DOMINION OF CANADA

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES
HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY-FIRST PARLIAMENT

14 GEORGE VI, 1950

VOLUME II, 1950

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY-THIRD DAY OF MARCH, 1950, TO THE FIRST DAY OF MAY, 1950, INCLUSIVE

BEING

VOLUME CCLXXIII FOR THE PERIOD 1875-1950

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

OTTAWA
EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., B.A., L.PH.,
PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
1950

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 23, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

HOCKEY

WINNING OF WORLD AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP BY EDMONTON MERCURY HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. A. F. Macdonald (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to announce to hon. members that yesterday in England the Edmonton Mercury hockey team regained the world amateur hockey crown for Canada. The victory gave the western Canada intermediate champions a clean sweep in the seven tournament games, and Canada's twelfth title since 1924.

I wish to place on the record the name of Jim Christiansen of Edmonton, sponsor of the Mercury club, as well as the names of the players. They are as follows: Marsh Darling, team captain; Jimmy Graham, coach; Jack Manson, goal; Pete Wright and Jack Davies, defence; Doug Macauley, centre; Billy Dawe and Harry Allen, wings. Others on the team include Wilbur Delaney, Jim Kilburn, Al Purvis, Don Goff, Bob Watt, Bob David, Ab Newsome, Hassie Young, Leo Lucchini and Bert Tonsi, trainer.

Yesterday in London the world amateur trophy was presented to team captain Marsh Darling by Dr. W. G. Hardy, also of Edmonton, who is president of the International Hockey Association. This hockey club has brought great honour to Canada, and I know that their expression of good will will be long remembered by the people in those nations where they served as excellent ambassadors for Canada in the field of sport. I am sure all hon. members will join in the congratulations to this great hockey club that has brought such honour to Canada, the province of Alberta and its home city of Edmonton.

Mr. Fair: Mr. Speaker, my home town of Vermilion takes second place to none in the field of sport. I should like to announce that Bob Watt, a member of the Edmonton Mercury hockey team, is the son of Mr. A. M. Watt, manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Vermilion. We are proud of Bob Watt because he is responsible for scoring many of the goals that made his team the champions. My congratulations to the Edmonton Mercurys.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNUAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1949

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table the following reports in English and in French:

Annual report of the Canadian National railway system for the year ended December 31, 1949.

Annual report of the Canadian National Railways securities trust for the year ended December 31, 1949.

Annual report of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1949. (English and French editions).

Auditors' report to parliament for the year ended December 31, 1949, in respect to the Canadian National railway system and the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited.

Financial budget of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, for the calendar year 1950.

All these reports are being distributed today.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SIOUX LOOKOUT, ONT., EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

Mr. Benidickson:

4. What experience has he had that directly qualifies him for his present work?
3. Where does this person have his domicile?
2. Who was in charge of the employment service at Sioux Lookout, Ontario, on March 15, 1950?
1. What persons were working in Sioux Lookout, Ontario, employment office on (a) March 15, 1950; (b) February 1, 1950?
5. Is he a veteran?
6. What is his present remuneration on a monthly basis (a) salary; (b) expenses?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle):

1. (a) J. E. Brannan, R. A. Kelly, D. M. Maskerine; (b) J. P. Paolucci, I. M. Featherstone, J. E. Brannan.
2. J. E. Brannan.
3. Sioux Lookout, Ontario.
4. Nine and a half months of general employment, and claims officer duties in the Sioux Lookout office.
5. No.
6. (a) $155; (b) nil.

Questions

LAC SEUL—INDIAN RESERVE NO. 28—TIMBER-CUTTING RIGHTS

Mr. Benidickson:

1. What persons have possessed timber-cutting rights on Indian Reserve No. 28 within the past fifteen years?

2. What has been the annual cut of each of the said persons during each of the said fifteen years?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce):

1. In the past fifteen years timber licences on Lac Seul Indian Reserve No. 28 have been held by the Keewatin Lumber Company, Limited, Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited, and Charles W. Cox.

2. Timber licence No. 173, covering the southerly 44 square miles of the Indian reserve, was issued to the Keewatin Lumber Company Limited in 1920; was held by that company until 1941 when the company became the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited, which company held the licence from 1941 until the termination of the licence, April 30, 1949. Under this licence the annual cut during the past fifteen years has been reported as follows:

1935		no cut
1936		no cut
1937	fbm	1,609,498
1938	fbm	4,317,294
1939		no cut
1940	fbm	1,896,688
1941	cords	790
1942	cords	7,982
1943	cords	2,418
1944	cords	1,068
1945	cords	2,635
1946	cords	9,923.69
1947	cords	17,316.97
	fbm	31,842
1948	cords	962.35
	fbm	103,353
1949	cords	557.68
	fbm	99,757

The south part of the reserve, 59 square miles, has been covered in licences to Charles W. Cox, licence No. 207; granted in 1926, ran until April 30, 1947. This was followed by licence No. 337, also to Mr. Cox, which ran from May 1, 1947 to April 30, 1948. The annual cut under these two licences during the past fifteen years is as follows:

Licence No. 207—Charles W. Cox—

1935	ties	96,551
1936	fbm	660,000
1937	ties	18,278
1938	ties	22,525
1939	ties	27,150
1940		no cut
1941	fbm	301,017
1942		no cut
1943		no cut
1944		no cut
1945	cords	1,431
1946	cords	2,949
	ties	6,000
1947	cords	7,107

Licence No. 337—May, 1947 to April, 1948—

1947-48	cords	839
1948-49	cords	5,120
1949-50	cords	3,800*
	ties	250*

* Not scaled.

SOLDIER SETTLERS—INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. Fair:

1. How many soldier settlers of world war I were in debt to the soldier settlement board as at (a) January 1, 1949; (b) January 1, 1950?

2. What was the total amount of indebtedness of those settlers as at (a) January 1, 1949; (b) January 1, 1950?

3. What is the total amount paid in by the settlers during the above period?

4. In how many cases were reductions made?

5. What is the total amount of reductions granted during the year 1949?

6. Have any foreclosures been made since January 1, 1949?

Mr. Mutch:

1. (a) 2,545; (b) 1,634.

2. (a) $2,668,611.89; (b) $1,838,303.18.

3. $697,921.98.

4. 692.

5. $269,311.95.

6. No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PAYMENTS ON WHEAT, PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. What is the amount of money paid out as further payments on the wheat crops of 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948 in each of the months January to June inclusive, 1949?

2. What is the amount paid out as further payments on the wheat crops of 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948 during each of the months January to June inclusive, in the years 1946, 1947 and 1948?

3. What is the amount of money paid out as further payments on the wheat crops of 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948 in each of the months July to December inclusive, in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

4. What is the amount paid out on P.F.R.A. account during each of the six months January to June inclusive, 1949?

5. What is the amount paid out on P.F.R.A. account for each of the months January to June inclusive, during the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

6. What is the amount paid out on P.F.R.A. account for each of the months July to December inclusive, for the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

7. What is the amount paid out on P.F.A.A. account during each of the six months January to June inclusive, 1949?

8. What is the amount paid out on P.F.A.A. account during each of the months January to June inclusive, for the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

9. What is the amount paid out on P.F.A.A. account during each of the months July to December inclusive, during the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

10. What is the amount of payments made by the Department of Agriculture directly to Canadian citizens during each of the six months January to June inclusive, 1949, for reasons other than further payments on wheat, on wheat crop, P.F.R.A. account and P.F.A.A. account?

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many appointments to the civil service (a) permanent; (b) temporary, were made by the civil service commission month by month, from the first of January, 1949, to the first of February, 1950, both inclusive?

2. How many appointments were made to the civil service (a) other than by the civil service commission; or (b) after certificate granted by the said commission?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—REFUSAL OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many (a) individual; (b) township applications for payment of P.F.A.A. were refused or denied in each of the prairie provinces between the first day of July, 1949, and the first day of February, 1950?

2. (a) In how many cases in each province was the refusal or denial of payment under the P.F.A.A. submitted to the board of review? (b) What is the total number of cases in each province in which the said board reversed the decision appealed from?

CANADIAN PACIFIC SECURITIES

Mr. Knowles:

1. As at September 1, 1939, what was the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada, and other countries?

2. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the above-noted countries as at the present time?

3. Have any Canadian Pacific securities held in the United Kingdom been acquired by the government of the United Kingdom? If so, what is the value of such securities so acquired?

4. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities returned to Canada from the United Kingdom since September 1, 1939, and what disposition has been made of any such securities returned to Canada?

5. Did the Canadian government acquire any Canadian Pacific securities following world war I? If so, to what extent were such securities acquired, and to what extent are such securities still in the possession of the Canadian government?

6. Does the Canadian government hold any Canadian Pacific securities other than those acquired following world war I?

7. What total amount of money has the Canadian government received to the present time by way of a return on its holdings of Canadian Pacific securities, and what use has been made of this money?

8. Are any officials of the Canadian National Railways, or any directors of the Bank of Montreal, or any cabinet ministers, directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any of its affiliates or subsidiaries? If so, who are such persons?

9. What is the total amount of money in the form of (a) cash grants; (b) subsidies; (c) loans, received by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from the federal government from the time the company was first proposed until the present date?

10. What is the total number of square miles of land received by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from the federal government, in each province, from the time the company was first proposed until the present date?

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED TRANSPORTATION LINES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved:

That a sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, be appointed to consider the accounts and estimates and bills relating thereto of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, and Trans-Canada Air Lines, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys; and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 65, in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee consist of Messrs. Adamson, Beaudry, Bourget, Carter, Cavers, Chevrier, Cleaver, Follwell, Fraser, George, Gillis, Hatfield, Healy, Helme, James, Knight, Macdonald (Edmonton East), McCulloch, McLure, Mott, Mutch, Picard, Pouliot, Thomas, Tustin.

He said: This, Mr. Speaker, is the usual motion which is made every year prior to the establishment of the railways and shipping committee to which are referred the annual report of the Canadian National Railways, the report of Trans-Canada Air Lines and certain other items of the estimates which are withdrawn from the committee of supply. It is in the same form as it was last year.

Mr. Graydon: Did the Minister of Public Works tell us about this yesterday?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I did not announce this, Mr. Speaker; but generally the setting up of this sessional committee is a matter of form.

Mr. Chevrier: My understanding is that it has never been the practice to announce a motion such as this the evening before; certainly it has not been done in the five years I have been in the Department of Transport.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is why I did not announce it.

Mr. Graydon: I was just asking an innocent question.

Motion agreed to.

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Fulton be substituted for that of Mr. Tustin on the special committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT, BUDGET AND CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I should like to move:

That the annual reports for 1949 of the Canadian National railway system, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, the Canadian National Railways securities trust, the auditors' report to parliament in respect to the Canadian National railway system and the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, and the budget of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited for 1951, tabled this day, be referred to the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, together with the following estimates for 1950-51:

Vote 493—Maritime Freight Rates Act, Canadian National Railways;

Vote 494—Maritime Freight Rates Act, railways other than Canadian National;

Vote 558—Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, deficit 1950;

Vote 559—Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, deficit 1950.

And that the resolution passed by the house on February 24, 1950, referring certain estimates to the committee of supply, be rescinded in so far as the said resolution relates to votes Nos. 493, 494, 558 and 559.

Motion agreed to.

AUDITOR GENERAL

REFERENCE TO MEMORANDUM PREPARED FOR SENATE COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): As a private member of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have been informed that a memorandum prepared by the Auditor General has been distributed to the members of the several committees of the Senate which are scrutinizing the estimates. I hope that the government will supply each member of the house with a copy of that memorandum. I suggest that it should be printed in legible type and with subtitles.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO COLLECTION OF TAX ON CAPITAL GAINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue if the officers of his department, in collecting taxes on capital gains, are acting on the instructions of the department; and if so, whether any change in those instructions is contemplated by the government.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): The officers of the Department of National Revenue are not collecting taxes on capital gains.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

QUESTION AS TO AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE AMOUNTS PAYABLE, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of a speech which he delivered in Saskatoon within the last week. It has to do with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Having regard to the fact that the drought area in the western provinces was worse last year than ever before, has the government in contemplation amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in order to provide for an increase in the amount payable, the alteration of the qualifying boundaries, or, generally, amendments to remove certain anomalies that have been found in the operation of the act; and if such amendments are made, will they apply to the 1949 failure?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The gathering which I attended in Saskatoon was, as my hon. friend knows, the meeting of the municipal association of the province of Saskatchewan, with representatives from Manitoba and Alberta also in attendance. A number of their resolutions had to do with possible amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I told them that at this session I would be introducing an amendment to the effect that the area reduced by the amendment of last year, from nine sections to six sections, both of which were to be rectangular, would not need to be rectangular. That applies on the taking in and putting out of areas.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That will be very helpful.

Mr. Gardiner: That provision will be introduced. So far as I recall, that was the only proposed amendment I discussed with them. There were, of course, suggestions made that there should be other amendments. I was asked the direct question whether we were going the change the amounts. I did not give any encouragement in answering that question. As a matter of fact, so far as I can remember at the moment, I said there would be no change in payments.

Mr. Argue: Since I have asked the Minister of Agriculture a question identical to that asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre, except in one particular, would the minister mind saying whether any amendments will be introduced to make the half-township provision apply to all parts?

Mr. Gardiner: We brought in an amendment last year which to all intents and purposes, does that.

Mr. Argue: No.

Mr. Gardiner: We may have a difference of opinion about it, but there is no further amendment on that point.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEA ISLAND, B.C., AIR FORCE STATION—EMERGENCY QUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I have sent him. Have instructions been issued by officers of the Department of National Defence to the effect that families of servicemen occupying emergency quarters at the Sea Island, British Columbia, R.C.A.F. station, are to vacate these quarters by April 1? If so, will the minister authorize an extension of the time limit to those who are unable to find other suitable accommodation?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): There is no information on this subject available at national defence headquarters. Since receiving notice of the hon. gentleman's question today I have caused inquiries to be made by the R.C.A.F. at Vancouver, and just as soon as information is received I will communicate it to him. If the information indicates the desirability of taking action such as he suggests, that action will be taken.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

FLOUR MILLING INDUSTRY—OPINION OF COUNSEL AS TO PROSECUTION—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question arising out of the answer to a question which is to be found at page 1003 of Hansard. In that question I asked:

> Was a submission made to counsel following delivery to the Minister of Justice on the McGregor report on the milling industry for an opinion to ascertain whether the recommendations were such that proceedings either under the combines act or the Criminal Code should be taken?

And also:

> Was a legal opinion secured from the law officers of the crown or other counsel on the question as to whether the limitation of actions provided for in section 1141 of the Criminal Code applied to prosecutions under the combines act?

The answer was yes, and the counsel were named. Will the minister table the replies given by Mr. Kelly and Mr. Phelan?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will refer back to Hansard he will see that a question almost identical in substance to the one he has just asked was asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). Having received no notice of his question, I am sorry I cannot give him the exact page in Hansard. The answer which I gave on that occasion will answer exactly the question which my hon. friend has asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister this: Instead of filing the submission or the answer given by counsel, will he say whether prosecution was recommended, or whether in their opinion the limitation of actions actually applied?

