,823.

2. (a) A great many of these locks are needed. According to an estimate made by the assistant deputy minister, it is probable that 350,000 will be needed in the course of the four years above mentioned; (b) eighty cents for the lock and twenty cents for the key, which is the same as previously paid by the late Government, since 1907; (c) the Ontario Equipment Company; (d) answered by (a).

4. The department has continued and will continued to pay one dollar for the lock and key, which is the price fixed in 1907 by the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, then Postmaster General and the same price is now paid by the present Postmaster General is for a much better lock and key. The department has not agreed to pay any royalty, has paid none in the past, and will pay none in the future.

5. On the 19th day of March, when this matter was incidently referred to in this House, the Postmaster General was under the impression, which had been conveyed to him by the assistant deputy minister, that the contractors were the lowest tenderers. An examination of the files has corrected that erroneous impression. There have been no tenders asked for the last eighteen years, and the present Government has, in that respect, continued the policy of the last Government, who invited no tenders when the article required was patented.

DREDGE RESTIGOUCHE.

Mr. TURGEON:

Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to equip the dredge Restigouche with scows and tug-boat, so as to facilitate and expedite her operations in Bathurst harbour, N.B.?

Mr. ROGERS: The matter is under consideration.

2. By whom has the examination been made this year?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The three commissioners appointed to conduct the investigation into pilotage matters unanimously recommended the appointment of an oculist either from Ontario or the maritime provinces who would be 'absolutely clear of local influence.' An oculist conforming to the terms of the recommendation, was appointed.

2. Examinations were held last week by Dr. H. D. Fritz and Captain H. St. G. Lindsay.

QUEBEC AND ORIENTAL AND ATLANTIC, QUEBEC AND WESTERN RAILWAYS.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Government received resolutions adopted by the county councils of Gaspé and Bonaventure, asking it to take over the Quebec and Oriental and the Atlantic, Quebec and Western railways, and incorporate them into the Government railway system of Canada, on the grounds that the said lines are not being operated in a manner to fully serve the interests of the counties through which they run?

2. Does the Government intend to take any action to meet the wishes of the people of these counties, or has any action been taken? If so, what is the action?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes, by the Department of Railways and Canals.

2. The resolution will receive consideration.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES APPOINTMENTS, BONAVENTURE.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Who recommended the appointment of two officials, Messrs. Gabriel Myles, of Pabos, Gaspé county, and Hormisdas Desjardins, of Sayabec, Rimouski county, to replace one official, Mr. J. F. Bugeaud, of Bonaventure, Quebec, assistant inspector of weights and measures, for the district of Quebec, dismissed on the grounds of alleged active political partisanship?

2. What were the grounds set forth for the appointment of two officials to replace one?

3. Were any persons recommended for such an office from Bonaventure county, who were they, by whom were they recommended, and why were they not appointed?

4. Have the salaries of Messrs. Myles and Desjardins been increased since their appointment, and what district has been assigned to each respectively?

5. Is A. B. Caldwell, assistant temporary inspector of weights and measures, of New Carlisle, Quebec, appointed jointly with J. F. Bugeaud, still in the employ of the Department of Inland Revenue? If so, at what salary and in what district?

6. Was the removal of Mr. A. B. Caldwell also asked of the department? If so, by whom and why was it not granted?

7. Were any investigations held in these cases, or was the dismissed official given an opportunity of meeting the charges made against him?

Mr. NANTEL:

1. Dr. L. P. Gauthier, M.P., H. Boulay, M.P.

2. Better efficiency of the service.

3. Mr. J. T. Daignault has also been recommended by reliable parties from the riding, but as he was living in the county of Bonaventure, he was not appointed, for the reasons given in answer to question No. 2.

4. Each appointed at $200. They have received no increases. They were appointed as assistant inspectors of weights and measures for the weights and measures district of Quebec.

5. Yes, $450 per annum. District of Quebec.

6. Yes. By reliable parties from the riding, but no others.
7. No. Mr. Caldwell is still in office.

4. Does the new postmaster keep his office on his own premises? If not, where?

3. No.
4. Yes.

MIDDLETON—PORT GEORGE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

1. Were tenders recently asked for the carriage of mails from Middleton to Port George, Annapolis county, N.S.?
2. If so, what are the names of the persons who tendered and the amount of each tender?

Mr. PELLETIER: 1. and 2. Tenders have not been invited. Authority has been given to renew the contract of William Mosher for a further period of four years, dating from 1st April, 1913, on the existing terms and conditions.

RIGAUD POST OFFICE—COAL CONTRACT.

1. Who has been granted the contract for providing the coal for the post office at Rigaud?
2. How many tons have been delivered, and what is the price paid per ton?
3. What are the names of the different tenderers, and what is the price per ton asked by each of them?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Chevrier Frères.
2. About thirty-six and a half tons at $8 a ton.
3. Only one tender received, from Chevrier Frère.

DISMISSALS.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Has the Government received a petition signed by the electors of Grondines, county of Portneuf, asking for the dismissal of J. O. Paradis and Laurent Paradis, operators of the marine telephone of the said parish?
2. If so, has the Government dismissed the said persons, or does it intend to dismiss them?
3. Who recommended the appointment of the said J. O. Paradis and Laurent Paradis?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. These operators are employed only during the season of open navigation. Mr. J. O. Paradis resumed work about two weeks ago, in order to report the movements of the ice-breakers. It is the intention of the department to continue his services, as he is reported competent to discharge the duties of the office. When the time comes for the engagement of a night operator, the question of employing Laurent Paradis will be considered.
3. Persons in whom the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has confidence.

DISMISSAL OF G. M. ULLYOT.

On the motion for Committee of Supply:

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon)): I would call the attention of the acting Minister of Interior (Hon. T. W. Crothers) to an answer which was given by him to a question of mine, reported on page 6411 of the Unrevised 'Hansard,' with regard to the case of G. M. Ullyot, clerk in the Dominion Lands office at Saskatoon. The letter addressed to Mr. Ullyot embodying his dismissal was as follows:

I beg to inform you that it has been decided to dispense with your services as senior assistant in the Dominion Lands office at Saskatoon, to take effect at once.

Writing to the Department of Interior, Mr. M. A. MacInnes, the agent of the Dominion Lands office in Saskatoon, said:

Department of the Interior,
Saskatchewan, June 5, 1912.
Dominion Lands and Crown Timber Office.

Sir,—I beg to inform you that Mr. George M. Ullyot's resignation took effect on the 25th ultimo and he discontinued work on that date.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. A. MacInnes,
Agent, Dominion Lands.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

This was the first intimation I had that Mr. Ullyot had resigned, and I put a question on the Order Paper as follows:

Mr. McCraney:

1. Referring to the return recently laid on the table of the House of Commons regarding the dismissal of G. M. Ullyot, clerk in the Dominion Lands office at Saskatoon, on what grounds was the said G. M. Ullyot dismissed, and by whom was such dismissal recommended?
2. Did the said G. M. Ullyot resign, as stated in the letter of Mr. MacInnes contained in the said return?
3. If so, was said resignation in writing or oral, and what were the terms of said resignation?

To that the acting minister replied:

Mr. Crothers:

1. Political partisanship.

2 and 3. No official record of such resignation except the reference contained in the letter from Mr. MacInnes, local agent of Dominion lands.

The point I want to make is, that if Mr. Ullyot had resigned and was not dismissed, there was no occasion for bringing down any return and I would not have asked for any. It is important to know whether Mr. Ullyot had resigned or not, and if he did resign there should be a copy of his resignation on the file. I would like to have had that copy produced from Mr. MacInnes, if there is such a copy. Mr. MacInnes was the Conservative candidate in 1908 in the riding of Saskatoon. He is a city alderman and knows the uses of the English language. Mr. Ullyot, I understand, denies that there was any political partisanship. I would like the minister to communicate with the agent of Dominion lands at Saskatoon, and ask him to send a copy of the resignation of Mr. Ullyot, or to explain his language. If it turns out that there was no political partisanship on the part of Mr. Ullyot, as I understand is claimed by him, and that this letter was written to give the idea that there was a resignation, then I think it is the conduct of the agent of Dominion lands at Saskatoon that is to be investigated rather than that of Mr. Ullyot.

Mr. ROGERS: Having had charge of the Department of the Interior at the time the dismissal my hon. friend refers to took place, I may be able to throw some light upon the subject. As far as the action of the department and myself in connection with the matter was concerned, there is certainly nothing to shield. As I understand it, Mr. Ullyot was dismissed by reason of the fact that he was known and recognized as a political partisan. I hold in my hand a copy of a statement, most of which I understand is written by Mr. Ullyot himself in his own handwriting, and part of which is printed. It says:

Elections are never won by platform speaking or by sitting around talking in offices. The winning party is always the working party. In the interests of the province as well as in his own interest every Liberal should be prepared to do his utmost. If he does he may be sure of victory. Make up your mind that your division will return a Liberal majority, then start out to get it.

I turn the page and I find written in Mr. Ullyot's own handwriting, a list of the several polling divisions in the constituency and the names of the persons who are to undertake the work in the different polling divisions.

I turn another page and I find, in the handwriting of Mr. Ullyot, evidence of the fact that he was not alone a political partisan, but also, evidently, secretary-treasurer of the Liberal campaign fund in this constituency.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That was a sinecure——

Mr. ROGERS: I find here, in what appears to be his own handwriting, a statement after the names of the gentlemen to whom he had allocated the work, as follows:

Gave T. H., Garry the sum of $412.00.

If my hon. friend requires any further information, of course we will be delighted to supply it, in the case of Mr. Ullyot, or any other dismissal we have made for political partisanship in western Canada.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER: I would like very much if my hon. friend would lay on the table the document from which he has read.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall do so.

Mr. OLIVER: A remarkable fact in this connection is that a return was tabled in the House or an answer was made to a question, stating that Mr. Ullyot had resigned, while my hon. friend has the evidence under his hand, as he shows, giving the cause for Mr. Ullyot's dismissal, and he says, as a matter of fact, that he was dismissed. While we do not want to raise any question about trivial matters, we want to know definitely, whether, when a return is made to this House or a question is answered, we can depend on the good faith of the Government in making the answer or in producing the return. I think my hon. friend will agree to that proposition and will agree also that it is not in accordance with good parliamentary procedure to take the action that has been taken in this case. As to the matter of Mr. Ullyot's merits or demerits, I must say that I have acquaintance with Mr. Ullyot, and I am more than surprised at the allegation made by the Minister of Public Works. That is why I am very anxious to probe it to the bottom. If such a state of facts existed within the knowledge of the Department of the Interior, there was certainly no justification for the answer that was made to the question.

PURCHASE OF MAIL BAG LOCKS.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville): I rise to a question of privilege. The other day while we were discussing estimates, I happened to ask the Postmaster General if new locks had been bought by the Post Office Department for the mail bags, and I received the information that 350,000 new locks had been purchased by him recently at a price of one dollar per lock. A series of questions was put by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) concerning that extraordinary purchase and the answer has just been given by the Postmaster General. One of these questions was:

Mr. Carvell:
1. Has the Post Office Department recently purchased new locks for mail bags?
2. If so, how many, at what price, from whom, and when?
3. Who is the inventor of said lock?
4. Is there any royalty paid to the inventor? If so, what is the amount of the royalty so paid?
5. Were any tenders invited? If so, in what papers were such tenders advertised, and at what date in each case?

I see by the answer of Postmaster General that he introduces the name of his predecessor to justify his action. His answer to question 4, is:

The department has continued and will continue to pay one dollar for the lock and key, which is the price fixed in 1907 by the Hon. R. Lemieux, then Postmaster General, and the same price now paid by the present Postmaster General is for a much better lock and key. The department has not agreed to pay any royalty, has paid none in the past, and will pay none in the future.

I beg to say that the late Postmaster General never fixed the price for locks and keys. When he took over the department he found conditions under which such things were purchased at the lowest price possible; the Postmaster General of that day would never have purchased such a large quantity of locks without calling for tenders. The impression my hon. friend the Postmaster General tries to convey is that he has followed the principle adopted by his predecessor. I repeat, first, I never fixed the price for locks and keys, and secondly I never purchased such an extraordinary quantity of locks as 350,000, at one dollar each. I do not know why my hon. friend has introduced my name in the answer he has given to the House. I think he should see that his answers are better prepared. However, I am glad to note that the hon. gentleman tries to correct the impression which he sought to convey, that tenders had been called for. He has admitted now that no tenders were called for this very large quantity of locks.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General): Instructions seem to have been given in the province of Quebec to send abroad, and to repeat day by day, the statement that the Postmaster General had bought locks at a terribly high price. Day after day the Grit papers in Quebec have been repeating that statement. A question was put in the House on the subject, and I have stated in my answer that the price we now pay for the locks is the one which was fixed by the preceding Postmaster General, and that statement is true. Previous to 1907, a different price was paid, but in 1907 it was raised by the orders and instructions of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). These are the facts as they are to be found in the papers on the official file. I myself saw this morning, letters written by the contractor asking for an increase of the price, and the decision of the hon. member for Rouville, fixing the price at eighty cents each for the locks, and twenty cents each for the keys.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What were the quantities?

Mr. PELLETIER: The quantities which were wanted by the department. My hon. friend has tried to raise a scandal in the province of Quebec; he has his answer to-day, and it is no wonder that he is not satisfied with it. For days I have been told in the province of Quebec that it was a shame to buy locks at that price. My answer simply shows that I have continued to pay the price fixed five years ago by the hon. member for Rouville.

Mr. CARVELL: Is it the same kind of lock?

Mr. PELLETIER: It is a much better lock for which we pay the same price. Of course I understand that it is somewhat of a disappointment to my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) that this big scandal has disappeared. He says that I have tried to justify my action by using his name. I have done so because I was told that we were paying more for this lock than we should, when, as a matter of fact we are simply paying the price which was fixed by my hon. friend from Rouville. I thought it was only fair after what has been stated in the newspapers regarding a big scandal in connection with the purchase of those locks that in answer to the question put by my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) I should state the facts as they are. This question came up when we were passing the estimates for 1912-13 on the evening before the Easter adjournment. We were considering another matter when my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), no doubt in good faith, put a question about those locks. The assistant deputy minister was sitting beside me at the time and I made inquiry of him, and he gave me the information, being himself under an erroneous impression that tenders had been called for. Of course tenders cannot be asked for a patented article. That is the rule which was followed by my hon. friend from Rouville. Mr. Verret gave me the information on the spur of the moment and made a mistake, and I repeated it to the House. To-day I am putting the facts as they are. As to the quantity, the principle which has been followed for the last eighteen years is, that these locks should be purchased as required year by year by the department.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many by the year?

Mr. PELLETIER: My answer is there. We have an estimate made. We do not know exactly what the quantity required will be, but the assistant deputy minister made an estimate, which he handed over to me, that for the next four years the number required would be 350,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many were used last year?

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not know.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many for the last five years? I venture to say that for the last twenty years we have not used 350,000 locks.

Mr. PELLETIER: Does my hon. friend think that we buy locks to store them in the department? We buy them from the manufacturer as they are required.

Mr. CARVELL: Do you buy them for a century?

Mr. PELLETIER: That might be the policy of my hon. friend if he was administering the department, but it is not mine. We buy them as we want them. The contract says that the man who manufactures those locks will supply them as wanted, and as notice is sent to him from month to month. That is all there is in this big scandal.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I beg to reiterate what I said when I rose to a question of privlege. First of all, I never fixed the price for the locks when I was at the head of the department. For the few dozen locks which were bought yearly, I daresay the price, even at one dollar each, was a fair price, but we never thought of buying 350,0000 at one dollar each without calling for tenders.

Mr. PELLETIER: The papers can be brought down to show you.

Mr. BELAND: Who is the inventor of this new patent lock?

Mr. PELLETIER: The number of the patent is given in the answer to the question.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But what is the name of the inventor?

Mr. PELLETIER: We have a contract. I have given the information as the officers of the department have found it in the papers.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who is the contractor?

Mr. PELLETIER: The Ontario Equipment Company are the contractors.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When was that contract signed?

Mr. PELLETIER: Some time in September or October, 1912, but I would not like to be too sure without the papers before me.

DISMISSAL OF DIDSBURY POSTMASTER.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give notice to my hon. friend the Postmaster General that, on some early occasion convenient to himself, I shall ask him the reasons for the dismissal of Mr. David Shantz, postmaster of Didsbury in the Red Deer district. He was dismissed from the post-office, and the information I get is that he was dismissed without any charge and therefore without any examination into the circumstances. I should like, at an early date, to have the information upon this subject.

Mr. PELLETIER: I will see that the papers shall be brought here so that the hon. gentleman will have them before him when he comes to deal with the matter.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not know what matters are to be brought before the Committee, but on Friday night it was stated that civil government would be dealt with. I have just learned that we are likely to take up the estimates in connection with the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. BORDEN: It is only in connection with one particular item as to which hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House required some information in view of the vote of one-sixth on account.

Mr. EMMERSON: By the usage of this House, the Minister of Railways, before his estimates are considered, is expected to make a general statement with reference to the Intercolonial railway, dealing with the accounts of the past year and foreshadowing the requirements of the year that is to come.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not think my hon. friend quite understands the situation. He knows that very often a vote on account has to be taken. It has been taken for a great many years in the past and it has been taken long before the Minister of Railways makes his statement. That has been done over and over again. He undoubtedly makes a statement on his estimates, but, in the meantime, the vote on account is taken. It was the desire of hon. gentlemen that an explanation should be given in respect to certain items before the vote on account was taken. These explanations now will not take away the necessity of making any statement that is usual or desirable. It does not interfere with the ordinary course of affairs at all.

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not think my position is altered by the explanation of my right hon. friend. I understand nothing about any percentage to be voted or anything of the sort. I do not know whether there is any understanding as to that. I asked as to whether it was proposed to deal with the estimates of the Railway Department in connection with the Intercolonial railway. I think that I, as a member of this House representing a constituency which is very deeply interested in the Intercolonial railway, have a right to ask that the practice of past years be continued and that before one-sixth, or even one dollar, is voted in connection with the Intercolonial railway, we should have a statement reviewing the situation and foreshadowing the events of the current fiscal year. It has been the practice for the last thirty years to require the Minister of Railways to make such a statement. It does not alter it in any way whether you are asking for the whole of the appropriation or only for a fraction of it. There are a great many subjects involved, and I think the members of this House are entitled to a general statement before even one item is taken up.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend is entirely mistaken in supposing that the statement of the Minister of Railways has usually been given before a vote on account is taken. A vote on account has frequently been given before any such statement has been made. However, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) may be prepared to give it; I do not know.

Mr. COCHRANE: I can give the committee a short synopsis of the past year's operations. The estimated surplus is between $900,000 and $1,000,000. It has been a pretty successful year, the revenue being the largest in the history of the road. The estimated reveenue is $12,000,000. In comparison with the last three years the results show up remarkably well. The revenue for the last three years was as follows:

1911-12	$10,593,785
1909-10	9,268,234

A large amount has been spent upon equipment. If I offered any criticism at all with reference to the management of the road in the past it would be that the equipment has not been kept up with the increased business from year to year. The following amounts have been taken out during the year and charged to working expenses: Rail renewals, $100,000; fire renewals, $60,000; equipment renewals, $300,000. The average price of coal for the year just closed was twelve cents per ton higher than the previous year, involving an extra outlay of some $85,000. This year I think the increase will be twenty-five cents a ton. The amount paid in wages for handling the year's business is about $350,000 in excess of the previous year. Contracts have been let for rolling stock during the current fiscal year for over $3,000,000 worth, as follows:

		Delivered.
45	Consolidated freight engines	15
5	Pacific type passenger engines	none
9	Switching engines	"
1,423	Steel frame box cars	623
150	Wooden box cars	150
200	Steel under frame platform cars	100
20	Steel frame stock cars	20
100	Hart Otis coal cars	50
35	Refrigerator cars	50
100	Hart convertible dump cars	none
1	Snow plough	1
1	tank car	1
7	Sleeping cars	4
4	Dining cars	2
7	First class cars	6
3	Baggage cars	none

Mr. EMMERSON: What proportion of those are to be paid for out of revenue?

Mr. COCHRANE: All of it will be paid out of this year's and last year's revenue with the exception of $1,000,000 which is in this year's estimates. In addition to the above the following cars are under construction in the Moncton shops: One hundred and fifty wooden box cars; eighteen conductors vans; three colonist cars; one flanger. The reports of the traffic offices show that there will be increased business for the coming year and every effort is being made to have the rolling stock ordered and delivered in time to handle the increased business.

Mr. EMMERSON: I should like to have a little more in detail the proportion which is to be paid for out of revenue. My hon. friend says that they are all paid for out of revenue excepting $1,000,000 worth which is to be voted this year. Am I correct in concluding that he has purchased this rolling stock during the past year and that a million dollars is to be added out of the estimates of the coming year?

Mr. COCHRANE: Out of the profits of 1911-12, 1912-13, and 1913-14, with a million dollars additional, we expect to be able to pay for the equipment, which amounts, if I remember rightly, to about $4,000,000.

Mr. EMMERSON: I can quite appreciate the fact that the revenue of the railway has very largely increased during the past year, about $1,500,000 in excess of the preceding year. In 1911-12, the revenue increased about $750,000 over the preceding year. The greatest proportion of increase in the revenue of the road has therefore occurred during the last year. With regard to the Intercolonial railway, my hon. friend has mentioned the fact that he has purchased all this rolling stock, and that he has contracted for certain additional rolling stock which is to be delivered in the coming autumn. Can he give me a statement of the total cost of what is yet to be delivered?

Mr. COCHRANE: I can get that for my hon. friend and bring it down later on.

Mr. EMMERSON: In connection with the Intercolonial railway, a very large sum was expended on capital account some years ago in the construction and establishment of railway shops at the city of Moncton. Very complete works were established, and a very large amount of money was asked of Parliament for that purpose. That was during the period when I had the honour of presiding over that department.

Mr. BORDEN: I understood from my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that before one-sixth should be voted of the Intercolonial railway items, he and some hon. gentlemen opposite would like to have explanations with regard to the $2,500,000 item for the terminals at Halifax and also the $160,000 item for improvements at Lévis. If my hon. friend from Westmorland will delay his remarks a little those explanations can be given.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend the Minister of Railways has given his explanation in regard to the Intercolonial railway. We can take that question up now.

Mr. EMMERSON: I certainly misapprehended what was in the mind of my right hon. friend. I thought we were going on with the estimates of the Railway Department.

Mr. BORDEN: When a vote on account is granted, there usually is no discussion, because a discussion on the one-sixth would take up just as much time as on the whole item. Before coming down with the proposal to ask for a sixth, I merely wished to give some information which hon. gentlemen desired.

Mr. EMMERSON: My hon. friend the Minister of Railways has made a statement with respect to the Intercolonial railway, which is very brief and not very illuminative.

Mr. COCHRANE: If I had your flow of language, I could spend a half hour on it.

Mr. EMMERSON: The hon. gentleman prides himself on his brevity; and if it be true that brevity is the soul of wit, the hon. gentleman is the wittiest man in the House. I was saying that the country had spent a large sum of money on the Intercolonial railway establishment at Moncton; but the ideas upon which that expense was made have not been carried out. It was the intention of the department to utilize these shops and that machinery to build all the rolling stock, including locomotives, to be paid for out of current revenue. Otherwise we could not have fairly asked Parliament to spend such large sums in providing these facilities. But not a single locomotive has been constructed there.

Mr. HAZEN: In what year was the vote?

Mr. EMMERSON: In 1906, I think. Before the fire the shops were of a character that could only be called hodgepodge. They had been commenced in 1875, or even before that time, and additions had been made as deemed necessary, so that at the time of the fire they were not only inadequate but inconvenient, and work was carried on at a disadvantage and at excessive cost. The shops were practically wholly destroyed in the fire. It was determined that a new site should be selected and modern shops constructed. In asking for the vote, I explained the policy of the department to be the providing of shops which would not only do all the necessary work of repairs to rolling stock, but that would have facilities for construction as I have explained. The money was voted and the shops constructed, and I think I can fairly state that the facilities afforded at these shops are equal to those of any similar establishment in Canada. Perhaps these shops may not be so extensive as the Angus shops in Montreal, but in other respects they are quite equal to the Angus shops. The work of rolling stock repairs has been carried on in these new shops at much less cost than in the old establishment. A car to be repaired is taken in at one of the shops and turned out, completely repaired, at the other. In the old shops the car had to be moved to one place and to another at great loss of time; the machinery was not up to date and modern requirements generally were not met, whereas today, work is carried on at a great advantage, and consequently at reduced cost.

But the intention to have rolling stock constructed in these shops out of revenue has not been carried out because the minister's statement shows that contracts have been let outside this year for many of the cars and all the locomotives. I should not complain if all these purchases were confined to the rolling stock to be paid for out of capital. I can well understand, for instance, that Pullman cars can be constructed to greater advantage in shops where special facilities for such work are provided. But I must guard against being misapprehended in this regard. I think the shops at Moncton are so perfectly equipped that there is no class of rolling stock for the use of the Intercolonial railway that could not be properly constructed there. In regard to the locomotives, no one will deny that the equipment at Moncton is adequate for the construction of locomotives of the highest standard of Canadian manufacture. I could go further and say that in years past the locomotives constructed at Moncton have not had their equal anywhere in Canada. I think the men on the Intercolonial railway, both the locomotive engineers and mechanics will bear testimony to the fact that the locomotives constructed at Moncton in years past were superior to, certainly equal to any imported from the United States or Scotland or to any manufactured elsewhere in Canada. What I have to complain of is that the present facilities for the construction of locomotives are not being utilized. In my judgment they could, from an economic standpoint, be utilized to the advantage of the Intercolonial railway; it seems to me to be a sheer waste of money to have facilities for the purpose and not utilize them. I want to congratulate my hon. friend on the surplus of about a million dollars he mentioned as having attained during the past fiscal year. I do think, however, that, had he taken the course which I have outlined, and had he required his managing board to have many of these cars constructed at Moncton, his surplus would have been larger, and the railway itself would have been greatly benefited. There has been one constant cry for the past eighteen months—certainly for the past year—all along the line of the Intercolonial railway to the effect that shipments were delayed, and that the export and general trade of that section of Canada was being hampered by the fact that the Intercolonial could not furnish the necessary cars. I admit that is true in respect of other railways and with regard to other sections of Canada, and I am not saying that point is to be emphasized any more in connection with the Intercolonial than with other railways. Complaint has been made that a great many Intercolonial cars have been seized and held by United States railways. I do not wish to dwell upon that at this moment, but my hon. friend furnished a return showing the number of cars of the Intercolonial which were in use or held on other railways in the United States and Canada, and also a return showing that the Intercolonial had a very large percentage of United States cars, as well as those of other Canadian railways. I venture to say that a careful study of this return will disclose the fact that although Intercolonial cars of all classes and descriptions are to be found elsewhere in Canada and in the United States, the Intercolonial has more than compensated itself in that regard by using United States and other cars which are running on its lines. I have seen within the last few months—indeed, during the whole of the past season—complete trains pass over the Intercolonial between Montreal and Halifax, not more than two per cent of the cars being those of the Intercolonial. There were cars from the railways of even remote parts of the southern United States; from the railways of the New England States, from the farther west, from the southern Pacific, and from the railways on the western coast of the United States. The percentage of cars of other railways on the Intercolonial during the past year has been, in my judgment, larger than the percentage of Intercolonial cars held by the railways in the United States.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think the percentage is against the Intercolonial.

Mr. EMMERSON: My hon. friend may think so, but, after studying the situation, I have been led to form a different conclusion. The point I desire to make is that to my knowledge there have been a large number of disabled cars in the sheds and yards at Moncton, and on sidings of the Intercolonial, which should have been repaired at Moncton. I know my hon. friend will say that the managing board furnishes him with reports to the contrary; but the managing board are not in a position to deny the fact that miles of sidings have been covered with disabled cars, which could very well have been repaired and put in use. In the early part of last season there were in the Moncton yards alone hundreds of cars, and yet the outcry was heard from shippers on all sides that they could not get rolling stock to meet their requirements. I think my hon. friend will himself bear testimony to the fact that in distributing his orders among the car companies of Canada he is not given prompt delivery, and has been subjected to delay whereas had he, in addition, had a sufficient number of workmen at Moncton utilizing the machinery that was idle there, he should have very readily, or at least, measurably, met the difficulty of furnishing additional cars. The surplus was large, but, in my judgment it might have been larger had a proper policy been adopted in connection with the car situation. More than that, had the motive power on the Intercolonial been up to the requirements during the past year, there would have been a very much larger and quicker movement in freight traffic. In my own experience I have known a train of cars to remain at Painsec Junction for four days because of the absence of power to move it. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways is, perhaps, not personally conversant with those conditions; I admit he is responsible, but he is not personally conversant——

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not responsible.

Mr. EMMERSON: Perhaps my hon. friend can escape the responsibility in that regard. I have felt that the managing board was created for the purpose of relieving the ministers of responsibility, but I never could understand how they could be thus relieved.

Mr. COCHRANE: They did not have the funds to buy with; the House had to give the money.

Mr. EMMERSON: They should have had the funds, and there is no excuse for their not. Is that the reason why my hon. friend did not provide the facilities which should have been afforded a year ago last spring or last winter? During last summer, the passenger and express trains, even the Ocean Limited, had to be hauled between Moncton and Montreal by freight engines time and again. I am not speaking from hearsay, I am speaking of what I actually know to be the fact. The excuse offered was that they had not the locomotive power. Does my hon. friend say that this was because they did not have funds? If they did not have the funds they should have had them, because it is inexcusable to advertise over this continent that you are going to run fast trains, such as the Maritime Express and the Ocean Limited, and have those trains hauled by freight engines. It seems to me an intolerable condition of things and one that certainly does not reflect credit upon the board of management. If the Intercolonial railway had had the necessary motive power and the necessary rolling stock, the increase in the gross earnings of the railway would have been very much greater. I would hope that if my hon. friend advances as an excuse for his past action the lack of funds, he will see that it does not occur again.

Mr. COCHRANE: I said that in defence of the managing board who could not take the money. That was for the minister, the House, and the Government to deal with.

Mr. EMMERSON: Parliament was not asked for the money and so it was not furnished. Then I suppose the Department of Railways and Canals and not the managing board is to be condemned, and my hon. friend will have to be responsible personally for that as minister. If that condition has been the result of a lack of funds, I hope my hon. friend will see that there shall be no such excuse offered during the present fiscal year. Of course there always will be complaints with regard to the operation of the Intercolonial, but very serious complaints are made to-day and have been made during the past winter. This has been an exceptionally favourable winter for the operation of trains over the Intercolonial, but still there has been great delay, and time and again they have had to cancel trains. Some trains ceased to be regular trains before reaching their destination and became special trains simply because they lacked locomotives even to haul the ordinary passenger trains from one end of the line to the other. There has hardly been a day, and I make the statement challenging successful contradiction, there has not been a day since the 1st of January on which the trains operating between Halifax and Montreal were not late. Perhaps that is almost too sweeping a statement for me to make, not having been personally on the ground, but so far as the operation of these trains has come under my personal observation, there has not been a single train run on time. The local trains between Springhill junction and Moncton and various other points, on the Intercolonial, have caught the contagion and they cannot apparently be run on time. This reflects upon the railway and injures the traffic of the road. My hon. friend wisely, in my judgment, continued the operation of the Ocean Limited, in competition with the Canadian Pacific railway between Montreal and Halifax, but the fact that he did not have sufficient locomotive power lost to him a very large percentage of the through traffic. I have known passengers, I would almost say by the score, who, in going East, have gone as far as Montreal with the intention of travelling the balance of the way over the Intercolonial, by the Ocean Limited, but who, on reaching Montreal, because of locomotive conditions on the Intercolonial, were constrained to go to eastern points by the Canadian Pacific railway. I can quite appreciate the desirability of going east from Montreal via St. John when you are travelling to a point west of Moncton, but ordinarily speaking any traveller would prefer to go by the Intercolonial to points other than St. John or to points between Moncton and St. John. I think they show good judgment in preferring the Intercolonial railway, but under the conditions prevailing during the past season they have not been able to avail themselves of it. I have no desire to carp at the Intercolonial. I know the difficulties my hon. friend experiences. I have had the same experience, and I know that there is too great a tendency to complain, simply for the sake of complaining. Then there are other complaints in connection with the operation of the Intercolonial, that I think are vital, and certainly have a bearing upon the proper operation of the road. I believe in economy, but I do not believe that the Intercolonial should exercise an economy that means the cutting off of lights at stations, except just for the time when trains are entering the station or lying at it. It is a common complaint throughout the maritime provinces, that at stations all along the line, at Campbellton, Newcastle wherever they have electric lights, the lights at the stations are not put on until the train is rolling into the station, and they are shut off immediately after the train has left. Lives have been lost as a result of that. The life of a very prominent man, a New Brunswicker, was unfortunately lost at Compbellton, as a result of the shutting off of light and not having the yard properly lighted. When people have to remain around a station in darkness, waiting for delayed trains, it is not treating the travelling public as they should be treated. It is an economy which cannot in common sense be justified. Hon. gentlemen opposite, who have had experience along the Intercolonial, can bear testimony to the truth of what I am saying. At Sackville, which is as we all know a university town, where there are many students passing to and fro, I had occasion to observe these conditions during the Christmas vacation, and they were a disgrace to the Intercolonial, and entailed great inconvenience to the people using that station. The attention of the managing board should be called by the Minister of Railways to this.

I should have liked if, in his explanation of the financial conditions which have prevailed during the past year, and which he anticipates during the current year, my hon. friend had taken us into his confidence in relation to the operation of the connecting railways. I am not going to deal with the subject of branch lines, but I do think that my hon. friend might properly and advantageously have taken us into his confidence as to whether he anticipated taking action during this fiscal year to have any of those railways harnessed up to the government line.

Mr. COCHRANE: That question will come up on its merits.

Mr. EMMERSON: It is a financial feature in connection with the Intercolonial, which might very properly have been referred to by my hon. friend when he asked for a vote in connection with the main line. The traffic receipts of the Intercolonial could be substantially increased by proper train connections with the connecting branches, even without acquiring some of these. As a matter of fact, a great proportion of the traffic, passenger as well as express, and indeed freight too, is assembled at Intercolonial railway stations by the branch railways. Too large a proportion of that traffic goes over the Canadian Pacific railway to Montreal and points west; it could go over the Intercolonial to Montreal if proper connections were arranged. My hon. friend has made an arrangement with the Dominion Express Company which is going to prove disadvantageous from the financial standpoint.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not proving so.

Mr. EMMERSON: It has only been in operation for a month or two, and I do not think my hon. friend is in a position to contradict what I have said. I am for the Intercolonial, and anything that will contribute to its advantage I shall favour at all times. I have feared that the permission given to the Dominion Express Company to utilize the Intercolonial would prove a very great disadvantage to the Intercolonial from a financial standpoint.

Mr. RHODES: What about the public?

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not think it will be an additional convenience to the public, but I put it this way, if it is a right proposition from a railway standpoint, why is it that the Canadian Pacific railway will not permit any other express company, except its own, to utilize its line?

Mr. RHODES: I am speaking for the public.

Mr. EMMERSON: I am speaking of the disadvantage to the railway. My hon. friend proves my case. I am speaking from the standpoint of the Intercolonial, and stating that it is a disadvantage to the Intercolonial to permit the Dominion Express Company to operate over its line. My hon. friend says it is a convenience to the public.

Mr. RHODES: I put the case in all fairness. I was not attempting in the slightest degree to make political capital. My idea is to give an express service, and I think that is an advantage to the public. Even if it were a disadvantage to the Intercolonial itself, but an advantage to the public, we should stand for it. I beg to assure my hon. friend that I was not attempting to make the slightest political capital out ot this small matter.

Mr. EMMERSON: I appreciate what my hon. friend says. In my judgment and admittedly in his, it is not an advantage to the railway.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that.

Mr. EMMERSON: Otherwise, the Canadian Pacific railway would afford to the Canadian Express Company, and to other express companies, the same privileges which they afford to the Dominion Express Company. I hold that it is not an advantage to the public, and anyone who knows practically anything about the matter knows that it is not. The express rates are common to all the companies.

Mr. RHODES: It is not a question of rates. Supposing that a man in one of the maritime provinces wants an express parcel which must of necessity come by the Dominion Express Company; if he can get that parcel by one of the Intercolonial railway trains so that it can reach its destination several hours earlier than if it were to wait for the Canadian Pacific railway train, surely that is an advantage.

Mr. EMMERSON: Such a train of circumstances might be possible.

Mr. RHODES: It occurs every day.

Mr. EMMERSON: It is not at all probable. In the matter of rates there is no difference. However, assuming that to be the case—the Government is responsible for the operation of its trains, and for its arrangement with the Dominion Express Company—and, they might very well have said to the Canadian Pacific railway: We are willing and anxious to have you operate on our trains because it will afford additional advantages to the public; you are operating your lines for, and solely in connection with the Dominion Express Company; it would be an advantage to have your railway open to the Canadian Express Company because it would afford additional advantages to the public. My hon. friend should have insisted upon that action being taken. I remember some years ago when a similar application was made by, and on behalf of, the Dominion Express Company, to have these privileges accorded them over the Intercolonial railway, I at once took the ground: we will be quite willing to do that if you, the Canadian Pacific railway are willing to afford the same privileges and advantages to the public in connection with other express business. It is on that account that I particularly condemn this arrangement. The arrangement will not increase the revenue of the Intercolonial railway but it will incur additional expense. On the north shore there is only a certain amount of traffic to go in and to come out. If you have one company operating you do not have to furnish any additional facilities for express companies, but where you have more than one express company, each company has certain claims to be satisfied and the additional expense to the Intercolonial railway, by reason of the agreement with the Dominion Express Company, will be very considerable during the present year, while I venture to assert, there will not be any addition to the earning power of the road by reason of this express traffic. The minister has not acted wisely in entering into that arrangement from the standpoint either of the public or of the railway itself. If he had considered the interests of the railway solely—and he might have been justified in doing that—he would not have entered into the arrangement. If he had considered the interests of the general public he would have insisted upon a reciprocal arrangement whereby the public would have had the advantatge of two companies instead of one over the lines of the Canadian Pacific railway. The business in the western section of New Brunswick is entirely under the control of the Canadian Pacific railway, which has a monopoly of the whole of the western traffic in New Brunswick. The interests of the public in that section of the Dominion, as well as on the northern and eastern shores of New Brunswick, and in the province of Nova Scotia, should be guarded in this respect. If the revenues have increased during the past year, they might have increased in a greater ratio had that improvident contract not been entered into.

At six o'clock, House resumed and then took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock and again went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EMMERSON: At six o'clock I was pointing out some matters in connection with opportunities for saving on the Intercolonial which had not been taken advantage of by the department. I wish to congratulate my hon. friend on his statement, that he has been able to add to the vote for wages which I presume means increasing the pay of the employees of the road to the extent of about $350,000 last year.

Mr. CROTHERS: There is another increase on the 1st of April.

Mr. EMMERSON: As the railway is in a position to give these men adequate wages, my hon. friend, as minister, is justified in sharing with the men the success of the road. The employees of the Intercolonial are as of high a grade and standard as the employees of any road in America and are worthy of the fullest consideration.

I would call the attention of my hon. friend to a condition that has prevailed for a long time on the Intercolonial. Trainmen, machinists, carmen and all those who are associated directly with brotherhoods are in a position to agitate and to bring their requirements and grievances to the notice of the minister. There is a class of employees, however, who are not thus organized and whose conditions are not brought prominently to the notice of the minister, nor indeed always to the notice of the managing board. I refer particularly to police officers, baggagemen, and employees around the stations, who have been overlooked in the past. Their condition is worthy of the consideration of the minister, as some of them do not get even a living wage.

Anyone travelling over the Intercolonial during the past year must have been struck with the deterioration in the character of the cars, for instance on the Ocean Limited, which have been very shabby. The road bed also has not been kept up. I am not mentioning this as a complaint against my hon. friend or the department; I am speaking of it as a fact. When the managing board was created, there was impressed upon them the absolute necessity of cutting everything down as fine as possible. The managing board in that regard have faithfully observed their instructions, but, in my judgment, to the detriment of the roadbed and the train service. The dining car service in the opinion of the large majority of the travelling public, including people from the United States is steadily deteriorating.

The Ocean Limited was inaugurated as a through limited train and was not to be considered in any sense as an accommodation train. When it was started originally, the stops between Montreal and Halifax were less than twenty, being arranged on the principle that the train was to stop at certain divisional points, at centres, and at junction points. That rule was observed strictly for a few years, but when the road came under the management of the so-called management board, there was a laxity. I think it is a shame and a disgrace that the Ocean Limited should be put to the use to which it is put in connection with the transportation of private cars, not only the official cars of the managers, but other cars. I have travelled on the Ocean Limited when two private cars of the managing board have been attached to the train, and many passengers have complained owing to delays on this account. A rule is in force which has not been cancelled, as I have been given to understand, to the effect that no private or official car shall be carried on that train, but the managing board official cars, as well as the official cars of other railways are hauled over the line on that train. This is said to be an exchange for courtesies but the same courtesies are not extended to the Intercolonial railway. If the minister wants to take his car over any other road in Canada he is limited as to trains, and while the car of the President of the Pennsylvania railway or the New York Central, on any of these other railways, is transported over the Intercolonial railway on any train, the like courtesy is not shown the Intercolonial. That rule should be enforced on the Intercolonial railway because these cars, coming as they do at unexpected times, cannot be attached to any fast train without interfering with the running. Complaints are made by the travelling public of delay thus caused and the prestige of the railway is lowered.

There is a feeling in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia that the managing board owns the Intercolonial railway and that it is run for their special benefit. And I think that what largely gave rise to this opinion is, perhaps, the treatment of individual members of the public by the board. These are not idle rumours, they are based on the judgment of business men throughout the provinces who make these complaints seriously and perhaps with too great reason. Speaking for myself, I have no complaint at all with respect to the board, individually or collectively; but I am giving utterance to expressions that are very widespread among men of prominence; not men in any way associated with politics but men connected with the business interests of the country.

My right hon friend made some reference to giving information with respect to the terminals, which I judge from the plans on the table, are in contemplation. I know nothing whatever of the changes proposed. I can only say, from my study of the situation in connection with the Halifax terminals, that there surely must be great advantages to justify an expenditure of $30,000,000. We have some $90,000,000 invested in the Intercolonial from its very inception to the present time. If it is proposed now to expend $30,000,000 on the Halifax terminals, I contend that the end will not justify the means. If the railway, as indicated by the map, is to be taken away in by the Northwest Arm and new terminals and stations created down at Point Pleasant, the work will be done at an expenditure that will be out of all proportions to the advantages to be afforded by the terminals. I should have thought there would be deeper water and better facilities afforded at the mouth of Bedford basin. However, all the proposals, no doubt, are based upon reports of engineers who have inquired into the subject, and my judgment may ultimately be guided by these reports. But it seems to me that, under present conditions, my hon. friend would be better advised if he would devote that money to double-tracking the railway between St. John and Halifax, or even portions of that road. I believe that would be more in the interest of the railway and more in the interest of the city of Halifax. The facilities at Halifax are very fair under present conditions. They have met so far, the requirements, and I think they could be made to meet the needs by a much smaller expenditure. I do not know whether it is proposed to discontinue running into Halifax by way of Richmond and to discontinue the new roundhouse and other works at that end of the city. In connection with the proposed works at Halifax, I can understand that a very large expense would be incurred for rights of way. That is a developed section of the city of Halifax, and properties are held at a very high figure there. However, I am not speaking in any carping spirit, and if the minister can justify the proposal it will have my hearty approval. I believe in the Intercolonial railway furnishing the best possible facilities, not only for the trade around the shores of Nova Scotia, but also for the export trade which must seek an outlet through the port of Halifax and as well through other eastern ports.

The double-tracking of the Intercolonial railway is, in my judgment, of insistent importance. I am sure my hon. friend has realized that the small amount of double-tracking that has been done between Moncton and Halifax has been of inestimable advantage in the operation of the road, tending as it does, to lessen in a great degree the cost of operation; and the greater extent to which that double-tracking can be carried on, the more advantageous it will be to the railway, as well from the standpoint of earning power as of lessened operating expenses. Many accidents have occurred by reason of the penny wise and pound foolish policy of closing certain operating stations, and I know that the discontinuance of the services of an operator at Evans' siding, between Dorchester and Sackville in Westmorland county, has resulted in at least two or three accidents. More than that, I venture to say that it has cost the railway in detention wage more in one year than would pay the salary of three operators at that point. The detention wage resulting from the delay of trains at Dorchester and Sackville, are much higher than the ordinary wages of the ordinary train crews. The detention wage expended on the Intercolonial is a very large item, and any step which could be taken to avoid it would be of great advantage to the railway's financial standing. In this connection I think the terrible accident that occurred at Nash's creek might have been avoided had the railway authorities continued to incur the expense of an operator at one of the stations near Jacquet river. The amount of that operator's salary was saved to the railway company, but damage to the extent of thousands of dollars resulted and, worse than that, lives were lost. Another accident near Dorchester, and sull another at Sackville, were the result of what I conceive to be unwise economy in connection with the discontinuance of the services of operators at certain stations, which is sometimes criminal.

I was opposed, in the first instance, to the appointment of a board of management—not on account of the personnel, because I declared against the principle before I heard the names of any of the gentlemen who would be connected with that board—but I was opposed to it in principle, for I felt it would be better to have one manager and place upon him the entire responsibility. It may be said that the judgment of one man is not so good as the judgment of three or four or five men. I dispute it. Where you have a board of four or five men, there are divisions of opinion and delays, and just as many errors will occur in the one case as in the other. But the worst feature is the divided responsibility, and consequent temptation on the part of the individual members of the board to shirk responsibility. I was opposed to the change when it was first brought to the attention of Parliament, and I so expressed myself. Later events have confirmed my judgment, and I think that a fatal mistake was made in connection with the operation of the Intercolonial railway in that regard. It may be said that my own friends did that, but it seems to me that has nothing to do with the case. The former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) was convinced that it was the proper course, and he took it, although I could not agree with him. On that occasion, I gave expression to my views; I repeat them now, and with greater emphasis, because I think the circumstances and conditions during the intervening period have justified the opinion which I then formed, and I am sure that many difficulties that have arisen and are arising to-day have been caused by this condition.

I will admit that I have not emulated my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) as far as brevity is concerned; in fact, I sometimes think he is somewhat curt in his expressions in Parliament. I can testify to his courtesy out of Parliament and in connection with his department, and, if he appears to be curt in his statements made from his seat in the House, I am sure he does not intend them to be so, and that he desires to give us the fullest possible information, although he evidently believes in the motto, multum in parvo. I hope that before his estimates are put through, he will from time to time favour us with some additional explanations with respect to his department and the expenditures which he proposes to make during the current year.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): As I have frequently stated in the House during previous years I see no reason why any special congratulations should be extended to the minister because he has a surplus of $900,000, as that large amount simply indicates that the minister is taking from the people along this great transportation route that extra amount of money in freight charges. We have often heard comparisons made with other railways in regard to freight tariffs, but, living as I do in one of the most active business centres touched by the Intercolonial, I am in a position to say that the local freight charges are very onerous indeed, and if the minister would devote his attention to reducing these charges upon people who do business in that part of the country, I am quite sure the country as a whole would be as well satisfied as if they had this nominal surplus from year to year. This remark which I now make in regard to the surplus is not a new one, I made it when the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Graham) was Minister of Railways, and I do not know what virtue there can be in government ownership if under the method under which the Intercolonial is run we have so much—

Mr. COCHRANE: Is it not a misnomer to call it a surplus at all?

Mr. MACDONALD: It simply means that by the method of book-keeping it is indicated that there is much more money than was necessary to carry on the railway from a revenue basis. I am quite well aware that there are capital charges which, if taken into consideration, might do away with the surplus, so that the minister would be right, but still there has always been a theory that when a minister could show a surplus on the Intercolonial he was accompliishing some great feat. It is, of course, the balance of accounts between revenue and expenditure in that particular year, and that is all there is to it, and if in operating a public utility the public are not to have the advantage of cheap rates and cheap accommodation when conditions warrant it, I do not know what advantage those who advocate public ownership can see in it. The complaint in regard to local rates is very general and has a substantial basis and to it there is no real answer. I trust the minister will endeavour, by the reduction of local rates, to gratify the desires of the people along the road.

I am sorry the estimates do not disclose any intention on the part of the minister to deal with the question of the construction of any branch lines, other than that which runs through the constituency of the right hon. the Prime Minister. The minister has entirely forgotten the Guysborough road. Although these two propositions run side by side, although the late Government provided for the construction of both of them in the estimates of 1911 and the contracts for both were let at the same time, the Minister of Railways has accepted one of these propositions but discarded the other. I hope the minister will be able to assure us at some early date during the discussion of these railway estimates that he is prepared to give the accommodation which the people of that part of our province desire and so much need. If the minister is not prepared to give to the districts in the maritime prrovinces, which have no railway communication the connection they desire, he should allow the Transcontinental system to go into the province, so that we might be connected with the transportation system of the whole country and have that competition which the different systems will afford. People could then go to any one of these Transcontinental railways and, if they were able to make out a case which would indicate that their proposition was a good one and that a railway should be constructed, secure that railway. Hon. gentlemen living in other parts of the Dominion, having the advantage of the three great transcontinental systems in their territory, know that where accommodation is desired, if it is not obtainable from one of these railway companies, overtures can be made to another of them or to some other railway company operating in the vicinity. But it is not so in our province and we are told that the luxury and advantage and glory of having a Government-owned railway is so great that we ought to be content with it; an argument which to my mind has no weight. We are tied up so that where accommodation is necessary and ought to be had it is impossible to get it unless we get it from the Government. Hence it is, that if the minister cannot see his way clear to build this line of railway which has been so often referred to in this House, he should give to the transcontinental systems running rights over the Intercolonial railway, so that we would be able to get connections with other railways.

Let me call attention to the importance of his taking over, anticipatory of any other action he may take in regard to general branch lines, the railway from New Glasgow to Thorburn, a railway, as the minister knows, which can be taken over without costing the country a cent. This would give to a very thriving and important mining community the advantage of passenger and freight accommodation which they do not now enjoy. As a matter of fact, the line of rails, six miles in length, now comes into the town and those rails are used for no other purpose than the haulage of coal by the company operating the mines. I do not want to discuss the branch line proposition. generally it is bristling with difficulties and there are problems to be considered in connection with it. The merits of this proposition were passed on by my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Graham) when he was Minister of Railways. An agreement was then arrived at with the company owning the mines and the railway, in regard to the operation, and the minister could now take up the problem without fear as to the result of the operation of the line, because it is in the centre of the most prosperous industrial community in eastern Nova Scotia. The possibilities of the great development of coal and other industries along the line are so great that they are hardly to be classed as possibilities but as certainties. The minister has told us that he proposes to give us along the line of railway more accommodation in the matter of motive power. That is something that has been long desired. The state of the Intercolonial railway for some months past has been really a disgrace. Anyone who has had occasion to use it to any extent in the last year knows that it has been a continued record of engines breaking down and trains not making time and the impossibility of making connections. Anyone who has gone from here to St. John over the Canadian Pacific railway and has arrived there sharply on time, and has had occasion to use the Intercolonial from St. John has found that within an hour or half an hour of their leaving St. John, although the engine had just come out of the shop, it would not make steam and the train lost time. I do not know who is responsible for this, I do not blame the minister altogether, but that has been the condition during the last year and I am glad to know that he will try to remedy it. He cannot remedy it any too soon. I do not know to whom the blame should be assigned for failing to provide for this contingency. The House has always shown a disposition to comply with the requirements of the Intercolonial, and there seems to be something wrong with the managerial part of the road that has to do with motive power.

Another grievance in connection with motive power is the supply of cars and particularly of coal cars. Time and again within the last two years, the mines in Nova Scotia have been compelled to stop work for two or three days at a time on account of the impossibility of getting cars. This is a serious proposition. The operation of a coal mine requires a great deal of care; there are difficulties connected with it which do not exist in the cases of ordinary manufacturing enterprises. I know that during the past year the old six-ton cars have been done away with and have been replaced by fifty-ton cars. I do not think the minister has provided enough of those cars, having in view the great increase of coal production in Nova Scotia. It must be remembered that we have the only coal that is to be found in eastern Canada, and the demands for it are becoming greater and the necessity for its transportation more urgent every year, particularly in the autumn months. One thing I would like the minister to remember is that by providing fifty-ton cars he is not solving the problem of transportation in the maritime provinces. A certain number of the smaller cars will always remain an essential feature of transportation in that part of the country. If my hon. friend does away with the small cars altogether, he will greatly hamper the small manufacturer and the householder, who in the autumn and winter months desire so much coal and no more. That difficulty was found to arise during the last autumn, and there is no reason why a stated number of cars of the smaller capacity should not be retained and utilized in that particular part of the country. The minister must remember that many of these large cars have been used at Riviere du Loup, Lévis and other places on the most distant portion of the Intercolonial, in connection with the distribution of coal during the summer months. My hon. friend should remember that the cars that are used in the transportation of coal in Quebec should not be taken into consideration in regard to the demands of the coal trade in Nova Scotia. I trust my hon. friend will not forget that. He has not by any means provided the number of cars that are necessary for the coal in eastern Nova Scotia, and I hope he will provide for additions in that respect.

I should like to call the minister's attention to the desirability of utilizing in a more practical way as part of the operating system of the Intercolonial railway, the short line of railway from New Glasgow to Oxford in the county of Cumberland. This line was built in 1887 and 1890, after considerable discussion in this House, at the instance of Sir Charles Tupper when he was Minister of Railways, and upon the theory that it was to form a short line in connection with the industrial portion of the Intercolonial in eastern Nova Scotia. That was the avowed object for which Parliament granted the money, but notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the fact that over this piece of road there are lower grades, and less transportation difficulties, and that it is altogether in a more satisfactory condition for operation, than the main line between Oxford Junction and Truro, this short line of railway has never been taken advantage of. The ministers who have had charge of the Intercolonial have allowed the freight to be hauled up the grade on the Folleigh line, when the addition of a small piece of road or by dispensing with one particular grade approaching the short line but not on it, all the traffic could be hauled over the short line. The same remark applies to the traffic which comes from the West to my county and to the county of Cape Breton which are the greatest industrial counties of the province. All the freight that comes to these counties, instead of being hauled over the short line, which would save something like twenty miles, is taken to Truro, up and down over the grades on that route.

Another problem is in regard to the grades on the eastern extension portion of the Intercolonial, which are very great. I understand the minister has in contemplation the removing of those difficulties, but I would like to impress upon him in the strongest possible way the necessity of utilizing the short line of railway for the purpose of getting better transportation of the products that go to and from eastern Nova Scotia. We have had discussions in regard to duplicating the main line to Halifax, but to-day the freight producing portion of the Intercolonial railway is not at the city of Halifax, unless you take into consideration the freight that goes there in the winter months, which is largely passenger traffic on account of the fact that the steamers stop there. I venture to say that the returns before the minister would show that the real freight producing portion of the Intercolonial railway is that line which runs through the county of Pictou and on to Cape Breton, where the great steel and coal and other industries are. Therefore, when he proposes to double track on the main line to Halifax, he is leaving the real freight producing part of the railway neglected. If the minister would proceed to utilize the short line of railway by making a shorter crossing of the harbour in the county of Pictou, and by connecting it with the eastern extension line, he would be rid of the necessity of duplicating the main line and would deal with the problem in a more satisfactory way. I hope the minister will deal with that eastern extension proposition and I trust he will seriously take up the question of utilizing the short line of railway. We have had desultory discussions of one or two matters connected with the Intercolonial this session. The question of the operation of the Intercolonial railway, and matters pertaining thereto, are of vital interest to the people of that portion of the country. Complaints have been made as to the extent to which these questions are discussed by hon. members from that part of the country, but I am quite sure that if hon. gentlemen who come from other parts of Canada realized the problems affecting transportation in the eastern provinces, they would be more sympathetic, and would have no fault to find with hon. members from that part of Canada dealing with them in the way they do. It is impossible to deal with these problems fully in the short time that has been given to us this session, on account of the important question which has been discussed more or less continuously.

There is another matter in connection with which I moved for papers, and which is, I think, of sufficient importance to be dealt with. In the town of Stellarton in my constituency, the railway runs across one of the main streets which is lined with houses occupied by miners, and there is no protection whatever at the crossing on what is called River street. There are gates, and there is a gatekeeper at another crossing on the main street, but on this street which leads from the main street down to the river, which is populated every bit of the way, and over which dozens of trains pass in the day, there is no protection. Last August a little child, the son of a very worthy man, Mr. Thomas Hoare, who had been playing with the children of a neighbouring family, came running home to his supper in the evening The train, coming on the double track at that point in New Glasgow, could not be seen owing to the adjoining houses which offer an obstruction, and the life was crushed out of the poor little fellow. There was no guard. no man on the crossing, no protection of any kind. Under the law in regard to company roads in other parts of Canada, the accident would never have occurred because the company would have been bound, by the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners, to have had the crossing protected. But in any event, the father would be entitled to some compensation. I know the difficulties which attend a proceeding in the Exchequer Court against the Crown and the various pleas which can be put forward by the Crown in regard to negligence. The gross negligence of the Crown in this particular case was that they had no protection of that crowded street. There are two things in this connection that I want the minister to look into sympathetically. First, I think it is absolutely essential that he should place gates at that point with a keeper in charge and, in the next place, having regard to the fact that, if a company were operating the road some compensation would have to be given in this case as a matter of law and as a matter of right, he should give compensation to the father of this child.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will be glad to go into both of those matters.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is just one other matter that I would like to mention. I called the minister's attention early in the session to the desirability of his bringing the freights on what is known as the Sunnybrae branch of the Intercolonial railway down to the same rates as those which exist on the main line. I must remind the minister that the Sunnybrae road is a part of this Guysborough railway which he has not yet built and I think the least he could do would be to see that the people who have to use that portion of the line are given the same rates as they would pay if they were on the main line. They feel that this theory about government ownership has not much virtue in it if the Government does not, with a surplus of $900,000, give them any consideration whatever but charges them arbitrary freights in the same way as company roads are sometimes accused of doing.

Mr. COCHRANE: The only objection I have to the hon. gentleman's statement is that, already we are making the people on other parts of the road pay for the loss on this Sunnybrae road, because it takes a hundred per cent of the receipts we get from that branch to pay the cost of running the road.

Mr. MACDONALD: If my hon. friend takes the line of railway which is known as the Oxford and New Glasgow division, he will find that he makes more money out of that division than out of any other division of the road. My hon. friend should not localize this question to such a small degree. I hope my hon. friend is not going to take every mile or portion of the road and deal with it on that basis; that would be a parsimony of which he would not surely be guilty. I would ask him to take a broader view of it. That whole district produces a very great portion of the surplus of the road. As long as he has not built that Guysborough railway, he should treat the people decently who have to use that accommodation that he has already provided until he does complete the road. I hope the minister will give the question his consideration and I again press upon him the desirability of proceeding with the line of railway between Thornburn and New Glasgow because this is a railway which will serve a large number of people.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up very much time this evening, but I think I should not allow this opportunity to pass without referring to the situation in regard to the proposed branch line into my constituency. I understand that the Government are now engaged in preparing the supplementary estimates and my chief reason for bringing this matter up is that it may not be forgotten when the supplementary estimates are brought down. It will be a good opportunity for the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) to implement his pre-election promise in regard to this branch line. On former occasions I have made inquiries about this matter and I have been told by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) that it was under consideration. That gives me some hope that the intention is at some time to bring this consideration to an issue and deal with the question. It would be satisfactory to the people in my riding if some definite answer were given in regard to the matter. The replies I have received so far have not been very definite or satisfactory. For example, at the last session of the House, I asked the following question:

Mr. Sinclair: Will provision be made in the supplementary estimates for a branch line from Sunnybrae to Guysborough?

The answer given to me by the Minister of Railways and Canals on March 20, 1912, was this:

Mr. Cochrane: There is provision made for a survey. I have told the hon. gentleman twice that we intend to investigate this matter during the coming summer.

As far as I can learn, there was no investigation during last summer. The summer passed away and winter came and the money that was said to be provided for the survey evidently was not expended in making the proposed investigation. Then, at the opening of the present session, I put the following question on the Order-Paper:

Mr. Sinclair:

1. Referring to the following question and answer, as reported on page 5729 of 'Hansard,' on March 20, 1912, namely:

Mr. Sinclair:

Will provision be made in the supplementary estimates for a branch line from Sunnybrae to Guysborough?

Mr. Cochrane:

There is provision made for a survey. I have told the hon. member twice that we intend to investigate this matter during the coming summer.

2. If no survey of this proposed branch was made during the past season, why was it not made?

Mr. Cochrane: The Minister of Railways and Canals investigated this matter of the branch line from Sunnybrae to Guysborough, and after discussing it fully with the engineers it was ascertained that the preliminary surveys were sufficiently complete to determine the feasibility of the line and that no further surveys would be required until it was decided by the Government that the line should be constructed. This matter is still under consideration.

During the subsequent discussion, on the resolution of my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. Mackenzie), this matter was referred to by the Prime Minister and, in giving an explanation as to why nothing has been done, he used the following language:

As the Minister of Railways has pointed out, there were not in addition to the other difficulties, very great divergence of opinion, as to the best route that could be selected, particularly in regard to the extension into the county of Guysborough. The Minister of Railways did not feel himself possessed of the information necessary to enable him to come to a conclusion with regard to these matters, and they stood over.

You will see that these two reasons are inconsistent. The Minister of Railways says that he has made the investigation, that he has consulted with his engineers and that he is of the opinion that no survey is required in order to reach a decision. The Prime Minister tells us that there is a difference of opinion as to the route into the county of Guysborough, and that the minister has not been able to overtake the matter owing to pressure of other business. These reasons have not been regarded as very satisfactory. A little later on, in a discussion which took place in this House, in which this matter was pressed on the attention of the Government, the discussion ended by the Government putting up the member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) to move an amendment to the resolution of my hon. fried from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) which required that some action should be taken in regard to the proposed construction of branch lines in the county of Victoria and Guysborough. The amendment is a follows:

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The House desires to record its appreciation of the action of the Government in extending the Intercolonial railway in portions of the province of Nova Scotia which have hitherto been without railway facilities and its further appreciation of the comprehensive scheme of development at present under way to develop the port of Halifax as one of the national ports of Canada.

You will notice that we in Guysborough are asked by the hon. member for Cumberland to express our appreciation that the present Administration had undertaken to extend the Intercolonial railway into those portions of Nova Scotia where no railway existed before, and therefore his amendment can have reference only to the railway in the county of my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden), which was provided for by the old Administration. Therefore, I do not think that the present Administration can claim very much credit for that branch line. So far as the county of Guysborough is concerned, we are asked to express our gratitude that a large sum of money is to be expended in the development of the port of Halifax. I shall find it difficult to satisfy the people, whom I represent, by telling them that they are to get nothing at all in the way of railway development which has been promised for so many years, but that they are to be thankful for a large amount which will be spent in the constituency of my right hon. friend. I submit that this proposal only adds to our present feelings of injustice. I wish to impress upon the Minister of Railways the importance of doing something in regard to this very urgent question. Now that the supplementary estimates are being made up for the coming year, I trust that something will be done; otherwise it will be necessary for us to enter into a more lengthy discussion at some subsequent sitting of the House in order to point out the importance of railway development in that part of Nova Scotia.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton): Allow me to congratulate the hon. minister upon being able to come down to the House with such a splendid surplus as something over a million dollars for the year which I understand closed to-day. The Intercolonial has seen less prosperous days. We must, however, give credit to the Intercolonial for having done good work for Canada east and west and particularly for the maritime provinces. Coming from that section of the country which has given the minister a surplus, I have a right to point out what we are entitled to receive in return. Before the railway found its way into the island of Cape Breton and down to the great centres of industry in the eastern part of the island, its surpluses were few and far between. In the last few years, as the industries in the eastern and southern parts of Cape Breton have increased, so have the surpluses of the Intercolonial. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) pointed out that we do not have the kind of locomotives on the eastern part of the Intercolonial that we should have. I think during this session I pointed out to the minister that, throughout the months of September, October, November and December, the service was very poor as the trains were not running on time. On the Cape Breton end of the Intercolonial, trains were getting in four or five hours late, which for the comparatively short distance between Point Tupper and North Sydney is far too much, particularly when we find it is almost invariably due to a breakdown in the locomotive. I am glad, however, to hear the minister state to-day that he is building new locomotives. I trust he will put some of them on the Cape Breton end and that better time will be made, so that the great streams of traffic through different points of Cape Breton will receive the treatment which their importance deserves.

I should like to draw the attention of the minister to one other point. The fishing industry is a most important one in that Island. During the months of October and November, we ship large quantities of fish to Boston and other parts of the United States. Last year I had occasion to write to the minister at Ottawa to complain that we could not get cars to carry away this fish. The officials answered that fish that was not perfectly dry spoiled the car. I for one do not accept that as a good reason why the sort of car that is necessary to carry the half-dried fish cannot be supplied—that forsooth it might be spoiled for some other purpose. I do not see how it could be spoiled. It would, of course, have a strong odour of the fish and of this pickle, but is it too much to expect that half a dozen cars or so would be supplied, if necessary, for this particular business? A rough car is all that is necessary, not an expensive car; and even if three or four of them were kept conveying fish from the eastern ports of the province to centres where that fish could be sold, I do not think it would be asking too much. The result of it all was that the parties in Boston who were getting their fish supply had to go to the great trouble of sending schooners, late in the season. I am not so much concerned about the difficulties that the people of Boston have in getting the fish as I am about the people of my own constituency being able to sell their fish profitably and at the proper time. I had a letter from the deputy minister telling me he was going to deal with this matter, but I have heard nothing further from him. This year when we look for cars for the purpose of carrying fish, I hope we shall not be met with the same difficulty as last year.

Reverting for a moment to the surplus and the earnings of the road, I may say I had not made any inquiry about any particular source of income during the past year, but two years ago I made inquiry as to what money the Intercolonial railway received from two companies in the county of Cape Breton. I found on that occasion that the Dominion Steel and Coal Company paid to the Intercolonial railway in freight $750,000, and that the Nova Scotia Coal and Steel Company paid in freight $250.-000. These are two customers of the Intercolonial in the county of Cape Breton. Together with that in the county of Cape Breton is the enormous revenue of the Intercolonial railway from the Newfoundland traffic. I am sure that if the minister will look into the matter, he will find that the outgoing and incoming traffic in connection with Newfoundland is a very big item towards the surplus of the road. That being the case, I am encouraged to join my hon. friends from Pictou and Guysborough in asking the minister to gird his loins, to take courage and to extend the Intercolonial railway further east and in different sections of the East. I fear I weary the minister by repeatedy talking about this matter, but we are encouraged by knowing that there was once a poor woman who by her persistency convinced an unrighteous judge. I am willing to be the poor woman for that occasion. That is not saying that the Minister of Railways is necessarily unrighteous. I believe he will prove a righteous man, and, rather than be bored and bothered will do justice to the part of the country from which I come, and give us the treatment we deserve. There is an old story about a woman who was seven years without a pot and continually borrowing from her neighbours; at the end of that time she got a new pot of her own, and then she said she would have nothing to do with the other women—she would neither borrow nor lend. There was a time when several of us needed to borrow pots in this matter of building railways. One of these was the Prime Minister himself. Now that he has got his railway in Halifax county built or nearly so, I hope he will not be like the woman with the new pot and say he will have nothing to do with the rest of us. We helped him to get his road in the county of Halifax and I hope that when he gets his road built, he will think of his friends in adversity and will come to our assistance and help the Minister of Railways to extend the road in the island of Cape Breton. There is no use of beating about the bush as to what we want in the county of Cape Breton. There are only a few miles, comparatively speaking, wanted, and then the needs of the people of the island of Cape Breton will be supplied. For my part I can assure the Minister of Railways that if the people of Victoria and Cape Breton continue to send me here, I will continue to agitate until the great necessities of the people there have been satisfied. Our case in this matter is a strong one. In the first place, as I have frequently pointed out to the minister, and as the minister, who has gone through the island of Cape Breton knows, it is impossible to supply the needs of that island with one railway. It is cut into by a great sea in some places twenty or twenty-five miles wide. The Intercolonial is in the best place in what it could be for a single railway, but we must have a road on the south. We must build from St. Peters to Louisbourg to serve that section of the island; then we must have the McKenzie and Mann road extended to the north of Inverness. We need also to build the Orangedale and St. Rose line, and then build the Estmere road to Baddeck and extended it to Ste. Ann's and along to the northern part of Victoria county. Complete these and you have the lines for island of Cape Breton, that will next present necessity. Until such time as this is done, the Government is simply playing with the situation in not giving to the people of that section of the country the accommodation which they require. Under these circumstances, it is needless for the right hon. Prime Minister or anybody else to go down to that part of the country and say: We have not got the money. You have the money and you are showing a disposition to spend it in other ways which, to my mind, are not based upon needs as urgent as the necessities of the people of Cape Breton. I have pointed out the great necessity for these roads, and I have endeavoured to show that the Government is in a position to build them. I would like to point out also that roads are being built to-day in Nova Scotia which are not so greatly needed as are railways in those sections of my constituency to which I have referred. I would again submit to the Prime Minister that the people of eastern Nova Scotia are loooking to him to carry out what they conceived to be his opinion when in opposition, as to the necessity and desirability of building these roads; now that he is in power, they look to him to implement what they regarded as his promise at that time. Without taking up any more of the time of the House, I think I have, as honestly and as clearly as I can, put this case before the Prime Minister and the Government in such a way as to cause them to realize that the honest needs of the people of Cape Breton should be promptly attended to. I have said that the business is there; I will go further and say that, whether the business is there or not, we have contributed enough money towards the development of other parts of Canada to entitle us to the building of these roads and to the benefits of the accommodation which they would supply. We are one of the oldest settlements of this Dominion. From the very moment that Canada became a dominion we began contributing to her development and her progress. We contributed our portion of the amount that was paid for the purchase of the Northwest Territories; we have paid, with every other province in Canada, our contribution towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway; we have contributed our share to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the maintaining of our canals, and all other works of a public character in this country. I appeal to the premier as a Nova Scotian, who knows the conditions of which I speak, to remove the stigma which is upon the province of Cape Breton in respect of its lack of railway accommodation, and the inconvenience resulting from the fact that we are more or less ostracized from the outside and active world. That stigma should no longer attach to the people of Nova Scotia, and every part of it, from side to side and from end to end, should have the same accommodation and privileges as are enjoyed by the other provinces of Canada. I trust I am fully and clearly understoood as making these statements not in a carping or faultfinding manner. The Prime Minister knows that while I was supporting the late Government I was for many years putting forward strenuous arguments in support of this contention. The necessity is growing stronger in my mind, and in the minds of the people of Cape Breton, and I hope they will not be obliged to wait very much longer for the remedy to which my constituents are so clearly entitled.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond, N.S.): I am somewhat encouraged by the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways to-night that a considerable sum of money is to be spent for the purpose of increasing the motive power of the Intercolonial railway. I should judge that the Intercolonial railway during the last six months has been thoroughly in need of some such increased motive power. During the last four or five months I have had occasion to travel over the railway some seven or eight times between Truro and Montreal, and the trains have invariably been from three to nine hours late in making that journey. I was informed that the delay was due to the fact that the engines are not of sufficient capacity to haul the trains. The consequence of these delays has, to my certain knowledge, been that a considerable portion of the traffic that should ordinarily go over the Intercolonial has been diverted to the Canadian Pacific railway. This is a matter of very serious complaint on the part of the people of Nova Scotia, and, in fact, on the part of all who have occasion to travel over that railway between Montreal and Truro. Last year there was a very serious fire at Point Tupper and much property of the Intercolonial railway was destroyed. The officials of the Intercolonial railway made a visit to that point a short time afterwards, and they recommended certain changes, which they were pleased to call improvements, in the arrangements of the facilities at that point. The railway station which, before the fire, was situated a very short distance from the wharf where the ss. Scotia lands on the Point Tupper side, has been located nearly half a mile further along the line of the Intercolonial railway, the consequence being that a very serious inconvenience will be occasioned to the people who have freight to be transhipped from the station at Point Tupper. The railway station is now situated nearly half a mile from the terminus at Point Tupper, and the consequence will, as I have said, be a very great inconvenience to all people having to transport freight from the freight house to the new station from which the trains take their departure. To Point Tupper a number of steamers carry freight from day to day. All the passengers coming from Boston on the steamer Halifax are landed at Port Hawkesbury, and they with their baggage are transferred to the Intercolonial railway at Point Tupper by boat. All freight and baggage is taken off the steamer at Point Tupper and put into the freight shed near the wharf, and when it becomes necessary to tranship that freight by the Intercolonial railway it will be necessary for them to secure the services of a carter to convey that freight from the shed to the station. I do think, from the point of view of a person who is not by any means an expert in these matters, that the convenience of the public would be very much better served if the freight shed were built near the railway station so that all steamers transporting freight from Mulgrave, Arichat, Hawkesbury and other points on the strait of Canso which furnish freight for the Intercolonial railway, could land at that wharf and conveniently tranship it to the cars on the Intercolonial railway.

There is another point upon which I wish to dwell, and that is that the dock used by the old ferry steamer Mulgrave, when the Scotia is laid up for repairs, was totally destroyed by fire, and instead of rebuilding that dock for the purpose of receiving freight cars carried across the strait on barges as heretofore the whole plant has been cleared away and the machinery for lifting the apron transferred from Point Tupper to New Glasgow, the consequence being that if an accident should happen to the Scotia, or if the Scotia should be laid up for any time, it would be absolutely impossible to tranship a single car of freight across the strait of Canso, no matter how pressing might the need be for transporting that freight. I understand that it is the intention of the hon. minister to have another steamer corresponding with the Scotia built in the near future.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is in the estimates now.