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will consult the answer to which I have referred, I think he will find that it is an answer to his present question as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; far from it.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend wishes, I have no objection to repeating the substance of the answer, which was to this effect: Upon receipt of the question asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar I consulted with the deputy minister of the Department of Justice, who told me it was the first time in his experience that any such question had ever been asked, seeking the production of confidential legal opinions given to officers under the Combines Investigation Act. I also said that I had consulted with the then commissioner, Mr. Fred A. McGregor, and was informed by him that, having regard to the fact these opinions were based upon a consideration of all the evidence and exhibits, which were analysed and examined at very great length, and that since in these opinions the advising counsel indicated the course of actual conduct of the prosecution in these cases, it would be of the greatest value to the defence; and for that reason these opinions had always been regarded as confidential in nature, had never been produced, and, as I indicated before, had never even been asked for.

I might add that we have at the present time three prosecutions under way: one against certain companies in the bread industry, another against certain companies in the flat glass industry, and another against certain companies in the match industry.

As to the legal point concerning limitations, I am informed that that point will arise in each of these prosecutions. As to the prosecution against the bread industry, there are several points which arise in connection with the milling report which will have a possible bearing legally upon the issues in the bread industry. For these reasons we think that, in accordance with what has always been the practice, these opinions should not be tabled, nor should any indication be given of their contents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege arising out of the answer given by the Minister of Justice, I will not seriously contend that—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I have given considerable leeway on this question. Probably I should read the first paragraph of standing order 44:

> Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from the ministers of the crown relating to public affairs, and from other members relating to any bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the house, in which such members may be concerned; but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same. And in answering any such question the matter to which the same refers shall not be debated.

It seems to me we are getting into a debate. Probably I should allow the hon. member for Lake Centre to proceed with his question, but I hope that in future hon. members will endeavour to observe the rule.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall not transgress the rule. I want to point out that I agree with my hon. friend so far as a portion of his reply is concerned. He says that the question of the limitation of actions will come up in other prosecutions, and that therefore the crown should not reveal the attitude of its law officers. I am going to agree with him on that. That does not apply, however, to the first part of the question which asks whether a submission was made to counsel following delivery to the Minister of Justice to ascertain whether prosecutions may be taken under the combines act or the Criminal Code. Your Honour will remember that the Minister of Justice, in the case of the bread prosecution, the glass prosecution and the match prosecution, said he would not proceed until he had a recommendation from counsel to whom the matter had been submitted.

[Mr. Garson.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is for that reason I ask why in this case that course was not followed.

Mr. Wright: I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order,—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the opposition is raising a point of order.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I think there is an aspect of this that has not been placed before you.

An hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Drew: I am addressing my remarks to you, Mr. Speaker, in case there may be any doubt about it.

The point that arises in connection with the discussion which has taken place is this. The Minister of Justice supported his previous announcements of prosecutions by the statement that he was acting upon recommendation. If that is an appropriate explanation to the house for acting, then surely it is equally appropriate for the minister to inform the house whether he received an opinion to that effect in the case under which he is proceeding. I submit that only Your Honour can determine whether the question as asked is in keeping with the practice which has been established.

Mr. Speaker: Let me say, as I said a moment ago, that this discussion is out of order under our standing orders. I would also say, however, that if the minister of whom the question is asked thinks it should be answered, he may answer, but I cannot compel him to do so.

WHEAT

QUESTION AS TO MAKING CHURCHILL A DELIVERY POINT UNDER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Last session, while we were discussing amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act to make Churchill a basing port under that act, the minister stated that negotiations were under way with respect to making that port a delivery point under the world wheat agreement. Can the minister say whether any agreement has been reached in the matter?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, speaking subject to confirmation after I make sure, I was informed that Churchill is a delivery point under the wheat agreement. I am quite sure I was advised of that about six weeks ago. However, if that is not so I will inform the hon. member.

Mr. Wright: Can the minister say what the price of wheat will be at that port, as compared with Port Arthur and Fort William?

Mr. Howe: I shall have to secure that information and answer at another time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE IN ASKING QUESTIONS ON THE ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Speaker: I have noted that some of the questions asked today on the orders of the day have been lengthy. Perhaps I might remind hon. members of the stand taken by my predecessor, that questions on the orders of the day should be brief and to the point; that hon. members should seek information rather than give it, and that there should be no debate.

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN KINGSTON "WHIG-STANDARD" OF MARCH 21

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. James (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to call the attention of the house to what I consider a very serious matter. Apparently there are others in the house who believe as I do about it.

My question concerns a report which appears in the Kingston Whig-Standard of Tuesday, March 21, and refers to a speech made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes). Let me say that I have the greatest respect for the hon. member and I regret that in this instance he has fallen from grace, and also that he has adopted an attitude which I am sure—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Durham has a question of privilege, he should state it.

Mr. James: I shall begin by reading the article as it appears in the Kingston Whig-Standard, and I believe as I go along the question of privilege will become clear. The article is headed "Canada nears one-party state, is charge of General Pearkes here".

Mr. Speaker: That does not suggest to me a question of privilege.

Mr. James: There is one paragraph further down in the article which, I think, will suggest a question of privilege to every member of the house. It reads:

> Certain members of the Liberal party are calling today for the elimination of all opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Graydon: They always are.

Mr. James: That is an inaccuracy which must be brought to the attention of the house.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the Speaker rises the hon. member should resume his seat. I would say, with respect to the last sentence to which the hon. member has referred, that members of the opposition have the privilege of making that statement at any time they may wish. I am not, of course, offering any opinion as to the accuracy or otherwise of the statement. I doubt however if it involves any question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I must maintain order in the chamber. From what has been read thus far I doubt whether it amounts to a question of privilege affecting hon. members of the house and for that reason I do not think I should allow the hon. member to continue at this time. However, if he would like to show the article to me I will decide whether it is one on which a question of privilege might be raised, and, if I so decided, I could allow him to proceed at a later time. At the moment I do not think he should proceed.

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF STATUTORY REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has yet been able to make the inquiries he said he would make, in answer to my question of March 14, having to do with whether or not all reports the tabling of which is required by law have yet been tabled this session.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have been able to make the inquiries, but I have not yet been able to get the answers.

IRRIGATION

ST. MARY-MILK RIVER PROJECT—AGREEMENT BETWEEN DOMINION AND PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. D. Wylie (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the minister has been in Alberta during the past week, and in view of the various statements appearing in the press—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Wylie: In view of the various statements appearing in the press about an agreement being signed between the dominion and provincial governments with respect to the St. Mary-Milk river project, will the minister tell the house whether that agreement has been signed?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my answer, as briefly as I can give it, is no. Perhaps, however, I should say something more than that. A verbal agreement was reached at Edmonton, and I left officials there to work with officials of the provincial government in the drafting of an agreement which we have said we will sign.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ACT

EXTENSION OF OPERATION FOR A PERIOD OF ONE YEAR

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Agricultural Products Act to extend the operation of the act for a period of one year.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed with representatives of the groups on the other side of the house the procedure which I hope will be agreed to, and with which those with whom I discussed the matter are in agreement. This is a resolution on which will be based a bill to amend the Agricultural Products Act to extend the operation of the act for a period of one year.

The original act, passed in 1947, provided that the contracts which were entered into during the war could be carried on following the war. The legislation has applied only for twelve months at a time, and therefore on three occasions we have passed a bill similar to the one which will be introduced providing that the act shall continue in existence for a further period of one year. That is all there is in the bill to be presented.

I realize that that raises the possibility of a discussion of the British contracts, and some hon. members may wish to have a rather free discussion. I would point out that I am hoping to introduce another resolution in connection with the Agricultural Prices Support Act. The introduction of that resolution would permit the discussion of everything that we might discuss under this resolution, and probably the British agreements as well.

[Mr. Wylie.]

What we do under that act has been done to replace what was being done under the other.

If it meets with the unanimous consent of the house I suggest that this resolution be permitted to go through, and that the bill to be based upon it be passed through its various stages; we could then proceed immediately to discuss the other resolution. I was going to suggest that Mr. Speaker do not interfere with us when we are discussing the other resolution as he might if we were to attempt to discuss certain matters under this resolution and other matters under the other. Otherwise we would probably be called to order, and quite properly.

I think we would get along better if we discussed everything under the other resolution and the bill which will be based thereon. I hope this procedure will meet with the approval of members of the opposition. If so, we could get this legislation through quickly and on its way to the Senate and then have our discussion on the next resolution. I am not pressing this if it does not meet with approval; I am only suggesting it.

Mr. Wright: So far as we are concerned we would be quite prepared to let the resolution go through its necessary stages today, but I do not think we would be prepared to let the bill go through. It could be given first reading and then come up for second and third readings tomorrow.

Mr. Gardiner: Allow it to go through and it can be called for second reading later.

Mr. Charlton: We in this group are prepared to let the resolution go through today and give first reading to the bill, but not to go any further at this time.

Mr. Fair: That position is agreeable to us.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 16, to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION IN FORCE ON AND AFTER MARCH 31, 1950

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, shall continue in force on and after the thirty-first day of March, 1950.

Mr. Argue: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to make a statement now, but it would not cover everything we will want to discuss.

This act was passed in the session of 1944. It provided for the placing of support prices under staple agricultural products, during the transitional period. There was also a provision in the act requiring that it be extended from time to time if it was going to be applied. In other words, it was not permanent legislation. It has already been announced that the legislation will be made permanent during this session. The simplest way to do that would be to take out the provision which made it necessary to extend the act from time to time. The act would then be in exactly the same position as most acts passed by this parliament; that is, it would continue in effect so long as the parliament of Canada did not take any further action.

There has been considerable discussion as to the intentions of the old act, and I do not think I could do better this afternoon than read what I placed on the record on July 29, 1944, as to the intentions of the act. We have operated under the act on that basis up to the present time. I should like to quote from page 5611 of Hansard of July 29, 1944, where I am reported as follows:

That is another reason why the bill is applied to the transitional period. That does not mean that when the transitional period is up, any government which happens to be in power at that time is in duty bound to do away with the legislation in its entirety, that it will have no right to amend that legislation in any way. Of course, any house that may be here at any time after the war has the right to amend the measure in any way it may see fit. But this particular bill is for the purpose of dealing with a situation that does exist, as it exists, during the transitional period between war and peace. I hope that our markets for farm products for a period of years, possibly two or three or more, for most of our products, will be sufficiently good that we shall be able to obtain a price which is comparable with the price we are now obtaining for our farm products of different kinds. If so, the board that is in existence during that period of time will be keeping a check on what is happening during that period, comparing it with what happened during the war period; and immediately there is any necessity for taking action in connection with any farm product, authority is given the board under this legislation to purchase a surplus of that farm product at the floor price which the government of the day considers to be a reasonable floor in the light of all the facts existing in connection with the case.

I am asked what will they do with all that; will they get rid of it?

That is, all the surpluses.

I can assure hon. members that if I am minister charged with the task, there will not be any of it that will be burned or dumped into the ocean or into the lake. One thing has been demonstrated to us during the war, and as a matter of fact we have always known it. We have always known that there are areas in the world where there are famines from time to time. There are areas where great masses of the population are never properly fed, and there has never been a time when it would not have been possible to take all the food commodities of Canada and send them to some place where someone could have made use of them. Unfortunately, in the past we have kept our actions of that kind limited pretty much to the people that we know most about. But we are entering upon a period when one can leave his home in any part of the world and be in any other part of the world in which he wishes to land some time within the next twenty-four or forty-eight hours. Therefore the radius of our activities and our friendships and all that kind of thing will be very much wider when this war is over than they have ever been before. I am not worrying about finding some place where we can put the surplus food of a country that has only twelve million people in it to start with.

Then we went to dinner, and during the interval I prepared a statement which I read to the house when I came back at eight o'clock. This is the statement, to be found at page 5612 of Hansard for July 29, 1944:

Before the dinner recess I was dealing with some of the points that were suggested by hon. members opposite, particularly the questions raised by the hon. member for Lake Centre and the hon. member for Lethbridge. Perhaps I can best sum up the answers I should like to give to those questions by saying that it would not be fair to the farmers of Canada to do certain things in the transition period. First, I should say it would not be fair to order them, immediately the war is over, to reduce production to the level at which it is certain the commodities could be sold at a given price. I was asked what we were going to do, provided that we had great surpluses, and I call attention to what I have just stated as an answer to that question, and to repeat what I said just before the dinner recess.

During this war period we have been asked to increase production to the limit in order to provide food to those of our allies who require it, as well as to our own people. I repeat that it would be unfair to the farmers, immediately the war is over, to say they must reduce their production to the point where everything they produce can be disposed of at a given price. And I would state that this bill contains provision for dealing with the situation where a given price is essential for uncontrolled production during the transition period.

Then I should say it would be unfair to the farmer immediately to require him to sell at the cost of production, without considering at all any losses he sustained because of the war or any returns he was denied through the controls established during the war. The suggestion was made that farmers had been denied returns in the earlier part of the war and that just at the time when in the ordinary course of events, according to the experiences of the last war, he would have reaped some returns which would have been helpful to him, ceilings were placed upon prices, as a result of which he was denied as great a return as otherwise he might have received. All those matters would have to be taken into consideration during the transition period along the lines I have suggested.

Then, too, I should say it would be unfair to hold that because a farmer had an exceptionally good crop during the transition period he should be prepared to accept a low return per unit, and I make that statement also based upon what I said a few moments ago. During the period of control, in 1942 the farmers had one of the best crops they ever grew. They had a very fair crop in 1943, and it seems likely that this year they will have one of their very best crops again. During these three years we have had prices controlled. I am not at all sure, and neither is anyone in this house, how many years longer those controls are going to remain in effect, but up to the present the production of field crops has been far beyond what we had any right to expect at the time those controls were established.

I make that statement in reply to the suggestion of the hon. member for Lethbridge this afternoon that because we had suggested that wheat acreage be reduced for the time being we were really paying the farmers to decrease production. If he had applied that statement to the efforts of the government in relation to wheat only, it would have been a statement of fact; but when one takes into consideration the further fact that the government made those payments in such a way as to increase the production of feed grains and in turn increase the production of livestock products, it cannot be said that the policy was intended to lower the production of food products. If the policy had been adopted for that purpose it certainly failed, because in 1942, 1943 and, as far as we can tell, in 1944, as was stated this afternoon by the hon. member for Halton, our production has increased by at least 50 per cent. While hon. gentlemen opposite may not agree, I venture to say that, making allowance for the fact that we had good weather in some of those years, these results have come about almost entirely from the policy that was announced and put into force by this government in relation to agriculture.

So that I say the fact that we shall have had two very good crops and one average crop during the period of price ceilings should be taken into consideration in the post-war or transition period, and that farmers who were denied higher returns during wartime should not be denied a fair return on their product simply because in some of the years following the war the yields may be very high.

One of the questions asked directly was this: Is this bill intended to make this country self-sustaining? I would put it in a little different form and say, if the question is whether this bill is intended to promote the production of everything we need in this country, or all the food products that we might desire to have in this country, then those of us who had to do with the drafting of the bill had no such idea in mind and did not intend that the legislation should be used for that purpose. The hon. member for Lethbridge was very much concerned as to how we were going to raise the money. He spoke of this $200 million as an amount of money that had to be found somewhere in order to carry on the activities contemplated by this measure. Of course the $200 million is a revolving fund.

I want to repeat that.

Of course the $200 million is a revolving fund. If a market can be found for all the products over which the government may take control, owing to the fact that they have taken charge of those products at floor prices through some of the organizations provided for in this legislation; if the government can dispose of all those products at floor prices, it will not be necessary to raise any money by taxation or in any other way. In other words, the $200 million is provided in order to have a fund from which to purchase the commodities, or with which the purchase of commodities may be made. Those commodities may be some I mentioned in my speech this morning. One commodity might be butter purchased in the months of May, June and July, put in storage, and put back on this market at possibly the same price in the winter months with the costs added to it.

If the whole $200 million were used for transactions of that kind, then, of course, it would not be necessary to raise money from taxes, or to issue paper money, or to do anything else of that kind, in order to get the money that would be necessary with which to carry on activities under the bill. But if, on the other hand, in dealing with some of these products we were to find it necessary in order to provide floor prices, which we think are essential to give the farmer a proper return, to place the products on this market in Canada, or on any other market at a price lower than that which we had paid under the floor, then it might be necessary to take part of the $200 million in order to make up the difference between the price paid to the farmer for the surplus, and the price received from whatever country we were sending it to. In other words, there might be part of the money which would have to be found by general taxation, or in some other way. But to the extent that products can be disposed of at any price at all, the price received for them, or the money received for them, will go into this revolving fund. And if we make up $200 million through transactions, it would not be necessary to raise anything by taxation.

I read that again because there has been a great deal of discussion with regard to what we had in mind when this bill was introduced. It does reveal that, when the bill was going through the house and before it became legislation, everything which has been done under it since that time was then outlined as a possibility. We have been following almost exactly what we suggested at that time we might follow. I only call attention to what I have just read, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the handling of butter, to show that in the handling of butter during this last year, we have followed to the letter what was outlined.

I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything more than that at the moment. In closing I simply say that we have no different intent in the bill as it now is; we are not changing the terms of the legislation in any manner whatever, except that the time limit is being removed. The proposed amendment removes the time limit, so the bill will contain only one section, just as the other one did. The time limit is removed from the act as it now stands, and it is made applicable over the years that are ahead, as long as this parliament sees fit to keep it on the statute book. I suggest, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the idea behind it all is to put this legislation in the position we suggested, namely, that it is to apply throughout the future.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I think in the past all parties in this house have expressed approval of the principle in this floor prices legislation for primary producers. The unfortunate situation arising from the difficulty of securing markets now makes the application of some measure of this sort extremely necessary. I am sure that we as a party do not believe it is necessary to take further time of the house at this stage, until we see what the bill contains.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome the introduction of this legislation, which foreshadows the placing of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, on a permanent basis. I had hoped the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), in his introductory remarks, would give us something new, something more specific as to what might be done under this act in the years that are ahead. Instead, he read the speech he made in introducing this legislation in 1944. I think the farmers of Canada, while they welcomed the bill in 1944, and while they welcome the placing of this act on a permanent basis in 1950, do not feel that the government has given any real stability to farm income under this act.

I might point out for example, what happened within the last week of August last year, while this measure was in force. The price of hogs at Winnipeg was $31.85 per hundredweight for grade B-1. At the end of December a similar hog was selling for only $26.10 per hundredweight. A drop of $5.75 per hundredweight for hogs within a period of a few months, with this act on the statute book, is certainly not giving farm income any real degree of stability. While this act was in effect, and while the Agricultural Products Act was in effect, the act which will be continued for another year, we find that the packers were not playing the game, either with the Canadian producer or with the British consumer.

For example, in the year 1949 there was shipped a total of 65 million pounds of bacon to Britain. In the first ten months of 1949 we shipped to Britain approximately 33,800,000 pounds of bacon. In the last two months of the year we shipped over 31 million pounds. In other words the packers of this country held bacon in storage until near the end of the year when they learned the new contract price, and then in the last two months of the year unloaded as much bacon on the British market as they had delivered in the first ten months of the year. That is not stabilizing the bacon market, nor is it providing bacon, month in and month out, for the British people. The British do not want to go hungry for bacon for ten months and then have a feast in the last two months of the year, merely because the packers can make a lot more money by conducting their business in that way.

To further substantiate what I have said with reference to the fact that the farmers have not been satisfied with what has been done under this act, I might point to the drastic drop that took place in egg prices last December and January. After December 17, eggs were not bought for the British market, but it was not until January 27 that the government announced it was placing a floor price under eggs. It was not until the farmers across this country had held one protest meeting after another that the Minister of Agriculture finally used the act which he said in 1944 would be used to provide stability in the transition period. I might quote from memory a sentence in a speech of the minister last January in which he said price support for eggs was necessary because at Dauphin, Manitoba, for example, prices for eggs had dropped to as low as eighteen cents a dozen. In the first part of December the farmers received at least fifty cents a dozen, and some of them a good deal more; the government waited until January, waited until a great many producers were getting as little as eighteen cents before any steps were taken to provide a floor under egg prices. I should like to say to the minister that it is all very well for him to read the speech he made in 1944, in introducing this bill; but if the government does not do more in the next five years than it did in the last five years under this bill, the farmers will be thoroughly and justly dissatisfied.

Under the act $200 million can be used by the government from time to time to provide support for agricultural prices. I think it is not good enough that the minister have $200 million with which he can support agricultural prices at any price he may choose. We know that the floor price of butter today is 58½ cents a pound; we do not know how low the minister will allow the price to go. While there is under hogs today a floor of $32.50 a hundredweight, we do not know what the floor will be next year. The farmer certainly has no way of knowing from one year to the next what floor prices, if any, will be established. I therefore believe that the government and the minister should write into this act a parity formula whereby the agricultural producers of this country will be guaranteed, under the statutes of the nation, a price that will not go below a certain figure based on that formula. It is not good enough to say now that eggs shall be supported at 36 cents and 38 cents a dozen when we do not know what support, if any, will be under eggs next year. In my opinion it is not good enough to support egg prices to the packers as the government is doing, and not to the producer and to support bacon prices to the packers and not to the producers. As I pointed out earlier we saw the packers holding off the sale of bacon they had in cold storage until such time as they themselves could make the greatest profit.

No one can produce hogs with any degree of assurance that he will obtain a reasonable return if hogs are going to drop as they did last year more than $5 a hundredweight within a period of four months. That amounted to $8.60 for a 150-pound dressed hog. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), who has raised hogs in the past and is no doubt raising them today, would agree with me, I think, that if a farmer made $8.60 per hog after he had paid for any necessary labour, feed costs, depreciation on buildings, transportation and what-have-you, he would consider that he was making a good profit indeed. If that is the case, then the fact that hog prices dropped so greatly within a period of a few months means that the farmer lost money or in any event worked for nothing.

The minister is going to have $200 million, which he may or may not use from time to time to support agricultural prices as he sees fit. Every time the Minister of Agriculture gets a little surplus of butter, as he would say, or a little surplus of cheese or whatever it happens to be, a cry goes up in the press across the country that the taxpayers of this nation are providing millions of dollars to store agricultural surpluses to keep prices artificially high, and that the taxpayer in the final analysis is the one who will suffer. These comments usually end with saying a free market is best and support prices should not be established under agricultural commodities.

I am going to say that if the government uses the whole $200 million over a period of five years, and does not recoup a dollar from that $200 million, the farmers are still entitled to that kind of support program. The farmers have contributed in various ways to put a floor under the standard of living of certain other sections of our community. I might refer to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It protects, to some extent at least, workers who find that their services are being offered in a falling market. Since 1941, under the Unemployment Insurance Act, the government has contributed a total of more than $127 million; and in the estimates before parliament at the present time is a further $23 million for unemployment insurance for the coming year. That makes a total of $150 million that the taxpayers of Canada are paying into a fund to protect the workers of this nation. I support the unemployment insurance fund, and I believe the agricultural industry would also support a measure of that kind. But I want to point out at the same time that all that those engaged in agriculture are asking is that they be given a program similar to the unemployment insurance program, in that a minimum standard of living be guaranteed the primary producer.

I might point out that through tariffs a great many industries in Canada are protected at the expense of all the Canadian people, including farmers. We have tariffs on British woollen goods, British clothing made from wool, British boots and shoes, washing machines and bicycles, to mention only a few. The farmers of Canada and the people of Canada generally are making a contribution to keep certain industries in operation in this country. The tariffs have protected industry, and farmers ask that they too be given protection through floor prices in the marketing of their products.

I might also mention the fact that the government found it possible, from 1939 until February 1949, to pay to the iron and steel industry a total of more than $51 million in subsidies. I hope the steel industry and other industries that have been protected through tariffs and subsidies will not set up a howl if it costs some money, and some real money, to protect the agricultural producers of our nation. I feel that the prosperity of agriculture in this nation is important not only to the farmers but to each and every occupational group in our country.

Whenever a recession or a depression occurs, farm prices are the first to fall, and with a fall in the level of farm prices, with a reduction in agricultural income, we soon witness widespread unemployment. Whenever the farmers of this nation cannot purchase the products manufactured in our factories, the workers are out of work, the factories are shut down and the whole Canadian nation is suffering. Therefore, in asking that the $200 million be used in a way that will give farmers in the next few years a standard of living at least equal to that enjoyed from 1947 to 1949, I am asking for something that I believe is in the interests of all Canadian people.

One might go over some of the statements that have been made in the past as to whether or not we are losing our markets, and as to whether or not the government is to blame for what has happened. However, I do not propose to pursue that argument at this time. I want to remind the minister of the statement he repeated in introducing this measure this afternoon, namely, that when the world is hungry, when millions of people across the face of the earth are underfed, Canada has no business worrying about finding a place for surplus food, particularly when we are a nation of only 12 million people.

I want to tell the minister too that farmers did have a ceiling placed on farm products, and that they accepted lower prices during the war, and in many instances since the war. Farmers made that sacrifice in the belief that a proper permanent stabilization program would be adopted. How many hundreds of millions of dollars the wheat producers have sacrificed, I do not know. I do not think anyone else knows, but I do know that because of the government's policy of keeping bread prices down in this country, and signing a British contract which hon. members on all sides of the house supported, farmers in western Canada took substantially less for their wheat than might have been received. But the very fact that in the past farmers have accepted less for their products —and in the last few years farmers have made a real contribution to the whole Canadian nation by providing food at reasonable prices—is an indication that they have a just cause when they ask the government to inaugurate a policy which will give them adequate floor prices in peacetime, and when they ask the rest of the nation, if necessary, to provide the money required in order that stabilized prices may be maintained.

The minister is going to have a great deal of difficulty in selling a price-support program to the Canadian nation which results in merely a piling up of surpluses in Canada. We cannot sell that kind of program to the Canadian people. It is not enough to set floor prices. We must move food into consumption channels, and into trade channels throughout the world. I suggest to the minister once again that, along with his colleagues, he explore the possibilities of implementing bilateral trade agreements not only for the sale of agricultural commodities to other nations of the world, but for the importation of manufactured commodities into Canada.

I suggest to the minister and to the government that they might well consider the possibility of accepting sterling in payment of farm products sent to Great Britain. It is not right, it is not just, that we should be piling up surpluses of agricultural commodities in Canada when there are hungry people in the world. We are trying to sell democracy to the world but you cannot sell democracy to a man who is hungry. The United States is trying to sell democracy to every nation in the world. But in my opinion they cannot sell democracy to nations in which millions of people are hungry at the very time when in the United States they have $4,000 million of agricultural surpluses. To summarize I suggest that the government place in the present act a proper formula that will give farmers stability year in and year out, and then take all the necessary steps to see that Canadian agricultural products find their way into the markets of the world, so that we may make our contribution toward feeding mankind.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, we are told that the Right Hon. Winston Churchill a few years ago said that it is just as healthy for a man to change his mind as it is to change his shirt. I am glad that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the government have seen fit to change their opinions with regard to the resolution that was on the order paper last session in connection with the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and which died there. At that time we were afraid that the government was going to do away with this legislation. Perhaps because of the minister's travels throughout Canada he found that the people of Canada, farmers, business people, labouring people and others, were not satisfied to do away with the legislation. I am glad that the resolution we are discussing at the present time is on the order paper and that very soon we shall have a permanent Agricultural Prices Support Act on our statute books.

I am just a little worried that the agricultural industry is again being relegated to a place which it should not occupy, namely, to the position of Cinderella. With the assistance of the government, many other industries seem to be able to take care of themselves. While agriculture was boosted to the skies during the war for the effort it was putting forth at that time, not enough is said at this time about the efforts put forth by the farmers of Canada and of the actual losses they have sustained because of government policy. Because of that, something really worth while should now be done to keep agriculture in a prosperous condition.

In the past few months we have heard leaders of labour organizations advocate that a healthy policy be made effective for the industry of agriculture. These men are finally beginning to realize, as they should have done many years ago, that just as soon as the farmer has not got money labourers will commence to walk the streets, because the farmers cannot buy the products of industry. They are also beginning to realize that the best potential customer the manufacturer and others in Canada have is our own Canadian farming population. I believe that was made clear also to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at its meeting at Niagara Falls recently by the Minister of Agriculture. I hope that others in high places will soon take cognizance of this fact and do something about it.

Agricultural Prices Support Act

It would appear from an article printed in the Manitoba Co-operator of December 8 that many people are dissatisfied with the stand taken in connection with the international commodity clearing house. I have here a number of complaints which I should like to put on record to show that people in many parts of Canada, and engaged in different occupations, are beginning to realize the importance of our industry.

The article reads:

A strangulation of the international commodity clearing house, as proposed by Director-General N. E. Dodd, at the fifth annual conference of the food and agriculture organization in Washington, has brought a flood of strong and vigorous protests. The U.S. State Department and other government representatives from other countries, succeeded in defeating the ICCH plan.

I might point out that Canada is one of the countries which voted against the proposal. Perhaps there were some reasons, but I think those reasons might very well have been overcome. The article continues:

The protests came from organized agriculture, through the international federation of agriculture producers, labour and religious organizations.

The conference backed a substitute proposal providing for a consolidated international committee with no authority and no funds.

The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), speaking in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, dealt with this matter in full detail, pointing out that representatives of the international monetary fund were present when those discussions took place, and that they will be present again when there are other discussions. He pointed out that, as in the past, money will again be made the master rather than the servant of the people.