Mr. KYTE: But the minister must remember it will take a considerable time before the ship is built and in a position to take the place of the Scotia. I do not know if the contract has been let for the construction of the ship, but I fancy it will be two years before she is in commission. During that time, if any accident should happen to the Scotia, on account of the absence of the dock and apron that was formerly there, it will be impossible for the Mulgave to tranship a barge with freight cars across the straits and not one pound of freight can be transhipped across the strait. The minister should also, I think, ask for money to construct a new wharf in the neighbourhood of the new station at which freight and passengers might be landed from the different steamers frequenting the strait to the Intercolonial at Port Tupper.

With reference to the increased surplus which the minister announced has been earned by the Intercolonial during the year, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) pointed out that the minister ought not to take too much credit on account of the increased surplus which was largely derived from the increased freight rate on the Intercolonial under his administration.

There is one other source of revenue which ought to have very materially increased the surplus, that is the dining-car service. I am not aware to what branches of the service this increased surplus may be credited, but I do know that a very substantial increase has been made in the cost of the dining service to people who patronize the Intercolonial. Up to nearly a year ago meals on the Intercolonial were served table d'hote, and were furnished at a very reasonable price. Breakfast could be had for seventy-five cents, luncheon for seventy-five cents, and dinner for one dollar. Within the last year a new system has been inaugurated—the à la carte system—and the consequence is that a very considerable increase in the earnings of the Intercolonial ought to be attributed to the change. I take the menu cards of the Intercolonial which are at present in force, and I figure out what the meals we formerly got at seventy-five cents, seventy-five cents and a dollar, respectively, now cost. If a person travelling on the Intercolonial is obliged to order breakfast on the dining car at present, this is what he pays: sliced orange, ten cents; baked apple, fifteen cents; oatmeal, twenty cents; fresh fish, fifty cents; baken potatoes, ten cents. If he desires toast, white bread or hot rolls, it is ten cents more; marmalade, twenty-five cents; pot of tea, ten cents. The total cost of his breakfast would be $1.50, compared with seventy-five cents a year ago.

Mr. FRIPP: Do they eat all that?

Mr. KYTE: I do not refer to those gentlemen of leisure whose want of physical activity deteriorates their appetites. I speak largely of the needs of the working people and their families who are blessed with good digestion, and whose interests ought to be as well served by this Government as the interest of the hon. member for the city of Ottawa and others of his class.

If the traveller on the Intercolonial desires lunch, he has to pay: soup, fifteen cents; boiled cod, roast beef or corned beef, fifty cents; apple fritters, twenty-five cents; potatoes, ten cents; turnips, fifteen cents; apple-dumpling, fifteen cents; a total of one dollar and ninety cents. Should he desire to wash down his lunch with a pot of tea, it costs him ten cents, and if he wished for jelly it would cost him twenty-five cents more, bringing it up to one dollar and sixty-five cents. Should he desire fruit, and fruit is not a luxury to the people of Nova Scotia, it would cost him twenty-five cents more, and the sum total which he would contribute to the Minister of Railways for his lunch would be one dollar and ninety cents.

Should he desire to order dinner it costs him: soup, fifteen cents; fish, fifty cents; meat, roast or boiled, fifty cents; boiled potatoes, ten cents; parsnips, fifteen cents; peas, fifteen cents; plum pudding, twenty-five cents; tea or coffee, ten cents; a total of one dollar and eighty-five cents. Should he desire a little celery to aid his digestion, he would pay twenty-five cents; ice-cream and cake, twenty-five cents more; fruit, twenty-five cents; or a total cost for his dinner of two dollars and sixty cents.

Mr. EMMERSON: They would give three smelts for fifty cents.

Mr. KYTE: Three very attenuated ones. It would cost two dollars and sixty cents for dinner, as compared with one dollar, previous to June last. I desire to quote the current market prices of some of these things which appear upon the bill of fare, to give the committee some idea of the amount of profit which the Minister of Railways is making out of these transactions. The bills of fare which I have quoted are those on the Intercolonial on the 1st of November last. At that time, potatoes were thirty cents a bushel in my own town and that was the prevailing price throughout Nova Scotia. The Intercolonial retails them for ten cents per half pound, and that is a pretty generous order, so that the minister is getting twelve dollars a bushel for potatoes which he buys for thirty cents in that province. Turnips cost twenty-five cents a bushel, but the Intercolonial is selling them to the public, who patronize the road, at the rate of eighteen dollars a bushel. Fresh fish—and Nova Scotia is the place where fresh fish is in abundance—the fishermen who catch the fish, according to the prices in the monthly bulletin of fishery statistics issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, were getting in November last one and a half cent per pound for codfish and haddock. This fish is sold to the patrons of the Intercolonial at a rate which nets to the Intercolonial two dollars for what the fishermen sells for three cents.

There is complaint throughout the country of the increased cost of living, and the Minister of Labour seems to be bestowing some attention to the causes that have resulted in this increased cost to the people of Canada. I should say that the standard which has been set by the Intercolonial is not calculated to reduce the cost of living throughout the country. If it is desirable that the cost of living should be reduced it would be well for the colleague of the hon. Minister of Labour to begin by reducing the high cost of living which he is imposing on the patrons of the Intercolonial railway in connection with its dining service.

Mr. VERVILLE: Have they increased the wages of the men employed in that service, in proportion?

Mr. KYTE: I understand that the wages of the men who are concerned with the cooking and serving of the meals on the Intercolonial dining cars have not been increased, and I gather this from the circumstance that the waiters are just as anxious to get tips from the overtaxed consumer travelling on the Intercolonial as they were when the Government were only charging seventy-five cents and one dollar respectively for the meals.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the price to-day?

Mr. KYTE: For breakfast, $1.50; for lunch, $1.90; and for dinner, $2.60, as compared with seventy-five cents and one dollar which were charged under the late Government.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): How do those charges compare with the charges on other railways?

Mr. KYTE: Other railways are not owned by the Government, and hon. gentlemen opposite are fond of emphasizing the advantages of government ownership. I do not care what the charges are on other railways; but I believe that on the Intercolonial railway they are considerably in excess of the charges on the Grand Trunk railway, Canadian Pacific railway, and other railways at the present time. My hon. friend opposite is inclined to treat lightly the criticism which I am directing against the minister in respect of this matter, but unless the general public in the province of Nova Scotia patronized the Intercolonial, the hon. minister cannot hope to have the surplus which he disclosed to the House this evening.

Mr. EMMERSON: What is the character of the dining car service on the Intercolonial compared with what it was a few years ago?

Mr. KYTE: I can assure my hon. friend that it has not improved at all. That is perfectly manifest to every person who patronizes the Intercolonial railway to-day, and who patronized it a few years ago. I am not going to say it is worse.

Mr. LAW: It is worse.

Mr. KYTE: Perhaps my hon. friend from Yarmouth is correct when he says it is worse. At any rate there is no improvement in the service. The meals are not better, and the prices charged are out of proportion to the service which the general public receive. There are two classes of people who patronize this road. There are the gentlemen of leisure with large incomes, to whom I referred a moment ago. It is quite possible that that class do not object to the prices charged for meals on the Intercolonial, as they can afford to pay, but that class comprises a very small proportion of the people who patronize the railway. We must have some regard for the great body of people who are obliged to travel over that railway from time to time. It is the only road from Sydney to Halifax in the province of Nova Scotia, on which the public can travel. If they were situated as hon. gentlemen from the province of Ontario, for instance, or from the province of New Brunswick are, they could have their choice as to which railway they would patronize. The competition in these provinces is a guarantee that excessive charges will not be made, or inferior accommodation provided. But in the province of Nova Scotia, we are obliged to travel by the Intercolonial railway. To the labouring man who is earning a dollar and a half or two dollars a day, and who is obliged to travel from Sydney to Halifax, or his wife and family, the prices which are charged in the dining service of the Intercolonial railway are absolutely prohibitive, and those people are not able to get the accommodation to which they are entitled or ought to enjoy. I think that the hon. Minister of Railways or the board of management, or whoever are responsible for it, ought to be censured very severely for the change which they inaugurated in respect to this service. When the hon. minister boasts of a surplus, it should not be forgotten that a considerable portion of that surplus is being wrung out of the pockets of the people of Nova Scotia, who earn small wages, under very unpleasant and hard conditions. I do not know whether the observations I have made tonight will have the result of reducing the high cost of living which the Minister of Railways has set on the Intercolonial railway, or whether his example will be followed by other corporations and dealers in food products throughout the Dominion, but I regard it as my bounden duty to bring this matter to the attention of the public so that the people of Nova Scotia and of the maritime provinces generally, will know what it means to them when the hon. Minister of Railways boasts of a surplus of $900,000 in connection with the operation of the Intercolonial this year.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton, South): My observations will be very brief at this stage. The last time the Intercolonial railway was discussed, in connection with the question of branch lines, I brought to the notice of the Minister of Railways the fact that comparatively speaking, the division of the Intercolonial railway extending to Sydney had greater earning power than that to Halifax and St. John, and almost as much earning power as the line to Montreal, while the cost of maintenance was very much smaller. That being the case, one would suppose that the people at the Sydney terminus of the Intercolonial railway would get facilities in conformity with the needs of that growing city. When the Minister of Railways visited the city of Sydney last year, perhaps he thought that he saw all the people who were being catered to by the Intercolonial railway in that city, but I would like to point out to him that there is a large population beyond Sydney which is catered to by the Intercolonial railway, and I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. minister the fact that the facilities for handling freight at Sydney are not what they should be. Some time ago an order of the House passed for the production of papers in connection with this matter, but unfortunately for myself, those papers have not been brought down by the Department of Railways and Canals and for that reason I am not in a position to discuss as fully as I shall, when the papers are brought down, the need for greater freight facilities at Sydney. One thing which my hon. friend the minister did as the result of his trip to Sydney last summer was to increase the demurrage rates 100 per cent. The merchants of Sydney are at the present time paying 100 per cent higher demurrage rates than before the visit of the hon. Minister of Railways last summer. The Sydney Board of Trade has been in correspondence with the Railway Department for some time asking for better freight facilities. The freight sheds there are some distance from the freight station and they are too small. A greater quantity of freight comes into Sydney than many people imagine, because all the freight for the outlying districts, for the town of Glace Bay with its population of 19,000, and for the mining districts with populations of from 20,000 to 25,000 goes through the freight station at Sydney. The minister visited Sydney last year and I am sure he will agree with me when I say that the facilities for handling freight are far inferior to what they should be. I am in hopes that, perhaps when the supplementary estimates come down, something will appear for increased freight facilities in the city of Sydney.

There is one other matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and the Prime Minister. It is known that for many years the Dominion Steel Company have had some special freight arrangement with the Intercolonial railway. I do not say that the Dominion Steel corporation are entitled to anything over and above what an ordinary individual or a company in Canada is entitled to, but I do say that, having been given certain fixed schedules some years ago by the late Government, these schedules should not be changed. I do not say that they have been changed, and I hope they will not be. Any move in that direction by the minister or his deputies would be a false step and would prove in the end to be false economy. The great majority of the people in that district are dependent on the Dominion Steel and Coal Company for their living and anything which would be injurious to them would be equally injurious to the people of the county of Cape Breton. I hope that no such change, if contemplated, will take place. I hope that serious consideration will be given to the matter, and I know that if so no change will be made.

I do not think that, on the Halifax and Sydney division of the Intercolonial railway, we are being treated in the matter of passenger cars as well as other sections of the road. When one gets off the Montreal train and gets on the Sydney train there is a notable change in the style of cars. The cars on the train between Halifax and Sydney are much inferior to those which are used on the Montreal-Halifax route. I would not complain of an odd car being inferior, but I do complain, and the public complain, that every passenger car that runs between Sydney and Halifax is very much inferior to the cars making up the train between Montreal and Halifax. We are at least entitled to some of the first-class cars which are now run between Halifax and Montreal. In 1911 the Sydney division was the best paying division on the road, according to the statistics, and I believe it is to-day.

Some weeks ago an order of this House was passed for the production of certain correspondence which had passed between the department and the board of trade at Sydney. These papers have not been brought down and I would ask the minister to be kind enough to have them brought down as early as possible.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN: We have had a very long discussion, which, I think, might very profitably have been postponed until the occasion I suggested to my hon. friend from Wesmorland (Mr. Emmerson), particularly as an arrangement had been made to give certain information this afternoon which was necessary in order that a vote on account might be passed in time to enable the workmen employed on the Intercolonial railway itself to be paid. The result of the unnecessary discussion which has taken place—I say unnecessary at the present time because there would have been a full opportunity afterwards—will be to inconvenience probably a great many of the men for whom my hon. friends opposite are so exceedingly solicitous. However, although I made the suggestion to the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) that an arrangement has been made to give certain information on stated items he seemed determined to proceed with a discussion which might very well have been deferred. The result will be that which I have indicated. I had made an arrangement with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, particularly with my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), that certain information should be given in regard to the item of $2,500,000, which is to be found in the estimates at page 52, for the purpose of providing terminals at Halifax. Everyone, who has been at all familiar with the development of business at Halifax during the past four or five years, is aware that the business of the port in recent years has very much outrun the terminal accommodation. I have had, and I have no doubt that the right hon. leader of the Opposition and my colleague from Halifax have had, a great many representations on the point, both oral and otherwise, from the Board of Trade of Halifax during the past six years. One of these memorials, I recollect, brought to my attention the fact that during the winter season of 1910-11, the freight business of Halifax was one hundred per cent larger than in the previous year, and, the development has gone on, I think, in equal measure since. There have been as many as six, or seven, or eight steamships at one time waiting in the harbour to secure berths. The question of development attracted the attention of the late Government and a commencement was made, I think, about three years ago by the letting of a contract for the construction of pier No. 2, which is in the vicinity of what is known as the deepwater terminus. That pier is still under construction and has not yet been completed. When the present Government came into power the representations that had been made for a long time previously continued to be made and, during the spring of 1912, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), who had had his attention very forcibly attracted to the necessity for the development of the terminus at Halifax on a comprehensive scale, such as would meet the necessities for many years in the future, instructed certain engineers to make a thorough survey, and to report to him, as to the best method by which the necessary terminal development might be secured. Amongst other engineers who examined this question and who reported upon it was Mr. Gutelius, formerly of the Canadian Pacific railway, and Mr. Cowie, the chief engineer of the Montreal Harbour Commission who has had charge of the development of the port of Montreal for some years. Both these gentlemen have great experience in the solving of such problems and together with a large staff of engineers unde-them, they have given special and particular attention to the needs of the harbour of Halifax and have arrived at certain conclusions with regard thereto. These conclusions were in some measure announced to the citizens of Halifax and the country by my colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals last autumn. As this item is submitted to Parliament for the purpose of carrying out proposals of a somewhat definite character, it is only proper at the present time that a fuller statement should be made. The information, with which I think the committee should be seized, has been put in a condensed but I think in a very clear and lucid form in the shape of a report which embodies the views of the engineers who have had this matter in charge. Early this afternoon I handed to my hon. friend and colleague from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) and to my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition a copy of this memorandum in order that they might have necessary information upon this subject. Perhaps it would be desirable that I should read this statement without further delay, as it embodies the essential part of the information which it will be necessary for the committee to have in order to consider this vote:

$2,500,000 for the new Halifax Ocean Terminals.

The necessity for increased ocean terminal facilities at Halifax is of prime importance. The trade of the port has so greatly increased that at present as many as nine ocean steamships have been held out at one time at anchor awaiting docking accommodation.

The question as to whether the proposition of the late Government to build two new 800-foot piers at the deep water terminals of the Intercolonial railway was sufficient for the expected growth of business was discussed by us at length. We arrived at the unanimous conclusion that any plan which could not be extended to provide docking facilities for at least thirty-two large ocean steamships within ten years would not be sufficiently comprehensive. As these old plans provided only an ultimate capacity of eleven berths of from 300 to 800 feet in length, they were obviously insufficient and had to be abandoned; and as the site for these piers was incapable of being extended to more than an ultimate capacity of fourteen large ships by utilizing the entire water front from the present deep water terminals to the graving dock, it had also to be abandoned for that reason and for the following reasons:—

The contour of the shore and the depth of water is such that the outer ends of piers of sufficient length to accommodate two vessels would be in water of excessive depth, while the inner ends of the slips would require rock excavation. The piers, therefore, except at an impossible cost, could only be made of sufficient length to accommodate one vessel.

To provide suitable accommodation for tracks and roadways between the city and slips would have required the excavation of the rocky hillside to an extent considered impracticable, especially in the vicinity of the dockyard.

To provide the necessary additional accommodation would have required the expropriation of a portion of the water front now used for local shipping business.

To provide track room, driveways, freight sheds and elevator sites would have encroached upon a strip two blocks wide of the business portion of the city.

The docks ultimately would then have occupied the entire water front and local shipping would have been forced into some other locality, a condition which was considered very undesirable and even impracticable. Besides, it would have involved a length of water front for which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to provide proper railway and grain elevator accommodation.

The cost of the dock properties along the water front and of the downtown business properties, the rock excavation and the deep water pier construction made this location for either the limited or extended scheme prohibitive.

It thus became necessary to consider another location. Studies were made of Bedford basin and of Dartmouth but these locations were abandoned because of their not fulfilling the required conditions. The objections to Bedford basin were its distance from the centre of population in the city, the high winds at times, the navigation of the Narrows, the possible necessity of a bridge at the Narrows and the character of the shore line involving great expense in construction. It would also have been impossible to combine the passenger terminal with that for the city. The best site in Dartmouth did not offer sufficient opportunities for necessary extension, and it also was distant from the centre of population so that a combined passenger terminal there was impracticable. The new Halifax Ocean Terminals' site situated in the southern part of the city just opposite to George's island provides, however, all the necessary conditions of the larger scheme. The proposed construction of a railway approach from Three-Mile House on the Intercolonial railway, along the North West Arm, to the site in question, leaves to the city of Halifax unimpaired its present railway dockage and business facilities.

The new proposal contemplates the completion of pier No. 2 which is now in course of construction, and that it shall be used in connection with local business for the city of Halifax. The shed accommodation will so be rearranged as to provide the required facilities therefor.

The special advantages of the new Halifax Ocean Terminals site are as follows:

The depth of the water is perfect for dock construction.

It permits 40 feet depth of water without encountering rock.

It utilizes the lumber yard (government property) with 700 feet of water front.

It provides ideal foundations for pier construction.

It has easy grade approaches on the city streets.

It provides a location for a union passenger railway station at the Ocean Terminal which will be one mile nearer to the centre of the city than the present Intercolonial railway station.

It utilizes a portion of the city which has long been neglected and which will become we believe a hive of transportation industry.

The proposed terminal will consist of a landing stage or bulkhead wharf 2,000 feet in length at which three of the largest ocean vessels can dock in safety without tug assistance; a wharf building the whole length of the bulkhead pier; the first floor of which will be for freight and the second floor for passengers and immigration quarters, and a union passenger station of suitable architectural design and of capacity for the increased business which is expected to come with the necessary tracks and facilities usual at terminal stations of this character.

This scheme of development provides for the construction of six freight piers 300 feet in width and 1,250 feet in length which will be equipped with necessary wharf freight sheds and railway tracks.

It provides the necessary yards for the storage and shunting of cars.

It provides for the construction of an elevator which will permit of grain being loaded into ships at each of the 32 berths.

It provides an enginehouse for the care of passenger locomotives and switch engines.

It provides a breakwater from Point Pleasant park to the Reid rock buoy.

It is reached by a double track railway about five miles in length which leaves the main line of the Intercolonial railway at Three Mile House, passes through the low divide between Bedford Basin and the Northwest Arm, skirts the North West Arm and reaches the new terminals through a deep cutting under the lower end of Young Avenue.

This railway for the greater portion of the distance will be in deep cuttings so as not to mar the beauty of that portion of the city of Halifax. All streets and roads will be carried over or under so that there will be no level crossings in connection therewith. The material removed from those cuttings will be utilized in filling in the piers and approaches thereto.

To relieve the present congestion in the Halifax freight terminals, it is proposed that the material from the cuttings at the north end of the railway will be utilized in filling a sufficient width of that portion of Bedford basin which lies between Rockingham and Three Mile House for a freight terminal yard with all the necessary accessories. The water is shallow for some distance out from the shore.

It is proposed that the first unit will consist of a bulkhead pier, the freight and immigration sheds, passenger station, one slip and one freight pier equipped with sheds and tracks together with the necessary accessories, which will provide accommodation for eight of the largest ocean steamships. As soon as business warrants it, two more piers will be constructed, giving an additional capacity for eight such steamships; and in five or six years or sooner if necessary, upon the opening of the Quebec bridge, provision will be made for a further accommodation of eight such steamships. As the business develops and the demands of trade necessitate, the two southerly piers will be constructed, thus completing the scheme.

It is proposed also in the early stages of the work to construct the Point Pleasant breakwater.

The Government having approved of this general plan, ordered the engineers to proceed with the preparation of detail plans which are not yet complete. We proceeded to purchase such properties as could be secured cheaply and are now committed to an expenditure on this account of between $400,000 and $500,000. It is proposed to proceed with the purchase of the remaining right of way and water frontage the plans for which were filed recently.

The expenditure is estimated as follows:—

For the first unit, including the five miles of double track railway between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000; for the completed scheme about $12,000,000.

It is proposed during the coming summer to proceed with the construction of the quay walls and of the railway, and with the dock and yard filling, the construction of the necessary overhead bridges and such other works as may be found economically convenient in connection therewith, for all of which we estimate $2,500,000 will be required during the approaching fiscal year.

In a city situated as Halifax is, in order to provide terminals of the character now contemplated, it was obviously necessary to interfere very considerably either with the shipping and business portion of the city or to adopt some plan of this kind which does in a certain measure interfere with a portion of the residential part of the city. The northern part of the business portion of Halifax is very peculiarly situated. The water is very deep close in to the shore, the shore is rocky and the hill rises very abruptly from the shore. In order, therefore, to obtain any considerable space immediately adjoining the harbour, it is necessary to spend enormous sums of money in excavating the hillside. On the other hand, in building out to the harbour you are confronted with the difficulty that in building out to the requisite distance for slips of this kind, the water is so deep that the construction becomes very expensive indeed. Further than that, under these conditions, even in incurring a very great expenditure to build slips at considerable distance into the harbour and to excavate the hillside, you are still confronted with the fact that the terminals would be very much elongated, and you would not have a very satisfactory condition, as the engineers reported. In addition, you would necessarily drive the business which is located along that water front to some other portion of the city. I think it is estimated that two or three blocks might be required to be taken. Therefore, it is perfectly obvious that it would be necessary either to interfere considerably with the business part of the city or to interfere in a very much less degree with the residential part of the city. And if you drove the business interests out of that part of the city they would have to locate somewhere, and the strong probability is that they would be driven in their turn to invade the residential part of the city; and therefore any detriment to the residential part of the city which it is thought would ensue from this scheme would in the end ensue even under any such alternative proposals as those which have been suggested. I do not profess to be an expert with regard to railway terminals, but I have discussed these proposals with the engineers a great many times. The engineers say that it is absolutely astonishing that this scheme, which seems so simple and so comparatively inexpensive, should not have been thought of before. They say something more about it, and that is, that the scheme which is now proposed offers a lay out, as they term it, the equal of which is not to be found on the North American continent for ocean terminals. The grades are easy, the opportunity for development is open, and all the conditions seem to be exceedingly favourable. The Minister of Railways, when these proposals were laid before him by the engineers whom he had appointed for the purpose of investigating the matter, came to the conclusion, notwithstanding certain interference with a certain portion of the residential part of the city which will be minimized to the greatest possible extent, that this is really the only possible scheme for extended development which could be found on the peninsula of Halifax under conditions as they now exist. Not only is this scheme feasible, but it offers opportunities which are certainly not surpassed, and perhaps are not equalled anywhere else on the North American continent. We are therefore asking the authority of Parliament to sanction the proposals, and we believe that if they are carried out, the opportunities they afford for the increasing development of business will result in a very speedy increase of the development in the future. We believe that even with all the efforts the Government may be able to make to carry out this scheme, we shall not be much in advance of the business development, if indeed we are able to keep pace with it. We submit, therefore, the proposal to the committee, in the confident hope that it will meet with their approval, to the end that the work may be undertaken with the least possible delay, because even before this first unit is completed it is obvious the business will have grown immensely beyond the facilities which are provided for the port at present. Hon. gentlemen will have observed that a map or plan has been laid upon the table of the House upon which are shown the existing terminals, including pier No. 2 which is marked in red, and also that portion of the line leading in from Three Mile house to the proposed terminals, and also a sketch of these terminals as they will be when fully completed. The portion marked red on the north side is the bulkhead two thousand feet long which is being constructed, adjoining the slip or pier twelve hundred and fifty feet long which together with the bulkhead will constitute the first unit. The other piers are eventually to be built as the requirements of business may demand. Under present conditions, it looks as if this unit would have to be hurried to completion at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. SINCLAIR: When the Minister of Railways visited Halifax last fall it was announced in the press that the Government proposed to spend $35,000,000, and I understand the minister to say that the scheme now proposed involves the expenditure of about $12,000,000. Has any change taken place in the plans of the Government to account for the very great change in the proposed expenditure?

Mr. COCHRANE: At the time I made the announcement in Halifax, I did not say what the cost would be.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Then the statement in the Halifax Herald was unauthorized?

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not authorize any such statement.

Mr. BORDEN: I think the estimates to which my hon. friend refers were outside estimates. The estimate of the engineer as given in his report is between five and six million dollars for the railway, bulkhead and pier, which go to make up the first unit, and, for the completed scheme, about $12,000,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The minister has stated that the cost of the first unit, including the construction of five miles of double track railway, will be between five and six million dollars. Do I understand that this is inclusive of the cost of right of way?

Mr. BORDEN: I so understand it.

Mr. MACLEAN: And inclusive also of overhead bridges, where the right of way will intersect streets?

Mr. BORDEN: I understand they are included.

Mr. MACLEAN: What will be the approximate cost of the additional right of way required, and which has not yet been purchased or arranged for?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is rather hard to answer, because there are a few cases, I think, which will have to go to the Exchequer Court. We now have valuators going over the portions that have not been bought, with a view to coming to a conclusion with regard to making these people an offer. If an agreement cannot be come to the cases must be submitted to the Exchequer Court. It would be impracticable to state what definite amount will be paid. With what we have already purchased, and what we have to purchase, I would imagine that the right of way will cost about half a million dollars, but included in that will be a lot of property that we will not need, as we have to buy a lot of property in order to get what we want, but this can ultimately be disposed of.

Mr. MACLEAN: Does the minister propose to proceed with the work by tender or by contract?

Mr. COCHRANE: As to the railway, I think, yes; as to the piers, a full conclusion has not yet been reached. Quite a number who have been discussing the matter say it can be done much safer and quicker by the Government. With regard to the Montreal docks, for instance, the harbour board there has given up letting contracts for docks; they have their own plants, and find the method much more satisfactory and considerably cheaper. While it is not fully decided that it will be carried out in that way, it would appear, from the information we have, that this plan is more feasible and much better.

Mr. MACLEAN: That will hardly be decided upon before you ask the committee for the balance of the vote?

Mr. COCHRANE: It is needed so badly that I would like to proceed with the work and take advantage, as much as possible, of the favourable season. I would not like to delay too long. The plans are not complete with regard to the letting of the contract, but we hope that they will be so in the next few days.

Mr. MACLEAN: Have the engineers reported to the minister as to the probable cost of operation of this new terminal, say from the three-mile house down to the proposed ocean terminal, and if he proposes to operate it electrically, or by steam or otherwise.

Mr. COCHRANE: In making the announcement in Halifax last fall, I said that the Government would certainly undertake to improve the facilities in that way. One reason for this was because of the fact that the route goes through the residential portion of Halifax, and the language I used was that the utilization of coke, oil or electricity had made such wonderful advances that we would do our utmost to make any possible nuisance as slight as possible. I propose to carry that out to the letter.

Mr. MACLEAN: Is it likely that the piers to be constructed within a reasonable number of years will be very close to Point Pleasant park, and has there been any change made in the location of the plant?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, we go up to the line, that is all.

Mr. MACLEAN: When can we expect the final plans and reports of the engineers on this matter? May we expect them shortly?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: Within what length of time?

Mr. COCHRANE: In a week or ten days.

Mr. MACLEAN: Then I am to understand that the total estimated cost for the whole plant as outlined in this statement, and as originally outlined by the minister in his announcement at Halifax last October, will be within or about $12,000,000. That is inclusive of the breakwater?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: How long will this breakwater be?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not that in mind.

Mr. MACLEAN: Has the minister any idea of its probable cost?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. MACLEAN: It will be commenced at once?

Mr. COCHRANE: It will be one of the first.

Mr. MACLEAN: Is the breakwater to be constructed by tender and contract?

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not decided whether the Government will do it or whether it will be done by contract. Judging from the opinions of those who have had experience, the most effective and the cheapest work is done by the departments having their own plant and running it themselves.

Mr. MACLEAN: Assuming that the Railway Department perform the work, how would you proceed with the work?

Mr. COCHRANE: The Montreal people, in building their docks, form a crib built out of timber, sink it and then fill in with stone and build on top of that, but at Halifax the torredo worm is so much in evidence that it may be impossible to do that. The engineer has been giving a great deal of consideration to the matter, and advises the making of a crib out of concrete on land, sinking it, and filling up with concrete. No coffer dams are necessary. In other places that has been found to work satisfactorily, and it is much cheaper than to construct coffer dams, and built up solid.

Mr. MACLEAN: Who in the Department would be placed in charge of this work and would supply such as cement, &c., be purchased by tender?

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, yes, some competent engineer would have to be selected and it would be placed under his supervision just as is the work of inspection of No. 2 dock to-day. That dock is under Mr. Kennedy of Montreal, who has complete control and any communication in reference to it I address to him. In fact, owing to the slowness of the work in the past year, I have urged him to make more speed, and have told him that we must make some greater efforts; either take it away from the contractor or adopt some other means of securing greater expedition. We would select some practical engineer of experience to be on the ground and supervise the work and as consulting engineer or critic we would still employ the engineer of the Montreal Harbour Commission to go down as often as necessary to offer any criticism or suggestion in regard not only to the carrying out of the work but the style of the work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, I have no doubt, have had requests to have the report of the engineers of the department, upon the project submitted, for re-examination and review by independent engineers and terminal experts. Are such requests to have favourable consideration, and if not upon what ground is the refusal made?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have had individual requests.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have often heard that urged myself. I assume then that such request will not be granted, but the report and plans of the departmental engineers will be adhered to.

Mr. COCHRANE: The scheme, as I understand it, was proposed by some individuals of Halifax, that it should be submitted, not as to construction but as to elocation of situation, etc.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have just a few remarks to make respecting the matter upon which the Prime Minister has given a statement to the committee. At a later date, when the minister is asking for a further supply with reference to this particular undertaking and when the plans and reports of the engineers of the department have been submitted, I may have occasion to say something further. The proposal to afford improved terminal facilities at Halifax has upon general principles my cordial endorsement. I approve entirely the purpose and intention of the Government to provide such an expenditure of money as shall fully and adequately equip the port of Halifax, not only to meet the traffic demands of the present, but to meet that traffic of the future which undoubtedly will reach very considerable proportions in a few years. At the last session of Parliament I urged upon the Government the desirability of making a careful examination of the needs of Halifax in the way of railway and shipping terminals and reporting upon the same in a very comprehensive way. I am very glad that in accordance with my suggestion the Government have seen fit to make the necessary examination during recess, and have finally reached the conclusion to proceed with the construction of railway terminal facilities such as they think will adequately meet the demands of that port. I do not propose to extend to the members of the committee any personal opinion respecting the general scheme or its details because my opinion would not likely be regarded as of any value. This is a matter entirely for the Government and its engineers to decide upon and of course they must take the responsibility. I have just one word of criticism, and that is, that from the date of the announcement of the Minister of Railways at Halifax last year, until this evening, there has never been given to the citizens of Halifax by the Government any explanations or reasons for the adoption of the projected scheme, and no reasons were ever given why the construction of additional railway terminals within the region of the present terminals and at other parts of Halifax harbour where, naturally, most people would expect the same, was impossible. There may have been a reason for that; I do not presume to know it. I wish to say that in my judgment it would have tended greatly to the elimination of considerable unrest and acrimony during the past few months, if the Minister of Railways had, a few months ago, made a statement similar to that made by the Prime Minister this evening. The public were entitled to receive from the Government the same information they would receive from a railway company projecting the same scheme. It was extremely unfortunate I think that when the announcement of the present project was made, it was not accompanied by the reasons which have been assigned in a general way this evening. I thought myself, when first I heard of the announcement, that it was premature and that it might well have been postponed until the Minister of Railways was in possession of a full and complete report from his engineers. I think that strong and detailed reasons should have been given the public in the first instance as to why this particular scheme was to be adopted and others abandoned.

As the Prime Minister has pointed out, the adoption of this scheme, assuming it to be the very best and the only scheme possible, means the condemnation of a great deal of property now available for residential and business purposes. A great number of the citizens of Halifax were naturally alarmed at the extent of the property to be expropriated. They were rather disconcerted by the idea of the establishment in a new part of the city of an additional railway and shipping terminal district, and for other considerations, some serious possibly, and others not, there was and is more or less alarm and misgivings on the part of some excellent citizens of Halifax in regard to this project. I merely wish to make the observation that in my judment it was regrettable that the announcement was not postponed until a later day, or better still, until Parliament had met which was only some three or four weeks later, when the announcement could have been accompanied by reasons in support of the project as outlined, which would have been reassuring to the citizens of Halifax. However, I am not inclined to blame the Minister of Railways so much for this, because, I understand, he protested against the politically organized meeting at which his announcement was made and that it was very much against his own judgment that he was ultimately compelled by reason of local political exigencies to make prematurely the announcement.

I wish to express my concurrence in the statement made by the Prime Minister as to the urgent necessity of immediate terminal improvements and extensions in the port of Halifax. The business at that port to-day is not adequately accommodated by the existing terminals. That the business at the port will grow very rapidly in the future is self-evident. The internal development of Canada will necessitate in the future the utilization of our Atlantic ports, such as St. John and Halifax, together with terminal development, to an extent hitherto unknown. The completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Moncton, the linking up of the various sections of railways which will constitute the third transcontinental system in this country, the Canadian Northern railway; the utilization of the Intercolonial railway by the three transcontinental lines, together with the general development of the maritime provinces, will result in a very much increased port business at Halifax. Therefore, large expenditures at that point for the construction of such terminals were inevitable. The project, for which the Prime Minister asks of Parliament a sum of money, viz: the equipment of the port of Halifax has, I need hardly say, my sympathy, and will have my cordial endorsation. I trust that when it is completed, it will meet the requirements of the port, and the details of the project will have been proven proper and wise by experience. I am conscious of the fact that there are a great many honest and serious objections raised against the proposed scheme. There would be no dissent to the present project if there prevailed the idea that it was the only feasible one, as well as the best. It was for the purpose of being assured on this point that the advice of additional expert opinion was urged by many citizens. Many did and do now feel that the Government did not take the public sufficiently into its confidence. I do not personally feel the public were afforded the information they were entitled to. The city corporation, representative of the people, was not consulted even. Hostility to the scheme might have been anticipated. Citizens of Halifax wanted done only that which was best in the circumstances. The manner of the announcement, and the dearth of information extended to the public was, I think, unfortunate. The situation was one deserving more serious consideration than was given it by the Government. However, I trust that the project when completed, will meet the demands of the port.

In the construction of the railway along the Northwest Arm, and across the head of the peninsula, I trust the minister will always have in mind the reduction, as far as possible, of damage to private property, and the general appearance of the city. The Government should not hesitate, I think, in asking Parliament for any necessary sum of money which will minimize any disfigurement to that part of the city to be traversed by the railway, and which, let me say, is naturally a matter of great pride to the citizens of Halifax; and to ensure that, in approaching the region of Point Pleasant park, which has long been a pleasant rendez-vous of the citizens of Halifax, as little damage as possible will be done. Perhaps upon reflection and examination of the location, it might be possible to keep the railway tracks even further away than now projected from that delightful spot. I shall doubtless have occasión to refer to this matter later, but will not detain the committee farther for the present.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on a very important subject, I mean the speed of the trains on the Intercolonial, in the Metapedia valley, a dangerous section of the railway, as every one knows, owing to the very nature of the road in that valley. Three or four weeks ago an accident happened on that part of the road, and I think it should be ascribed to a change made in the system by Mr. Brady. Formerly, the trains used to follow one another from station to station, because the road, in that part, is very dangerous. According to the new system inaugurated by Mr. Brady, the trains, today, follow one another from ten minutes to ten minutes. On that section of the railway, from Sainte-Flavie to Métapédia, the curves are very short, which goes to increase the dangers of the new system. Of course, the employees are exposed to great dangers, to begin with, and then the railway itself is exposed to heavy material loss. There is very good ground even for fearing that lives might be lost.

Three or four weeks ago an accident happened at Saint-Moïse. I immediately called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact, and nothing has been done. All I got was a letter to the effect that my own letter had been received. Again last night, an accident happened, causing the loss of an engine, and of five or six cars which were burnt. A few employees were crippled, and they were lucky enough not to lose their lives.

For those reasons, I think the Minister of Railways should remedy at once this condition of things and re-establish, without delay, the former system—the block system—for the speed of the trains on that part of the Intercolonial.

I had other observations to make, but I shall reserve them for a later date.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is gratifying to everybody in Nova Scotia to know that the Government are undertaking to equip the port of Halifax. The principal regret I would express is that it becomes necessary to build a breakwater in order to make a protection for shipping at that port. I have been accustomed to look upon the port of Halifax as one of the greatest harbours in the world and one in which shelter could be obtained without any breakwater for any number of great ships. Georges island being the natural protection, the people of Nova Scotia have been of the opinion that the best shelter has been above that point and not below it. I do not profess to have any engineering knowledge about these matters, but there is a very large stretch of coast above Georges island where wharfs might be built to meet the necessities of the port. Besides, I think it will be found that breakwaters are not very satisfactory, that when a very severe storm comes a breakwater is never found altogether sufficient. The breakwater is a good enough protection for shipping in fine weather, and in case of moderate storms, but I think that the experience throughout the world is that, when breakwaters are depended upon in the case of a very severe storm, they generally fail. Of course, that matter has been considered by the engineers, but as a man outside of the engineering profession, this point is regarded by me as very important. There is a direction from which the sweep of the Atlantic can reach these wharfs, where there will be very little protection for shipping, and I question very much if the owners of ships will feel that this is a safe place to moor their vessels in the fall of the year during stormy weather. In looking at the plan placed on the table I noticed that the breakwater proposed is of about the same length as the wharfs. It would seem to me that it would be necessary to have the breakwater considerably longer than the wharfs in order to furnish the necessary protection. There was one point in the proposal that I was not clear about and it is the reference that is made to the elevators that are proposed to be built. The statement, I see, provides for the construction of an elevator which will permit grain to be loaded into ships at each of the thirty-two berths. Do I understand that that means one elevator?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: Grain will be run on belts.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would suppose that one elevator would be sufficient for the shipment of grain at Halifax at the present time. It is unfortunate and a disappointment to the people of eastern Canada that the effort to bring grain over the Intercolonial railway to this port has not yet been a success. A rumour is abroad that changes have been made in the grades of the Transcontinental under the present Administration. I do not think the Minister of Railways has yet given us very clear or distinct information in regard to the matter. If it is be true that the grades originally laid out are not to be maintained, but that we are to have grades on the Transcontinental similar to those of the Intercolonial, it will not be necessary for us to provide very many elevators at the port of Halifax for the shipment of grain. The reason why we have not been able to ship grain there up to this date is that it costs too much to bring it there. Grain will always go by the cheapest route. It is diverted now at Buffalo and at other points along the line. A certain quantity comes to St. John, but almost none to Halifax. The Transcontinental, when projected, was supposed to overcome the difficulty. It was felt, if that road was constructed, tapping the West, and with the grades that were originally provided for, that grain could be shipped at the port of Halifax.

Mr. COCHRANE: Does the hon. gentleman know that there are two pusher grades from Quebec to Moncton that have not been changed?

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am quite well aware of that. I do not think it will interfere with the utilizing of the road for the shipment of grain to have one point where pusher grades are used. If all the rest of the road is maintained at the four-tenths of one per cent, as originally laid out, it would appear that grain could be taken to the port of Halifax from the West as a commercial proposition. If the original grades of the Transcontinental are to be abandoned, I think it is hardly worth while to make this large expenditure at the port of Halifax for the shipment of grain.

In reference to Point Pleasant Park, I am glad to know that the Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister are going to do everything possible to preserve the beauty of that park, which is one of the beauty spots of Canada. It belongs to the Canadian people and is one of their most treasured possessions. I am pleased to hear that the approaches to the park are not to be interfered with by this proposal. I am not altogether clear as to whether the approach to the park along Pleasant street is to be interfered with or not.

Mr. BORDEN: I think on Pleasant street it is interfered with.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Along the shore?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the approach be closed along Pleasant street?

Mr. BORDEN: Pleasant street is vacant along there.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I regret to hear that this approach is to be closed. I was hoping for a statement by the Prime Minister that the proposal would be for a tunnel to preserve that approach, because it really is the best approach to Point Pleasant park.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Can the Minister tell me how far out into the harbour from the present shore line the head of these proposed piers will be? The water now for a considerable distance from the shore, possibly four or five hundred feet or more, is very shallow. Is it proposed to fill in a considerable part of the land near the shore now covered by water and then build the piers from that out?

Mr. COCHRANE: No. I do not know how many feet from the present shore line we shall take in. The idea is to dredge out there down to rock, because we have to start those piers on rock.

Mr. MACLEAN: It is all rock now?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, the bottom is, but the dredging will not be expensive. It is an ideal spot for such work. The plans will show the length from the present shore line.

Mr. MACLEAN: Did the minister ever take into consideration a criticism of which he has no doubt heard, and which is frequently made in Halifax, that the erection of this breakwater and these wharfs will be an interference with navigation and possibly in some winter seasons have the effect of causing the harbour to freeze?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have never heard that criticism. I have heard something of what the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) was saying, but navigators tell me that there is nothing in it. The breakwater will protect the harbour. A breakwater may have to be put out on the other side to some rock that is there now and a lighthouse put on it. There is absolutely no danger from wind. There might possibly be some freezing between the docks in extra cold weather, but a tug would have to be around there to keep the harbour open.

Mr. MACLEAN: Have the plans for the piers and bulkheads ever been submitted to experts outside of the technical offices of the department who have been advising the minister?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, they have not. Similar plans have been approved by people interested in navigation.

Mr. MCLEAN: I have heard that officers navigating trans-Atlantic ships coming into the port of Halifax expressed considerable fear on this score. Personally I do not know whether it is correct or not. I suppose I am correct in assuming that the engineers of the department have taken the trouble of making inquiries among local men as to their views.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, local navigators.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I heard some time ago from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that he was considering the advisability of acquiring some of the branch lines in connection with the Intercolonial railway main line. I am somewhat interested in that section of the province of Quebec traversed by the Intercolonial railway. I have paid a great deal of attention to the Gaspé line and I have always been more or less interested, as a Quebecker, in the Temiscouata line. I hope that if the minister comes to any conclusion in regard to that policy generally, he will not forget the only two lines that may be available in the province of Quebec. I speak a little feelingly about the Gaspé line because I represented that peninsula for several years with my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). Although the railway has been completed from the main line of the Intercolonial railway, from Metapedia up to Gaspé basin, still the people in these two constituencies are afraid that the company will not be able to operate the line successfully. I received some days ago a resolution adopted by the county council of Gaspé and my hon. friend from Bonaventure has similar communications from the various municipalities in the county of Bonaventure. I sent mine to the Minister of Railways, who, I fancy had received similar ones from the member for Gaspé (Mr. Gauthier). Speaking as a friend of the county I represented for so many years, I wish to say that for my part I would support very cordially any movement on the part of the Government towards acquiring that branch line from Metapedia to Gaspé basin.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I wish to unite my voice with that of the hon. member for Rouville, as to the Temiscouata road, I think the minister will recollect that I asked him some questions about that, and I am told from investigation made of that road that it is one of the best paying branches we have in the province of Quebec connected with the Intercolonial railway. I hope the minister will see his way clear soon to let us know what his intentions are with regard to the Temiscouata line. This is the time to make his position known, because the Quebec Central has been bought by the Canadian Pacific railway, and if the Canadian Pacific gets control of the Temiscouata road, it will divert the traffic from Rivière du Loup: the minister knows this to be a fact.

Hon. Geo. P. GRAHAM: As I understand it the right hon. the Prime Minister is endeavouring to make out a case for this vote of $2,500,000, it being a new work. I will not say, for the moment, whether I think he has made out a case or not; I would like to discuss the situation for a minute or two. As to making announcements to which reference has been made, it is well to leave that alone unless you are compelled to speak. Sometimes, you have to change the trend of the announcement, and the realization is not equal to the anticipation. The newspapers favourable to my right hon. friend said there was to be an expenditure of $35,000,000; now he tells us it is to be $12,000,000. That is only one dreadnought instead of three. I would like to make a suggestion to the minister before he proceeds with this great work. When the Welland canal was constructed, the precaution was taken of having the advice of an expert of the highest standing. If the hon. gentleman will look at the records of that day, he will find some valuable opinions, and I think that the construction was all the better for the advice received. If Halifax harbour was merely being constructed for local purposes or for semi-local purposes, it would not be of such great importance; but this is not a Halifax harbour, this a harbour of Canada; this is to be one of the great gateways of commerce to and from Canada. If any mistakes have been made in the past, now, when an effort is being made to accommodate the great traffic we expect to have in this country, the Government would act wisely in taking every precaution to see that the best possible development is made. I suppose that if we were to send another engineer or two engineers to Halifax harbour to look over these plans, they would have suggestions to make, and that that could be continued for ever. My suggestion is not that, but to discover if possible one of the greatest harbour engineers in the world, one who has made this his life study. When I had my data complete and plans prepared, I would submit all these to him. He possibly would agree, and if he did not agree, possibly his advice would be worth paying something for. If this were a small work, I would not consider it of importance; but this is not a harbour for to-day or for to-morrow; but is a harbour which with expansion is intended to accommodate a large share of the traffic of Canada for many years to come. It does not belong to the maritime provinces; this vote of money we are not taking for a locality, we are voting it for a national undertaking. Here, as on the coast of British Columbia, we ought to make no mistake now. As I have said on previous occasions I look for a great development in the eastern part of Canada within the next few years. On this harbour will depend to a large extent the amount of trade which will come through it from Canada and even from the United States. It would be a protection to the minister and in the interest of the Government and of the whole country if, before he proceeds, when he has his plans completed, he would call in the best harbour engineer he can find in the world and get his advice. With reference to the construction of these works by Government or by contract, that is a question, of course, which is worthy of consideration. The harbour commissioners of Montreal have an organization, I believe through which they do a large part of this class of work. The Minister of Railways and Canals should be careful before he forms an organization for the purpose of carrying on a work of this kind. I suppose it is not going too far to say that the experience of the Government is that they do not employ any more cheaply than a contractor does. In getting the best labour, they sometimes experience difficulties that would not be experienced by contractors. Shut our eyes to it as we will, I am afraid that any organization of this kind, under Government supervision, might be liable to have imposed on it very many men who are not expert in their calling, and who would not be engaged by contractors. It will bring a multitude of troubles to my hon. friend if he endeavours to do this work himself, rather than have it done by contract. It would not do for us at this hour of the night to enter into any lengthy discussion as to the necessity for the development of Halifax harbour. Not only does Canada in general need the additional accommodation in the way of docks, but the time is not far distant when in the city of Halifax there must be additional railway terminal accommodation to provide facilities for three or four railways. The Intercolonial during past years has practically had possession of Halifax as a terminal, but it is evident that in the near future the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Pacific railway and, I think the Canadian Northern, will have to be accommodated in the city of Halifax. If the Government is proposing to lay out terminals to take care of the traffic of these roads, I think it is not acting unwisely, because they will have to be taken care of in some way. The restricted territory in the city of Halifax will not permit of the construction of three or four sets of terminals in that city without doing an injustice to the citizens, both from a residential and a business standpoint. If the matter of terminal accommodation is carefully worked out so that these other roads can be accommodated, the Government will be fully justified in their course, but they will be making a great mistake if they merely provide terminals for the expected business of the Intercolonial, even with the Canadian Pacific railway business thrown in. The Grand Trunk Pacific has running rights, I think, from Moncton to Halifax and, if running rights are to mean anything, the Intercolonial must, in connection with these running rights, provide terminal facilities. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company now have certain rights, and are asking for more. When the Government is prepared to go on with this large scheme of terminals, it ought, I think, to make that scheme so extensive that the result will be the proper accommodation of these various roads. In view of the fact that it is not a local but a national work, and further considering the necessity for providing for the traffic that is ever increasing and that will continue to increase, I feel justified, so far as I am concerned, in saying that one-sixth of this grant ought to be given for this new work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Are these piers to be built with concrete?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: What is to be the cost of construction?

Mr. COCHRANE: The plan has not yet been drawn. The leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for South Renfrew have asked for a statement in reference to the Transcontinental railway, and although this statement is not just as full as I would like it to be, it is the best I can give in the short time I have had at my disposal. I will give a brief synopsis of how the road stands at the present time. In respect of district A comprising approximately 256 miles from Moncton to the New Brunswick and Quebec boundary, the grading is completed and the track all laid. The telegraph line and about 99 per cent of the bridges have been completed. With regard to district B, comprising a distance of 562.54 miles, fifteen miles of the western end of which have recently been transferred to district C-D, the grading is completed, and the track laid for a distance of 500 miles. The telegraph line is completed for a distance of 357 miles, and 98 per cent of the bridges have been constructed. In these figures I am omitting the fractions. In the next district, C-D, the length of which is 412 miles, the grading has been completed to the extent of 395 miles, or 95 per cent, and 391 miles of track have been laid. On the main line 82·9 per cent of siding and yards have been laid, of the telegraph line, 242 miles, and, in respect of the bridges, 42 per cent have been completed, in district C and 98 per cent in district D. In district E, the length of which is 195 miles, 150 miles of the grading has been completed, and 195 miles of track laid. That is the section between Cochrane and Graham. We have laid the track over that route, but the grading is not fully completed.

Mr. GRAHAM: How far is it from Cochrane to Graham?

Mr. COCHRANE: It is over 400 miles. District F is over 376 miles in length. The grading has been completed, and 382 miles of track have been laid, including double track from Transcona to Winnipeg; 132 miles of sidings have been laid, 304 miles of telegraph lines have been completed, and 93 per cent of the bridges have been constructed. A recapitulation of these figures is as follows: Total length of line from Moncton to Winnipeg, 1,804 miles; grading completed, 1,695 miles, or 94 per cent, in twenty-one contracts; track laid, 1,720 miles; sidings, 383 miles; telegraph lines, 1,170 miles; bridges, 85 per cent completed. It is expected that the road will be running into Quebec before the 1st of September of this year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What are the intentions of the Government with regard to the terminals in Quebec?

Mr. COCHRANE: This matter has not moved along as fast as we had expected, but I think that before the estimates are discussed in detail I will be able to make an announcement in this respect.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understood from a statement made by the Postmaster General the other day that the terminal in Quebec would be located on the site of the present Champlain market.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think what he did say was that we intended to lay track down to the Champlain Market. It will probably be necessary for us to build a small station there. I do not think it is a good place, however, for the main terminal of the road. The means of access to that station are not sufficient for the traffic. The road from Quebec to Moncton will be completed but we will not have the ferry which we have already ordered to take the cars across from Quebec to Lévis, so we cannot run there, I suppose, before spring. We placed an order for a ferry, the most up-to-date one we could get. It has a mechanical contrivance by which the deck on which the cars are can be raised or lowered according to the tide. It is being built in Glasgow.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When do you expect to have it?

Mr. COCHRANE: Early in the spring of next year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And at Champlain Market there will be only a temporary station?

Mr. COCHRANE: It will be a permanent station, but what I hope to announce shortly will be the terminals for not only the passenger traffic but the local traffic, &c. Of course the through freight will be handled where the railway crosses the bridge, but the commission under whom the building of the Quebec bridge is inform me that it is not possible to have it completed before the end of 1917. Therefore, it was absolutely necessary that we should furnish a ferry in order to handle traffic going to Moncton.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Meanwhile the commission are looking for a suitable site for the terminal, and the site purchased from the corporation of Quebec will be utilized?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, practically all the right of way has been purchased, I think think there is one small piece yet that is not. The commission has also bought on the shore between Wolfe's Cove and Champlain Market, some 5,000 feet for deep-water terminals.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Do you expect to build the station at Champlain Market early this year?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think so, yes. It will not be a very expensive station, but it will be neat. Accommodating boats, &c., it will be necessary to have a presentable station.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has the contract for the car ferry between Mulgrave and Port Tupper been let?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, because we had not a vote for that. It is in the estimates now and I can go on and deal with it; if the one-sixth is given we can then get out the plans and tenders. I agree as to the absolute necessity of having it, in fact I think it should have been ordered before this because the scows, &c., that have been used there when the present ferry is disabled, as it was last year, are very risky and we will certainly push it as fast as we can.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would remind my hon. friend that when the ferry boats have reached this side of the Atlantic, he should endeavour to make some arrangement in connection with the Intercolonial for the transfer of passengers during the night from Lévis to Quebec.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think there will be no trouble when we get the ferry.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am sure that he would be entitled to the gratitude of the city and people of Quebec if he could solve that problem. It is a small matter in itself but very important to the citizens of Quebec who happen to arrive at night at Lévis and cannot cross to Quebec.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Not only to Quebec but to the whole district.

Mr. COCHRANE: The piers for this ferry on each side will be constructed right away.

Mr. PELLETIER: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Rouville is one which is so very much to the advantage of the whole district that everyone should take a deep interest in it. The ferry company have now realized that something should be done, pending the arrival of the ferries which the Minister of Railways has ordered, to enable people to cross the river at night, and for the balance of the season the ferry company will take care of that traffic. I may as well state this from my seat in the House so that the people will know that for the balance of the season we will have ferry boats meet the two Ocean Limited trains at Lévis to cross over to Quebec. The president of the ferry company was here a few days ago; the hon. member for Rouville had the pleasure of meeting him, as I did, and the matter has been arranged. On the question of the terminals at Quebec, I would not like my hon. friend from Rouville to be under a false impression as to what I said at Quebec. Several papers were under the same misapprehension as my hon. friend. I did not say that the big station would be built at Champlain Market; I was prudent enough, before leaving Ottawa, to get some information from headquarters, and I did not say that the big station would be built at Champlain Market, as originally proposed by the late Government. I did say, as I was authorized to say by my colleague, that the track should be laid as far as Champlain Market to be utilized for local freight, but that this did not settle the question of the central station.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand from the interview given by the hon. gentleman to the Chronicle the other day that the pourparlers with the Canadian Pacific railway with regard to their joining with the other railway companies and the Transcontinental to erect a central station in St. Roch, perhaps at the Palais, had not resulted in any conclusion, and that the Government are contemplating a different site.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would rather leave that until a later date.

Mr. GRAHAM: I understand that the Minister of Railways desires to get an interim vote on the Transcontinental. The understanding was that new work would not be included in the arrangement for an interim vote. It was thought by the Prime Minister that the Halifax work ought to be, and we have decided practically that he made out a case and should get an interim vote on the $2,500,000 work in Halifax. The object of the Minister of Railways in presenting his statement on the Transcontinental at the present time, in response to a request by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, was that it should be given before the interim vote of one-sixth of the Transcontinental estimates was granted. We have not been voting any Intercolonial estimates as yet; we have been on the Intercolonial estimates because of the arrangement mentioned.

Mr. MACDONALD: With reference to the Transcontinental item, I understand that a commission composed of Mr. Gutelius and Mr. Lynch Staunton have been investigating. When does the minister expect the report of that commission to be laid on the table of the House?

Mr. COCHRANE: I cannot say exactly; I understand they are pretty well through with the examination of witnesses and of the work on the line, and that they are now engaged in preparing and editing their report. I do not know just when it will be ready, but it will be placed on the table as early as possible.

Mr. MACDONALD: I understand there have been some delays in the payment of contractors' claims. I have heard in a general way that some sub-contractors have not been able to get a settlement with the department. It is asserted that the commission have held up their money. Has anything of that kind been done in the course of the commission's operations? Occasionally one hears rumours too that the Grand Trunk people are not disposed to carry out their arrangement in regard to the operation of the road. Has there been any proposal to modify the arrangement in that regard in any way?

Mr. COCHRANE: In reference to the contractors, I do not think there can be any legitimate ground for the charge of the kind made by my hon. friend. Their progress estimates have always been paid on the production of the final certificate. These are difficult times for financing, and some contractors have been pressing rather strongly for the ten per cent rebate, and for the payment of security which was put up when the contract was agreed to. The contract usually provides that the security is to remain as long as the commission think necessary, and they have the right to withhold the ten per cent rebate on the estimates month by month. However, I do not think that much time has elapsed after the final certificate has been given in making a settlement. In the case of the contract for work between Graham and Winnipeg, there was a long delay, though not after the final certificate was given. The engineer in charge at Winnipeg, Mr. Poulin, died before the work was completed, and we had to put on a new man there who necessarily took a long time to go through the different items before giving the final certificate.

Mr. MACDONALD: In reference to the terms of the agreement for the operation of the Transcontinental, the Grand Trunk Pacific is to be given running powers over the Intercolonial from Moncton. If, as the minister says, and I trust his expectations will be realized, that in September of this year the Grand Trunk Pacific will be in a position to operate the road from Quebec to Moncton——

Mr. COCHRANE: Of course, the ferry will not be ready this year.

Mr. MACDONALD: I know that, and I suppose some issue may be raised on that point. But has there been any suggestion or arrangement looking towards the Grand Trunk Pacific having running powers from Moncton East, that they shall assume the operation of the road, as I assume they will the moment it is completed, less the ferry?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have not been approached in any way at all, and I am not familiar with that portion of the contract which says they shall have running powers. However, the department would be very glad to meet them on that point, or to meet the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific railway, so long as we can get what is right or what will be in the interests of the Intercolonial as well.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is a section of the agreement which binds the Government in advance, and which has bound them since 1904. Have there been any overtures to that end?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. MACDONALD: In contemplation of the condition of affairs which will exist in September, when, as the minister hopes the line will be ready for operation, with the exception of the bridge, it would be in the interests of the maritime provinces, and particularly in the interests of Nova Scotia, if he would at an early date take up with the Grand Trunk Pacific the question of what their rights are to be, and of whether they are going to exercise them, with the view of settling to what extent they are going to operate over the Intercolonial. In that connection there is a suggestion that the other Transcontinental lines might come in and have running powers. I think that the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific which will naturally become an essential element in the situation next autumn, ought to be dealt with at an early date.

Mr. COCHRANE: I am afraid that it will be very hard to get the Grand Trunk Pacific to take over the operation of the road this fall. There would only be local traffic, and not through traffic, on account of the ferry not being ready, and they would not want to take over the road and work it at a loss. Perhaps I should even qualify the statement about the completion of the road from Quebec. There will be something to do on that road, but by the close of the season of navigation, or by the 1st of January, we should have it in condition so that it can be operated. I would be very glad to get the Grand Trunk to take it over, because we are operating in New Brunswick at a loss, but I am afraid they would seriously kick about assuming the operation of the road in the fall.

Mr. MACDONALD: To what account are you charging the operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific line from Moncton to Edmundston.

Mr. COCHRANE: The contract provides that if they will not take it over, the Government can take it over. It is a capital charge.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL: I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Railways need be surprised if he is not making any money on the portion of the road between Moncton and Edmundston, if he knows the manner in which it is being operated, though I doubt very much if he does.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not been down there since the summer.

Mr. CARVELL: He would be surprised if he had any idea of how that portion is being run. There is a superintendent who does not reside in the province, and who goes there once in a while and draws a big salary of several hundred dollars a month. Then he has a son who goes there part of the time and also draws a big salary, and all they have to do is to superintend the operation of a train from Moncton to Edmundston one day, and back to Moncton the next day. Evidently they do not want to do business, because they have refused an enormous amount of business.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman would give me an instance of that.

Mr. CARVELL: I happen to be the executor of an estate and during the past three or four months I have hauled by team between three and four million feet of lumber a distance of fifteen miles over probably the most hilly road in New Brunswick, to the Canadian Pacific railway. I could have hauled that very same lumber to the Transcontinental railway, a distance of less than five miles, and practically all down grade, between the mill and the railway. The party whom I represented was alive at the time the negotiations started in November, he died in December and since then, as the executor of the estate, I have been carrying on the business. The party himself wrote a letter to the superintendent which I took down to his office personally. I tried to get him to give any kind of a reasonable rate to carry the lumber from this point to Plaster Rock, thirty-two miles away.

Mr. COCHRANE: What is the point you started at?

Mr. CARVELL: It is near Foreston—Juniper I think they call it. The best rate I could get was six cents per one hundred pounds. That rate being out of the question, I went and talked personally to Mr. Macpherson but I might as well have talked to a graven image. I am not finding any fault with him because I presume he was only carrying out the instructions of his superiors. I went into details and explained to him the private transactions of the estate, but that is all I got out of him. It did not make any difference; six cents per one hundred pounds was the best rate I could get.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How much would that be per thousand feet?

Mr. CARVELL: That would be about $1.68 per thousand feet. Dry lumber weighs two thousand seven hundred or two thousand eight hundred pounds to the thousand feet.

An hon. MEMBER: What kind of lumber?

Mr. CARVELL: Spruce. We got that lumber hauled, during the winter, from Plaster Rock to Boston, six hundred miles, for fifteen cents for one hundred pounds and we are now getting it hauled for thirteen cents. The Transcontinental railway charged us more than one-third as much money to haul that lumber thirty-two miles as the Canadian Pacific railway, the Maine Central and the Boston and Maine charged to haul it six hundred miles and still we wonder why the Transcontinental cannot make any money or do any business. I found that I could not do anything and that possibly it would be necessary for me to get some politician to see if he could do something.

Mr. COCHRANE: Did you not think of giving me a chance?

Mr. CARVELL: I did not. I am giving my hon. friend a chance now.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, but after the horse has been stolen.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know why I should be bound to run to the minister with everything like that. I suppose that when he puts a man down there he has a man who has sufficient judgment to know what to do. It is no wonder the minister cannot make any money with the class of people who are running things for him. If he had men who knew something about the country and its requirements he might make some money.

Mr. MACDONALD: Who is the superintendent?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know what his name is. I think he lives somewhere west. What is the name of the superintendent?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, I do not wonder.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would not recognize him after your statement.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not suppose you would. I am giving you facts. This is not hearsay; I am now talking of my own personal experience. We got all this lumber out, but about 7,000 feet, hauled it fifteen miles, got it on the Canadian Pacific railway, sent it to Boston, sold it for a considerable price and made some money out of it. I know where the difficulty comes in. They have a rate which they say is the same rate as that charged on any other railway and it is the ordinary traffic rate. But it is only a local freight rate. If you want to haul a carload of lumber over the Canadian Pacific railway they will quote you the same rate. But the difficulty with the Transcontinental is that in New Brunswick they will not recognize anything but a local rate; they will not make any arrangement to give you a through rate to Boston, Montreal or anywhere else. They simply say: There is the rate, take it or leave it. Of course, we left it and we saved a dollar a thousand by leaving it. If they had cut that rate down to three or four cents we would have patronized the road, because we could have hauled the lumber very much more easily to the Transcontinental railway and for probably one-third of what it cost us to haul it to Bristol on the Canadian Pacific railway. But we found that we could haul it out, put it on the cars at Bristol and have it carried on the Canadian Pacific railway cheaper than by taking it to the Transcontinental. The result was that the Transcontinental lost the business. No man need tell me that you could not haul lumber for four cents per hundred pounds for thirty-two miles over such a road as the Transcontinental is. I think I know every foot of that line. It is one of the finest roads in America. An ordinary one hundred per cent engine will haul forty cars of lumber, if necessary, and a one hundred and forty per cent engine will haul fifty or sixty. There are no velocity grades.

Mr. COCHRANE: There is a pusher grade.

Mr. CARVELL: The pusher grade is the other way. The pusher grade is going with the road in this particular case; therefore, you would have a 6/10th grade going west for about fifteen miles and then a one per cent grade going down hill for the rest of the distance. There is no excuse whatever why they should not have done this business, and my hon. friend can figure up the business that he has lost in this case. I could give him some other illustrations, although they do not come within my personal knowledge. At Edmundston my hon. friend's man was offered the transportation of 4,000 carloads of logs at a rate which would have well paid him, but he wanted a rate which would amount to eight or nine dollars a thousand for the logs. The people said: It is impossible; we cannot pay it.

Mr. COCHRANE: Can you give me the particulars of this case?

Mr. CARVELL: I am not positive now of the names, but I think it was the St. John Lumber Company, and the offer was to haul out a large amount of logs from a point west of Edmundston to about St.

Leonard. My hon. friend's superintendent will be able to tell him the particulars of this case. The manager of the concern went to this superintendent personally and tried to get some kind of a rate, but there again they quoted him the local rate, and it was a case of take it or leave it, and they left it. The International Railway Company operates the road running from Campbellton over to St. Leonard. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to investigate he will find that 8,000 car loads of logs have been hauled, partly towards St. Leonard and partly towards Campbellton.

Mr. COCHRANE: Was it logs or lumber?

Mr. CARVELL: Round logs, and they went by the International railway at a figure which made money for the railway and for the operators as well. The minister's railroad could have got an equal amount of business and he could have made money for it, but his superintendent would not do business. If my hon. friend wonders why he cannot make money for his railroad, he should investigate a few things like this and he will see why. I saw in one of the St. John papers that the engineer was down there canvassing for business. He gets his name into the newspaper as though he were trying to do some business; but when men who have business to do and the money to do it with come to him, he won't do business with them. I even tried the political end of it. I got the bank, which had some interest in the matter, to take up that end. A gentleman came to Ottawa and made all sorts of representations. I understand that he succeeded in getting the rate reduced to five cents. We were never notified of that. I inquired a good many times, but I have only been told in the last fortnight that finally they did agree to reduce the rate to five cents.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think that particular case occurred two months ago. I had something to do with that.

Mr. CARVELL: We could not do business at five cents, because we can haul it cheaper by teams fifteen miles. These are some of the reasons why my hon. friend has not done any business. There is plenty of business to be done in that country. He could have mills put in all along the road. We have at the present time 2,000,000 feet of lumber, which is to be sawed this summer and shipped next year. It will not be shipped over that road unless we get a reasonable rate. We shall haul it fifteen miles over the mountains and ship it over the Canadian Pacific railway, where we will get a reasonable rate. In one industry, we have twenty or thirty million feet of lumber which we could handle. The mill was built with the intention of shipping the lumber over the Transcontinental, but we cannot get fair rates and we cannot do the business. I know other gentlemen who have tried to do business, but they can only get a local rate. That is all right if you are hauling your produce to point of destination or consumption. There is no point of consumption at Plaster Rock, because that is only a little village in the middle of the county of Victoria. Therefore, the only way that my friend can do business for that road is to give a through rate. If he gets in mills and does business in that way, it brings passenger traffic and express traffic.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is pretty hard to get a through rate with a road that is operated just as a contractor's road, as this practically is. The Canadian Pacific railway have through connections with Boston. It is a little more difficult than it would be if the Grand Trunk was finished. It would then have its own connections.

Mr. CARVELL: I am not a railroad man, but I cannot accept that proposition from my hon. friend.

Mr. COCHRANE: If you inquire further, you will find out.

Mr. CARVELL: If my friend stated that, I would be bound under the rules of the House to accept his statement; but that is the only condition under which I would do so. The Canadian Pacific railway rate from Plaster Rock to Boston is thirteen cents per hundred. All my hon. friend has to do is to cut his rate down to three cents and a half or four cents, and we will do business. Supposing you had to go to them for a rate? Does my hon. friend mean to tell me, if he went to the Canadian Pacific railway and asked them to give him a rate to Boston, that they would not give it? They would certainly give him some sort of a cut. They would put him in a position to do business and divide the profits. Instead of managing the road by a man who resides somewhere around western Ontario, if he will put a real live man in New Brunswick in charge of the road, he will not lose any money.

Mr. COCHRANE: We are operating east and west through Cochrane. There are settlers in there as well as in New Brunswick, and it is necessary for getting in supplies to finish the road both way. It is necessary that he should go from one place to another.

Mr. CARVELL: That is just what I am objecting to.

Mr. PUGSLEY: You might let the Grand Trunk Pacific operate it.

Mr. COCHRANE: They would not.

Mr. CARVELL: If the road is worth operating, it is worth operating as a business proposition. You cannot have a man three-quarters of the time up at Cochrane and the rest of his time down in New Brunswick trying to run the road by mail. I would suggest to my hon. friend to leave the running of the road to his officials down in New Brunswick. He has a staff of men there who built that road, who know every foot of it and who are practical railroad men. They are not doing much work and are receiving high salaries. They have nothing to do but to operate that road, and they would be glad to do it. If he had left the management of the road to his district engineer and his assistant, he would not have any difficulty. These men are acquainted with business conditions in New Brunswick, and would have been able to do business. They have some pride in the railroad and would like to see it a success. If he cannot trust them, then my next suggestion is to take it out of the hands of a man who resides somewhere around Cochrane and to put it in the hands of a man who resides in New Brunswick and who knows something about local conditions.

Mr. MACDONALD: It seems to me that the wise policy of the minister in regard to that portion of the road would be to impress upon the Grand Trunk Pacific to undertake the operation of it at the earliest possible date. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) tells me they made an offer to operate it. If so, I am surprised the minister did not accept it. The manifest intention of the whole country, which is behind the construction of the National Transcontinental, is that the Grand Trunk people should operate the whole line at the earliest possible date. In the maritime provinces, we have never had the Grand Trunk people there at all. The purpose of the Act, the intention of Parliament and of the whole country was that they should undertake the operation of the road, and the sooner they get to work the better. Anything in the way of a temporary arrangement which does not promote the forming of alliances and originating of connections with the maritime provinces, militates against the success of the enterprise and against the satisfactory operation for many years to come.

Mr. COCHRANE: I should be very glad to take that matter up.

Mr. MACDONALD: The wise policy would be to insist on the Grand Trunk railway taking care of the road. The minister tells us that the operation is now being carried on on these conditions—that any loss that accrues becomes a part of the cost of the road on which the Grand Trunk people have to pay interest. If that is so, manifestly it is to the interest of the Grand Trunk railway people that they should undertake the operation of the completed portion, because they have to pay interest ultimately upon the total cost of the road, and the greater that becomes the greater will be the interest charged. And it is the theory which has become somewhat general in the country that the Grand Trunk railway are rather laggard in carrying out the terms of the agreement and that is an idea which no Minister of Railways ought to permit them to entertain for a moment.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think the hon. gentleman has any authority for making that statement. Certainly, it has never been made by me. I would not like to say to the country that the Grand Trunk are refusing to carry that out. I do not think there is any basis for that statement being made.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am glad to know that there is no foundation for the rumour that the Grand Trunk people have some hesitancy in undertaking the responsibility of this road whenever it is in a position to be operated. But there has been a rumour to that effect in the country. If no proposition to that effect was made to the minister, then the minister is quite right in making his statement. But the rumour has been given currency in the party press of my hon. friend.

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not responsible for the press.

Mr. MACDONALD: I know the hon. gentleman disclaims responsibility. He can get rid personally of the responsibility by saying that his party organs in the country have no responsibility, which is practically what he does say. But the aim and object which this country had in committing to that company the task of dealing with this proposition was that they should operate the whole railway as a Canadian line, and the sooner they begin to do so the better, not only because they might meet cases such as stated by the hon. member for Carleton, but because it is manifestly in their interest that they should begin operation at the earliest day possible to get in touch with maritime provinces conditions, so that, when the Quebec bridge is completed, they may all the sooner deal with the territory in which they have to find the business. I would press upon the minister if he can arrange with the Grand Trunk to operate that road from Moncton to Quebec he should do so; and if, as rumour says, they are willing to undertake it, the minister would be recreant to his duty in not accepting a proposition made on any reasonable terms.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think the minister ought to favour the committee with some information on the point raised by the hon. member for Pictou. Because I am able to state that the Grand Trunk Pacific made a definite offer to the late Government, that offer having been made by the late Mr. Hays when president of the company, to enter upon the operation of the section in New Brunswick, and some of the other sections as they were completed for reasonable distances, furnishing their own rolling stock.

Mr COCHRANE: But they forgot to make it to the Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: They did make it the Government.

Mr COCHRANE: Not to this Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: They agreed to keep count of their operating expenses, and of the receipts and have accounts submitted to the Government for examination, and whatever deficiency there was should be paid by the Government, and that amount should be added to the cost of the Transcontinental on which the Grand Trunk Pacific should pay interest. Does the hon. minister say he never heard of such an offer?

Mr. COCHRANE: They have not made it to us—not as to New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would the hon. gentleman say that he has asked the Grand Trunk Pacific to make an offer?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not, personally.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It seems to me the minister ought to have made inquiry of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I know that on more than one occasion they made definite offers to the late Government. It seems to me all-important that the Grand Trunk Pacific should engage in the operation of the lines in New Brunswick as well as of the other sections. The country cannot expect that gentlemen appointed by the Government to take charge of the temporary operation of the line, knowing that there is to be no permanency in it and that they are not working up business that is to be held for the Government that employs them, but that it will be for the benefit of the Grand Trunk Pacific who are to take over the road ultimately—we cannot expect that they should reach out for business or give the accommodation that would be given by a road that was working up a permanent business for itself. It seems to me that I, as a member of the late Government, having called attention to the fact that the Grand Trunk had made a proposition of this kind——

Mr. HAZEN: How.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In a verbal interview.

Mr. HAZEN: With whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY: With the former Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the former Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), Mr. Fielding and myself.