While this condition is allowed to continue I feel that agriculture and the people of Canada generally will not be permitted to have that degree of justice to which they are entitled. The article continues:

H. H. Hannam, president of the IFAP, and president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, spoke on behalf of the farm organizations associated with IFAP.

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Co-operative League of the U.S.A., took an aggressive part to overcome opposition to ICCH.

Wm. Green, American Federation of Labour president, cabled from London—"Economic interests of the people of all nations will be best promoted through the adoption of such a policy," as outlined by FAO Director-General N. E. Dodd.

Philip Murray, CIO president, said "CIO feels that an extension of principles of aiding the countries of the world to balance their foreign trade would be furthered by the adoption of the principles and concepts of ICCH."

"American farm families are confronted with sharply curtailed incomes as a reward for their productivity, while underfed families elsewhere find it impossible to secure the food they desire . . . It is neither humane nor economically sound to wait for a gradual adjustment in international trade," stated Right Rev. Luigi G. Ligutti, executive secretary of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, and Rev. W. J. Gibbons, S.J., of the conference's executive committee.

Emil Rieve, president of the textile workers union of America, urged Secretary of Agriculture Brannan to modify the U.S. delegation's position "to prevent an imminent and serious dislocation of American and world agriculture with attendant insane and inhuman destruction of so-called surpluses and restriction of production."

I have pointed out that in the past agriculture has done its full share and that if it is only given some encouragement, it will continue to do so in the future. In this morning's Citizen we find an account of the recognition being given Canada, the United States and other nations for the help given to Britain. Britain at the present time is setting up a memorial valued at £2 million so that students from this and other countries may make their homes over there when they are receiving tuition in London. This, I believe, is worth-while recognition, which will be appreciated in many parts of Canada. In some of our daily and weekly papers we have seen articles dealing with agriculture, and suggesting that the prices of agricultural products should be reduced so that the consumers may have a lower cost of living. They do not realize that by doing this they are putting some of the workers out of employment and at the same time lowering the standard of living of farmers all across Canada. Neither do they realize that at the present time the labourer's dollar is buying more food than it ever bought before. As I have said on more than one occasion:

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.

That is why I suggest that they learn something about the other side of the picture. For their information I should like to place on record figures, showing percentages of national income received by farmers over a number of years. This information is taken from The Budget, a publication of the Alberta wheat pool which, in turn, gets its information from a recent issue of The Canadian Banker. The following table gives the percentages of net farm income of farm operators, as a percentage of net national income:

	per cent
1926	17·0
1927	14·9
1928	14·6
1929	9·5
1930	8·6
1931	4·5
1932	4·2
1933	4·1
1934	6·7
1935	7·6
1936	7·9
1937	8·1
1938	9·3
1939	10·8

	per cent
1940	9·7
1941	8·3
1942	13·0
1943	10·7
1944	12·5
1945	9·9
1946	11·6
1947	11·3

Perhaps I might make some comments on this table, but before doing so may I point out that farmers comprise anywhere from 27½ per cent to 33 per cent of our population. I would direct the attention of hon. members to the figure for 1929, that year when wicked men brought about a man-made depression. Hon. members will notice the difference in the income of farmers in the years following. I remember it well, because at the time I was struggling to pay off some debts I had contracted at a time when the prices of things I had to buy were much higher than they were in 1929 or, indeed, until after two or three years of the last war had been fought.

Turning to the figure for 1933, I would add that at that time the farmers of Canada, as their share of the national income, received an average of $198 per farm. I wonder how that figure compares with the income of others who did not put in half the hours of work or do half the work the farmers did.

Turning to the figure for 1941, it will be noted that after the war had been in progress for about three years the farmers were still receiving almost the same as they had received during the worst of the depression years.

Reference to the figure for 1945 will show that at that time farmers were still down in the depths, so far as the prices received for their commodities were concerned.

As a final comment on this table, may I point out that I have not been able to secure the figures showing the incomes of farmers in 1948 and 1949. Perhaps we shall have to be content to strike an average, as a result of comparison with the other years I have given.

We feel that the Agricultural Prices Support Act is particularly necessary at the present time because I think every hon. member realizes that the costs of the things the farmer has to buy in order to carry on his production are still climbing, while during many months past the prices of some farm products have been going down. We would not be satisfied to have this legislation made permanent unless certain things are done. One thing we feel should be done is to establish parity prices in comparison with the things the farmer has to buy. During recent months I have received, and I expect many other hon. members have also, a deluge of resolutions from the farmers' union of Alberta asking that floor prices be set at the 1949 level. Instead of that I would suggest that parity prices be adopted and in that way we would have a fair level.

I have been a farmer long enough to know just what the farmers are entitled to. We have pointed out on many occasions that in the past the farmers have paid a heavy insurance premium in order to secure parity prices in the future. I was glad to hear the minister read the statement he made in July 1944 when this act was first passed when he said that if the farmers were compelled to take less for their goods during the war period because of quotas and other restrictions the prices support act would be made use of.

As has been pointed out by my colleagues and myself on different occasions, other industries in Canada are being protected. For instance, we have the railroads getting increased freight rates, and they in turn are paying increased wages to their help. The same applies to every other industry across the country. We have a tariff that should have been abolished years ago. We are compelled to pay much higher prices for things we buy because of that tariff. Our manufacturers should be compelled to sell their products on the open market basis as the farmer is compelled to sell his products on markets in other countries.

I do not feel that I should say much more as other speakers are to follow, but I would like to place on the record the Social Credit policy in connection with agriculture. It is a short program and we think it is worthy of the consideration of the government and every hon. member of this house.

1. A home market constantly supplied with purchasing power. Our Canadian population constitutes our greatest potential market. The Canadian people must be supplied with the necessary purchasing power. We have had a lot to say about this during the past 14 or 15 years but apparently it has not got into the minds of some members of the house simply because they will not try to understand.

2. A compensated price discount technique for ensuring fair prices to producers without causing inflation. That has also been fully explained on different occasions.

3. A two-price system to work in conjunction with an international commodity clearing house to guarantee parity returns to farmers. This has been advocated by our members for many years and it would link up pretty well with the ICCH which was recently turned down because—I was going to use a phrase which might be unparliamentary.

An hon. Member: Use it anyway.

Mr. Fair: It was turned down because of the mischief that was worked among the delegates by the representatives of the international monetary fund.

4. The extension of export markets and acceptance of non-convertible sterling as a means of recapturing and retaining British and European markets. This parliament has to accept its share of the responsibility of our present day dollar trouble and the dollar trouble that we will continue to have unless some action is taken by it and other governments.

5. Provincial-dominion marketing boards to serve as a foundation for—

6. A permanent Agricultural Prices Support Act.

As I have stated already, we are not satisfied to have the Agricultural Prices Support Act on our statute books unless it guarantees something worth while. It is true that there is $200 million in the revolving fund but up to the present time very little of that has been used. I understand that the United States has nearly $4,000 million invested in agricultural surpluses and other purchases. I submit that we should not stop at $200 million if further amounts are necessary, because with an impoverished agricultural population the rest of the country cannot be prosperous.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): When the Minister of Agriculture introduced the resolution he said that he had discussed the matter with the opposition groups and there was an undertaking that the passage of this measure would be facilitated, at least through the committee stages. I have some questions which I want to ask in committee, but in view of the debate that has been precipitated there are a few remarks I should like to make at this time.

Mr. Gardiner: Perhaps I may be permitted to explain so that there will be no misunderstanding. The arrangement with the other groups was in connection with the other bill. I did not ask for an undertaking that there would be no discussion at any stage on this bill. I would appreciate it very much if we could get on to the second reading without further delay, but so far as this bill is concerned there was no undertaking.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I appreciate the minister's explanation as I had understood that the understanding applied to both measures. I would point out that the revolving fund provided in 1944 of $200 million is approximately ten per cent of the contribution the Canadian farmers have made since 1942 toward subsidizing the consumers of Great Britain and Canada. As has been pointed out by other speakers, they have a right to claim some legislation of this nature.

The minister quoted from the speech he made in 1944 but I notice that the October issue of the review of agricultural conditions in Canada apparently brought that statement up to date. There is considerable useful information in this issue and perhaps I should read a paragraph or two to indicate the necessity for this type of legislation. I quote:

> In addition to population increases the food situation has also been affected by a growing awareness of the basic importance of food and nutrition in the welfare of all people. At the same time, the emergence of self-government for some populations has fostered an increasing effective demand for adequate diets in countries where diets formerly were not of much moment except to the millions of individuals themselves. Plans and programs for agricultural development and better diets are now an integral part of the policies of most governments. In some, the energetic prosecution of these programs—along with the contribution of favourable weather—has resulted in substantial progress. In others, the plans tend to remain plans and the blueprint has been accepted as the building.
>
> The pattern of agriculture in the world today is shaped by many factors: the food needs of the people, the necessity for better cultural practices, the problem of balancing external accounts and, in some cases, the expediences of international politics. Many devices are employed to develop the production dictated by these factors. These include subsidies, guaranteed prices, bilateral agreements and many others. The degree of this governmental activity varies from country to country. In some, it reaches down to the individual farm, controlling the area of specific crops, the number of each class of livestock, the amounts of food and seed which can be retained on the farm, prices paid and prices received. In others, governments have intervened to the minimum extent thought necessary to protect agricultural economies from the effects of abrupt price changes in the post-war transition period.

I think most farm producers realize what happened in Canada a few months following the publication of that article. It was announced then that we had suffered the loss of certain contracts with the United Kingdom, and a sudden downward trend in the price of bacon and other hog products began. We had a disastrous price fall in eggs. I know of many people who over a period of time had developed splendid flocks of poultry in western Canada, where I am more conversant with these matters, but they had disposed of them before the government tackled the situation. In fact at recent poultry producers' meetings we have had the prediction that, as a result of the failure of the government to take hold of the matter sooner, there will probably be a shortage of eggs next fall. At any rate many of these poultry producers suffered great losses on their investment. There is no doubt about that. According to the bureau of statistics there were in storage at the first of February, 1950, some 25,075,000 pounds of poultry meat. That is about ten million pounds more than a year ago. The same thing can be said of many more agricultural commodities. There are more eggs and egg products in storage now than there were a year ago, and so it runs all through the picture.

As the previous speaker pointed out, we are not entirely satisfied with this legislation. We admit that something has to be done. As was so well pointed out by the prime minister in 1943, when he was urging farmers to produce to the limit, it was true enough that they were not obtaining the prices that farmers in all other countries of the world were, and the fact would have to be taken into consideration in the years following the war. I have not the quotation before me, but I know that nobody will deny that statement. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has himself repeatedly pointed out the same thing, that farmers were then working for less than agricultural producers of other countries and that fact would have to be borne in mind in the years that followed the war. We know that these people have made a great contribution.

I have before me a report of a speech made by the minister at Saskatoon. It can be found in the Winnipeg Tribune of March 16 at page 4. The Minister of Agriculture is reported as telling a meeting of the Saskatchewan rural municipalities association that:

> A campaign would be launched "if necessary" to prevent oleomargarine manufacturers producing to the extent that it threatens the 400,000 Canadian dairy farmers.

I have a question that I think the minister should answer concerning this measure because there were stocks of creamery butter amounting to 36,578,000 pounds as of March 1, 1950, compared to stocks of 18,769,000 pounds one year ago. That is double the quantity in storage. If the minister has some type of legislation in mind, or if he is going to be responsible for such a campaign as that indicated in the speech he made to the great convention at Saskatoon, then members of the House of Commons should have more information from the minister about the type of legislation or the campaign that he intends to foster in this important matter.

As for the legislation itself, we believe that a formula should be set forth for arriving at these floor prices. Producers have no idea how they will be arrived at. The formula should be set forth in the act, and the floor prices should be announced well in advance of the production period. We also believe that the formula should be arrived at in consultation with representative producers of the various commodities throughout the country. I am sure that is a very fair request.

I do not want to take any more time at this stage. I should like to ask some questions in committee. I only want to point out now that this party is not satisfied with the measure. We will facilitate it as being partially effective at this time, but it is a long long way short of what we should have now to protect agriculture in Canada. I hope the minister will tell the house what he has in mind as to the form of legislation or the campaign that he will promote on behalf of the 400,000 butter producers in Canada.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the house for any length of time, but there are one or two remarks I want to make. I am pleased that the minister has introduced this legislation and that it does not contain any expiry date. I think that is a good thing. I am happy to see that because the resolution is something on which we can base forward prices, which I believe in. I do not know whether the minister believes in forward prices, but I know from conversations with him that he has seen them in operation in different countries. I think we will come to that in Canada sooner or later. I mean by that that when we breed a cow we will know how much we will get for the steer three years hence. The drawback that I have noticed in the operations that have been taking place under the Agricultural Prices Support Act is that prices have always been based on the packers' level. I think the minister should take that into consideration and see if something cannot be done.

I placed one instance before the minister a couple of years ago. It had to do with the time when lambs were selling at about seven or eight cents a pound on the market, and they agreed to pay 10¼, I believe it was. I am not quite sure of my figures. It was a quarter less than the price set by the meat board. That did not help the farmer. It was meant to help him, but it never helped him because the packer just paid what he felt like paying for the lambs, eight or nine cents. Immediately the packer skinned the lambs and hung them up by the heels he received the guaranteed price under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Knowles: Skinned the farmers, too.

Mr. Bryce: And skinned the farmer at the same time. We have had the same thing with hogs. I raised that matter with the parliamentary assistant to the minister the other day. Hogs are based on the packers' level. The packer can get any price he likes for them. He can pay any price he likes for them, and he is sitting pretty all the time. If that is to be the case, then the only thing that will happen is that we will have to set up co-operatives, kill our own hogs, and sell them as bacon. As long as the hog industry is so definitely in the hands of the packers, then the farmer will be at a great disadvantage.

Those are the things I wanted to bring to the minister's attention. Later, I may have an opportunity of bringing some other matters to his attention, but I thought I would have a better chance of pointing out these things to him now.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Yale): I should like to take a little time to place on the record the condition that now exists in the fruit-growing area of British Columbia. I fully realize that the minister is conscious of that condition, and possibly knows more about it than I do. I should like to place it on the record, however, because I have received a copy of a resolution recently submitted to a convention of fruit growers at Penticton.

As you know, the fruit-growing area of British Columbia is concentrated in the interior, mainly in the Okanagan valley. The other day mention was made of the fact that unemployment in Canada is spasmodic and is in pockets, and one might say that depressed farming communities are also in pockets. I feel that applies to the fruit growing industry; it is a depressed pocket at the moment. Suggestions have been made that we grow less, or that the trees be torn up. I should like to point out that an apple tree takes 15 years to fully mature, or to give its best crop. A fruit farmer cannot change his crops as easily as a wheat farmer, or a chicken farmer. In a fruit growing area there has to be long range planning. For that reason, while there is a surplus at the present time, in five or ten years there may be a shortage of fruit in Canada. We in the valley must look at the long range picture.