Mr. HAZEN: Was there any memorandum?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not know. But since the change of Government I had a conversation with the present president of the Grand Trunk Pacific and I asked him if the company were still willing—and I was interested in the matter as representing St. John—to carry out the offer made to the late Government, and he said it was. It seems to me that if the hon. minister has not heard of this before, now that I, having been a member of the late Government, make the statement here he should make inquiry—

Mr. COCHRANE: I told the hon. member for Pictou I should be glad to take it up and deal with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: See the position in which the hon. gentleman is placed. There is a road built with the intention of being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific. My hon. friend, instead of making any inquiry as to whether the company will engage in that operation or not, takes it up as a temporary work and undertakes the operation, and under conditions that cannot give the service that would be given by a company interested in the development of business and in the establishment of industries—and we know how much a railway company can do to build up the industries that would be of profit to the road. Under the offer to which I have referred the Government could not lose anything except interest for a short period, because accountants were to keep track of the earnings and of the operating expenses, and if there was a deficiency it was to be paid by the Government but it was to form part of the cost of the road on which the Grand Trunk Pacific would pay interest. My hon. friend says that, without making any agreement with the company, the Government has the right to operate the road and charge all the losses to capital account. Would he tell us under what section of the statute or agreement that is provided for?

Mr. COCHRANE: I cannot tell my hon. friend now, but I will get the information for him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I will be glad if my hon. friend will do so. I do not think he will find any autnority in the statute or in the agreement authorizing the Government to charge the loss in operating against capital account. I think that is a matter that should be subject to agreement between the company and the Government. Section 9 of the Transcontinental Railway Act of 1903 reads in part as follows:

The construction of the eastern division and the operation thereof, until completed and leased to the company pursuant to the provisions of the agreement, shall be under the charge and control of four commissioners to be appointed by the Governor in Council, who shall hold office during pleasure.

And so on. There is no provision that any loss in operating shall be chargeable to capital account.

Mr. LANCASTER: Has the hon. gentleman referred to the statute of 1904?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, I have read it over very carefully on different occasions, and I can assure the hon. member for Lincoln that I have no recollection of any provision in either the statute of 1904 or the supplementary agreement of that year providing that the loss in operating, by the commissioners or by the Government, shall be chargeable to capital account. Without seeing the company or asking them if they would enter into any such agreement, my hon. friend has taken charge of the operation himself, and says——

Mr. COCHRANE: The commission is doing it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend knows that it could not be done without this Government engaging to ask Parliament to vote the necessary money to pay the deficiency; therefore he cannot escape responsibility by making such a statement. The difficulty experienced by the late Government was that the commissioners had not the power to engage in the operation without provision on the part of Parliament for the money to provide for any deficiency. Does my hon. friend say that the commissioners are doing this without any understanding that a special vote should be made by Parliament, and adding the deficiency to the cost of the road under the general vote?

Mr. COCHRANE: I told the hon. gentleman that I would bring down at a future time the authority under which we were operating the road, and I do not wish to retract one iota of that statement. I have not the information here, but I will get it for him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It does seem to me that, in a most important matter like this—one in which the province of New Brunswick is deeply interested—my hon. friend ought to be able to tell us to-night under what authority this commissioner has undertaken the operation of the road.

Mr. COCHRANE: Does my hon. friend make the absolute statement that he has no authority under the statute or under the agreement?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I make the statement that he has no authority under the statute or the agreement to charge the loss in operation to the cost of the road. If this commissioner has undertaken to operate the road with the idea that he has a right under the law to charge the loss in operation to the cost of the railroad, and is doing that under the general vote for the construction of the Transcontinental railway, I say he is doing that for which he has absolutely no authority under the statute. The only way in which it can be done is by an Act of Parliament or by a special vote authorizing the payment of any deficiency which there might be in the operation of the road. If my hon. friend had approached the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, there is no reason to suppose they would not have carried out the offer they made to the late Government to undertake the operation of the road and to allow any deficiency as between the receipts and expenses to be charged up to capital account, upon which the company would pay interest. On behalf of the constituency which I represent, I desire to say that I think it would be infinitely better that an arrangement should have been made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to operate the line. It is indeed unfortunate that an arrangement was not made with the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, as in that case some arrangement for St. John terminals would probably have been made. In St. John, however, nothing is being done by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway; they are excluded from the operation of that portion of the road which has been completed in New Brunswick. Now that my hon. friend's attention has been called to the matter, it would seem to me to be reasonable, that, in the interests of the country, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should be approached and some arrangement entered into with regard to the matter. I warn the minister to-day, if he has an idea that, under the law, any loss in operating can be charged up to capital account and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company be called upon to pay the interest, he is reckoning without his host, because there is no such authority either in the statute or in the agreement.

Mr. CARVELL: I find that in the month of December last, the St. John Lumber Company of Van Buren, Maine, said they would give a certain amount of lumber during the past winter, and offered the hon. minister a better rate than is being paid to the International road, to which I have already made reference. I find here that the International road were hauling logs at ten dollars per car for fifty-two miles, and eight dollars per car for thirty-two miles, and making money out of it at that.

I come now to the other end of the road at Chipman and Minto. I have been informed that they wanted to send coal to Fredericton which, I understand is eighty-six miles by the Transcontinental and Intercolonial, and then there would be a haul of a few miles over the New Brunswick Coal and Mining Company's road. They asked two dollars a ton for transporting that coal eighty-six miles over about one-half Transcontinental and one-half Intercolonial, and the shippers found that they could get the coal hauled 320 miles over the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and over the Intercolonial at $1.90, or ten cents a ton less than the Transcontinental wanted to haul it twenty miles. After a great deal of figuring they got the price cut down to $1.81, or nine cents less than the New Brunswick Coal and Mining Company and the Intercolonial would haul it 300 miles around by Chatham Junction. That is the way they are trying to do business in New Brunswick and my friend says that they are losing money. They wanted to haul coal to Grand Falls, 126 miles. There is no outside connection whatever, it is all Transcontinental. Over the finest road in America, with no grade more than six-tenths of one per cent, and the best they would do for a 2,000 lb. ton, a distance of 136 miles, was $1.40 a ton. I find that the Intercolonial are hauling coal from Springhill to St. John, 160 miles, for a dollar a ton. That is, the Intercolonial railway will haul coal for one-half of what the Transcontinental will. Then they wonder why they cannot do business and are losing money. I find another case where a gentleman bought a lot of lumber from the construction camp of Corbett & Flood, contractors on District No. 1, six cars were hauled from Moncton to Chipman, thirteen miles, for $36 and the Transcontinental hauled it eleven miles and charged $96 for the six cars, or $16 a car. Then they wonder why they cannot do business. I could give instances of this kind for two or three hours, showing that they are preventing people from doing business, and unless they change their policy and hand it over to somebody who has an interest in the country, I am afraid they will continue to prevent people from doing business.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will the minister not seriously consider the proposition of having the Grand Trunk Pacific take up the operation of that part of the road so that it will be prepared for the end and purpose for which the road is being built?

Mr. COCHRANE: I say again I will be very glad to take it up. This is the third time I have said so.

Mr. GRAHAM: As I understand this item in reference to the Transcontinental, the Minister of Railways was to make a statement concerning it, and that statement having been made and discussed at some length, it does not prevent the items being discussed when they come up in detail.

Mr. COCHRANE: Not at all.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is simply a discussion so that the one-sixth Transcontinental vote can be put in the Bill.

Mr. CARVELL: I understood the minister to say that there was no difficulty in paying the contractors after they got their final estimates and I think he mentioned a contractor near Cochrane who had got the drawback of ten per cent as well as the deposit.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh no. I said the contractors had got their progress estimates less than ten per cent and the security which they had put up and the stringency of the money market made it so hard to raise money that they were endeavouring to get the ten per cent and the security. I said that so soon as the final certificate was obtained, there would not be a great deal of difficulty in adjusting the final settlement.

Mr. CARVELL: I quoted the minister correctly. Have any contractors in New Brunswick been able to get the final estimates?

Mr. COCHRANE: I understand one of them did last week.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad that there is one able to get in on the ground floor. Contract No. 1 has been finished almost two years and so far as I know they have not got their final estimates.

Mr. COCHRANE: We have not been in for two years, why did they not get it before we came in?

Mr. CARVELL: You have been here a year and a half.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know, but you said two years. I only want to be fair, I am not criticising my predecessors, but the final estimate is not as easy a thing, on an undertaking such as this, as you imagine.

Mr. CARVELL: I am not an engineer and not the Minister of Railways, but I have some little knowledge of these things. You had and still have a good force of engineers in New Brunswick. You had a district engineer, an assistant district engineer, a divisional engineer for every fifty miles, and a resident engineer for every ten miles, and the estimates were made every month, checked up, and sent in. I do not think it is such a serious matter to check up these estimates, although I admit it takes some little time to check up the final estimates. Contract No. 2, has been finished only about a year. Contracts Nos. 3 and 4 were finished early in the summer of 1911, and contract No. 5 was finished in December, 1911.

Mr. COCHRANE: Who said they were finished?

Mr. CARVELL: I say so, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. COCHRANE: You think so, and we will take your opinion for what it is worth.

Mr. CARVELL: If you look into the matter you will find that I know what I am talking about. Contract No. 6 has not been finished for so long. I am glad to learn that in connection with one of them—the minister does not say which one—the final certificate was given last week. That is the first contract on which there has been a final certificate. It is remarkable that it has taken a year and a half in some cases to get the final estimate. The fact is that my hon. friends opposite thought a big steal was going on on the Transcontinental railway, and when they got into power, the first thing they did was to try to find out all about that supposed steal. I have no fault to find with the commission; I think they were only trying to do their duty. However, they failed to find a steal. They sent one engineer after another; it has been a sort of endless chain for a year and a half, but they could not find anything wrong, and in order to justify their existence they began to cheese-pare the estimates. They took a little slice off one sub-contract and a little slice off another, acting arbitrarily in certain cases. They said that a certain piece of work had been classified as fifty per cent solid rock and fifty per cent loose rock, and they changed that classification to say forty-five per cent solid rock and fifty-five per cent loose rock. It was a case of one man's guess against another. As nearly as I can find out, they hope to take about $100,000 off $12,000,000 worth of work, and I suppose my hon. friends will tell the country what a great thing they have done. They will have taken so much away from the profits of the sub-contractors; that is what it means. My hon. friend the minister might give his personal attention to some of those things. If he will look at the work of his inspecting engineers during the last year and a half he will find the results are just about what I have said they are. When the engineers came to settle up with the man who says he obtained a settlement last week, they lumped the whole thing. They said: you want so much, and we think you are entitled to so much; let us split the difference. It means that the sub-contractors have had their profits reduced in order to put the minister in a position to say that there was something wrong in the construction of this road by the late Government. I think the hon. minister should give this matter his personal attention and see that those sub-contractors are paid the money to which they are entitled. In some cases they have had their money withheld for three years, and the interest which they have lost on their money represents more than their profits. I think it is treating the sub-contractor in a very unfair manner to cut down their accounts three years after the work has been completed. I could take the minister to a place where his inspecting engineers actually found six inches of leaf mould and clay on a big ledge of rock, which was classified as solid rock, and which any engineer would have classified as solid rock, and where they converted that classification into one of six inches of excavation. In other cases they have actually changed quantities. I can understand an engineer saying: In my judgment your classification is not right, but why they should change quantities is something I cannot understand. Moreover they have refused to give the cross-sections, and the data on which they proceeded, to the contractors. They say, take it or leave it; the contractors want their money, and they take what my hon. friend is willing to give them. I think it would be well for my hon. friend to take into consideration the hardships which have been imposed on some of the sub-contractors in that part of the country in order to enable his friends to make a little political capital. I can take you down to a place where a man was put in a mud-hole in the winter time; they agreed to give him a certain price if he would go in there and do that work. He objected very strenuously. They wanted this mud-hole widened out for drainage purposes; he looked at it and finally he agreed to go in and do the work in consideration of the fact that they pay him a certain price. He did the work, and they put him back to the common excavation price. As a result, this man will lose between $4,000 and $5,000. He cannot sue the Government, as he is only a sub-contractor, and the main contractor cannot get this money out of the Government. I think he would be defeated as a matter of law, because he is bound to take the estimates of the engineers in so far as any questions of classification are concerned. These are some of the things which my hon. friend's engineers in New Brunswick have been doing for the last year and a half. I hope the minister will take some pains to see that justice is done in these cases. While this interferes with the contractor somewhat it interferes with the sub-contractor to a greater extent. The sub-contractor gets $1.25 a yard for solid rock, while the main contractor gets $1.50.

The main contractor loses his commission, but the sub-contractor loses two or three years of hard work that he has put in for the Government and for which he will receive nothing. I hope my hon. friend will give this matter his personal consideration and see that justice is done to the people who have done this work for the Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would like to ask the Minister of Railways out of what vote the loss in operating the Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick is being paid ?

Mr. COCHRANE: I said I would bring the information to my hon. friend and I will bring it to-morrow. I do not have it here and I cannot get it to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not think we should vote this one-sixth until we know that because there is no other vote than the one for construction. I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) if the loss in operating can be paid out of construction. I have the section to which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) referred. It is in the Act of 1903, and it says that:

The expression 'cost of construction,' in the case of the eastern division, shall mean and include all the cost of material, supplies, wages, services and transportation required for, or entering into, the construction of the said eastern division, and all expenditure for right-of-way and other lands required for the purposes of the railway and for terminal facilities, accommodation works and damages and compensation for injuries to lands and for accidents and casualties; cost of engineering, maintenance, repairs and replacement of works and material during construction, and superintendence, bookkeeping, legal expenses, and, generally, costs and expenses occasioned by the construction of the said division, whether of the same kind as, or differing in kind from, the clauses of expenditure specially mentioned, including interest upon the money expended; the interest upon such outlay in each year shall be capitalized at the end of such year, and interest charged thereon at three per cent per annum until the completion of the work and until the lessees enter into possession under the terms of the said lease; and, for the purposes of this agreement, the amount of such cost of construction, including the principal and all additions for interest, to be ascertained in manner aforesaid, shall, on completion, be finally determined and settled by the Government upon the report of such auditors, accountants, or other officers as may be appointed by the Government for that purpose.

That is what the cost of construction is defined to be.

Mr. COCHRANE: The Auditor General would not pay this money if it were not right to do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is for the committee to say.

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. COCHRANE: I admit it, but I will bring the information to-morrow.

Mr. WHITE: (Minister of Finance) What is the particular item?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Item 105—National Transcontinental railway construction. We have had a statement from the Minister of Railways and Canals that the road is being operated at a loss.

Mr. COCHRANE: Information was produced some time ago, in answer to a question that was asked by some hon. member on the other side of the House, showing that the road was being operated at a loss. The actual figures were given.

Mr. PUGSLEY: And charged to what vote?

Mr. COCHRANE: That was not asked and therefore not answered.

Mr. WHITE: (Minister of Finance) I have not had an opportunity of looking over this agreemnt. My hon. friend has correctly quoted from the original agreement the definition of the cost of construction and I should imagine it is precisely as he interpreted it in so far as the eastern division is concerned. I understand the Minister of Railways has been operating the line west of Moncton and my hon. friend raises the question as to how the loss in operation will be paid. The only clause I can find having any bearing on the question of operation does not appear to touch that particular point. It appears to be section 3 of the supplementary agreement of February 18, 1904. At the conclusion of that agreement are these words:

Subject always to the paramount right of the said commissioners to use and operate the same without any payment of tolls or other compensation for such purposes as they may deem necessary or expedient in the execution of their commission.

I do not know of any section in any Act that would immediately touch this point but I submit to my hon. friend that it is not necessary for the purpose of voting this particular fraction of the estimates that this should be determined to-night for the reason that, whether this loss is properly charged or not, is a question of law to be determined by an interpretation of the legislation bearing upon it. If, as the Minister of Railways says, it cannot be charged to construction, and I do not see anything here which would authorize it—

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Minister of Railways has not said that it is not being charged to construction. He has led us to believe that it is being charged to construction.

Mr. WHITE: I am not passing on that. If it is not, then, of course, it cannot be, but if it is chargeable, why then it can be. But as far as voting this one-sixth is concerned, I do not see that it should interfere with the vote of one-sixth because the remaining five-sixths will have to be dealt with and, if the loss may not be legally charged to this appropriation, it will not be and, if it can, no question will arise. For the purposes of the discussion of this one-sixth vote, we need not stop to decide what is essentially a legal question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There is more involved in it than that. Surely the Act of 1904 made provision contemplating that the Grand Trunk Pacific should operate portions of the railway as completed because it says:

Pending the completion of the eastern division by the Government, the company shall be entitled to lease from the commissioners, to be appointed under the said Act, and to operate such portions of the eastern division as may from time to time be completed, but upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the company and the said commissioners.

The company made an offer to the previous Government to operate the road on what I thought were exceedingly fair terms; they would provide the rolling stock, they would keep an accurate account, subject to the supervision of the Government, as to the operating expenses and receipts, and if there was any deficiency, that deficiency should be added to the capital amount. They were willing to agree to that. According to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, without making any effort whatever to enter into an agreement with the company under the terms of that section, without asking them if they were willing to operate the section through New Brunswick, as I contend absolutely without authority contained in the agreement or in the statute, and absolutely without any money being voted by Parliament for the purpose, it appears that the Government has undertaken through this gentleman, Mr. Leonard, who has been made the sole commissioner after the other commissioners were dismissed, to operate this road in a manner which is not advantageous to the people of New Brunswick and not one-tenth as advantageous as it would be if it was operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is important for my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to look into the matter. I am fortified in the statement which I make by the fact that the late Minister of Justice thought that there was no authority whatever for the commissioners to operate the road unless Parliament voted the money especially for that purpose. My hon. friend, or his commissioner, Mr. Leonard, seems to have thought that he could go on arbitrarily in defiance of the agreement and of the statute, notwithstanding that there was no vote of Parliament at all for operation, and make the Grand Trunk Pacific pay the interest on it. He has chosen to do that in an illegal and arbitrary manner instead of taking the step which it is pointed out should be taken in the Act of 1904 in the third section, which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has referred to.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The right of the Grand Trunk Pacific to lease a portion or portions of the line is provided by this clause:

Subject to the paramount right of the said commissioners to use and operate the same without any payment—of tolls or other compensation for such purposes as they deem necessary or expedient for the execution of the commission—pending the completion.

What that means in my judgment is that the Grand Trunk Pacific

Shall be entitled to lease from the commissioners appointed under the said Act and to operate such portions of the eastern division as may from time to time be completed, and then upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the company and the said commissioners, which terms are not to be more onerous than those of the lease of the whole division by the said contract provided for, save in so far as may be necessary to give full effect to the peramount right of the said commissioners next hereinafter mentioned.

The wording is not very clear. One would look in the next clause to find the paramount right of the commissioners. It is evident that the concluding part of the sentence is the paramount right. Pending the completion of a line, any portion that is completed may be leased by the Grand Trunk Pacific if the terms can be agreed upon, providing they are not to be more onerous than the terms in the lease. Pending the completion, that right is subject to the authority of the commissioner to operate.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The paramount right referred to is the paramount right in the last clause, because it says:

Save in so far as may be necessary to give full effect to the paramount right of the said commissioner next hereinafter referred to.

This is the paramount right:

Subject always to the paramount right of the said commissioners to use and operate the same without any payment of tolls or other compensation for such purposes as they may deem necessary or expedient in the execution of their commission.

Supposing a hundred miles were finished west of Moncton, and the Grand Trunk Pacific were operating that under terms of section 3, but there was a further piece west of that hundred miles which was under construction and the commissioners wanted to haul supplies, they would be allowed to haul the supplies up to the point of construction without paying any tolls to the Grand Trunk Pacific. There is no authority whatever for the commissioner to operate and to charge up to capital account against the company loss in operation. The statute points out clearly that an arrangement should be entered into between the commissioner and the Grand Trunk Pacific under which they should operate. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that there is no power whatever to do what has been done. In order to cover any deficiency, there would have to be a special vote of Parliament for the purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM: The late Government, after consulting with the Minister of Justice, decided that we had no power to allow the commissioners to operate the line and to charge the loss, if any, to capital, unless we got a special vote of Parliament for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Assuming that a vote of Parliament was required, my hon. friend knows that so far as voting one-sixth on account is concerned, this question need not preclude that from being done, the arrangement being that the minister will bring down the information. If it cannot be charged legally, of course it cannot.

Mr. EMMERSON: Has it not been paid already?

Mr. COCHRANE: I suppose it has.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The only way in which it could be paid, is for Mr. Leonard to put it against construction account, which clearly would be improper. My reason for emphasizing the matter is that I hope the Minister of Railways will enter into a lease with the company.

Mr. COCHRANE: For the fourth time, I say I shall.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I shall be very glad if my hon. friend will do so.

Mr. MACDONALD: This whole question is part of the agreement under which we are dealing with Supply. We on this side of the House feel pretty strongly about the question of including in the amount of the vote the money that the minister says will be necessary for the purpose of operating this part of the Transcontinental. I would suggest that the matter stand over until to-morrow and that the minister then come down with his statement showing that he has the necessary authority, and, if he cannot show that, he should give some understanding in regard to the matter, so that it can be made a special vote.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is right. The arrangement was arrived at that one-sixth of these estimates was to be voted. The Minister of Railways has given his assurance several times that he would furnish the information—

Mr. MACDONALD: It is not a matter of information but a matter of having authority.

Mr. ROGERS: That will be given. To-morrow we can have concurrence in the item, and the minister will have the information here before the House is asked to concur.

Mr. MACDONALD: It is not a question of information. So far as I am concerned, I wish to say, that while we have no desire to delay this matter—we have perhaps discussed it too long—yet this is a very important proposition. I do not propose to be bound, when we come to concurrence, to vote for this unless the minister is able to satisfy the House that he has the authority under that agreement. I doubt very much that he has it. Without any agreement we should not vote money for that purpose.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As concurrence is to be asked to-morrow, how would it do to pass this to-night pending concurrence?

Mr. MACDONALD: But we are not to be bound against raising objections to-morrow.

An hon. MEMBER: You can raise the question on concurrence.

Mr. MACDONALD: But we do not want to be told that we might have raised the question to-night.

Mr. WHITE: I have here the items to be voted:

That a sum not exceeding the amounts set forth below (being one-sixth of the main estimates not yet adopted) be granted to His Majesty on account of the following services for the year ending 31st March, 1914.

Mr. GRAHAM: That one-sixth would not include new works. That is why we discussed the Halifax matter—because the Prime Minister wanted to make this an exception. We spent the whole time on that item.

Mr. WHITE: The arrangement between the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition was that subject to a discussion of the $2,500,000 item for Halifax, and a statement to be made with reference to the National Transcontinental expenditure, which request appeared to be reasonable, one-sixth of the estimates for the fiscal year 1913-1914 would be granted. That was my understanding of the arrangement arrived at. As to new works for 1913-14, I suppose that would affect all the items except civil government or those works which have actually been begun.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is really what was done before. New votes were to be excepted. I made it clear in discussing the Halifax matter with the Prime Minister and I think hon. gentlemen will agree that the understanding was that we were in Intercolonial railway supply for the purpose of the Prime Minister making a statement so that he could make out a case for Halifax being treated as an exception.

Mr. ROGERS: I think my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), is in error. I am satisfied that the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition arrived at an understanding that the vote of one-sixth of all the items brought down should be given.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. ROGERS: Excuse me a moment. The leader of the Opposition put forward the statement that it would be necessary, before this could be adopted, to have certain explanations in regard to works that were undertaken by the Public Works Department at the city of Quebec and also in regard to the Welland canal vote, also in regard to the Transcontinental and the Halifax improvements.

Mr. MACDONALD: These were exceptions.

Mr. ROGERS: No. And afterwards the leader of the Opposition informed the leader of the Government that it would not be necessary to discuss either the matter of the work at Quebec or the Welland canal, but before the one-sixth was voted he would ask some explanation in regard to Halifax and the Transcontinental railway. That is the agreemenet as I understand it of what took place between the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Government, and I think it will be found that it will be borne out by the leader of the Opposition himself.

Mr. GRAHAM: I asked the leader of the Opposition before he went home tonight and he told me that the one-sixth was absolutely not to include any new work except that for Halifax which we agreed to before the discussion was over. After conferring with him, I agreed to Halifax being made an exception. The Prime Minister could not have misunderstood, for I made the statement in the debate, and I thought he nodded in acquiescence. I am sure that a reference to the report of the debate will show that.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I think it would be difficult to pick out the estimates of new works even if it were advisable to accept the vote of one-sixth of the estimates for other than new works alone. If there is a misunderstanding it will have to be cleared up. My understanding is certainly different from that of the hon. member for South Renfrew. And I believe that in such proceedings in the past, the custom has been to vote one-sixth, or whatever was agreed upon, to apply to the entire estimates for the fiscal year. I am advised that under no circumstances in the past have new works been discriminated against.

Mr. GRAHAM: Oh, yes. We made Halifax an exception on the occasion referred to.

Mr COCHRANE: How did you let the contract then?

Mr. GRAHAM: Because we made it an exception and put it in as a new work. I think the item was $800,000, and I brought it down and it went through.

Mr. MACDONALD: I spoke to the leader of the Opposition immediately after his conference with the leader of the Government, and he told me that the agreement was as stated by the hon. member for South Renfrew. And that is the understanding of hon. gentlemen around me. Halifax was made an exception in 1911 because the leader of the Opposition represented Halifax, and wanted the work to go on.

Mr. WHITE: It is evident that we are both under the disadvantage of having been informed by our respective leaders as to an arrangement which has apparently taken place, and in respect of which there appears to be some misunderstanding. I think this matter should stand over until to-morrow, because it would be quite impossible to separate the new from the old.

Mr. PELLETIER: What did my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) mean by new works which would be excluded?

Mr. EMMERSON: Here is an illustration: 'Water supply.'

Mr. GRAHAM: My understanding of the arrangement would be that any item for which there was no vote last year would be absolutely new.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is surely mistaken as to this, because the leader of the Opposition particularly discussed the amount voted for the Welland canal, and that is an entirely new vote.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Welland canal is not a new vote.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sorry there should be any misunderstanding in the matter, and unless hon. gentlemen are disposed to carry out the arrangement, we cannot accept anything else.

Mr. PELLETIER: The dry-dock for the port of Quebec appears in the estimates for the first time; would that be a new work?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 1.30 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 1, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. EMMERSON: I call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the following, which appears in the Montreal Gazette of this morning:

Moncton, N.B., March 31.—M. T. Sidall, defeated Conservative candidate in the last federal election in Westmorland, speaking before the Conservative Club here to-night, declared that the Intercolonial railway board of management would be dissolved in a very short time and a new man put in charge of the Government railway. He said that the board was practically a thing of the past now.

Is there any truth in this statement?

Mr. COCHRANE: The board is still in existence; and any further explanation I shall be glad to bring down to the House, as soon as possible.

Mr. EMMERSON: That is very illuminating.

RANCHING REGULATIONS.

Mr. KNOWLES: I desire to ask the acting Minister of the Interior a question, and I am sure he will give an answer that has more meat in it than that which we have just heard.

Mr. COCHRANE: Lots of meat in that.

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall hope to get even more. Has the commission appointed some months ago to take evidence concerning the ranching industry in the West, reported? I believe it has, and, if so, may we see the report? Also, are the ranching regulations being changed, and, if so, when may we expect the new regulations as to leases to be brought down?

Mr. CROTHERS: I am not familiar with the details of this matter. I will look into it and let hon. member know as soon as possible.

COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE STRIKES.

Mr. KNOWLES: Has anything been done with a view to create a permanent commission—perhaps analogous to the Railway Commission—to conduct investigations in connection with strikes? Has the minister had any correspondence with labour organizations or railway brotherhoods in regard to the matter, and will he kindly tell us how far its consideration has proceeded?

Mr. CROTHERS: I have no recollection at the present time of having received any communication touching upon the matter.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think the minister has himself written letters to certain representatives of railway brotherhoods.

Mr. CROTHERS: It has not been decided to establish such a commission at the present time.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON STEEL RAILS.

On motion for Committee of Supply:

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): Before this motion is put to the House, there is a matter which I wish to discuss very briefly. On the 16th of January, the leader of the Opposition, asked of the Government the following questions:

1. Has a remission of customs duties been given to the Algoma Steel Company on steel rails imported by the said company at Fort William.
2. If so, at what date and for what amount, under what statute and what section of the same?

On January 20, the following reply was given:

1. Yes.
2. This remission was made at various dates after June 1, 1912, under section 92 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. The whole of the remission was $294,000, being one-half the duty on 75,000 gross tons imported steel rails. 50,000 tons of these rails were for the use of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway and 25,000 tons for branch lines of the Canadian Pacific railway in the Northwest. The said steel rails were urgently required by the said railway companies for the completion of lines in the northwest provinces in time to be available for the movement of the crop, and evidence was submitted showing that the rail producing companies of Canada would not be able to supply the rails required, or any part thereof, by reason of being under contract for their full output for the season.

At a subsequent date the leader of the Opposition moved for a return of all correspondence between the interested parties and the Government relating to this matter, and in due course a return was brought down. It is this rather remarkable and incomprehensible transaction that I wish to discuss very briefly for the purpose of eliciting, if possible, some additional reasons for the peculiar course pursued by the Government in regard thereto. Early in the year 1912, as would appear from the return submitted, several letters were addressed to the Minister of Railways from the western provinces of Canada urging the speedy completion of certain lines of railway then under construction, for the purpose of meeting the transportation demands of these provinces in the autumn season. The subject of this correspondence, which was substantially in the nature of a complaint against the tardy completion of the projected lines in the West, was communicated to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company by the Minister of Railways for the purpose of calling its attention to the complaints in that regard. On January 26, a letter was addresed to the Minister of Railways by Mr. W. Wainwright, second vice-president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company:

Answering yours of the 17th instant, with enclosures herewith returned, I have to say that we now have one hundred miles graded west from Regina on this line, and it is not contemplated doing any more work on it the present season. We have five hundred miles of grade ready now for rails, and are unable to get rails, owing to rolling mills being overloaded with work. You will see there is little object in spending additional money in grading more lines unless we can get some relief in the rail situation.

On March 7, I find by the return that another letter on the same subject was addressed to the Prime Minister by the late C. M. Hays, former president of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, dated March 7, which was as follows:

The position in regard to steel rail, by reason of the inability of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Algoma Steel Company to make deliveries of rail required by us in connection with our branch lines in the Canadian Northwest, is such that I fear there is going to be great criticism of the railway and of the Government as well unless we can secure relief in some direction. We were unable to obtain from either mill the amount of rail ordered last year and both companies entered the season largely in deficit of their deliveries of rail ordered by the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific railways. The Algoma Steel Company was owing us on their contract of May 29, 1911, 12,500 tons of rail, which had to be postponed to 1912. The Dominion Iron and Steel Company were owing us on their contract of October 31, 1911, 15,000 tons of rail, delivery of which had to be carried over into this year. We now have some 500 miles of new grade in Saskatchewan and Alberta ready for track laying, and it was our intention to have laid all of this track the coming season if we could have secured the necessary deliveries from Canadian mills, which, it now appears, it is going to be impossible for us to do. The mileage referred to would require in round numbers 50,000 tons of rail, and upon asking the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Algoma Steel Company for tenders, we received replies, as per attached copy from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company under date of January 17, wherein they explain they are not in a position to make any promises of other tonnage until late next fall. The Algoma Steel Company replied under date of January 23, as per copy attached, from which you will note they are prepared to guarantee delivery of 25,000 tons up to the end of November.

This of course will reach us too late to be of any advantage for the coming season. All of this rail should have been delivered not later than July so that we may have it laid and in readiness for taking out the grain, which as you know commences to move in August and September, and if delivery of the rail is delayed beyond the month last named it may as well go over until next year. I am writing you on the subject to ask if your government will not consider the matter and advise if they cannot see their way clear to suspend the application of duties on the amount of rail required, as hereinbefore named, say, 50,000 tons, to enable us to obtain delivery in time to get the track laid this year and relieve the demands of the settlers for transportation along our graded lines, which are sure to reach us in some very forcible form later on unless they see the track is going to be in readiness to do business this fall. The conditions pertaining to the construction of these branch lines are such as to make us feel we are not warranted in incurring the increased cost, approximately $10 per ton, if we get no relief in the matter of duty. I understand the Saskatchewan Government have already passed a unanimous resolution calling on the Dominion Government to suspend duties on rails to enable the railways to complete their branch lines in that province.

This concludes Mr. Hays' letter. The letter which he received from the representative of the Algoma Steel Company and which was an inclosure in the letter I have just read was as follows:

Referring again to yours of the 12th instant inquiring regarding additional tonnage of rails for delivery before the close of navigation this year, we have now heard from our principals, the Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., and are prepared to guarantee delivery of up to 25,000 tons before the end of November next. We could probably divide the tonnage about equally during October and November, and might possibly be able to give you some quantity in September.

Extensive additions and alterations to our mill are now being planned, and we expect to have things working in good shape by the 1st of July next. If our hopes are entirely realized, we would be able to give you some tonnage over and above 25,000 tons referred to if a little later on you find that you require it.

We would appreciate it very much if you could let us know promptly as possible if you wish us to book the additional 25,000 tons or any part thereof, as we anticipate inquiry for further heavy tonnage for this years' delivery, and would like to deal with such inquiries as they are received.

Yours faithfully,
Drummond McCall Co.,
General Sales Agents,
The Algoma Steel Company, Ltd.

The letter from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, which was also an inclosure in Mr. Hays' letter, and dated January 17, 1912, signed by the general sales agent of that company, was in part as follows:

Replying to your favour of the 12th instant, in reference to additional rails for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, we are sorry to have to say that at the moment we have closed for heavy tonnages to be delivered at Fort William during the season of open navigation this year. As a matter of fact we have already chartered all the steamers available for that trade, and if for no other reason this would prevent us from quoting for delivery at this point.

The letter of Mr. Hays, or copies of it, were apparently transmitted by the Prime Minister to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Algoma Steel Company. The general manager of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company acknowledged the letter of the Prime Minister on the 17th of March, and replied in part:

On October 23, 1911, we booked for the Grand Trunk railway 26,000 tons and at that time our general sales agent endeavoured to secure an order from the Grand Trunk Pacific. Unfortunately for us they were not in a position on that date to place an order, in consequence thereof we proceeded to get busy and otherwise placed our capacity so that we are not now in a position to supply any rails until November, 1912.

I refer to that letter for the purpose of emphasizing the point that apparently there was a time, in the fall of 1911, when the Grand Trunk Pacific might have contracted with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company for their rail demands for the whole season of 1912, if they had cared to make a contract.

The reply of the Algoma Steel Company to the Prime Minister was dated March 13, and as it is rather an important letter, I must read portions of it. It reads:

Mr. Hays states that the Algoma Steel Company were owing on the contract of the 29th of May, 1911, 12,500 tons of rails. This calculation of Mr. Hays evidently includes some rails for the Grand Trunk which it was agreed to stand over until 1912 when the order of the Grand Trunk Pacific was booked. As a matter of fact the Algoma Steel Company were short delivered to the Grand Trunk at the close of navigation, 1911, 3,570 tons, equivalent to about eighteen miles.

Omitting certain portions of the letter I again read:

I note that in Mr. Hays' letter he states that the conditions pertaining to the construction of branch lines are not such as would warrant their paying an increased cost approximating $10 per ton. He, therefore, asks that the Government should rebate the total amount of duty on the 50,000 tons of rail required. Mr. Hays further states that he requires rails for delivery before the end of July.

If certain conditions could be agreed to between the Government and the Algoma Steel Company, that company would be prepared to enter into a contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific to supply the 50,000 tons of rails for deliveries desired by Mr. Hays, namely, before the end of July at one dollar per ton advance over present contracts, we are to have the option to supply standard American rails in case of inability to deliver from our own works within the specified time.

The conditions referred to above would be that the Government would allow the Algoma Steel Company, if necessary, to import the rails subject to a rebate of 50 per cent of the duty. I submit that under such an agreement the rails would be made in Canada if it is possible to do so. The rails will be delivered within the time specified by the Grand Trunk Pacific and the west would be satisfied or at least there would be no delay due to lack of supply of rails. The Government would receive, in case all the rails are imported, about $180,000 in duty and the Algoma Steel Company, to justify its position, stands ready to take care of the balance of the loss incurred.

The Grand Trunk Pacific would only be called on to pay $1 per ton extra instead of $10 per ton as mentioned by Mr. Hays. If this proposal is to be carried out it will be necessary that we should have immediate advice in regard to the duty as time is growing short and it will be necessary to decide on the manufacture and ordering of the rails to ensure delivery on the date called for by Mr. Hays.

Under the same date I find on the file another letter from Mr. Drummond, the president of the Algoma Steel Company, addressed to the right hon. the Prime Minister, which is rather a peculiar communication and which I must refer to in a little more detail later. It is as follows:

Dear Mr. Borden,—In reference to my letter of to-day in re Grand Trunk Pacific rails, I feel that the granting of a rebate of the duty to a railway company, or buyer, would be fraught with danger to the industry. One can never tell where it would end and each lot called for would go completely out of Canada, while, on the other hand, if the matter is dealt with as I propose, all the claims made by Mr. Hays will be met and we will have a chance to make rails at the Sault or to purchase from Sydney or at least to manufacture a portion in Canada. Then, again, we only ask for a rebate of 50 per cent and that Mr. Hays should contribute only $1 per ton instead of incurring an extra cost of $10 per ton as stated by him; and at the worst the government revenue would benefit to the extent of $3.92 per gross ton for the quantity imported, while, according to Mr. Hays' idea, there would be nothing in it for the Government or anybody else on this side of the line.

I, therefore, trust you will see your way to meet the situation through us, and if you will advise us that a rebate of fifty per cent (50 per cent) of the duty will be allowed us on any rails we may have to import against this 50,000 ton order, we will take the matter up with the Grand Trunk Pacific on the lines I have suggested; and you could write Mr. Hays stating you understand we are prepared to make a satisfactory proposition to his company.

For my part, I would simply make the proposition to supply the rails at one dollar ($1) per ton over our present contracts, with the option to supply foreign rails for any part of the order, and guaranteeing delivery within the specified time.

Such is the contents of this letter of March 13, which, as I have said, is a most remarkable communication indeed.

Mr. CARROLL: Who is it from?

Mr. MACLEAN: It is from Mr. T. J. Drummond the president of the Algoma Steel Company. He is quite willing that permission should be granted by the Government for the importation of 75,000 tons of rails into Canada, with a remission of duties to the extent of fifty per cent, but this remission must be made to the Algoma Steel Company, and the importation must be made through them. He protests that it would possibly be a great injury to the industry if the railway companies were allowed to do that which they asked permission to do themselves. He says:

One never can tell where it would end, and each lot called for what would go completely out of Canada, while, on the other hand, if the matter is dealt with as I propose, all the claims made by Mr. Hays will be met and we will have a chance to make the rails at the Sault.

I do not know what Mr. Drummond meant by the use of the word 'lot,' but I presume he meant it to be synonymous with money. In a word he says that if the railway companies were permitted to import these rails with a remission of duty partially or wholly, the money would go out of the country. I do not quite understand what he means by saying that the remission of the duties to the manufacturer would be no injury to the industry, while, if the railway companies, consumers and importers were to obtain the remission, a great injury would be done to the industry. I think this is an instance of very poor reasoning indeed. He urges the establishment of this agreement with the Government upon the ground that, in any event, the Government would get fifty per cent of the duty, which would mean $3.92 per gross ton, while according to the suggestion of Mr. Hughes, the Government would obtain no duties whatever, and as Mr. Drummond says:

There would be nothing in it for the Government or anybody else on this side of the line.

Now, I think Mr. Drummond must have had in mind, when he used the words 'or anybody else,' that he anticipated a profit for his company in this transaction. I think it is some evidence of the inference, which one can very fairly draw after reading all the papers, that in the end the Algoma Steel Company must have had some profit, and must have entered into the transaction in the hope of making a profit, and not as would appear from other portions of the Government return, that the arrangement was upon the distinct understanding that they were to make no profit. There is another thing in connection with this letter which I would like to point out. Apparently Mr. Drummond was using the Government as a weapon to drive the Grand Trunk Pacific into the arrangement to buy 50,000 tons of rails. He says:

We will take the matter up with the Grand Trunk Pacific on the lines I have suggested, and you can write Mr. Hays stating that you understand we are prepared to make a satisfactory proposition to his company.

I should say they would be in a position to make a satisfactory proposition to the company, a proposition which the Grand Trunk Pacific could hardly refuse to accept if the Algoma Steel Company were armed with the weapon which at that time they were seeking to obtain through the Government, and which they eventually did obtain. Under this arrangement which Mr. Drummond desired with the Government, it was further stipulated that the Grand Trunk Pacific were to pay one dollar per ton additional to the contract price obtaining on rails during that season. There is nothing in the correspondence to indicate why that additional imposition should have been made upon the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. I think that is a matter which requires some explanation from the Government. Further negotiation took place between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Algoma Steel Company, and I presume, between the Algoma Steel Company and the Dominion Government, and eventually a contract was made between the Algoma Steel Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific for the delivery of 50,000 tons of rails at Port Arthur, and for the delivery of 25,000 tons to the Canadian Pacific railway at the same point. Apparently no formal contract was made between the steel company and the railway companies. At least none appears on the file; but I think the substance of the arrangement appears in a memorandum made by the Minister of Railways for the information of the Minister of Customs. That memorandum I find upon the file under date June 19, 1912, and it is as follows:

Memorandum for Hon. Minister of Customs.

Referring to your recommendation for the remission of one-half the customs duty on steel rails by the Algoma Steel Company, the agreement made with this company by the Department of Railways and Canals was that they be allowed to import 50,000 tons for use on Grand Trunk Pacific and 25,000 tons for use of Canadian Pacific railway all in western provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Those two companies had 500 miles graded ready for rails. Farmers in West absolutely needed the road to get out crop. The steel companies in Canada were unable to supply sufficient rails on such short notice from their mills in Canada. In order to assist the getting out of crop of this year this arrangement was made, in granting this remission, it still makes the Algoma Steel Company lose money on the rails they purchase in the United States although paying one-half the duty and it was only when this was shown the agreement was made.

I have this observation to make, that in the communications from Mr. Drummond to the Prime Minister he laid considerable stress upon the fact that in all probability his company would be able to manufacture and deliver the rail requirements of the Grand Trunk Pacific for that season, namely 50,000 tons, and throughout his correspondence it would appear that he desired to impress the Prime Minister with the fact that while he was asking for the arrangement for a remission of fifty per cent of the duty, there was still a strong probability that only a portion of that quantity of rails, would in the end be imported by him, and that the demands would be met by the manufacturers of the rails at their own plant at the Sault. There appears upon the file a memorandum from Mr. Jas. A. Russell, of the Finance Department, which shows the price the Algoma Steel Company were paying for the rails imported. It is dated July 3, and is as follows:

I hereby certify that I have examined the records of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, relating to the purchase and delivery of the steel rails from the Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., and I find that the steel rails referred to in the recommendation of the Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, to His Royal Highness, the Governor General in Council, dated the 2nd of July, 1912, were received by the said Grand Trunk Pacific Company at Fort William and that the contracts set forth in letters from the Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., provides that 50,000 tons (of 2,240 pounds) of steel rails will be delivered at Fort William, Ont., at the price of $31.50 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including freight and duty.

On this memorandum there is an additional minute to the effect that the cost to the Algoma Steel Company of the rails imported from the United States and delivered at Fort William was $27.50 per gross ton, to which is added as part of the cost, half the duty, or $3.92, making the cost delivered, and including freight and duty, $31.42 per ton, which apparently would only represent a marginal profit of eight cents per ton to the Algoma Steel Company, if $32.50 was the price paid by the railways to the Algoma Steel Company. However, it does not appear to be very clear upon the record, what was the actual price paid by the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific railway to the Algoma Steel Company. I wish to point out further that there is nothing in the way of conclusive information to show what was the price actually paid for the rails imported by the Algoma Steel Company. It is very easy to understand that the bills of lading, or the invoices, would not disclose the actual price paid by the the Algoma Steel Company to the United States Steel Company, who were the sellers of these rails.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): They have to make an affidavit under the Customs Act as to the prices paid.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I noticed by the invoices that there was a considerable importation of rails of second quality and the price paid was $26.17. I do not know what was the exact proportion of the total importations which represented rails of second quality but there was a very considerable quantity. At the selling price in the United States of $26.17, there would be a very considerable profit to the Algoma Steel Company. We are entitled to some more information than the documents placed before us afford to show that by this arrangement they did not make a profit of some kind. In all the correspondence placed upon the table of the House, there is nothing to indicate what the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific railway was. There is no request, apparently, from that railway to the Government asking for leave to import rails with a total, or a partial remission of duty. The Government should afford some additional information upon this point.

It does look as if the Canadian Pacific railway did not require to import any rails last year, and it does not appear that they ever made any request for a remission of duties of any kind. Surely, if they had made such a request, there would be some evidence of the negotiations in the file of papers which was produced at the request of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. It has frequently happened in this country—too often, I fear—that when any concession is made to any other railways in Canada, leave first must be asked of the Canadian Pacific railway, or their opinion must be asked, before the Government venture to take any action. I do trust that, when some gentlemen representing the Government speak upon this matter, they will be able to give us some reasons why remissions of duties were made on importations for the Canadian Pacific railway.

Now, remissions of duty are made under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. The section applicable in that respect is 92, which reads as follows:

The Governor in Council, whenever he deems it right and conductive to the public deems it right and conducive to the public His Majesty, imposed or authorized to be imposed by any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

That is the statutory authority under which the duty remissions were made in the matter I am discussing, and that is the authority under which remissions of duty are always made. I submit to the Government, and I suppose they will not controvert this statement, that the remission of duties is a serious matter and should never be agreed to except when it is absolutely right and conducive to the public good. Unless these conditions are absolutely fulfilled by the claimants for remission, the power to remit duties should never be exercised by the Government. In this particular case, the question obviously is: Was it a matter of absolute right, was it conducive to the public good, was it in the public interest, that a remission of duties should have been made to either the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Algoma Steel Company to the extent of $294,000? Were there any facts or circumstances in connection with the whole affair which warranted the modification of the statutes of this country in relation to the customs tariff? I doubt if there were. No good reason has yet been afforded Parliament for the course pursued by the Government. I cannot conceive of any other additional information which can be given us. It was not necessarily conducive to the public good, and no public interests were to be served in this case by the remission of the duty. The Canadian railways could have imported these rails themselves and have paid the duties thereon. The railways of Canada are public utilities which have been very generously aided by the people of this country. While they perform a great public service, of which every Canadian is justly proud, I do not think their circumstances are such that they are entitled at any time to a remission of duty in preference to any other class in this country. If, in 1912, the railways were entitled to a remission of duty simply on the ground that it would save them some money, what could be said about the great consuming classes of this country during that year, particularly in the matter of foodstuffs, when in some places the consumption greatly outran the production, and importations were being made from other countries? If any relaxation is to be made in the customs tariff, it should be made in the interests of those classes which will benefit the most thereby. The Canadian railways should have placed in 1911 their order for rails for 1912. It is perhaps unfair, as Mr. Drummond urged, to the rail producing concerns of this country to expect that they should be ready to deliver rails on short notice. According to the letter which I read from Mr. McNaughton sales agent of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, in the fall of 1911 he urgend the Grand Trunk Pacific railway to place with him an order for a greater rail tonnage than they did. Had they done so, I have not the slightest doubt that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company would have been able to supply before July 1912 the amount of rails required by that month. For these reasons, I doubt very much if a remission should have been made even to the railway companies. If a remission was to have been made, I say most emphatically that it should have been made directly to the purchasers and users of the rails. If the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway were urgently in need of rails in 1912, and the producing mills of this country were unable to meet the demands, and if it were considered desirable to make a remission of duty on the importations the remission should have been made to the people who needed the rails. I cannot conceive of any justification whatever for the remission of duty to the Algoma Steel Company who were manufacturers of rails, who were the beneficiaries of a protective tariff and who asked, in conjunction with other rail producers in this country, for such a tariff as would give them the Canadian market. I do not see how they could in honour and in justice have asked for a remission of duty, or why they should have assumed the role of an ordinary vendor and importer in this particular connection, instead of allowing these services to have been performed by the Canadian railways. In all the negotiations which appear from the correspondence placed before the House, there seems to be a lack of good faith on the part of the Algoma Steel Company in their negotiations with the Government. They did not state frankly that they would be unable to manufacture the whole or a part of the amount of rails required by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. It is true that, by implication they made it clear to the Government that they would require to import some portion of the 50,000 tons; still they always intimated, in a veiled manner at least, that if the Government would grant the arrangement requested, they would obtain the rails either by manufacturing the whole or part themselves, by purchasing a portion from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and by importing any balance, which they could not manufacture or obtain in this country. There is the other fair deduction from the correspondence of the Algoma Steel Company, that, in their endeavours to secure this arrangement with the Government, they had always in mind the natural result that in the transaction some little profit would accrue to them. I may be wrong in that, and of course I speak subject to correction. Construing section 92 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act literally, and I think in its true spirit, I believe it was never intended to repose in the Governor in Council the power of remission of duty to any except the ordinary importer and consumer. Respecting the whole matter, the House is entitled to some additional explanation. The Government should explain why a remission of duty was made on rails imported by the Canadian Pacific railway when, apparently, there was no request for it from that company.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): In answering my hon. friend, I shall deal first with the assurance referred to by the leader of the Opposition. The assurance which was given to the Algoma Steel Company—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The agreement.

Mr. WHITE: The assurance, that this remission would be made, was given by my right hon. friend the leader of the Government and the Minister of Railways after consultation with their colleagues. There is no contract or written document evidencing that assurance, but the assurance was given subsequent to the receipt of the correspondence brought down, in which the situation existing in the West and the situation with respect to the supply of steel rails were disclosed to the Government. My hon. friend has laboured rather hard to make a case, and I do not think he has succeeded even in satisfying himself that there is any irregularity or impropriety in this transaction. He is engaged in the task, so familiar to hon. gentlemen opposite, of trying to make mountains out of molehills, and he has not succeeded any more than others on that side have succeeded on previous occasions, in attempts to magnify some transaction that is perfectly proper and easily explainable. I recognize that when a remission of duty is given for a large amount it is quite proper to make it a subject of discussion in the House, and it should be fully explained; I am prepared to give my hon. friend a very full explanation in this case. What were the circumstances which caused the Government to grant this remission of duty on 75,000 tons of steel rails purchased in the first place by the Algoma Steel Company and sold by them to the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific railway companies. They are set out in concise form in the recommendation of the Minister of Customs to the Governor General in Council under date of July 2, 1912. After recommending that authority be granted for the remission and refund of half the customs duty paid by the Algoma Steel Company on steel rails imported at Fort William for the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, the minister observes:

This remission and refund of duty is recommended by reason of an assurance——

To which I referred a moment ago.

—given on behalf of the Government to the Algoma Steel Company Limited that favourable consideration would be extended to their application for such remission and refund in respect of 50,000 tons of imported steel rails urgently required by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for the completion of certain of their branch lines in the Northwest provinces in time to be available for the movement of the crop of the current year. Evidence has been submitted showing that the rail producing companies of Canada, by reason of being under contract for their full output for the season, would not be able to supply the said 50,000 tons or any part thereof, and further that in making this importation of rails required by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in respect of which partial remission of duty is hereby recommended, no profit has accrued to the Algoma Steel Company.

That last sentence, in my judgment, is the most important to which the hon. gentleman has called the attention of the House. That was one matter to which I directed my attention; because, if the Algoma Steel Company had made any money in connection with this tariff reduction it would not have been proper; and I took every precaution to assure myself and the Government that the Algoma Steel Company made not one cent out of the transaction. I sent one of the most reliable members of the staff, Mr. J. A. Russell, a man who has enjoyed the confidence of the preceding Minister of Finance and of the Government of which he was a member, to Montreal to investigate the books of the railway company, and find out precisely the figure which was paid by the railway company to the Algoma Steel Company.

Mr. MACLEAN: What was the figure?

Mr. WHITE: I will come to that in a moment; it was the precise figure at which the rails were sold. Before entering upon the argument to justify the transaction as a whole, I desire to refer to Mr. Drummond's letter, which the hon. gentleman has referred to. The hon. gentleman thinks it most extraordinary that the steel company should be desirous that we should rather grant a rebate and remission in the way it was granted, than to the railway companies direct. Now, the steel companies of Canada are always engaged in large financial operations and their credit is of the most extreme importance to them. Matters of tariff and of tariff modifications are also of extreme importance to them, because the impression might go abroad that a tariff modification might be injurious to their interests. The hon. gentleman says it is inexplicable to him why Mr. Drummond desired the remission made in this way rather than as a direct rebate to the railway companies. If we had made it direct to the railway companies, the news would have gone abroad that the Government had adopted the policy of remitting duties to the railway companies, and the result might have been extremely embarrassing to them. This mode was adopted having in view the situation in the West, and the situation in regard to the supply of steel rails. So, there is nothing improper, or unintelligible, or ambiguous, or equivocal in Mr. Drummond's letter. The hon. gentleman has said: 'Why extend it to the Canadian Pacific railway?' Well, we cannot make fish of one and flesh of another. The Grand Trunk Pacific was engaged in building branch lines in the West, needed by the settlers, and we agreed to make this remission with respect to rails which they required for last season's operations; the Canadian Pacific railway was engaged in similar work; the Canadian Northern railway had placed their order for rails, and so we dealt with each railway on precisely the same basis. The hon. gentleman says it is a remarkable and incomprehensible transaction. There is nothing remarkable or incomprehensible about it, for it is done under the authority of the statute, which states that remission shall be made in proper cases. That statute was passed under the Government which was supported by the hon. gentleman, or, it had been in existence during the entire period of that Administration. The enactment referred to is section 93, which the hon. gentleman quoted, which provides that the Governor General, whenever he deems it right and conducive to the public good, may remit any duty or toll, and such remission may be total or partial, conditional or unconditional. My hon. friend has referred to a 'modification of the statute.' What 'modification' is there in exercising the authority conferred by this schedule and granting this remission in proper cases? It has been acted upon scores of times.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Will the hon. gentleman tell me of another instance in the history of Canada when remission was granted, as in this case, to a third party apparently not interested? They were not going to make any money out of it; they were not consumers of rails, but they were manufacturers and unable to supply the demand.

Mr. WHITE: I have given my hon. friend an explanation as to why the Algoma Steel Company was desirous of having it done in that particular way and I consider it to be a good reason. My hon. friend has spoken of a modification of the statute in regard to the granting of this remission but I understand that in scores of cases the late Administration granted such remissions of duty. The right hon. gentleman and his followers seem at times to suffer from what I might call political amnesia, or the loss of memory; they forget all about what they did in the past. As I have said, in scores of cases when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, such remissions of duty were granted, and I do not challenge their action in this respect. What were the circumstances that led up to the giving of this assurance? In the first place, we have the letter of Mr. Hays. I always speak with the greatest possible respect for Mr. Hays, who met an untimely death when returning from Great Britain in the Titanic, but Mr. Hays was never known to be a particular friend of this Government; he and his enterprises were particularly under the wing of the late Administration. The letter of Mr. Hays, which is the beginning and basis of this transaction, says:

> We have now some 500 miles of new grade in Saskatchewan and Alberta ready for track laying, and it was our intention to have laid all this track the coming season if we could have secured the necessary deliveries from Canadian mills, which it now appears it is going to be impossible for us to do.

My hon. friend refers to the Algoma Steel Company as possibly being able to supply these rails, but being not as frank as they should be in saying whether they could or could not do so. Mr. Hays evidently believed they could not deliver the rails, as he says:

> Which it now appears it is going to be impossible for us to do.

Who should know the rail situation, if not Mr. Hays? He knew he could not get rails from the Canadian mills and he says, in effect, to the Prime Minister: 'Unless we can get our rails free of duty we will not go on with the construction of the five hundred miles of branch lines.' As pointed out by my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways was communicated with by parties in the West, his attention was directed to the fact that they were not being served by the railways, and that was an important factor in the action taken in this matter. Another matter directly connected with this transaction is the financial situation a year ago. In March, 1912, my hon. friend knows that Mr. Hays went to England with the expectation of selling securities, and that he came back without having done so. He is familiar also with the tight money conditions that prevailed at that time in Great Britain, and I ask him, having regard to the fact that he would have to pay two or three dollars per ton more for the rails by reason of importing them and paying the entire duty, and having regard to the conditions that existed with respect to financial conditions, if he would have been likely or unlikely to lay a trackage of 500 miles, or whatever he had to construct, if by waiting he could get his rails cheaper on the next year's delivery? It is perfectly obvious what Mr. Hays wanted to do; he wanted to go ahead with the work, but he did not want to pay two or three dollars a ton more for the rails than he would have had to pay if he had been able to get them in Canada or have them entered free of duty. He says further:

I am writing you on the subject to ask if your Government will not consider the matter and advise if they cannot see their way clear to suspend the application of duties on the amount of rail required, as hereinbefore named, say 50,000 tons, to enable us to obtain delivery in time to get the track laid this year, and relieve the demands of the settlers for transportation along our graded lines, which are sure to reach us in some very forcible form later on useless they see the track is going to be in readiness to do business this fall.

I have noticed that hon. gentlemen opposite are always ready to extend a theoretical sympathy to the people of the West, but when there is a need of practical sympathy, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House show it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The position I take would not have prevented the rails from being imported and laid in the West.

Mr. WHITE: Let us see what Mr. Hays says about that. He has pointed out the facts in connection with the tight money condition, and he says: 'I am willing, if I can get the rails at the same price at which I can purchase them in Canada, or have them entered free of duty, to go ahead with this work of track laying.' This remission of duty was not granted with any desire to oblige the railway company, but the urgency of the western situation was, as I have said, the basis of this action, which was taken with a view to serving the settlers whose interests we all have so much at heart. When my hon. friend says this course should not have been taken, he says in effect that the lines which were constructed last year in the West should not have been built.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) I would not have objected if the Government had permitted the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to import the rails free of duty, and it is quite possible they could have purchased them in the United States and had them delivered at Port Arthur at a lower rate than was charged by the Algoma Steel Company.

Mr. WHITE: That would have injured the steel companies, and that is what the steel companies had in mind. Mr. Hays further said:

The conditions pertaining to the construction of these branch lines are such as to make us feel we are not warranted in incurring the increased cost, approximately ten dollars per ton, if we get no relief in the matter of duty.

In that sentence he says: 'We will not go on unless we get relief, and the settlers will not get the branch lines of which they are so much in need.' That, as I say, that is the primary cause of the action in this matter. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen from the province of Saskatchewan to this statement, and ask them what they think of it.

I understand the Saskatchewan Government have already passed an unanimous resolution calling on the Dominion Government to suspend duties on rails and enable the railways to build their branch lines in that province, and I trust you may see your way clear to take favourable action in the direction desired.

I do not propose to read the entire correspondence in regard to this matter, but, in the first place, we have Mr Hays' letter, making the request and showing good reasons for it and, in the second place we have the admission on the part of the steel companies that they could not supply the steel rails. The great question which is agitating the West to-day is that of transportation, and if there is one thing that the remote settlements throughout the West are greatly in need of it is these branch line of railways. We are trying to help them, and it was with a view to helping them that we granted this remission of duty. In the words of the statute, we say it was conducive to the public interest, by reason of the transportation needs of the West, that this remission should be granted. Coming to a consideration of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite in dealing with the matter of duty on steel rails,

I find in the customs tariff of 1907 that steel rails weighing not less than 45 pounds per lineal yard, for use only in the tracks of a railway employed in the carrying of goods and passengers and operated by a steam motive power only, were on the free list. Steel rails were on the free list in 1897. Why? Mr. Fielding tells why. In 1903 he said:

We, therefore, ask that power be given to the Governor in Council to impose by Order in Council a duty of $7 per ton on steel rails, provided, however, that such order shall not be passed until the Government are satisfied that there are rail mills in Canada making the best quality of rails, and in a sufficient quantity to meet the reasonable demands of the market.

Now, what was the policy substantially laid down there? The policy laid down was: we cannot make sufficient rails in Canada to meet the requirements of the railways for construction and renewal work; we propose that $7 per ton duty shall not go on until the Government is assured that the rail producing companies of Canada can supply the market. On the 27th of August, 1904, we find this Order in Council.

The Governor General in Council being satisfied that steel rails of the best quality, suitable for the use of the Canadian railways, are being manufactured in Canada from steel made in Canada in sufficient quantities to meet the ordinary requirements of the market, is pleased to declare that the conditions expressed in the proviso of the said section has been satisfied, and to direct that a duty of $7 per ton shall be imposed under schedule A to the Customs Tariff, 1897.

The Government said that $7 shall be the duty on steel rails after we are satisfied that the steel companies of Canada can produce those rails of best quality in amount sufficient to meet the requirements of the railways. That then, was the policy. I do not say that that is a conclusive argument with regard to this matter, but I say it has a bearing upon it as showing what the late Government had in their minds when they levied a duty of $7 a ton on steel rails. The present tariff item is $7 a ton, but although the tariff is $7 a ton the Canadian rail producing companies were selling their rails at less than the American rate, plus freight and duty. That frequently happens. I have forgotten what was the amount of difference, but it probably was about $2.50 a ton less than the railways would have to pay if they purchased American rails and added freight and duty. In other words it paid the railway companies to buy in Canada to the advantage of $2.50 or $3 a ton.

I come now to the point which, as I have stated, is the most important that my hon. friend has brought forward and the one upon which I took the greatest pains, namely that the Algoma Steel Company would not and did not make any money on the transaction.

Mr. NESBITT: Did the Algoma Steel Company have a contract with the railway company to deliver so many tons of rails within a certain time?

Mr. WHITE: No, I understand that they never contract that they will deliver absolutely so large a quantity that there can be any possible doubt as to their ability to carry out their contract.

Mr. NESBITT: They did not have such a contract?

Mr. WHITE: No, they had not such a hard and fast contract.

Mr. MACLEAN: They had not any contract particularly referrable to the 50,000 tons?

Mr. WHITE: In the view of Mr. Hays and of the steel company they could not supply the requirements of the railway companies for 1912; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MACLEAN: That is probably true.

Mr. WHITE: That is absolutely true. We come then to this question of whether any money was made on this transaction. I sent Mr. Russell, a man in whom I have the utmost confidence, a man of unimpeachable integrity, to look into the transaction and assure himself whether the Algoma Steel Company made any money. He examined the invoices, verified as my hon. friend has said by affidavits. He did not go behind the affidavits. If we have to go behind affidavits then we will have to hold a judicial inquiry and I do not suppose that we could be expected to do that. The affidavits in the customs house show that these steel rails were bought at a certain figure and Mr. Russell went to Montreal and examined the books of the railway company. Here is what he said:

I hereby certify that I have examined the records of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company relating to the purchase and delivery of the steel rails from the Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., and I find that the steel rails referred to in the recommendation of the Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, to His Royal Highness the Governor General in Council, dated the 2nd day of July, 1912, were received by the said Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company at Fort William and that the contracts set forth in letters from the Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., provided that 50,000 tons (of 2,240 pounds) of steel rails will be delivered at Fort William, Ontario, at the price of $31.50 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including freight and duty.

What could be done to check up a transaction more than was done in that case? Then the memorandum of Mr. Russell, goes on:

Cost the Algoma Steel Company, at Fort William	$27 50*
One half of duty	3 92
Cost delivered, freight and duty	$31 42

*Per ton of 2,240 pounds.

J. A. E.

The eight cents is entirely negligible, having regard not only to the interest but the trouble they would have in carrying out the transaction.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What about the rails that were imported and that apparently cost $26.17?

Mr. WHITE: The remission that we gave was, of course, fifty per cent of the duty. My hon. friend has told me that these were a very small portion, and were for sidings, but I know that they were all checked up by Mr. Russell and he was able to assure me that absolutely nothing was made by the Algoma Steel Company on the transaction, not even on that part of it.

Mr. MACLEAN: I cannot understand how the Algoma Steel Company could not make a profit on rails of second quality purchased at $26.17 as against rails purchased for $27.50.

Mr. WHITE: How many were purchased?

Mr. MACLEAN: And receiving the same price $31.50 from the Grand Trunk Pacific. Supposing there were only 2,000 tons.

Mr. WHITE: The Minister of Railways informed me that they bought and sold them as second grade rails. I am dealing with first grade rails.

Mr. NESBITT: Were they sold at the same price?

Mr. WHITE: I do not think they were; the railway company is not paying for second grade rails what it would pay for first grade. What is this transaction? In the first place, branch lines will not be built in the West unless remission of duty is given; in the second place, we have representations made by steel companies, and reasonable representations, that if rebates or remissions are given to the railway companies the steel companies are going to be interfered with in carrying on their financing; thirdly, no money was made on the transaction; in fact, I may say that money was lost on the transaction. Nobody in this House can carry out a transaction of this kind nor could any company or firm carry out such a transaction on any such margin as eight cents. They lost money on the transaction. They desired that the railway companies should purchase their rails from a Canadian concern, making, as I have said, absolutely no money on it, but in order that rebates or remissions might not be given which would have the effect of embarrassing the financing of Canadian steel companies, a checking was done to verify the entire transaction. Then what comes of all the laboured argument as to irregularity in connection with this? As I have said, the statute gives the authority; and the Government believed it was conducive to the public good in order that railway construction might take place in the West, that this rebate should be granted. Careful investigation was made into all the facts and circumstances so as to ensure that no profit was made to the Algoma Steel Company. It seems to me that the transaction is regular in every respect, and not only regular but right, and to use the words of the statute, conducive to the public good.

Mr. NESBITT: Why did not the Government give the railway companies the right to bring in those rails with a remission of the duty?

Mr. WHITE: I explained, in answer to my hon. friend, why it was better to do it in the way it was done, provided no money was made. My hon. friend probably has in mind the fact that we did not remit the whole duty.

Mr. NESBITT: Part of the duty I understand.

Mr. WHITE: The remission of part of the duty put the railway companies in the same position as they would have been in if they had been able to buy in Canada. I think they were penalized to the extent of only a dollar. I do not think that the railways should be be allowed to get in their rails at a rate lower than the Canadian price. That would hardly be fair in the exisiting situation. The crux and gist of the whole of my hon. friend's argument, and the only feature that is really worth the attention of this House for any considerable time, is whether the steel company made any money out of the tariff or not. They did not. It is perfectly obvious that it is conducive to the public good, that branch lines should be built as expeditiously as possible in the West. There is no hon. member on the other side of the House who will deny that proposition.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not intend on this occasion to enter into the discussion in any controversial spirit. I thought it was right in a matter of this kind, that we should have first an explanation from the Government of why they took the course which they did. In respect to this remission of duty, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, has laid great stress on the statement, which he repeated several times, that the transaction was regular and according to the law. So it is. Nobody questions the legality of the action taken by the Government; the only point is whether the discretion which is given to the Government under the Audit Act of remitting duties to importers is justifiable, politic, and wise. In my judgment, after having heard my hon. friend, I do not think he has made out a case which justifies the extraordinary course taken by the Government. Our fiscal system is based on revenue duties. It is based upon the assumption that all importers should pay their share of taxation, that those who have to import goods from abroad should contribute to the taxes of the country. We adopted the policy long ago that we should allow to come in free of duty, as far as possible, articles which are not manufactured in this country, but as soon as an article is manufactured in this country it is subject to duty. The intention of the law is to impose the duty for the purposes of revenue, and also on the broader principle which is dear to the Minister of Finance, of encouraging native industries. It was intended that the revenue should be collected in this way, and that in every possible case, if the producer of the article did not get the benefit, the treasury should get the benefit. That is the theory of the law. It imposes a burden, but it is a burden which has to be borne by all those who import articles. There can be no good reason why one man should get a privilege which is not given to another. My hon. friend has narrated the circumstances under which a duty of $7 per ton was imposed on rails. When my friend Mr. Fielding, revised the tariff in 1907, he was pressed to put a duty on steel rails. For what purpose? For the purpose, which was given there and then, of encouraging the manufacture of steel rails in this country. We had the raw material; and we had some plants, which had been introduced and which it was hoped in the course of time would be able to produce steel rails. But the ex-Minister of Finance resisted all the pressure put upon him and some of the applications were very pressing, to impose a duty, because he thought it was not fair that the importers and users of rails in a country like Canada, where there is so much railway construction going on every year, should be forced to pay a heavy duty, unless the manufacturers were prepared to deliver the rails required in Canada. In 1904 the Government came to the conclusion that the two plants at Sydney and Sault Ste. Marie were then sufficiently advanced to manufacture rails, and that a duty should be imposed, and it was imposed. I think the action taken by the Government at that time was wisely taken; at least I did not hear it challenged at that time, and I did not hear it challenged today by my hon. friend. But it was challenged and very much resisted by one class of people in this country, the railway companies. The railway companies at that time protested vigorously against the imposition of the duty. They represented that if a duty were imposed it must increase the cost of building railways, and so it must. But what was the reason which we gave for taking that course? Apart from the general reason which is the basis of the tariff itself, that it should apply to all classes of the community, we represented to the railway companies that the policy of this Government, whether Conservative or Liberal, had been to assist railway construction, and that in view of the ample subsidies which we gave to the railway companies to assist them in railway construction, especially in the new provinces, they could not advance any sufficient reason why they should not be as obliged to pay their share of taxation through a duty on rails. A duty was imposed and continued up to this year. I am quite sure that since my hon. friend the Minister of Finance took office, he has had many representations on the part of the railway companies against the imposition of this duty. This year the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, so far as I have been able to look over the papers, made a strong representation to the Prime Minister to be exempted from the payment of the duty upon steel rails, the plea being that the Canadian companies could not supply the rails. Well, is there any reason why any railway company, under any circumstances—I do not care what company it is—should be exempted from the general law, which applies to all Canadian subjects, and should not pay their share of taxation like anybody else? Is there any reason why railway companies which receive subsidies from this Government and which in the case referred to, receives a subsidy from the local legislature in Saskatchewan should not pay their legitimate share of the cost of carrying on the government of this country? I cannot see any reason. The only reason which is given by my hon. friend is that they would not go on with the construction of railways of which the settlers were in need. Settlers are always in need of more railways and fast as the building of railways can go on, it cannot go on fast enough for the settler. That reason, in my humble judgment, was no reason whatever. There was no justification why Mr. Hays, or Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, or Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, or any other man, should not pay like everybody else his share of burdens that we have all to carry as Canadian subjects according to our means. There is no possible excuse why any class of the community should be exempt of their share of the burdens, or why it should be put upon other shoulders. My hon. friend has told us many times that he is a believer in the stability of the tariff. If he is a believer in the stability of the tariff, he must apply the tariff whether it be to the benefit or the detriment of certain individuals. A protective tariff cannot be applied without it bearing somewhat heavily upon some person occasionally. The man who pays taxes will always try to be exempt from them and put the burden upon other shoulders. I have not had an opportunity of reading the last papers that have been brought down by my hon. friend, but as far as I have been able to read the papers in this case, the reason which has been given why any class should be exempted from its share of taxation is a reason which cannot apply. I do not know whether the Algoma Steel Company has made any profit or not. I am taking the word of my hon. friend that they have made no profit, but if that company has not made any profit, somebody has made a profit, and, at all events, the treasury has been deprived of $300,000 which would otherwise have gone into it and which has remained in the pockets of private companies, a condition of things for which, in my humble judgment, there is no justification.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we all realize in this country the very great importance of providing adequate means of transportation; in fact, my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he introduced his proposals for the building of the National Transcontinental railway in 1903, and renewed them in 1904, laid very great stress upon that and prayed heaven that it might not then be too late.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend, judging from his remarks this afternoon, seems to think that we might very well wait a little longer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No; we gave substantial aid to this company.

Mr. BORDEN: He suggests that, although 500 miles of track was graded and ready for the rails in western Canada, we should have taken no action. Let us look at this question for a moment. In the first place, railway companies, for a great many years, under the administration of my right hon. friend, were able to import rails without any duty at all. A duty was imposed in 1904, the object of which was, I suppose, to assist in establishing the manufacture of rails in Canada. Canada has the raw material, it has the labour available and it apparently had the capital available for the purpose of establishing these mills. So, the duty was imposed. But there was also some obligation and some responsibility upon the company in whose favour these taxes had been imposed, or rather for the development of whose industries these taxes had been imposed. There was a certain obligation on their part to meet in every reasonable way the requirements of the Canadian market. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition does not seem to agree with the view of my hon. colleague (Mr. Maclean, Halifax). He said that in so far as he was concerned, he was prepared to support a remission of the duty altogether provided it was remitted directly to the railway companies. My right hon. friend seems to think that it should not have been remitted at all—

Mr. MACLEAN: And for good reasons; for other reasons, of course.

Mr. BORDEN: I know that there seems to be a marked difference of opinion between my hon. friend and the right hon. leader of the Opposition in that regard. I do not know exactly which one represents the view entertained by the majority of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. What were the circumstances? The circumstances were that there were two great rail mills in Canada. I am not disposed to consider whether the railway companies were at fault for not having given their orders at an earlier date, or whether the rail mills were at fault for not having provided better facilities, or not being prepared to make a larger output. The net result of the situation was that these rails were necessary for the laying down of tracks in that western country in districts which had suffered to a certain extent the year before from lack of adequate railway facilities. These rails could not be provided in Canada. We were given to understand that there was a great deal of doubt as to whether that track would be laid down in the immediate future unless some arrangement of this kind could be made. From the railway companies—from one railway company at least—we, in the first instance, as I recollect it, received a request for an absolute remission of duties. We sent the letters complaining of the inability of these companies to supply the home demand to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and to the Algoma Steel Corporation and we sent the answers of these corporations to the railway companies. We endeavoured to get at the truth of the matter as best we could and, in the end, it is perfectly apparent that, either a very considerable number of rails had to be imported, or else a considerable amount of track had to remain unlaid for perhaps a year, and that many settlers in the western part of Canada would go without the railway facilities to which they otherwise would be entitled. What was the duty of the Government under the circumstances? The Government did not desire to take any step which would be destructive of the industries that had been in progress for eight years and which had made very considerable headway. We did not desire to take any step destructive of their interests or to undo the work that had been in progress for the past eight years. On the other hand, we did not desire that hundreds or thousands of settlers in the western part of Canada should go for twelve months longer unprovided with facilities to which they were entitled and which they would receive if a reasonable arrangement could be made. The course which the Government took was this: They acceded to the proposals—or they may have made the proposal themselves—I am not sure which way it was—but at all events, the matter was given very careful consideration. They, in the end, acceded to an arrangement by which one of these companies themselves should import these rails upon a remission of one-half the duty, but with the stipulation that the company should not make one dollar profit out of the whole transaction. Our desire was that the interests of those corporations or industries which had been built up under the fiscal system, formally adopted for the purpose eight years before, should not be interfered with or injured; but, on the other hand, that the settlers in the West should not be deprived of railway facilities which otherwise they would get, and that the railway companies should be permitted under this arrangement which was made by the Government to receive their rails at very little more than the price they would have been obliged to pay if the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Algoma Steel Company had been able to supply them. Under the circumstances, it seems to me that that was a very reasonable arrangement. On the one hand, it prevented any undue burthen of expenditure on these railway corporations, which in the end must come out of the pockets of those who use the railways; and on the other hand, it conserved the interests of these industries which had been built up under a policy which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself adopted. I do not know what the right hon. gentleman would suggest as the proper course to take under the circumstances. It is very doubtful indeed whether or not the rails would be laid that year, and the Government took action and made an arrangement in the matter. The Government took an action which brought about, if I remember correctly, the resumption of track laying without delay, which no doubt afforded relief to the settlers in the West that otherwise they could not have received. On the other hand, the course which the Government adopted was one which did conserve in a reasonable way the interest of these corporations. Not a dollar was made out of the transaction. The railway companies received the rails at only about a dollar a ton more than the price they would have had to pay, if the rails had been manufactured in Canada. The settlers in the West received, at an earlier date than would otherwise have been possible, the railway facilities to which every hon. gentleman on both sides of the House will agree they are entitled. I can assure hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that this arrangement was not entered into without a great deal of discussion and consideration; and in the end it was determined upon as the best arrangement that could be made in view of the fact that the rails could not be supplied in Canada at that time as fast as the requirements of the railway development made necessary.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (South Cape Breton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any person on this side of the House has any desire to see railway construction in the West obstructed or delayed. I fail, however, to see how it would facilitate the building of railways in the West to remit the duty on rails at the time that it was remitted. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway and the Canadian Pacific railway are not building railroads in the West merely for the purpose of benefiting the farmers or the homesteaders; they are doing so, I presume, as a business undertaking, as an undertaking in which they hope to see some interest accruing on their money in the course of a few years. I take the ground that if the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway were desirous of building roads in the West, the mere fact that they could not get a remission of duty on rails from the Government would not delay the construction of those roads, because they are undertaking the work as a business proposition. The real question at issue is: Has this Government, upon a tariff duty imposed on steel rails or any other commodity, the right at any or at all times to remit that duty, especially when the person who is asking for that remission is not the consumer. Under such circumstances I think the duty should not be remitted except on two grounds: Firstly, that it is used as some great public utility and is not manufactured in this country; secondly, that there is a grave famine in that particular commodity. No person on this side of the House will deny the fact that in times past duties have been remitted. The late Government remitted duties on life-saving apparatus, which was used in the mines of the Dominion Coal Company. I understand that the present Government did the same thing. That apparatus is not manufactured in this country, and is used in all the mines of the various provinces of Canada. The duty has been removed on coal, when a famine has been threatened in that commodity. I can understand any government remitting or removing the duty in cases of that kind for the time being. When it comes, however, to a question of a great railway corporation in this country asking the Government to remit a duty which was placed on steel rails, presumably for the protection of the steel industry of this country, I think that is going a step too far. It would not be so bad if the railway companies came themselves to the Government; but they did not do so, they sent a third party. I venture to say that, if a lawyer who is not interested in this discussion, were asked as to the meaning of section 92 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, he would unhesitatingly give the opinion that that section is put there altogether for the benefit of the consumer of the article on which the duty is remitted. The Algoma Steel Company has no contract with the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. If they had a contract, the terms of which they could not fulfill, I could understand them coming to this Government and asking for a remission of duty in order to save themselves what might probably result in a financial difficulty to themselves. I do not understand why the Algoma Steel Company, whose business it is to manufacture steel rails, should come to this Government at the instance of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway or the Canadian Pacific railway for a remission of duty, when they are making no profit on the transaction. I do not say, and I cannot prove that the Algoma Steel Company have made any profit on the transaction, but does the proposition sound reasonable? There is something under this transaction which we do not altogether understand. I take the ground that, if a remission of duty was to be given, it should be given to the consumer. The great railway corporations in this country are just as capable and as well able to pay duties on the articles which they import as the ordinary citizen is. If a contractor of the Grand Trunk Pacific should tell this Government that he was unable to buy in this country a sufficient number of horses to carry on the work he had in hand, and would have to import horses, would this Government grant a remission of the duty? If I myself wanted an automobile or a wagon and were not able to get the particular brand I wanted in this country, would the Government remit fifty per cent of the duty if I imported it? They would not. Then, why should we have any privileged class in this country? I fail to see why the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk railway should be given privileges which are not given to ordinary citizens. I think there is more in this question than we see on the surface.

Now, there are other steel corporations in this country beside the Algoma Steel Company. There are in the city of Sydney and in the town of New Glasgow two large corporations of this kind. They manufacture steel rail. The Grand Trunk railway say that they were not able to get rails in Canada. In this they are going too far. I have not had the opportunity of reading the files brought down, but Mr. McNaughton, the sales agent of the Dominion Steel Company, in 1911, when making his contract with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, tried to get a larger order of steel rails from them, but without success. They must have known in the year 1911 the construction they would undertake in 1912. They could have got the rails for that construction from the Dominion Steel Company. It strikes me that this would be a very neat way for the railway companies of this country to get clear of the tariff duties. Suppose that in this year 1913, when the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific are giving their contracts to the Algoma Steel Company or the Dominion Steel Company, they order a smaller quantity of rails than they actually need for the ensuing year. Then, when they need rails they come to these companies to place an order. But steel companies, like railway companies, have their orders in a year ahead, and cannot on the spur of the moment arrange to supply an increased quantity within two or three months. Then they could come to this Government and ask for a reduction in duty. That is practically what they did in this case. They had the opportunity to get more rails from the Dominion Steel Company and they did not take that opportunity.

I take the further ground that, apart altogether from the question whether or not the Algoma Steel Company made a profit in this instance, they were give a preference over other steel manufacturing concerns in this country. The railway companies will naturally come to the conclusion that the Algoma Steel Company has certain influence with this Government in that they have been successful in getting this remission of duty. They will naturally place their large orders with that company, and if they cannot be filled this Algoma Steel Company will come to the Government and get a remission of duty on rails imported from the United States I fail to see why, if the remission of duty to a railway company on importation of steel rails is dangerous, a remission of duty to a particular manufacturer of steel rails in Canada is not dangerous. I wholly fail to see any force in the argument that the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific railways, if they could not get a remission of duties, would cease railway operations in the West. That looks to me like a childish argument. They know when they started out on this railway construction in the West exactly what they had to do; they knew that the tariff was there; and they knew that, if they did not place sufficient orders for rails, they would have to import those rails from the United States. It was a straight business proposition, and it should have been allowed to work itself out on that basis.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): As a representative of the western farmers, I should like to be able to say that I think that this Government will be able to bear any odium they incur by their action in this particular case. This is the second tariff discussion we have had within a week, and these discussions afford to me, a 'lone free trader,' a somewhat curious commentary upon the doctrine of the stability of the tariff. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister is very careful about giving his endorsation to any such general principle as is embodied in the phrase 'stability of the tariff.' But I understand that my right hon. leader shares the belief in that doctrine with the Minister of Finance. Well, for my part, I think the tariff is the embodiment of and personification of the unstable. I know it is a thing fearfully and wonderfully made, and a free trader has to study for a long time thoroughly to understand it. Why, Sir, I see in the leading Conservative newspaper of this city this morning an article headed 'The Tumbling Tariff.' I cannot see how a tariff which has tumbling tendencies can possess the element of stability, or how anything can be said to be stable which is under constant attack. at another time my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) is the attacking party, the subject of his activities being the tariff on agricultural implements. We have sometimes a surreptitious attack on the tariff in Council, which does not come before Parliament at all, and, all things considered, how my hon. friends can designate this as being something to which you can attribute stability is a matter which is beyond my humble comprehension. I very much sympathize with any action taken by this or any other government to facilitate transportation in the West or to accelerate any of the operations connected with the building up of that portion of Canada, because, as I have stated before in this House, I hold that Canadian development to-day is largely western development, and western prosperity is Canada's prosperity. The only trouble I experience with respect to the action of the Government in this regard is that their attacks of free trade sentiments are inclined to be somewhat limited and sporadic. I wish they would take a really bad attack; I would sympathize with them much more, and could the more strongly defend them against such attacks as have been made on them to-day by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance reduced the tariff on cement, and he put it on again. He established a closed time for cement, and I wish he had not done so, but had rather left the tariff off altogether. And so with regard to the tariff on steel rails; I wish it were not done in this surreptitious and sporadic way; I wish they would take the duty off and leave it off. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) read a letter containing the amusing statement that the reduction of the duty on these rails was of no use to the Government or to anybody else. While the good referred to was doubtless a special privilege to a particular class of the community, I should think that cheap steel rails were a benefit to the whole of Canada, because everybody uses railways; cheap steel rails would facilitate the building of railways, and everybody would thus be benefited by cheap steel rails. That is the old-fashioned way of looking at matters of this kind; that is the way in which thep appealed to the Scotch intelligence of a man like Adam Smith, and I cannot say that I see the fallacy of such reasoning. On this present occasion the Government have taken the only sane view that could be taken in respect of tariffs, and that is the view which relates to the good of the ultimate consumer. The trouble with much of the reasoning in respect of tariffs is that the people who consider the matter do not reflect upon the ultimate good which is to result to humanity. When steel rails are manufactured they are not piled up to be looked at, nor yet to be placed in glass cases for ornamental purposes; they are made with an ultimate object in view, and in this ultimate object was the building of a railway. As a western consumer, I am particularly grateful to the ministry that they did for once consider the ultimate good of the consumer, and I only wish they would continue to look at such matters from this reasonable point of view. I remember last year that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) raised a discussion on the necessity of giving fishermen cheaper nets, and he wanted the duty taken off the cord that was used in their manufacture. Fishing nets are not manufactured for the purpose of adorning a lady's hair, nor yet to be hung up against the wall and admired; they are manufactured for the purpose of catching fish. But the protectionist comes along and says it is not the fish we want, it is the fishing nets. What stupid reasoning! They lose sight altogether of the ultimate end in view; and so with regard to agricultural implements. What is the good of an agricultural implement in itself? Wheat is the ultimate object, but the protectionist says: 'Oh no, you have to make agricultural implements!' I say you have to raise the wheat, and if you can get the implements cheaply to the consumer for this purpose, you will encourage in the end the making of agricultural implements in this country. I am very glad indeed that the Government have had their eyes in this particular instance upon the consumer. It would have been improper for me to keep silent on this subject, especially when my young colleague from South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) has put forward his tariff heresies on this occasion. I am not at all sure that this Government is not going to be saved by the operation known as transfusion of blood. This is a very daring experiment and is not often successful, largely so because the patients are generally in a very bad way before the operation is performed. The blood is taken from the veins of a perfectly healthy person and transfused to those of an unhealthy patient, and I am not at all sure that this Government has not had injected into its veins such a transfusion of Liberal blood; I understood my right hon. friend the leader of the Government got quite a saturation of Liberal principles in his youth, and I am not sure that he has got entirely rid of them. Some great thinkers have said that a man is rarely wholly untrue to his early principles, and in this respect I have considerable hope for my right hon. friend. On one occasion I told him he was following the example of Sir Robert Peel, who was elected to maintain the Corn Laws, and proceeded to abolish them. I am not sure that my right hon. friend, by the innate force of that Liberal blood that is in him, will not become a great reducer of tariffs, and if he does he will have my blessing at any rate. And then my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has undergone that saturation, not only in his youth, but up to a comparatively recent period, and if these two hon. friends of mine are permeating this Government with reasonable tariff principles, I am very glad indeed to know of it, and I hope they will be able to reconstruct the heretical tendencies of the other members of the Government in this regard. If they do, I am perfectly sure the people of the West will exonerate them for what they have done in this case, in view of the fact that it was with a view to facilitating railroad expansion; and I do hope they will be able among themselves to put the matter right down in Nova Scotia where, I believe, the real trouble in this case exists.

Mr. LEVI THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I do not propose to quarrel with the action of the Government in this case, and, as a representative farmer of the West, I agree with very much of what was said by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark).

When the present Government wishes to assist the farmers of the West, however, I would like them to make that assistance a little more direct. I notice that in all cases where the Government are endeavouring to justify their policy they try to show that it is in the interests of the farmers; we rarely hear an argument in favour of higher protective duties, without hearing also the cry that they are necessary for the protection of the farmers. In this, however, I, like most farmers, fail to see where in we are protected. I have no objection to the idea of allowing steel rails to come into the country free of duty. Like the member for Red Deer, I would rather see it permanent than spasmodic. But if this Government wish to assist the farmers the best way is to assist them directly. I fail to see any argument in favour of free steel rails that might not, with equal strength, be applied to free agricultural implements. We are told that the manufacturers of steel rails in Canada are not manufacturing sufficient for the purposes of the railways of the country. Neither are the manufacturers of agricultural implements manufacturing sufficient agricultural implements for the purposes of the farmers of Canada, they are not beginning to; in a great many lines we find that we have to depend almost entirely on the United States manufacturers, but still we have to pay the duty all the time. No one ever suggests that the duty should be removed. I have no objection to the remission of duties provided it is applied generally. I would go so far as the hon. member for Red Deer and say: Let it be applied universally and at all times. If we are going to apply these reductions spasmodically, let us, in all fair play, apply our spasmodic efforts in such a way that they will benefit everyone, not merely the railway companies but also the consumers generally of Canada, the farmers. If we wish to give assistance to the farmers of Canada, I say that we can give it more effectually by making it a direct assistance. We are told that the manufacturers of steel rails cannot manufacture sufficient steel rails for the requirements of these railway companies and we are also told that the manufacturers of agricultural implements cannot manufacture the necessary quantities of agricultural implements for the farmers of Canada. Why should there be a distinction? There is more reason why we should have free agricultural implements at this special time than free steel rails. I believe, as a matter of fact, that the manufacturers of steel rails in Canada are not competing with the manufacturers of the United States and other places outside of Canada. That is not true with regard to the manufacture of agricultural implements. We find, from a discussion that took place in this House last session, that certain manufacturers of agricultural implements in Canada can go to the United States and compete successfully with United States manufacturers and sell more cheaply there, even after paying the duty into the United States than they sell to the Canadian farmers. Surely that is another argument in favour of free agricultural implements. Therefore while I am not quarrelling with the idea of letting steel rails come in without duty, I would like to see that permanently applied if we are to have it at all and I would like to see the principle applied where there are the same reasons existing for its application and particularly where there are additional reasons as in the case of agricultural implements.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (Comox-Atlin): I was rather amused at the resolution proposed by the junior member for Halifax and I am surprised at his forgetfulness. He was in the House when I had the honour of being a member from 1904 to 1908. To cite one among many instances, in 1906 or 1907 the Detroit river tunnel, an International tunnel was being built by the Michigan Central Railway Company, a corporation which possibly should have received the ordinary consideration. Tenders were asked for the construction of the tunnel. A Minneapolis concern, an American firm, received the contract under the then existing tariff conditions. After the tenders had been accepted the then Government, the present Opposition, annulled a certain Act, allowing everything to come in free so far as Canadian interests were concerned, under the condition that when the contract was let the American contractors were allowed to bring material to the waters edge or centre of the Detroit river free of duty. By this course the late Government allowed an exemption of, I think, $400,000 of duty to go back to the contractors and I leave it to the House to judge who benefited by that Act. I am surprised that any member of the Opposition should support the motion which has been introduced by the hon. member for Halifax to-day.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw): I in part agree with the hon. member for Red Deer but I do not go so far because I think that the conduct of the Government in this case is not to be commended. If the Government had done this good thing in a different way it would have been a different proposition. Personally I would be the first to uphold the hands of the Government if I caught them doing what I thought was right,—as well as the most surprised man. If my hon. friend will bring in a measure, for example, making agricultural implements free, I will vote for that measure no matter how every other man in the Liberal party votes. My quarrel is with the manner in which the Government have brought about this reduction of duty. What do we find? We find that under the guise, for it is nothing but a guise, in my opinion, of obliging and accommodating and serving the homesteaders in the West they make themselves faster friends with their masters, the corporations, the trusts and the mergers. We find that when they desire to give some relief from this protection they bring it about through the agency of the protected party. That speaks for itself. I think our hon. friends opposite may well have anticipated that their conduct in making their accredited agents in this matter the men who themselves were protected would necessarily be regarded with a great deal of suspicion. There is absolutely no reason given by the Minister of Finance, so far as I am aware, why the remission was not given without any negotiation or manœuvering or manipulating between the Government and their pets, the steel companies who make these rails. For my part I would rather see the duty taken off and let there be no mistake, I favour the taking off of the duty and commend it, but I criticise the manner in which it was done; but I say it should not be done through the agency of a protected industry or corporation. If every time any corporation says: we cannot get such and such an article in Canada because the supply is not equal to the demand and we have to go to the United States, the Government when they put their heads together to see how they will remedy the trouble, at once call to their council the man who is protected in that very industry, where is that going to land you? You are going to get involved, tied up, compromised with the very people we are afraid of, those of us especially who have no love for protection. Mr. Hays said he could not construct that three or four hundred miles unless he had this remission made in duty. Is that not evidence enough to interfere with the tariff. Much as I love a lower tariff I do not think it is. I can bring to the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister thousands of farmers in the prairie provinces who are not able to farm as well as they would like to because they can not afford to pay the high price for agricultural implements which they would not have to pay if the duty were lowered. I can bring resolution after resolution from the grain growers' associations, men who are just as honest as any railway president, and I ask the Prime Minister will he take their word and cut the duty on agricultural implements in half? The supply of agricultural implements made in Canada is not equal to the demand any more than the supply of steel is equal to the demand and why will not the Minister of Finance and the Government grant remission of duty on agricultural implements to the consuming people of the West just as he has granted remission to the wealthy railway corporations? The date on which this was done is a thing that I would like to call to the attention of the Prime Minister; I understand it was the 12th of July.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): There were a number of orders all similar in form granting remission, and the dates of course differ.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not going to say anything offensive to the Finance Minister, but I would ask him had this remission any reference to the 11th of July when the Saskatchewan elections were on; perhaps the Minister of Public Works could answer that.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend should have looked at the dates. The correspondence commenced a month before. The hon. gentleman has not looked at it.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is a remarkable thing that the only two reductions in duty that this Government has ever given synchronized so well with the provincial elections in Saskatchewan.

Mr. WHITE: Did my hon. friend see any notice of the action of the Government in the papers during the time of the Saskatchewan elections?

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, they were full of it, but we did not pay much attention to it. We have had so much experience of the professions made by this Government that those of us who are older did not take very much stock in them. I think it would be a wise policy for the Saskatchewan Government to have an election every two months.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. KNOWLES: We would then have a visit from the Minister of Public Works every campaign—we always like to see him, we like him, although, as I have said, we do not fear him any longer in Saskatchewan—we would not only have the honour of a visit from the Minister of Public Works, but we would, judging from precedent, have a reduction in tariff which we are all very desirous of. The whole transaction, it being done through the agency of a protective corporation, done on the eve of an election; the manner in which it was done and the surrounding circumstances are such as to show it was not a sincere and genuine transaction. I do not want it to be supposed that those of us from the West are opposed to any reduction in duty because we are not; but what we want is the reduction of duty to be sincere and genuine and we do not want to have the wool pulled over our eyes.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

On the motion for Committee of Supply:

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland): I wish to get some information from the Minister of Railways with respect to a matter which is of very great importance to my constituency and to the maritime provinces generally. This afternoon I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to a paragraph which appeared in the Montreal Gazette this morning stating that Mr. Siddell who was the Conservative candidate in the county of Westmorland last election and who is now entrusted with the responsibilities and privileges of patronage in that county, had announced to a gathering of the Conservative Club in the city of Moncton last night that the board of management of the Intercolonial railway was about to be abolished, in fact that it was practically a thing of the past. I very respectfully asked the Minister of Railways what truth there is in this statement and I do not think his answer was given in the same spirit. I am not thin-skinned and this is not a matter that personally affects me in any way or about which I would complain, but my constituents are entitled to learn if there is any truth in that statement. Information of the kind contained in that despatch should not be considered available to any particular party, it is information which should be given to the general public. It is a matter of very general interest to the people of the maritime provinces who have been discussing this very question for the past year. It has been time and again announced that the board of management of the Intercolonial railway would be abolished; it was announced during the last session of Parliament and I asked the minister with respect to the matter then and he said that no such step had been taken. It has been rumoured occassionally in the public press that this board is to be abolished and a new method of managing the Intercolonial railway is to be adopted, and this latest rumour to which I have called the attention of the hon. minister is particularly interesting. It is especially interesting in my constituency which is the headquarters of the Intercolonial railway and of course people all over the maritime provinces are interested in knowing whether there is to be a change. I ask for this information not as a matter of idle curiosity but in the interests of the employees of the Intercolonial railway and the business communities served by that railway. The board of management is not popular, the system of managing the Intercolonial railway by a board of management is very unpopular. I think myself it has not been a success. If the Minister of Railways and the Government are determined to abolish the board, their action would harmonize with my own wishes and would be in line with the policy which I have consistently advocated. I would like to ask if it is the intention, either in the near or remote future, to abolish the board of management of the Government railway system and adopt the method of appointing a manager to operate the Government railways. If that is the minister's intention, I certainly would applaud it. It would be in the interest of the railway and of the business community of the maritime provinces. If that is the intention why is the information simply disclosed to a gentleman who is entrusted with the patronage in the county of Westmorland? He, presumably, is in the confidence of the Minister of Railways. He was in the city, I think, not later than last week, he goes back to Moncton and, at a gathering of his political friends, takes them into his confidence and says that it is the intention of the Minister of Railways to abolish the board and that the board has practically ceased to be. That would mean, I suppose, that, although it has a legal existence, it is not really managing the railway but that this work is being done by some other method. I have assumed that, because of the hon. gentleman's silence, the board is still in existence. If the board had ceased to be, an announcement should have been made to that effect in the House and I think the House is entitled to the information first. Political friends throughout the country are not entitled to that information before hon. members in this House have been acquainted with it. I think this is a grievance of which I have a right to complain. My hon. friend did not answer the question a few moments ago when I put it to him clearly. Is there an intention to abolish the board, and, if it has been determined upon, how soon will it be brought about? Is there any truth in the statement of Mr. Siddell to his friends that the board has practically ceased to be?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would like to say one word in reference to the discussion that has taken place. I think that the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) has scarcely carried it on according to the rules of the House. The subject was introduced by him on the Orders of the Day by reading from the Gazette, and upon that the hon. member based a question which was answered by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, whether to his satisfaction or otherwise. When a minister answers a question—and it is left to himself to give the answer which he thinks is the proper one—I do not think it is quite in order to bring the question up at a later stage and begin a discussion upon it. Although there is great latitude in discussion when the motion is made for the Speaker to leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply—

Mr. EMMERSON: All grievances can be aired then.

Mr. SPEAKER: —yet dealing with the same subject on the same day, and speaking to a question already dealt with, is scarcely in order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I say, with all due deference to you, Mr. Speaker, that, when the House is moved into Supply, is the proper time for a member to ventilate any grievance which he has. If there is an occasion for grievances to be ventilated, this is the occasion. It is the principle upon which our system of government rests that any hon. member who has a grievance can take advantage of the opportunity afforded to him when Supply is asked, to put his grievance before the House. At an earlier time my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) put a question to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) and the answer of the minister, I thought, was very curt. The question was entitled to more consideration than was given to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would beg to say, in reference to the observations of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that it is the right of any hon. members, when the motion is made for the Speaker to leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, to ventilate any grievance. But there are certain well-understood rules for our guidance in that connection. An hon. member cannot anticipate a motion on the notice paper and deal with it; he cannot refer to a subject that has been dealt with by the House and upon which the House has expressed its judgment, he cannot refer to a previous debate, because these things are contrary to the rules.

Mr. BORDEN: I would have thought that it would have been the better course if my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) had put a question on the Order Paper because questions are answered three days in the week. This is a matter with respect to which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) is obviously entitled to notice. My hon. friend read an item in a newspaper and based a question upon it without any notice whatever. That is not the usual course with respect to an important matter of this kind. If any announcement was to be made with respect to a change of policy in the management of the Intercolonial railway, it should be made in Parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON: I think we should have had it last night when the minister made his statement.

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, if there had been any announcement to make, but my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals distinctly said that the board of management is still existing and has not been abolished. If it is to be abolished and when it is to be abolished, announcement ought to be made here in Parliament. In the meantime, it has not been abolished. I do not think that any announcement has been made to any gentleman outside of the House in regard to that particular matter. My hon. friend has all the information that any hon. member of this House has. There is no disposition whatever to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not know what was the result of the discussion last night in so far as——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): This is a new matter, and I will only take a moment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The fact that it is another matter does not confer on the hon. gentleman the right to speak again. There is only one question before the Chair.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

House in Committee on Bill No. 30, to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters, and to change its name to The Independent Order of Foresters.—Mr. Macdonnell. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair).

Mr. OLIVER: Has any explanation of this Bill been given by the promoter?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): This Bill is an important one, and I think it had better stand in the absence of Mr. Macdonell, who introduced it. It was very fully considered and discussed in the Committee.

Progress reported.

Mr. EMMERSON.

PORT NELSON COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 114, to incorporate the Port Nelson Company, and recommending that it be changed to read: An Act respecting the Port Nelson Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Port Nelson Corporation, Limited.—Mr. Beattie. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair).

Mr. OLIVER: It would be desirable to have an explanation of this Bill, if one has not already been put on record.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): As the promoter, Mr. Beattie, is not here, the Bill had better stand.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: With regard to the discussion which took place yesterday, perhaps it would be as well to clear that matter up. What I told my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was that we would, as usual, give one-sixth, or two months' supply, based on the estimates except, the items upon capital account which were absolutely new and as to which there had been no explanation. There were two items on capital account which I thought need not be excluded. One was the graving dock at Quebec. I said to my right hon. friend that we would take that up, because the project is well known and has often been discussed in the House and elsewhere. Then there was the Welland canal; while that item is new, yet the subject has been discussed several times. But there were other items of capital account which are new and on which there has been no explanation.

Mr. BORDEN: Yes, I went over the estimates with the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There were five he mentioned to me. I have directed that these be excluded from the vote of one sixth of the estimates. And the resolution is being prepared on the basis of that understanding.

Civil Government—Department of Customs —salaries, $287,725.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): During the fiscal year 1912-13, the salaries amounted to $278,325; this year they will amount to $287,725, an increase of $9,400. The details are given at page 18 of the estimates, but I may add a little further explanation. The Commissioner of Customs' salary remains as before. In the next division there is an increase of two clerks. Last year we had only two in that division, and it is proposed to promote two from the next division below.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who are the promoted?

Mr. REID: We have not decided that; there are three or four who are qualified. That makes an increase of $5,600 in that division, but it takes two from the division below. We intend to promote one from the second to the first division, reducing the number in the second division to thirteen. But we intend to promote fourteen from the second division (B) to the second division (A). The reason is that these are good men who have been in service for a number of years and have reached the maximum of class 2 (B) and are entitled to promotion, and there is no way to promote them except by putting them in the next division above. They will enter the higher division at the same salary as they are now receiving, and will then go on by their annual increases of $50 per annum. We take in fourteen new officials to replace those promoted from 2 (B) to 2 (A). These are taken into the service through the Civil Service Commission, and enter at the minimum salary of class 2 (B).

Mr. NESBITT: What about the third division?

Mr. REID: We promote two from the next division below up to this division, reducing the number there by two. This is the explanation of how the $9,400 increase is made up. It is simply due to promotions of those who have reached the maximum of their class.

Mr. NESBITT: But some are promoted over the heads of others.

Mr. REID: No, you cannot promote them over the heads of others, but only from one division to the next. The officials to be promoted are those who have been in the department a long time. I am not making any personal selection; I leave it to the officials to decide who are to be promoted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have read in the newspapers—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that Mr. Breadner has been appointed to the Customs Department. Will the minister say whether that is correct or not, and if correct, what are the duties of Mr. Breadner.

Mr. REID: Mr. Breadner was an official in the Customs Department for about twenty-five years. He severed his connection with the department about three years ago and took a position in Toronto, the position of Dominion appraiser became vacant through death.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Who was Dominion appraiser?

Mr. REID: If I remember well it was Mr. Boughner. I tried to get Mr. Breadner back to the department and had him appointed to the position of Dominion appraiser and member of the Board of Customs. Everyone who knows Mr. Breadner knows that he is a man of great experience in customs matters. He was appraiser for many years, and he understands the customs tariff thoroughly. I was very glad to get him back in the service again.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Have all the increases and new appointments provided for in this list been approved by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. REID: The promotions and new appointments must be approved before we will make them. These new officials who are appointed generally start in the third division; we have appointed several of them during the past year. I never know who they are, and I remember the commissioner, Mr. McDougald, saying that immediately after an examination he tries to pick out the best men he can obtain. These fourteen men will be appointed under the Civil Service Commission, and the commissioner will select the names, and take them on.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In the county which I have the honour to represent (the county of Rouville), where a gentleman named Charles Meunier was appointed collector of customs some years ago at the port of Marieville. He had for several years been the warden of the county, enjoyed the respect and consideration of the community, and had been highly recommended by the various firms at that port. Of course he was tainted with the sin of Liberalism, but that did not debar him from occupying a position under the Civil Service, nor prevent him from being an honest and capable officer. When the Government came into office, certain wire pullers, at the head of which I am sorry to say was my opponent, asked for the dismissal of Mr. Meunier. I must give credit to whom credit is due; my hon. friend understood at once that the dismissal of this old gentleman would be a rank injustice, and, at my request and after hearing my explanations, he resisted the demands made upon him for his dismissal. The demands must have been very pressing, however, for my hon. friend expressed his regret at the attitude of the Tories and Nationalists of the county of Rouville, admitted that the old gentleman was quite capable and honest and that there was no evidence against him sufficient to warrant his removal from office. When he assured me that he was overpowered by the wire pullers, I told him to persevere and resist their demands, and, if necessary, to see the right hon. Prime Minister, who promised the people of this country through his Halifax platform that, regardless of political proclivities, he would see that efficient and capable officers would be protected, and that he would have a clean civil service, inside and outside. My hon. friend—I must give the devil his due——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I mean the good devil. My hon. friend persevered and resisted these demands. but finally, finding himself powerless, he came to me and, with tears in his eyes and with a husky voice, admitted that the influence of the wire-pullers was stronger than the principles of justice, fair play and honesty; and Mr. Charles Meunier was accordingly dismissed. If I were selfish I would thank the hon. gentleman for having sent back into the field such a gallant old warrior as Mr. Charles Meunier, but, for himself and his department, and for the Government generally, I regret that act of injustice. At least the hon. gentleman might have paid the rental of the office which Mr. Charles Meunier occupied during the time he held the position of collector of customs at Marieville. I wrote to my hon. friend with regard to the matter, and he examined the case very carefully, but finally again, under the pressure of political influences in the county of Rouville, his good intentions were counteracted and Mr. Meunier was dismissed without having his rental paid for the last year of his occupancy of the office. The investigation which was held at Marieville established beyond the shadow of a doubt the fact that this old gentleman did not take any part in politics during the time he was acting as customs officer.

The CHAIRMAN: I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that we are now discussing salaries of the inside service; there is another item which provides for the salaries, contingencies and expenses of officials of the outside service.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I merely desire to say that, as I have told my hon. friend on many occasions, the old gentleman did not deserve that fate, and the least my hon. friend can do will be to pay the rental of his office for the last year of his service. I may say also that I am sorry to see that in connection with that investigation the Conservative party seems to be rather ungrateful. The gentleman who conducted the investigation is our old colleague Mr, Bergeron, the ex-member for the county of Beauharnois. Mr. Bergeron sat in this House for over twenty-five years. He was unsuccessful at the last election but everybody expected that instead of giving him the office of executioner in the province of Quebec he would have been given something substantial by his party. He has been sent into Rouville, Berthier and Beauharnois and all over the province investigating some picayune cases of postmasters receiving the huge sum of $25 a year, and customs officers receiving $200 or $300 a year. For this work, Mr. Bergeron is receiving $15 a day besides his expenses, knocking about in the country. Mr. Bergeron is getting old, he has served his party well, then, for decency's sake, let the Conservative party do the square thing by him and give him a sinecure which will not brand him in the eyes of the whole province as the high executioner of the Conservative party. I am very sorry for his reputation and himself that he held that investigation and that he forced my hon. friend, against his will, against his conscience, to dismiss Chas. Meunier. Mr. Meunier is dismissed, he does not cry, he knows that, within a few months, he will be back in his office. I simply wish to expose the case and tell my hon. friend that the least he should do would be to give the old gentleman his rental for the last year he was in office. This is really a case of conscience money.

Mr. REID: If I remember this case the hon. member spoke to me about Meunier and I said that of course we would not dismiss him until we held an investigation and I would look into it. It is not, of course, a pleasant thing to dismiss an officer, especially one who has been there a good many years, and in this case we had Mr. Bergeron make the investigation. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that the report of Mr. Bergeron was very strong against Meunier. Following up the rule there was no alternative, I had to dismiss him. As for the rent to which the hon. gentleman refers, if I remember rightly, Mr. Meunier made a claim for rental for all the time he had been there, I think some ten years. If he had asked simply for the rental for one year then it might have been considered more favourably.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will my hon. friend look at the account again?

Mr REID: I will, certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend conveys the impression that this gentleman to whom the hon. member for Rouville refers was dismissed after an investigation by a commissioner, Mr. Bergeron, and that it pained him very much indeed to be obliged to act on that recommendation and make the dismissal. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Customs if there was any investigation in the case of Lyman Smith, collector of customs at Oshawa? That gentleman, I am informed, was dismissed without any investigation, simply upon the recommendation of the member for South Ontario, and I would ask my hon. friend whether it is the policy of this Government to allow their supporters in the different constituencies to exercise that judgment which it is the duty of the minister himself to exercise and to act on their recommendations without any investigation and make the dismissals. I do not think that this committee ought to pass any of these items for which the Minister of Customs is asking until we have a satisfactory explanation of the course which has been taken in regard to Mr. Lyman Smith. That gentleman was the principal of the high school in the constituency of South Ontario. He was requested by some prominent citizens to take the position of collector of customs. He did so. He is a gentleman who never took any active part in political life, as I am informed. He entertained very strong views in regard to the desirability of having purity in elections. There was an election trial in which the present member for South Ontario was concerned. On that trial there were disclosed acts of corruption of the most aggravated character, so much so that the judge who tried the case expressed the very strongest disapproval of the conduct of a gentleman who happens to be the father of the man appointed to take Mr. Smith's place as collector of customs and I think that gentleman was disfranchised for eight years in consequence of the corrupt acts of which he was guilty in that contest. Mr. Lyman Smith entertained a very strong view that there should be purity in elections.

Mr. BENNETT (East Simcoe): He was in odd company.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In South Ontario? I never heard that South Ontario was more than ordinarily corrupt.

Mr. BENNETT: In the Liberal ranks.

Mr. PUGSLEY: On one occasion Mr. Smith, in conversation with one or two individuals and in a private way, expressed his view with regard to political corruption. He was dismissed upon the recommendation of the hon. member for South Ontario. But there is another matter in respect to which it is the duty of the Minister of Customs and the Prime Minister to take some action and to make some statement to this Parliament. The hon. member for South Ontario made the statement in the House that Mr. Lyman Smith practically bought his position from the gentleman who was lately the representative of that constituency in this House. In other words, the hon. gentleman who represents South Ontario made the statement that Lyman Smith had bought his position and he had bought it from the late member of this Parliament from that constituency. There has appeared in the public newspapers a letter from Mr. Fowke, lately member for that constituency, calling the attention of my right hon. friend to this statement and calling on him also to take the necessary steps to have the charge investigated. I think it is the duty of the hon. member for South Ontario to make a charge in a specific manner and have it investigated. It is the duty of my right hon. friend, who is called upon for the time being to guard the honour of this Parliament, when a charge of this kind is made by an hon. member, that an official appointed by the Government bought his way into the office to which he was appointed from a member of this Parliament, even although he may not now be a member, it is the duty of the Prime Minister, it is a duty which he owes not alone to this Parliament but to the gentleman whose character has as he says, been maligned by the gentleman now representing that constituency in this House, to take some action and have the matter investigated. Although a very reasonable demand has been made on the Prime Minister, nothing has been done. I received a letter from Mr. Fowke last year which I shall read so that Mr. Fowke's statement may be placed on 'Hansard.' I may say that Mr. Fowke challenges the fullest investigation and denies in the most specific terms the charges made by the hon. member for South Ontario. This letter has not a bearing on the charge made by the hon. member for South Ontario because it is written previously, but it states Mr. Fowke's position in regard to the dismissal of Mr. Lyman Smith. The letter reads:

Dear Dr. Pugsley:

The people up this way take a great interest in the published proceedings of Parliament, and the manner in which the weakness of the coalition government is made manifest by the discussions which take place is greatly enjoyed by many.

In a particular sense I am pleased with the manner in which you drew Dr. Reid yesterday on the dismissal of Lyman C. Smith from the customs here, at the instance of Wm. Smith, M.P., and I am glad to know that the matter is to be further ventilated at some future time. This will do much good in South Ontario where both men are well known and the situation is properly understood. Lyman C. Smith, the dismissed collector, was for twenty-eight years head master of the Oshawa High School; he is an author of some considerable note, and is universally respected and admired hereabouts. He was appointed collector of customs at the suggestion of leading business men of the town, and because it was felt he would make a first class officer, and would lend proper dignity to the position. It is well known and admitted that Mr Smith worthily fulfilled the duties of the position to which he was appointed, and no reason has or can be assigned for his dismissal other than that given by Dr Reid, that he placed himself on record as being opposed to the idea that he should vote for a man who has been proven guilty of corrupt practices at an election, as in the case of Wm. Smith, M.P.

Mr. Lyman Smith since his removal to Oshawa twenty-eight years ago was never known to participate in the work of a general election, although he has said that on occasions he has attended political meetings called in the interest of either political party.

I purpose reading part of the letter from which you will see what ground Mr. Smith has——

An hon. MEMBER: Read it all.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I shall be glad to comply with the request of my hon. friend:

Mr. Smith, M.P., is known in South Ontario as a first class election crook——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend opposite asked that I should read it.

Mr. BORDEN: The hon. member surely knows that it is out of order to read in this House a letter containing insulting language towards a member of this House or reflecting in any way on a member of this House; the hon. member is fully aware of that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY: An hon. gentleman opposite asked me to read the letter, but if my right hon. friend objects——

Mr. BEST: You were not asked to do anything of the kind, you were asked to read the whole letter or none of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I purposed reading it all, but the Prime Minister objects. (Reading):

—and has been denounced as such in the courts of the country. In an election trial which took place in this riding the late Judge Ferguson gave him a castigation in the following terms.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Now I purpose, Mr. Chairman, unless it is objected to and your ruling is not to the contrary, to quote from the judgment of the judge who tried that case in which he expressed an opinion in regard to the corrupt acts which were committed. I have a copy of the judgment here.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member knows the rules of Parliament; he knows that to read anything which contains reflections on an hon. member of this House is not permissible, nor can the hon. member himself use offensive expressions towards a member of this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Even though it is reading the judgment of a court and bearing upon the question under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN: The rule is that even though it has a direct bearing it must not be offensive; anything that is offensive to a member of this House is against order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Smith) is here, perhaps he would state if it would be offensive to him for me to read from the judgment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order; shame.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. member for South Ontario is the gentleman to take exception and not the hon. gentlemen who are crying 'shame.' Does the hon. member who is affected by this judgment take exception; he is the gentleman who said that Mr. Fowke sold the position to Mr. Lyman Smith. Mr. Fowke says:

I should like Judge Ferguson's remarks spread on 'Hansard,' if possible, when this question is again before the House. I may say the young man made customs house officer at Oshawa by Dr. James Reid is the son of one W. H. Thomas of this place, who was engaged with Mr. Smith in corrupting the electorate of South Ontario.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY (reading):

—and who at the trial at which Judge Ferguson denounced Mr. Smith was——

Mr. BORDEN: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) who is an old parliamentarian and has been a minister of the Crown knows perfectly well that the reading of a communication from a person outside of the House reflecting upon a member of this House is entirely out of order. I am surprised that he would persist in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I purposed to read the judgment of the court and that being objected to I am not able to read it. Does my right hon. friend think that I cannot proceed to read the statement that Mr. Thomas who was appointed to the office—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: One moment please—that Mr. Thomas who was appointed to the office that Mr. Lyman Smith was dismissed from is the son of the gentleman who is mentioned in that judgment. I was going to show the way in which he was dealt with by the court, but if my right hon. friend objects to it and thinks it is improper I shall not press it further.

Mr. BORDEN: I have stated my objection.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I may say, without reading the words of the letter, that in that judgment which hon. gentlemen will find reported in the courts of Ontario, it would appear that the judge used very strong language in regard to the proceedings which had taken place in that election. It was an election petition in order to try out corrupt practices, and as I have said, the father of the young man who was appointed to the position of collector of customs is mentioned in very strong terms by the judge of the court, and a penalty was imposed upon him. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a letter from Mr. Lyman C. Smith, or rather a copy of a letter which he addressed to the present sitting member for South Ontario and on whose recommendation Mr. Lyman smith was dismissed from office without any investigation whatever, as I understand it, by the Minister of Customs. This letter is written 10th December, 1912, dated at Cornwall:

Cornwall, December 10, 1912.

William Smith, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I notice in to-day's report of proceedings that you state that,

(1) I tried to influence J. McCulloch's opinions in the elections,

(2) I attacked your private character,

(3) I alluded to the lack of brains of the supporters of the present Government.

Allow me to assure you that each and every one of these statements is utterly unfounded. The only reason I had for writing to you after the last elections was to let you know exactly what I said. I give you my most solemn assurance as a man and a gentleman that no such words ever crossed my lips. In regard to No. 1, the conversation did not last one minute. It was McCulloch that started the conversation on the street and I had not the remotest thought that anything I had said would influence him. I knew his mind was made up.

In regard to number 2, the statement has not the shadow of a foundation. When I wrote you, I knew such things were being said that I never even thought of. In regard to your private character I never said a word in my life. I never knew anything against you, much less said it.

In regard to number 3, I never said such a thing. As soon as the elections were over, such things were attributed to me. I again most solemnly assert the whole three are totally unfounded. In my letter I told exactly what I said. I do not retract a word of it.

I will at any convenient time meet anyone that makes such an assertion. I will meet him in your presence.

Another point. The Vindicator stated in a report of a Conservative caucus, that you stated there were good reasons for thinking that I had paid for the office. This is how I got the office: Mr. Robert McLaughlin called me in and asked me if I would accept the office of collector of customs. I said I had never thought of it. He said the occupant of the office was ill, and could no longer perform its duties. I asked of the duties, and the salary, and said I would reply next day. I said I would accept. He told me to see the member, who asked me if I would accept. I said I would. He said, 'the office is yours.' I never then gave or promised, or was asked for a cent, and I never have been since, and I never contributed a cent to an election fund in my life.

I know you have been misinformed, but I ask you as a gentleman to make this denial as public as you have your statements. I do not care for the office, but I do for my reputation.

Yours,
(Sgd.) Lyman C. Smith.

I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs, and also of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, to the fact that Mr. Lyman C. Smith makes the assertion that the statement made by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith) is absolutely without foundation, and yet we have the statement made here by that hon. gentleman, presumably upon the responsibility of his position as a member of this House, that Mr. Lyman Smith bought this office from the late member for that constitiuency. In December last this letter was communicated to the hon. member for South Ontario. Mr. Fowke has also written a letter to the Prime Minister absolutely denying the statement and demanding an investigation into the matter, and, in view of all this, I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the hon. Minister of Customs has taken no step whatever to see that justice is done to these men. All that the Minister of Customs did was to act upon the request of the hon. member for South Ontario and dismiss this gentleman from office whose only offence appears to have been that he had rather strong notions of political morality and a strong objection to spending money in elections.

Mr. REID: The hon. member seems to have changed his opinion now that he is on the other side of the House, as to whose recommendations we should accept in so far as dismissals are concerned. I was in this House in 1896 and at that time there were very many dismissals. If any member of the House at that time made the statement that an official had been an active partisan, the official was immediately dismissed on the mere statement of the member. That policy has been agreed to by both sides of the House. But in addition to that, hon. gentlemen opposite dismissed a great many officials on the recommendation of the defeated candidate without any investigation at all. If the hon. member disputes that fact, I will give him a long list of custom officials who were dismissed in 1896 without any investigation whatever, and without the recommendation of a member of Parliament, but on the recommendatin of the defeated candidate. Now, we come to this case of Lyman C. Smith. The hon. member must admit that this statement that Mr. Smith has made in his letter is sufficient to dismiss him. He makes the statement there that on the public streets he did discuss politics, that he did make a remark against the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith), and it was one of the meanest I ever heard against any living man. I have found out another thing about Mr. Smith that I was surprised at. In the Customs Department, when a vacancy occurs in the position of collector of customs, a man is reommended for it and is appointed by Order in Council. I think this is the only case that I have found in the department where the collector was not appointed by Order in Council. This gentleman had filled the position for a year or two and yet my predecessor could not see his way clear to appoint him by Order in Council. I cannot understand why, but he was only there as a temporary official when I took charge of the customs work. I have had a good many recommendations made by members of Parliament and others, and I must frankly say that the part that Mr. Smith took in the election, the statements that he admitted having made publicly on the street with regard to politics and the remark that he made about my hon. friend from South Ontario were, in my view, ample justification of his dismissal, and it did not trouble my conscience one particle to dismiss him. I would dismiss any customs official who would make such statements as this man did against the hon. member for South Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the remark to which the hon. gentleman refers?

Mr. REID: The hon. gentleman read the letter through. I think it was in the letter which the hon. gentleman has just read the insinuation that the hon. member for South Ontario, at some previous election, did something of which he did not approve. He said that he would not vote for the hon. member for South Ontario for some reason that he expressed in that letter. I do not know that it is necessary to call the hon. member's attention to it. The papers were brought down, he knows all about it and he knows the remark that was made.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does the minister know that officers of his department are not at once appointed by Order in Council? I came across several officers in my county who have been appointed in the regular way, but who had to be on probation for a year or two before they got their regular appointments. Is that not the rule in the department?

Mr. REID: Yes; six months is the limit usually before an officer is appointed by Order in Council. Many are left in the temporary class for years. In so far as the position of collector of customs is concerned, it is not usual to defer the appointment by Order in Council very long. The collector is usually appointed by Order in Council within two or three months.

Mr. McKENZIE: I understand there is no fixed rule. Sometimes it is allowed to run for a considerable time.

Mr. REID: Yes, that is right, or you can appoint them immediately.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Do I understand my hon. friend to draw a distinction because this gentleman had not received his permanent appointment? Does he attempt to justify the dismissal on that ground?

Mr. REID: No, I am not doing it on that. So far as collectors are concerned, as a rule they are appointed almost immediately by Order in Council. I think this is the only case, strange to say, in which the collector of customs was not appointed by Order in Council. He simply held the position temporarily from the time when he was appointed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I presume that my hon. friend, when he dismissed Mr. Smith, knew the language which was complained of.

Mr. REID: I certainly knew it. I think Mr. Smith wrote me at the time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did my hon. friend also know of the trial which had taken place for corrupt practices?

Mr. REID: I do not think I am called on to answer that question. I am only dealing with the case as it came before me in the department. The evidence, on which I was supposed to act or come to a conclusion, was that of the member who was elected for that constituency. I consider Mr. William Smith one of the most upright men in the Dominion of Canada. I do not care what my hon. friend or anybody else says; I sat in this House with Mr. Smith from 1891 to 1896, and not a member on either side but respected Mr. Smith as one of the best men in this House. Not only do I believe to-day that Mr. William Smith commands the respect of every member of this House but there is not a member in the House of Commons to-day who commands a greater respect than Mr. William Smith, the member for South Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman, I have not made any reflection on the integrity of

Mr. Smith. What I proposed reading was a letter from the late member who speaks of Mr. Smith's action at the elections. What I was referring to was the judgment of the court on the election trial. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs admits that the reason why he dismissed Mr. L. C. Smith was that the member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith) asked for his dismissal, and he says that he called his attention to the conversation which took place between him and Mr. McCullough, as I understand it. That conversation, which was of very very short duration, took place on the street. In it, Mr. L. C. Smith expressed his disapproval of corruption at elections, and stated that he would not support Mr. Smith on that ground. If my hon. friend was aware of this trial, and if he was aware of the judgment of the court, would he or would he not think that Mr. Lyman C. Smith was perfectly justified in making that remark, if he was a man who did object to corrupt practices at elections? Does my hon. friend think that upon that ground he was justified in making that dismissal? If my hon. friend justifies his action on the ground that he was simply acting on the recommendation of the member for South Ontario, that is a different proposition; but he seeks to justify it because in 1896 officials were dismissed upon the recommendations of candidates supporting the Government who became members of the House and also of defeated candidates.

Mr. BORDEN: And ever since.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My right hon. friend is mistaken as to 'ever since.' I am satisfied that he is mistaken. I can speak from some experience which I had after I became a member of this House. I know, in the case of some postmasters, it was exceedingly difficult to get the Postmaster General to act. Not only did he require the statement of the member supporting the Government, but that statement had to be backed up by a solemn declaration stating that the postmaster had been guilty of partisanship.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is the experience which I had in supporting some recommendations which came from different members in the province of New Brunswick. It may be that a change in practice took place in recent years in regard to dismissing officials, after my right hon. friend, the leader of the Government then leader of the Opposition (Mr. Borden) took the very strongest possible ground against action in dismissing officials which it was alleged had taken place. It may be that in recent years a change has taken place in that respect. I am led to believe that, in recent years at all events, the late Government and the different heads of the departments required evidence of distinct acts of partisanship before they would dismiss officials on that ground.

Mr. WM. SMITH (South Ontario): Mr. Chairman, I think anyone who has arrived at my time of life and with my public experience, must regret that I should personally be the cause of delaying the business of the House. I do not for a moment try to defend anything that has been charged against me to-night as far as public matters are concerned; but I did think that, during the years while I was out of Parliament, I had atoned for all the shortcomings that I had ever committed in the riding of South Ontario. It is true that this man made the charge against me; it is true that it came from a Liberal, and one of his old pupils in the High School in the town of Oshawa told me what he said. The moment he did so, it would be natural that I would feel that, if he wanted to discuss politics, he must do it as a private citizen rather than as customs officer. I stand by that dismissal. I made the recommendation and I do not apologize for it for one minute. I do not intend to delay the House, although the charges have been made against me. I want to say, however, to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that I am willing to put up my private and public conduct against his. His temper and his condition to-night are very much the same as they were a week ago Saturday night. He can write his friend Mr. Fowke, the ex-member for this riding, that it is possible that we shall meet again in South Ontario and it can then be decided who shall be its member. The people of South Ontario knew all these matters; they have been published in this House and in the papers. My constituents know every word you have said to-night and yet after those years, the people of South Ontario by a majority of 370, said that they would prefer the man who had done these things to the man who had represented the riding in the last Parliament. I asked the Minister of Customs to dismiss Lyman C. Smith. I do not apologize for it. I do not for a moment try to defend my conduct at the elections in South Ontario. The man does not live that ever heard me try to defend it. Mr. Chairman, I shall tell you one thing that I did; I told the truth. Whilst I came back into this House, I fully expected that some of the charges which were made against me and which I was not in a position to defend, might be continued here; but I little thought that the man, who is aspiring to be the leader of the Liberal party in this House, would belittle himself so much as to waste an hour over such matters as these. All I can say is that, if his party is proud of his work, I have no reason to complain.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I should have no right, in a matter of this kind, to ask this House to make comparison between my private life or my public life and that of the hon. member for South Ontario, for that is not the issue at the present moment. I hope the hon. gentleman's private life is all that he claims it to be; certainly, I should be the last man to make any reflection upon him so far as his private life is concerned. As to his public life, he has frankly stated that he has never attempted to defend it so far as his action in the county of South Ontario is concerned; and if the judgment I have read by one of the judges of the province of Ontario is to be relied upon, I should think he would do well never to attempt to defend it. He has in effect admitted that there had been corrupt acts so far as his public life is concerned.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He did not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He has not denied it. As I understand it, all that Mr. Lyman Smith did was to state in a private conversation, started by Mr. McCulloch, that he did not uphold these corrupt acts, and for this statement he has been dismissed from office.

Mr. LANCASTER: Would any but a partisan make that statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think he might well make that statement. Let me appeal to my hon. friend from Lincoln. Mr. McCulloch apparently met Mr. Smith on the street, and they began to discuss affairs. What would be more natural than that something so much talked about in the public life of the hon. member for South Ontario, and which had been brought to the public notice in the election trial, should be referred to, and Mr. Lyman Smith said he could not approve it and could not vote for a man found guilty of these corrupt acts. I would ask my hon. friend and I would ask the Minister of Customs if that is true—and it appears to be all that was said—would that afford a just cause for dismissal of this man from office? I notice that neither my hon. friend nor the Minister of Customs, nor the hon. member for South Ontario has referred to the fact that some months ago the hon. member for South Ontario made in this House a deliberate statement that Mr. Smith had bought his position from the late representative of that constituency. That is a charge of a most serious kind. It reflects in the strongest possible way not only on Mr. Lyman Smith but also on Mr. Fowke, the late member for the constituency. The Minister of Customs must be aware of the charge, for he must have seen it in the public press, and he must have had his attention called to it in the remarks I made. Mr. Fowke had written a letter to the Prime Minister calling attention to the charge and demanding that there should be opportunity for investigation, demanding that the hon. member for South Ontario should be called upon in this House, where the charge was made, to substantiate the charge or that Mr. Fowke, innocent as he claims to be, might be vindicated by a committee of this House. No notice has been taken of that demand for justice, and the Minister of Customs has remained silent on the subject and equally so has my hon. friend from South Ontario. If the hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Fowke was guilty of selling an office while a member of this House, it is his duty to take proceedings under the law against Mr. Fowke. If he made that statement without knowledge that Mr. Fowke was guilty, he must reaize that, no matter how splendid may be his private virtues, no matter how good a man he may be, it is his duty to make good that charge or to withdraw it. It is a serious charge and one which the Government ought not to treat lightly, but ought to take steps to investigate.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): With the consent of the hon. members opposite, and as it will facilitate business, I would like to move the resolution embodying the arrangements which the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition made and which was referred to by the leader of the Opposition in his speech.

Mr. VERVILLE: Are we not to have opportunity to ask questions of the Minister of Customs?

Mr. WHITE: There is a great deal of work to be done in getting these resolutions prepared. I have been asked by the officers to get this through the committee as soon as possible to facilitate that work. I quite understand that I am a little out of order, but I am asking opportunity to present these resolutions, as I understand that the matter is not controversial.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does the hon. gentleman propose to put that through as one resolution?

Mr. WHITE: That is the way it is done.

Mr. GRAHAM: The leader of the Opposition will be here in a moment. He understands the matter completely.

Mr. McCREA: I would like to ask the Minister of Customs for information about the dismissal of Duncan McLeod, customs appraiser in Sherbrooke. In June last he was dismissed on twenty-four hours' notice; he simply received a letter from the department saying that his services were no longer required, but with no reason given further than neglect of duty. He wrote asking the department inquiring why he was dismissed. The reply was that in the letter of the previous date the reason was given—that he was dismissed for neglect of duty. And up to this time that is all the information he has got; but he does not think it is quite sufficient. I asked for the correspondence in connection with the matter and now have it in my possession. I have read the letters through, but I cannot find any valid reason given for this dismissal. It is intimated in the correspondence that Mr. McLeod had allowed raw cotton imported by George Gale and Sons of Waterloo, employed in the manufacture of beds to be imported free of duty. Mr. McLeod had written to the department at Ottawa asking for a ruling as to this article and stating that he had admitted it free and asking if that was not correct. Inasmuch as he had not been advised by the deparment to the contrary, he took it for granted that he was right in allowing this material to come in free of duty. A sample of this material was examined by Mr. McDougald and pronounced to be of such a nature as to be free of duty, and in view of this fact. if that is the basis of his discharge, I cannot see wherein he has offended. Whether or not that was his offence, however, it seems to me that it would have been but ordinary courtesy to tell him in what respect he has offended, as the simple statement that he has neglected his duty does not constitute a very definite explanation. As I have already stated, Mr. McLeod was dismissed on twenty-four hours' notice. He has on two or three occasions written for an explanation as to the nature of his offence and the reason for his dismissal, but he has been repeatedly told that he was discharged on account of neglect of duty. I have no fault to find with his successor personally, but, as far as his experience and qualifications are concerned, I think he is not superior in any way to Mr. McLeod. Mr. McLeod was getting a salary of $1,250 a year, and his successor has been appointed at $1,500, and within thirty days an assistant designated as a preventive officer, was appointed at $900 a year. The facts, then, are that there are two men filling the position formerly occupied by Mr. McLeod, and drawing a total salary of $2,400. I venture to say that inquiry from the public who have to deal with that office will show that Mr. McLeod's services were quite as satisfactory in every respect as those of the present officials. As to the source of the recommendation for the dismissal of Mr. McLeod, I do not think it was the defeated candidate, but it may have come from a discontented senator. However, Mr. McLeod has been unfairly dismissed, and I think he is entitled to an explanation as to when, where and how he neglected his duty.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I desire to move the adoption of the following resolution, to which I referred a few moments ago:

That a sum not exceeding the amounts set forth below (being one-sixth of the main estimates, not yet adopted, with the exception of items Nos. 4, 10, 11, 17, 21 and 25 in resolution No. 102,) be granted to His Majesty on account of the following services for the year ending 31st March, 1914:

The items which are specially excepted are those which I understand my right hon. friend desired for the moment to stand. They are in connection with the amounts chargeable to capital account in the Intercolonial railway estimates, and are as follows:

Lévis to St. Romuald—double tracking line	$173,000
Lévis—improvements at	160,000
Rivière du Loup, additional facilities at	78,000
St. John—to increase accommodation at	18,000
To increase accommodation and facilities along the line	126,000

One-sixth of the main estimates have been extended with the exception of those items which have been adopted in their entirely, and with the exception in their entirety of these five items to which I have particularly referred.

Mr. LOGGIE: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fourth item on page 52, which is as follows:

Diversion line between Nelson and Derby Junction, $128,000.

It is my intention to move that this item be struck out, and in the meantime I would suggest that it be put on the same basis as the other items that have been reserved for future consideration. I would like to make some remarks on this matter at a convenient time when the other matters are before the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This item has escaped my attention, but it undoubtedly is a new work.

Mr. WHITE: Then item No. 4 will be excepted with the other items which I have particularly mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It seems to me there should be some statement that this resolution is unanimously adopted. I think it is the right of this committee, if any member of the committee desires it, to have every item specially considered. If I understood my hon. friend aright when moving the resolution, he intimated that all these items will be passed by one vote. I have the impression that on previous occasions the different items were considered—at all events

I think that was the case in concurrence—and read through item by item. It certainly ought to appear on the record that the resolution has been adopted by unanimous consent so that no objectionable precedent will be established for some future occasion. If the majority can do it in this way now, they might also do it in reference to items which would come up in the ordinary way. I think that every item must be considered by the committee.

Mr. BORDEN: I think this is the usual way in which it is done, the items are put through in committee and are read on concurrence.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): The hon. member for Sherbrooke asked a question with reference to the dismissal of officer Duncan McLeod, customs appraiser at Sherbrooke. In the return brought down there is a report from our chief preventive officer, Mr. Wilson, on several seizures that were made at Sherbrooke. When our inspector or chief officer of the Preventive Service visits a port and see that anything is wrong he makes a report and submits it to the Commissioner of Customs. The commissioner discusses the matter with the minister and I always act on the suggestion made by the officials of the department. In this case at Sherbrooke the report of the chief officer shows that goods were allowed to be brought in and duty paid at a very much lower rate than should be charged and after seeing the report and discussing the matter with the minister I came to the conclusion that Mr. McLeod was either unfit for the position or was not attending to his duty. From the return my hon. friend will see that several invoices were brought in at a very low rate of duty. I have here the report of Mr. Wilson, in which he says:

John McDougald, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I beg to hand you report of preventive service seizure 892 covering charges preferred against Messrs Geo. Gale and Sons, Waterville, Que., concerning waste or shoddy machined or garnetted and certain lacquer imported into Canada without payment of the duty payable thereon.

The customs invoices and statements compiled therefrom are submitted. The waste or shoddy from the cotton, machined or garnetted, was exported by the J. Burton Co., Chicago, and passed through the customs at Sherbrooke free of duty as raw cotton under tariff item 532, whereas it was subject to duty at the rate of 12½ per cent under item 533 of the tariff. The lacquer was exported by Earle, Bourne & Company, Ltd., Birmingham, Llewellyn Ryland, Limited, Birmingham, and Joseph Shorthouse & Sons, Birmingham. Duty was paid on it at the rate of 20 cents a gallon and 15 per cent under tariff item 249, whereas it was subject to duty at the rate of $1 per gallon under item 248 of the tariff.

The seizure charges cover an importation of white tough tufts exported by Lloyd & Bowman, Cincinnati, and duty was paid on Sherbrooke entry 4003. The customs invoice is attached and an examination of it will show erasures. The entered value was $20. Lloyd & Bowman's invoice for these goods was obtained from Geo. Gale & Sons in Waterville on the 16th instant and it shows a valuation of $53. The invoice obtained from the importers is attached to the papers. On this importation there was an under valuation of $31.

The proper duty paid value of the goods covered by this seizure is $32,764.01. The duty paid value as entered is $28,709.05. The value short entered is $31. The duty short paid amounts to $4,023.96.

In connection with this seizure there is inclosed a sworn statement made by the appraiser of customs at Sherbrooke, Mr. McLeod, on the 17th instant, which reads as follows:—

'I have not examined any cotton for Geo. Gale & Son, of Waterville, for over a year to the best of my knowledge, but I have examined cotton addressed to him prior to that time both in ordinary bales and in compressed bales and found it to be raw cotton. I have taken all that this firm entered lately as raw cotton as it was so marked on invoice and entry and receiving no report from the customs officer at the station who checks the bonded cars.

I have also lacquers imported by Geo. Gale & Son, and whenever in my opinion such lacquer contained alcohol I charged $1 per gallon duty and 20 per cent and 15 per cent or 20 cents and 22 cents on lacquer in which I could find no alcohol. The only way I had of testing the lacquer was by smelling it.'

There is also submitted a letter, dated Waterville the 16th instant, addressed to me by W. H. Ward, manager for Geo. Gale & Son, which clearly shows that said firm were of opinion that the cotton referred to was dutiable at 12½ per cent and that the lacquer was dutiable at $1 per gallon.

The samples of cotton that have been submitted to the department in connection with preventive service seizure 891 are representative samples of the six different kinds of cotton that are covered by Sherbrooke entries 8220 and 129, and these samples may fairly be taken to represent all of the cotton that was entered free of duty and covered by this seizure.

Inclosed are two letters, dated 28th February, 1911, and 25th January, 1912, written by the J. Burton Company, Chicago, giving quotations for the goods in this seizure that were entered free of duty as raw cotton at Sherbrooke.

While Geo. Gale & Son were passing cotton from the J. Burton Company free of duty at Sherbrooke they were paying duty at Winnipeg at the rate of 12½ per cent on the same kind of cotton exported by said company. Evidence of this contained in the attached customs invoices and copies of entries from the port of Winnipeg. The Winnipeg branch forwards to the firm in Waterville a monthly statement of expenses. The monthly statements for the months of December, 1910, and February, 1911, were obtained from Geo. Gale & Son in Waterville on the 10th instant and are attached to the Winnipeg papers submitted. These monthly statements clearly show duty paid on cotton.

In connection with the lacquer covered by this seizure you will recall the recent investigation made in England, report of which is on departmental file 78052.

Certain invoices of lacquer on which duty was paid at the rate of $1 per gallon are inclosed.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. F. Wilson,
Chief Preventive Officer.

It was clear from the report that Mr. McLeod was not attending to his duty and owing to this we were able to make only one seizure of goods brought in prior to that time on which the proper rates of duty were not collected. The result was that we collected a large amount from Gale & Son for an infringement of the customs laws, and after I had discussed the matter with my officials and had this report, I came to the conclusion that Mr. McLeod had not been attending to his duties and was really not a fit officer for the position.

Mr. McCREA: Mr. McLeod claims that prior to the seizure he had sent samples of the cotton to Mr. McDougald at Ottawa and apprised Mr. McDougald that he was admitting it free and, if that were not correct, to advise him. As Mr. McDougald did not advise him that he was wrong in admitting it duty free, Mr. McLeod thought he was right. I have a letter showing that samples of this same cotton were sent to Mr. McDougald since Mr. McLeod's dismissal and Mr. McDoguald pronounced it raw cotton and not subject to duty. I am not surprised at Mr. Wilson making that kind of a report; I think he was looking for trouble, and people will find trouble when they look for it.

Mr. W. J. CARROLL (South Cape Breton): I draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to the need which exists for the establishment of a customs office in the town of New Waterford in the riding of South Cape Breton. This is a town with a population at present of seven or eight thousand, and great inconvenience is caused by the fact that there is no customs house there. Mining towns spring up rapidly and perhaps the fact that New Waterford has come into existence somewhat recently is the reason that it has not yet a customs office. The nearest customs house is at Lingan which is three or four miles from New Waterford, and great inconvenience is caused to the business people by their having to go to Lingan to get dutiable goods which are consigned to them. I urge strongly on the minister that he should make provision for a customs office at New Waterford.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): I will take the matter into consideration when I am dealing with the new offices that will be opened during the next fiscal year. I realize that a customs office in a community is of great convenience. The increasing settlement along the frontier in the West demands the establishment of many customs offices. I may say to my hon. friend that along the frontier some of the customs offices are from twenty to fifty miles apart, and he will at once admit the necessity there is for increasing the number there to prevent smuggling. Last year we not only spent the vote for opening new offices but we had to take a further vote on the supplementary estimates. It is always a great pleasure to me to open new customs offices, but I have to keep within amount voted. In the case of New Waterford I assure my hon. friend that I shall do my best to accommodate that section of the country.

Mr. CARROLL: Has there been application made for a customs office at New Waterford?

Mr. REID: I will inquire and let my hon. friend know to-morrow.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond): I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the dismissal of an officer in my county in May or June of last year. The preventive officer in the district of Petite de Grat was Peter Fougère who was appointed by the Government of Sir John Macdonald in 1884, and no doubt he was appointed for services he had rendered to the Conservative party. The Liberal Government never disturbed him during the fifteen years it was in power. Mr. Fougère and many others were surprised to learn that Mr. Gillies, the defeated Conservative candidate in Richmond, laid a charge of political partisanship against him. I have here the records in the department bearing on the dismissal of Mr. Fougère and I shall read them:

Sydney, C.B., February 21, 1912.
Hon. J. D. Reid,
Minister of Customs,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I am requested to notify you that the dismissal of Mr. Peter Fougère, the preventive officer at Petite de Grat is respectfully asked for on the grounds of offensive political partisanship. I would ask that a judicial investigation be held in this case immediately.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) J. A. Gillies.

The matter was referred to Mr. Duchemin to investigate. On the 5th March Mr. Duchemin addressed the following letter to the Minister of Customs:

Sydney, March 5, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Reid,
Minister of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 27th ultimo, enclosing file No. 78,080. Respecting charges of political partisanship against Peter Fougère, customs preventive officer at Petite de Grat. I note your instructions in the matter and will note the same my attention in due course.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. P. Duchemin,
Commissioner.

I have here the report of Mr. Duchemin made upon the evidence which was given before him at the investigations into the charges made against Mr. Fougère:

Sydney, N.S., April 25, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Reid, M.P.,
Minister of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

Re Peter Fougère, Preventive Officer, Petite de Grat, N.S.

Dear Sir,—The inquiry into the charges against P. T. Fougère took place at Arichat, on the 12th instant.

James LeBlanc, Harry Boudreau, Edward E. Boudreau, P. T. Fougère. and E. L. Comeau were the witnesses who appeared on the subpoena and gave evidence.

Under the testimony of these witnesses, I find that Mr. Fougère frequently engaged in public political disputations at the post office at Petite de Grat, some weeks prior to election day, last Dominion election; that he put forth arguments to those assembled from night to night, to show that reciprocity would be good and desirable for the country.

I also find that the day succeeding the Dominion election of 1908, Mr. Fougère caused or permitted a flag to be hoisted in front of his place, to celebrate the victory of the Liberal party on that occasion.

In view of the evidence submitted in this connection, I think that Mr. Fougère has transgressed the regulations of the department.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. P. Duchemin,
Commissioner.

I have here a copy of the evidence taken, which I will read to the committee:

James LeBlanc Re Peter Fougère, preventive officer, Petite de Grat.

I may say that he was the party looking for the appointment to the office and he was the man appointed as soon as Fougère was dismissed. I need scarcely remind you, Mr. Chairman, that evidence from such a quarter is not such as ought to be given very much weight to in investigations of this kind. In nine-tenths of the investigations that were held into charges of political partisanship against officials in the county of Richmond, the star witness against the office holder was the man who was himself the applicant for the position and who afterwards got it upon the dismissal of the incumbent.

James LeBlanc, sworn. I live at Petite de Grat. I am a fisherman. I know Mr. P. T. Fougère. On the day after the Dominion election of 1908, Mr. Fougère had a flag up in front of his door to celebrate the Liberal victory. The flag was up all day following that election. In the 1911 elections I heard him discussing politics in the post office. The discussion was about reciprocity. He was taking the Liberal side. He said that reciprocity would be good for the country. Some of the persons present were Edward E. Boudreau and Harry Boudreau. They kept it on hot in the post office every night for about three weeks before the election. There were both Liberals and Conservatives present almost every night. I was there for a month hand running—would not miss a night. Mr. Fougère always took part in the discussion on the Liberal side. The post office was the principal place in the district where political gatherings took place. Mr. Fougère was there mostly every night and argued in favour of reciprocity. There was no row about it. It used to come hot, but we never came to blows over it.

Questioned by Mr. Fougère. I did not see Mr. Fougère put up the flag; I saw it on his premises in front of his house. I cannot recall the words Mr. Fougère used, but he argued in favour of reciprocity. I cannot say what took Mr. Fougère to these meetings.

(Sgd.) James LeBlanc.

The witness, LeBlanc, said that these disputations took place at the post office. In rural communities the gathering place is invariably the post office, particularly if the mails arrive at an hour after the daily labour of the citizens is at an end, when they call at the post office for the purpose of waiting for the mails. Under these circumstances, discussions of one kind or another are sure to arise. There is nothing in the fact that Fougère went there for the purpose of discussing public questions. He went there, as other citizens went, for the purpose of getting his mail and he was present when the conversations took place in the post office, no matter upon what subject. The next witness called is Harry Boudreau:

Harry Bourdeau, sworn.

I am a farmer. I live at Petite de Grat and have known Mr. Fougère for years. I have been a worker in Petite de Grat. I know about the meetings in the post office at Petite de Grat that Mr. LeBlanc referred to in his evidence. I used to be there. I met Mr. Fougère there almost every night I went there, but I only heard him speak twice regarding politics. He spoke in favour of reciprocity. He said that the agreement that was made with the United States and Canada did not give the privilege to American vessels to come from the banks and ship their fish at Petite de Grat or Arichat, for instance, and ship them home. He said he had the written agreement from the department, that it was home, and he had read it, and it did not give them that privilege. Another party came in about that time and proved that Mr. Fougère was wrong.

Another night, I heard Mr. Fougère say that the Laurier Government would be sustained, but that in another eighteen months there would be another election and then, no doubt, Borden would win.

(Sgd.) Harry Boudreau.

You will see the very significant discrepancy that appears as regards the evidence of these two witnesses. This man, James LeBlanc, who was looking for Peter Fougère's job and who subsequently got it, had no hesitation in swearing that Fougère discussed politics every night at the post office, while Boudreau says he was there every night and he only heard Fougère take part in the discussion twice and that was with reference to the rights of American fishermen under the reciprocity pact. The third witness was Edward E. Boudreau, who says:

I am a fisherman. I live at Petite de Grat. I was almost every night at the post office for two or three weeks before the last Dominion election. I saw Mr. Fougère there almost every night. He was taking part in the discussion. There were a couple of men against our party. They were working hard. Mr. Fougère was one of them. I remember one night especially. He said one night anyone who had a level head on him could not show him where reciprocity would hurt the country. Some of those present used to say: 'You, Mr. Fougère, you are the customs house officer; you ought to know something about this; give us your opinion.' Then he used the words I have given.

The evidence of this witness was to the effect that Fougère was not taking part in the discussion at all, but he would be appealed to for his opinion and he gave his honest opinion and it was an opinion that a good many people might share with respect to an important question and still would not be guilty of offensive partisanship. Boudreau proceeds:

Another time I met Mr. Fougère on the bridge and he said to me: 'Boudreau, if you vote again on Sylvester Boudreau's side you are a gonner, for he loses every election on the side he goes.' This Sylvester is a Conservative and has been for years. This was during the last Dominion election.

I am rather astonished that the commissioner would think that observation of sufficient importance to take it down as part of the evidence. Any person reading this evidence must see that the remark was a purely jocular one and no person discharging judicial functions would for a moment attach any importance to an observation such as that.

At four o'clock in the morning after the Dominion election of 1908, Fougère had his flag up. It was right abreast of his door. It was a few weeks before the election took place that we had the conversation on the bridge with reference to Sylvester Boudreau. It was in the day time. It was a couple of weeks before the election took place. He had the flag up at four o'clock day after election, in 1908.

(Signed) Edward E. Boudreau.

Now I proceed to read the evidence of Mr. Fougère himself:

Peter T. Fougère, sworn. Referring to James LeBlanc's evidence, Mr. LeBlanc has said lots of things, that never transpired in my presence. I had nothing to do with the flag. It was the little boy that put it up, and he put it up for the anniversary of one of his sisters. It was not put up to celebrate the Liberal victory. I deny that I was discussing politics in the post office during the 1911 elections; I never took any side except one evening, I said I was a Conservative, and that I would vote Conservative. I never mentioned reciprocity, as far as I can remember. I say that all the statements that Mr. Harry Boudreau has made are untrue, as far as my memory serves me. I say that all the statements in Edward E. Boudreau's evidence, except about Sylvester Boudreau being a Conservative are untrue.