Curtailment of planting has been suggested, but this would work a real hardship on the veterans who have recently taken up acreage for fruit growing. Any curtailment of new acreage would definitely strike at the veterans. I am confident that would be the greatest mistake the government could make, to place a barrier against veterans entering the fruit industry. I know that the surplus situation today is serious. It is a question of economics. I am sure a solution can be found.

The other day I was interested in reading a speech by the Hon. Henry Bowman, minister of agriculture in British Columbia, which possibly may bring home the seriousness of the situation to each one of us. It reads as follows:

> We heard a very interesting talk from Norris E. Dodd, director general of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. Mr. Dodd had recently returned from a visit to many of the European countries on both sides of the iron curtain. He stated that the world population had increased by 200 million during the last 12 years.

This is the point I should like to draw to your attention.

> Two-thirds of the population were undernourished. In some of the countries he visited, the people were dying in the streets from starvation. In most countries it was considered that some 2,500 to 3,000 calories were required to sustain life. Many of the peoples in the countries visited were getting less than 1,500 calories.

Obviously, then, Mr. Speaker, our problem is one of distribution. I feel it would be a good policy for the government to supply some of these missing calories by sending Canadian wheat, fruit and other foodstuffs, which we have in abundance, to these people. I know it is difficult to do it, especially in view of the dollar shortage in those countries. We in the interior of British Columbia, in my opinion, set an example not only to the government but to our neighbours to the south, when we made a gift of over a million boxes of apples to the British people. Time and again it has been suggested that barter deals be arranged. Small amounts of fruit and vegetables have been bartered efficiently and profitably during the past year or two. I should like to see those barter arrangements extended a little further with the European countries that cannot purchase our fruit in any other way. By doing this, we would be building up good will, and at the same time retaining those markets until the world returns to a state of normalcy. I think we can be proud of the Canadian gift of fruit already made to the world. We can hold our heads high as a nation that has done its Christian duty towards our fellow men.

On the other hand, this afternoon the minister said he would not want surplus foodstuffs dumped in the ocean or in the lake. When he mentioned "the lake" it recalled to my mind our own lake which has, in previous years, received some of these dumped foodstuffs, particularly soft fruits and apples. Our problem is a big one. I should like to place on the record the extent to which the industry has grown in the last few years. Last year, our apple production exceeded 8 million boxes; our crop of cherries was the largest we ever produced, and 520,109 cases were marketed in fresh form; of apricots, we had 603,339 lugs; of peaches, we had over 2 million cases; plums, far in excess of 1948; prunes, 1,023,000 lugs; plus 640 tons of SO_2 cherries which went to the processor. I am not mentioning the grapes, pears and so on, but that is the problem. Last year we had an abundance, and on top of that Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes had one of the largest crops they have ever grown, of truly fine quality, making the competition rather keen.

We have tried to find markets everywhere. We have emissaries all over the world. I should like to read to you a report made in Penticton early this year by Mr. J. B. Lander, the sales manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited. I point this out to show the government that we in the valley have done our utmost to find markets. It reads as follows:

Shipments of boxed apples to off-shore markets in 1948 aggregated 568,245 boxes, distributed in nine countries, of which the most important, in terms of volume, was Brazil.

As I speak to you this afternoon, off-shore sales are practically non-existent, owing in large part to an export subsidy of $1.25 per box on U.S. apple exports. The United States department of agriculture in Washington made this subsidy arrangement effective on the 12th day of October, 1949. This immediately shut off off-shore exports. We had orders from trans-Pacific markets for twenty carloads of apples when the subsidy was announced, and these orders were immediately cancelled. Where this obstacle is not operative, and it only excludes a few countries, such as Venezuela and Cuba, exchange control regulations made no provision for fresh fruit importations from dollar areas. This is the reason we were not able to enter the South African market. Protracted negotiations aimed at working out a barter deal involving an exchange of our apples for Brazilian cocoa butter broke down, when the control authorities of Brazil refused to authorize details acceptable to the suppliers in each country. It would have necessitated our obligating ourselves to sell in Canada a large quantity of cocoa butter, which would have been stored in New York, and we found, after a thorough investigation, that Brazilian cocoa butter was not particularly acceptable to the Canadian chocolate and biscuit manufacturers.

A world-wide canvass through the Canadian trade commissioners' service within recent weeks was not productive of a single encouraging prospect. Our sales off-shore as at January 11 totalled 110,000 boxes to nine separate countries, of which the largest single item is again Brazil. We have shipped 444,500 boxes of apples to the United Kingdom. This figure perhaps could have been included in the off-shore export markets but the deal was really in a different category, as it was an arrangement which was consummated by the British Food Mission with the Canadian government and ourselves.

I could go on quoting the struggle they have had in trying to capture some of the United States market. But they have made a wonderful arrangement whereby a large quantity of apples is being shipped to the United States market. I am merely pointing out to you that genuine efforts have been made to place our fruit without bothering the government. We have advertised this year more than usual in practically every paper of repute across the Dominion of Canada. Again we are handicapped by freight rates in reaching the markets of Quebec and Ontario. But in spite of that our excellent product, as a result of the efficient way in which it is packed, has penetrated even into Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. I find that last year 27,900 boxes were sold in our new province of Newfoundland.

I could go into the organization of the tree fruit board, but many hon. members realize and know full well that this is possibly the best organized industrial group in the whole Dominion of Canada. With all the handicaps it has had to face over a number of years it has brought remarkable success to an industry that has struggled from a poor start twenty-five years ago. I have pointed out to you how we have searched every avenue for trade and how the competition from the United States apple growers has handicapped our export sales. The subsidy of $1.25 a box by the United States government cannot be overcome by an apple that carries no subsidy as such. This naturally has placed the Canadian grower in a disadvantageous position in the foreign market, particularly the United Kingdom market.

I am going to put before the minister this suggestion. The farmers who have done so much to stabilize their own industry, and then have met conditions which are entirely beyond their control, are deserving of help. I know a formula could be evolved whereby the cost of production could be maintained over a period of years. I am glad to know that this bill extends the life of the prices support act. A period of one year gave no stability to the fruit industry in which, as I pointed out before, the farmer has to look ahead ten, fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jones: Surely.

Mr. Blackmore: I was wondering if that $1.25 subsidy which the United States government gives applied to apples offered by the United States for export to Canada or only to apples for sale in their own country?

Mr. Jones: I do not think it is on exports to Canada. I think I mentioned an arrangement made between Canadian producers and the United States producers. They work together.

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Jones: Yes.

Mr. Blackmore: Do they offer that same subsidy as an export subsidy in order to penetrate other markets such as the European markets?

Mr. Jones: Yes; that is the object of it.

Mr. Blackmore: Thereby competing with Canadian apples?

Mr. Jones: That is right.

Mr. Coldwell: Where is the non-discrimination policy?

Mr. Jones: I mention the matter at the present time—and I know the minister is giving favourable consideration to assistance to the farmers—because I should like the government to declare its policy as early as possible. I say that because the farmer is obliged to expend a great deal of money early in the year. At the present time pruning has to take place and has to be paid for. In a short time, before the buds are actually open, we must spend far more money for spraying this year than we did last year. All these costs the farmer, unless he has a subsidy for last year's crop, will not be able to meet.

I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the resolution which was passed on March 17 of this year. I will read it in part:

> The executive of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association has given instructions that the following resolution regarding financial assistance from the dominion government be placed in your hands:

It is addressed to all members of the dominion cabinet and members of parliament from British Columbia. The resolution continues:

> Whereas in 1949 due to a large crop and adverse marketing conditions, the fruit from British Columbia's tree fruit area is being disposed of at a sacrifice price, and
>
> Whereas the recent announcement by B.C. Tree Fruits Limited that it had made a deal with Great Britain to take a considerable quantity of British Columbia apples without charge, and
>
> Whereas this deal will place a very heavy burden on the growers of the British Columbia tree fruits area who cannot afford to carry this load without substantial financial assistance from the dominion government,
>
> Therefore, the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, as unanimously represented by its 28 locals comprising 3,805 registered growers, hereby urge that the dominion government subsidize the growers on the total apple crop of British Columbia tree fruits area to an amount equal to the average price of the last three years' prices.

In determining what assistance the farmer should have, the process is simple. We know exactly the average cost of producing a box of apples. As I pointed out before, it may vary from 95 cents to $1.05. It depends on the operation. But from district to district I understand the variation is not more than 10 cents. I plead on behalf of the farmers who today have less than half the cost of production in sight if no subsidy is given. On their behalf I plead that the government give assistance to the extent of the cost of production, in order to keep a flourishing industry prospering in a prosperous valley and to keep 120,000 people living in one of the finest communities in Canada, which could easily be wrecked by failure of the government to come through to their assistance at this time. The situation may not occur again; we hope it will not. But the conditions were beyond their control and they are appealing to you on that basis.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to have this opportunity of speaking in support of a resolution to extend the life of the Agricultural Prices Support Act on an indefinite basis. I feel a good deal easier about this resolution than I did about the one which appeared on the order paper last year and which would have limited the life of the Agricultural Prices Support Act to the end of this parliament. However, whilst the passage of this legislation will enable the government to keep faith with the farmers of Canada, on the other hand it does not guarantee that they will do so. In other words, legislation of this kind is of little value to the farmers unless it is actually utilized.

That remark is prompted of course by what took place in Canada in December of last year and January of this year, when the price of certain agricultural products took a drastic drop. For example, it may be remembered that the price of poultry products dropped to depression levels and it took a matter of a month or more before the government took action to correct the situation. I think one of the main reasons why the government took that action was probably the storm of protest that swept Ontario. I certainly must say that I think the remarks made by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. McCubbin) at that time were unwise because they undoubtedly gave the impression that he was advocating that the government should break faith with the farmers. I am not saying that was his intention, but that certainly was the interpretation which was placed by many farm organizations upon that statement of his.

Let us make no mistake with regard to the responsibility of the government to support farm prices at a level that will bear a fair relationship to the price of other commodities, because, as the Minister of Agriculture has already said, during the latter years of the war the farmers were asked to take less for their produce than they might otherwise have obtained. They were asked to do that in the name of stabilization and therefore this legislation is for the purpose of carrying out a government obligation to bring about or to maintain the stabilization of agricultural prices in the post-war period.

I am not going to say what the losses were that were suffered by the farmers during those years. I notice that a number of hon.

members on the other side have criticized figures that have been used by hon. members on this side of the house. Hon. members have emphasized the fact that different figures have been used. Of course different figures have been used because they were being used in regard to different commodities. The figure of half a billion dollars has been used in regard to the losses on wheat—it may be more or it may be less—but generally speaking they are based on the figures that were tabled in the house by the government. Then the figure of a billion dollars or more has been given in relation to all agricultural produce. I am not going to attempt to say whether that figure is too high or too low, but it was given in regard to all agricultural produce, and not in regard to wheat alone. I look upon these losses which resulted from agriculture subsidizing the Canadian consumer as a fund which should now be held in trust by the government for the purpose of subsidizing or stabilizing agricultural prices in the future. I feel that agriculture now definitely has a large credit with the government as the result of having subsidized the consumer during those war years.

The minister referred to the $200 million fund under the Agricultural Prices Support Act as a revolving fund. I do not think we should be under any delusion in regard to that matter because no doubt there will be times when considerable costs will be incurred to carry out the obligations under this act. In his speech the minister said that there may be times when goods bought under this act will have to be sold at a loss. Personally I do not think there is any doubt about that. At times these losses may be severe, but I doubt very much whether they will be anything near as great as the losses that were suffered by the farmers as the result of the government's stabilization program during the war. Therefore the farmers will not be asking the people to put up any money that the farmers have not already put up themselves during that war stabilization program.

After all, when we stabilize agricultural prices we are not merely helping the farmers out; we are helping the people of Canada out as well, because we cannot have an efficient agriculture unless we have parity prices. Unless we maintain agriculture on an efficient basis we cannot hope to maintain agricultural production at a high level, and it is in the interests of the people of Canada, and the people of the world at large, that agricultural production should be maintained at a very high level.

I have noticed in the press recently what I would call mischievous articles regarding price support. It is unfortunate that articles of this kind should appear, because they may help to undermine public opinion, and if you undermine public opinion on this matter it makes it that much more difficult for the government to carry out policies that agriculture has a right to expect. I want to quote one of these press articles which appeared in the Financial Times of February 17 under the byline of "Tempus". It reads as follows:

> Incidentally, while we are putting ceilings on this and floors under that, I would like to see one politician who has guts enough to get up and ask: what about the poor old consumers?

Then he goes on:

> If we took out the subsidy structure from foods, I often wonder where we'd land. Maybe the consumer would get a break; a thought, apparently, often repugnant to the government.

Let me say that no group in this house has given greater consideration to the needs of the consumer than has this group. On the other hand, let us not forget that, as the Minister of Agriculture said, 60 per cent of consumers are either directly engaged in agriculture, or in some way directly connected with it. Therefore a very large percentage of the consumers are interested in agriculture and are affected considerably by agricultural policy. There are no truer words spoken than that the prosperity of Canada depends to a very large degree upon the prosperity of the farmer. Tempus suggests that if we drop price support the consumer will get a break. I recall that back in the thirties there was no price support on agricultural produce. The bottom dropped right out. The price of butter fell down to 8 cents a pound, eggs to 5 cents a dozen, wheat 19½ cents a bushel, oats 5 cents a bushel. You could not have the price of agricultural produce very much lower than it was at that time. I ask this question. Did the consumer get a break at that time as a result of these low prices? I would say definitely that the consumer went broke because in many instances he was not able to buy even at those reduced prices. Especially do we remember that during that period we had a million people on relief, over half a million unemployed, and many people with very low income. Therefore as a result of agricultural prices falling to that low level the whole Canadian economy was badly wrecked. When Tempus suggests that we might give the consumer a break by letting agricultural prices fall, I would say history proves the contrary to be the truth. When agricultural prices have been high the people of Canada as a whole have been prosperous, and have been in a position to pay those high prices.

I think it is well to remember that secondary industries set their prices at a level to recover costs and profit. All that agriculture is asking today is that its prices should be allowed to bear a fair relationship to the prices of the secondary industries.

The question is often raised as to whether or not farm prices are too high at the present time. We often see suggestions made that they are too high, and no doubt in good faith many housewives feel that they have to pay too much for farm produce. Therefore I want to quote from a brief presented by the federation of agriculture to the cabinet showing the relationship between farm prices and the general purchasing power. I quote from page 5 of the brief:

> The general purchasing power in the domestic market is at an all-time high, and there is no legitimate reason why farmers should be compelled at this time to sell at reduced prices in the domestic market.
>
> Using figures provided by the dominion bureau of statistics and the Department of Labour, we find that during 1949 food prices were not high in relation to other prices and to incomes. Based on an average of the existing wage rates in eight leading Canadian industries we find that, with the exception of the depression years of the thirties, one hour's wages would buy more cheese, more eggs, more bacon, in 1949 than at any time since 1913. Speaking of cheese alone, one hour's wages in 1949 would buy 42 per cent more cheese than in 1925-29. Similarly one hour's wages would buy 16 per cent more bacon and 6 per cent more eggs in 1949 than in the 1925-29 period. This indicates that general purchasing power during 1949 was equally high or higher than price levels for farm food products.

It is well to keep these figures in mind when you hear people suggesting that the price of farm produce is too high. Yet we find today that agricultural prices are falling while, at the same time, farm production costs are continuing to rise. We see one rise in freight rates after another. The cost of machinery is still going up, chiefly as a result of devaluation. Last fall the price of farm tractors—and I am thinking particularly of one make of tractor—increased by $185.

Labour in various parts of Canada is considering it necessary to ask for increased wages, which result in still further increases in the prices of the commodities they are producing. There is therefore no justification for the suggestion that the prices of agricultural products in Canada are too high at the present time.

I recall hearing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) say at the convention of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at Niagara Falls that the Agricultural Prices Support Act was no alternative to markets, and that the prices support act could stabilize prices only where surpluses were small. That being so, I am sure the minister would be the first to admit that there should not be any problem in stabilizing prices today, because he has stated in the house that our surpluses are very small. He said in particular that we had only small surpluses of butter, cheese and honey. That being so, there should be no difficulty in the stabilization of agricultural prices, if that should become necessary.

Speaking about markets, it is well understood that we have two, namely the home market and the export market. The maintenance of both is the responsibility of the federal government. In connection with the home market it is the responsibility of the federal government to take steps to maintain the purchasing power of the people at a level which will make it possible for them to buy the production of the country, or that of other countries for which our products may be exchanged.

With respect to the export market, it is the responsibility of the government to maintain a realistic trade policy under which it will be possible to exchange our goods for those of other nations. There is no doubt that the home market in Canada today could be greatly expanded. I have been glad on several occasions to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that our surpluses have been reduced as a result of an expanding home market because, in my opinion, the home market is the one which should have preference over any other market at all times. If our surpluses are reduced as a result of expanding consumption there is nothing to worry about. On the other hand, when our surpluses are reduced as the result of a reduction in production, then we have an unhealthy situation.

In dealing with the home market the government should give consideration to the proposals made last year by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their brief. Special consideration should be given to the proposals put forward from time to time by Professor Hope, economic adviser to that organization. May I quote briefly from a speech he delivered before the convention of the federation at Niagara Falls. The Rural Co-operator in its issue of February 14 quotes him as follows:

> "The timid and cautious way the government has handled price supports in the past month," said Dr. Hope, "leads the farmer to believe that the policy seems to be based on a desire to protect the $200,000,000 fund to the utmost.
>
> "The government appears to be fearful of holding a surplus and taking a loss on it. We may as well face the facts: price support action is bound to result in some cost, otherwise there would be no need for supports.
>
> "Some will say that if there is no market the government should take off the market produce it cannot sell. A year ago at Saskatoon I said Canada needed a domestic surplus food disposal plan to channel surplus foods into the hands of low-income consumers.
>
> "I repeat that statement today," said Dr. Hope. "We cannot dump the food overseas—there would be immediate repercussions from other countries.

But we have a large potential market in Canada of low-income people. We must tap that market by special measures.

Then the federation of agriculture referred to the food allotment proposals being put forward in the United States. Consideration should be given to the Brannan plan, which has received a good deal of publicity. It is true that the farm bureau in the United States did oppose that plan, although a Gallup poll discloses that a majority of farmers in that country were behind it.

In my view the chief objection to the Brannan plan—and I believe this is the one that was raised by the farm bureau—is that under that proposal the prices of farm products would be allowed to fall, thereby increasing consumption. The farmers would then be paid a price to make up the difference between the prices at which agricultural products sold and what was considered to be a parity price. The objection of the bureau was that the claim would be made that farmers were being subsidized to that extent. It wanted the prices of agricultural products to be maintained at parity level, and then to have the general consumer subsidized so that he could buy those products at reduced prices.

If any subsidizing is to be done, then it is the latter plan which I believe would be the better one, namely that of first of all trying to maintain agricultural products at fair prices, and then to subsidize Canadian consumers to buy those products at whatever prices may be considered advisable.

With respect to export markets I would repeat what I have said before in the house, that the condition of those markets is due to the policies of this government and policies followed by the United States under certain international agreements passed in 1945. Those agreements made international trade a financial problem rather than a problem of exchanging goods and services for goods and services.

Our stand has always been that the true function of international trade is the exchange of goods and services between nations on a basis of mutual advantage, instead of following the policy this government has followed consistently since 1945, of trying to make our sale of goods to Europe dependent upon their being able to pay us in dollars.

May I at this point congratulate the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) upon what I thought was a progressive and realistic speech delivered in the house on the question of marketing our exports. Apparently his speech did not meet with favour among the rest of the cabinet. I believe his proposal was a logical one. Evidently he had reached his conclusions after visiting a number of countries. It was his view that if we could set up a body of men to trade our surplus goods for the surplus goods of other nations we would in that way be able to overcome our trade difficulties. That is what we in this group have been proposing ever since 1944. Therefore I was disappointed when I found that the Minister of Agriculture had turned down the proposal for an international commodity clearing house, when it was placed before the FAO conference recently. He stated that while he supported the underlying principle, he felt that what was proposed under the international commodity clearing house could be accomplished individually by Canada. Therefore it did not receive his support.

In view of the fact that the government did turn down the international commodity clearing house on this ground, I think there will be no justification in the future for the federal government saying that they have a surplus problem. They had a chance to support an organization that would have taken care of surpluses, but they turned it down on the ground that they could take care of those surpluses themselves. I hope we shall not hear anything more in the future about the government not being able to dispose of our surplus products.

When the Minister of Agriculture says that the Agricultural Prices Support Act is not an alternative to the securing of markets, then he should keep in mind the fact that the job of securing markets is the responsibility of the government. In the meantime if there are surpluses the Agricultural Prices Support Act will provide the means whereby our farmers will receive fair prices for those commodities. The ideal set-up for dealing with the marketing of our agricultural products would be a federal marketing board backed up by the Agricultural Prices Support Act and working in full co-operation with provincial boards in disposing of surpluses by means of consumer subsidies in the home market and by trading with other nations to exchange surpluses through bodies such as the ICCH or by methods similar to the one suggested by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew). The government have made it quite clear that they do not like these bodies so it is up to them to bring down proposals that will deal with these matters satisfactorily.

However, one thing should be kept in mind. The world today requires that the production of agricultural produce be maintained at a high level. We have been assured by scientists and by the director of FAO that the population of the world is increasing more rapidly than the production of food. Unless there is to be wholesale starvation in the world it is absolutely essential that we do everything in our power to maintain the production of agricultural produce at a high level. The Minister of Agriculture referred to a statement he had made in 1944 when he said that they would not agree to the destruction of food. While we agree with that entirely, if the government's policies are such that the production of food is curtailed, then I submit they will be just as vicious as though food were to be destroyed. There can be no justification for the curtailing of food production while there are hungry people in the world.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron North): Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the bill but there are a few things I should like to say. Considering the money our Canadian farmers lost during the war they are entitled to at least a similar amount of support. We must not forget that the government sold our farmers short in the world markets and you are only giving them back what is rightfully theirs. A lot has been said already and I shall not repeat it. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) said many things that I intended to say and again I shall not repeat. His troubles are not the same as mine because conditions in the different provinces vary.

The other day I read a press dispatch in which the minister was reported to have said that he was blaming oleomargarine for the present surplus of butter. I am glad he admits that, because everyone knows the government is responsible for the mess the dairy industry is in. If the provisions of this act are properly applied the dairy industry can be given the support it needs and should have if it is going to continue to operate. That industry was getting along fairly well before oleomargarine came into the picture. I am not arguing that oleomargarine should not be offered to the people but I do contend that the mark-up should not be greater than that on butter. If it were not so great there would not be so much oleomargarine sold. It will not take the place of butter except in the case of people who feel they cannot afford to buy butter at the price it is.

I should like to say a word on tariffs. We do not object to tariffs on certain goods in order to protect our manufacturers, but what difference is there between a tariff and a floor under agricultural prices? I cannot see any myself. If our manufacturers are entitled to protection our agriculturists are just as much entitled to a floor under their prices.

I think the government failed miserably when they permitted the price of eggs to stay where it was for so long. A number of flocks were disposed of and many people went out of hens when they really could not afford to. They were placed in a most precarious position because the government did not take action soon enough. There was $200 million behind this legislation and the government could have stepped in to support the egg market much sooner than they did.

I feel sorry for the veteran who has just started farming. The well-established farmer may be able to stand a drop in prices but the man who has just started up with very little is in an entirely different position when the prices of farm commodities come down. I hope that some support will be given to these men. Many veterans have gone into farming during the past five or six years and they have made good farmers. Many of them had very little to start with and if it had not been for their parents or good neighbours they would not have been able to start at all. Because of the small allowance they had many could not afford to buy sufficient machinery, and now when prices are below the cost of production they are in a serious position.

I may have more to say when the bill is before us, but I have nothing more to say at the moment.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, along with other members who have taken part in this debate I am in agreement that these acts must be continued as the minister is proposing to do under the legislation which he has introduced today. We are not satisfied, however, that the mere extension of them will be enough to meet the problems of agriculture in this country at this time. I should like to deal for a short time with the Agricultural Products Act, the resolution concerning which we passed a short time ago as a result of which the bill was introduced and given first reading. Under that act as extended from year to year we have carried on our exports of agricultural products to Great Britain since 1947, and we are proposing to extend it for a further period of one year.

I was convinced at the time it was first introduced that there should have been more permanency to it than there was, that it should not have been an act which we had to extend from year to year. I felt that if we were going to continue to maintain our markets in Great Britain we would have to have a more permanent form of legislation under which they could be maintained. That was not the only reason we lost our British markets, but it was one reason. There were very few of us who expected, as a matter of fact, that we could retain our market in England to the extent that we had enjoyed it during the war years, especially during 1944 and 1945. We did expect, however, that we would be able to retain a fairly large portion of it, and at least a larger portion than we had enjoyed during the years prior to the war. That was a natural expectation on the part of the farmers of Canada, but it has not worked out that way.

Today our markets for farm products in Great Britain are at a lower ebb than they have been for some time, and are likely to fall lower. Just recently a report appeared in the press stating that the United States congress was proposing to use $1 billion of ERP funds for the purpose of selling United States agricultural products to Great Britain, western Europe and mid-eastern countries during the coming year. If in this way the United States during the coming year markets $1 billion worth of its surplus food products the outlook for Canadian farm products in those markets does not look very hopeful. That is why I think the government made a mistake in 1947 in not having some permanent legislation whereby they could have entered the British market on a long-term basis. If they had done so I am convinced that we could have secured a far larger portion of that market than we have. If the government had been prepared in 1947 to enter into negotiations on an exchange basis with Great Britain, accepting certain goods from her in exchange for our agricultural products, I am convinced we could have had long term agreements with them for the sale of cheese, bacon, apples and other products. Having failed to do that we found that these markets were disappearing, that countries in Europe such as Poland, Holland and Denmark, as well as commonwealth countries, were able to secure the British market. Today we find ourselves in the position that we have surpluses accumulating in Canada. Not only that; when officials from Great Britain came here to negotiate contracts with us I do not think the government used the right approach in meeting those negotiators.

Last year, for instance, about the time that the British food purchasing mission was in Canada, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made an address to a board of trade dinner in Brantford, Ontario. In the Ottawa Citizen of December 6, 1949, I find the following:

> . . . he recalled that prior to the second world war, Canada was Britain's chief source of wheat and apples, and also supplied considerable quantities of pork, cheese, beef and other foods. During the war Canada became Britain's chief supplier of pork, eggs and cheese, and also shipped large amounts of beef and milk.
>
> "During the last two years", he said, "a very decided official effort has been made to drive every one of these products excepting wheat off the British market. And now that the four year wheat contract is drawing to a close an effort is being made to drive off a considerable part of our wheat as well."

Later on he stated:

> "I am a free trader and advocate the freest possible exchange of farm products for the necessities required on the farm. But when one is convinced that the other party to the trade has made up his mind he is not going to buy anything from us that he can avoid buying, free exchange is impossible."

I would say that is not a very diplomatic statement to make while negotiators are in this country—

Mr. Gardiner: They were not; they had gone home.

Mr. Wright: —endeavouring to negotiate contracts for our food. If the minister was consistent in his statements it would not be so bad, but a short time before that, speaking in Alliston, Ontario, he told a different story. He stated then:

> "In any conversations I have had with Sir Stafford Cripps and Right Hon. John Strachey, food minister, I have never gathered the impression they were not prepared to take all the products they could afford to pay for from Canada. I am satisfied that they will."

The article goes on to state:

> In an earlier speech in Ottawa, the agriculture minister said in his opinion "the view that Canada is to be depended on for supplies of food only during the war is rather hard on Canadian agriculture." He added that he did not believe that this was the view of a great many people in Britain.

Certainly those two statements do not jibe.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Wright: When the house rose at six o'clock I was pointing out that I did not think the approach of this government to the British government in renewing our food contracts with Great Britain had been very diplomatic. I do not think, however, that was the main reason why we were unable to renew many of these contracts, and to obtain the prices we would have liked to obtain. There is no doubt in my mind that the main reason for this was the lack of dollars on the part of the British government with which to purchase our products. I feel equally sure that had we, in 1947, been prepared to make bilateral agreements with Britain with respect to our marketable surplus, under which we would have accepted British goods in exchange for our food, we would have been able to make agreements similar to those which Britain has made with many other countries.

That was not the policy of the government at that time, however, nor have they changed their policy since. The result has been that we have practically lost the British market, except for about three basic products, wheat, cheese and some bacon. We may lose the market for cheese and bacon in another year if, as I stated, the United States is prepared to make ECA dollars available to western Europe and other countries, with which to purchase surplus food supplies in the United States. Having lost these markets, the minister is seeking to renew this Agricultural Products Act for one year. The purpose of that must be simply to finish out the present British contract which we have, and then allow the farmers themselves or the producer boards, under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act which was introduced last year, to try to win back those markets in Great Britain. I do not think that is good enough. I think this Agricultural Products Act, which we are renewing today for one year, should have been made a permanent piece of legislation. Under it, this government could set up export boards to export our surplus agricultural products.

I am quite convinced that no producer boards, set up under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, are going to be able to win back those markets. Look at what they are up against. In the first place, they have no control over our exchange. They have no control over tariffs on goods coming into this country. They have no control over the availability of dollars. It is only the government that has those controls and can win back those markets in Great Britain.

In the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, which was passed last year, and which will give the producer boards the power to go into the export market, clause 2 provides:

> The governor in council may by order grant authority to any board or agency authorized under the law of any province to exercise powers of regulation in relation to the marketing of any agricultural product locally within the province, to regulate the marketing of such agricultural product outside the province in interprovincial and export trade and for such purposes to exercise all or any powers like the powers exercisable by such board or agency in relation to the marketing of such agricultural product locally within the province.