(Signed) Peter T. Fougère.

E. L. Comeau, sworn. I live at Petite de Grat. People used to assemble in the post office last Dominion election and discuss politics. I was there a dozen times when Mr. Fougère was there. I heard him express his views. The statement I heard him express was that he had been a Conservative all his life, and his sentiments were Conservative, but as far as reciprocity was concerned, he believed it would be to the benefit of the country, and that by supporting reciprocity he would be following his party, that reciprocity was an old Conservative platform. I do not recollect Mr. Fougère's argument about the American fishermen coming in here and landing their catch.

(Signed) E. L. Comeau.

That includes all the evidence that was given against Mr. Fougere. I stated a moment ago that Mr. Fougère was an official appointed by the Government of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. He was in office twenty-nine years, when he was dismissed by the present Government for offensive partisanship. Mr. Fougère swears that he was a Conservative all his life, but that on the question of reciprocity he thought it would be a good thing for the country, and at all events he could not see that reciprocity would be any harm. Mr. Fougère is a man over seventy years of age. He has had a large family, many of whom are grown up and have gone away to the United States. Those who have not left the county of Richmond are able to support themselves. He has some grandchildren to support, and the only means of livelihood which he had was the income that he derived from that office. One of the charges against him, which is regarded as of sufficient importance by the commissioner to refer to as one of the grounds upon which he requested the dismissal of Mr. Fougère, was that he had a flag flying on his premises the day after the election. Mr. Fougère swears that he did not put up the flag himself, but that a little boy, his grandson, put the flag up to celebrate the birthday of his little sister. The Government is going pretty far in the matter of finding excuses for dismissing men from office. We have had cases that ought to have brought the blush to hon. gentlemen opposite, whether the blush came or not. I am afraid that in many instances they have lost the gentle art of blushing, so far as the effect this conduct has upon their character and their temperament. Surely the hon. Minister of Customs will not say that he was justified in dismissing Peter Fougère for that reason. If you take away the evidence of the man Leblanc, who was seeking the office, you have nothing but the statement that Mr. Fougère, while a Conservative all his life, said that he thought reciprocity would be a good thing for the country and that it was an old Conservative platform. The hon. Minister of Customs will not dispute that fact. No hon. gentleman sitting behind the Government benches, will deny that reciprocity was at one time the platform of the Conservative party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not at all.

Mr. KYTE: Mr. Leblanc, in his evidence says that he did not recall the words Mr. Fougère used, but that he argued in favour of reciprocity. That is a general statement; he does not pretend to quote the arguments which Mr. Fougère used in all these discussions of which Mr. Leblanc appears to have had such knowledge. To find out exactly what took place, you must go to the evidence of Fougère himself, and that evidence is as I have read it to the House. In 1896 and for a year or two after, the question of dismissals came up very frequently in this House. I have here statements made by the right hon. the First Minister (Mr. Borden) in discussing that question; as reported in 'Hansard' second session 1896, page 338, the right hon. the Prime Minister said:

> The fact that these officials worked for either party; so long as they worked openly, honourably and fairly ought not to weigh against them, if at the same time they do not neglect their duty as public officers. It seems to me that those gentlemen who are in the Civil Service of this country, ought to have the same right as other electors, not only to vote but to work during elections, subject to certain limitations, which I shall endeavour to submit to the House.

And again:

> It does not seem to me that a public officer discussing, in an honourable and straightforward manner, a public question of absorbing interest with a gentleman who afterwards succeeds to office as a minister of the Crown ought necessarily on that account, to lose his office.

There you have a declaration of principle laid down by the Prime Minister in 1896 on the subject of dismissals. There is no allegation that Mr. Fougère neglected his duty as a public officer. The only gatherings that he was present at were at the Post Office in the evening while he was waiting for the delivery of the mail. Assuming that every word given in testimony at the investigation against Mr. Fougère is true, there is not a single syllable that would lead any member of this committee to come to the conclusion that, if Mr. Fougère did discuss political or public questions, he discussed them in any other way than openly, honourably and fairly, and that he did not neglect his duty as a public officer. Principles are things eternal; no man can express them to-day and discard them with impunity to-morrow. Should he do so, he must throw himself open to a charge of insincerity. I do not know that the right hon. the Prime Minister is inclined to relegate the principles he uttered in 1896 on the subject of dismissals to the limbo of discarded principles and opinions.

In the county of Richmond, there has been a carnival of the most unjust and indefensible dismissals during the past eighteen months. During the fifteen years that the Liberal party was in power, there were only four dismissals all told in that county for offensive political partisanship. The present Government has been in power only about eighteen months, and there are fifty dismissals in the county of Richmond to the credit of the gentleman who was my opponent at the last election. As a matter of fact, no officials are left in office except the old Conservative officials who were appointed by the Conservative Government previous to 1896, and who were not disturbed by the late Government during all the years it was in power. The dismissal of Mr. Fougère is a great hardship to him. He was, as I have said, a Conservative, and a consistent Conservative all his life—never voted for me to my knowledge; told me on one occasion, in 1908, that he could not vote for me; and so little did I expect his support that in 1911, I did not even canvas him. I have no particular interest in defending him, because as I have stated, I am under no political obligation to him. But the fact remains that he has been dismissed most unjustly. He was dismissed to make a position for a young man much better able to earn a living than an old man over seventy years of age, who has spent twenty-nine years of his life in the service. There surely ought to be some spirit of humanity in the breasts of hon. gentlemen opposite. The other night we had a discussion about the release of a man from jail. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, whom I see in his place, defending the Government's action, made an appeal to me to know whether I should object to releasing that man from jail in view of the fact that he had a family to support. I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question in return: What does he think of his colleagues in this Government who are dismissing men with large families, families twice as large as the family of Andrew Landry, men who, as keepers of lighthouses or in other similar positions, had incomes of $400 or $500 a year, this being the only income they had and the only support for their families. These men are dismissed on the flimsiest pretexts, that they voted for me or that they had expressed some political opinions. I appreciate the argument addressed to me by the Minister of Justice, and I stated on that occasion that such an argument did appeal to me, and the only reason that I objected to the release of Andrew Landry from jail was that he was released upon insufficient information and insufficient investigation by the minister or his department. I accept his appeal to me, and I ask him in return, and I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the Minister of Customs and the right hon. Prime Minister, will they yield to the appeal I make on behalf of these men with large families who have been improperly deprived of their offices and whose families and themselves are helpless in the world until some other position is open to them.

Mr. BORDEN: I would ask that this item be allowed to stand a little while, as we wish to go into concurrence almost at once. The Minister of Customs will make answer later on.

Mr. KYTE: I wish to speak of two or three other dismissals, and I would like to be sure of an opportunity—

Mr. BORDEN: There is no reason for the hon. gentleman to fear he will be shut out; there is all the rest of the session for discussion.

Mr. KYTE: I am not worried about what takes place during the rest of the session; I am anxious what takes place to-night.

Civil Government—Post Office Department —salaries, $689,340.

Mr PUGSLEY: Has one-sixth of this been passed?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then why is it returned to?

Mr BORDEN: We wish to get into concurrence. The Postmaster General wishes to make some explanation.

Mr. PELLETIER: I see in the Free Press to-night, and also in to-day's Globe, a statement in almost exactly the same terms and which, I suppose, I can qualify as bearing the same earmark. It is about the purchase of mail bag locks which was discussed yesterday. The statement in the Free Press is most unfair, unjust, and inaccurate and is evidently intended to put the facts of the case before this country in a false light. The contract which has been entered into for these locks I have now before me, and I wish to put it before the House as the basis of my statement. For years and years the locks for the mail bags have been purchased by the Post Office Department without inviting tenders. The reason will be apparent in a few minutes. Now the Post Office Department is alleged to have entered into this contract when the present Government came into power and to have favoured some friends unduly. I may state that the only people who could manufacture the locks in question were those who had the patent or were the assignees of those owning the patent.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who owns the patent?

Mr. PELLETIER: If the hon. gentleman will allow me to make my statement—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who owns the patent?

Mr. PELLETIER: I will answer any question that may be put afterwards, but I want to make my statement first. When the patent under which the locks had been manufactured expired, a new lock and a new patent had to be secured. This contract and this patent was held under the previous Government by a gentleman by the name of Shepherd. It was either Shepherd or Sir Henry Bate. When the patent for this lock had expired and a new one was taken out, the old lock was in such a miserable state, that, in the interests of the public, it became necessary to dispense with it. When I came back from Europe during the course of the summer or fall, I was informed by the officers of the department that the patent had expired and that it was the custom of the department, for obvious reasons, to change these locks every fifteen or eighteen years. I was told also that, having regard to the safety of the mails, it was absolutely necessary that a new lock should be secured. I do not desire to go into this matter at great length, but I desire to put the whole facts before the House and the public so that this act of administration will not be looked upon in such a light as that which has been attributed to it by the Globe and the Free Press. This contract. which has been under discussion before the House on several occasions, bears the date of October 26, 1912, and is as follows:

Between the Ontario Equipment Company, Limited, of the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, in the province of Ontario, and the Dominion of Canada, and carrying on together business as locksmiths, &c., under the name, style and firm of the Ontario Equipment Company, Limited, and hereinafter called the contractor of the first part and His Majesty King George V., represented herein by the Hon. Louis Pelletier, Postmaster General of Canada of the second part.

Witnesseth that the contractor, his heirs. executors and administrators and His Majesty for himself and his successors contract and agree to and with each other in the manner following, that is to say:

First.—The contractor will supply to the Post Office Department of Canada all steel clamp mail locks and chains complete and all other fittings such as keys for steel clamp mail lock, metal slip fasteners and label holders, attached metal label case, improved steel ferrules, and repair all steel clamp lacks except such of these locks as are covered by the two years' guarantee heretofore in existence, which last mentioned locks are each to be repaired by the contractor within the period mentioned free of charge to the department. The contractor will substitute the new lock for the old lock as fast as the same can be manufactured, which new lock is patented under No. 142,823.

Second.—His Majesty will pay to the said contractor for the supplying of all the aforesaid various articles and the repairing of steel clamp mail locks other than those under the two years' guarantee specified the following prices:

Steel clamp mail lock and chain, eighty cents (80c.) each complete.

Keys for steel clamp lock, twenty cents (20c.) each.

Metal slip fasteners and label holders, twenty-five cents (25c.) each. Attached metal label case, five cents (5c.) each.

Improved steel ferrules, twelve dollars and fifty cents ($12.50) per thousand.

Repairing steel clamp mail locks, twenty-five cents (25c.) each, except such locks as are covered by the two years guarantee, which locks are all to be repaired by the contractor without charge to the department as hereinbefore stipulated.

I specially draw the attention of the committee to clause 3, which is an important one in view of the manner in which the newspapers in question have endeavoured to put this matter before the country.

Third.—The said contractor agrees to make and deliver any and all of the aforementioned articles within six weeks from the date of the order therefor, from the Postmaster General, or by some officer or person thereunto duly authoized by him.

Fourth.—The said articles shall be examined by such officer or person as may be approved by the Postmaster General for that purpose, and such officer or person shall have the power to reject any or all of which in his or their opinion do not in every respect comply with the departmental standard, and the decision of such officer or person shall within the approval of the Postmaster General be final.

Fifth.—This contract shall continue in force for a period of four years from the date thereof, but (a) if at any time during the said period of four years the contractor shall fail to comply with any such order or requisition as aforesaid, within the time above limited, or (b) if in case of the rejection under the fourth clause hereof, of any one of the aforementioned articles or parts thereof furnished by the contractor, the said contractor shall fail within one calendar month to replace such articles with others fully complying with the requirements aforementioned, then and in every such case the Postmaster General may cancel this contract by notice in writing delivered to the said contractor or left for him at his place of business or abode or mailed to him at his usual post office address, and this contract shall then cease and determine, and in such case the said party of the first part shall have no claim against His Majesty for damages caused or alleged to have been caused by such determination.

Sixth.—It is hereby further agreed that in the event of any of the articles herein aforementioned not being supplied within two calendar months after a requisition or order therefor as aforesaid shall have been made, the Postmaster General for the time being may procure such articles in such other manner as may be most convenient, and the difference of price, if any, which he may pay therefor over and above the price herein agreed to be paid shall be paid to His Majesty by the said party of the first part.

Then follows a heading entitled: 'Regulations regarding the Sweating System,' and as this does not bear upon the matter under discussion, I shall not read it to the House. The 8th and following clauses read as follows:

Eighth.—The said contractor further agrees to furnish a guarantee to be given by two responsible persons undertaking that this contract shall be duly executed by the contractor for the price agreed upon; undertaking also to become bound with the contractor in the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars mentioned in the form of guarantee which appears on the next following page for the due performance of the contract.

Ninth.—In consideration of the foregoing the party of the second part hereby agrees with the contractor to pay to him the contract price above mentioned for each of the several articles specified in accordance with the terms aforesaid.

Tenth.—This contract is made subject to the provisions of the sixteenth section of chapter 11 of the revised Statutes of Canada, that no member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part thereof, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

In witness whereof the contractor and the Postmaster General have hereunto set and affixed their respective hands and seals.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who are the securities?

Mr. PELLETIER: The securities are Mr. When this security bond was entered into When this securtiy bond was entered into I took special precaution to inquire from the officers of the department about the financial strength of these people and I was told that they are A1 and I believe so. This contract is in the usual form, a printed form used in the department for years and years.

The newspapers which have referred to this matter have informed the country that the Post Office Department has bound itself to buy 350,000 of these locks. Here is the proof that we are not bound to buy one lock.

Mr. NESBITT: How many did the minister buy? I understood that he is to buy continually until there is some default on the part of the contractor.

Mr. PELLETIER: The contract is a four year contract, the usual contract with a time limit which has always been the rule in the Post Office Department. There is a clause, probably the one to which my hon. friend refers, in virtue of which, if the contractor is in default in supplying the locks which he is bound to manufacture and deliver, he loses his right under the contract. The department is not bound in any way to take one, or twenty, or one hundred of these locks. It is a contract in virtue of which this firm, which I understand is a very reputable one, is bound to deliver us those locks as we require them. That point is very important and I want to make it clear before the country and the House. I am told by the Free Press and the Globe, to use their own words:

As a result of the report that the company which has been awarded this remarkable contract is composed of friends of the Postmaster General——

I may say that I do not know personally any of the directors of that company, that I do not know the manager except for having met him once, perhaps twice, but I am sure of having met him once in my office in the presence of my officers, when he wanted to get $1.10 for this contract and when I discussed the matter with him. That is the only time I met the gentleman, I have never spoken to him before or since. That is the friend to whom these newspapers allude.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is that Mr. Carling?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes; he is as I understand, the president of the company.

Mr. BELAND: They probably mean political friends.

Mr. PELLETIER: That is not what the article says, the article implies that I have given this big contract, in virtue of which I would have undertaken to take three hundred and fifty thousand locks, to my friends or a company whose board of administration would be my friends. Those are the facts so far. Hon. members will understand that when a matter like that comes up in an important department where there are many important things to do, a man who is comparatively new in that department—and I was in that position—would not care to take action on his own responsibility. After the election we had the session and then in the spring or early summer I left for Europe and the facts to which I now refer took place after my return from Europe. I have not so much faith in myself that I would enter into negotiations such as this without being guided by the officers in the department whose long experience and knowledge of these matters should be for me a guarantee that the question was properly dealt with and properly handled. I took up this matter with the deputy minister, with the assistant deputy minister, and with the controller of the postal stores, a gentleman who has been in the public service for forty years, Mr. Sidney Smith, a man of whom everybody who knows him in the city and the hon. member for Rouville himself will have to bear testimony that he is one of the best employees, one of the most trusted and trustworthy men in the public service. These men have advised me step by step about what they thought should be the policy to adopt in this matter. I have followed that advice and they have put in my hand declarations which I shall now read to the House and which will explain the whole situation in such a way that only people being in bad faith will perhaps continue to have something to say.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You mean Mr. Smith?

Mr. PELLETIER: Mr. Coulter, Mr. Verret, the assistant deputy minister, and Mr. Smith the controller of postal stores. I beg leave to read in the first place, a memorandum from the deputy minister, which he put before me to-day:

Ottawa, April 1, 1913.

Memorandum for the Postmaster General.

The Postmaster General is informed, in reference to his inquiry as to how locks for mail bags have been purchased in the past history of the department, and as to whether an ordinary lock could not be tendered for for use on these mail bags, that the lock used for this purpose has been a special lock that has been adopted by the department and that has been patented, and that tenders have never been called for it owing to the fact that it was a patented lock and the special property of the inventor and his assignees. In regard to the question as to whether an ordinary lock, or one that could be obtained in hardware stores, &c., could not be used and tenders called for, thereby decreasing the price, permit me to say that I do not think it would be wise that a lock should be used on a mail bag that any person could go into a hardware store and purchase, and thus have free access to the mails. It is necessary that a lock should be obtained which could not be used commercially, and which by its appearance would identify itself if found in the possession of any other person than one of the officers of the department, and it should have a special key of its own.

In a contract like this where the lock has to be specially constructed for a special purpose, I am not of opinion that the contract should always be given to the lowest tenderer. In fact I am personally of opinion that if a contractor can be obtained who is thoroughly reliable and satisfactory in the construction of the work, and in every way properly safeguards the interests of the public, then the additional safety accorded by such a contract is more important than the lowest tenderer.

I understand that in many of the large railways where it is a question of certain article or supply or construction, no tenders are called for, but when a reliable man has been obtained who does the work for a fair price and in a reliable way, the contract is given to him without tender.

My experience where these conditions prevail has been that where something so particular as a lock for a mail bag is concerned satisfaction and reliability are far more important than the price obtained by the lowest tenderer, unless the difference in price were so exorbitant as to make it worth while.

As regards the present lock, I may say that the price is exactly the same as that continued for many years, that is, since 1907, when, owing to the increased cost in materials and labour, the price was increased upon the recommendation of the controller of postal stores to the present price, which is considered absolutely fair and just.

(Sgd.) R. M. Coulter,
Deputy Postmaster General.

I have the following memo from Mr. Sidney Smith whom I have referred to as an employee of the Post Office Department for 43 years, and whose honesty and reliability has never been questioned. Mr. Sidney Smith knows his business; he has been in the department long enough to be able to vouch for his statements and his advice has been accepted by my predecessors in the department for years. Mr. Smith says:

Post Office Department, Canada.
Postal Stores Branch
Ottawa, 1st April, 1913.

Memorandum for the Honourable the Postmaster General. Mail Locks and Keys.

The price of the lock with attachments, comprising chain, swivel and snap hook, and the cutting of the lettering on each lock 'Canada P.O.' and the date of order and the date of issue of each lock is eighty cents per lock and the keys twenty cents each, including the stamping of the Crown on each key, these prices having been authorized by the then Postmaster General in 1907. This lock is not in any sense a commercial lock and must be specially manufactured for the special use of the postal service in order to secure safety to the mails. The mechanism of the post office lock is phospher bronze, which will not rust from dampness, so it is never out of commission from this cause. It is of special pattern not in use in commerce and is designed to be used only with the bar attached to the letter mail bag. It cannot be utilized for private purposes in the same manner as the ordinary lock of commerce. The latter lock, if used for mail purposes, would not afford the requisite security to the mails, because of the fact that the key for such lock could readily be procured by the public at any store where locks are sold.

The post office lock has never been put up to competitive tender, because being covered by patent rights the department was not at liberty to call for tenders, besides which the calling for tenders would lead to a publicity and knowledge of the internal mechanism of the lock amongst lock makers and lock dealers, which is not permissible in the case of a lock intended to secure the safety of mails.

Moreover, considering what the department gets, as above noted, for eighty cents for the lock and twenty cents for the key it is reasonably certain that a better price could not have been obtained, even if the department had been in a position to call for tenders, and the present high cost of material, skilled labour and wages, would be a determining factor which would inevitably mean a higher price were the lock and key put up to competitive tender. In fact, the present contractors have experienced very considerable difficulty in procuring the requisite material with which to make the locks which has resulted in such delay in the manufacture of the locks that, although the contract was entered into with the Ontario Equipment Company, the present contractors, in October last, no locks have yet been delivered to the department, the result being that the department is now dangerously near the point at which, if the new locks and keys are not shortly forthcoming, a new supply of the old locks and keys will have to be procured in order to meet the requirements of the service.

It has been the practice of the department since Confederation to change the lock in use for the postal service to a new lock at periods of about fifteen to eighteen years. The old lock has now been in use nearly twenty years and was found to be so defective that it could be opened by other means than the key, and the contents of the bags thus got at and letters and valuables abstracted.

For some time the department has felt that the time for a change to a new lock had arrived, and has had the change in contemplation. In fact, shortly before you became Postmaster General, the fact was brought to the attention of the department that the key of a switch lock in use on the Quebec and Lake St. John railway would open the post office lock, and when a mail clerk happened to be without his key he would borrow the switchman's key for the purpose, which fact alone made it imperative for the department to adopt a new lock and discontinue the use of the old one at the earliest practicable date. Your statement in the House, as it appears in 'Hansard' in answer to a question when the House was in Committee of Supply on the 19th March that three hundred and fifty thousand locks had been ordered from the Ontario Equipment Company, erred perhaps on the Liberal side, because the contract with the Ontario Equipment Company requires them, to begin with, to substitute a new lock for the old one as soon as the same can be manufactured, and I should estimate that the number of old locks at present in use would amount from about one hundred and fifteen thousand to one hundred and twenty thousand. Of course the service is expanding and increasing enormously and it is very difficult to estimate what precise quantity of locks may be required during the period of the next four years, but if the expansion of the parcel post system in Canada, as foreshadowed by you in the House last night, is shortly implemented by practical action it may well be that quite three hundred and fifty thousand locks, if not more, will be needed for use on large mail bags which would be required in connection with this system.

I may add for your information that the Ontario Equiment Company is incorporated under the laws of the province of Ontario.

(Sgd.) Sidney Smith,
Controller Postal Stores.

I may say here that the Post Office Department of Canada which for the financial year which expired yesterday, sold stamps to the value of $2,000,000 over and above the quantity sold last year ought to be able to afford a mail bag lock which would ensure the safety of the mail. I may add that Mr. Smith got some information about this company which I am told is composed of some of my political friends, but I do not even know the names of the directors and have not yet been able to get them. Here is a memorandum from the Assistant Deputy Postmaster General, and these are the three men who have advised me with respect to this matter:

Re New Mail Bag Locks.

At page 6441 of the 'Hansard,' March 19, 1913, Mr. Lemieux asked if new locks had been bought for mail bags.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who writes that?

Mr. PELLETIER: Mr. Verret, a gentleman whom I found in the department when I arrived there. The Free Press says that I am using his name; I am not. I am more manly than that, but in my department everybody will have to take his responsibility and I may say right here that, in spite of all that has been said, I have confidence in the officers of my department. I have found that they have been loyal to the department and the public interest. I have taken them as I have found them. The deputy head of the department, Mr. Coulter, is one of the most efficient officers in the public service As far as the assistant deputy minister (Mr. Verret) is concerned, he was closely connected with the hon. member for Rouville. I have never found any fault with him and I think he is fulfilling his duty as assistant deputy minister with loyalty and honesty. I say this advisedly after having thought the matter over. Mr. Verret says:

At page 6441 of the 'Hansard' of March 19, 1913, Mr. Lemieux asked how many new locks had been bought for mail bags. Mr. Pelletier answered: 350,000.

When this question was asked by Mr. Lemieux, it was almost six o'clock, whilst we were rushing the supplementary estimates through.

He means the supplementaries for the year 1912-13.

Mr. Pelleier asked me——

You will remember that Mr. Verret was sitting here as the deputy ministers do when we are in committee. The question was put to me by the hon. member for Rouville, I did not have the information at the moment, and I inquired of the Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

Mr. Pelletier asked me: 'How many locks do you think we will require?' I answered: 'Between 300,000 and 350,000 during the next four years, which is the term of the contract.' I am afraid that I have led the Postmaster General astray in giving such large figures, and I am ready to take the blame for it.

Knowing for the past three years that the lock was defective, and that anyone could open it with a knife (as I had done myself), I told the minister that it was not safe, and that a new one should be substituted. I discussed the matter with the deputy minister and the controller of postal stores, who were of the same opinion.

In the meantime, a lock had been patented under No. 142823. We found that this lock would be perfectly safe for the mails, and after many experiments before the Postmaster General, he came to the conclusion that the lock should be accepted, provided the price was the same as that paid for the old one. All the old locks had to be replaced according to the terms of the contract which reads as follows:

'The contractor will substitute a new lock for an old lock as fast as the same can be manufactured, which new lock is patented under No. 142823.'

After having studied the files and seen the number of locks in use, which I found was about 120,000, I came to the conclusion that my estimate of 300,000 to 350,000 was a little too high, but no one can determine in advance how many new locks will be required during the period of four years, according to the growth of the country and the requests for the opening of post offices.

According to the contract, no locks can be purchased from the company unless an order is given by the controller of postal stores, who has been in the service forty-three years, and I will not myself authorize any purchase unless recommended by him.

When I gave you such answer, I had in mind the parcel post system, which will no doubt call for a considerable number of bags of large size, each of which must be fitted with one of these locks. The increase in the quantity of locks required will thus be abnormal and it is not only probable but certain that a very large quantity will be required during the next four years for this purpose alone.

(Sgd.) Hector B. Verret,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

In this article in the Free Press, which has been prepared by a skilful hand, it is mentioned as being very strange that during the six years when the hon. member for Rouville and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland) were at the head of the department, there was only a small number of locks purchased, while, during the first six months that I was there no less than 9,000 locks were purchased. Neither the minister, nor the deputy minister, nor the assistant deputy minister, as Mr. Verret puts it here, has anything to say about the orders, which Mr. Sidney Smith gives to the contractor, when he as head of the branch foresees that new locks are required. He is the man who makes the requisition and it does not even come before the minister. My hon. friend from Rouville knows that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As I told you yesterday.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not know. I did not see the hand that penned this article; but we are told in it that the Postmaster General was very profuse in his orders for these locks which amounted to 9,000 during six months of his administration of the department. I hope my hon. friend from Rouville will tell the gentleman who wrote this that he has been very unfair.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am always fair.

Mr. PELLETIER Of course I can guess who writes these fine things in the papers. There is another important part of this article to which I am now going to refer. I think I have established now to the satisfaction of the committee that we have not made an improvident contract. We had to secure a new lock to replace the former lock, which was—I do not know whether this is good English, but it expresses my meaning—a rotten lock, which could not continue to be used by any self-respecting department, and with the use of which we could not guarantee the safety of the mails. In face of that fact, was it not the bounden duty of the department to secure a proper lock for the mails?

Mr. McKENZIE: Last fall I had to do with the defence of a mail carrier in a strenuously fought criminal case lasting four days in which leading officials of my hon. friend's department were concerned, and I never heard it intimated in the slightest degree that there was anything the matter with the lock although the main question at issue was whether the mail bag was opened or not. It is surprising to me to hear now that these locks were so rotten.

Mr. BELAND: Of course, the old lock was all right.

Mr. PELLETIER: That is a very important contribution to the debate. I may say, Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred, were it not for the savage attacks not to have to state from my place in the House the circumstances in regard to the faulty condition of these locks. I am driven to it, because, after all I must defend the administration of the department. Now there is a very important point here, which I shall refer to without using big words. I shall just place the facts before the House. When this matter was first mentioned in the newspapers, the only fault to be found was the enormous price that was to be paid for those locks. Some papers said that these locks must be nickel; one newspaper went even so far as to say they must be silver or gold, and that it was the most outrageous scandal that had ever been perpetrated by any government. This paper is one that has supported real scandals for the last fifteen years.

I desire to quote what I find in the Free Press, and what some people think has been written by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). This House will understand the reason why in a few minutes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am not in Toronto and Quebec at the same time. I cannot write all these articles.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not accuse my hon. friend. I advise him not to expose himself to the proverb: 'If the cap fits, wear it.' The Free Press says:

Hon. Mr. Pelletier's statement in the House yesterday that his predecessor had fixed the price at which such locks were to be purchased, and consequently 'this big scandal has disappeared,' was definitely denied by Hon. Mr. Lemieux, who spoke immediately on a question of privilege.

This is the only truth in the article. It is true that the hon. member for Rouville denied yesterday that he himself had fixed the price of these locks. It is also true that he denied it twice yesterday. Now just listen to this. We are going to see who tells the truth:

Ottawa, 15th October, 1907.

Memoranda for Mr. Laschinger,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

Complying with your instructions relative to the application of Mr. E. G. Shepherd, contractor for mail locks, mail keys and metal label cases for the under-noted increase in prices, that is:

	Present Price.	Increase.	Asked.
Mail locks..	·70	·10	·80
Mail keys..	·10	·10	·20
Label cases	.17	.08	.25

On the ground of the increased cost of material, wages and running expenses, I would say, that on going into the matter with Mr. Shepherd it is found that the invoices from the firms from whom he has, from time to time, purchased the goods and the correspondence which has passed between Mr. Shepherd and the different firms, established the fact that Mr. Shepherd is now paying the following increase in prices, compared with the prices paid by him for the same goods in 1897, when the manufacture for the department of the articles in question was taken over by him from the previous contractor, Mr. George Low, Ottawa:

Brass castings for locks.. .. .. 90%
Steel castings for locks and label cases.. .. .. 100%

Also that his expenses for some other items have in the same period increased as follows:

Wages.. .. .. 75%
Running expenses.. .. .. 50%

In view of which I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that the prevailing prices paid to Mr. Shepherd by the department, and established so long as ten years ago do not give him a fair margin of profit, and that it would tend to the production of better work and a superior article, and be of advantage to the department, were the increase asked for by Mr. Shepherd granted, and I beg to recommend accordingly.

(Sgd.) Sidney Smith,
Controller of Postal Stores.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER: Let my hon. friend wait before he says, 'hear, hear.' This is the signature of Mr. Sidney Smith; but on the memorandum, the man who denied it yesterday, has put his initials. Here they are.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will you send the memorandum over to me? There is a great difference. How many were bought in that year?

Mr. PELLETIER: Just answer on that point; you will not escape.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not want to escape.

Mr. PELLETIER: Are these initials those of my hon. friend?

Mr. LEMIEUX: They are my initials placed there on the recommendation of Mr. Smith. The man who fixed the price is the head of the branch, Mr. Sidney Smith. My friend said that I fixed the price. Mr. Smith fixed the price, and for five or six thousand locks, not for 350,000.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend, representing a constituency in this House, has said twice that he has not fixed the price.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would swear to it.

Mr. PELLETIER: The newspapers of this country are repeating that he has denied that he fixed the price, and that consequently I did not tell the truth. I may be very obtuse; but my understanding of the administration of the department is that the superintendent of a branch makes a report and the head of the department, if he approves that report, with his initials decides the question himself. If my hon. friend is right in washing his hands, like Pontius Pilate of old, and in saying that those initials were there, that the angels put them there, but if they did so, he recognized them as his own, will the hon. member for Rouville, with the immense desire which he has to find scandals, with the experience which he has as a member of this House, ask us to believe that, after he, the head of the department, has approved of that report, it is the decision of his superintendent or his own? He has accepted the recommendation of Mr. Smith.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Certainly.

Mr. PELLETIER: I have accepted the recommendation of Mr. Smith; but I have assumed the responsibility for it, and I am not going to be so unmanly as to tell this House that I am going to throw the responsibility on even as good a man as Mr. Sidney Smith. I am the responsible head of that department. My officers have advised me. I have taken that advice; I am responsible for it, and I take the responsibility of it. I do not want any of my officers, even the gentleman who says that he was mistaken in giving me on the spur of the moment information which he to-day finds incorrect, to assume the responsibility. I expressed the fact which was given to me by the deputy minister, as is always done in committee. I stated, in my answer yesterday to the House, how the facts stood. My hon. friend from Rouville has not accepted that statement. I was bound to tell the facts as I have found them now. There they are. Since 1907, when this price was fixed at one dollar, wages have increased and the price of castings is higher. Notwithstanding these facts, I have succeeded in closing a deal with a reputable and financially strong contractor for the same price that my hon. friend paid in 1907. I think I have made a good bargain. I want it to be made clear to this House that we are not going to take one of these locks which is not actually wanted, according to the opinion of Mr. Smith.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER: Well what of it? It was suggested by the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) yesterday that we were going to buy a great number of these things. I think that is bad policy.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What things?

Mr. PELLETIER: To purchase them in advance and store them away.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, a bad thing.

Mr. PELLETIER: But the hon. gentleman, (Mr. Lemieux) himself went over to the United States and purchased without tender, and without having asked anybody in this country 100,000 boxes for rural mail delivery, about half of which are stored over this country now, because we do not know where to put them. And this is the same gentleman who says now that we should have invited tenders for these locks. These 100,000 boxes cost $3 a piece. That makes, if I mistake not, $300,000—a purchase in advance for that amount for which there was no need at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are you quite sure?

Mr. PELLETIER: Of course, I am quite sure. And I can tell him that about 45,000 of these boxes are not yet in use, and the general superintendent of the inspectors has been trying to find places all over the country to store these boxes. If the rural policy as adopted by my hon. friend had been followed it would have taken twenty or thirty years to use all these boxes. And these are the gentlemen who find fault with an action of mine which is clearly in the public interest. There was absolute need of new locks. The old lock could be opened without a key. I have secured a contract with a reliable firm to supply whatever locks are wanted; I am not going to store them away by the forty or fifty thousand. Under these circumstances the Free Press may continue to say what it pleases, but I hold that I have done a good act of administration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I must congratulate the right hon. the leader of the Government, first upon being present to-night so as to know both sides of this question: and also and above all, I must congratulate him on having forced his Postmaster General to come to terms about these locks which he admitted having purchased by the three hundred and fifty thousand. I desire to explain this case to the right hon. the leader of the House, for I am sure that the Postmaster General is so enraged that he will not appreciate what I am saying to-night. Last week I received accidentally from Quebec a letter informing me that a poor mail conductor by the name of Lorenzo Grenier was the inventor of a new lock for use on the mail bags. And by the same letter I was informed that the poor fellow, who for years and years had striven to sell his patent to the Post Office Department had at last succeeded, but unfortunately for him he had to sell his invention for a song. Two other gentlemen, political friends of the Postmaster General, Dr. Faucher and Aimé Dion, and another a M. Baillargeon, I am also informed, a nephew of the Postmaster General had bought the patent for a song and had sold it back to the Ontario Equipment Company of Ottawa for a huge sum of money. And the Ontario Equipment Company, it would appear, had taken over the patent rights and had succeeded in demonstrating to the Postmaster General that the old lock was, to use his description, a 'rotten lock.' Now, I must say to the right hon. the Prime Minister, of course I did not believe one word of that letter. It was not under oath. It is true, the gentleman who wrote it is a respectable citizen, a citizen of Quebec who knows intimately the Postmaster General. But I did not believe one word of that letter, so I put it aside. But strange to say, on the very day the estimates of the Postmaster General were called, incidentally I put a question to the Postmaster General, and if I was wrong, my hon. friend must admit that he was the one who put me on the wrong track.

Mr. PELLETIER: Will my hon. friend--

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish to make a connected statement.

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. gentleman has asked for papers——

Mr. LEMIEUX: I will make a connected statement. This must go to the people connected from beginning to end.

Mr. PELLETIER: I would like to see the letter.

Mr. LEMIEUX (Reading):

Mr. Lemieux: How many new locks have been bought for the mail bags?
Mr. Pelletier: 350,000.
Mr. Lemieux: From whom?
Mr. Pelletier: A firm in Ottawa of which Mr. Carling is the manager; they were the lowest tenderers.
Mr. Lemieux: What is the price?
Mr. Pelletier: One dollar per lock.
Mr. Lemieux : Is it a great improvement?
Mr. Pelletier: Oh, yes, first-class.

So, he knew the lock perfectly well; he was perfectly sure about it all—three hundred and fifty thousand; first-class; one dollar per lock; lowest tenderer. So, I said to myself: The hon. gentleman has called for tenders, he has kept his virtue and he is all right. But I was rather surprised at the number of locks. For, as the Free Press said, I happened to be Postmaster General for six years. Sir Allan Aylesworth was Postmaster General before me; Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General for a number of years. And I may tell the right hon. the leader of the House that since Confederation not 150,000 locks have been purchased for the Post Office Department. But suddenly there is this influx of 350,000 locks at one dollar per lock. 'First-class'—'lowest tenderer,' says the Postmaster General. I accepted the word of my hon. friend. I know the officials of the Post Office Department; I am acquainted with Mr. Smith, who is a perfectly honourable gentleman; I know Mr. Coulter and no more honourable gentleman exists in the Civil Service. I know Mr. Verret, who was my private secretary when I was in the Post Office Department, and whom I promoted to the position of Assistant Deputy Postmaster General But if I were the head of the department to-day I would not come here and read solemn declarations or letters from my officials; I would accept the responsibility for this $350,000—which, by the way, is just about the price of a small cruiser. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) who is very inquisitive, then put a question on the Order Paper, which the hon. gentleman will find in yesterday's 'Hansard,' as follows:

1. Has the Post Office Department recently purchased new locks for mail bags?
2. If so, how many, at what price, from whom, and when?
3. Who is the inventor of said lock?
4. Is there any royalty paid to the inventor? If so, what is the amount of the royalty so paid?
5. Were any tenders invited? If so, in what papers were such tenders advertised, and at what date in each case?

But my hon. friend did not answer the questions without trying to put my name to the front as having fixed the price of the locks at $1 each. I have said, and I repeat it to-night, that I never personally fixed the price of these locks, but the regular officer of the department, Mr. Sidney Smith, recommended——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Surely hon. gentlemen do not wish to cheer the boodlers? I say this is one of the worst boodling cases that has ever come before this Parliament.

Mr. PELLETIER: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman, without adducing any proof, has made use of the word 'boodler.'

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, and I maintain it too.

Mr. PELLETIER: I say the hon. member is not in order.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I will ask for a committee of investigation from the Prime Minister.

The CHAIRMAN: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman should not use the word.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I say it is a boodling case; I maintain the expression, and I will prove it. I did not say the Postmaster General is a boodler; I said this is a boodling case. Following the example of my predecessors I was able when Postmaster General to run the affairs of the department with an average of 9,000 locks a year, and yet we are suddenly face to face with a proposition for the supplying of 350,000 locks. I say it is a scandal, a robbery and a boodle, and before I conclude I will ask the right hon. the leader of this House to appoint a committee for the investigation of this matter. It will be established that the politicians and the friends of the Postmaster General who have engineered this graft are receiving a large amount of money out of the profits which the Ontario Equipment Company does not earn. Now, let us stick to the facts——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I hear the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Sevigny); his name has been mentioned in connection with this matter. He has been acting, I am told, for the parties who are preying on the Post Office Department. I hope he does not condone the action of the grafters and boodlers.

Mr. SEVIGNY: I absolutely deny that. I have nothing and never had anything to do with the matter, either directly or indirectly. The hon. member for Rouville still proceeds against me by way of insinuation, but I will have an insinuation to make against him very soon.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As I have said, my hon. friend, in reply to the question of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., thought it would perhaps be useful to put my name down as the one who had fixed the price of these locks in the department. I repeat again that I never did so; Mr. Sidney Smith, the authority in the postal stores branch, is the one who fixed the price. He said:

In view of which I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that the prevailing prices paid to Mr. Shepherd by the department, and established so long as ten years ago, do not give him a fair margin of profit, and that it would tend to the production of better work and a superior article, and be to the advantage of the department, were the increase asked for by Mr. Shepherd granted, and I beg to recommend accordingly.

I initialled this recommendation, establishing the price recommended by Mr. Sidney Smith. This, of course, was in respect of only a few hundred locks—not for the 350,000 as in the present case. In order to let my hon. friends on the other side know what quantity we purchased during the several years I was in charge of the department, I may say that in 1907 the department purchased 6,000 locks and 2,000 keys; in 1908, 6,000 locks and 6,000 keys; in 1909, 12,000 locks and 6,000 keys; in 1910, 6,000 locks and 6,000 keys; in 1911, 9,000 locks and 5,000 keys. During my term of office of six months in the year 1911, I had ordered 4,500 locks from Mr. Shepherd but suddenly and without any contract to justify him, and as soon as my hon. friend takes hold of the department, there is a request from the Ontario Equipment Company for 11,162 patent steel clamp locks for one year. For the one year I was satisfied with $4,000 and for the year previous with $5,000. There is suddenly an emergency and $20,000 worth of locks and keys are purchased. There was no contract, but the Postmaster General thought there was an emergency, it was necessary; the locks were very bad, rotten I think was the word used; yes suddenly it became urgent to improve the security of the letters in the mail bags. My hon. friend says that the old locks could be opened with a knife. Any burglar can visit my house at night or the residence of my right hon. friend and break into it, is it necessary because a burglar comes into my house, and breaks my locks that I should ask the mayor of Ottawa to force the eighty thousand or ninety thousand citizens of Ottawa to get new locks from the Ontario Equipment Company? It is simply preposterous, ridiculous, so ridiculous that my hon. friend is obliged to change the terms of his contract. He had purchased this $350,000 worth but was put to shame by the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government and his colleagues.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And to-night he promises he will take more time, he has four years in which to buy the locks.

The CHAIRMAN: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he is going too far in his expressions.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it not interesting?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to interrupt you.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Very well, my hon. friend says that the old lock was in a miserable state. Can he tell the House how many mail robberies have taken place during the past year? How many sacks or mail bags were opened in the mail cars? I have not the statistics before me but I daresay that you could count them on your ten fingers. For that reason the hon. gentleman changed the old system of locks which had existed since Confederation. The idea is simply preposterous and justifies an old friend of mine in Quebec in stating that there is a good plum pie in this whole transaction and that political friends and hirelings are sharing in the profits. Am I to understand from the hon. gentleman that he is reducing the quantity to 20,000 a year? Is he going to stick to the 350,000 or has he reduced the number of locks to 20,000. If that is so, of course it is not so bad as the 350,000.

My hon. friend says: I found the old locks in such a miserable state on my return from Europe that I decided to change my policy. But how is it that immediately on taking office and assuming charge of the department, when he had had no time to go to Europe, when all the locks had been purchased by the late Government, he thought proper to buy over 11,000 new locks?

There is something very strange and mysterious indeed in this. My hon. friend glories in stating that the former Postmaster General used to pay one dollar per lock. True, I paid a dollar per lock as recommended by Mr. Sidney Smith but there is quite a difference between paying one dollar per lock for a few hundred or a few thousand in a year, not over nine thousand, and paying one dollar per lock when you make a huge purchase amounting to three hundred and fifty thousand. That is where the scandal comes in. Did my friend make a comparison between the various locks before accepting that patent? Has he called for tenders? He might have called for tenders and he might have selected from amongst the many locks the best one, under the direction of an expert. He did not do that, but the Ontario Equipment Company came to him and said that his friend Dr. Faucher and Mr. Dion were interested in a lock and immediately my hon. friend saw the light and took it. He was put to shame by his colleagues yesterday, and to-day he announced to the country that he will not take the 350,000, yet if he is cheered a little more by his friends on the other side he might perhaps change his mind and think the matter over. Then to-morrow he might say: As I am applauded and cheered by my friends I will stick to the first bargain and will purchase the 350,000 locks. My hon. friend began yesterday by stating that I had fixed the price at one dollar without telling the country that I took an average of eight thousand or nine thousand a year. To-day he comes on with another story and with a dramatic pose he says: I must pause for one moment—this infamous member for Rouville, did he not himself purchase from the United States how many thousand? One hundred thousand rural mail delivery boxes and they are all stored in different places in the country. My hon. friend says every now and then to the House that he is opening rural mail deliveries all over the country, therefore he must use the boxes which I purchased. The orders for rural mail delivery boxes were given on two different occasions, a small order was given when I inaugurated the rural mail deli--ry system. I went to Washington with Dr. Coulter the deputy minister and, we accepted for Canada the standard rural mail delivery boxes of the United States of America. But I was armed with an Order in Council. My colleagues were made aware of what I was doing and I was buying just a small quantity. Then, later on the firm which was manufacturing that box came to Canada and as the rural mail delivery was increasing by leaps and bounds in Ontario, it offered to sell to the department another lot. I said: Yes, provided you manufacture your boxes in the city of Toronto and you will be paid as your boxes are required by the service; you will manufacture as many as you wish; for my part I am ready to distribute fifty thousand boxes in a certain number of years but you will be paid only as they are needed. What did my hon. friend do? How was he lured? Last year he paid that company the whole amount, which he was not obliged to pay until the boxes had been delivered. I see here by the report of the Auditor General, a very interesting book which it is well to study closely, that the International Mail Equipment Company of Toronto received $150,000. The hon. gentleman was not obliged to pay that in a lump sum; he could have distributed it over the several years that the boxes were needed on the rural mail delivery routes. That is my course as compared with his in reference to the locks and keys which he so providently purchased some time last fall after the recommendations he obtained from his political friends in Quebec. I say to the Prime Minister that this lock is the invention of a poor mail conductor and if anyone should make a profit, it is poor Alonzo Grenier of Quebec. He was forced to sell his invention to three or four political hirelings, who banded together with the Ontario Equipment Company. They took out the patent. They sold to the Government at $1 per lock without any expert passing upon it and they shared huge profits. That is the information I have, and surely the leader of the Government knows enough now to grant an investigation in order to sift this matter to the bottom. Does it not appear strange that the hon. Postmaster General who generally does not lose his wits in the House, answered of his own volition on the 19th of March, that he had purchased 350,000 locks, and to-night he comes before the House and says: Oh no, I am not obliged to take 350,000. I will take them as they are needed. He says the old lock is bad; why then does he not replace it by the new one? It is clear that we are this evening in the presence of a huge graft, of a mammoth boodle. I do not accuse my hon. friend—his good faith was intruded on; his hirelings have put him on the wrong track, and the right hon. leader of the Government in whose honesty I have confidence has set him on the right track in telling him not to give that contract. People are murmuring everywhere in the country that this is graft and that is why the hon. gentleman has made a retreat here this evening. Go and sin no more; these are my last words.

Mr. PELLETIER: In the first place I would like the hon. member for Rouville to send back the official documents which I have lent him.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I did not want to keep them.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am the guardian of these documents.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to be your guardian angel.

Mr. PELLETIER: And I must keep them in the archives; it is safer.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Put them under lock and key.

Mr. PELLETIER: The House has been treated to-night by the hon. member for Rouville to this display of Quebec politics.

Mr. LEMIEUX: These are Canadian politics.

Mr. PELLETIER: I shall not lose my temper as the hon. member for Rouville has, and I am not going to travel as far afield as he has done, in this discussion. In the second place, I would like the hon. member for Rouville to return the courtesy I extended to him when I sent the documents over to him at his request, and I now ask him that the letter to which he has referred be sent over to me.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If the right hon. gentleman will give us an investigation, the letter will be produced.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And not only the letter but the man who signed the letter will be here.

Mr. PELLETIER: When the hon. member for Rouville asked me to send him the documents. I sent them over to him at once.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Official documents.

Mr. PELLETIER: Now, he has made an accusation or rather an insinuation and he has referred to the contents of the letter he says he has received. I say he is bound by courtesy and the rules of the House to put that letter before us. The hon. member for Rouville is requested by me for the second time to be manly enough to put before the House the letter which he has seen fit to use.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I will put it before the investigation committee; not only the letter but the gentleman who signed it.

Mr. PELLETIER: We have now the fact that the gentleman who has been a member of this House for a number of years and a member of the Government of this country, has chosen to rise in his seat and speak of things as facts whereof he knows nothing himself, and when he is called upon to produce the letter which he has quoted as evidence, he keeps it, if he has it, deep in his pocket. The hon. member for Rouville has accustomed us in this House to his tactics. We are told that a poor man by the name of Grenier has been cheated out of his patent; I know nothing about it and I would be very sorry if that is true. We are told by the hon. member for Rouville that several gentlemen whose names I have noted have cheated Mr. Grenier—Dr. Faucher, Mr. Dionne, and, the hon. member for Rouville wanted specially in order to throw aspersions on the character of his political adversary, to use the name of Mr. Baillargeon who is one of my nephews and my adopted son. I tell the hon. member for Rouville that the name of my nephew is not in that letter. Show it now. The hon. member for Rouville refuses to answer.

An hon. MEMBER: Coward.

Mr. PELLETIER: Outside of this House the man who would do that would be branded as a coward, but in this House we are guided by parliamentary rules, and we have to refer to people in parliamentary language. What will this Parliament and this country think of a man who has thought fit to bring in here the name of one of my close relatives, and who when told that the name of that gentleman was not in the letter and challenged to show it, keeps his seat and bears his shame in silence? I defy the hon. member for Rouville to rise in his seat and accuse Mr. Baillargeon of having done that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Get up now.

Mr. PELLETIER: It is his custom to rise in his seat in this House and turn to his political friends who are also friends of mine personally, but when it comes to politics they do not like me because they have received hard blows from me and they have given hard blows in return, and when the hon. member for Rouville to-night makes insinuations, unsupported by evidence, his friends behind him applaud him, but he, if he did the same thing outside this House he would be accused of playing the part of a calumniator. Then, to support their political friends, hon. gentlemen on the other side pounded their desks. I ask them when they go back to their counties to tell their friends that this man who, by making appeals, as he has done to race and religion, aspires to be the leader of his party, has played to-night the shameful part that he has played before the committee and the House. The hon. member has insinuated that I have been called down by my leader. I do not live by politics. I never made my fortune in politics, as some men whom I know have done, and if the time ever comes for me to be called down by my leader, and I should not be able to walk proudly before my colleagues and my friends in this House, the Prime Minister will not be under any need of coming over and speaking to me upon that disgraceful day because I will go out without being told by anybody. But, I shall not go out because the hon. member for Rouville says so; I shall not go out because he chooses to stand up here and make unsupported charges. What would the hon. member for Rouville think of one of my friends on this side who would throw insinuations across the floor of the House, refuse to give the proof and then sit down and be happy for having cast aspersions upon a political adversary? Is that manly?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Give me an investigation.

Mr. PELLETIER: An investigation and yet we do not know the name of a man who has thought fit to make a charge.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Give us an investigation under oath.

Mr. PELLETIER: Let my hon. friend take the responsibility of making a charge. He will not do it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Give us an investigation.

Mr. PELLETIER: He will insinuate. He has tried to blacken the reputation of men who are amongst the most highly honoured in Montreal and Quebec. He has tried to make Mr. Ducharme, one of the most honourable men in this country, pass for a bad man. He was told to repeat what he had said outside of the House and he would be dealt with properly. He did not do it. To-night, Sir, I say to the hon. member for Rouville: You are behind the lines of Torres Vedras, you are behind your privileges as a member of this House, but come out in the open to-morrow like a man, repeat it in the newspapers what you have said to-night, and we will make you prove it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Surely, you will give us an investigation?

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. member for Rouville will insinuate but he will not give proof; he will cast aspersions upon men of unblemished character and try to reduce their reputations to the same level as those which some persons have had during the last fifteen years as politicians and as men. But, he will not succeed. Let him cast aspersions and make insinuations; the country will judge and the country will know what to think of a man who will dare to take the position which the hon. member for Rouville has taken to-night.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Surely the right hon. the leader of the Government——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. PELLETIER: Give him a chance. He is going to read the letter.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Surely the right hon. the leader of the House will not allow this episode to pass without stating whether, in his judgment, he does or does not think an investigation is necessary.

Mr. BORDEN: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. gentleman makes in this House any charges of a definite character, he will find that he will get all the investigation that he wants. What is the situation as far as this is concerned? The situation is that a contract has been laid upon the table of the House and read by my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) which does not render the Government liable for one dollar unless Mr. Sidney Smith, the superintendent of postal stores, shall give his order for the locks referred to. The contract does not render this Government liable for one single dollar, and not one dollar can be paid out of the public treasury for locks, unless this officer, to whom my hon. friend himself has borne testimony as being a faithful and reliable officer——

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN:——shall give his order that the locks shall be purchased. Only in that case can the locks be purchased. Then, as far as the quantity is concerned; no lock can be purchased unless it is required for the public use, and unless the proper officer in the department certifies that it is so required and issues his order for it. Is there any dispute about that?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes; my hon. friend the Postmaster General stated last week that they were purchased.

Mr. BORDEN: I am not going by what was stated last week or this week; I am going by the terms of the contract which will govern the action of the department. In so far as price is concerned, does or does not my hon. friend say that the price is too high?

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is the one fixed by the controller.

Mr. BORDEN: Does my hon. friend say that the price is too high or does he not?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I say that I accepted the judgment of Mr. Sidney Smith for a limited quantity at $1. When I was Prime Minister——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When I was Postmaster General——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. PELLETIER:

Mr. LEMIEUX:——I accepted the recommendation of Mr. Sidney Smith at the fixed price of $1 for a limited quantity of from 5,000 to 9,000 a year. That was the average quantity. But if Mr. Smith had come to me and recommended that we should pay one dollar apiece for 150,000, I would have said: Wait—pause.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend has not given a very definite answer. I ask him whether he alleges that the price is too large or not or whether he regards it as a reasonable price.

Mr. LEMIEUX: At what date was this order given?

Mr. BORDEN: That price was fixed in 1907.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I accepted that price, but it was for a small quantity.

Mr. BORDEN: It is not a question of quantity at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You can see the quantity purchased every year by the reports of the department.

Mr. BORDEN: I am not as familiar as my hon. friend is with the operations of the Post Office Department.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Nine thousand was the largest quantity.

Mr. BORDEN: At all events the present contract is to be in existence for about four years and during that period of four years no locks are to be bought for the department unless they are ordered by the proper officers. During that period, no locks are to be paid for by the Government unless they are ordered. If they are ordered. they are to be paid for at the price of $1 per lock, that is to say, eighty cents for the lock and twenty cents for the key, as was fixed on the 15th day of October 1907. My hon. friend the member for Rouville says that he is not responsible for this price. I would think on all principles of ministerial responsibility, that he and no one else is responsible for it. The report is dated the 15th day of October, 1907, and is signed by Mr. Sidney Smith, Controller of Postal Stores. The price fixed by that report would not control the situation until the then Postmaster General had placed upon the report his imprimateur, and the imprimateur of my hon. friend the member for Rouville was and is placed upon it. Therefore the situation seems to me to be exactly this: that a certain report was made, which would have no effect so far as the Government of Canada is concerned in fixing the price, until it had received the sanction of my hon. friend as Postmaster General. It did receive that sanction; then it came into effect and governed the price for the future. That was six years ago. The price was raised somewhat at that time by reason of the advance in the cost of material and labour. I would not think that any hon. gentleman, knowing the probable increase in price in both material and labour between 1907 and the present time, would for one moment suggest that the price, which my hon. friend from Rouville thought to be a reasonable price in 1907, is an unreasonable price to-day.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would the right hon. the leader of the Government fix, as I have fixed under the recomendation of Mr. Smith, the same price for a quantity of say 10,000 as for a quantity of 350,000?

Mr. BORDEN: So far as that is concerned, I can only say that the report upon which my hon. friend fixed his imprimateur is absolutely general as to quantity. It does not define the quantity at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If my hon. friend will refer to the Auditor General's Report for the last six years, he will see that the average quantity used was between eight and nine thousand a year, and that since Confederation not 200,000, not 150,000 locks have been purchased.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend appears to be under the impression that a very great number is likely to be provided within the next few years. The report of the officer of the department would indicate that a very considerable number may be required. My hon. friend suggests that on that account the price, which was fixed by him in 1907, is not a fair price for so large a quantity?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes.

Mr. BORDEN: As against that, I invite his attention to the fact that in all probability, so far as I understand, the cost of both labour and material has advanced very considerably since the date on which he fixed this price; and that, even for a larger quantity than that which he says was usual from year to year under his administration, it after all would not be an unreasonable price at the present time. That is the way in which I would be inclined to view the price, so far as I appreciate it now; but I am ready to learn about the question of price or anything else in connection with this contract; so is my hon. friend the Postmaster General. If the hon. member for Rouville, or any other member opposite has anything to put forward by way of charges in respect of this contract, let them bring them on. That is all I have to say about the situation. I think I have spoken with sufficient plainness to my hon. friend and to every other hon. member opposite. The situation is that we are following a price which was settled by my hon. friend himself on the 15th day of October, 1907, notwithstanding his disclaimer. So far as the quantity is concerned, not one dollar can be paid out of the treasury of Canada under that contract until an order is given by the proper officers of the department of the Postmaster General. Under these circumstances, it would seem to me that the public interest has been well safeguarded by the terms of this contract. If any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House has a contrary opinion, all I have to say is that we shall be prepared to give to any charges relative to the public interest in respect of this the fullest possible explanation that is desired.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolution reported from Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It was understood that before the resolutions were concurred in, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals would give certain information with regard to the operation of certain parts of the Transcontinental which are finished and that he would state the authority under which the commissioner, Mr. Lecnard, had undertaken the operation and also as to the vote out of which the loss on operation is being paid. I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister so understood it.

Mr. BORDEN: I was not here last night when the discussion took place.

Mr. PELLETIER: I presume he has gone out to get the information.

Mr. WHITE: I understood the Minister of Railways has the information.

Mr. COCHRANE: I may say that I was absolutely wrong last night when I said that the Commission had a right to operate and charge to the construction account. As far as charging to the construction account is concerned, I was in error; according to the Deputy Minister of Justice, they have the right to operate. I have here a memorandum from the Commission which I desire to place on 'Hansard,' and which is as follows:

Memorandum re the operation of that part of the eastern division of National Transcontinental Railway from Edmonton to Moncton by the Transcontinental Railway Commission.

In the early summer of 1912 the question arose of operating with a limited train service that portion of the road from Edmundston to Moncton.

In looking up the papers in connection therewith it was found that during the regime of the former commissioners the Grand Trunk Pacific had offered to operate the road on condition that the Government would deposit in a bank the sum of $50,000 against which all cost would be charged, and to which all receipts would be credited, the Government to make up the deficit, if any, from time to time.

The present Commission after consideration decided to operate the road themselves, the Justice Department having advised they had that power, but that they could not charge any expenditure made on account of such operation or the deficit resulting therefrom to the cost of construction.

The commissioners have never charged the expenditure on account of operation, but have kept two entirely separate accounts under the headings of construction and operation, but the monies voted by Parliament for the purpose of construction were used for both construction and operation.

In an interview between the Deputy Minister of Justice and the departmental Auditor of the Railway Department, the Deputy Minister advises that we should ask Parliament for a separate vote for operation and the Transcontinental commissioners are this day asking that this be done.

Pending an appropriation by Parliament for the year 1913-14, no accounts will be paid on account of operation and if an amount is appropriated by Parliament for the year 1912-13 for operating expenses, the capital construction vote will be recouped the amount expended on operation in that year.

It might be noted on the western division of the Transcontinental, which is being constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, that certain sections are being operated and that the cost of operation has been charged to construction and that the receipts have been credited to construction. This practice has obtained for some four or five years.

This is where I was led astray in my statement yesterday.

The question as to whether the Government had the legal right to allow these charges under the mortgage is being submitted to the Justice Department for opinion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): In reference to the Halifax terminal matters we were discussing last night, might I have the assurance from the hon. Minister of Railways that until the plans and reports of the Engineer's Department are made, no tenders will be asked for the construction of the railroad or the piers or anything else in connection with the project?

Mr. COCHRANE: Until the plans are made?

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: My hon. friend may have that assurance.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In reading 'Hansard' to-day I notice that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways is reported as stating that he would at once take up with the Grand Trund Pacific Railway Company the matter of getting them to operate; my hon. friend is correctly reported in that?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In view of the fact that my hon. friend now agrees that the cost of operation cannot be charged up to construction, it would seem desirable, if possible, that the Grand Trunk Pacific should operate themselves.

Mr. GRAHAM: I wish to again urge on the Minister of Railways the suggestion which I made last night that before he decides finally to proceed with this work on the Halifax terminals it would be wise for him to submit these plans to the best expert he can get on terminals anywhere in the world. The Postmaster General suggested that these rural mail boxes were lagging superfluous on the stage. I would suggest that he could use a number in the vicinity of Mount St. Patrick, in South Renfrew, where there has been a requisition for a year and all the requirements of the department complied with but for some reason my last information is that that route has not been started. He could get rid of some of the surplus boxes in that way and serve a number of people who have applied for them.

Mr. PELLETIER: I think members on the other side of the House will be able to say that the policy I have adopted in reference to the rural mail is that all counties have been treated on the same footing. Members opposite have their share and if the hon. member for South Renfrew has a grievance in this matter, if he will put it before us it will receive all the consideration to which it is entitled. I am very happy to say that, because we have had a very good example to-night of the tactics of the hon. member when he leads the Opposition in the absence of the leader of the Opposition, that when a man does something which he ought not to do he stands alone and his chief does not support him.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mount St. Patrick is the locality and I think he will find the petition pretty well signed. I happened not to be leading the Opposition during a certain episode. The leader of the Opposition was sitting at the end of the row all the time.

Mr. McKENZIE: How many miles of new road does the Minister of Railways propose to build at Halifax?

Mr. BORDEN: Five miles double track.

Mr. McKENZIE: Has the minister made an estimate of the probable cost per mile?

Mr. COCHRANE: The double tracking, I think, will cost about $100,000 per mile.

Mr. McKENZIE: After that experience the expense in Victoria will not frighten him.

Resolution read the first and the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BORDEN: The proposed Bill which will be founded on this resolution is not quite ready. It will involve a little delay to wait for it, so we might adjourn and take it the first thing to-morrow or a little later. After that, or perhaps at the very first, we propose to take up the second reading of the Bill with regard to the treaty between Great Britain and Japan.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER read to the House a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that His Excellency the Administrator would proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 5.30, for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

APPOINTMENTS TO HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved:

That the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker for the appointment of Mr. Ernest Harman as Speaker's steward and permanent messenger, and of Mr. F. C. B. Greer as night watchman on the staff of the House of Commons, laid on the table of the House on the 31st day of March, be concurred in.

He said: It appears from the report of the Clerk to the Speaker that the necessary certificate from the Civil Service Commission has been obtained in respect of both these persons.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (Peterborough West) moved:

That the Select Standing Committee for inquiry into a system of old age pensions be permitted to hold sittings during the sitting of the House, as recommended by the report of that committee, No. 2, submitted to the House on April 1, instant.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION.

On the motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Ways and Means:

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): I desire to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to a matter which probably should have come before the House at an earlier stage of the session, but which I will now bring up on account of the opportunity afforded me under the rules for doing so. What action does the Government propose to take at this session of Parliament with reference to the matter of fixing the minimum representation of the four provinces which originally formed the Dominion of Canada? Last year, on the discussion of the Manitoba Boundaries Bill, I asked the Premier to consider the matter, and he made a very frank statement in regard thereto, which may be found on page 4713 of 'Hansard.' He indicated two methods by which the matter might be dealt with. One suggestion was that a minimum representation should be established for these provinces, and another was that the British North America Act should be amended to the effect that in estimating the one-twentieth diminution which is required under the provisions of sub-section 4 of section 51, only the four original provinces should be taken into consideration, so far as any diminution of the representation of those provinces is concerned. The right hon. gentleman went on to say:

If I am right in the view that some of the judges went upon the grounds which I mentioned a moment ago, it would seem to me that perhaps that suggestion would afford the most reasonable basis for an amendment to the British North America Act.

The right hon. gentleman went on to say he did not wish to be committed to that particular view, but he said in conclusion:

I can only repeat that my hon. friend from Pictou can rest assured that this matter will receive the most careful consideration of the Government.

I understand it is the announced policy of the Government that no redistribution Bill will be introduced during the present session. During this discussion, when the Prime Minister made the statement which I have just read, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries indicated that in all probability a conference of premiers would be held in the period intervening between the last session and the present one, that the matter of representation would be gone into, and that as a result of that conference, some action would be taken by the Government. It is evident that if the Government intend to act in the matter, such action should be taken previous to the introduction of the Redistribution Bill. I need not go over the arguments in favour of some minimum representation being fixed nor of the importance of this matter to each of the four original provinces of confederation. A statement made the other day by a gentleman not directly in public life, the president of the Toronto Board of Trade, on this subject speaking in Ottawa on a non-political occasion in regard to the province of Ontario and its future, was of very great importance in that he indicated the view now being entertained by gentlemen in these provinces who are not connected with legislative or parliamentary institutions. The situation in a general way is this that all the documents that have come down to us from Confederation show conclusively that the conception of the men of the four provinces who laid the foundation of Canada was that the comparison of population which was to be made in order to determine their representation was a comparison with the population of the then existing Canada. This affords the ground work for the view suggested by the Prime Minister as to a solution of the question. It is true that the courts have given an interpretation of the law as laid down in the British North America Act where they deal with the question in the hard and dry method of legal construction of statutes but the effect of that decision must be lessened by this consideration that courts, when dealing with the construction of constitutional or other statutes, do not look at the statements made by public men at the time as to their view in regard to the construction and effect of the law they are passing. With reference to the Confederation Act, the information which can be gathered from history and from existing documents as to the point of view and understanding of the Fathers of Confederation ought to be the determining factor with this Parliament in dealing with what is admittedly an unfortunate situation in the working out of the Act. The Prime Minister, I am sure, is well seized of the case but I want to press on him the fact that we should at this session, deal with this problem, we must deal with it and have it settled either in this Parliament or, as I apprehend by the Imperial Parliament, which we shall have to ask for legislation, and I bring the question up now with a view to impressing on the Prime Minister the importance of having it dealt with in some way during this session.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): My hon. friend will acquit me of any intention to be discourteous if I do not answer him at any length this afternoon. The subject is, of course, a very important one. The object which he has in view and which a great many of us would think very desirable indeed, is not to be attained without the solution of a great many difficulties. The representation of the maritime provinces under the last census would be decreased somewhat and so would the representation of Ontario. As long as the principle of representation upon the basis of population is to be maintained in this country it will be somewhat difficult to make satisfactory progress until a conference of the provinces can be arranged and until we can secure, if possible, in that way a basis which will be regarded as satisfactory for the future. It was expected, if I remember correctly, that such a conference would be held last summer, but, as far as I know, it was not held. An intimation has come to me of an informal character that such a conference is likely to be held during the present summer. Whether that intimation is accurate or not I do not know, but I will make inquiries. There will be opportunity for fuller discussion at a later stage. In the meantime, I shall bear in mind the suggestion which my hon. friend from Pictou has offered that action of some kind ought to be taken during the present session.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FINANCIAL TERMS.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I wish to ask about what are stated to be arbitration proceedings between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia upon the question of giving to that province better terms than it now enjoys under the British North America Act. As my right hon. friend is aware, on previous occasions when the question has come up of making any change in the British North America Act so far as the subsidies to provinces are concerned, conferences of representatives of the governments of the different provinces have been held and it has been their conclusions which have influenced the Government of the day to ask for amendments to the British North America Act. I would ask my right hon. friend if it is intended that upon the hearing by the arbitrators between the Dominion and the province of British Columbia, the governments of the other provinces of Canada shall be invited to be present through representatives.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not think that any arrangement has been made thus far for inviting them. If my hon. friend thinks that that suggestion is important I shall be very glad to give it attention. I do not see any reason why they should not attend if it should be so desired.

PROVINCIAL CONTROL OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

Mr. KNOWLES: I would ask the Prime Minister whether there will be any legislation during the present session with a view to giving to the prairie provinces their natural resources.

Mr. BORDEN: I think probably it will be necessary eventually to have a conference with the governments of the western provinces on that subject, as soon as there may be an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. KNOWLES: Then there will be no legislation this session anyway?

Mr. BORDEN: That will depend on what opportunity we have and upon the length of the session. I would not like to make any definite statement to-day.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I wish to point out that orders for the production of papers have not been complied with in regard to the expenses of the investigations leading up to dismissals. The orders of the House distinctly specify that among other things a detailed statement of the expenses are to be included in the returns. In most of the orders I have obtained from the House for the production of papers these expenses are not included. In the Post Office Department that is true in the case of Abner Carr, of St. Francis, Nova Scotia, and of Albert Sangster, of Upper New Harbour in the same province. In the Marine and Fisheries Department that is true in the case of H. L. Tory, of Guysborough, fishery officer, and D. S. Hensbee of the reduction works at Canso. In the Railway Department that is true in the case of the dismissal of John Maher, of Mulgrave. This is a very useful and important part of the information we require and I trust that this lack of information will be rectified by the ministers.

Mr. PELLETIER: My understanding is that these accounts would go to the Auditor General, and I think he would keep them. I will see to it that as far as my department is concerned they are brought down.

THE DUTY ON FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

Mr. MACNUTT: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to read a telegram from the Board of Trade of Melville, Saskatchewan, and asked a question.

Melville, Sask., March 31—April 1.

House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

We wired the Minister of Customs to-day as follows: The Board of Trade of Melville wish to go on record as disapproving any legislation on the part of your Government that will increase the already high cost of fruits and vegetables in Canada, and think that an inspection fee or the raising of duties is unnecessary.

Fred. G. Newton,
Commissioner.

I wish to ask if there is any truth in the rumour that has given rise to this message, namely, as to the raising of the duty on fruits and vegetables.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The hon. Minister of Customs is not in his place, and I am not quite sure that I understand what my hon. friend refers to. I gather that it relates to something connected with the duty on fruit.

Mr. KNOWLES: Both duty and inspection.

Mr. WHITE: That telegram is an expression of opinion which we are very glad to have. Perhaps my hon. friend will send the message to the hon. Minister of Customs, or I will transmit it to him. I do not understand that my hon. friend desires any expression of opinion on tariff matters at this stage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What about inspection?

Mr. WHITE: I do not understand what that telegram refers to.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Minister of Agriculture knows.

Mr. BURRELL: I have received one or two messages somewhat similar to that read by my hon. friend. I have also been in receipt, during the past two or three months, of an enormous number of messages, dealing with this subject along different lines, and I may add that the whole subject has been pretty well threshed out before the Agricultural Committee, who subpœnaed expert witnesses to give testimony on all its phases. The reports of the committee will, of course, be published and distributed. At this time it is not possible for me to say anything in regard to inspection matters, or as to how inspection should be carried on in view of the situation in the West. That matter is under consideration, and will be dealt with, and my hon. friend will have an opportunity later on to express his views.

BRITISH-JAPANESE TREATY.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved second reading of Bill No. 156, respecting a certain treaty of commerce and navigation between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is proper that I should make some explanation to indicate to what extent the treaty which is sanctioned by this Bill differs from the treaty to which Canada gave adherence in 1907. This Bill is of some urgency, inasmuch as the treaty bears date the 3rd of April, 1911, and it must be adhered to by Canada, if at all, within two years from the date at which ratifications were exchanged; that is to say, within two years from the 5th of May, 1911. Those who are familiar with the course of events in connection with the treaties which Japan has consummated during the past twenty years will remember that in 1894 Japan made treaties with many of the civilized nations of the world, particularly with Great Britain and the United States. The treaty with Great Britain was signed on the 16th July, 1894, and in the same year a somewhat similar treaty was signed between the United States and Japan, which treaty, like the treaty with Great Britain, gave full liberty to enter, travel, reside, &c. But Article II of the United States treaty contained a proviso which is not to be found in the treaty with Great Britain; that proviso was in the following words:

> It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way effect the laws, ordinances, and regulations, with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, police, and public security which are in force, or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

The question of immigration into Great Britain from Japan was not a live question, and I presume for that reason no such proviso was contained in the treaty between Great Britain and Japan. However, when that treaty came under the consideration of the Government of Canada, an Order in Council was passed containing this recommendation:

> The Canadian Government, in adhering to this treaty, would desire a stipulation with respect to Japanese immigration similar to that inserted in the treaty between Japan and the United States, and they desire a further definition of the word 'labourers,' by adding thereto the words 'including artisans.'

That Order in Council was dated August 6, 1895, and on the 18th of October, 1895, its purport was transmitted by the British minister at Tokio to the Japanese Government. Later, on the 29th of July, 1896, the new Government of Canada which had come into office, passed an Order in Council on the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, recommending that Canada should not adhere to the treaty. However, the British minister at Tokio went on with the negotiations, not being aware apparently of the second Order in Council, and eventually he arrived at an understanding with the Government of Japan by which they were willing to permit Canada and the other British possessions to accede to the treaty upon the terms set forth in the Order in Council of August 6, 1905, to which I have alluded, and a formal protocol for that purpose was drawn up and assented to by the Japanese Government. I need not enter into that to-day; it is not very pertinent or material to the matter under consideration. The time within which Canada could accede to the treaty having passed, a supplementary treaty or convention was negotiated on the 31st of January, 1906, and ratified at Tokio on the 12th of January, 1906. The effect of this convention was to bring Canada within the terms of the treaty of 1894 to which I have alluded. A Bill was presented to Parliament for the purpose of ratifying the convention which I just mentioned, and this Bill became law on the 30th of January, 1907. Shortly after this Bill became law, immigration from Japan to Canada very greatly increased, and as a result of that the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) who at that time held the portfolio of Postmaster General and Minister of Labour, paid a visit to Japan. That visit resulted in a certain understanding by which the Government of Japan undertook to restrict within certain limits and according to certain stipulations this immigration from Japan to Canada. It is not necessary for me to go very fully into the nature of that arrangement. It is embodied for the most part—not altogether—in the despatch from Sir Edward Grey to the British Ambassador at Tokio, dated the 25th of January, 1908, a copy of which was transmitted by the then Colonial Secretary to the then Governor General on the 5th of February, 1908. It is as follows:

Foreign Office, January 25, 1908.

Sir,—The Japanese ambassador communicated to me on January 21 the terms of the settlement with Canada on the subject of emigration, which were these:

The Japanese Government to grant permission to emigrate to Canada to the following classes of Japanese subjects only:—

(1) Those who have previously been in Canada, their wives and children.

(2) Personal and domestic servants to the Japanese residing in Canada.

(3) Contract labourers and agricultural settlers.

In each of the above cases Japanese consular certificates to be required. In the case of contract labourers the consuls to issue certificates, only when satisfied that such contracts had the approval of the Canadian Government; and in the case of agricultural settlers the certificate to be issued only at the rate of from five to ten labourers per one hundred acres of land owned by the applicants.

I expressed great satisfaction that an arrangement had been come to. I was sure the news of it would have a good effect, and we were very pleased that the matter was settled.

The ambassador told me negotiations were proceeding with the United States on the same lines, except that contract labourers were not allowed by American law.

I am, &c.,

E. Grey.

Then there was an additional letter which I should read as I have read a portion of the correspondence. It was a letter addressed to the hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Postmaster General and Minister of Labour for Canada, and if I remember correctly was from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Japanese Government. It reads as follows:

Tokio, December 23, 1907.

Monsieur le ministre:

In reply to your note of even date, I have the honour to state that although the existing treaty between Japan and Canada absolutely guarantees to Japanese subjects full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the Dominion of Canada, yet it is not the intention of the Imperial Government to insist upon the complete enjoyment of the rights and privileges guaranteed by those stipulations when that would involve disregard of special conditions which may prevail in Canada from time to time.

Acting in this spirit, and having particular regard to circumstances of recent occurrence in British Columbia, the Imperial Government have decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada. In carrying out this purpose, the Imperial Government, in pursuance of the policy above stated, will give careful consideration to local conditions prevailing in Canada with a view to meeting the desires of the Government of the Dominion as far as is compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state.

Although, as stated in the note under reply, it was not possible for me to acquiesce in all the proposals made by you on behalf of the Canadian Government, I trust that you will find in the statement therein made, proof of the earnest desire of the Imperial Government to promote, by every means within our power, the growth and stability of the cordial and mutually beneficial relations which exist between our countries. I venture to believe also, that this desirable result will be found to have been materially advanced by the full exchange of views which has taken place between us, and it gives me special pleasure to acknowledge the obligation under which I have been placed by your frank and considerate explanations regarding the attitude and wishes of your Government.

I avail myself, &c., &c.,

Tadasu Hayashi.

The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux,
Postmaster General and Minister of Labour for Canada, Tokio.

Now, I think it necessary to set forth the relative positions of the United States and Canada in relation to the right of Japanese to enter and reside in Canada, because this will naturally be a matter for consideration in connection with the treaty which is now under consideration. The present treaty bears date 31st April, 1911, and it is proper that, in the first place, I should indicate to the House the differences which exist between the treaty which we have now and the treaty which Parliament gave its sanction on the 5th of February, 1907. The difference between the two treaties does not appear to be very material. Articles I and II of the treaty of 1894 find their counterpart in articles I and II of the treaty of 1911. Article III of the treaty of 1894 has its counterpart in article VI of the treaty of 1911. Articles IV and V of the treaty of 1894 correspond in all important particulars to articles III and VII of the treaty of 1911. Article VI of 1894 has its counterpart in article IX of 1911.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I assume that the right hon. gentleman will explain the treaty clause by clause when we are in committee. But at this time might I ask him to explain the expression 'They shall be between the territories of the two High Contracting Parties reciprocal freedom of commerce and navigation'—this whole article.

Mr. BORDEN: Of which clause is the hon. gentleman speaking?

Mr. LEMIEUX: The sixth.

Mr. BORDEN: I will come to that in due course; in the meantime I am merely pointing out the clauses in the present treaty which correspond with similar clauses in the treaty of 1894. Article VII of the treaty of 1894 corresponds with article X of the present treaty; article VIII of the treaty of 1894 with article XVI of the present treaty; article IX of the treaty of 1894 with article XIX of the present treaty; article X of the treaty of 1894 with article XVII of the present treaty; article XI of the treaty of 1894 with article XXI of the present treaty; article XII of the treaty of 1894 with article XXIII of the present treaty; article XIII of the treaty of 1894 with article XVIII of the present treaty. Articles XIV and XV of the treaty of 1894 have their counterparts in articles XXII and XXIII of the present treaty; article XVI of the treaty of 1894 corresponds substantially with article IV of the present treaty. Article XVII of the treaty of 1894, which does not appear in the present treaty, relates to the right which subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall enjoy in the dominions and possessions of the other in regard to patents, trade marks and designs. The reason for the omission of this article appears to be that when the treaty was negotiated in 1894, Japan had not acceded to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. That convention was established in 1883; Great Britain acceded to it in 1884 and Japan in 1899. It was necessary, therefore, that there should be in the treaty of 1894 a clause of this nature, but, inasmuch as both countries acceded to that convention before the vear 1911, and inasmuch as that convention contains all the provisions which are to be found in article VIII, and more elaborate provisions as well, the article in question seems to have been omitted from the present treaty, so far as I understand, for these reasons.

I now desire to invite the attention of the committee to the provisions which are to be found in the treaty of 1911. Article V, which is not found in the treaty of 1894, is as follows:

In case of the death of a subject of one of the high contracting parties in the territories of the other, without leaving at the place of his decease any person entitled by the law of his country to take charge of and administer the estate, the competent consular officer of the state to which the deceased belonged shall, upon fulfilment of the necessary formalities, be empowered to take custody of and administer the estate in the manner and under the limitations prescribed by the law of the country in which the property of the deceased is situated.

The foregoing provision shall also apply in case of a subject of one of the high contracting parties dying outside the territories of the other, but possessing property therein, without leaving any person there entitled to take charge of and administer the estate.

It is understood that in all that concerns the administration of the estates of deceased persons, any right, privilege, favour or immunity which either of the high contracting parties has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the consular officers of any other foreign state shall be extended immediately and unconditionally to the consular officers of the other high contracting party.

This is merely a reciprocal arrangement for the custody and care of estates of deceased persons by the proper consular authorities, and, so far as I am able to apprehend, no possible objection on the part of this country can be urged against it.

Mr. CARVELL: Has the hon. gentleman considered herein that provision may conflict with the laws of the different provinces regarding the disposition of estates?

Mr. BORDEN: There is a provision in the British North America Act whereby the Parliament of Canada has the right to pass any law for the purpose of carrying any treaty into effect, and there does not seem to be anything in this article which would be detrimental to the interests of this country. Article XI is as follows:

No internal duties levied for the benefit of the state, local authorities, or corporations which affect, or may affect, the production, manufacture, or consumption of any article in the territories of either of the high contracting parties shall for any reason be a higher or more burdensome charge on articles, the product or manufacture of the territories of the other, than on similar articles of native origin.

The produce or manufacture of the territories of either of the high contracting parties imported into the territories of the other, and intended for warehousing or transit, shall not be subjected to any internal duty.

This provision, which was not contained in the treaty of 1894, but to which there seems to be no reasonable objection, is thoroughly reciprocal in its character, and affords equality of treatment. Articles XII, XIII, XIV and XV relate to the carrying on of commerce, and are all new. Article XII provides that merchants and manufacturers may, in the territories of the other country, either personally or by means of commercial travellers, make their purchases, collect orders, &c., with or without samples. Article XIII provides regulations with regard to the authentication of samples used by these merchants. Article XIV provides that chambers of commerce shall be mutually accepted as competent authorities for issuing certificates for commercial travellers, and article XV provides that limited liability and other companies and associations may exercise in the territories of the other countries their rights and appear in the courts, either as plaintiffs or defendants. This is probably a right which would ordinarily be accorded by the comity of nations; nevertheless provision is made for it in this treaty. The next article containing any new provision is article XX, which provides as follows:

Vessels charged with performance of regular scheduled postal service of one of the high contracting parties shall enjoy in the territorial waters of the other the same special facilities, privileges, and immunities as are granted to like vessels of the most favoured nation.

Article XXV is also new, and is as follows:

The stipulations of this treaty do not apply to tariff concessions granted by either of the high contracting parties to contiguous states solely to facilitate frontier traffic within a limited zone on each side of the frontier, or to the treatment accorded to the produce of the national fisheries of the high contracting parties, or to special tariff favours granted by Japan in regard to fish and other aquatic products taken in the foreign waters in the vicinity of Japan.

So far as the terms of the treaty are concerned, I have dealt with all that seems to me to be of importance at this moment. I shall therefore reserve any further explanations for the committee stage of the Bill, and shall proceed to consider the terms upon which we have thought it advisable to ask Parliament to pronounce its adhesion to this treaty. Before coming to that, however, I may say that upon the denunciation of the treaty of 1894 by Japan, a temporary trade arrangement, which is embodied in chapter 7 of the Acts of 1911, was made between Canada and Japan. This Act will continue in force until July 17, 1913.

An important matter which demanded and received consideration by the present Government, and, no doubt, by the late Government in dealing with the previous treaty, was the control of immigration into Canada from Japan. The treaty was under consideration by the late Administration; and, pending fuller consideration of it, they had presented to Parliament, and Parliament had enacted, the measure with regard to tariff to which I have just alluded.

It should be borne in mind, in considering this treaty, that after Canada had assented to this treaty on the 30th of January, 1907, this Parliament passed a very important enactment with regard to immigration. All our laws in respect of immigration were consolidated in the Immigration Act of 1910, chapter 27, of the Statutes of Canada for that year. Sections 37 and 38 of that enactment which were assented to by both parties in this House without any challenge, are as follows:

37. Regulations made by the Governor in Council under this Act may provide as a condition to permission to land in Canada that immigrants and tourists shall possess in their own right money to a prescribed minimum amount, which amount may vary according to the race, occupation or destination of such immigrant or tourist, and otherwise according to the circumstances; and may also provide that all persons coming to Canada directly or indirectly from countries which issue passports or penal certificates to persons leaving such countries shall produce such passports or penal certificates on demand of the immigration officer in charge before being allowed to land in Canada.

38. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order whenever he deems it necessary or expedient,—

(a) prohibit the landing in Canada or at any specified port of entry in Canada of any immigrant who has come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which he is a native or naturalized citizen, and upon a through ticket purchased in that country, or prepaid in Canada;

(b) Prohibit the landing in Canada of passengers brought to Canada by any transportation company which refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of this Act;

(c) Prohibit for a stated period, or permanently, the landing in Canada, or the landing at any specified port of entry in Canada, of immigrants belonging to any race deemed unsuited to the climate or requirements of Canada, or of immigrants of any specified class, occupation or character.

It is not material or desirable to-day to consider whether or not the Act of 1910, in so far as it provided for actual or possible restriction of immigration into this country, was in conflict with the Act of 1907 which ratified the convention with Japan. There might have been some question about that but apparently no such question did arise and all such questions ceased to be of more than academic interest when the treaty came to an end by reason of its having been denounced by the Government of Japan. I should observe that in 1911, Japan, having denounced the various treaties with the nations of the world which she had entered into in 1894, negotiated a new series of treaties with those nations and perhaps with others. She negotiated the treaty with Great Britain which is now under consideration by the House and also negotiated a treaty with the United States of America. The provision which I have already mentioned as being embodied in the treaty between Japan and the United States of 1894 is not to be found in the treaty between Japan and the United States of 1911. The United States Senate, however, gave its ratification to the new treaty only upon the understanding that it should not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Act of Congress entitled 'An Act to regulate the Immigration of aliens into the United States, approved February 20, 1907.' This understanding was embodied in the President's proclamation, the first paragraph of which is:

And whereas the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States to the ratification of the said treaty was given with the understanding that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Act of Congress entitled 'An Act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, approved February 20, 1907'——

But there had been and there then was an understanding between the United States and the Empire of Japan by which Japan, of its own motion, had undertaken to restrict and was actually restricting the immigration of Japanese subjects into the United States and a public announcement in that regard was made in connection with the ratification of the treaty between Japan and United States. The Japanese ambassador at Washington signed and published a declaration providing for the maintenance of the existing control by the Japanese Government of the emigration of labourers. His declaration was in these words:

In proceeding this day to the signature of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and the United States, the undersigned, Japanese ambassador in Washington, duly authorized by his government has the honour to declare that the Imperial Japanese Government are fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which they have for the past three years exercised in the regulation of the emigration of labourers to the United States.

February 21, 1911.

(Sgd.) Y. Ushida.

The treaty between Great Britain and Japan, to which Parliament is now asked to give sanction on behalf of Canada, does not contain any more than does the treaty between Japan and the United States, any special stipulation with regard to the restrictions on the emigration of labourers or artisans from Japan to Canada, and we have therefore thought it desirable, and we so intimated to the Government of Japan, that this treaty, if acceded to by Canada, should be subject to a stipulation which is to be found in the Bill that is now under consideration by this House. Accordingly, section 2 of this Bill is in the following words:

The treaty signed at London on the third day of April, one thousand nine hundred and eleven, between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, set forth in the schedule to this Act, is hereby sanctioned and declared to have the force of law in Canada; provided that

(a) nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act;

(b) Article VIII of the said treaty shall be deemed not to apply to Canada.

Article VIII relates solely to tariff relations between the United Kingdom and Japan, and therefore it is stated in the body of this Bill that it shall have no application as far as Canada is concerned.

I have already laid upon the table of the House the correspondence which has taken place with the Imperial Consul General of Japan in Ottawa. It might be desirable that I should now place that correspondence on 'Hansard' in order that it may be convenient for reference by any hon. member. The correspondence is as follows:

Ottawa, Ont. 7th February, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada a Bill by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United Kingdom and Japan signed at London on the 3rd April, 1911.

2. The adherence of Canada would be upon the condition and with the proviso set forth in the inclosed draft Bill which is submitted for the consideration of the Imperial Japanese Government.

3. The proviso that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act follows the language which was approved by the Imperial Japanese Government in relation to the recent treaty negotiations with the United States of America.

4. The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself and makes no discrimination in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the inclosed draft Act of Parliament of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. L. Borden.

Honourable T. Nakamura,
Consul General for Japan,
385 Laurier Avenue E.
Ottawa, Ont.

There was enclosed with that a Bill which is in the form now presented for the consideration of the committee. On March 1, the Consul General of Japan made the following reply:

Imperial Consulate General of Japan.
Ottawa, March 1, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 7th ult., stating that your Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada an Act by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and Great Britain signed at London on the 3rd of April, 1911, and enclosing for the consideration of the Imperial Government a draft Bill setting forth the conditions and proviso upon which the adherence of Canada will depend.

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government have no objection to the proposed Bill, and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd). T. Nakamura,
Consul General of Japan.

The Right Honourable R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

To this the following reply was made on March 5, 1903:

Ottawa, 5th March, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 1st instant, in relation to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan signed at London on the 3rd April, 1911, in which you communicated to me the reply of the Imperial Japanese Government stating that they have no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to inform you that the Government of Canada has received this reply with the greatest satisfaction, and that the proposed Bill will be introduced so soon as the pending business now engaging the attention of Parliament will permit.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd). R. L. Borden.

Honourable T. Nakamura,
Consul General for Japan,
385 Laurier Avenue E.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before you pass from that, may I be permitted to ask a question for my own information? As I understand it, section 37 of the Immigration Act of 1910, gives authority, as well as section 38, to exclude any place the people of what might not be considered desirable or suitable immigrants, and also to discriminate as to the amounts to be charged to different places. What does my right hon. friend think? Although the Act may not discriminate, does it not give power to the Governor in Council to discriminate?

Mr. BORDEN: It gives no more power to discriminate against Japan, than it does against any other country in the world, including the British Empire itself. We have simply stipulated, as it seemed to us proper to stipulate, that this treaty, if accepted to by Canada, should be subject to the provisions of the Immigration Act, so that Canada should have the same control over immigration into this country which has been insisted upon by our neighbours to the south.

Mr. PUGSLEY: One other question. Has not the Government, by its letter to the Japanese Ambassador, undertaken that there will be no discrimination?

Mr. BORDEN: Certainly not, as our statement goes merely to this extent: We have stated that the Act is of universal application to all the countries of the world, including the British Empire itself and we submit to Parliament the terms of the Bill just as they were presented to the Imperial Consul General of Japan. I would like to say in addition, that it must not be forgotten that a certain control has been exercised under the arrangement made by my hon. friend the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) when he was Minister of Labour, with the Government of Japan, in the latter part of 1907 and the beginning of 1908. I am free to say, in fact, I am very glad to say, that, so far as my observation goes, and so far as any available information indicates, that agreement has been very loyally carried out by the Government of Japan.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN: I have some statistics which are available in case information on this subject is required when we are in committee. I desire to make this further observation: It will be observed that concurrently with the ratification by the Government of the United States of the new treaty with Japan, His Excellency the Japanese ambassador at Washington signed a declaration that the Japanese Government were fully prepared to maintain, with equal effectiveness, the limitation and control which for some years they have exercised in regulation of the emigration of labourers from Japan to the United States. We have every reason to believe that as soon as the present Bill shall become law the Imperial Government of Japan will be prepared to make and will make a similar declaration with regard to the maintenance of the limitation and control which they have exercised during the past five years in the regulation of emigration from Japan to Canada. In taking that course they will be following precisely the course which was adopted at the time of the ratification by the United States of the treaty of 1911 between the United States and Japan. In other words, notwithstanding the control of immigration which is maintained by both Canada and the United States, under the stipulation in the one case, and under the proviso in this Bill in the other case, the Government of Japan themselves propose, not only with regard to the United States, but with regard to Canada, to continue the control of immigration which has been practised by that Government in respect to both countries during the past six or eight years.

I need only refer in conclusion to the fact that no country in the world has given greater evidence of advancement, progress and development than the Empire of Japan during the past fifteen or twenty years. The Japanese are undoubtedly a wonderful people, gifted with great capacity, and with great enterprise, and they have, in a remarkably brief period of time, made greater and truer progress in national development and in all these forms of civilization, which, hitherto have more particularly pertained to Europe and America than, perhaps has ever been the case in the history of the world. We have also to take into consideration that by the treaty or convention of the 13th July, 1911, signed a few months after this treaty of commerce and navigation was signed, an alliance for certain purposes, and along certain lines, has been entered into between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Japan.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has that treaty been renewed?

Mr. BORDEN: It was renewed on the 13th July, 1911 and is to continue in force for ten years from that date; it will therefore continue in force until the 13th day of July, 1921, or for about eight years in the future.

I have not touched very much on the fiscal question, but the Minister of Finance will be able to answer questions with regard to that. Having in view all these considerations, we arrived at the conclusion that the proper course for the Govern ment of Canada to pursue was to present this Bill to Parliament for its approval. I sincerely trust that the ratification may be given at a sufficiently early date to enable notice thereof to be given in Tokio within the time limited by the treaty itself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House have no intention of offering any opposition to the ratification of the treaty which is now sought by the Government, if certain information which we hope to have as the discussion proceeds is on the line we expect. If we do not offer any opposition to the treaty, it is not at all on account of any benefit which we expect to flow from it, but simply on general principles. The treaty which we are asked to ratify does not go very far. It is supposed to be a treaty of commerce, but, in so far as Canada is concerned, there is no commerce at all in it. We approve of the general principle that it ought to be the policy of Canada to extend her trade relations with all the world as fast as possible. Canada is a young, producing country; she produces much more than she can consume, especially of the products of the farm, the mine, the sea and the forest; and it is especially for these products as well as for certain manufactures that we should seek markets abroad. Larger markets will become more and more the pressing need of this country, and it is with the hope that we may open the way for larger markets in Japan and in the Orient generally that we shall give our adhesion to this treaty. The Orient is a field of operations, in so far as commerce is concerned, to which it is essential that the nations of the western world should give their very careful attention. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has just alluded to the remarkable progress which has been made by Japan. China is following now in the same way, and it is becoming more and more evident that the Asiatic nations, which have been dormant for 2,000 years, are now opening up to the civilization of Europe, and will want, by and by, all the products which our civilization produces, and will therefore offer a vast field for the trade of western nations.

As I said a moment ago, this is a treaty of commerce; but, in so far as Canada is concerned, there is no commerce at all in it. That is the point to which I would address myself. My right hon. friend has gone over the whole treaty, but he has said nothing of article VIII, which is the gist of the treaty. Great Britain, no more on this occasion than on any other, has not been slow to see the advantage that its trade may find in the Orient, especially in Japan, and article VIII provides that the trade of Great Britain shall be given, with respect to certain articles therein mentioned, special treatment. Article VIII reads as follows:

The articles, the produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom, enumerated in part I of the schedule annexed to this treaty, shall not, on importation into Japan, be subjected to higher customs duties than those specified in the schedule.

The articles, the produce or manufacture of Japan, enumerated in part II of the schedule annexed to this treaty, shall be free of duty on importation into the United Kingdom.

Here are the articles of English produce which may be imported into Japan at special rates, which are not to be increased under any circumstances so long as the treaty lasts: paints; linen yarns; tissues of cotton, including velvets, plushes, and other pile tissues, with piles cut or uncut; cotton, grey and other; plain tissues, not otherwise provided for; bleached cottons; tissues of wool and mixed wool; tissues of wool and cotton, of wool and silk, or of wool, cotton and silk; iron, in lumps, ingots, blooms, billets, and slabs; pig iron; plates and sheets, not coated with metals; plates and sheets, coated with base metals, tinned, ordinary and galvanized. As a corresponding benefit, the following articles of Japanese production shall be admitted into Great Britain free of duty:

Habutae of pure silk, not dyed or printed.
Handkedchiefs of habutae of pure silk, not dyed or printed.
Copper, unwrought, in ingots and slabs.
Plating of straw and other materials.
Camphor and camphor oil.
Baskets (including trunks) and basketware of bamboo.
Mats and matting of rush.
Lacquered wares, coated with Japanese lacquer (urushi).
Rape-seed oil.
Cloisonne wares.

I do not know why Canada should not get the benefit of article VIII of the treaty, in so far as we could have derived any benefit from it. I do not think we are in a position to export wool or woollen goods to Japan, but I am not sure that we cannot export cotton to Japan. It is a well known fact that there is a mill in Quebec which was, up to lately, manufacturing exclusively for the Chinese market, and I do not know but that it is continuing to do so to-day. It seems to me that the same mill might very well have found a market in Japan for a similar class of wares. Nobody could object to the admission into Canada of the wares of Japanese production which are here enumerated as a quid pro quo for special treatment of a selected list of articles of Canadian manufactures in the markets of Japan. Why we have been especially exempted from the effect of article VIII of the treaty is a point upon which my right hon. friend has not touched, and upon which we shall desire some explanation when we go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. The previous treaty with Japan was not very satisfactory to us, it had been negotiated from a British point of view, and Canadian goods were not considered at all. We were hoping to negotiate a treaty with Japan which would be more suited to our own conditions and under which we would have a better field than we have under this clause, which deals particularly with English wares. For instance, we thought that we would find in Japan a market for canned fish, lumber, tin, zinc and similar goods. When, in the year 1911, the treaty was renewed, we had no time, pressed as we were with other duties, to enter into negotiations for a separate treaty. In 1911 we introduced and had passed in this Parliament a Bill which contained this provision:

2. No prohibition shall be maintained or imposed on the importation into Canada of any article the produce or manufacture of the dominions and possessions aforesaid, from whatever place arriving, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like article the produce or manufacture of any other country, provided however that this section shall not be applicable to the sanitary or other prohibitions occasioned by the necessity of protecting the safety of persons, or of cattle, or of plants useful to agriculture.

3. This Act shall not be brought into force unless and until the Governor in Council is satisfied that no other or higher duties are or will be imposed, and that no prohibitions are or will be maintained or imposed, so long as this Act remains in operation on the importation into the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan of any article, the produce or manufacture of Canada, from whatever place arriving, than are imposed, or maintained or imposed, respectively, on the like article produced or manufactured in any foreign country on its importation in the said dominions and possessions; but nothing in this section shall be applicable to the sanitary or other prohibitions occasioned by the necessity of protecting the safety of persons, or of cattle, or of plants useful to agriculture.

This legislation was accepted by Japan, provided Japan should receive similar treatment to that which we extended to other countries. As I understand, the moment the present treaty is ratified this legislation becomes null and void, and we shall be without any protection for our commerce in that country.

Mr. BORDEN: The provisions of the treaty give to each country most favoured nation treatment in the other.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have only observed that treaty gives favoured treatment as to navigation. I shall be glad to hear that we shall have most favoured nation treatment in Japan for our trade.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Article VIII provides for that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If that be so, my observations would not apply. The only advantage which my hasty reading of the treaty has enabled me to find for Canada is in article XXI:

The coasting trade of the high contracting parties is excepted from the provisions of the present treaty, and shall be regulated according to the laws of the United Kingdom and Japan respectively. It is, however, understood that the subjects and vessels of either high contracting party shall enjoy in this respect most favoured nation treatment in the territories of the other.

We have the stipulation there that, if any advantage is given to any nation with regard to navigation, Canada shall receive the same treatment. The next paragraph is important:

British and Japanese vessels may, nevertheless, proceed from one port to another either for the purpose of landing the whole or part of their passengers or cargoes brought from abroad, or of taking on board the whole or part of their passengers or cargoes for a foreign destination.

That is important; it is important for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which has steamers plying between Vancouver and Japan, and it is important for the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, which no doubt will have a line of steamers plying between Prince Rupert and Japan, for, under this provision the steamers can go from port to port and discharge their passengers and cargo without molestation. This is the only advantage to Canada which my reading of the treaty has enabled me to find. The Minister of Finance tells me that article VII provides for most favoured nation treatment in the matter of trade. It reads:

Articles, the produce or manufacture of the territories of one high contracting party, upon importation into the territories of the other, from whatever place arriving shall enjoy the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to similar articles of any other foreign origin.

No prohibition or restriction shall be maintained or imposed on the importation of any article, the produce or manufacture of the territories of either of the high contracting parties, into the territories of the other, from whatever place arriving which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like articles, being the produce or manufacture of any other foreign country. This provision is not applicable to the sanitary or other prohibitions occasioned by the necessity of securing the safety of persons, or of cattle, or of plants useful to agriculture.

In exchange for this concession, what do we give Japan? Article I gives very wide powers to the Japanese people, amongst others:

The subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other, and, conforming themselves to the laws of the country—

1. Shall, in all that relates to travel and residence, be placed in all respects on the same footing as native subjects.

2. They shall have the right, equally with native subjects, to carry on their commerce and manufacture, and to trade in all kinds of merchandise of lawful commerce, either in person or by agents singly or in partnerships with foreigners or native subjects.

3. They shall in all that relates to the pursuit of their industries, callings, professions, and educational studies be placed in all respects on the same footing as the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.

4. They shall be permitted to own or hire and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, shops, and premises which may be necessary for them, and to lease land for residential, commercial, industrial and other lawful purposes, in the same manner as native subjects.

These are very wide powers, and they are of the class to which the people of British Columbia have always objected. Under this treaty, Japanese coming to Canada have the same privileges of residence, occupation, manufacture, and commerce, as may be employed by the subjects of His Majesty. My right hon. friend says he has guarded against that by providing in the Bill, that the treaty shall not effect in any way the Canadian Immigration Act; but, unless that be supplemented by something else, it is of no benefit whatever to the people of Canada, especially the people of British Columbia. The Immigration Act provides:

No immigrant passenger, or other person unless he is a Canadian citizen or has a Canadian domicile, shall be permitted to land in Canada or, in case of having landed in or into Canada, shall be permitted to remain therein, who belongs to any of the following classes, hereinafter called forbidden:

(a) Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons and persons who have been insane within five years previous;

(b) Persons afflicted with any loathsome disease, or with a disease which is contagious or infectious, or which may become dangerous to the public health, whether such persons intend to settle in Canada or only to pass through Canada in transit to some other country. . .

(c) Immigrants who are dumb, blind or otherwise physically defective. . .

(d) Persons who have been convicted of any crime involving moral turpitude.

(e) Prostitutes and women and girls coming to Canada for any immoral purpose and pimps or persons living on the avails of prostitution.

(f) Persons who procure or attempt to bring into Canada prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purposes.

(g) Professional beggars or vagrants, or persons likely to become a public charge.

(h) Immigrants to whom money has been given or loaned by any charitable organization.

Now, the application of the Immigration Act to Japanese in the face of this treaty simply means that the Department of the Interior may reject at our ports such persons as are here described. But the able-bodied, the sound in limb and mind, the vigorous, the strong, will be able to come in and compete in the labour market with our people. That is what the provision means, or it means nothing.

Mr. BORDEN: Is the right hon. gentleman reading the statute or the regulation?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The statute itself. I come now to sections 37 and 38 of the same Act:

37. Regulations made by the Governor in Council under this Act may provide as a condition to permission to land in Canada that immigrants and tourists shall possess in their own right money to a prescribed minimum amount, which amount may vary according to the race, occupation or destination of such immigrant or tourist, and otherwise according to the circumstances. . .

38. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order whenever he deems it necessary or expedient:

(a) prohibit the landing in Canada at any specified port of entry in Canada of any immigrant who has come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which he is a native or naturalized citizen and upon a through ticket purchased in that country or prepaid in Canada;

(b) prohibit the landing in Canada of passengers brought to Canada by any transportation company which refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of this Act.

I come now to the clause which is most in point:

(c) Prohibit for a stated period or permanently, the landing in Canada, or the landing at any specified port of entry in Canada, of immigrants belonging to any race deemed unsuited to the climate or requirements of Canada or of immigrants of any specified class, occupation or character.

You may say that under this law it is possible for the Governor in Council to prohibit the entry of Japanese generally, under the word 'race;' in other words, to close the ports of Canada against the Chinese, the Siamese, or any other Orientals, including the Japanese. But, in view of the relations which we have with the Japanese people at the present time, to which relations the right hon. gentleman has just alluded; in view of the treaty of peace and amity which we have with the Emperor of Japan, which was negotiated by Lord Lansdowne nineteen years ago, and was renewed by Sir Edward Grey two years ago, does anyone believe that my right hon. friend will take it upon himself to exercise the powers he has obtained and exclude the Japanese by Order in Council from landing in Canada? I say without hesitation that my right hon. friend would not dare to exercise such a right, although he may have it. He would be precluded by the higher consideration of the interests of the Empire; he would be precluded by the higher consideration that this would be offering an indignity to a friendly people, which would be not only not in accordance with the amity of nations, but fraught with most dangerous consequences. The right hon. gentleman sent a copy of the Bill in his letter to the Japanese Consul, and he has read that letter. I will take the opportunity of reading it again, because it brings very near to us the answer which was given by the Japanese Consul in which the Consul told my right hon. friend, if not in so many words, yet very effectively, that he would not enforce such a clause. My right hon. friend's letter to the Japanese Consul was as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., 7th February, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada a Bill by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United Kingdom and Japan signed at London on the 3rd April, 1911.

2. The adherence of Canada would be upon the conditions and with the proviso set forth in the inclosed draft Bill which is submitted for the consideration of the Imperial Japanese Government.

3. The proviso that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Emigration Act follows the language which was approved by the Imperial Japanese Government in relation to the recent treaty negotiated with the United States of America.

4. The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the inclosed draft Act of Parliament of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

I have the honour to be, Sir.

Your obedient servant,

R. L. Borden.

Hon. T. Nakamura,
Consul General for Japan,
385 Laurier Avenue E.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Now, here is the answer:

Imperial Consulate General of Japan,
Ottawa, March 1, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 7th ultimo, stating that your Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada an Act by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and Great Britain, signed at London on the 3rd of April, 1911, and inclosing for the consideration of the Imperial Government a draft Bill setting forth the conditions and proviso upon which the adherence of Canada will depend.

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government has no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910, being applicable, as stated in your note to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
T. Nakamura,
Consul General of Japan.

To the Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

The Japanese Consul there said most effectively to my right hon. friend: Very well; we agree that you shall put it in the agreement that this Bill shall remain in force, but it should not be applied to Japan. No other construction can be put upon it. But all this is beside the question.

My right hon. friend, in the closing sentences of his remarks, referred to the only reason that has induced him to ratify this treaty, and that is the agreement which was made by my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) in 1907, whereby the Japanese Government themselves undertook to restrict their own emigration, an agreement which, as was stated by my right hon. friend, has been most loyally adhered to by the Japanese Government.

Mr. BORDEN: Did my right hon. friend understand me to say that that was the only consideration which induced me to adhere to the treaty? I do not wish to be so understood.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am sorry my right hon. friend takes that view. If that is not the reason which has induced him to do so, will my right hon. friend say that, if the Japanese Government were to withdraw from the agreement of 1907, he would advise the ratification of the present treaty? If the Japanese Government were to tell him to-day that they did not propose to restrict their own immigration, I venture to say my hon. friend would not take another step towards the ratification of this treaty, because he would be under the certain necessity, in view of the strong agitation in British Columbia in respect of Japanese immigration, of closing the doors of Canada to the Japanese people. I am well aware of the nature of the prevailing opinion in British Columbia in this regard, and I do not find fault with it. In British Columbia, in California, in Australia, in South Africa, wherever Asiatic labourers come in contact with labourers of European descent, there has always been friction; and this friction will be unavoidable so long as the standard of living as between European and Asiatic labourers is not brought to an approximately common level. The conditions of living to which the Asiatic labourer has been accustomed for centuries are such that he can afford to live upon a wage altogether out of proportion to that which is necessary to the European labourer, and that is the reason why there has always been friction between them. We did not hesitate some years ago to exclude by statute Chinese people from coming to this country; but when consideration had to be given to the question of excluding the Japanese by hostile legislation the late Government would not do so, for the simple reason that the Japanese were our allies, and we did not care to submit them to that indignity. We proceeded in a different way. My hon. friend the Postmaster General of that day went to Tokio and negotiated an agreement with the Japanese Government, under which they undertook to restrict their own emigration. Could anything be more effective? Since the making of that agreement perfect harmony has existed between the two nations, and we have enjoyed the good-will and friendship of the Japanese people.

My right hon. friend read a part of the letter of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Japan, addressed to the Postmaster General of that time, which was as follows:

In reply to your note of even date, I have the honour to state that although the existing treaty between Japan and Canada absolutely guarantees to Japanese subjects the full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the Dominion of Canada, yet it is not the intention of the Imperial Government to insist upon the complete enjoyment of the rights and privileges guaranteed by those stipulations when that would involve disregard of special conditions which may prevail in Canada from time to time.

Acting in this spirit, and having particular regard to circumstances of recent occurrence in British Columbia, the Imperial Government have decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada. In carrying out this purpose, the Imperial Government, in pursuance of the policy above stated, will give careful consideration to local conditions prevailing in Canada, with a view to meeting the desires of the Government of the Dominion as far as compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state.

Although, as stated in the note under reply, it was not possible for me to acquiesce in all the proposals made by you on behalf of the Canadian Government, I trust that you will find in the statement therein made proof of the earnest desire of the Imperial Government to promote, by every means within our power, the growth and stability of the cordial and mutually beneficial relations which exist between our countries. I venture to believe also that this desirable result will be found to have been materially advanced by the full exchange of views which has taken place between us, and it gives me special pleasure to acknowledge the obligation under which I have been placed by your frank and considerate explanations regarding the attitude and wishes of your Government.

I avail myself, &c., &c.,

Tadasu Hayashi.

That letter was dated December 23, 1907. Following is the agreement which was included therein:

The regulations (a) would be sent at once to the governors of the several prefectures of Japan, and the regulations (b) to the consuls of Japan in Canada.

(A)

The following classes of emigrants only are those to whom the Japanese Government will grant permission to emigrate to Canada.

1. Emigrants having previously resided in Canada and holding certificates of such residence issued by the Japanese consular authorities in the Dominion, and the wives and children of such emigrants.

2. Emigrants specially engaged by Japanese residents in Canada for bona fide personal or domestic service, upon production of written evidence of such engagement, attested by the competent Japanese consular authorities.

3. Contract emigrants, where terms of the contract, works to be done, names and standing of the intended employers are satisfactorily specified; such contracts to be accompanied by a certificate from the Japanese Consul of the district where the labourers are to be employed.

In addition to the above, emigrants brought in under contract by Japanese resident agricultural holders in Canada and especially required for the promotion of such agriculture; such contract to be accompanied by the certificate of the Japanese consular authority in the district where the labourers are to be employed.

(B). Copy of Memorandum to Consular Authorities.

The consular authorities to whom application is made for the issue of a certificate attesting the genuineness of contracts for the employment of Japanese labour in Canada shall not issue the certificate unless they receive satisfactory evidence that such contract has the approval of the Canadian Government.

As an exception to this rule, Japanese consular authorities in Canada may issue certificates to Japanese resident agricultural holders who require Japanese labour for the working of their agricultural lands at the rate of from five to ten labourers per one hundred acres of land held by the applicant. It is necessary, however, that before issuing these certificates all Japanese consular authorities shall exercise great care to ascertain the bona fides of the applicant and will take into close consideration the existing state of the labour market and of public feeling.

This is the agreement which was made, and which my right hon. friend has in mind. My right hon. friend said a moment ago that he had reason to believe that as soon as this treaty had received the sanction of the Governor General the Japanese Government would issue a declaration similar to the declaration made by the Japanese Ambassador when the treaty with the United States was effected. Here is the statement of my right hon. friend in his own language:

It will be observed that, concurrently with the ratification by the Government of the United States of the new treaty with Japan, His Excellency the Japanese Ambassador at Washington signed and published a declaration that the Japanese Government were fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which for some years they have exercised in regulation of the emigration of labourers from Japan to the United States. We have every reason to believe that as soon as the present Bill shall become law, the Imperial Government of Japan will be prepared to make and will make similar declarations with regard to the maintenance of the limitation and control which they have exercised during the past five years in the regulation of emigration from Japan to Canada.

The method which has been adopted of having with such a government as the Japanese Government an understanding on mutual good faith, which has been carried out for five years, is certainly the best solution of that problem. And now that we have these explanations on the part of my right hon. friend, I think there is no reason why we should refuse our assent to the treaty. It does not go very far, and I shall ask later on why the commercial part of it has not been made applicable to Canada. So far as it goes, we shall be quite happy to give it our sanction.

Mr. BORDEN: As we shall be summoned to the Senate in a few moments, I propose to move that the debate be adjourned, to be resumed this day.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance: I understood my right hon. friend to say that he desired some further information or an explanation with regard to the commercial aspect of the treaty. I thought my right hon. friend agreed, after looking at article VII, that we received most favoured nation treatment, and I think that covers the point adverted to.

Article VIII of the treaty, by its express terms, is limited to the United Kingdom. The phrase used in the other articles is 'between the high contracting parties,' and in order to make it certain that article VIII did not apply to Canada, we have on record a letter from the Consul General of Japan containing the express statement that article VIII does not apply. But we have the advantage, so far as Japan is concerned, of most favoured nation treatment. Article VII refers to articles of foreign origin and provides that importations into Japan, the produce and manufacture of Canada, are to receive as favourable treatment as articles of any other foreign origin. There are treaties in existence between Japan and France and Germany providing for most favoured nation treatment and even if a question arose as to the word 'foreign origin' in article VII, Canada is entitled to the most favoured nation treatment and consequently to the same treatment that France and Germany or any other nation enjoying most favoured nation treatment with Japan will receive. I may say that if it had stood alone, if that had not been the position, Canada, in my estimation, would still not have been justified in giving adhesion to article VIII because I could show my hon. friend, to his satisfaction, that by reason of the most favoured nation treaties to which we are subject, the present treaty and the other favoured nation treaties which are applicable to Canada, if the goods mentioned in schedule 2 in the treaty were to be admitted to Canada free, as they are to be admitted to the United Kingdom free, then of course the other favoured nations would be entitled to receive from Canada precisely the same treatment, and the result would be that they would be able also to export to Canada on a free basis all the articles mentioned. The result would be important not only so far as revenue is concerned, but so far as some of the industries of this country are concerned. However, I do not think the question arises for the reason that article VIII does not apply and we get the benefit of most favoured nation treatment from Japan.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I shall take it up when we return at eight o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN: Article VIII, by its terms, does not apply to any of the dominions, but only to the United Kingdom.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is true.

Mr. BORDEN: In the other articles the expression is 'the high contracting parties.' In article VIII it is 'the United Kingdom.' Shortly after the treaty was signed an interpretation was agreed upon by which it was distinctly stated that article VIII had application only to the United Kingdom.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the debate was adjourned, to be resumed this day.

BRITISH-JAPANESE TREATY.

The adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Borden for second reading of Bill No. 156, respecting a certain Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, was resumed.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add to the very admirable speech which has been delivered by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition on this treaty of commerce between Canada and the Empire of Japan. Yet, as in the past, I have been more or less interested in some of the features of this treaty, I may be entitled to express my opinion on this important matter. First of all, I sincerely congratulate the right hon. the leader of the Government on this his first diplomatic venture, since he has been called upon to fill the high office of Prime Minister of Canada. The fact that he has been able to negotiate this treaty, demonstrates that Canada, although one of the overseas dominions and although subject in her international relations to the British Foreign Office, under the very liberal constitution we are blest with is in these matters competent to deal directly with nations willing to trade with us. I congratulate the right hon. the Prime Minister on the measure of success he has attained in these negotiations; I thank him for his kindness in handing me a few days ago the correspondence he has had with His Excellency, Mr. Nakamura, the Imperial Japanese Consul at Ottawa.

We know that Japan is not the least powerful ally of our Mother Country, Great Britain, and Japan is to-day one of the world's great powers. Japan is great, not alone through military achievements which place her side by side with the leading nations of the world, but, great because of her civilization; and her attainments in education, in literature, in science, in arts. I have visited Japan, I have studied her history, and to her progress in the arts of modern civilization I can bear testimony. I am glad Canada is called upon to adhere to this treaty, in which are included and presented for our consideration, two features of commerce and immigration. I regret that of late years our expectations of an extensive commerce with Japan have not been realized. I have the latest figures issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I find that the trade from Japan to Canada is much larger than the trade from Canada to Japan, the balance of trade being against us in this instance, as in our trade with the United States. These are the figures:

Trade of Canada with Japan.
(From Canadian Returns.)

Years ended December 31.	Imports into Canada from Japan.	Exports from Canada to Japan.
1910..	2,372,412	688,000
1911..	2,294,875	436,375
1912..	3,616,040	851,887

Trade of Japan with Canada.
(From Japanese returns.)

Years ended December 31.	Imports into Canada from Japan.	Exports from Canada to Japan.
1910..	423,363	2,122,372
1911..	166,298	1,995,011
1912..	330,903	2,394,515

There is no reason, Sir, why in the years to come the inter-trade between Japan and Canada should not greatly develop. It is to be expected that when the National Transcontinental railway is completed from ocean to ocean, and when there is a line of steamers established between Prince Rupert and Yokohama, Canada will be able to develop a trade of some magnitude with this remarkable country. Canada occupies an unequalled strategic position from the trade point of view, as the medium of commerce between Europe and Asia, because, when the port of Prince Rupert is fully equipped and the National Transcontinental railway in operation, Prince Rupert will be the nearest port on the American continent to Japan, and a vantage point par excellence through which to develop commerce. Wheat, one of our staple products, is destined to be an article of very general consumption by the people of Japan. The wheat at present consumed in Japan is shipped from Oregon, Washington, and other Pacific coast states. It is admitted that it is of much inferior quality to that produced in our prairie provinces, which can be conveniently and cheaply exported to Japan when the transportation facilities now under construction are completed. Before I speak of the Canadian Pacific railway service, may I say that since the Osaka exhibition some years ago at which Canada was represented, there have been organized in the large Japanese cities bakeries which sell bread to the people at a very low price. This was started by Canadians at the exhibition of Osaka, and the custom has been maintained ever since. As we all know, the Japanese as a rule consume rice, but the best rice produced in Japan is exported, and so the consumption of wheat becomes every day more a matter of course in Japan. If the Canadian Pacific railway were not congested at Vancouver and Victoria with the line it has, there could be established a much larger export from Canada to Japan; but as we all know, especially as my hon. friends from British Columbia know, the steamers of the Canadian Pacific railway, the Empress of Japan and the Empress of China, are much too small, and are on the point of being replaced by larger steamers. But up to the present time it has been impossible for the Canadian Pacific railway to promote the wheat trade between Japan and Canada. The time is fast approaching when that trade will be greatly increased. The articles which are being sold by Canada to Japan and which may become the basis of a trade between the two countries, as I see by the monthly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce in May, 1902, consists of the following:

Animals, living; arms, clocks, watches, instruments, tools; bicycles and parts thereof; butter; books and stationery; cheese; comestibles in cans; cotton duck; fertilizers; fish, salted salmon and trout; flour; leather and manufactures of; machinery; metals, iron and steel; lead (pigs, ingots, slabs); metal manufactures; milk condensed; paper, printing; pulp; soap; timber, lumber, planks and boards; and tobacco, leaf.

And in another column we find the imports into Canada from Japan. I would not, for my part, object, should it be found necessary for the betterment of trade between Canada and Japan, to the increase of the subsidies to the Canadian Pacific railway line of steamers. The Canadian Pacific railway, we all know, are the pioneers of that trade, and in the far East they have certainly been the advertisers of Canada. Long before we had an agent in Yokohama and Tokio there was an agency of the Canadian Pacific railway, and that agency, which I visited on my trip to Japan, was known all over Japan, Manchuria and Korea. It is situate in the quarters where the wealthy merchants and wealthy traders meet every week.

Now, besides the question of trade with Japan, there is the question of immigration; and certainly this is a most important question in its effects upon the fair province of British Columbia. Perhaps it would be better for me to examine for a few moments the question of Japanese immigration into the United States, before I speak of that immigration into Canada. For, after all, the problem in British Columbia is on the same lines as in the states of the neighbouring republic. The Japanese increased in numbers in British Columbia after they had invaded, so to speak, the states of California, Oregon and Washington. To speak of the progress of that immigration into the neighbouring states is to speak of its progress in our own province of British Columbia. In the eighties there was practically no Japanese immigration into the continent of America; a Japanese in those days was a curiosity on this continent. I have here the statistics published in a book, a most interesting work, which has just been printed 'American-Japanese Relations' by Kiyoshi K. Kawakami. I see that in 1886 there were seven Japanese immigrants in the United States of America. One must come down to 1891 to find any considerable number of Japanese on this continent. I find that in 1891 there were 1,161 Japanese in the western states. And from that year the immigration grew until, in 1907, it had reached high-water mark at 30,226. Now, the first Japanese immigrants were induced to come to the United States, as they were induced to come to Canada, by our own selves—that is by the white population. When the exclusion of Chinese was pronounced by the American Government, the large owners of orchards in the United States, and the great railway companies of the West themselves imported contract labour; and that is the reason why from 1891 to 1907, the Japanese immigrants came in such large numbers. But they did not come directly from Japan. When the influx was at its height, they were coming from the islands of Hawaii, to which islands they had been attracted by the sugar plantations. And when, later on, the earthquake at San Francisco brought to a standstill the labour market in California, there was further inducement which brought to the state of California more of the Japanese labourers from Hawaii.

This explains why in 1907, the Japanese immigration had reached the highwater mark of 30,226 in the western states. It is a fact which redounds to the credit of the Japanese people that, as soon as they took root in the United States, they immediately became keen competitors not only of the other yellow races, but of the white race itself. There are no paupers amongst them; they were not a charge on the community; there were fewer illiterates amongst them than amongst the immigrants of all the other races and they worked in the United States for the same wages as those paid to white labourers. One can well understand the spirit of antagonism which developed itself against the arrival of these keen competitors. They had scarcely become established in the continent of America when the people began to realize that they were one of the best and most active races of the world. The yellow races, such as the Hindus and Chinese, were not consumers of what is produced by the manufacturers in the United States, whilst by the statistics which I have in my hand it is established that the Japanese as soon as they came in contact with the white people in the United States, became consumers of the national product of that country to as great a degree as the white people themselves. I stated a moment ago that a large influx took place in 1907, and that it was caused not only by certain conditions in the islands of Hawaii, a possession of the United States in the Pacific ocean, but was also the result of the earthquake at San Francisco and the state of the labour market in the state of California. The agitators of the western states immediately organized what are called exclusion societies, formed for the purpose of operating against the immigration of Japanese and Koreans. In the United States, as in Canada, the Chinese are practically excluded, and they can enter the country only by paying a heavy head tax. The societies in question held meetings, especially in San Francisco and in the states of Oregon and Washington, and had permeated throughout the province of British Columbia. The agitation in 1907, had reached such a stage that President Roosevelt thought it necessary to enact a law directly against the Japanese and Koreans. He had made a promise in regard to the matter to the mayor of San Francisco in 1907, and in February of that year the following provision was inserted in the Immigration Act:

That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any other country than the United States or to the canal zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labour conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the canal zone.

On the basis of this provision President Roosevelt, on March 14, 1907, issued a proclamation excluding from continental United States, Japanese and Korean labourers, skilled or unskilled, who had received papers to go to Mexico, Canada or Hawaii, and come therefrom. But, Sir—and this is the point I wish to emphasize, because, after all, similar conditions prevail in Canada in respect of the present treaty—whilst the late President of the United States, by an amendment to the Immigration Act, and by proclamation, was excluding the Japanese and the Koreans from the United States, the Government of the United States was despatching to Japan the then Secretary of State, Mr. Taft, for the purpose of negotiating with the Japanese an arrangement or understanding by which the Government of the United States would not be called upon to exclude the Japanese or the Koreans, but that the Government of Japan, of its own volition, would restrict the immigration by the issuing of passports. Permit me to quote from this book, entitled American and Japanese Relations, the following paragraph:

> Meanwhile the American Government entered into a negotiation with the Japanese Government with a view to securing its co-operation in the enforcement of the immigration regulations. Japan willingly acceded to the American request, and suggested plans for the control of immigrants. Thus an understanding was reached, contemplating that the Japanese Government should issue passports to continental United States only to such of its subjects as were non-labourers or were labourers who in coming to the continent sought to resume a formerly acquired domicile, to join a parent, wife or children residing there, or to assume control of an already possessed interest in a farming enterprise in this country; so that the three classes of labourers entitled to receive passports to the continental United States have come to be known by the following designations: first, former residents; second, parents, wives or children of residents; third, settled agriculturists.

That the experiment has worked satisfactorily in the United States is established by the following words found in the report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for the last year:

The experiment certainly, with the co-operation of the Japanese Government, much more completely accomplished the exclusion of Japanese labourers as defined in the regulations putting the arrangement into effect, than have the Chinese exclusion laws ever operated to prevent the immigration of Chinese labourers as defined under such laws, and is working at this moment with a greater degree of relative success.

Figures are quoted giving the number of emigrants going from Japan to the United States since this understanding was agreed upon by the two governments in 1907.

You have here briefly the history of the movement of immigration between Japan and the United States, the regulations which were adopted, the understanding which was come to and carried out between the two governments, and you have the results. It has worked satisfactorily and I say that we in Canada, in a much lesser degree as regards the number of immigrants, have succeeded as they have in the United States and I am proud to say that the Government of Japan have carried out the spirit and the letter of the understanding which was arrived at in 1907. Might I be allowed to quote from the official reports of the United States? Let us take the first report of 1908-09, after the agreement came into force. The Commissioner General of Immigration reports as follows at 221 of the House documents, volume 81:

To section 1 of the Immigration Act, approved February 20, 1907, a proviso was attached reading as follows: That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any other country than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States, or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labour conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Further, the commissioner adds:

In order that the best results might follow from an enforcement of the regulation, an understanding was reached with Japan that the existing policy of discouraging the immigration of its subjects of the labouring classes to continental United States should be continued and should, by co-operation of the governments, be made as effective as possible. This understanding contemplates that the Japanese Government shall issue passports to continental United States only to such of its subjects as are non-labourers or are labourers who in coming to the continent seek to resume a formerly acquired domicile. . . .

It will be seen, therefore, that the report for the past fiscal year covers a novel phase of the immigration question, viz., the exclusion from the continental portion of this country of certain classes of aliens, such exclusion being based in part upon the provision of law mentioned, but principally upon the mutual understanding of the two countries affected.

The same report has been made from year to year since 1908 and, as I stated a moment ago, the same satisfactory result has been achieved in the United States owing to the understanding which was negotiated by ex-President Taft on behalf of the United States Government with the Empire of Japan. As I stated, similar conditions exists in Canada as in the western United States. The first yellow immigrants who came to Canada were the Chinese coolies, they came after the discovery of the Cassiar and Kootenay mines, but they came in much vaster numbers about thirty years ago for the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway in the passes of the Rocky mountains. After the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway was completed they did not return to their country of origin, but settled in the plains and in the various cities until there was, in 1844, a very serious anti Asiatic agitation on the part of the white people of British Columbia. A commission was appointed by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, consisting of the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau, the late Mr. Justice Grey and the late Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin, who for many years sat as a member of this House, to investigate the grievances of the white people of British Columbia. We all know the conclusions of the commission, it recommended to the Government the imposition of a head tax of fifty dollars which later on, in 1900 I believe, was raised by the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to $100 and finally to its present figure of $500. Until 1892 or 1894 there were very few Japanese citizens in the province of British Columbia and, as in the case of the United States, they were feared, not because they were a charge on the community, not because they were considered as an inferior race, far from it, but because of their aggressiveness in business, as traders and as citizens generally. There was some slight agitation around 1900, and representations were made by the Canadian Government to the Japanese authorities and we all remember the orders issued by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan. On the 2nd of August, 1900, he issued an order to the governors of prefectures. Japan, like France, is divided into so many departments and in each department there is a prefect and there are governors. The order read:

To the governors of the prefectures. You are hereby instructed to prohibit entirely, for the time being, the emigration of Japanese labourers for the Dominion of Canada or for the United States.

(Signed) Viscount Aoki, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

In 1902 that took place in British Columbia, and I may say that this agitation was only following the one in the neighbouring states. The legislature of British Columbia passed no less than twenty-two Acts for the exclusion of the Japanese, which Acts were all disallowed by the federal authorities.

In 1902 the Japanese Government was represented in Canada by a gentleman of very great ability, one of the most prominent Japanese consuls in America at that time; I refer to Mr. Nossé. Mr. Nossé was made aware of the agitation which was taking place in British Columbia, and on several occasions he gave assurances to the Government of Canada that the immigration of contract labourers from Japan would be restricted by the Government of Japan. I think that at that time the number specified was five labourers from each prefecture of Japan; at all events the total did not exceed 200 or 250 a year, which was quite a reasonable figure. Canada, like the United States, felt that the Japanese could not be treated on a footing of equality with the Chinese. At that time there had arisen a new Japan. A nation which had been dormant, so to speak, for many centuries, restored its legitimate monarch in 1867, and later on, in 1889, after sending its statesmen throughout the world to study the civilization of Europe and America, it adopted the parliamentary institutions which we ourselves enjoy. In 1894, having become more open to the methods of Occidental civilization, Japan sought to revise her treaties. All her treaties had been negotiated up to that time with very special tariff rates and with rights of exterritorially which were most humiliating to her sense of honour. In 1894, the first nation to negotiate a treaty with Japan, a treaty of amity and commerce, was Great Britain, and Canada adhered to it. Later on, as was stated this afternoon, a treaty of alliance was concluded by Lord Lansdowne, the then British Foreign Minister, between Japan and Great Britain, which treaty was renewed by Sir Edward Grey a few years ago. Therefore, Canada as part of the British Empire, could not treat the Japanese as an inferior race. The Japanese are not an inferior race; their civilization entitles them to the greatest consideration, and, as I stated in opening my remarks this evening, their literature, their system of education, their military achievements, their naval power, and their extensive commercial attainments, have placed the Japanese people really within the concert of Europe. In 1902 we could not, as some people were clamouring for us to do, enact against that great people any laws of exclusion, any more than we could to-day enact laws of exclusion against them.

In 1905, therefore, Canada adhered to the first treaty which had been signed between Great Britain and Japan. Let me for one moment refer to Canada's action, as regards that first treaty, on the question of immigration. I do not wish to open old sores, but we all know that there was a strong party in British Columbia which for many years advocated the exclusion of Japanese as of all other Oriental immigrants. The late Government were told that they could have done indirectly what we were being asked to do directly; we were told that we could, for instance, enact legislation similar to that adopted by Natal in South Africa. We were told that we could have availed ourselves of the legislation passed by Queensland in Australia. It is not necessary for me to re-open old sores. Let me just say that I cannot believe, and the present leader of the House cannot believe, that at any time during the last twenty years Canada would have been justified in passing the Natal Act or in adopting the legislation of Queensland; which legislation has not been enforced by Queensland since it became part of the Commonwealth of Australia. On this subject I would like to refer the House to the explanations given by Sir Ernest Satow, who for some years was the ambassador of Her Late Majesty the Queen to Japan. Sir Ernest Satow said:

It seems obvious that the Japanese government, who have taken nearly four months to consider their reply, desire to be in a position to terminate the treaty whenever any of the colonies that might accede to it with this proviso proceeded to legislate against the free immigration of Japanese labour, and I could not conceal from His Excellency my feeling that this was not a very friendly attitude to take up.

I assured him, however, that as far as I could foresee, there would, in all probability, be no necessity for either Canada or the Australian colonies placing restrictions on Japanese, who usually lived on the same scale as Europeans in foreign countries, and that no disadvantage was likely to result to Japan from consenting to this proviso. As His Excellency was aware, no such legislation had even been resorted to in the past.

Let me give the concluding sentence, which gives the key to the whole situation, as far as Japan is concerned in matters of this kind. Says Sir Ernest Satow:

I think it is not difficult to understand why the Japanese Government feeling that such provisions are calculated to place them in the eyes of the world on a level with the Chinese, should endeavour, while apparently consenting to them, to render them practically inoperative from the beginning.

That is to say, that, if at the time of our first treaty, we had enacted similar legislation to that passed by Queensland, the Japanese Government would have notified Canada immediately that the treaty would be at an end after six months and the treaty would have been of no avail. Therefore, we accepted, and rightly so, the assurances which were given by the representative of Japan in Canada as to the restriction of immigration to Canada. I shall not weary the House by reading these assurances, but I am pleased to say that, from the moment that Viscount Aoki, in 1900, gave his pledge until the assurances of Mr. Nossé were given in 1907, Japan lived up to those assurances. But suddenly, as in the case of the United States, there was an influx of Japanese into British Columbia. I explained a moment ago, that, in 1907, into California, Oregon and Washington, but especially into San Francisco, there came, chiefly from the Island of Hawaii, a very large number of Japanese labourers. This gave rise to the drastic legislation of President Roosevelt, followed by the understanding which was arrived at by the Japanese Government and Mr. Taft, who acted as the special envoy of the American Government. In 1907, a similar condition of things was found to exist in British Columbia and the causes were the same. It has been found that the immigrants did not principally come from Japan, but from the Island of Hawaii and that the movement had been engineered by some immigration companies in British Columbia and in Hawaii. The Japanese Government must be acquitted of the charge which was made at the time against them that they had been false to the assurances given by their representative in Canada, Mr. Nossé. On the contrary, the Government of Japan always lived up to the assurances given and always pursued the policy towards Canada and the United States that had been agreed upon. We all remember the riots that took place in September, 1907, due to paid agitators who trekked from the United States to Vancouver in order to arouse public indignation against the Japanese. These riots were very regrettable and the Government of the day did its duty in investigating them and in paying a fair indemnity to the Japanese citizens who had been so ill treated in the streets of Vancouver.

It was under these circumstances that I was dispatched by the Canadian Government to Japan to negotiate an understanding with the Government of that country. The right hon. the leader of the House was kind enough to refer to that mission this afternoon in terms of reserved praise, and he was kind enough to read the basis of the agreement. Let me refer to it again. I take no credit to myself for the relative success of the mission. If I succeeded at all, I owe it entirely, as I stated at the time, to the help given to my own humble self by the British ambassador at Tokio, Sir Claude MacDonald, and I owe it to the liberality and fair play of the then Foreign Minister of Japan, Count Tadasu Hayashi, and also to the fact that Japan, being an ally of Great Britain, was interested in maintaining the best spirit possible between the most important colony of the Empire and the Empire of Japan itself. Now, let me refer to the basis of the understanding which was negotiated by myself in 1907. It has been read by my right hon. friend but I shall read it again.

Tokio, December 23, 1907.

Monsieur le ministre:

In reply to your note of even date, I have the honour to state that although the existing treaty between Japan and Canada absolutely guarantees to Japanese subjects full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the Dominion of Canada, yet it is not the intention of the Imperial Government to insist upon the complete enjoyment of the rights and privileges guaranteed by those stipulations when that would involve disregard of special conditions which may prevail in Canada from time to time.

Acting in this spirit and having particular regard to circumstances of recent occurrence in British Columbia, the Imperial Government have decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada. In carrying out this purpose, the Imperial Government, in pursuance of the policy above stated, will give careful consideration to local conditions prevailing in Canada, with a view to meeting the desires of the Government of the Dominion as far as is compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state.

Although, as stated in the note in reply, it was not possible for me to acquiesce in all of the proposals made by you on behalf of the Canadian Government. I trust that you will find in the statement herein made proof of the earnest desire of the Imperial Government to promote by every means within their power, the growth and stability of the cordial and mutually beneficial relations which exist between our countries. I venture to believe, also that this desirable result will be found to have been materially advanced by the full exchange of views which has taken place between us, and it gives me special pleasure to acknowledge the obligation under which I have been placed by your frank and considerate explanations regarding the attitude and wishes of your government.

I avail myself, &c., &c.,
(Sgd.) Tadasu Hayashi.

This was the basis of the understanding. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition read this afternoon the synopsis of the agreement arrived at between the authorities in Japan and Canada, a synopsis which can consistently be published without breaking any state secret. The right hon. gentleman knows that this agreement has been lived up to by the Empire of Japan, and the best evidence of the good faith of the Japanese authorities is contained in the pamphlet; Immigration Facts and Figures issued by direction of the Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of the Interior, in 1912. In 1907-8, the year of the great influx of Japanese into Canada, there came 7,001 while in 1908-9, the year the agreement was negotiated, between Canada and Japan there were only 495 Japanese immigrants entering Canada; in 1909-10 there were 271; in 1910-11 there were 437; and in 1911-12, there were 755. Last year, for what cause I know not, there was a material increase in the number of Japanese immigrants, over the previous years, but neither the Government of Canada nor the government of Japan is responsible for this, because, in what has been made public of the agreement, it is stated that the Japanese who already had a foothold in Canada could bring in bona fide domestics for their use, and members of their families. I would suppose that last year a large number of the Japanese residents of Canada brought their relatives over. To the credit of Canada, which trusted Japan, and to the credit of Japan, the Japanese government has lived up to the agreement of 1907. While congratulating my right hon. friend on concluding this treaty, I have to regret that Canadians are not to have a share in the good things which the people of Great Britain can claim, as set forth in the special schedules mentioned in Article VIII.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Does my hon. friend say that Canada does not get the benefit of that schedule?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that to be so, but I may be wrong.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is expressly excepted in the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Canada gets the most favoured nation treatment.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, but Article VIII gives special privileges to the United Kingdom, and that article is expressly excepted in this Bill ratifying the treaty.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Would France and Germany and the United States, by reason of getting the most favoured nation treatment, also derive the benefits of that particular article? However, when I come to speak, I will deal with that question.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I speak with some reservation on that point, but no doubt the Minister of Finance will make a statement with regard to it. On the whole, I congratulate the Government on the happy negotiation of this treaty, and though it is vague in terms as to our participation in the special benefits which Great Britain enjoys, I shall be pleased to hear that Canada will share in these benefits.

The paramount question for me is the friendly relations which henceforth will exist between Canada and Japan. I am pleased with the treaty, in the first place, because it is negotiated with Japan the ally of Great Britain, in the second place, because we will reap material commercial advantages from it when the Grand Trunk Pacific railway has been completed, and, in the third place, because it will bring us into closer contact with that remarkable country and its wonderful people, from whom, even we, can learn much. We have been discussing the question of the Canadian navy; and also the possibilities of ship-building. Sir, in these matters we have much to learn from Japan. Twenty-five years ago, Japan was one of the dormant countries in Asia, but through the organization of her military and naval forces she suddenly became a great power. She sent her young men to Europe and America and they returned to Japan learned in the ways of modern civilization. Their laws were reformed, universities were rounded, professors were brought from the most highly-cultured of civilized nations. An elite was formed. The Japanese navy is now second only to the British navy; a fact which is in no small measure due to the efforts of the late Admiral Sir Archibald Douglass, who, by the way, was born in Quebec. Admiral Douglass spent twenty years in Japan. He trained her naval officers.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Do they build their own ships in Japan?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Certainly; they build their own ships and they have splendid shipyards; they train their own men, and in their universities they have a corps of professors and engineers, to teach naval achitecture. However, I do not care to talk navy at this time. I simply wish to emphasize this fact, that Japan is a great nation, and we cannot afford to let some of our people speak as wildly as they have spoken in recent years about that fine race. Why, their universities, their high schools, their elementary schools, are to say the least the equals of ours. As regards their literature, I cannot speak from personal knowledge, of course but the competent authorities are unanimous in saying that it is one of the most beautiful in the world. And every Japanese of education speaks at least one or two languages—speaks English or German, and many of them speak French. You cannot go into any store of Tokio or Yokohama, you cannot go into any village or visit any church without finding somebody able to speak the English language. And yet there are people in this country who speak with great levity about that people. I say that the Japanese race is the equal of any of the races of this world.

Now, the treaty will be adopted by this House. Section 2 of this Bill deals with questions of immigration, as follows:

Nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act.

The Immigration Act, as I stated this afternoon, contains no clause excluding the Japanese or the Koreans as does the immigration law of the United States of America. The only exclusion in this country is against the Chinese. The only prohibited classes in Canada are those enumerated in the sections which have been quoted in this debate. These provisions of the law apply to every country in the world—to the English immigrant, to the French, the Belgian, the Norwegian or any other. Therefore, the anti-Japanese, if there are any left in British Columbia, will not find much consolation in section 2 of the Bill. But there was more than this. Though this section is inserted in the Bill it is distinctly understood with the Japanese Government that at all events there will not be any descrimination against the Japanese immigrant. That is clearly stated, and it speaks highly for the diplomacy of the Japanese consul. As shown by the correspondence read here to-day, the Prime Minister wrote to the Consul General of Japan and told him of this Bill, clause 2, of which I have just quoted, stating:

The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country.

And the Consul General for Japan in Canada answers:

Having reported the matter to my Government, I am in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government have no objection to the proposed Bill, and they feel sure that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910, being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada of all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in these respects.

In other words, the Government of Canada has put the Japanese race on a footing of equality with the English, the Belgians, the French and all great races of the world. And I congratulate the Government upon that fact. It is expressly stated in the correspondence exchanged between this Government and the representative of Japan in Canada that there will be no discrimination in future against the Japanese. Therefore, the policy of conciliation which was unalterably preached by the right hon. leader of the Opposition when he occupied the position of Prime Minister has been accepted and vindicated by the Government of the day, as against the policy of exclusion which was advocated by the friends of the Government in the province of British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, I say that in at least three different general elections a wave of sentiment was worked up by the Conservative party in British Columbia against the presence of the Japanese in that province. I explained under what circumstances the influx of 1907 took place. I have explained how that influx culminated, and what understanding we were successful in obtaining from the Government of Japan. I have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that that agreement has worked successfully, and has been lived up to by the Government of Japan. And to-day I am pleased to know that the Government of Canada admits that it was a fair understanding that it was successful and that it must be maintained.

Mr. BELAND: Are we to understand that this new clause in the Bill will not further restrict Japanese immigration into Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX: It will not restrict Japanese immigration.

Mr. BELAND: Is that the contention of the Government also?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Certainly, the right hon. gentleman mentioned it this afternoon in so many words, and I wish in conclusion, to quote to my non. friend the last words of the right hon. the leader of the House.

It will be observed that concurrently with the ratification by the Government of the United States of the new treaty with Japan, His Excellency the Japanese ambassador at Washington signed and published a declaration that the Japanese Government were fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which for some years they have exercised in regulation of the emigration of labourers from Japan to the United States. We have every reason to believe that as soon as the present Bill shall become law the Imperial Government of Japan will be prepared to make and will make a similar declaration with regard to the maintenance of the limitation and control which they have exercised during the past five years in the regulation of emigration from Japan to Canada.

Therefore we shall hear no more of exclusion, but due respect will be given to the understanding arrived at between the Government of Canada and the Government of Japan in 1907; a policy of conciliation is to be substituted for that policy of exclusion which has been heralded all over the country as being the only desirable.

I wish to apologize to the House for the lengthy remarks I have made on the present occasion. Having followed month by month the carrying out of the agreement between Japan and Canada, I am pleased to reiterate the statement that the Japanese Government has lived up to that agreement most faithfully. I am glad that the time has gone by when politicians will support a policy of exclusion as against that great race, now that the right hon. leader of the Government has adopted the policy of conciliation introduced by the Government of the right hon. gentleman who is now leader of the Opposition. This action redounds to the credit of my right hon. friend, and I am pleased to congratulate him on his conversion, as well as his success in the present negotiations.

Hon. MARTIN BURRELL (Minister of Agriculture): The Prime Minister has given a resume of the history of the matters which led up to the previous Japanese treaty and the treaty which this Government is proposing to acquiesce in at the present time, and all the matters relating thereto, from the point of view of commerce as well as of immigration. It is not my intention at this hour to deal at any great length with this question, which has been one of great controversy ever since I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this House, and, indeed, for years previous. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition and the hon. member for Rouville, who has just taken his seat, both made some observations in connection with this matter, and I would like to make a brief reply touching on some of the points which they raised. My right hon. friend said it was not his intention to oppose the ratification of this treaty, and I gather from the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Rouville that he takes the same attitude. They both regard the treaty as of no particular benefit to Canada, commercially, but they approve of it on general principles as—I think these were the words of my right hon. friend—perhaps tending to open the way to larger markets in the Orient. He especially mentioned the fact that the trade in cotton and other articles of commerce might be very greatly increased, and I would like to make a remark or two in connection with the trade aspect of this question, because as hon. gentlemen know—at least those who were members of the last Parliament—I never shared the very optimistic views of some gentlemen of this House, especially some of our friends opposite, with regard to the probable results of a treaty with Japan in regard to trade in the Orient. I know that my right hon. friend and many hon. members on the other side of the House, especially some of our friends opposite, have entertained very optimistic views with regard to results of a treaty with Japan as far as trade in the Orient is concerned. I know that my right hon. friend and many members on the other side of the House in previous debates expressed an extraordinarily optimistic view as to the enormous trade that was to result from the operation of the last treaty with Japan. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat has rather dissipated any illusions in that regard by the quotations he has made. I may say that when this matter came up and was threshed out thoroughly on May 18, 1911, at the time the late Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was making a provisional arrangement for the continuance of a trade arrangement with Japan, I ventured to put on 'Hansard' a review of the trade statistics with Japan covering a period of six years, three years previous to the date of the treaty and three years subsequent to that time. I would like to add that I must agree with my right hon. friend in this; while I do not think that there are any extraordinary advantages—at least not any so great as some people anticipate—to flow from this treaty, it is probably good on general principles, and Oriental trade might to some extent be benefited to, and, at all events, it may put us in line with the most favoured nations, to warrant the conclusion that the treaty should be consummated. I would like to say a word or two as to the cherishing of any great illusions in regard to the question of trade, because my hon. friend from Rouville has referred to one or two items in connection with this matter, as has also the right hon. the leader of the Opposition. My right hon. friend refers to the matter of cotton, and I might point out that in the years previous to the old treaty, the export of Canadian cottons amounted to $67,613 in 1905, in 1906 $26,000 and for the three years subsequent to the ratification of that treaty the export of Canadian cotton steadily diminished, until in 1910 it amounted to only $9,804. In the year 1908 Japan exported $21,000,000 worth of cotton yarns and fabrics. I give these figures as an illustration of my belief that it is not well for us to cherish any illusion on this point. The matter of the wheat trade was also very fully discussed at that time, and I pointed out to the House that in regard to wheat and other agricultural products Japan is not likely to increase her trade very much from our shores, for two reasons, one of these being that Japan is a highly protective country. I would commend this to the consideration of the hon. member for Red Deer because I know with what enthusiasm he pursues the belief that tariffs are universally tumbling and that nations in general are adopting free trade. The little island of Japan, with a territory of not more than twice the extent of the riding which I have the honour to represent, and with more than 50,000,000 of people, not only had a tariff on wheat amounting to twelve and a half cents a bushel under its old tariff, but under the tariff made effective two years ago, they have increased that protective duty. Similarly on flour and similarly on nearly all agricultural products, none of which do we get a preference on. In spite of the hope that some good may result from treaties with Japan, that we may look forward to some expansion of our Oriental trade, I do not think that anyone should run away with the idea that we are going to obtain extraordinary trade advantages from a treaty with that nation at the present time. I shall point out what Mr. Fielding himself said at that time in reference to this whole matter. He said:

It is true, as the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo has pointed out, that trade with Japan is not so extensive as we could desire. Our exports have not been increasing in the way we all at one time hoped, but we all agree that, although the trade is not all we could desire, we do not want to diminish it or to find ourselves at a commercial disadvantage in Japan as compared with other countries.

And that, I think, is perhaps the sanest and soundest way of putting it.

I was pleased and surprised to hear the rather enthusiastic way in which the hon. member for Rouville endorsed the proposition of large subsidies to shipping companies in this country and his assertion that the Canadian Pacific railway is deserving of a very much larger subsidy in regard to Oriental trade.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I certainly would favour a larger subsidy to the Canadian Pacific if that larger subsidy would give us an improved service to the far East. I think that the Canadian Pacific railway is entitled to special privileges as regards their steamer service because the Canadian Pacific railway was the pioneer and has rendered great service not only to Canada but to the British Empire by establishing that pioneer line of steamers to the Orient.

Mr. BURRELL: I am sure it is pleasing to the House and to the Canadian Pacific to hear the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend. We can appreciate the possibilities of development of that traffic on the Pacific when we realize that in 1884 the Japanese had not a single vessel anywhere but in the coasting trade in their own waters, and that in 1908, only twenty-four years later, they had over five thousand vessels, with a tonnage of 1,534,000 tons, and that they had built up that trade by annual subsidies of something like $4,000,000 to ship construction and shipping companies.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House with respect to this phase of the treaty, but I would like to say a little on the other aspect of it, namely that of immigration. A large influx of people of a strange race, holding different traditions and different ideals to our own, not having anything, practically, in common with our own social or industrial life would be likely to create a condition, that would be, to a large extent, a menace to our own national life. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition and my hon. friend from Rouville have both referred at some length to this subject which, as most gentlemen know, is one of great importance to anybody who comes from British Columbia, and perhaps, in reality, of no less importance to every Canadian, whether in the west or the east. I have nothing very seriously to object to in the general tone of the remarks offered by these two gentlemen. I think possibly my hon. friend from Rouville may almost be forgiven for the somewhat strong party tone he gave to his closing remarks. That, I suppose, is but natural under the circumstances.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I thought I was reserved.