Then clause 3 reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations prescribing the terms and conditions governing the granting and revocation of authority under section 2 and generally may make regulations for carrying the purposes and provisions of this act into effect.

Now, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what regulations there are under this act. I think he should tell us what the regulations are under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, so the provinces or producer boards which are set up will know what specifications or regulations they have to meet. Until that is known, it is going to be rather difficult for any group of farmers to set up a board to market their products, or to go into the export market.

Mr. Gardiner: That was discussed fully at the meeting the day before yesterday with the provinces and the federation.

Mr. Wright: Did the minister tell the people who were gathered there what the regulations were under this act?

Mr. Gardiner: I said there were not any.

Mr. Wright: That is just what I expected, there are not any. As a matter of fact, it is just a blank act which means nothing until the regulations are passed.

Mr. Gardiner: The model act was presented to us by the federation of agriculture. I assume that the section which is being quoted is in the act for the same reason as it is in many other acts having to do with the Department of Agriculture. This house would not give me, as minister, the authority. I was told I had to get the authority from council to do those things.

Mr. Wright: When I look over and see the members of council on the government side today, there are about 9 lawyers and there is one—I do not know whether you would call him a farmer—whose occupation, one among many, is that of a farmer. He was a school teacher and then a farmer, but he is the only man in the cabinet who understands the agricultural situation. I suppose the cabinet will naturally have to take his advice when they are passing regulations under this act.

Mr. Gardiner: The opposition have always said that they did not want to give me that authority. They have said that I should have the authority with the other 20 men in the cabinet, and I agree with them.

Mr. Wright: According to the statute, the minister has taken it.

Mr. Gardiner: No, I have not.

Mr. Wright: Yes, the minister has. He is the only member of the cabinet who knows the agricultural situation across the dominion. I do not see how the cabinet could do other than accept his recommendation concerning the regulations under this act. I do not think that is good enough. What agriculture wants at this time is something permanent; something which will enable the farmers to know what the situation is. There should be some act under which the farmers could make long-term agreements to take care of our surplus agricultural products. There should be some forward pricing system in this country, by means of which the farmers would have some idea of approximately what they are going to get for their products in the years ahead. Floor prices should be put under these products which would be effective for more than one year.

All we have been doing under our Agricultural Prices Support Act up to the moment is waiting until some agricultural product has reached a level where the farmers are raising such a row the government has to do something about it. Then, floor prices are set. We do not set floor prices at the level the minister suggested he thought those prices should be set in the statement he read to the house today. He stated that, in setting agricultural prices under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, he would take into consideration the fact that for ten years in the thirties our farmers had accepted prices which were below the cost of production. He stated that he would take into consideration the mortgage indebtedness of the farmers, the deplorable condition of their equipment, and the prices which farmers had received during the first three years of the war when they had accepted prices which were below those which other sectors of our economy were receiving for their labour and for their products which they had to sell.

Mr. Gardiner: The last three years of the war, not the first.

Mr. Wright: During the first three years of the war, from 1939 to 1942, the farmers were still receiving prices which were away below the cost of production. Wheat, for instance, was selling at 60 cents a bushel, and less than that on the farm, until 1943, I believe it was, before the price was raised. The minister stated that consideration would be given to the farmer's cost of production.

I am sure that in setting the floor price for eggs at 38 cents a dozen the minister has not taken these things into consideration; and in setting the price that was set for potatoes down in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick a year ago, I do not think that all of those factors were taken into consideration, or the floor prices would have been better than they were for those products. I know that there are difficulties. I know that, if floor prices are set too high, overproduction may result and surpluses may accumulate in this country. But I am convinced that, along with floor prices on products which are especially for Canadian consumption and Canadian marketing, there must be some regulation of production. I think the farmers can do that themselves through their Agricultural Products Act. But when it comes to the surplus of basic products which go into the export market, I think the government must and should accept responsibility for them. If they do not, and if we allow agricultural prices to drop even 25 per cent in this country, I am convinced that the unemployment problem will be multiplied three or four times. Instead of having 400,000 people out of employment, we shall have a million people out of employment in Canada.

Last year, in 1949, the farmers of this country spent over $200 million for new equipment. I know that in my own constituency alone the agricultural implement dealers figure that last year they sold $8 million worth of agricultural equipment. A drop in the price of agricultural products will mean that there will be a drop of from 50 per cent to 75 per cent in the sales of agricultural machinery. Make no mistake about it, our farmers today have some equipment on their farms; and if prices drop they can get along with simply buying repairs for that machinery and will practically stop buying new equipment. If that event takes place, those in eastern Canada here will find that their unemployment problem will be something that will remind them of the 1930's again.

I would therefore say to the government that, in renewing this Agricultural Products Act, they should make it permanent. As a matter of fact, if we could have moved an amendment that would have been in order we would have moved one which would have made it a permanent piece of the legislation of this country under which the government could set up export boards for the surplus agricultural products. I would urge the government that, instead of renewing it for one year, they should bring in permanent legislation in this country to take care of our export surpluses.

With respect to the Agricultural Prices Support Act, I hope the minister will give us his interpretation of certain clauses of this act. Section 9 (2) states:

> In prescribing prices under paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection one of this section, the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

I think the least that the government can do in renewing this act is to place in it some clause by means of which the farming industry of this country will know the formula or the method the government is going to use in determining those prices. When the resolution is in committee I hope the minister will give us that information; because unless we have that information we are going to find that those engaged in the agricultural industry of this country are not going to be satisfied by the action of the government in simply renewing these acts without any assurance as to what action the government is going to take under them.

Mr. H. H. Hatfield (Victoria-Carleton): I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is renewing this act. He gave a glowing account of it when he introduced it in the house in July, 1944. I should like to read some of his statements. As reported at page 5581 of Hansard of that year the minister, in introducing the act, quoted the views of a Liberal convention as follows:

We advocate a policy under which Canada will provide security for farmers and fishermen by safeguarding against inflation now and by guaranteeing minimum prices for their products against collapse of prices after the war.

Then he quoted a speech he made at London, Ontario, on October 15.

Speaking at London, Ontario, on October 15, I made this statement as Minister of Agriculture when speaking to a group of people, representatives of agriculture in that area, got together by the Kiwanis club, as reported in the Windsor Star of October 16:

"In placing ceilings upon products, with limited subsidies now, the government is assuming responsibility to maintain floors until this country is re-established after the war. The government owes this to the farmers who have maintained production under ceilings, and also owes it to the men and women who will return from the services to the farms."

Then he continued:

On December 2, 1943, the Prime Minister (Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King), speaking over the radio said: "As an essential part of its post-war policy the government intends to ask parliament, at the next session, to place a floor under the prices of the main farm products."

In the speech from the throne this statement was made:

To ensure economic stability for agriculture, you will be asked to make provision for a price floor for staple farm products.

Speaking to the house on the bill which set up the act, the minister said it would include all farm products except wheat. He was asked numerous questions at that time and, as reported at page 5612 of Hansard of 1944, he said:

I am asked, what will they do with all that surplus, will they get rid of it? I can assure hon. members that if I am minister charged with the task, there will not be any of it that will be burned or dumped into the ocean or into the lake. One thing has been demonstrated to us during the war, and as a matter of fact we have always known it. We have always known that there are areas in the world where there are famines from time to time . . . I am not worrying about finding some place where we can put the surplus food of a country that has only twelve million people in it to start with.

Then after the dinner recess:

Before the dinner recess I was dealing with some of the points that were suggested by hon. members opposite, particularly the questions raised by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). Perhaps I can best sum up the answers I should like to give to those questions by saying that it would not be fair to the farmers of Canada to do certain things in the transition period.

First, I should say it would not be fair to order them, immediately the war is over, to reduce production to the level at which it is certain the commodities could be sold at a given price. I was asked what we were going to do, provided that we had great surpluses, and I call attention to what I have just stated as an answer to that question, and to repeat what I said just before the dinner recess. During this war period we have been asked to increase production to the limit in order to provide food to those of our allies who require it, as well as to our own people. I repeat that it would be unfair to the farmers, immediately the war is over, to say they must reduce their production to the point where everything they produce can be disposed of at a given price. And I would state that this bill contains provision for dealing with a situation where a given price is essential for uncontrolled production during the transition period.

Then I should say it would be unfair to the farmer immediately to require him to sell at the cost of production.

When the bill was introduced the minister said that he would not allow any farm product to go down to the cost of production. He assured the farmers of this country that so long as he was Minister of Agriculture they would receive prices above the cost of production. That principle has not been carried out.

I am disappointed in the regulations made under the act on the statute books. They do not look anything like the bill which the minister introduced in the house, and they have not been used in the way that the minister said they would be used when he introduced the bill, as will be found in his speeches in Hansard. He said that he would set up a board, and that the duty of the board would be to deal with the prices of agricultural products across Canada, except wheat, at any time that the price went below the cost of production. When that happened the board was supposed to step in and put on a floor price above the cost of production. That board has not done its duty as laid down by the minister in the speech he made when he introduced the bill. Every time that we asked for a floor price, or a support price, on potatoes a number of delegations had to come to Ottawa to see the minister, and we had to get support from the other provinces to persuade the minister to put a support price under potatoes.

I was surprised to read in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of March 21 that Mr. Duffie had advised a meeting of 200 potato growers at Grand Falls to form a co-operative. I quote from the article:

The decision followed a report by T. E. Duffie on conferences in Ottawa early this month with Right Hon. James Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, and J. G. Taggart, head of the agricultural prices support board. Mr. Duffie reviewed the provisions of the Agricultural Prices Support Act of 1944.

Mr. Duffie quoted Mr. Gardiner as saying that he was promised a year ago that the potato growers would attempt co-operation under such a system and that he still based future aid to the growers on this assumption.

As explained by Mr. Duffie, the co-operative would enter into contracts with individual growers at planting time to purchase their potatoes at a set price. The co-operative would also enter into a contract with the federal government providing for what amounts to a floor price for the potatoes sold by the members to the co-operative. The co-operative would also set up a selling agency, which could be an existing organization, a new organization or a provincial marketing board.

The grower would know at planting time what the minimum price would be for his crop and could get advances on his crop. The government would determine the minimum price, in consultation with the co-operative organization, and the minimum would not exceed 80 per cent of the previous three years' sale price.

The government would pay to the co-operative any loss due to poor markets and would also pay the actual processing, carrying and selling costs, up to a maximum set in advance.

What is suggested in this quotation sounds like something that has never been done before. I would like to know from the minister whether he told Mr. Duffie when he was here in conference with him that a co-operative would be set up which would tell the farmers what they would receive for their potatoes, or any other commodities, before they were planted.

Mr. Gardiner: That is not what Mr. Duffie said. He is simply quoting the co-operative act of 1939, which is not this act at all. Everything the hon. member has read is in the act of 1939.

Mr. Hatfield: The act of 1939?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Hatfield: The co-operative is being set up under that act, is it?

Mr. Gardiner: Co-operatives have been set up across Canada under that act. Furs in Prince Edward Island and in other provinces are sold under that act.

Mr. Hatfield: I have never known of a co-operative under the government's program telling the farmer what he would receive for his products before they were produced. I have never known of any action such as that being carried out except in regard to wheat.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member was here when it was passed.

Mr. Hatfield: That would be a very good act for the farmers. They would be glad to have an act like that. If you promised them a certain price before they plant their potatoes they would be pleased. That is what Mr. Duffie explained to the potato growers at Grand Falls. He made the explanation after a conference with the minister. However, the potato support which was given in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island last year was not carried out that way. We did not receive the benefit of the support program until away on in March or April, and the needy farmers, and the veterans who had returned from the war and who took up farming under the Veterans' Land Act, had to sell their potatoes before the support program went into effect, and they sold them below the cost of production.

As I said before, the regulations do not work in the way they were intended and the board that has been set up has not done anything since it was set up, as far as I know. We have always had to come here and appeal. Every organization has had to appeal to the minister, or to the department, to carry out the provisions of the support act; whereas in the house it was said that the board would study everything, and as soon as any farm product got down to near the cost of production the board would act. That is the kind of support act I thought we were getting in 1944.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to say a word or two, particularly because of the interchange that took place a few moments ago. I remember the passing of the co-operative act of 1939. Speaking from memory, I believe that under that act the government could guarantee up to 90 per cent of the average price of the previous three years.

Mr. Gardiner: Up to 80 per cent, as Mr. Duffie said.

Mr. Coldwell: I thought it was 90 per cent. The joker about that is that it has never been guaranteed up to that amount. The guarantee has been up to 50 per cent, perhaps, but not to the extent that the act would make it attractive to the co-operatives to ask for such a guarantee.

We have had a very interesting discussion today. I think the resolutions do show an advance on the part of the government in regard to its marketing legislation. I am very glad indeed to see the one-year limit removed from the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and left so that it is somewhat indefinite. I regard that as an advance in this legislation, and I welcome it. I welcome it, may I say, because I believe that sooner or later—and, I think, the sooner the better—we shall have to do what has been suggested both by the hon. member who has just taken his seat and on numerous occasions by colleagues of mine in this group, including today the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce).

I believe we shall have to have some forward pricing arrangements. After every war there has been a serious agricultural depression. Going back over the history of the last hundred years or so we have found that every time. After the Napoleonic wars there was a serious drop. Then, on this continent, after the American civil war, there was a serious drop. In Great Britain the same thing happened after the Franco-Prussian war.

I remember my father telling me how he took to market in the city of Hereford a load of hops in 1870 or 1871, after the Franco-Prussian war, and got £200 for the load. A few years later the hop-growers, of whom his father was one, were practically ruined by the sudden drop in prices.

We have seen the same thing happen in our own country. After the South African war and the first great war, and indeed until the last war, we have seen serious drops in prices, to the ruin of the farming population. While following the last war we have had the unusual situation of the United States undertaking to finance very largely the feeding and the agricultural rehabilitation of vast areas in Europe, and indeed some other parts of the world, this procedure has enabled us in this country to get by.

At the present time I think we are living pretty much on the generosity of another great nation—and when I say "we" I am thinking of Canada as well as the consuming countries in Europe. As I have said, I believe that a policy of forward pricing is the method under which farmers will be guaranteed prices in the future.

I have watched with a good deal of interest the effect of the forward pricing undertaken as a result of the agricultural act of the United Kingdom. That act, of course, followed legislation put on the statute books by the coalition government when the war was still on, and was carried a step further by the Labour government in that country. Year by year we have seen a tremendous improvement in rural and agricultural conditions in Great Britain due, I think, to forward pricing. The farmers over there, as the hon. member for Selkirk said this afternoon, know when they raise a calf, if that calf is going to be turned into three-year-old steer beef, we will say, what the minimum price will be for that steer, even before they begin to feed it. Or, as he put it this afternoon, they know what it will be four years in advance, even before the cow is bred. As I well know, that has been a tremendous boon to the British agriculturists.