Mr. BURRELL: This question has been threshed out many times in this House. Perhaps some things have been said on both sides that might better have been left unsaid. The debate to which I have referred, that of May 18, 1911, took up a lot of time on this very question and as it does not very often fall to the lot of men in this House to take precisely the same stand when they are on the side of the Government as they did when in opposition, I hope the House will pardon me, as it is relevant to the subject to which I am referring, if I read a short passage taken from my own speech on May 18, 1911, when in opposition and to say to my hon. friend from Rouville very candidly as to our friends opposite, that I hold the same views at the present time—and I am very glad that I have not to swallow myself as sometimes happens in political life. I said:

In a debate of this kind we should not lose sight of the fact that we are all Canadians trying to deal with an immensely grave question and to deal with it in the best interests of the future of Canada. And I must enter rather a protest against the tone of the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) who told us there were two ways of dealing with this question, one by conciliation or diplomacy, and the other by 'defiance,' to use a word which he repeated several times, the very plain imputation being that those who do not agree with the particular form of diplomacy which he favours were following the other method. I think that is very regrettable. I can assure the Minister of Labour and the other members of the Government that the average man in British Columbia regards this question as of supreme national importance; he is not looking at it in the narrow-minded way. And I think it was gratuitous folly also almost to assume that we are 'hurling defiance' at another nation on a question which should be above that method of treatment. This is all the more to be noted because nearly every one of the members of this Government have come round to the views in favour of restriction that they now entertain simply through the opinion in British Columbia expressed year after year. I do not wish to weary the House, but I could quote passage after passage from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux)—although he came round sooner than the others—the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and many other members of the Government to show that they did not understand the gravity of this question or appreciate our view until the constant reiteration of those views compelled them to look into the question, and to their gradually being converted to the views we hold, though their methods of solving the problem may be different. The Government tells us that ours is simply a policy of harsh legislation, while theirs is a policy of diplomacy. One thing is certainly true—that no Canadian has the right to forget that for the people of Japan and for ourselves, the time has come, when we should look this question frankly in the face and recognize that Oriental immigration into western Canada is an impossible thing without creating violent friction between the two countries.

I think I may fairly claim to have spoken what was the true sentiment of my own province in that day and I say now that I hold to the views that I then expressed. My right hon. friend has urged that the Immigration Act as we have it put in this treaty, viz., making the treaty subject to the Act, is of little use, and he rather intimated that the only reason my right hon. friend the Prime Minister had for putting this treaty into effect was because of the agreement to which my hon. friend from Rouville has referred. I would ask what are the facts as to the agreement which has been discussed to-night and on many other occasions? Our whole position, is that the principle of the control of a nation's immigration by itself should be recognized, and that in so far as we are concerned any agreement should be made as formal and as open as possible so that people may know exactly where they stand. In this connection I may be permitted also to quote a passage from the remarks I made on May 18, 1911:

> I hold we should solve it by having admitted the principle of our inalienable right to control our own immigration. But, if we were to make any other arrangement, the arrangement the United States have in this treaty is far ahead of anything we have. It means a contract, practically, on the part of a recognized plenipotentiary of Japan to maintain restriction which has almost amounted to exclusion in the past three years, and in addition put the whole matter under the immigration law of the United States, which, in spite of anything said here to-night, I fail to see it done in our case.

Now, that was our position, as far as it went some years ago, and I think as far as it goes to-day. My right hon. friend takes the ground in reference to the correspondence which has passed between the right hon. the Prime Minister and the representative of Japan in Canada, that it would be impossible to have our Immigration Act operating notwithstanding that it is there. In that respect, I would like to make this remark, that the late Minister of Agriculture, when he was in the House when the previous debate took place, made this statement in regard to the old treaty:

> Mr. Fisher: Our Immigration Act applies to the people of Japan as well as to all other people as regards disabilities of any kind contained in that Act. That is a statement I make with the full responsibility of the Government.

What does that mean? It means that the former Minister of Agriculture, who spoke with the authority of the Government, stated in regard to the very Act we have been discussing to-night, the Immigration Act, that it actually operated in regard to the old treaty, and therefore, the very clause in that Act which has been discussed, clause 38, and which has been referred to by my hon. friend as one impossible of operation, was, according to the former Minister of Agriculture actually in a position to be operated even in spite of the fact that the treaty did not specifically mention it. In further reference to that, I might quote a remark made by the former Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). He was asked, what about control, if there was a heavy influx of Japanese immigrants.

> Mr. Fielding: But we have control. If we are not satified, if any day we believe that more Japanese are coming into the country than we think is desirable, all we have to do is to enforce such laws as the Parliament of Canada may see fit to pass to that end.

Now, I ask, what becomes of any treaty under those conditions, when Mr. Fielding at that time admitted that notwithstanding that treaty, if there was a large influx of Japanese in violation of that agreement, Canada would then turn round and enforce such laws as she had, or make such laws as was deemed necessary to shut them out? I would ask my hon. friend from Rouville, or my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) what became of the treaty in that case. You were in this position, you would turn round, and in the face of the treaty, which did not allow you to do any such thing, you would make a new law in direct violation of the treaty. That was the position. Surely, it is a far better state of things to embody in the treaty a law which in extraordinary and unlooked for circumstances would safeguard the nation without violating treaty obligations because the treaty is subject to the operation of that law.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What becomes of the assurance and undertaking of this Government that there shall be no discrimination against the Japanese as compared even with the subjects of the British Empire?

Mr. BORDEN: There was no such assurance; there was merely a statement that the Act had operation in respect to all countries in the world, including the British Empire itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I beg my right hon. friend's pardon, it says there shall be no discrimination.

Mr. BORDEN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon, it does not say anything of the kind.

Mr. BURRELL: I am just pointing out what the former Minister of Finance intimated. We had a treaty, not subject to our immigration law, and Mr. Fielding said that if Japanese came in in large numbers then the thing to do would be to pass new laws absolutely forbidding them, which would practically be done in violation of the terms of the treaty. If we assume that the Japanese people would break such an agreement as they had made, I would ask where would we be if we had not an arrangement of this kind. We would be absolutely helpless; we would be tied and bound to the treaty. If they broke it—I do not wish to think that they would, I do not believe they would—but assuming that they did break the agreement, and this country were unhappily flooded with Japanese, then I maintain that you do have control over the situation that you did not have before because you have embodied in that treaty the principle of control which every nation ought to have in making the treaty subject to the operation of the Immigration Act. We believe that the treaty did over-ride the Immigration Act, I am referring to the last treaty, and it is obvious that the inclusion of that Immigration Act, making this treaty subject to it, would leave us free to act without violating the terms of the treaty.

The hon. member for St. John raises the point about discrimination. I maintain there is no discrimination. After all these things are to be looked at very largely from an economic point of view. That clause which has been referred to, clause 38, is not to be considered discrimination. If the very existence of the nation were jeopardized by a vast influx of people whose characteristics were so fundamentally different that they formed in any sense a national peril, such circumstances would have to be met whatever nation or race was concerned, and the operation of such a clause might well be invoked to save the country from any such jeopardy. That is not discrimination against any one nation. That is leaving a clause there to be operated against what? Against all the world if the peculiar circumstances should justify a nation in exercising the rights which it undoubtedly has in regard to immigration. I am not saying that in this case we doubt the good faith of the Japanese Government. I can cordially endorse what my hon. friend from Rouville said in that connection. We do not believe, and I would be very loth to say that the Japanese Government would break faith in this matter. But no man can tell what might happen in the remote future with a nation like Japan, or with any nation. No man can tell what development of popular feeling might arise in the trend of governmental affairs, and it would be impossible for any government at present in power to say that such regulations as they might lay down would always be lived up to. In that respect I do not think this Government expects for a single moment that the Japanese would in any sense break faith, and therefore, there is no expectation on the Government's part that there is any likelihood of a resort to the exercise of our immigration laws to which the treaty is made subject. But we ought to feel very well satisfied that the principle of control over its immigration by this nation is placed in that treaty with another nation. The Japanese are a brave and proud people; they are a people who are on friendly terms with ourselves; they are a people who by the alliance with Great Britain have many things in common with us, calculated to make for the peace of the world, and everyone of us who has followed, as a great many in this House have followed the development of that nation, and watched the extraordinary genius of its people cannot but hope that such friendly relations will be maintained as will be an honour to both Great Britain and Japan and ourselves.

Just one or two words more in reply to my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). He has on this occasion and on several other occasions laid a great deal of stress on the character of this agreement, and on the fact that we should not have called for something more definite. What we say is that we had a right to expect that, if we were to rely to any extent on agreements with other people, we had a right to expect that there should be a more formal recognition of the terms of the agreement than there had been in the past. In spite of anything that my hon. friend might say, I would like to call this passage of Mr. Fielding's speech to his attention. I refer my hon. friend to 'Hansard' of May 18, 1911, page 9451 where, referring to the assurance of the Japanese people, Mr. Fielding says:

That assurance so given has been fully lived up to. It is fair to the Japanese Govment to say though that it was never a matter of treaty, but a somewhat loose understanding.

That is how Mr. Fielding himself described that agreement and, when the Finance Minister of that day described the agreement, of which the people of British Columbia could never get the terms, as a somewhat loose understanding how can my hon. friend complain if the people of British Columbia, who are vitally interested in this matter, want it put more plainly as a matter of public record and in a somewhat more open way? A gentleman who was a member of this House but who is now, happily or unhappily here no longer, Mr. Mackenzie King, the late Minister of Labour, in concluding a speech upon this subject, remarked that we ought to take a lesson from the United States. We are glad to take a lesson from them in this case and we have said in the past, and said several times, that, regarding an assurance of that kind, it would be a better thing for this country, and a fairer thing, if we had some specific and formal assurance, such as is practically the rider to the United States treaty, instead of what was described by Mr. Fielding himself as a somewhat loose understanding.

It is only fair to state that, in regard to this whole matter, the position taken by the Government, in passing this treaty with the conditions which are attached, will put the people of Canada in a better position. It will be a matter of congratulation, not only to the people of British Columbia, but to all Canadians, that there has been something like a general recognition of the principle of control over their own immigration that all people should have and that any guarantees given by a particular power should be given in an open and straightforward way, as we hope they will be given under the circumstances mentioned by the Prime Minister. I have only to say, like my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), that there have been a good many strong things said in the past upon these matters. I do not wish any more than he does to open old sores. I would like to say that this matter is far and above any question of mere party; it is a matter of national and vital importance to this country, and that it not only affects profoundly the destiny and welfare of that portion of Canada known as British Columbia, but in so far as it affects the welfare and national life of the people there, it equally affects the people on the Atlantic seaboard and in the province of Ontario. This question is bound up with the welfare of the whole people of Canada and it would be doubly regrettable if at any time there should be a clash of races or friction engendered by an influx of those people whose traditions are so different from ours and whose economic standpoint is so fundamentally at variance with our own.

In dealing with this matter, and with the Japanese nation, whom we all respect and admire, we are glad that their self-respect is retained unimpaired by having an agreement of this kind under which they can restrict the emigration of their own people, but no less is it due to the people of Canada that they should have their own self-respect preserved by a clear and open recognition of the principle that all matters of national concern should be dealt with as they have been dealt with here. I think this is a happy solution of a good many difficulties that have occurred in the past in connection with Japan and we as Canadians may feel that we are now entering upon a phase of our relationship with these people that will always make for a continuance of friendly relations and a strengthening of our mutual good-will.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (St. John): Mr. Speaker, I notice that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) deals with this question as if now, for the first time, we were entering upon a state of happy relations with the Japanese Empire. It is curious how differently one looks upon questions of this kind from the viewpoint from which he has the opportunity of regarding them. I am sure, Sir, that, if some two or three years ago, this Bill had been presented to the House, and my hon. friend, who has just taken his seat, had been here and in opposition, he would have criticised the Bill just as strongly as he criticised the arrangement which was made by my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). My hon. friend congratulates himself that, when he spoke on this subject, I think, in 1911, he expressed a view which prevents him from finding it necessary to swallow himself to-night or to swallow his previous convictions. What did my hon. friend say upon that occasion? He stated that it was not consistent with the honour and dignity of the Canadian people that immigration into our country should depend upon regulations which were made by another country and, for that reason, he criticised the arrangement which had been made by my hon. friend from Rouville. What is the Government stating to us to-night? Is it not that they expect, when this Bill goes through, to have made public a declaration of the Government of Japan that the agreement already existing will be continued? That agreement is either of value to Canada or it is not. It does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say that being obliged to rely upon that agreement is inconsistent with the honour and dignity of the Canadian people, and, at the same time, express gratification that the Japanese Government is going to continue the arrangement. In other words, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, the Government of Japan is going to continue an arrangement that is not consistent with the honour and dignity of the Canadian people. I for one congratulate the Government that hon. gentlemen upon the other side of the House have at last had to come to the conclusion that an arrangement was made by my hon. friend from Rouville which has operated greatly to the advantage of both of these countries and that it was an arrangement which was creditable to the great Japanese Empire and to the people of Canada? I am glad that they have come to the conclusion that it is desirable, in the interests of the Canadian people as well as in the interests of the people of Japan, that this arrangement should be continued.

I am forced to the conviction that there is really very little advantage in this treaty in so far as the people of Canada are concerned. Take the commercial aspect of the question; of what great advantage is it to Canada? It is true that Canada is to receive, while the treaty lasts, most favoured nation treatment; in other words, that goods from Canada shall enter Japan at the same rate of duty as goods from the United States, France and other countries. I had not the opportunity of being present during the whole of the discussion, but, in so far as I know, we have no statement given to the House as to the rates of duty on goods from the United States, France and other countries, to which reference was made in a casual way by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) when he interjected an expression during the debate on the subject. By Article VIII of the treaty, goods from the United Kingdom can enter Japan at a certain rate of duty, and for some reason Canada is to be deprived of the benefit of that clause.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Has my hon. friend considered this aspect of it? If these goods from Great Britain go into Japan free, and if, by their most favoured nation treaties with France and Germany and the United States, France and Germany and the United States become entitled to have their goods of the same kind go in free also, which follows; then, being entitled as we are under article VII to the most favoured nation treatment, is not Canada in the same position as France and Germany and the United States which have most favoured nation treaties with Japan?

Mr. LEMIEUX: In estimating the consequences of that clause in the treaty, has the Minister of Finance an idea of what approximately would be the increase of trade between Canada and Japan?

Mr. WHITE: I have somewhat full information, which I shall be glad to give in Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Minister of Finance says that if the goods enumerated in this article come in free or at a certain rate of duty, then the goods from France and the United States would come in at the same rate of duty as the goods from England, and Canada, by reason of being entitled to the same benefits that France and the United States would receive, would also get her goods in at the same rate of duty as the goods of the United Kingdom. That is a roundabout way of getting the benefit of a treaty, which might be better secured by allowing article VIII to come into operation. Why does the Bill provide that article VIII shall not apply to Canada?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The treaty was negotiated between the United Kingdom and Japan, and by its terms article VIII applies only to the United Kingdom; but in order to make that more clear there has been an exchange of correspondence setting out that it does not apply to Canada, and in consequence the goods which under article VIII and the schedule are to be admitted free to Great Britain, would not be admitted to Canada free. We consider it would be a disadvantage to Canada if they were admitted free.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is another thing altogether. The Minister of Finance says that the same thing will be obtained in a roundabout way.

Mr. WHITE: We get the benefit.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Minister of Finance says that because it would be a disadvantage to Canada, Article VIII is not made applicable to Canada, and yet he says that if this treaty goes into effect the identical result will be brought about in an indirect way.

Mr. WHITE: Not the identical result; only so far as Canadian exports to Japan are concerned, not so far as Japanese exports to Canada are concerned.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is the Minister of Finance quite sure that is so? France has a treaty with Canada, and, if this treaty goes into effect, Japan will have the right, under the favoured nation clause, to get its goods into Canada at the same rate of duty as France.

Mr. WHITE: She has that to-day, and has had it for the last two years; but that is the French rate, and it is a different rate from the rate provided in that treaty.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If my hon. friend puts it on the ground that it would be against the interests of Canada to have the reciprocal arrangement which is provided for by article VIII, and that the same result would be brought about by reason of the favoured nation clause, then I can understand that there might be a reason for providing that article VIII should not apply to Canada. But the Minister of Finance has given another reason which does not appeal to me; he says it only applies to the United Kingdom and not to Canada, and if that is so why does the Bill provide it shall not apply to Canada? If it does not by its terms apply to Canada, why is it necessary to insert a section in the Bill declaring that it shall not apply, and if it does apply to Canada, of course it would be applicable if this section were not in the Bill.

While dealing with the commercial aspect of the question, I may say that I find by article VI it is provided that there shall be between the territories of the two High Contracting Parties reciprocal freedom of commerce and navigation. I presume that would be qualified by the subsequent words of the section which would mean freedom of commerce, subject to the laws of either country. By this article:

> The subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty freely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports and rivers in the territories of the other which are or may be opened to foreign commerce, and, conforming themselves to the laws of the country to which they thus come, shall enjoy the same rights, privileges, liberties, favours, immunities, and exemptions in matters of commerce and navigation as are or may be enjoyed by native subjects.

By that section, the ships of Japan would be entitled to the same privileges in Canadian ports as are enjoyed by the citizens of Canada or by the ships of Canada, and if there were nothing else in the treaty, the ships of Japan under that section would be entitled to come, not merely to one port in British Columbia, but to engage in the coasting trade. That is prevented by article XXI which provides that the coasting trade of the high contracting parties is excepted from the provisions of the present treaty, and shall be regulated according to the laws of the United Kingdom and Japan respectively. In other words, by this treaty, Canada is surrendering all right to control her own coasting trade so far as the ships of Japan are concerned. Does the Minister of Finance think it is in the interests of Canada that we should give up that right and vest it in the Parliament of the United Kingdom? Surely the Government of Canada could never have intended such a thing; surely they must have overlooked that by one clause of the treaty the people of Japan and the ships of Japan are given an absolute right to come to not only one port but all the ports of British Columbia and to have there absolutely the same rights which the citizens of Canada and the ships of Canada are entitled to exercise, and, that so far as any limitation upon this right is concerned, it shall depend upon the coasting laws which may be enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Mr. TURRIFF: Can they come on our inland waters?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Really, except as regulated by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. We propose to surrender by this treaty absolutely the right to deal with our coasting laws so far as the Empire of Japan is concerned. Now, is there any answer to that? Can there be any answer to that made by the Government of Canada? I have no doubt, my right hon. friend, with his great ingenuity will be able to give an answer to that satisfactory to himself, but I doubt if he can give one satisfactory to the people of the country.

Mr. BORDEN: In the first place, it is the same as in the treaty of 1894.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Suppose it is.

Mr. BORDEN: I have never heard it contended that we, under that treaty, had given up our coasting trade.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Prime Minister must realize that many things have happened since 1894. The Government of Japan has engaged in the steamship business, and the vessels of Japan are coming in great numbers during the last few years, into the ports of British Columbia, and there is considerable dissatisfaction among the people of British Columbia by reason of their grasping a great part of the steamship trade there. The situation is becoming an acute one; and if this treaty goes into effect it will be more acute. The fact that this provision was in the treaty of 1894, a treaty framed, not by Canada but by the United Kingdom, is no answer to the complaint that we surrender the right to control the coasting trade so far as the ships of Japan are concerned, and propose to vest in it the Parliament of the United Kingdom instead of in this Parliament.

Now, as we are not to gain very much in a commercial way, what is the advantage of our passing this treaty? We have, so far as immigration is concerned, a very satisfactory and friendly arrangement with the Government of Japan. At present the legislatures of the different provinces are free to pass such laws as, within their legislative authority, they may see proper to pass. But the moment we pass this treaty, we tie the hands of the legislatures of British Columbia and of the other provinces of Canada, because no law can be passed, even though otherwise within the legislative jurisdiction of the province, which in any way conflicts with this treaty. It seems to me that, unless there is something very important obtained by the passing of the treaty, we should do nothing to tie the hands of the legislature of British Columbia and the legislatures of the other provinces, when in view of the circumstances to which I need not refer but which are known to all, it is desirable to leave these legislatures free to legislate as from time to time they may think in the best interests of the people they represent. We know the difficulty that occurred in the United States not many years ago. The legislature of California sought to enact certain laws in regard to education which were contended to be against the treaty between the United States and Japan. There was a great deal of excitement; the federal Government was bound to interfere, and of course had a right to interfere under the treaty between the two countries. But there was intense dissatisfaction, and I think most people will agree that unless there was some great advantage in the treaty between the United States and Japan—there may have been—it would have been much better, much more conducive to harmony between the two races in the state of California, at all events it would have been better for the people of the state of California, that they should be free to make and enforce such legislation as they thought in the best interest of their people. The Prime Minister is seeking to convey the impression that he has accomplished a great object, and something which would be of enormous benefit to the people of Canada, because he has provided in the Bill that the treaty shall be subject to the Immigration Act of 1910. Let me call attention somewhat carefully to what has taken place in regard to that. The first correspondence we have is from the Prime Minister, addressed to the Consul General of Japan at Ottawa. this letter was written on the 7th of February, 1913, and contained the following words:

The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the enclosed draft Act of Parliament of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

These are strong words to use towards the representative of the Japanese Government, and strong words for the leader of a party which has used such unjustifiable language in the past in regard to the Japanese immigration to our country. In these words you have the assurance, given by the leader of the Government preparatory to the enactment of a law to bring this treaty into force, that the Immigration Act treats the citizens of Japan in every respect as the citizens of any other country in the world including the British Empire. Now, I take it that the very clever gentleman who represents the Imperial Government of Japan was aware of the terms of the Immigration Act of 1910, and I presume that he never allowed it to escape his mind that that Act made provision that the Governor General in Council might make regulations applying in a different way to different races. I presume he was aware that they might impose a head tax of a large amount against the people of one country and no head tax against the people of another country. I presume he was aware that that Act confers the authority upon the Governor in Council to exclude from Canada any people whom the Governor in Council may believe to be, by reason of climatic conditions, not suited to make successful Canadian settlers. He would be aware, therefore, that while the Act itself does not discriminate against the people of any country, power is given by the Immigration Act of 1910 to the Governor in Council to discriminate in the most strenuous manner against the people of different countries in the world. And what does he do? He does not accept the language of the Prime Minister, but sends the following reply

Ottawa, March 1, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 7th ultimo, stating that your Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada an Act by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and Great Britain, signed at London on the 3rd of April, 1911, and inclosing for the consideration of the Imperial Government a draft Bill setting forth the conditions and proviso upon which the adherence of Canada will depend.

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government have no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to be sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) T. Nakamura,
Consul General of Japan.

The Right Hon. R. L. Borden.
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

There you have the declaration of the Imperial Government of Japan that, in bringing this treaty into operation, so far as Canada is concerned, they understand that there will be no discrimination against Japanese subjects, and that they will be treated in exactly the same way as the people of all other countries in the world are treated, including the citizens of the British Empire. That is the clear understanding of the Imperial Japanese authorities as to the intention of this Government. And what is the reply which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister makes to that? He agrees absolutely with the statement which the Imperial Japanese Government makes as to the policy of Canada in the future. This reply is as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., 5th March, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 1st instant, in relation to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan, signed at London on the 3rd April, 1911, in which you communicated to me the reply of the Imperial Japanese Government stating that they have no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to inform you that the Government of Canada has received this reply with the greatest satisfaction, and that the proposed Bill will be introduced as soon as the pending business now engaging the attention of Parliament will permit.

I have the honour to be sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. L. Borden.

Hon. T. Nakamura,
Consul General for Japan,
385 Laurier Avenue E.,
Ottawa, Ont.

In other words, this is, to my mind, an assurance as broad as language can make it that, notwithstanding the terms of the Immigration Act of 1910, in the treatment accorded to subjects of all countries, including those of the British Empire, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects. In view of these communications, and in view of the clear understanding of the Imperial Japanese Government as to the intention of this Government in the future so far as immigration is concerned, if any Order in Council were passed which would in any respect place a citizen of Japan in a different position from that of a citizen of any other country in the world, including the British Empire, the Imperial Japanese Government would have reason to complain that the Canadian Government had committed a breach of faith, inasmuch as they had made this treaty with the understanding that there should be no discrimination of any kind by Order in Council or otherwise, against the citizens of Japan. My right hon. friend should know that in the restricting of immigration he must rely upon that most satisfactory arrangement made between my hon. friend the member for Rouville and the Government of Japan some years ago, and which, as has been asknowledged by the Prime Minister, has been faithfully lived up to by the Government of Japan. The people of Japan are a highly advanced and intelligent people. Japan has advanced in all lines in recent years, and holds a position among the first nations of the world. She wants to stand, so far as her relations with the rest of the world are concerned, upon as high a plane as the people of the most advanced and most powerful nations of the world. We can well understand the objections Japan would raise if her citizens were, by legislation, prohibited from entering any country in the world; and we can well understand how she would desire to control her own emigration. Japan evidently feels bound to carry out in the most sacred way any obligations or arrangements she enters into, and she has, as has already been acknowledged on both sides of the House, strictly adhered to the arrangement made between the Imperial Japanese authorities and this Government.

I have already referred to the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture when he was a member of the Opposition in this House. I would like to have heard from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard), who has expressed in this House the strongest disapproval of the conduct of the late Government in not providing for the exclusion of Asiatics. It is well known that in the election of 1908 this question was a burning topic in British Columbia, and so strongly did the people feel upon the subject that the leaders of the Conservative party there seemed to have thought that it would be of enormous advantage to them to circulate a telegram setting forth the position the Conservative party took upon this very important, and, what seemed to many of the people of British Columbia, this very vital question. It may be in the recollection of some hon. gentlemen of the House that a telegram was sent out at that time in the following words:

The Conservative party stands for a white Canada, the protection of white labour and the absolute exclusion of Asiatics.

It turned out afterwards that the telegram, which purported to be from the leader of the Opposition, was a forgery, but it goes to show the state of public feeling upon this question, when members of the Conservative party should have felt justified in resorting to such extraordinary methods in order to influence public opinion in that province. I find that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), has also had something to say upon this question. In a very nicely printed and neatly bound pamphlet which was circulated broadcast over this country my hon. friend says.

Mr. STEVENS: Not very broad, only two hundred.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I hope they went where they would do most good.

Mr. STEVENS: Stick to the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY (reading):

If we allow the argument of the 'treaty' to influence us, we will find, in the course of a few years, that there will be a solid Japanese vote capable of deciding any election in the Pacific coast province, with the result that our western policy will be directed by Japan, because these Japanese voters will still be loving subjects of the Mikado.

We are just ten years too late in facing this question. Then it was simple; but, thanks to the absolute breach of faith on the part of the Federal authorities with the West, and the insane action of Sir Wilfrid's Cabinet in accepting the Japanese treaty in full, when he was urged by Joseph Chamberlain to reserve all rights re immigration, we are to-day faced with a question that is complicated because of the 'interests' involved. It must be faced, and now is the opportunity for the people of the West to present this whole question at Ottawa so that it will receive the consideration which the seriousness of the situation demands.

This is no time to discuss academic questions of foreign diplomacy with Downing street, but it is a question, as far as London is concerned, of 'Canada or Japan, take your choice.' Or, as far as Ottawa is concerned, 'British Columbia or Japan.' We are too deeply interested in the integrity of the Empire to worry over an Oriental subterfuge which may, or may not, exist in the Anglo-Japanese treaty—we claim it does not.

I hope that in view of the fact that my hon. friend is now sitting to your right and supporting the Government which has introduced this Bill he will repent the violent language which he used on the occasion to which I have referred and that he will see and endeavour to induce his constituents to see that after all the late Government took the only reasonable and proper course. They entered upon a stage of diplomacy, they endeavoured to make an arrangement with the Imperial government, and succeeded in making an arrangement which, during all the years that have passed since it was entered upon, has worked to the satisfaction of the people of Canada and of the Empire of Japan. I trust that my hon. friend will see that he was mistaken in his opinion as to the course of the late Government upon this most important question, and that when he comes to speak, as I trust he will, upon this subject, which excites so much attention in his own province, he will say that that was a proper arrangement and that the late Government, and especially the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), then the Minister of Labour, are deserving of infinite credit for having brought about that satisfactory arrangement with the Empire of Japan and that he will congratulate the present Government upon having taken steps to receive the assurance of the Japanese Government that when this Bill becomes law the arrangement entered into by the late Government, which has proved mutually beneficial and satisfactory, is to be continued and that he will express the hope that it will result in still further improving the friendly relations which now exist between these two nations.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver): We have listened for some hours to some rather disjointed opinions, with the exception of the remarks of the hon. member for Rouville with regard to his individual trip to Japan. Apart from that we have had disjointed remarks and unsupported statements on this very important question. I had expected that hon. gentlemen opposite, when they had given to this very important measure some consideration, would come to the House prepared to discuss this trade agreement on the basis which I think its significance merits. The hon. member who has just taken his seat has referred to an article written by myself a year ago. During his remarks he inferred that it was written some years ago and that I had changed my mind. He managed to quote a single clause from one part of the pamphlet but I shall introduce my remarks by quoting another clause as follows:

This article will be devoted largely to Japanese immigration, reserving for future articles the other two. There is a tendency among same Anglo-Saxons to treat the Japanese as an inferior race and to patronize them; viewing their presence in the country as a picturesque element, simply another dash of variety to our already cosmopolitan population. Others, again, with imagined Christian piety, serious but blind, look upon it as a religious duty to give every assistance possible to these 'sojourners from a foreign and heathen land.' Still others welcome them as industrious and docile workers, who do not strike, who work cheaply and thus add to the employer's profits in various lines of industry.

In the first place, we wish to say, that the Japanese are of a race not to be despised.

They are quick, intelligent, and skilful imitators. They are brave, and strong in physical constitution. They are ambitious, and have views of a future when their race shall dominate the world's affairs. They have a country which, geographically speaking, has an important strategic position. They have about fifty millions of one distinct race, and must have more room. They are keen, determined, and have a foreign policy which spells destiny.

I simply quote that in order that the inference and insinuation of the hon. member that I reflected on the Japanese race as a race shall be dissipated. I wish to say most emphatically that as a result of two visits to Japan and of coming in contact with these people on our coast for twenty years, I have the highest estimation of the Japanese as a modern and up to date nation. However, I do not fail to recognize that there are industrial questions which obtrude themselves upon the people of Canada in connection with the immigration of Japanese. There are social and ethical questions, all of which it is the duty of the people of Canada and particularly of the Government to study with a view to protecting the interests of the people of the country as a whole.

I shall touch upon the immigration side of the question a little further on. Some reference has been made to the commercial side of trade with the Orient and particularly with Japan. We have recognized that there are advantages in that trade if it can possibly be developed. The chief difficulty in the development of trade with Japan has largely lain in the fact that Canadian manufacturers, business men and exporters have not attempted to exploit the markets of Japan as they should have done and might have done. This treaty contains certain clauses and provisions which will go to encourage the establishment of Canadian agencies in Japan and of Japanese agencies in Canada, thus immediately supplying this pressing need in connection with the commerce of the two countries. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat referred to article VI, and charged that if the Bill passed it would surrender—I think that was the word he used—the rights of Canada in regard to the control of its own ports. Permit me to refer to article VI. It says:

The subject of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty freely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports and rivers.

Because of this clause he claims that we would turn over to Japan the control of our ports, subject only to laws which might be passed by the United Kingdom, but he failed to note the following clause:

Conforming themselves to the laws of the country to which they thus come.

Mr. STEVENS.

That, Mr. Speaker, absolutely protects the rights and privileges of the Dominion of Canada, so far as its treaty with Japan is concerned. I think that the basis upon which British shipping, which has been acknowledged for many years to be the most important of any nation in the world, has been built is the principle of freedom of navigation, and I think it behooves Canada rather to take a leaf out of the book of the history of this great industry in the Motherland, rather than to attempt by any means to restrict the commerce of other nations with ports on our coasts. I have absolutely no fear as regards the coasts and ports of British Columbia in conection with the Japanese treaty. Permit me to point out that it will be more distinctly an advantage to Canada's shipping in Japan than it will be to Japanese shipping in Canada. Japan can only trade with the ports of British Columbia, whereas Japan is an island similar to Great Britain, and consequently physically and geographically lends itself to the advantageous development of Canadian shipping rather than to the development of Japanese shipping in Canada. I say that the reasonable interpretation, nay, Sir, the correct interpretation of this clause, demonstrates that it will be a distinct advantage to Canada. We are not seeking to have the whole plum; we recognize that in this treaty there must be give and take. It is the fundamental principle of a treaty that there must be a certain amount of give and take between the contracting nations. Consequently, I differ from the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in this regard. I believe that Canada must be prepared to make certain concessions in order to receive advantages which shall be equal and in some cases very likely greater.

Reference has been made to exclusion of Article VIII of the treaty from the Canadian treaty. The hon. member for St. John, the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), made the statement that the omission of this clause from our treaty militated very seriously against the Dominion of Canada. Article VII, as the Minister of Finance has well pointed out, provides that:

Articles, the produce or manufacture of the territories of one high contracting party upon importation into the territories of the other, from whatever place arriving, shall enjoy the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to similar articles of any other foreign nation.

But, Sir, if you will examine this schedule you will find that a large proportion of the articles, which, according to the schedule enter free into the United Kingdom, now enter Canada free of duty. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said in criticism of the action of the Government in omitting article VIII: Why should not Canada have the advantage of the free importation at a low rate of duty of these articles from Japan? I shall give the present rates of duty on these articles entering Canada:

Habutae and handkerchiefs of pure silk, free.
Copper, unwrought, in ingots and slabs, free.
Plaiting of straw and other materials, free.
Camphor and camphor oil (I presume), free.
Baskets, including trunks and basket ware of bamboo, 27 per cent.
Mats and matting of rush, 22 per cent.
Rape-seed oil, free
Lacquered wares. 20 cents.

Hon. gentlemen will recognize that Canada gets a distinct advantage on all these things; we admit several classes of them free so that this article affects Canada very little, and in any case article VII neutralizes any damage that might possibly be done by article VIII.

I wish to refer very briefly to the class of trade that it is possible to develop with Japan. The right hon. the leader of the Opposition asked why should not we have the right to export tin to Japan. There is not an ounce of tin produced in Canada, we import our own tin. There are very few places in the world where tin is produced. The Straits Settlements, I think, now produce the largest quantity. It is also produced in Tasmania and one or two other places. There are some articles which can be exported from Canada and which at present form the bulk of our exports, such as: Milk and cream, flour, machinery, various kinds of cured fish, lumber, wood pulp and paper. I believe that the Government should take into consideration at the earliest possible day some measure whereby our exports of pulp and paper to Japan and other countries of the world would be encouraged, because Canada enjoys the distinction of having within her bounds the largest area of pulpwood of any country in the world, and this particular industry could be made one of the greatest in Canada, probably ranking with that of any other country.

The hon. member for Rouville made some very strong, and, I think, partisan references, as did the hon. member for St. John, to the attitude of the present Government in connection with the restriction of immigration to Canada. They have urged repeatedly that clause 2, which says that:

Nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act.

—is practically of no value. The hon. member for Rouville says that it is of no value whatever, and the hon. member for St. John made a similar statement. Without desiring to weary the House, I think it would be only right for me to lay before the House some facts in connection with this matter, some very important and significant facts.

Mr. SPEAKER: It seems to me that for some time past there has been a strong inclination to wander from the discussion of the principle of the Bill, and to go into other lines which are hardly cognate to the second reading of this Bill. It would be desirable, as far as possible to keep to the principle of the Bill so that the second reading might be disposed of in a reasonable time.

Mr. STEVENS: Am I to understand that it is out of order to discuss the principle of immigration in connection with this Bill?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am not desirous of curtailing debate, but I have been listening for some time and it seems to me that each speaker goes beyond the reasonable limits of the principle of the Bill in taking it up clause by clause, and discussing the clauses individually, consequently wandering into fields of discussion which are either reviving arguments that occurred in the House years ago or producing others in rebuttal of argument not on this Bill at all, that took place years ago.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish to strictly confine myself to actual arguments that have been made in connection with the Bill at the present time, and I trust that, if I violate in any regard the rules of the House, you will promptly call me to order. I shall most gladly conform to the ruling of the Chair, but I shall endeavour to avoid any such reference. It is important that we should have before us some definite understanding as to the views of the Imperial Government in connection with this particular clause and in connection with the matter of immigration. It is to that point that I wish to draw attention. On July 20, 1898, in discussing the treaty which immediately preceded this, and in discussing it in reference to this particular clause which I am now discussing—clause 2—Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in a despatch to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the Earl of Aberdeen, states that:

Restrictive legislation of the type of which the legislation in question appears to be is extremely repugnant to the sentiments of the people and Government of Japan.

—and asks His Excellency to impress on his ministers the importance, if there is any real prospect of a large influx of Japanese labourers into Canada, of dealing with it by legislation of Dominion Parliament on the lines of the Natal Act.

I draw attention to that to demonstrate to this House that, in so far as the Foreign Office was concerned, they were absolutely in favour of the Dominion Parliament dealing with the question along given lines. I may say in passing that the Japanese people have objected to being discriminated against as a race. That is the sole objection of the Japanese race. I do not blame them for objecting on that basis. While the great question of Asiatic immigration has sometimes agitated the public mind in British Columbia very seriously, the people of British Columbia do not desire to injure in any sense the dignity or pride of any particular race but, recognizing the industrial factors that enter into this question, they have been forced to take certain action. There are a great many points that I should discuss, but I pass them over owing to the lateness of the hour. This statement from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was repeated many times but nothing was done by the then Dominion Government. The Government and people of British Columbia passed a large number of Acts and resolutions which have already been referred to by the hon. member for Rouville. There are 120 resolutions and Acts of the provincial legislature referring to Asiatic immigration of various kinds including Japanese. It was because of the repeated efforts of the people and Government of British Columbia that the Japanese Government, recognizing the rights of the people of the Pacific coast and of Canada, voluntarily, without any suggestion from the Dominion Government, restricted emigration to Canada. It was long before the hon. member for Rouville went to Japan and negotiated his famous arrangement. It was in the year 1902 that it was first done, and according to that hon. gentleman's own statement to-night, the influx in 1907 which caused the great agitation in British Columbia, was not the result of the withdrawal of this restriction by the Japanese Government, but it was the result of a movement of immigration by way of Honolulu and other ports. I want to make it clear that, up to the time the present Government took office, the Government of Canada never turned a hand to restrict the immigration of Asiatics other than in connection with the Chinese which I shall refer to at this point. The hon. member for Rouville said that there was a tax of $500 placed on the Chinese, which practically excluded them. What are the facts? Every year during the last seven years, from 5,000 to 7,000 Chinese have come into this country and paid the head tax of $500. They come here because there was a wealthy Chinese syndicate formed to pay the head tax of these immigrants and which holds them in this country in virtual slavery, a subject that I shall bring to the attention of the Government at a later day. But, on no occasion did the late Government make any attempt to deal with this question. Up to the year 1905 absolutely nothing was done. In 1905 Mr. Lyttleton asked the Dominion Government if they intended to adhere to the treaty. Earl Grey answered as follows:

My Prime Minister earnestly hopes that you will press immediate entry of Canada into Anglo-Japanese treaty.

That was in response to a suggestion by the Imperial Government to this effect:

Referring to your confidential despatch of June 7, should Japanese Government be informed that your government wishes to adhere to treaty, 1894, and supplementary convention of 1895, under same terms and conditions as Queensland in 1897, which Japanese Government then agreed to extend to any other colonies adhering within prescribed period namely, that stipulations contained in first and third articles of treaty shall not in any way affect laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, &c.

Thus, in 1905, the British Government asked this Government if they wished to adhere to the treaty subject to the immigration laws then in force. Earl Grey replied that his Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) earnestly hopes that you will immediately press the entrance of Canada into the treaty. But, there came another wire: 'What have you to say in connection with restricted immigration?' The Canadian Government refused to take any cognizance whatever of the advice of the Imperial Government in regard to immigration. Mr. Lyttleton again suggested that they should do so, with the result that a further telegram went to this effect:

Referring to your telegram of July 14, responsible ministers prepared to adhere to Japanese treaty, 1894 and supplementary convention of 1895 absolutely without reserve. Minute of council and despatch followed by mail.

A minute of Council followed in exactly the same terms reaffirming the statement that the late Government adhered to the treaty without reserve. Yet, hon. gentlemen who were members of that Government, stand in their places to-day and charge the present Government with not properly protecting immigration into this country, charging that the clause which has been placed in this Act, and which makes the immigration laws of Canada absolutely applicable to this Act, or, in other words, makes this Act and its terms subject to those laws, has absolutely no effect. What I contend, Mr. Speaker, is that this clause, introduced into this treaty wisely by the leader of the Government, makes a vague and mute suggestion clear and plain. In other words, we say to the people of Japan that we are willing to adhere to the treaty, that we are willing to enter into amicable treaty relations with you as regards commerce if you will continue to stand by what was agreed to in connection with the immigration law.

I want to refer briefly to what I think are the very unfair references which have been made to the correspondence which took place between the Right Hon. Mr. Borden and the representative of His Japanese Majesty's Government. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) also, said that this clause would not restrict immigration from Japan in any regard and, that it would not have the same effect as the provision in that regard in the treaty with the United States. I shall endeavour to clear up this point, which has been frequently misrepresented by the hon. gentlemen opposite, and to do that I shall refer to the correspondence. In a letter to the Japanese Ambassador, dated February 25, 1911, the Assistant Secretary of State for the United States says:

By the resolution of the Senate, the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the treaty quoted is given with the understanding, which is to be made part of the instrument of ratification, that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Act of Congress entitled 'An Act to regulate the immigration of Aliens into the United States,' approved, February 20, 1907.

I call particular attention to this language in that letter:

Inasmuch as this Act applies to the immigration of aliens into the United States from all countries, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country, it is not perceived that your Government will have any objection to the understanding being recorded in the instrument of ratification.

The Right Hon. Mr. Borden, in a letter to the Hon. Mr. Nakamura, Consul-General for Japan, uses this language which is practically the same as the language used by the Secretary of State for the United States which I have quoted:

The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no distinction in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the enclosed draft Act of Parliament, of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

It is the pride of Canada and of the British Empire that no discrimination is made against persons, or classes, or races, in their legislation; it is our pride that every man receives a square deal under the British flag. At the same time I want to impress on the attention of the House a fact that is frequently lost sight of, and that is that immigration into Canada, or Australia, or any part of the British Empire, is a privilege which we extend to the people of the world, and it must be remembered that there is no obligation or duty on our part to extend this privilege if we do not see fit to do so. Replying, on March 1, 1913, to the letter of the Right Hon. Mr. Borden, Mr. Nakamura, Consul-General for Japan says:

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government have no objection to the proposed Bill, and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

It will be seen, therefore, that once the Imperial Government of Japan was assured that the Immigration Act was designed to apply to all countries alike, they were perfectly satisfied. They had the impression, erroneously, I believe, that it was the desire to pass legislation in connection with the immigration laws discriminating against this race or that, but when they found that the power as given to the Governor General in Council, in sections 37 and 38 of the Immigration Act was not a discrimination against the Japanese race, the Japanese Government expressed their entire satisfaction.

Mr. TURRIFF: Would the hon. member and the people of British Columbia be perfectly satisfied with that arrangement under the treaty, without the understanding which was made with the Japanese Government by Mr. Lemieux?

Mr. STEVENS: The statements contained in this correspondence, read impartially in the light of the situation as it then existed, would be sufficient for any reasonable man, but in addition to that we have the assurance of the leader of the Government this afternoon that the representatives of the Imperial Government of Japan have assured him that the arrangements which have been made—the gentleman's agreement if you wish to call it so—will be continued. I wish to state that on the whole, the immigration relations existing between Canada and Japan today are satisfactory to the people of British Columbia. The only thing that has been wrong in connection with the Japanese arrangement is, that the public have had no official assurance in regard to it. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr.

Lemieux) knows perfectly well that his arrangement is a private state document, and the people of Canada and the people of British Columbia know nothing about what is in that state document.

Mr. LEMIEUX: This state document is in the hands of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Great Britain, of the British ambassador at Tokio, is known to the Japanese authorities, and, what is more important still, to the Government of Canada. Of course, it is a secret document, but there are many secret documents in the world.

Mr. STEVENS: That is all quite true, but the people of the country know nothing about it. I venture to say that there are not 200 men in the entire Dominion of Canada who have the faintest idea of the contents of that document, and they have to rely on the assurances which have been given from time to time that that document will protect them.

Mr. MACDONALD: Do not the people of British Columbia know that immigration from Japan was stopped as a result of this arrangement?

Mr. STEVENS: The effect of that arrangement has been to restrict immigration from Japan, and we have observed in the last few years that immigration from Japan has been kept within reasonable bounds. Last year only 322 males came from Japan, 300 females, and a certain number of children, which is evidence of the fact that the spirit of the agreement has been kept.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me remind the hon. member for Rouville and the right hon. the leader of the Opposition that this arrangement was voluntarily put into force by the Japanese Government in 1902, and the fact that the hon. member for Rouville went to Japan in 1907 had very little to do with it. There was a change of conditions in 1907 on account of the influx of Japanese from Honolulu, but the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux) himself has said that the Japanese Government was not aware of it until it actually took place and were not responsible for it. The restriction of immigration was instituted voluntarily by the Japanese Government, as a result of the agitation in British Columbia, and the repeated demands of the Imperial Government and the Government of British Columbia has resulted, up to the present, in keeping immigration from Japan within reasonable bounds. The Prime Minister stated this afternoon that so far as this agreement, or voluntary restriction of immigration from Japan, is concerned, it would be continued by the Japanese Government and that will satisfy the people of British Columbia that the present Government of Canada is alive to its duties and ready to protect the interests of the country. I believe that this is a dignified agreement, and a dignified method to deal with this question. The people of Japan have said that this provision of our Bill does not offend them, that it does not affect their national dignity or their national pride; and at the same time, the immigration is duly and properly restricted. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite have lost sight of the fact that this clause must be read in connection with the agreement that we have before us, and which has been so well and so ably enunciated by the leader of the Government. I may contrast this attitude and this legislation with the attitude and legislation of my right hon. friend opposite. In 1896, he wired to British Columbia that 'The views of the Liberals of the West will prevail with me.' He did not say 'the views of the country, or of the province, or of the provincial legislature.' That was rather a one-sided compliment to pay to the people of British Columbia. Did these views prevail? Unfortunately, they did not. The right hon. gentleman appointed a commission, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Rouville, which reported distinctly in favour of Dominion legislation on this matter and on this line. What was done? Absolutely nothing. I challenge any of the members opposite to show one single act which was done by their party during their term of office to restrict immigration, other than the Chinese head tax, which is totally ineffective. So, there is a great contrast between the position taken by hon. members of the Opposition when in power and that taken by the present Government since they came into office.

A question was raised which I would not refer to had not the hon. member from St. John rather rubbed it in. He pointed out that there was no protection under this clause, and said that at any time we might have a great influx of Japanese. In the first place, with the experience we have had, I think we can treat with entire confidence the assurance of the Japanese Government, and so far as I am concerned I cast no discredit upon them. But should such a contingency arise with the Japanese Government, if they were unable to control it, or neglected or violated in any way their undertaking, it is within the hands of this Parliament to deal with that under section two, sub-section (a) of the Act. In other words, while that clause is not needed at the present time, for the protection of immigration, it is there to protect the West and maintain the dignity and privileges of this country and of this Parliament, should occasion arise. There are many other phases of this question which I should like to deal with, but the hour is so late that I shall refrain from going into any other matters. I conclude by congratulating the Government upon making this very satisfactory arrangement, an arrangement that we in the West have looked forward to for many years. I would suggest to this Government the advisability of opening with China negotiations along the same line. I have had the pleasure of travelling in the Orient, both in Japan and in China, to some considerable extent, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker and this House, that the time is coming at no very distant day when it will be an exceedingly advisable thing for a country to have commercial relations with these eastern countries. I hope the right hon. the Prime Minister will take that into his consideration, and in the proper time and in the proper way will bring in some such measure as that now before us.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 2—treaty approved.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): I would ask the Prime Minister, if this is one of the matters, according to his opinion, which would come within the scope of the Imperial Parliament under the Imperial federation, which he spoke of in this House some few weeks ago? This is a treaty in regard to foreign policy. I heard the right hon. the leader of the Government say a few weeks ago that instead of there being five foreign policies in the Empire, there should be one; and instead of there being five navies, there should be one. It appears to me that this is a question which comes particularly within the realm of that discussion. We in Canada for very many years strove to secure a condition of autonomy whereby we could make our own foreign treaties. This is such a treaty, and I venture to say that there is no man to-day in Canada who would say that the Parliament of Canada should not deal with these matters rather than have them dealt with by the Imperial Parliament as would be the case under an Imperial federation scheme such as was propounded by my right hon. friend. I would particularly like to know what his views are in regard to such matters. I for one—and I think the members on this side generally agree with me—am firmly of opinion that Canada should manage affairs of this kind herself, and that we should not be tied up in an Imperial federation which should endeavour to manage the foreign affairs of Canada through an Imperial Parliament in England or any other part of the Empire, made up of representatives of different parts of the Empire. I feel rather strongly on this question, because it is one of the questions that the Liberals in Canada have been agitating for many years. The control of our own affairs in Canada has been one question which Liberals have struggled for ever since my earliest recollection—that the Parliament of Canada should control the affairs of Canada, that though we are a part of the Empire and loyal to the British flag and to British institutions, we desire to manage our own affairs.

It would, I think, be impracticable at the present moment to relegate such a matter as this to a parliament composed of representatives of the different parts of the Empire, because Canada's particular necessities and requirements might differ very materially from the necessities and requirements of the other portions of the Empire. Since the last visit of my right hon. friend to England, when, in my opinion, he fell into the arms of the aristocratic jingoes in that country, including Mr. Winston Churchill, he has gone back on the Liberal teachings of his youth in endeavouring to bring about a condition of affairs which will not be satisfactory to the people of Canada. In dealing with such an important matter as this I cannot do better than direct the attention of the right hon. gentleman to a speech he made in this House a few weeks ago, when he said that it is for us to consider whether we shall have one foreign policy or five foreign policies; one navy or five navies. When a question of this kind is before the Committee of the Whole House I think we should understand from the hon. gentleman what his views are on the matter, because this is not the last that is to be heard of it. I have no doubt that the Navy Bill will again come up for discussion in this House, unless the right hon. gentleman decides to abandon it, and the question about which I am in doubt is with regard to the right hon. gentleman's views on the matter. I believe that we in Canada are capable of managing our own affairs, still remaining true and loyal to the British Empire, at the same time building up our own country, and retaining the right to arrange our own treaties with foreign governments. It is to the credit of Canada and Canada's statesmanship that the British Government has decided to allow us to do that, knowing full well that as an integral part of the Empire, we are prepared to do our duty and still engage in the active management of our own local affairs.

Mr. BORDEN: I am afraid that is too comprehensive a subject to discuss upon the consideration of the title of this Bill. My hon. friend has said, however, that there will be a further opportunity of discussing it during the present session.

On section 2:

The treaty signed at London on the third day of April, one thousand nine hundred and eleven, between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, set forth in the schedule to this Act, is hereby sanctioned and declared to have the force of law in Canada; provided that

(a) Nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act;

(b) Article VIII of the said treaty shall be deemed not to apply to Canada.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like, if I am in order, to deal with the reference in this section to the Immigration Act, as it is today, becoming a part of this treaty. If my understanding is correct, that, from my point of view, would not be satisfactory. I had something to do with the framing of the provisions of the Immigration Act, and, as my right hon. friend has given the House to understand, they seem to be comprehensive and to suit the purpose for which they were intended. I claim the compliment, and appreciate it very much, but my experience in dealing with matters of immigration has led me to come to the conclusion that there is no possibility of providing any form of words to-day that will infallibly meet the conditions that may arise to-morrow. If we regard the Immigration Act of to-day as being practically incorporated in this Bill, I say, looking at the matter from the standpoint of a Canadian, that the provision of the Bill which so stipulates is not satisfactory. My suggestion is that subsection (a) of this clause be amended to read as follows:

Nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act of Canada now or hereafter in force.

That is to say that whatever the immigration law of the Dominion of Canada provides at any future time shall be a part of this treaty. The first duty that the Government of Canada owes to the people of this country is to protect the standard of Canada's citizenship. We have heard objections in the past to the restriction and regulation of immigration on the ground that it was discriminating against this or that or the other race or nationality, and that the people of such and such a race or nationality were just as good as we were. That is not to the point. I do not contend that this or that or the other race or nationality is not just as good, or even better, than we are. That is not the question. Parliament and Government of Canada have upon them the responsibility of maintaining the standard of citizenship according to the conditions and ideals of the present population of this Dominion. And all other considerations—let them be of religion, good-will, or imperial relationship—should take second place to this, which should be the dominant and guiding principle.

governing this Parliament and this Government dealing with immigration matters. I take the liberty of saying that in so far as my humble connection with immigration affairs in this country has been concerned, that was the standard that was aimed at, and it was very largely lived up to under my administration. I have the privilege of supporting the same principle in opposition that I had of demonstrating as a member of a government and I would place as strongly as I may before the Government and before Parliament that this is the paramount duty of the Government and Parliament. We are giving our adhesion to-day to a treaty which is to be in effect for ten years and if there is any lack in the provisions of this treaty that we are assenting to to-day then it is to remain for that period, a period long enough to establish such changes in the population and therefore in the ultimate ideals and destiny of this country that it places a serious responsibility on our heads. It is true it has been said that on one hand the interests of Canada are protected by an understanding, an agreement between Canada and the Empire of Japan, an agreement that certainly has been effective in the past and that has been lived up to loyally by the Empire of Japan in regard to which agreement I would be the last to make any complaint. In my judgment we could not have made any reasonable provisions in our Immigration Act without absolute provision for discrimination that would have had anything like as good an effect as the arrangement that was made. Again the Immigration Act as it stands to-day provides for discrimination, which is an essential principal of the Act; there may be discrimination exercised by the Government of the day and if I understand the provision this Government has entered into an understanding with the Government of Japan that there shall not be discrimination against the people of Japan in regard to immigration to Canada. The provision is simply that the Government of Japan has made an understanding with the Government of Canada that immigration from Japan to Canada shall be restricted, so that the Government of Canada has established an understanding with the empire of Japan that under the terms of our Immigration Act there shall be no discrimination against Japanese immigrants coming into Canada. I can scarcely help recalling under those circumstances the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture or the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) who on this occasion and others asserted and reiterated and vociferated the demand that Canada should be supreme in her own House in regard to immigration matters and that her position should be laid down clearly on the statute book. That is the position that I desire to place before the House to-day, that when we are incorporating our Immigration Act into this treaty, which is to last for ten years, an understanding is not good enough. It is not a sufficient protection to the interest of the people of Canada. Leave the Immigration Act out of the treaty with Japan and depend on your understanding if you please; but do not put the written word of the Immigration Act into the treaty and then depend on your understanding and say that your immigration is not going to be limited. I urge very strongly that if this section is to be maintained in its present form, that is to say if the Immigration Act of Canada is to be incorporated, there should be added to this subsection the words 'of Canada now or hereafter in force,' or such other words as may be apt to the purpose.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend is mistaken, in the first place, in his idea that the treaty will last for ten years necessarily. It can be denounced by either party on one year's notice.

Mr. OLIVER: Am I right in the statement that it is drawn to be in force ten years?

Mr. BORDEN: So far as Great Britain and Japan are concerned, but there is a separate division in respect to the dominions that accede to it by which they have the right to abrogate it separately at any time on giving twelve months notice to that effect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Then our connection with the treaty will last so long as the treaty lasts unless it is abrogated by ourselves on one year's notice.

Mr. BORDEN: Which may be given at any time and that is the reason I said to my hon. friend that it does not necessarily last for ten years, it can be terminated on one year's notice. So far as the other observations of my right hon. friend are concerned, I adhere to what I said a moment ago as to the very comprehensive character of the provisions in the Immigration Act. I think they are sufficient to guard us properly in that respect, and I do not think there is necessity for any such amendment as he proposes. No such provision is to be found in the negotiations between the United States and Japan. The provision which they regarded as satisfactory is in effect, and almost in the very words, the same as that which we have adopted here. Ours, it is true, forms part of a statute; theirs merely forms part of the treaty by means of public declaration and of the proclamation of the President of the United States, assented to by His Excellency the Japanese Ambassador at Washington. For that reason, it does not seem to me the amendment my right hon. friend suggests is a necessary one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That matter being disposed of, might I ask the hon. the Minister of Finance why article VIII is not included in the treaty? There are some important respects in which it might apply as well to Canada as to Great Britain. We could have no objection, I am sure, to the admission free of duty of the articles mentioned in the treaty as coming from Japan, that is to say:

Habutae of pure silk not dyed or printed; handkerchiefs of Habutae of pure silk, not dyed or printed; copper, unwrought, in ingots and slabs; plating of straw and other materials; camphor and camphor oil; baskets, (including trunks) and basket ware of bamboo; mats and matting of rush; lacquered wares, coated with Japanese lacquer; rape-seed oil, and cloisonne wares.

On the other hand, we would have a tariff provided for paint. Paint is an article which is largely manufactured in Canada now, and its production has increased. I think there are one or two plants west of lake Superior. It seems to me that if we had that article included we could export it to Japan, and the same remark applies to cotton. I would like to know—the matter must have been given consideration—why that feature of the treaty was put aside.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I am afraid my right hon. friend has forgotten what transpired in 1911 when his Government made a temporary arrangement to continue the favoured nation policy with Japan which both countries had enjoyed by reason of the adhesion of Canada to the treaty of 1894. The correspondence shows that the reason why that temporary arrangement was made for two years was precisely that my predecessor my right hon. friend's Finance Minister, objected to article VIII. No doubt my right hon. friend will recall that my predecessor took the view, and quite properly that article VIII while applicable to the conditions of trade existing between Japan and the United Kingdom was not applicable to the conditions of trade existing between Canada and Japan. Holding that view, as he did, he suggested that a temporary arrangement should be entered into and the result was that in the year 1911 a temporary arrangement, which is still in existence, but which expires on July 17th, was entered into and validated by chapter 7 of 1 and 2 George V, and assented to on May 19, 1911.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I remember.

Mr. WHITE: The Act was not to be brought into force until the Governor in Council was satisfied that

No other or higher duties are or will be imposed, and that no prohibitions are or will be maintained or imposed, so long as this Act remains in operation, on the importation into the Dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan of any article the produce or manufacture of Canada, from whatever place arriving, than are imposed, or maintained or imposed, respectively, on the like article produced or manufactured in any foreign country on its importation into the said dominions and possessions.

The position since 1906, has been that there was a convention between Canada and Japan by which Canada gave adhesion to the treaty of 1894, which provided, so far as commercial arrangements are concerned, for most favoured nation treatment. The arrangement then made and validated by the legislation of 1907, by my right hon. friend's Government, was as I have stated, continued in respect of the most favoured nation treatment by the legislation of 1911, and is still in effect. That brings us down to the present treaty. As I said a moment ago, the existing arrangement would expire on July 17, but when this Bill becomes law, it will of course supersede it. Coming to the treaty itself, my right hon. friend expressed a doubt at first which I think has been cleared up in his mind, as to article VIII. The Bill itself, deals with article VIII, so I think no question arises with regard to that. But apart from the Bill, I desire to remind my right hon. friend that not only was there an exchange of notes with regard to that matter by which it was agreed that article VIII did not apply to Canada, but by the express terms of article VIII its interpretation does not apply to any of the dominions but only to the United Kingdom. I think that is perfectly clear, but at all events no question can arise because the Bill specially encludes article VIII. My right hon. friend then desired to be assured as to the position with regard to the articles mentioned in the schedule to the treaty and as to which maximum rates are fixed when the articles are imported from Great Britain. I pointed out to my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that Canada will get the advantages of that provision of the treaty which will be enjoyed by the United Kingdom, and for this reason: Japan has a most favoured nation treaty with France, with Germany, and I believe with the United States. These are foreign nations so far as Canada is concerned, and those nations will have the same rights as Great Britain so far as the Japanese tariff is concerned, because they are favoured nations. Under the terms of article VII of this treaty:

Articles, the produce or manufacture of the territories of one high contracting party, upon importation into the territories of the other, from whatever place arriving, shall enjoy the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to similar articles of any other foreign nation.

In the result, Canada will get the benefit of the tariff treatment extended to that list of articles mentioned in the schedule when imported from Great Britain, but Japan will not be able to export to Canada free of duty the articles mentioned in the schedule which she is entitled to export to the United Kingdom free of duty, because all we are agreeing to give to Japan is most favoured nation treatment. In other words, Japan has in this treaty the benefits of the French treaty which goes the farthest so far as favoured nation treatment is concerned, in relation to Canada. I think I have cleared up those two points, but I should like to deal a little further with the schedule itself. I frankly state that I agree entirely with my predecessor, and I suppose he agreed with his Government, that that article as it stands in the treaty is not suitable to the commercial conditions existing between Canada and Japan. It is suitable to the conditions between Japan and the United Kingdom.

Mr. TURRIFF: Would the hon. gentleman explain why it is not suitable to our conditions?

Mr. WHITE: In the first place, the article mentioned in part II of the schedule which may be imported into Great Britain free include mats, matting, certain manufactures of silk and other things and if they were admitted free into Canada, France and other nations enjoying the most favoured nation treatment from Canada, by virtue of subsisting treaties, would have to be given the very same treatment. These goods, when imported from France, or the other nations that I have referred to, would also be free.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Do you think that we are likely to import mats and matting from France?

Mr. WHITE: Silk is an important item. The result is that the question of revenue would have to be considered in addition to the question of the effect upon certain Canadian industries. Another point that was made by my predecessor was that in so far as part I is concerned, Canada would not be likely to benefit very much if it had the advantage of that schedule, as was admitted by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition. The only question to which he called attention was that of cotton. Our entire exports of cotton manufactures are very small indeed. I have been looking at the figures in the returns of the Department of Trade and Commerce. We export a certain amount of cotton waste and manufactures of cotton, but it is comparatively small amount. As to the other items of yarns, wool and iron, there would be very little advantage to Canada. Canada would have the advantage of it in so far as exports to Japan are concerned, but, if we had to give the one for the other, in so far as I am concerned, I would say that the advantage would be entirely with Japan and not with Canada.

My hon. friend from Rouville asked me if I had any information as to trade. I am disposed to agree with my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) that the trade between Japan and Canada could be substantially increased if our manufacturers and others would push for that trade and adapt their wares to the necessities and requirements of the Japanese people. The principle exports from Canada to Japan are fish, lumber, breadstuffs and, curiously enough, sewing machines. In 1908 $200,000 worth of lead was exported to Japan and none in 1912. It appears that the export trade has decreased in wheat, flour, printing paper, condensed milk and lumber. In 1905 we exported to Japan goods to the value of $500,000; 1908, $700,000 and 1912, $500,000. According to our records, we sent to Japan, wheat, $10,000; wheat flour, $25,000; coal, $58,000; fish, $193,000; sewing machines, $73,000, and planks and boards, $60,000. Our entire exports to Japan are very much smaller than I should like to see them. They are more notable by reason of the large trade which the United States had with Japan. The United States, having a very much larger population, would naturally have a larger trade than Canada. But I find for example, that while Canada according to the Japanese records, exports $20,000 worth of wheat flour, the United States exports $800,000. Canada exported in 1911, $7,000 worth of building materials as against half a million dollars worth from the United States. Of timber and lumber, Canada exported $34,000 worth and the United States $380,000 worth, and of condensed milk Canada exported $3,000 worth and the United States $500,000 worth.

Mr. LEMIEUX: May I ask if the United States have any special tariff upon that article?

Mr. WHITE: I think they have the most favoured nation treatment the same as we have. Of pulp for paper manufacture Canada exported none, the United States $25,000, while from other countries Japan procured $1,350,000 worth. I suppose that would come from a part of their own territory and northern Asia. Of agricultural implements, the United States sent them $125,000 worth, and other countries $140,000 worth. Apparently Canada sold them nothing in that line. I should point out that the Japanese tariff is very high in regard to a number of articles which Canada might reasonably expect to sell them, notably upon wheat, flour, butter, sole leather, automobiles, and certain other articles. In regard to our imports, I find that the balance of trade is against us. As I have said, our exports are of a comparatively small amount while, on the other hand, the imports from Japan of merchandise, dutiable and free, for 1904, were $2,000,000. They declined until 1908, then advanced to $2,200,000, and in 1912 they were $3,000,000 therefore, we buy a great deal more from Japan than we sell to her. But, I think that, if our manufacturers were more active, and would adapt their wares more to the needs of the Japanese people, there would be a chance of increasing the export trade from Canada to Japan. Personally, I should like to see that accomplished.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is the question of rates and of the steamship service.

Mr. WHITE: We import from Japan tea, rice, silks, brimstone, linens, earthenware and cottons, and we also import sugar to the value of $500,000. The following articles showed an increase during 1912 as compared with 1908: beans, brooms, brushes, cottons, fancy goods, fish, nuts, raw silk, brimstone; while the following have decreased: earthenware, manufactures of silk and tea. As far as the commercial part of the treaty is concerned, it is a continuation of the arrangement we have had since 1906. The balance of trade is in favour of Japan, but I have hopes that our trade will increase in lumber, fish and sewing machines, and I see no reason why it should not increase in agricultural implements.

There was one other matter referred to by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and I am sorry he is not here; that was the coasting trade. I think he is clearly wrong in his reading of article XXI. He referred to article XXI and stated that the coasting trade of the high contracting parties was excepted from the provisions of the present treaty and would be regulated according to the laws of the United Kingdom and Japan respectively. My hon. friend evidently had the idea that would give the Japanese coasting rights in Canada, but he entirely overlooked the last paragraph in article XXI:

It is also understood that, in the event of the coasting trade of either country being exclusively reserved to national vessels, the vessels of the other country, if engaged in trade to or from places not within the limits of the coasting trade so reserved, shall not be prohibited from the carriage between two ports of the former country of passengers holding through tickets, or merchandise consigned on through bills of lading to or from places not within the above-mentioned limits, and while engaged in such carriage these vessels and their cargoes shall enjoy the full privileges of this treaty.

It is perfectly clear that the coasting trade is not covered by the treaty, and that the coasting laws of Canada will have to be observed by the Japanese just the same as by the people of any other nation. In view of the general approval of the Act as it stands, I shall not take up further time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I remember the circumstances very well which induced the Government to suspend judgment before they became a party to the Japanese treaty. The treaty has been made from the point of view of the United Kingdom and the articles which are enumerated are of such character as can be produced in Canada, and while their free importation would be of advantage to the United Kingdom it would be of little advantage to Canada. We were in hopes we would be able to negotiate a treaty of our own in which we would give due prominence to articles produced in Canada, which would be suited to the Japanese market, but to the great misfortune of the country we had to leave office, and, our successors have made no effort to have a separate treaty, preferring to eliminate clause 8. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that the articles of British manufacture which are mentioned, and are going to have the benefit of the treaty, were excluded in the case of Canada by article VIII, yet article VII would give us the same treatment with regard to these articles; is that the interpretation?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Yes. It was argued here to-night that Canada was apparently losing something by not admitting these articles from Japan, free of duty, but of course we have control of our own tariff, and we can do that if we like at any time.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Prime Minister stated that certain regulations would be made under the Immigration Act. Will he tell the committee if any regulations have been made under the Immigration Act of 1910 affecting Japanese immigrants or immigrants from any other country, coming into Canada?

Mr. BORDEN: There are none specially naming the citizens of Japan, so far as I am aware.

Mr. McKENZIE: Then, if I understand the correspondence aright, no regulations can be made hereafter by the Government of Canada to change the complexion of the law from what it now is. The law on its face shows what it is, and it does not discriminate against any nation whatever. The correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Japanese authorities shows that the Japanese authorities said that upon the face of the text of that Act it did not discriminate against them any more than against any other people, and therefore they would accept it. But, the Immigration Act contains in itself the power of discrimination against any people whatever, if the occasion should arise. I understand from the correspondence that that power of discrimination by use of regulations is neutralized; that it cannot any longer be invoked against Japan and that no regulations can be made hereafter that would in any way discriminate against Japanese immigrants so long as the treaty lasts. Suppose that next year the Lemieux convention were not observed properly by the Japanese Government, and it becomes necessary in order to protect British Columbia from an undue influx of Japanese to pass a regulation under the law of 1910 to keep these immigrants out, I understand we could not pass any such regulation during the existence of the treaty. If that is what we are doing, I would like to have it understood distinctly.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not understand it so at all. The clause in the correspondence to which my hon. friend refers is this:

> The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no distinction in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the inclosed draft Act of Parliament, of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

The Immigration Act speaks for itself; the correspondence made a certain comment upon its character; the Immigration Act is in existence and contains the provision to which the hon. gentleman alludes. As a matter of fact, when the United States dealt with the same subject, they used language which was very similar. The letter written by the acting Secretary of State of the United States to the Japanese ambassador at Washington, so far as it dealt with this subject, was in the following words:

> By resolution of the Senate, the advice and the consent of the Senate to the ratification of the treaty is given with the understanding that it is to be made part of the instrument of ratification that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Act of Congress entitled 'An Act to regulate the Immigration of Aliens into the United States' approved February 20, 1907. Inasmuch as this Act applies to the Immigration of Aliens into the United States from all countries and makes no discrimination in favour of any country, it is not perceived that your Government will have any objection to the understanding being recorded in the instrument of ratification.

The only difference in the final result is that in the case of the United States the proviso was embodied in the instrument of ratification, while in the case of Canada, inasmuch as a statute is necessary, the condition is embodied in the statute itself, so that there cannot be any misunderstanding on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER: Might I suggest what I pointed out before, that the difference between the immigration law of the United States and that of Canada is that the law of the United States does not provide for discrimination, whereas it is an essential feature of the Canadian immigration law that provision is made for discrimination at the discretion of the Governor in Council; and it is the essential provision of the immigration law of Canada that I understand my right hon. friend has assured the Japanese Government will not be brought into effect if the treaty is signed.

Mr. BORDEN: I have not given any assurance beyond what is contained in the letter itself, which points out that this statute does not create any discrimination in favour of any country but is applicable to all countries, just as the legislation of the United States is also applicable to all countries.

Mr. McKENZIE: If the contention of the hon. member for Edmonton is correct, and I am not familiar with the immigration laws of the United States—it would appear that the United States law does not contain the power to make regulations.

Mr. OLIVER: I beg pardon—does not contain power to make discriminating regulations.

Mr. McKENZIE: In that way, as I understand it, the law of the United States is different from our law. With us the Governor in Council may make regulations which have the effect of law without the further action by Parliament, while, in the United States, these enactments can be made only by Congress. If the contention of the Prime Minister as to sub-section 2 is correct—that we still have power to make any regulations that may be deemed advisable—he would have no objection to adding after the word 'Act' the words 'or any regulations herein or hereafter made thereunder.' That would make it clear that the treaty does not affect regulations made or to be made under this Immigration Act.

Mr. BORDEN: I am under the impression that there are special regulations under the immigration laws of the United States with regard to Japanese and Korean laborers. I think the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is misled in believing that such regulations are not possible under the laws of the United States. Such regulations are already in force there to some extent. I have a copy of some of them submitted to me by one of the officials of the Department of Labour.

On the schedule:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Does not the right hon. gentleman think we might adjourn now?

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend would prefer to have the Bill considered further in committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes, the schedule should be looked over.

Progress reported.

Mr. BORDEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN: I would like to go on with this, if convenient. It is rather desirable that it should go to the Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This will probably not take all day.

Mr. BORDEN: We will take the Navy Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 3, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ICE PIERS IN ANNAPOLIS RIVER.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

Does the Government intend placing in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1913-14 any sums of money for the completion of the ice piers in the Annapolis river, N.S.?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

PATENTED LOCK.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Was a certain lock patented under No. 142,823?
2. What is the name of the patentee?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. Yes.
2. L. E. Grenier, P. V. Faucher and Aimé Dion. It was subsequently assigned to the Ontario Equipment Company, of Ottawa, Ontario.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. WM. SMITH (South Ontario): In a short editorial in the Ottawa Free Press I find:

Then the candidate about whom the official had made this dreadful remark, now the member for South Ontario, gets up in the House and cheerfully admits that he had been disqualified by the courts for corrupt practices.

This statement is absolutely untrue. I never was disqualified; I never had even a protest trial, and the little conversation between the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and myself the other evening had reference to a local protest trial.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I desire to say that if my remarks could be understood to mean that the hon. member was disqualified, I did not intend to make that statement. I feel quite sure that I did not make it. The gentleman who was disqualified, as I was informed and as I think appears from the judgment of the court, was Mr. Thomas, the father of the young man who was appointed to succeed Mr. Lyman Smith. That was the statement I intended to make and, I think, did make.

LAFONTAINE PARK, MONTREAL.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I read in the Gazette of Montreal this morning that it has been decided to erect an armoury on Lafontaine Park in Montreal. That is an old park, the property of the Dominion Government, of which the city of Montreal has had a long lease. Is the statement true, and have arrangements been made as indicated?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not seen the item, so I have no knowledge of the question to which the hon. member refers. It has never come before me.

DESTRUCTION OF PIER AT FREDERICTON.

Mr. CARVELL: I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that a pier of a very important bridge across the St. John river at Fredericton has been washed out by a recent freshet. This renders travel between opposite sides of the river impossible and will cause a great deal of delay during the coming summer. The statement has been made in the newspapers that the cause of this washout is the dredging operations in the river during the last summer. The claim is made that they dredged too close to the pier and undermined it, which resulted in the loss of the structure. It is a fact that four or five dredges were working around the river all last summer, and many people wondered what they were doing; but I am not going to discuss that.

Mr. SPEAKER: I fear that the hon. member is hardly in order in asking the question as he is doing. It is not asked at an appropriate time. The correct method is to put such a question on the Order Paper. Many questions put as this one is being put are introduced by a long history of the case, and this appears to me to be rather in violation of the usual procedure in asking questions. When the Orders of the Day are called, it is not expected that such questions will be asked.

Mr. CARVELL: I think I know the rule, and I am trying to adhere to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I think that the interpretation of the rule and the decision of it must be by the Chair, and I am endeavouring to follow what I conceive to be, according to my best judgment, the rule as the procedure is laid down by the best authorities we have.

Mr. CARVELL: Do I understand you to say that I cannot draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a very serious matter in my own province? That is all I am doing here, only calling attention to it, not finding fault. I am only notifying him of what has taken place, and I hope he will take notice of what I tell him, and investigate the matter and make some effort to remedy it. That is all I have done, and I think I have a right to do it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has no right to reflect upon the Chair.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. member has some rights in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. It is my duty to endeavour to keep the procedure within correct lines, according to my best judgment, and if the member does not agree with my decisions on such points, of course, there is an appeal to the House. I have no objection to that at any time. I am only endeavouring to economize the time of the House and to keep as close to what I believe to be the correct rules of procedure as possible.

Mr. CARVELL: I have no other object than you have, and of course it is your right to call me to order whenever you think I am out of order.

Mr. BORDEN: I think that perhaps sometimes a little misapprehension exists as to what can be done on the Orders of the Day. It is not the first time that this matter has arisen. I remember when I first came into the House sixteen or seventeen years ago, the then Speaker, the late Sir James Edgar, called the attention of the House in the same way to what might be done on the Orders of the Day. As I understand, by the practice of the House, not particularly by reference to any absolute rule, but by what may be termed a convention of the House, hon. members have the right to ask questions in respect of certain matters more or less important on the Orders of the Day. But, as I understand the practice that has prevailed in the past, they have not the right to discuss such matters. It is true that as a matter of convenience a question is sometimes preceded by a brief reference to the facts upon which it is founded.

Mr. CARVELL: I cannot get it in any other way.

Mr. BORDEN: That is the practice, as I understand.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There is no doubt, that the Government can refuse to answer any question unless it is on the Order Paper. That is their privilege. But sometimes when the matter is urgent we ask a question across the floor of the House. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in trying to economize the time of the House you have the entire support of the members of the Opposition.

Mr. ROGERS: I would not wish to be misunderstood as refusing to answer the question put by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). I may say that I have had no notice of the matter to which he refers, but I will have it looked up in the department, and I will be glad to let him know what the facts are.

Mr. CARVELL: That is all I want the minister to do.

THE MAYFLOWER DISASTER.

Mr. GRAHAM: May I ask the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) if he has forgotten the request that I made to him some weeks ago for the consideration of those who were bereft by the disaster to the Mayflower on the Madawaska? If I remember correctly, the hon. gentleman was going to give it his consideration.

Mr. WHITE: The question could be very properly addressed to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). My hon. friend (Mr. Graham) pointed out that I had the money, but the consideration of a question of that kind belongs, in the first instance, to the minister with whose department it is immediately concerned. I would ask my hon. friend to renew his question or to allow me to bring it to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has the report that was made upon the disaster, and who is necessarily in a much better position to deal with the question than I possibly can be.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would ask my hon. friend to just pass it on to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

RURAL MAIL BOXES IN SOUTH RENFREW.

Mr. GRAHAM: Has the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) looked into the matter to which I called his attention the other evening with reference to getting rid of some of his surplus rural mail boxes by using them in the vicinity of Mount St. Patrick, in South Renfrew, where they have been asking for a rural mail service for some time?

Mr. PELLETIER: I have had the papers sent over to me; they were in my desk this morning; but I had no time to look over them. The first opportunity I have I will devote to the request of my hon. friend.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I took the opportunity, some five or six weeks ago, to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General to the tenders which had been invited for carrying the mails between Tooleton and Heckfield Point in Kings county, N.B. I asked what tenders had been received but my hon. friend did not answer the question in full. He said that the matter had not been decided, but he gave me to understand that it would be taken up immediately and that as soon as the decision was come to he would give me the information I desired. I would ask my hon. friend if he is ready to give that information?

Mr. PELLETIER: I could not say offhand, but I remember something like that was said and I will see in the morning how the matter stands.

Mr. KNOWLES: I beg to repeat a question that I asked the hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Crothers) two days ago with regard to when we may expect to have the report of the commission which looked into the ranching industry or any other information that he might give us with regard to a change in the regulations.

Mr. CROTHERS: If I am right, Mr. Speaker, I think that you ruled a few moments ago that this is such a question as should be put in writing and that being the case, I do not wish to break the rule.

Mr. KNOWLES: I would explain to you, Mr. Speaker, that I asked this question two days ago, and the minister said that, being only the acting minister of the department, he was not familiar with the matter. I understood him to say he would inquire into it and give me the information in a day or two.

Mr. SPEAKER I have only to say, in reference to this question, that it is not reasonable to suppose that a minister can answer correctly offhand and without any previous notice any question which may be asked. The proper place to put such an inquiry is on the Order Paper. It is for that purpose that the privilege is granted to put questions on the Order Paper. There are urgent questions, having reference to a calamity or a catastrophe, which may be brought to the attention of a minister on the spur of the moment without giving notice, and, when papers have been moved for and they have not been brought down, it is open to a member to refer to them when the Orders of the Day are called. But all questions that are addressed to a minister with regard to the business of the House, or dealing with public matters, should, if it is possible, be placed on the Order Paper so as to give the minister an opportunity to give a proper and intelligent reply.

Mr. KNOWLES: That question is not in the class which you, Mr. Speaker, seem to have in mind. It is a question as to when a report with regard to an important matter will be brought down. The reason the minister gave why he could not answer the question was that he was only the acting minister. The question is in that class that the minister might be expected to have knowledge of at any time if he were really the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am obliged to disagree with the hon. gentleman, because, if it were not something within the minister's own knowledge, he could not be expected to answer the question on the spur of the moment. If the matter were under his own control, it might be supposed that he would be able to answer the question; but it would seem to me to be one of those questions that should be put on the Order Paper.

Mr. KNOWLES: I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden). We should not be prejudiced because there is only an acting minister in charge of the department.

Mr. BORDEN: I am not at all familiar with the matter to which my hon. friend alludes, but I will speak to the acting minister and see that any information available is given to my hon. friend to-morrow.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is fair.

BRITISH-JAPANESE TREATY.

House again in Committee on Bill No. 156, respecting a certain treaty of commerce and navigation between His Majesty the King and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan.—Mr. Borden.

On the schedule, part 1:

Mr. PUGSLEY: There are some observations that I desire to make before this Bill passes. I think that this Bill is one of very great importance, and it is particularly of importance by reason of the attitude of the Conservative party in the past in regard to Asiatic immigration. It is particularly important in view of what has been announced in this Parliament to be the attitude of the majority of the people of British Columbia on this subject. Therefore, I do not think that this Bill should be hastily passed. It is a measure in regard to which the committee should have every opportunity for fair consideration, and I think it is a measure in regard to which an opportunity should be afforded by a reasonable delay for an expression of public opinion in that province. While making these remarks, I perhaps would not be out of order if I were to offer my congratulations to the Government that they have taken time from the consideration of the Naval Bill to bring this very important matter before the attention of the House. I think the course they have followed in this particular could be followed to the public advantage in reference to a great many other important measures which ought to be brought up, and brought up at once, for the consideration of the House. I refer especially to that important measure, the Bill for ratifying the treaty between Canada and the British West Indian colonies. I think it is not in the public interest that the consideration of that measure should have been postponed for such a long period of time. Business men who have commercial dealings with the West Indies are naturally greatly interested in the question. I think it should have been brought up and I make the same observation in regard to many other important matters. I think the example which the Government has set in regard to this measure might well be followed with respect to other measures which are more urgent than the Naval Bill, the proper consideration of which would be of very much more importance to the country than the Naval Bill, in regard to which there is no emergency and in regard to which there should be every opportunity given for proper consideration without unduly pushing the Bill ahead. There are features connected with this Bill which are worthy of most careful consideration especially by hon. gentlemen who represent British Columbia constituencies. I have looked at the debates in the session of 1908, and I find that hon. gentlemen then representing British Columbia demanded the absolute exclusion of Asiatics. During the election of 1908, in order to convince the people of British Columbia that the Conservative party, if returned to power, would take steps towards that end, the present Prime Minister, then leader of the Opposition, sent a telegram from Halifax to Victoria stating that the Conservative party stood for the absolute protection of white labour in British Columbia. So important did the matter appear to some Conservative workers in British Columbia, that that telegram was altered to read as if Mr. Borden or the Conservative party declared they stood for absolute exclusion of Asiatics from Canada, and that telegram, so altered was read at a public meeting in Victoria and it is said, led to the defeat of Mr. Templeman. After that election the Conservative members from British Columbia expressly declared in this House that the Conservative party stood for the absolute exclusion of Asiatics, and for keeping British Columbia, as they termed it, a white man's country. Conservative members claimed vigorously that it was because the policy of the Conservative party was to exclude Asiatics from British Columbia, that they succeeded in carrying the different constituencies in that province. In view of these facts, when we to-day find a Bill which provides in the broadest manner possible for the entry of Japanese into Canada, for their exercising almost all of the rights which a British subject may exercise in this country; and when we have the declaration of the Government through the Prime Minister, given to the Japanese Consul, that there will be no discrimination against Japanese as compared with citizens even of the British Empire, surely the question becomes so important as to cause us to pause before ratifying this treaty, and until opportunity is given to public opinion in the province of British Columbia, more especially, to make itself heard on this question. I call attention again to the assurance given by this Government to the Consul General of the Japanese Empire, and I do so because I thought the Prime Minister made somewhat light of that assurance which is contained in his letter to the Japanese Consul. Yesterday, the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) said, (pages 7198-7199 'Hansard'):

> The correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Japanese authorities shows that the Japanese authorities said that upon the face of the text of that Act it did not discriminate against them any more than against any other people, and therefore they would accept it. But, the Immigration Act contains in itself the power of discrimination against any people whatever, if the occasion should arise. I understand from the correspondence that the power of discrimination by use of regulations is neutralized; that it cannot any longer be invoked against Japan and that no regulations can be made hereafter that would in any way discriminate against Japanese immigrants so far as the treaty lasts. Suppose that next year the Lemieux convention were not observed properly by the Japanese Government, and it becomes necessary in order to protect British Columbia from an undue influx of Japanese to pass a regulation under the law of 1910 to keep these immigrants out, I understand we could not pass any such regulation during the existence of the treaty. If that is what we are doing, I would like to have it understood distinctly.

And how did the Prime Minister reply to that? He said:

> Mr. Borden: I do not understand it so at all. The clause in the correspondence to which my hon. friend refers is this:
>
> The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no distinction in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the inclosed draft Act of Parliament, of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.
> The Immigration Act speaks for itself; the correspondence made a certain comment upon its character; the Immigration Act is in existence and contains the provision to which the hon. gentleman alludes. As a matter of fact, when the United States dealt with the same subject, they used language which was very similiar.

He goes on to say how the United States dealt with the matter, but the important thing for this Parliament to understand is, not how the United States dealt with the matter, but what is the effect of the pledge given by this Government to the Japanese Government. The Prime Minister merely quoted from the first letter, but it must be borne in mind that that letter was followed by a statement from the Japanese Consul under date March 1st, in which he says:

> Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government have no objection to the proposed Bill, and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against subjects in this respect.

There is a statement so positive that he who runs may read and understand. The Japanese consul said that the Japanese Government will agree that this treaty shall be brought into force as between Canada and Japan but upon the clear and distinct understanding that under the Immigration Act of 1910 there shall be no discrimination as between the subjects of the Empire of Japan and the subjects of any other foreign country, including those of the British Empire itself. My right hon. friend accepts that demand of assurance, because in his reply of March 5, 1913, to this letter he says:

> The reply of the Imperial Japanese Government stating that they have no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

My right hon. friend quotes the very language of the Japanese Government that no discrimination shall be made against Japanese subjects in this respect. He says further:

> I have the honour to inform you that the Government of Canada has received this reply with the greatest satisfaction, and that the proposed Bill will be introduced as soon as the pending business now engaging the attention of Parliament will permit.

I would ask any hon. member, who is prepared to give an impartial opinion on the subject, as to whether, in case it became necessary in the judgment of the Government, next month or next year, to pass regulations by the Governor in Council which would make different provisions in respect to the entry of Japanese into this country from those which would apply to France, the United States, Great Britain or any other part of the British Empire, such regulations would not be a discrimination against the Japanese, and would not be in violation of the assurance, which the Japanese Government has demanded and which this Government has granted, that there shall be no discrimination. Can anyone, who reads the Act of 1910, deny that it gives the power to discriminate, to make one regulation which might apply to one race of people, another which might apply to another race of people, the power to impose a head tax on certain races, and the power to exclude certain races on the ground that they might not make desirable settlers? There is no question that the power to discriminate was given by Parliament to the Governor in Council by reason of the dissatisfaction which existed in British Columbia because of people of the Asiatic races coming to Canada in very considerable numbers. Notwithstanding that fact, the attention both of this Government and of the Imperial Government of Japan is especially drawn to the Immigration Act of 1910, which, as I have said, gives the power of discriminating; and this Government, on behalf of and speaking for the Canadian people and for Parliament, agrees that there shall be no discrimination against Japanese subjects as compared with the subjects of any other foreign country and even the citizens of the British Empire. Before we pass this Bill, it ought to be clearly understood, not merely by this Government but by the Japanese Government as well, that this correspondence does not mean what it professes to mean; because I can imagine nothing that would bring about unfriendly relations between Canada and Japan more quickly than what would seem to the Japanese Government to be a breach of faith on the part of this Government. During the years since the arrangement was made by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) with the Japanese Government, Japan has lived up to that agreement in the most honourable manner possible; Japan has kept absolute faith with the Government and with the people of Canada. Nothing would be of greater importance than that the Government and people of Canada should keep faith with the Government of Japan in any arrangement that is made. If this Government passed a regulation which would in any way discriminate against the subjects of Japan even as compared with citizens of the British Empire, there cannot be a shadow of a doubt that the Japanese Government would have the strongest possible ground to complain that this Government had been guilty of a breach of faith. Japan could point to the correspondence and to the statement which the Japanese consul, speaking on behalf of his Government, made, that there would be no discrimination. She could point to the acknowledgement of the Prime Minister and his recognition of what this Government understood, namely that there would be no discrimination against Japanese subjects. We have had no assurance yet from the Prime Minister that this Government has not tied its hands so far as discrimination is concerned by regulations of the Governor in Council. All that we have had in answer to the case presented by my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) is a reading of my right hon. friend's first letter, not a reading of the reply of the Japanese consul or of the answer to that by the Prime Minister, in which the demand of the Japanese consul, speaking on behalf of his Government, that there shall be no discrimination, is clearly recognized and agreed to by this Government. If I am right in my view, it comes down to this, that the assumption, that Canada will be able to rely upon the Immigration Act and that Canada may protect herself against an influx of Japanese subjects, is a mere sham and has no foundation whatever to rest upon, because, while in one clause of the Bill Canada is given to understand that she is protected by the Immigration Act, in the correspondence upon which the ratification of this treaty is based, this Government has assured the Japanese Government that the Immigration Act will not be acted upon so far as the power given by the Act to make regulations discriminating against Japanese subjects is concerned. If the treaty goes into effect, therefore, the only thing Canada can do is to act in the same way towards Japanese subjects as it does towards British subjects or the subjects of any foreign country. It can exclude paupers and those who might become charges upon the public, or who are suffering from any objectionable disease; but, according to the assurance given by the Canadian Government to the Government of Japan, the same regulations must be meted out to the subjects of Japan as will be enforced upon the subjects of any foreign country, including the citizens of the British Empire. But will that be satisfactory? My hon. friend falls back upon the agreement which was effected by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) a few years ago, and he tells this House that he has reason to believe that, if this Bill passes, the Japanese Government will make a declaration that they will continue in force the agreement to which I have referred. My right hon. friend has not stated to the committee upon what ground he bases that belief, and I think that, if there has been any correspondence upon the subject, it should be laid on the table. This committee has no information whatever to cause hon. members to refrain from the inference that immediately upon the ratification of this treaty the arrangement made by the hon. member for Rouville will come to an end. There is no obligation on the part of the Japanese Government to continue it. By this treaty we have agreed to give them all the rights in Canada which they could reasonably be expected to desire, and therefore if my right hon. friend or his Government has received any assurance from the Japanese Government, by correspondence or otherwise, that the arrangement made by the hon. member for Rouville with the Japanese Government some years ago will be continued, it seems to me that he ought t place it before the House. Whether this information is in the nature of a verbal assurance, or in the form of written correspondence, it ought to be placed before the House so that Parliament will know upon what basis is proposed that we shall act in taking such an important step as the one now being considered.

I have called your attention, Sir, to the fact that it has been stated by Conservative members in this House that the Conservative party in British Columbia stood for the exclusion of Asiatics from that province, and, if we can believe these gentlemen, it is the settled conviction of the people of British Columbia—a majority of them at all events—that this policy should be continued. In case anyone should dispute the correctness of my statement, I would like to call your attention to the discussion which took place in this House during the course of the debate on the Address in 1909. Among the gentlemen who spoke on the Japanese question, as it was called, was the then member for Vancouver, Mr. Cowan, who said, among other things, that the reason he was supporting the Conservative leader was that his policy in this regard was in accord with the views of the majority of the people of British Columbia. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard) also spoke on the subject, and he referred to the telegram which was read in Victoria and to which I have made a brief reference. The present Minister of Agriculture also made an excellent address, consisting chiefly of the consideration of generalities, and dealing with the greatness, the beauties and the richness of the province of British Columbia. Among other things, he said:

> I would like to add a word, because the Prime Minister seemed to imply that in one riding at least—I do not know whether he intended to include them all—the telegram in reference to the problem of exclusion by the leader of the Opposition was one of the reasons why British Columbia had gone Conservative, as it were coming in under a false promise of hypocrisy. Let me assure him in the most emphatic way that, speaking for myself, not once did I say—though I expressed my sympathy with the exclusion movement as I do now—that the leader of the Opposition had pledged himself to that policy, although it may be in my view that not only he but other members of the House will come to that opinion.

The strongest speech on the subject perhaps, was made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) and I think it would be well to quote some of the remarks that hon. gentleman made on that occasion. Before this Bill passes it would be interesting to learn from that hon. gentleman whether or not the people of British Columbia, as he said they were in 1909, are absolutely in favour of the exclusion of Asiatics from that province. Referring to the telegram which was published in Victoria through the Colonist, and which, as it appears, had been altered, he said:

> I would like to have an explanation as to how this telegram came to be distorted, but I would not for a moment attribute any wilful distortion to the Colonist. But when you examine the words substituted, namely: 'the absolute exclusion of Asiatic labour,' when you contrast them with the words said by the leader of the Opposition to have been in the telegram signed by him, namely: 'the absolute protection of white labour,' when you contrast these and get your mind away, for the moment, from the enormity of making any alteration whatever in a telegram published with the signature of the author, you will find that, after all, there is very little difference between them.

According to the hon. member for New Westminster, the telegram purported to have been sent by the then leader of the Opposition—which, no doubt, had an enormous influence upon the electorate—and which embodied the words: 'the absolute protection of white labour,' was to the same effect as the alteration: 'the absolute exclusion of Asiatic labour.' It was evidently the opinion of the hon. member for New Westminster that there was very little difference between the two, and that what the then leader of the Opopsition really gave the people of British Columbia to understand was that the Conservative party stood for the absolute exclusion of Asiatics from the province of British Columbia. Then he proceeded to say:

You will find, I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is very little difference between them. I would like to impress that particularly upon the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), and ask him, as the representative par excellence of the labour interest, what difference he sees between the absolute protection of white labour in British Columbia and the exclusion of Asiatics from British Columbia?

I think it is of great importance for us in the consideration of this matter to bear in mind the views of the great province of British Columbia. In our attitude as to the wisdom of passing this Bill, we must be governed to a certain extent by the views held in that province and we ought, if possible, to understand what the views of that province are. We were told what they were in 1908 and in 1909. We know that in the desperate attempt to change the Liberal representation of British Columbia into a Conservative representation, this Asiatic question was exploited to the fullest extent and that the most positive assurances were given that the attitnde of the Conservative party would be an attitude of the exclusion of Asiatics from the province. The hon. member for New Westminister said:

To my mind the terms in meaning are identical.

That is the term 'absolute protection of white labour' and 'exclusion of Asiatics,' making the argument that what the present Prime Minister really did promise on behalf of the Conservative party was that there would be an absolute exclusion of Asiatics. (Reading):

Mr. PUGSLEY.

To my mind the terms in meaning are identical. But I can well see the point which the right hon. gentleman who introduced this matter before the House might have made against the leader of the Opposition if he could have fastened upon him the responsibility of sending the telegraph as it appeared. It is quite plain to anyone who considers the matter that in the face of the Japanese treaty, in the face of the possibility that the sender of the telegram might, in a short time, have had to assume the responsibility of leading the Government of this country, it would have been a very undignified position for him to take to send a message which might be interpreted as a message of defiance to the Japanese people with whom we had the treaty. Under the treaty, and the agreement in connection with it, the condition of affairs in British Columbia with respect to the Japanese would have been very much better than it had been in the past, especially the then recent past. While we can well understand the caution which would move the leader of the Opposition in sending the telegram, I say, as a member of the Conservative party in British Columbia and in this House, that, whether or not our leader sent the telegram, that our policy was one of absolute exclusion of Asiatics from British Columbia. I do believe that that is the policy of the Conservative party of Canada, and I do maintain that, so far as the members from British Columbia can be influential in shaping the policy of the Conservative party, they will stand to a man in favour of the exclusion of Asiatics from our magnificent province.

What does the hon. member for New Westminster say to-day? So far, upon this great question which for so many years has agitated the province from which he comes, he has been as dumb as he was upon another very important question which has engaged the attention of the House for a considerable period. Is it that the hon. member does not like to rise in his place because he is not prepared to swallow his words delivered in 1909 in this House or is it because——

Mr. STEVENS: I would ask the hon. member to permit me to enlighten him on one point. The hon. member for New Westminster is absent on the coast at the present time on important matters of business and so cannot be in the House while this discussion is going on. I might say that there is no question, so far as he is concerned or as others are concerned, that the opinion is identical with that which was held in 1909, and there is nothing in this Bill contrary to that opinion. In all fairness to the hon. member for New Westminster, it should not be represented that he is sitting here afraid to take his stand on this question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend is quite right in calling my attention to this matter. Yesterday, when I asked where the hon. member for New Westminster was, somebody said: He is here.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That was a mistake. I am glad my hon. friend has made that statement, but I am inclined to think that when we are considering a measure of this importance on which the hon. member for New Westminster spoke so strongly in 1909 when speaking in behalf of the Conservative party of the province of British Columbia, he stated that they stood for the absolute exclusion of Asiatics, including Japanese, that gentleman ought to be given an opportunity of being in his place and stating his views in the House before the committee is asked to pass this Bill. It is not an ordinary measure, it is a case of the Conservative party, which condemned the Liberal Government for making the arrangement which the hon. member for Rouville made with the Japanese Government and because they had not, in response to the demand made from British Columbia, passed a measure which would absolutely exclude Asiatics—it is the case of a party which, for the purpose of attaining a political triumph in the province of British Columbia, held out hopes to the people of that province which they knew could not be realized. It is a case of a party who are breaking faith with the people who sent them to this Parliament and who are not true to the principles which they then laid down and upon which they secured the great triumph which they did secure in British Columbia in 1908. They are turning around now and adopting a different course and policy to the one which they then enunciated and, as I said, they are acting entirely contrary to the pledges which they made to the people of British Columbia. There can be no doubt, as I have said, that the appeals which the Conservative party made to the people of the province of British Columbia that if they got into power they would support a policy of absolute exclusion of Asiatics, had a great deal to do, shall I say?—no, Sir, had everything to do with the return of the Conservative party to this Parliament from that province. And yet we find them to-day, while pretending that they are in some way protecting the people of British Columbia, compelled to rely upon the good faith of the Japanese Government so far as the number of immigrants they will permit to come to Canada is concerned and giving an assurance to the Japanese Government that, under the Immigration Act, Japanese shall be treated exactly the same as citizens of any other foreign country are treated—indeed Sir, that they shall be treated exactly the same as citizens of the British Empire will be treated, and that, neither by virtue of the Immigration Act, 1910, nor by virtue of any other Act in amendment to that Act which might be passed, shall there be any discrimination, by regulation of the Governor in Council or otherwise, against Japanese citizens. It is not for us to complain that the Government is prepared to rely upon the good faith of the Japanese Government. That government have kept the most perfect good faith during these years. But, Sir, it is due to themselves that Conservative members from British Columbia, who took part in the election of 1908 and were in this House in 1909, and who declared that they carried the province of British Columbia upon that policy—it is a duty which they owe to themselves, it is a duty which they owe to this Parliament and to the people of British Columbia, to rise in their places and explain why they have changed their course and abandoned the policy of exclusion of Asiatics and whether they are prepared to continue to act upon the agreement made by the hon. member for Rouville, so long as it pleases the Government of Japan to recognize and to carry out that agreement in good faith, as they have carried it out during the several years that have passed since the arrangement was come to.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not want to take up very much time in reply to the observations that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has made at very great length. It is sufficient to say, as I said yesterday, that there is definite provision here in the Bill which retains the control in the Parliament of Canada over immigration into this country that my hon. friend and his Government did not see fit to retain when the previous treaty was negotiated. The position which we took upon this matter in 1907 and 1908, is precisely the position which we are taking to-day. My hon. friend does not seem to be inclined to grasp that. He has all the ability and the astuteness necessary to enable him to grasp it, but it is not convenient for him to do so, and therefore he gets as far away from it as possible. He remembers perfectly well, and so does my hon. friend for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), that a Conservative Government in 1895 declared specifically by Order in Council, that the treaty of 1894 ought not to be accepted by Canada unless it was accompanied by a stipulation similar to that contained in the treaty between the United States and Japan. Pursuant to that Order in Council, the British Government, through its ambassador at Tokio, negotiated an arrangement with the Government of Japan, and Japan distinctly agreed to the insertion of such a proviso in the adherence of Canada and the other dominions to that treaty. I have under my hands the very terms of that proviso, and in order that my hon. friend may not be under any further misapprehension on the subject, I might as well read it to him. In the first place, the Order in Council, of October 18, 1895, passed by the Conservative Administration then in power, declared the policy of Canada in these words:

The Canadian Government in adhering to this treaty would desire a stipulation with respect to Japanese immigration similar to that inserted in the treaty between Japan and the United States, and that they desire a further definition of the word 'labourer' by adding thereto the words 'including artisans.'

Now, in order to understand that, you have to refer for a moment to the stipulation which was contained in the United States treaty. That stipulation was in these words:

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, police and public security, which are in force, or may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

Mr. EMMERSON: What article is my right hon. friend reading from?

Mr. BORDEN: I am reading from the Canadian Order in Council passed on October 18, 1895, and I am referring also to a stipulation contained in the treaty entered into between the United States and Japan in 1894. I am referring to the United States treaty because it is alluded to in the Order in Council which I have just quoted. Therefore, the decision of the Government of Canada was this: That their adherence to the treaty of 1894 was conditional upon a proviso being attached to that treaty, that it should not in any way affect the regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, including artisans, police and public security, which are in force, or may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it not true that all those regulations which may hereinafter be enacted are left out of this treaty?

Mr. BORDEN: I will come to that in a moment. My hon. friend is very anxious to divert my attention from what I was about to say, but I shall pursue the even tenor of my way and come to that observation later on. Pursuant to that, the British Government, realizing, much more than my hon. friend ever realized, the situation of Canada, as demanding some restriction of this kind, took the matter up with the Imperial Japanese Government, and on the 18th day of October, 1896, the British minister at Tokio, in a dispatch to Lord Salisbury reported that he had arrived at an understanding with the Japanese Government under which the immigration of labourers and artisans should remain subject to the laws of Canada, notwithstanding the adherence of Canada to the treaty. The despatch contained the following language:

I have the honour to inclose copy of a draft protocol which, in pursuance of an understanding arrived at with Count Okuma on the 2nd instant, I placed to-day in His Excellency's hands. It provides for the reservation of the right to legislate with regard to trade, emigration of labourers and artisans, police and public security to all the colonies and foreign possessions of the Crown mentioned in article XIX. of the new treaty, except Newfoundland and Natal which have already signified their unconditional adhesion and is reciprocal in form. It is framed on the model of the last paragraph in article II. of the new treaty between the United States and Japan.

The last sentence of the British minister's report in referring to this communication with the foreign minister of Japan is as follows:

As, however, no legislation seemed to be in immediate contemplation in either Canada or Australia, it would appear that what the governments of those colonies desired was to have the power of legislation in reserve so as to be able, in case of need, to satisfy public opinion.

Then, a draft protocol was arranged between the British minister and the Japanese Government, embodying the terms of the proviso and stipulations to which the Government of Japan would consent in respect to the matter I have alluded to, and that protocol is in the following terms:

The undersigned.....duly authorized, &c., have agreed that the stipulations contained in the first and third articles of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan, signed at London on the 16th July, 1894, shall not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of labourers and artisans, police and public security which are in force or may hereafter be enacted in either of the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty enumerated in article XIX. of the said treaty, with the exception of Newfoundland and Natal, or in Japan.

Newfoundland and Natal were excepted because they had already, absolutely and without reserve, acceded to the treaty. So, that was the position as it existed in the month of October, 1896. The Government of Canada of which my hon. friends were members took no further action until 1905, and then they came to the conclusion that after all it was desirable that Canada should adhere to this treaty, although on the 29th of July, 1896, they had come to a different conclusion; and so they passed an Order in Council and despatched a telegram. They despatched the telegram in the month of July, 1905, to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The despatch was sent on the 17th June, 1905, and in that despatch they declared that Canada was ready to adhere to the treaty. The Colonial Secretary immediately answered that despatch by a despatch to the following effect:

London, July 14, 1905.

My Lord,—Referring to your confidential despatch of June 7, should Japanese Government be informed that your Government wishes to adhere to treaty 1894, and supplementary convention of 1895, under same terms and conditions as Queensland in 1897, which Japanese Government then agreed to extend to any other colonies adhering within prescribed period, namely, (1) that stipulations contained in first and third articles of treaty shall not in any way affect laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, artisans, police and public security which are in force or hereafter may be enacted in Japan or in colony. (2) That treaty shall cease to be binding as between Japan and colony at expiration of twelve months after notice has been given on either side to desire to terminate same.

Or are your Government prepared to adhere absolutely and without reserve as would appear to be the case from speech of Minister of Agriculture in Canadian Parliament, June 22? Please telegraph reply.

(Sgd.) Lyttleton.

The speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, to which allusion is made, was under date of July 22, 1905, and it is to be found at page 7912 of 'Hansard' of that year. The Government made no answer at all in the first place to the despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, but they sent a further despatch on the 26th September, 1905, in these words.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is the explanation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies sending that inquiry on July 14? There seems to be such a gap of years between these communications that I would like to know what the reason was.

Mr. BORDEN: It is a very natural and reasonable question which my hon. friend asks and one which would occur immediately to any hon. member. The reason I understand is that the last previous intimation from the Government of Canada in regard to the terms on which this treaty would be accepted was the Order in Council of October, 1895, which had declared that Canada would accede to the treaty only on certain conditions, namely, upon the stipulation that Canada should have the right to control immigration. Therefore, when a telegram was despatched ten years afterwards——

Mr. KNOWLES: They waited ten years and then telegraphed?

Mr. BORDEN: Who?

Mr. KNOWLES: The people in the Old Country.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. The Government of Canada had, in 1895, passed a certain Order in Council defining the terms upon which Canada had acceded to this treaty. The British Government, in pursuance of what was set forth in that Order in Council, had made a definite arrangement with the Government of Japan, and the Government of Japan had declared themselves ready to accede to that arrangement. Nothing further had been heard from the Government of Canada as to the terms upon which Canada would accede to the treaty and, therefore, when a despatch was sent forward in 1905, the officials in the Colonial Office, looking at the file, found themselves confronted with an Order in Council passed by the Conservative Government in 1895 which defined the terms and conditions upon which Canada would be prepared to accede to this treaty. Therefore, they asked: Do you desire to accede to the treaty upon the terms and conditions which were set forth in the Order in Council of 1895, these terms and conditions having since been agreed to by Japan, or are you prepared to accede to the treaty absolutely and without reserve? The Canadian Government of the day, in 1905, when that question was proposed to them, made no answer at all for a period of three months, but, on the 6th September following they sent a further telegram asking that the matter be expedited and once more the Secretary of State for the Colonies put to them the definite question:

London, September 6, 1905.

My Lord,—In reply to your telegram received to-day, please inform your Prime Minister that before taking steps as regards adhesion of your Government to commercial treaty with Japan, His Majesty's Government awaiting reply to telegram of July 14.

(Sgd.) Lyttelton.

In reply to that a despatch was forwarded and an Order in Council was passed, under date of September 25, 1905, which Order in Council authorized His Excellency, the Governor General, to state that Canada would adhere absolutely and without reserve to the treaty. The telegram was in these words:

Referring to your telegram of July 14, responsible ministers prepared to adhere to Japanese treaty, 1894, and supplementary convention of 1895, absolutely and without reserve. Minute of council and despatch follow by mail.

That places before the House the situation as it was with respect to the treaty of 1894. My hon. friend from St. John is very much aggrieved apparently at the action of the Government to-day and he is endeavouring to taunt my hon. friends from British Columbia with some supposed change of attitude. There has been no change on the part of my hon. friends from British Columbia. They contended, as I understood their contention, that Canada ought to have control over immigration from all countries, including Japan, to the shores of Canada and that is the control proposed to be maintained by the terms of this Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Did they not advocate the exclusion of Japanese from British Columbia?

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friends from British Columbia?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not recollect hearing them advocate anything of the kind in this House, but I do recollect that they strongly advocated the necessity of Canada having complete and absolute control over immigration from all countries including Japan. That is the proposition that we are now endeavouring to carry out in this Bill. Now, my hon. friend from St. John seems not to be quite in line with the hon. gentleman who sits on his right (Mr. Lemieux) and his leader in respect to this Bill. They think it is a very proper Bill and one that should be passed. It is true that on their side of the House they very naturally emphasize the importance of the arrangement made by my hon. friend from Rouville, then Postmaster General and Minister of Labour, in the latter part of 1907 and the early part of 1908, if I remember the dates correctly. That is very natural and I am not at all disposed to minimize the importance of having the most friendly and cordial relations with the Government of Japan in respect to that, nor am I disposed to minimize the advantages of co-operation between the Government of Canada and the Government of Japan in that respect. But there is an important difference between the attitude which was taken by the late Administration and the attitude which we take on this matter. Their attitude was this, that our only remedy in case of excess of immigration of labourers and artisans from Japan, was an appeal to the Government of Japan with respect to a matter that ought to be under the control of the Government and Parliament of Canada. Our attitude is that, while we do intend, and expect, to have the most cordial and friendly relations with the Government of Japan, while we intend to co-operate, and to co-operate in the broadest and most friendly manner, with the Government of Japan and while we have every confidence that the Government of Japan will carry out loyally and in the most friendly spirit in the future, as they have done in the past, the arrangement that was made, nevertheless, the final control, in respect to a matter of this kind, must be with the Government and Parliament of Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In the debate of 1908, 'Hansard,' page 2145, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister put to me the following question:

May I ask the hon. minister whether his policy is not for a white British Columbia?

I simply wish to-day to exchange the same civilities with my right hon. friend and ask him if his policy to-day is not, as it was then, for a white British Columbia.

Mr. BORDEN: I am not aware that I have said anything to the contrary. Perhaps my hon. friend would be good enough to give me the answer that he made to me. If my hon. friend is going to borrow my question, it would be only decent reciprocity that I should borrow his answer. My hon. friend in a very delightful and good-natured way has congratulated me on some change of heart or conversion, and if he can find change of heart or conversion in the observations I have addressed to the House with regard to this very important subject he is welcome to all the consolation he can get from it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is always great rejoicing over the conversion of a sinner.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend has referred to our having invoked the policy of conciliation which was in existence when we took office, but I may tell him that our position towards the Government of Japan has always been one of conciliation. I simply took the ground then, as I take it now, that in the final and ultimate result the control over immigration ought be in the Government and Parliament of Canada, and ought not be in the Government of another country. While we are disposed to give every possible effect to the arrangement consummated by the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), and while we are determined to seek the most friendly and reasonable solution of any difficulties, we think the provision in this Bill is a very proper one, and that the power which is thereby reserved to the Parliament and Government of Canada should be and ought to be reserved. The provision is in the Bill with the consent of the Government of Japan, and it is proper for me to say that in the negotiations on this subject the Government of Canada has been met in the most friendly and cordial spirit by the Government of Japan—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN: And by its distinguished representative, the Consul-General of Japan at Ottawa, who is well known to most of the members of this House, and who is highly respected by us all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN: I have not the slightest doubt that the arrangements proposed by this treaty will be worked out in a friendly and cordial spirit, and without any friction whatever. The power we have reserved is a power proper to be reserved. It is a power that may only be invoked in case of need, and I have not the slightest apprehension that any such need will arise, for

I sincerely believe that the friendly and cordial relations which exist between the Governments will continue.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (South Renfrew): The fact that we are discussing this measure demonstrates that we have the power to practically make our own treaties or to join in or refuse to join in any treaty made by the Motherland. That marks a great advance in the position of Canada, compared with some years ago. It marks a step onward in our national aspirations, and it enjoins us not to in the least degree turn backward by any legislation which we may pass in this Parliament. We should insist, as an integral and important part of the British Empire, that we should ourselves deal with those interests which we can deal with better than can even the Motherland. The exceptional freedom given us by the Imperial authorities, to deal our own affairs is a great factor in drawing us closer to the Motherland. It is said that one must die to be appreciated, but, during the discussion on this treaty, my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has had placed, not on his grave, but on his brow, a wreath of laurels for his achievement on behalf of the Dominion of Canada with the Empire of Japan. In this treaty we have gone through the form of saying that Japanese immigration will be subject to all the restrictions of immigration from any other country, and if the matter rested there the Government would occupy the position it pretends to. The Government says to its troublesome British Columbia exclusionists: We have put in the statute a clause saying that immigration from Japan shall be subject to the provisions of the Immigration Act and regulations under it. But I would remind hon. gentlemen that, in addition to this and to be read with it, there is the correspondence which says that this Government will never pass any discriminatory restriction against Japanese immigrationn.

Mr. BORDEN: The correspondence does not say that.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think an ordinary man would so construe the correspondence.

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely no.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is perhaps not an ordinary man. Let me read the correspondence.

Mr. STEVENS: Read it as an ordinary man for a change.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will read it as an ordinary man to an extraordinary man. This is the first letter:

Ottawa, Ont., 7th February, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada a Bill by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United Kingdom and Japan, signed at London on the 3rd of April, 1911.

2. The adherence of Canada would be upon the conditions and with the proviso set forth in the inclosed draft Bill which is submitted for the consideration of the Imperial Japanese Government.

3. The proviso that the treaty shall not be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Emigration Act follows the language which was approved by the Imperial Japanese Government in relation to the recent treaty negotiated with the United States of America.

4. The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country. It is not perceived, therefore, that your Government will have any objection to the embodiment in the inclosed draft Act of Parliament of the proviso which has already been agreed to in the case of the United States.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. L. Borden.

Hon. T. Nakamura,
Consul General for Japan,
385 Laurier Avenue E.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Now, let me read the reply to that, dated March 1, 1913. You will notice that the phraseology is changed a little. I think a good deal of consideration was given to that change:

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 7th ultimo, stating that your Government are willing to submit to the Parliament of Canada an Act by which Canada shall adhere to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and Great Britain, signed at London on the 3rd of April, 1911, and inclosing for the consideration of the Imperial Government a draft Bill setting forth the conditions and proviso upon which the adherence of Canada will depend.

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government has no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910, being applicable, as stated in your note, to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
T. Nakamura.

The right hon. the Prime Minister worded his letter very carefully; and, although the change may appear small, it appears to me quite significant that the representative of Japan reversed the phraseology and put it in the shape of a direct promise that this arrangement is agreed to. Just let me refer to it again. The right hon. the Prime Minister said:

The Imperial Japanese Government are doubtless aware, as the fact is, that the Immigration Act applies to the immigration of aliens into Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, and makes no discrimination in favour of any country.

The Japanese Consul, in replying, clinches that by turning it around. His phraseology is this:

Having reported the matter at once to my Government, I am now in receipt of a reply stating that the Imperial Government has no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910, being applicable, as stated in your note to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

If the matter had stopped there, it might have been open to this Government to say: Well, the leader of the Government wrote that there would be no discrimination in favour of any other country and the Japanese Consul wrote that there would be no discrimination against Japan; we did not acquiesce, consequently honours are easy. I wish to read the answer of the Prime Minister to that letter, in which, to my mind, he says positively to the Japanese Consul that there shall be no discrimination against Japanese subjects:

Ottawa, Ont., 5th March, 1913.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated the 1st instant, in relation to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan, signed at London on the 3rd April, 1911, in which you communicated to me the reply of the Imperial Japanese Government stating that they have no objection to the proposed Bill and that they feel assured that the Immigration Act of Canada of 1910 being applicable to the immigration of aliens into the Dominion of Canada from all countries, including the British Empire itself, no discrimination will be made against Japanese subjects in this respect.

I have the honour to inform you that the Government of Canada has received this reply with the greatest satisfaction, and that the proposed Bill will be introduced as soon as the pending business now engaging the attention of Parliament will permit.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. L. Borden.

I can take nothing from that letter but this: that, although in the Act itself it is stated that immigration from Japan will be under all the rules, regulations and laws passed on behalf of immigration, still the Government of Canada promises absolutely that there shall be no discrimination against immigration from Japan. If it does not mean that then it does not mean anything. If it means that, and I think no person can deny that it does, what would happen supposing the Government of Canada attempted to make such discrimination against immigration from Japan? Japan could do nothing in self-respect but insist that Canada withdraw from the treaty, or herself withdraw from the treaty so far as Canada is concerned. As a great country, she could not otherwise maintain her self-respect in the face of that correspondence, if the Canadian Government attempted to pass regulations or a statute that would discriminate against immigration from Japan. It is idle to pretend that it means anything else than that there shall be no discrimination against Japan; it means simply that the Japanese Government so understands it; this House cannot understand it in any other way. That being the case we come to this situation, that so far as the statute is concerned, it might as well not exist, because his Government has promised that it will not discriminate against Japan in its rules, regulations or statutes. Then, how is Canada to protect herself, if she needs protection, against an influx of immigration from Japan? Not by the Immigration Act, but by the arrangement made by the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), then a member of the Laurier Administration. That is the protection and why try to disguise it in any way? As a matter of fact, the situation is just as it was before, that, owing to the fact that Japan is an ally of Great Britain, and owing to certain other conditions which I need not mention, it is not advisable to take any other course than the one taken by the Laurier Administration and the one taken in effect by this Government, although something else may be in the statute. I am sure that is the exact situation. My right hon. friend the leader of the Government almost said so yesterday, when he stated that a pronouncement would be made later, if I remember rightly, by the Japanese Government, that as soon as this Act was passed the Japanese Government would continue in force the restriction agreed to between that Government and the Laurier Administration through the hon. member for Rouvile. We are in exactely the same position that immigration from Japan is controlled by the Japanese Government, and will be through an agreement with this Government, outside of the statutes altogether. I am not finding fault with that. I think perhaps it is the best arrangement that could be made and may be the proper one. It is absurd for hon. members from British Columbia to try to make themselves believe that they have some protection in the statute when, through the correspondence, they give away any protection which they might have had. If this Bill is passed, they will be in just the same position as they were in before. I am glad to see credit coming to the gentleman to whom it is due. The right hon. the Prime Minister has not begrudged that credit in any way. As to the treaty itself, it may be thought sacrilege, but I, as an individual member of the House, cannot see that we are to derive much good from this treaty. This argument may not appeal to some hon. gentlemen, but I think it would have been better if Canada had made a direct treaty with Japan, subject to the consent of the British Government. We could have included in that treaty certain things which could not very well be embodied in the present arrangement, because they would not be applicable to the Motherland or to her products. If we could, by making a treaty with Japan, have received a preference on such articles as zinc, lead, wheat, flour, lumber, canned fish, sewing machines, and many of those articles produced and manufactured by this country in such abundance, I think it would have been of much more benefit to the Dominion, and the Motherland would not have objected in the least. I do not desire to be understood as objecting to our acceding to this treaty because it is one which has been made by the Imperial Government; but we have the liberty and the privilege of making an arrangement of our own, and I believe that the Government should have endeavoured, if possible, to make a treaty direct with Japan which would have been of much greater benefit to the people than any possible result of the treaty now before us.

Mr. BORDEN: Like the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) my hon. friend has been endeavouring to make an argument tending to minimize the rights of Canada under this Bill, and, by his declarations as a public man, he has been attempting to place an unwarranted construction on the Bill and the correspondence relating thereto. I want to tell my hon. friend that the correspondence to which he has alluded does not in my opinion bear any such construction as that which he has sought, by distorting its language, to place upon it. When this Bill, if it is passed, becomes law, it will reserve to the Government and to the Parliament of Canada, in respect of the Immigration Act, the full control over immigration from Japan, as from all other countries of the world. If the Bill were not intended to have that effect, or if it were to have the effect attributed to it by my hon. friend in his attempt to minimize the force and effect of a plain statutory declaration on account of the language of the letter referred to, I would withdraw the Bill from the consideration of Parliament. But I submit it does not bear any such construction. The difference between the attitude of the present Government and that of the late Administration is this. My hon. friend to-day spoke in terms of the greatest possible appreciation and satisfaction of a condition under which the Government of Canada, in order to control Japanese immigration, should first have to apply to the Government of Japan; and he thinks that is the proper way to deal with the control of immigration in this country. If we are to deal with the question of immigration from Russia, then, according to my hon. friend, we should obtain legislation or enactment to that effect from the Russian Government; if we desire to control immigration into Canada from Germany, France, Belgium, or any other country, my hon. friend's idea seems to be that we should seek the intervention of the respective governments of those countries, and that we should not deal with the matter through our own legislative enactments and administrative regulations. I take an entirely opposite view to that put forward by my hon. friend. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to tell me whether in his opinion the Immigration Act of 1910, passed by a government of which he was a member, did or did not control immigration from Japan? Is my hon. friend prepared to answer that question?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. BORDEN: The hon. gentleman has been basing arguments upon considerations very closely associated with that question, and I should think it would have been desirable for him, before supporting the passage of that legislation, to have come to some conclusion in regard to that particular matter. If that Act did control immigration from Japan, then, unless it was passed with the consent of the Japanese Government, it was an act of such a character as would give Japan the absolute right to withdraw from that treaty upon the usual notice, or perhaps without any notice at all. If, on the other hand, it did not touch the control of immigration in 1910, from Japan, it simply shows that the Government of Canada were following their old policy of 1905 and 1907, and were leaving to the Government of Japan that control over immigration into Canada which ought to be possessed and maintained by the Parliament and Government of this country.

Mr. GERMAN: Will the right hon. gentleman give his opinion as to the effect of the Immigration Act in that regard?

Mr. BORDEN: I spoke of that yesterday, when I said that so far as our attitude was concerned, it was not a matter of very great moment. I suppose it might be very well argued that as the matter of immigration from Japan had been dealt with by a particular statute ratifying a particular treaty, a general Immigration Act would not apply. That is the position which it occurred to me hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House might have had in mind when they passed the Bill embodying this statute; but it is apparent that the members of the Government at that time did not give the subject the slightest consideration, and had in their minds no definite idea as to whether or ont they were amending the Act of 1907. The statute of 1910, except as limited by the Act ratifying the treaty in 1907, applied to all countries in the world. Assuming that it applied to all countries except Japan, which was excepted from its provisions by the Act of 1907, we have a statute which on its face is of universal application, with that one exception. The treaty of 1894 had come to an end, and the statute of 1910 thereafter was of universal application in respect of the immigration of aliens from all countries in the world. The consideration of the new treaty then came before us, and we simply intend to provide that Japan shall continue in the same position as now with regard to the control of immigration by Canada, namely, that it shall be subject to the provisions of this Act, notwithstanding our adherence to this treaty. That is the position we maintain, and I think there is nothing whatever in the arguments made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House with regard to the correspondence.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the treaty be subject to the amendments to the Immigration Act?

Mr. BORDEN: The expression Immigration Act might well include the Immigration Act and amendments thereto. I have not looked into that question very carefully; but it seems to me, as I stated yesterday, that the control which is provided for under the Act as it exists at present is an efficient control in every respect.

Mr. KNOWLES: Could we not eliminate any doubt by incorporating this in the Bill?

Mr. BORDEN: I think that the view which my hon. friend has suggested is probably the correct one, but, whether or not this is the case, I think the statute is so comprehensive in its provisions that nothing of the kind is necessary; in other words thorough control over immigration, not only from Japan, but from all countries in the world, can be preserved under the statutory enactments which are to be found in the Immigration Act of 1910. This matter has been dealt with by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House as if the only question could possibly arise would be the exclusion, temporary or otherwise, of the natives of some country, or the persons of some particular race. That is not the way in which the problem presents itself to me. The problem in this country, the problem in British Columbia where it has reached its acutest stage in the past, is one depending very largely, almost wholly, upon economic conditions. Therefore it would not be a question of excluding a particular race but of excluding persons of a particular occupation. Indeed, that was the proviso in the United States Treaty of 1894 and that was the proviso which the Conservative Government in 1895 sought to interpolate in the treaty of 1894, in the case of adherence to it by Canada. It was a question of the immigration of labourers and artisans, it was not a question of the immigration of Japanese subjects; the two things are to be distinguished from each other. The difficulty we have had in this country is one of an economic rather than of a racial character, and so, having regard to that aspect of it, I would not look forward to any difficulty such as has been suggested by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I would look forward, on the contrary, to the due and loyal observance by the Government of Japan of the arrangement which was made as far back as 1907 or 1908 and I would look, on the other hand, to the reservation of this power in the Government and Parliament of Canada as a safeguard to the people of this country in case that arrangement should not be carried out in the future as it has been in the past. It is for these reasons that I think the Bill commends itself to the consideration of the committee; and while I have given most respectful attention and consideration to the arguments which have been made on the other side of the House as to the effect of the correspondence, I still maintain that the provisions in this Bill, maintaining the control of the situation by the Government and Parliament of Canada, is one which will be effective in the future in case of need—and it would be only in case of need that it would require to be exercised.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw): There is a principle underlying this legislation which I think the Prime Minister himself, and, indeed, all members of the House will agree is very far-reaching and very important. I do not think that it is possible for us to take too seriously these questions which are International and Inter-Imperial in their effect. Looking over some of the back 'Hansard' I was struck with the very words which the Prime Minister uttered on the 28th of January, 1908, when speaking about the importance of this question. Speaking then as leader of the Opposition he said:

Now, the question with which we are concerned to-day is a very important question. It is one fraught with momentous issues to this country and it is a question which probably will confront the people of this country when all those who are within the sound of my voice to-day have passed off the scene. It is the great question of world politics which must be worked out on the Pacific ocean in the years to come; it is the great question of the influence that the great nations of the Orient, aroused to modern methods and organized as they have not been organized before, will exercise upon the destinies of the world and especially upon the Pacific.

The right hon. gentleman spoke further on that line and the more I, as a humble member, reflect, the more I am impressed that we should carefully consider the legislation in our hands and that we should, if there be any shade of doubt or any one point on which there is a shade of doubt, avoid even the appearance of danger or peril and go very carefully and steadily on the pathway.

When the legislation was first introduced I rather thought it was a harmless piece of legislation. Personally I have experienced in my campaign quite a little of the agitation to which hon. gentlemen opposite conduced when in opposition, making a political football out of this, the Oriental question. We have on this side no members from British Columbia, there is no one to speak for that province in the free way that is open to a member of the Opposition and I think, with all respect to the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) and other hon. members from British Columbia that when they return to their constituents they will have not a little trouble explaining why they have not more profitably taken advantage of this occasion to safeguard the Pacific coast with regard to this Oriental question. I was looking over some back 'Hansards' and it is remarkable to see how every hon. gentleman who comes from British Columbia and represents the Conservative party was loud in declaiming against anything like our tying our hands in respect of future regulation or future legislation with regard to Japanese immigration. I remember the first time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) spoke in this House, in January, 1909. He spoke in that finished, polished, careful style of his. He is generally pretty Tory, but never extreme. He declared that he was not a partisan, but an exclusionist. If he questions that, I can put my hand on the sentence where he said he favoured exclusion.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The present Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He may be an exclusionist for others, but not for himself. I understand that he employs a large number of Japanese in his orchard.

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot allow my hon. friend to put that statement on record for it so happens that I have never employed a Japanese or Chinese in my orchard.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is immaterial whether the minister had an orchard or employed a Japanese or Chinese. It is as bad to employ Hindus when you look at it from a labour standpoint and perhaps he will tell us if he ever employed Hindus in his orchard.

Mr. BURRELL: Does my hon. friend want to keep very close to the question?

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend gratuitously interrupted me—

Mr. BURRELL: No, my hon. friend from Rouville made a statement which was not accurate and I wished to correct him; I had no intention of interrupting my hon. friend.

Mr. KNOWLES: If he was so ready to give information when not asked, then, a fortiori, he might be ready to give it now and state whether he ever employed Hindus in his orchard.

Let me more especially refer to what the Prime Minister has said with regard to the freedom of this country in the future under his legislation to control immigration laws and regulations. He says that the matter is so assuredly beyond peradventure that he does not need to amend his Act by saying that the treaty shall be subject to the immigration laws as amended from time to time. The hon. gentleman is a very competent constitutional lawyer but that does not settle the case. In my humble opinion, the Prime Minister on this occasion is not right in the view he has propounded on that question. Let us look at the clause to which he called our attention:

Nothing in the said treaty or in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any of the provisions of the Immigration Act.

The Prime Minister says that as a matter of interpretation of statutes, in his opinion the Immigration Act will be read as a kind of changing, shifting term. I submit to him that that is impossible. By this legislation that we have before us, Bill 166, the Immigration Act is to all intents and purposes incorporated in the treaty or the Bill, it is a schedule or exhibit to it, it is just as much a hard and fast part of it as if it were one of the clauses of the Bill or a schedule attached to the Bill. I think my hon. friend will agree with that. Can we for a moment think that any great nation is going to enter into a contract by treaty, and incorporate in that treaty a piece of our legislation, and say they agree to that legislation, and to every change we may make in the future, however whimsical? The thing is preposterous, Mr. Chairman. As well might you and I sign a deed, an instrument under seal, and refer in that instrument to another instrument, and say that the terms of our deed may be changed by whimsical, arbitrary changes of the other instrument. It would be forgery to all intents and purposes, for one of the parties to alter the instrument referred to. Here in the solemn treaty that we are to-day making with the great Empire of Japan, we incorporate the Immigration Act of Canada as it exists to-day, not as it may be changed in any whimsical way from year to year. I do not think that any man who gives a moment's reflection to the matter can take any other view than that which I have expressed. It puts us in this position, that, by passing this treaty, we in the Dominion of Canada to-day are binding ourselves hand and foot, so that we cannot change our Immigration Act with reference to the people of the great Empire of Japan. Will my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) and the other members from British Columbia go back to their constituents and tell them there is no possible weapon in our hands with which to protect ourselves against Japanese immigration? We are anxious to do trade with Japan, no doubt. I commend the right hon. the Prime Minister for these little flickerings of a desire for broader trade with other nations. He and his followers got into power by crying 'no truck with the Yankees,' and now they come with those little spoonfuls of trade with the West Indies and with Japan, little spoonfuls not worth speaking about. And yet we were not allowed to trade with the great nation to the south of us, with men of our own kith and kin.

The little bit of trade that is offered to us as an inducement to accept this treaty is nothing compared with the disadvantage of tying our hands, so that we will not be able to protect ourselves in the years during which this treaty may be enforced. I wish to read a few words which the Prime Minister uttered on this question. I am not going to read again the three letters which my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) read. These letters speak for themselves, and I think my hon. friend from South Renfrew has unquestionably given them the correct interpretation. They are letters which passed between the Prime Minister of our country and the Consul General of the Empire of Japan residing in the city of Ottawa. I am a little surprised that the Prime Minister should tie up our country by correspondence with the Consul General of Japan. The right hon. the Prime Minister is of course the highest responsible official in this country. I want to read a few words showing what the right hon. the Prime Minister thought of the Consul General, so far as his authority goes. For all I know, the Consul General may stand very high in the Empire of Japan; I have nothing to do with that. But I have here the words of the Prime Minister in which he chided the then Prime Minister, the present leader of the Opposition, because his assurances had been obtained from no higher source than the Consul General. The right hon. the Prime Minister, then the leader of the Opposition, speaking in the House of Commons on January 28, 1908, said:

> Now, we have heard a good deal about assurances, and we have been told a good deal by my hon. friend the Postmaster General as to the spirit in which these assurances have been carried out by Japan. I do not desire to controvert his statements in the slightest degree in that regard. But I am prompted to observe, that these assurances, as I understand the matter, were conveyed to this Government by the Consul General of Japan, Mr. Nossé, who formerly resided in Montreal and afterwards resided here in Ottawa. I have yet to learn that a consul general has any diplomatic functions or status which could have justified our Government in accepting his assurances on that point. Why the very first duty of a new ambassador—and an ambassador has a high diplomatic status—upon his arrival in the country to which he is accredited, is to present his credentials, sometimes with a further statement of his powers. These powers are narrowly and closely examined, and on engagement made by him outside of his powers is entertained by the country to which he is accredited.
> So far as Mr. Nossé is concerned, any elementary book on international law lays it down as beyond question that a consul has no diplomatic status, he has no apparent authority to enter into an engagement of this kind.

And yet we find the Prime Minister on the one part tying up this country, binding the proud Dominion of Canada with the one who signs for the Empire of Japan, who, according to his own view, is absolutely unauthorized to carry out that which he says he will carry out.

I wish to say a few words regarding the views held a few years ago by hon. gentlemen in regard to the exclusion question. We all recall the manner in which, in the election of 1908, the province of British Columbia was carried by the Conservative party, with five members out of seven. I do not think it is going beyond the mark to say that several of the hon. gentlemen who were elected in that province in 1908 owed their election to the agitation which was created on the question of the exclusion of the Japanese. I shall not go so far as to say that all who were elected in that province owed their seats to that; I am not in a position to say that though they may have been. The question, however, was one that was made politically vital, and it is very remarkable to recall the view which our hon. friends opposite when in opposition took of this question in British Columbia. They took up the Japanese question, rode into power on it, and after they got into power, did not lift a hand to remedy the ill about which they had cried and screamed; just as in Ontario, they sought to ride into power on the Ne Temere cry, and, after getting into power, did not lift their little finger in connection with it. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), did endeavour to do something, but he got no support. He fought a little fight, but all the others forgot the solemn promises they had made. Then some of them got into power on the Farmers' Bank question, and some in Quebec by saying that before they were a year in office they would repeal the Naval Act, and the Naval Act is there still, in all its glory. In British Columbia, they owed their seats to a cry against the Laurier Government because of the arrangement with the great Empire of Japan, and now that they are in they are putting the Dominion of Canada in a worse position than it occupied before. Let us for a moment assume that the recent Government did not have the most ideal arrangement with Japan. I think they had but I maintain our hon. friends opposite are putting us in a worse position, because they are tying us hand and foot, so that we shall have no protection in legislating against Japanese immigration into this country. I greatly mistake the intelligence and independence of thought of the people of British Columbia if they do not hold their representatives in this Parliament to account, just as I think the people of Quebec will hold the Nationalists to account for not carrying out their promises, and just as I believe that those who rode into power in Ontario on the Ne Temere cry will be held to account.

Before the election of 1908, the representation from British Columbia was solidly Liberal. My hon friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell), had not yet graced this chamber with his presence. We had seven Liberals from British Columbia and so great was the feeling on this Chinese question that, in the election on the 26th of October, 1908, the province changed from seven solid Liberals to five Conservatives and two Liberals. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard), is not in the House, but I think nobody will deny that he got in on a forged telegram on this subject from the present Prime Minister. The hon. Minister of Agriculture had a deferred election, and, in any case, he had the benefit of that forged telegram too. It did not do him any harm.

Mr. BURRELL: I did not hear of it.

Mr. KNOWLES: You have to go a long way from home to hear of things, because I heard it in Moosejaw by election day. Since my hon. friend has become a member of the Government he may have found that he had to have a bad memory, be cause there are many things, especially their pledges, that it is better to forget, and he may have forgotten them. In any event, he had a deferred election, and the papers were filled with this wonderful telegram of the then leader of the Opposition, in which he stated that he stood for the absolute exclusion of the Japanese from the province of British Columbia. That telegram was placed in the Victoria Colonist, right in the city of my hon. friend from Victoria, two days before election. The election was coming on in two days, and my hon. friend was elected by eight, or ten, or twelve. I do not think that there is anything more certain than that that telegram elected him.

Mr. BARNARD: The telegram was only received in Victoria the night before election, and it was read from the platform at that time.

Mr. KNOWLES: I may be wrong as to a day, but it was there on the Saturday before election and it was published in the paper. There is one thing that I can swear to before high heaven, and that is that it was there before the day of the election, and was published in the press. It was published in the Victoria Colonist prior to the election.

Mr. BARNARD: It was published, I believe, on election morning.

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not see any need of interrupting me for that, because that is exactly what I am saying. I do my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) no injustice when I say that this telegram, without the slightest doubt, changed——

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member says Vancouver; it was not Vancouver.

Mr KNOWLES: Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens), was not a candidate then, so that he need not be stirred up about it, and I do not think he will be a candidate next time either.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman referred to Vancouver, and I wished to correct him.

Mr. KNOWLES: I, of course, meant to say Victoria, but since the hon. gentleman knows so much about it, will he tell us who forged these two or three last words? I think it is very strange that neither the hon. Minister of Agriculture, the right hon. Prime Minister, nor the hon. member for Victoria has ever given us any information as to that. I am not here to say that the hon. member for Victoria should have resigned, although my own opinion is inclined to the view that he should have under the circumstances. I will not enter into that at the present time, but I would be pleased if the hon. member for Vancouver could give us any explanation if these other hon. gentlemen are not in a position to do so. Another point is that the telegram, as far as we have been able to gather, was not denied by the present Prime Minister until after the two deferred elections took place some weeks after the telegram first appeared. I think that is a most remarkable circumstance.

Mr. BORDEN: If my hon. friend will be good enough to look at the statement which I made, I think he will find that the fact was that I never heard of it until long afterwards.

Mr. KNOWLES: I was not aware of that, and I accept in all sincerity the hon. gentleman's explanation. The Prime Minister's statement did not come until after the two deferred elections were over.

Mr. BORDEN: My recollection is that it was first mentioned to me by Mr. Templeman several weeks afterwards.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have no hesitation in accepting the right hon. gentleman's statement; but the fact remains that the Conservative party in British Columbia had the benefit of that forged telegram with respect to the election in Victoria, and also the two deferred elections at which the Minister of Agriculture and the former member for Kootenay, Mr. Goodeve, were elected.

I wish to call attention to a few words which have been uttered by hon. gentlemen opposite at different times on this very important question of our tying our hands with regard to our power to legislate or regulate in connection with the immigration of Chinese. At the last election hon. gentlemen opposite had such strict views on the question of any kind of an entanglement whatever that we should almost expect that when they came to make an arrangement with another country, and especially a country of a different race, language and religion, they would be exceptionally careful to see that there should be no kind of an entanglement that might embarrass us in days to come. I want to read the remarks of a few hon. gentlemen opposite in conection with this matter and I cannot find any explanation whatever of their change of front. Reference has already been made to what Mr. Cowan, the former member for Vancouver, said. On May 18, 1911, 'Hansard,' page 9462, Mr. Cowan denounced the plan which the Liberal Government then had of having a side arrangement by which Japan agreed to restrict her own emigration. Mr. Cowan said:

> I am prepared to say that the Canadian Government has no power to enter into a side agreement with a nation, which agreement was never submitted to Parliament and is not part of the British treaty. I am prepared to state that the Government does not need to take the view that there exists any understanding or agreement independent of the treaty and not expiring with the treaty. There is no necessity put upon the Government to take that view; and I say it is in the interest of Canada generally that no such view should be taken, and no action taken such as the minister has outlined to-night.

On the same day, Mr. Cowan, referring to the arrangement which had been made by the then Government, said:

> If you have given them the control over immigration into Canada, you cannot exercise that control as long as the agreement continues. I was a little astounded to-night to learn that this agreement has blossomed into a policy, forsooth, for Canada, that throughout the whole world we are hunting for bidders for the power to legislate with regard to immigration into Canada. We have gone to India, and now we are trying to get China, if you please, to study the special conditions in Canada and to determine the number of immigrants that should come into Canada according to her judgment, and not according to our own. When we have exhausted the yellow races, we are going to Europe and we are offering to give away the jurisdiction conferred upon this Parliament by the Confederation Act. We are bartering the whole thing away.

These words which Mr. Goodeve uttered are just as applicable to-day as they were when they were uttered in this House in 1911; indeed they are more so. I wish to read what Mr. Goodeve said during this same debate. His remarks will be found in 'Hansard,' page 9475. He said:

> Everyone will agree that we cannot assimilate Asiatic immigration and make the Asiatics good Canadian citizens. But that is no reason why we should not trade with them, and the Japanese recognized that in the treaty of 1906 and said they were quite prepared that the Dominion should accept the advantages of a trade treaty, but still retain control of her own immigration. Now, when the opportunity arises this year to resume our control of immigration, we find, by the letter of the Finance Minister, that the Government has given away the right to control that immigration. I am free to admit, from the figures furnished by the Department of Labour, which I assume are correct, that to a large extent the Japanese have restricted immigration, but that is purely a matter of good-will on their part, and it is on that my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) argued that to-day the Japanese have more rights with regard to immigration than British people. They have the absolute right and freedom to come in, reside, travel, &c.—rights exceeding those which any other nationality has to-day. It is on that basis we object to this proposed agreement. We do not object to the proposed extension of our trade or our traffic regulations, but solely to our immigration regulations

Again, Mr. Goodeve, at page 9479, says:

> I differ entirely with the policy of the present government in regard to foreign and alien immigration—handing over the absolute control of that immigration to the foreigners themselves. I say it is not a question of defiance, as stated by the Minister of Labour (Mr. King). There is absolutely nothing infra dig in treating with Japan on the basis of controlling immigration. And I point out to the Government that they did not consider it so, as shown by the letters from the Colonial Secretary. I have not the letters before me now, but I think that on three separate occasions by cable and afterwards by letter they stated to this Government that they could have all the benefits of the trade relations and still retain control of immigration. Further, these hon. gentlemen argue quite contrary to what they argued before, for they stated that until this treaty expired nothing could be done in regard to immigration. I think that was the argument used in this House—in fact I am quite sure of it. Now they are arguing that the arrangement is entirely independent of the treaty. I am protesting because the time has come when we are again in the position to say to Japan, without offending them in the slightest degree, that we will resume control of immigration.

I think the time has come when we may resume control, to use the words in the citation, if it was lost at all under the former arrangement. The day that our friends opposite were crying for has arrived; we have to-day an opportunity of resuming control beyond peradventure. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) says the Government has done so; I suppose he knows they have not resumed control in this Act.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not.

Mr. KNOWLES: I say they have not resumed control in this Act, and if my hon. friend from Vancouver studies it, he will think so himself. My hon. friend is very glib in his little statements, arrogating to himself the kind of knowledge that he alone will ever charge himself with having. I do say that in this Bill we have made our present immigration laws part of this agreement, and it is beyond our power to change them in the years to come so long as this agreement is alive. The present Minister of Agriculture addressed the House during that debate, and at page 9466 of 'Hansard' of 1911, he made a somewhat interesting remark to Mr. Fielding, then Minister of Finance. When Mr. Fielding was speaking about the understanding the hon. member for Rouville had reached with the authorities in Japan, Mr. Burrell interjected these words:

The minister surely does not mean to intimate that a formal declaration of that kind by a plenipotentiary is to be compared with the shadowy assurance which this Government has got.

If ever there was anything which the Minister of Agriculture might be afraid of as being shadowy, it is the protection which is to be found within the four corners of this treaty.

Mr. BURRELL: Does my hon. friend know that the particular agreement made by the hon. member for Rouville, was characterized by the late Minister of Finance as a somewhat loose understanding?

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not know that, but I do know that there is no understanding at all at present. I could understand that Mr. Fielding would use that term, meaning that it was largely informal and not official. Everybody admits it was of such a nature that Japan honourably lived up to it, and it was just as effective as if it had been in the most solemn form possible. Speaking on another occasion, ('Hansard,' page 9493, 1911), Mr. Burrell used these words:

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) asked us whether we want restriction or exclusion. We want exclusion. And he himself is coming around to that view.

If Mr. Fisher was coming around to that view, then the present Minister of Agriculture has now gone to the opposite view. I draw his attention to the three sentences I have quoted from him, and they are quite important in the light of his present position. I would like to know from the Minister of Agriculture to-day, whether he wishes exclusion. He is a responsible minister now, responsible not only to the people of British Columbia but to all of us from the West especially. We are desirous of knowing his policy; we do not look upon the Minister of Public Works as being the whole thing from the West, although he is a good part of it, and we would like to know from the Minister of Agriculture if he will say these words to-day:

I want exclusion.

Mr. BURRELL: I will make a few remarks when my hon. friend is finished.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend will not answer that question, and if I were in his position I might refuse to answer it myself. The hon. gentleman proceeded in that speech—and it was not a bad speech——

Mr. BELAND: He speaks well.

Mr. KNOWLES: He speaks nicely; he prepares his speeches, and while they are wrong politically they are nice speeches. He says:

Now, if we are to solve this question, I hold we should solve it by having admitted the principle of our inalienable right to control our own immigration.

I applaud that statement.

But if we are to make any other arrangement, the arrangement the United States have in this treaty is far ahead of anything we have. It means a contract, practically on the part of a recognized plenipotentiary of Japan to maintain restriction which has almost amounted to exclusion in the past three years, and in addition put the whole matter under the immigration law of the United States, which, in spite of anything said here to-night, I fail to see it done in our case.

I have only to repeat that our feeling in British Columbia must not be misunderstood. We regard the whole matter as of intense, vital importance, not only to British Columbia, but to the whole of Canada. We are looking to the future. No man can say what the development in the national life of Japan may be—what clashes there may be between the East and the West—that is too big a subject to go into. But we should be fools if we were to shut our eyes to the possibilities of grave dangers, and it would be grave danger to allow the Japanese people to imagine that we do not control, had not control over these matters ourselves, or to think anything else but to face the broad fact that fusion of the two races is impossible, that we should be better friends far apart, and a frank recognition of these things now should save a great deal of trouble in the future.

The remarks to which I have referred and of which there are many of the same kind uttered by members from British Columbia, place hon. gentlemen opposite in a position in which they have something to explain. There is absolutely no question that they took in 1909 and 1911 a stand absolutely opposite to that which they take to-day. If they would come frankly out and say they were wrong, at that time, we would have no quarrel with them. If they would admit what they are really doing by taking the policy of the late Government, we would understand the position they are in. But they are retracing their footsteps and adopting nearly the same policy which the Laurier Government brought down, and they are pretending it is a better policy, whereas it is without the slightest question a much weaker policy, the safeguard of the previous arrangement, as I have shown, not being presented to us in it.

I am sorry that the Prime Minister is not in the Chamber, as I wish to refer to another matter to which I should like to draw his attention. Last year the legislature of Saskatchewan passed an Act which was assented to on March 15, 1912, on the question of the employment in laundries and restaurants of female labour by Japanese and other Orientals. This statute, which is chapter 17, is very brief and section one reads as follows:

> No person shall employ in any capacity any white woman or girl or permit any white woman or girl to reside or lodge in or to work in or, save as a bona fide customer in a public apartment thereof only, to frequent any restaurant, laundry or other place of business or amusement, owned, kept or managed by any Japanese, Chinaman or other Oriental person.

I wish that on this occasion our hon. friends from British Columbia would help us with the present federal Government in our legislation to protect ourselves from what we, in the province of Saskatchewan, believe to be a danger, namely, the employment of white girls or women in places owned and conducted by Orientals. This Government has assisted us out of business and has put this Act out of business. The Act was practically disallowed, as I shall show in a minute. It was passed on the representations of a great many philanthropic societies in our province, societies composed of men and women who had studied this question thoroughly, and who represented to the provincial legislature that the continuance of employment of white girls and women in places owned by Japanese or Chinese very often led to a life of prostitution and to the opium habit. It was looked upon as one of the greatest known pathways to the slave traffic. I am glad to know that my hon. friend from Vancouver sympathizes with the action taken by our legislature. If his friends in British Columbia try to pass a similar Act, they will be disallowed.

Mr. STEVENS: The late Government disallowed some forty Acts passed in British Columbia long ago.

Mr. KNOWLES: This Government, which pretends to be the great friend of a white British Columbia and a white Canada, got busy to disallow this Act in Saskatchewan, and has disallowed it in certain particulars which I intend to call to the attention of the Government. After this Act came into force, it was tested in the courts of Saskatchewan; it was appealed from court to court and was found to be intra vires and a good Act. We thought we had attained in our province that which the Act intended. This Government, however, got its eagle eye on this Act and commenced corresponding with the Old Country authorities and the Saskatchewan authorities with a view to putting it out of business. The correspondence which took place shows a lack of sympathy, a lack of frankness and, I say it without offence, a lack of honesty, on the part of the present Conservative Government in Ottawa with the Saskatchewan Government in dealing with this question. That is a fairly grave charge; but I make it in all seriousness. A communication in regard to the matter came from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. What set the ball rolling, however, was a petition which came from Vancouver against the existing Act.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hon. member is wandering a little from the subject of the Bill under discussion.

Mr. MACDONALD: It relates to the same subject, the Japanese.

Mr. KNOWLES: We are considering article I, and this has special reference to