The same applies to milk and to eggs; for eighteen months in advance the farmer knows what he will get for his potatoes; he knows what he will get for his sugar beets and for the other commodities he grows.

Having been born and raised, until I reached the age of discretion and came to Canada, in a farming area of the old country, I was interested some fifteen or sixteen months ago to spend a week among the pople I had known nearly forty years before. I found there was a transformation in the rural life of the countryside, and certainly a transformation in the conditions of the farmers, who were never so prosperous, never so well off and never as secure as they are at the present time.

Mr. Howe: Why did they vote Conservative, then?

Mr. Coldwell: That is a good question. As a matter of fact, may I tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that I was predicting before the election was held that they would continue to vote Conservative, and the reason for their doing so was that they are traditionally Conservative. They have never voted anything else, and it will take a new generation to get them to vote anything else. When I was a boy, even a Liberal candidate—a Liberal, mind you—could not get a hall in some parts of the county of Devonshire in which I was born, from the platform of which he could speak. The squire and the local authorities saw to it that he did not have a hall. Often he had to speak from a wagon in a farmyard.

However, they have advanced beyond that and I have no doubt, as time goes on, they will advance still further to the day when they will join with the rest of the people in England in supporting many more progressive measures than they seemed inclined to support in the recent election. But I say it is tradition, rather than anything else.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The Liberals were on the wagon, so to speak.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, I am not saying anything on that score. But the prosperity of those agricultural regions is due to the planning of their agricultural production and the guarantee they have that they will get certain prices after they have reaped their crops. This permits them to make plans. If they wish to buy a piece of land—and they can do it today, whereas they could not years ago—they know they will have certain returns to meet that obligation. If they wish to buy machinery, or any other types of farm supplies they are now using, they know they will be able to pay for it as the days go by.

Let me add this, that one of the reasons I think there was no change in the usual voting strength of the parties in the rural districts was that the Conservatives as well as the Liberals were in favour of this legislation, and there was no issue because the farmers knew they were going to have a continuance of the policy which one of the great agriculturists of Great Britain, an old Tory peer, Lord Bledisloe, described as the great agricultural charter.

Mr. Gardiner: Put in by the Conservatives, in the first place.

Mr. Coldwell: Did I not say that?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: I said it was the coalition government.

Mr. Gardiner: Before that.

Mr. Coldwell: And I said it had been carried a step farther by the Labour government. I thought I was perfectly fair in what I said, because I was not giving the credit to any one government for having done all of it. I do not propose to do that, because I think the less partisanship we have in dealing with this problem the better it will be for all of us and for the country. May I remind the minister that what I am doing now is endeavouring not to discuss this from any partisan standpoint at all, but rather to put before the government what I believe should be considered, and modified to meet our Canadian conditions perhaps, but nevertheless undertaken in part by the government in Canada.

The increase in the last few years in farm production owing to that policy in Great Britain has been nothing short of phenomenal. Figures I have here from a British government report—and I am not referring to any party report—show that the dairy herds have increased by over 200,000 head, young cows by more than 400,000 head and other cattle by 35,000 head since 1947. Flocks of sheep have increased by two and three quarter million. The heavy losses suffered in the winter of 1947, which hon. members will recall, have been completely overcome.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The flocks of sheep in the House of Commons have also been increased.

Mr. Coldwell: I am not commenting on that situation just now although I may on some other occasion. The same thing with pigs; 1,200,000 more last year than in 1947. Poultry, 10 million more than in June, 1948. As we all know, the production and consumption of fluid milk has increased by over 60 per cent.

Mr. Hosking: They still only get two pints per week.

Mr. Coldwell: It has been increased a little lately, but supposing what my hon. friend says is true, the fact is that they are drinking 60 per cent more fluid milk than they were in 1939 before the war.

Mr. Bryce: I should like to correct the statement made by the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. gentleman rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Bryce: I want to tell the hon. gentleman that there is no milk rationing in Great Britain.

Mr. Coldwell: Even if there was, what I am saying is that forward pricing has increased both the production and consumption of fluid milk. While what my hon. friend has said may have been true, they are drinking 60 per cent more than they were in 1939. Every child in school is provided with a bottle of milk and instead of a few people with money being able to buy all the milk, the kiddies of Great Britain are getting milk today, many of them for the first time in their lives. That is the answer to the interjection made by the hon. member.

As I said, minimum prices are fixed well in advance. For instance, in the spring of 1949 prices were announced for the 1951 harvest. Livestock prices have been fixed right up to 1953. My hon. friends will say that that requires a good deal of planning and regimentation. As a matter of fact, what planning there is is undertaken by the county committees consisting of the farmers themselves. The farmers, the farm workers and even the land owners have the principal say in the planning of agricultural production. Although it is peculiarly difficult to plan agriculture, the fact is that it has been rather successfully done and without regimentation under the agricultural act to which I have referred.

I think we have to go beyond where the proposed resolution takes us, although it perhaps takes us part of the way. We must adopt a policy of agricultural advance pricing. The condition in our own country with regard to future markets is uncertain. I am not going to repeat what has been said about how we are going to market any surpluses that may occur in the future. This afternoon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) quoted from a speech he made in 1944 when he said that we could not dump foodstuffs into the sea or into our lakes, that we could not burn or destroy them. I thoroughly agree that we have to find other ways of disposing of these goods for the welfare of mankind.

We have suggested on occasion, and it has been suggested today, that we should try to enter into direct trade relationships with our customers and arrange for the exchange of goods. In the speech on the address I proposed that in addition we should accept some sterling for investment in the sterling area, but let that be. I notice the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made a most interesting speech before the University club in New York last Saturday. There is one paragraph in the report I have of that speech, which I hope is correct, in which I am particularly interested. The minister gave an example of what is going on in the world, and at page three he is reported as saying:

> Few countries have yet been able to make much headway toward freeing their foreign commerce from import, export and exchange restrictions. Actually the progress that is being made in some countries in this regard is being largely offset by the increasing extent and severity of restrictions in other countries. Not only that. Our old aversion, the bilateral agreement, in its many different forms, is very much in the picture. The proportion of total world trade that is being moved today through the closely controlled channels of bilateral trade and financial agreements is probably greater than it ever was at any previous period, including the eight or ten years of the pre-war depression when the German-inspired system of barter and compensation trade was at its height. Bad as it may be from the standpoint of liberal commercial—> —policy, it may be taken for granted that this widespread use of bilateral agreements is not going to disappear, nor be much reduced until unstable currency values and heavily unbalanced trade between different areas has been corrected to an extent that will assure the many countries that are using this trading system that they can give it up safely and with something better in sight.

That is a liberal with a small "l".

That is a rather broad and most interesting statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce of this country.

Mr. Howe: I never took any other view.

Mr. Coldwell: Speaking from the other side of the house I have always felt that the moment bilateral agreements were mentioned, immediately there was a feeling, and indeed sometimes there were remarks which indicated, that to a similar proposal here the answer would be, "No." While the minister in his speech did not say that he was prepared to embark on bilateral agreements, he states most plainly that for some time to come that is the method by which many countries are going to trade.

Mr. Howe: I said that there is a great deal of it, but we are not going—

Mr. Wright: You will not trade at all.

Mr. Coldwell: May I read that again:

> Bad as it may be from the standpoint of liberal commercial policy, it may be taken for granted that this widespread use of bilateral agreements is not going to disappear, nor be much reduced until unstable currency values and heavily unbalanced trade between different areas has been corrected to an extent that will assure the many countries that are using this trading system that they can give it up safely and with something better in sight.

As the minister puts it, that is the system that many nations are using; and let me remind him that among those many nations are some of our best erstwhile customers. If our own surpluses are going to continue for some time to come, as the minister suggests, then I say that whether we like that system of trading or not we should be considering it. I am not saying that the minister said that.

Mr. Howe: Up to this moment we have been able to successfully sell all our surpluses without resort to bilateral agreements.

Mr. Coldwell: Supposing I accept that statement except, as the Minister of Agriculture said recently, for a little butter, a little bit of cheese and some honey, why have we been able to do that? It is not because we are exchanging goods; it is largely because our overseas customers have been financed from ECA and Marshall plan funds.

Mr. Howe: That statement is greatly exaggerated.

Mr. Coldwell: That may be so. It may be somewhat exaggerated, but if we look at the trade relations of our country what do we find? I do not want to enter into this phase particularly, because it really does not come under the resolution I am discussing; but taking our trade relationships we find, for example, that we accepted some $400 million less in goods from the United Kingdom than we sent to them. I am speaking from memory, and it is around that figure. That has to be financed in some way. As a matter of fact it almost balances the amount representing the excess of what we bought from the United States last year over what we sold to them. When Marshall aid and ECA dollars are finished we shall be driven to consider ways and means of trading our surpluses in exchange for goods we can use. The minister shakes his head, but surely that is the way trade should be carried on even if we do not make bilateral agreements.

I do not know whether there is any truth in the statement in the evening paper, but if there is we are going to place another barrier against the sale of Canadian farm products and other commodities to our customer across the sea. There is a story in the press tonight that British cars coming into this country will be impeded by the imposition of some form of dumping duty in order to raise the prices more nearly to the level of our Canadian cars. I hope that is not true.

Mr. Howe: Who is going to do that?

Mr. Coldwell: The article said that the government was considering it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I do not see how these remarks are directly related to the resolution. The house seems to be greatly interested in them and in the subject, but if I allow the hon. member to continue further I shall have to allow other hon. members to do the same. Therefore I suggest to him that he might revert to the resolution.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to transgress the rules of the house. Perhaps I was more or less inspired to get a little bit outside them by one or two interruptions. We are however dealing with two resolutions, a resolution to amend the Agricultural Products Act by extending its operation for a period of one year, and a resolution to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944. What I was arguing was that if we are going to support our agricultural products and sell them in the markets of the world we must enter into trading relationships that will enable us to sell overseas. Mainly I rose to say, and I am going to repeat it, that I thoroughly support the suggestions that have been made—and may I say we have been making them for several years—that we shall not only adopt floor prices that are adequate but that we shall also set up a system of forward pricing so that our farmers will know what they are going to get not a few months ahead, indeed not inadequate support prices that are put into effect after prices have fallen, but the minimum prices they will get for their produce one, two or even three years in advance. It has worked out successfully in another country, perhaps with a different economy, but nonetheless I believe if we are to have a stable and planned agriculture then we have got to adopt a policy of this description. While we support these resolutions, and particularly the one relating to the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, we want to go beyond that both for our farmers and our fishermen whose industries require similar guarantees.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on these two resolutions because they seriously concern quite a number of my constituents. I want to express my support of the principle of the two resolutions, a principle which has been so strongly endorsed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and in my own province by the British Columbia fruit growers association. Before proceeding, may I say that I want to support particularly the remarks of the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) when he said he thought this type of legislation should be made permanent. I am of the opinion that neither the government nor the farmers can do any long-range planning or have any measure of security so long as this measure is in force only from year to year. It is my opinion that this legislation should be made permanent if we are going to have a sound foundation upon which to build our future agricultural marketing structure.

The fruit growers of British Columbia, as represented by the delegates at the British Columbia fruit growers association annual convention, expressed their strong support of these principles, and also passed a resolution thanking the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) for finally introducing into the house the Agricultural Products Marketing Act last year. I support the proposals made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture as to floor prices for bacon, cheese, butter, eggs and so on.

In my riding there are a considerable number of poultry producers, and their number increased greatly during the war years largely at the request of the government for more production. Now they find themselves in a most difficult position. It is my opinion that no section of agriculture is more speculative than the poultry industry or makes a less effective protest to government. Strangely enough, I think it is largely because it is not as well organized as some other branches of agriculture. Its voice is not heard as well on a national basis as some of the other sections of agriculture. The poultry producers are now in a most difficult position. I am quite sure there are many poultry producers in other constituencies who are also faced with the same problems of rising feed costs, other rising costs, and falling prices for their eggs and poultry. In discussing with consumers the situation of the poultry producers, particularly people who live in the cities, I often find there is quite a misconception on the part of consumers as to the share, shall I say, that the poultry producer is getting of the price his products bring. In that connection I want to quote an extract from a brief prepared by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with respect to support proposals. It has this to say as to eggs:

> The average Montreal wholesale price of grade A large eggs in 1949 was 56·4 cents a dozen, slightly higher than the average of 55·8 cents for 1948. In spite of the seasonal high retail price of 75 cents a dozen for August last year, the average retail price for 1949 of 62 cents a dozen was only 14 cents a dozen or 29 per cent higher than for the five years 1925 to 1929. But in 1949 wage rates in Canada were more than twice the rates of the 1925-29 period. In terms of the buying power of urban consumers the average retail price of eggs in 1949 was very reasonable.

I just place that on the record, Mr. Speaker, because I find a great deal of misunderstanding of the actual position of the poultry producer on the part of many consumers in the city areas.

I should like to say a word or two in connection with price support for the products of the dairy producers. There is in my constituency a mixed farming, lumbering and mining development. There are a number of small farmers, who do a certain amount of dairying under somewhat more difficult conditions than those which prevail on the larger farms. Many of these farmers depend for their living on the cream they ship to the creameries, so the price of butter is of very serious import to them. There again, the freight costs, feed costs and other costs, particularly in the district I represent, are mounting. I am sure that those producers welcome the price support program for butter, and I urge continued support at a satisfactory level.

I rise this evening, Mr. Speaker, particularly to say a few words about the position of the tree fruit industry in British Columbia. In dealing with this question, I am not only speaking as a member of this house, but I am speaking as a grower of some 40 years' experience. While I am only a small producer, I have been a member of the British Columbia fruit growers association for all that time; 35 years as a member of various co-operatives, and at present I am vice-president of the Kootenay storage co-operative. When I speak on this subject, I represent a number of small growers, who have carved their farms out of the forest as a result of great toil and labour, and in many cases a considerable expenditure of capital. These people as a whole are hard-working and frugal in their way of life. If any people deserve some support or some assistance, they do. When I speak about them, Mr. Speaker, in my mind's eye I can see them now, pruning and spraying; making preparations for this year's crop.

I believe this government's marketing policies have seriously affected the position of the fruit growers. The general retreat of the government from the commodity board principle is one that is regretted by the fruit growers in my constituency. The failure to support the principle of marketing surpluses, advocated by the international commodity clearing house, is equally regretted by the fruit growers of the constituency I have the honour to represent. I urge upon the government, Mr. Speaker, careful consideration of the proposals that have been advanced by the C.C.F. members of this house. Throughout the country I find that these ideas are gaining the support of many people. First of all, I do ask the government to explore further the possibilities of selling some of our agricultural surpluses for sterling, which sterling could be reinvested in undeveloped areas. I find there is considerable support in responsible quarters for that proposal. I do ask the government to investigate the possibilities in this direction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a continuation of the present policies so far as marketing in the international sphere is concerned will result in more agricultural surpluses, and poverty and want at home and abroad. I want to bring one other suggestion in this respect to the attention of the minister. I understand that about $400 million are used annually at this time for the purchase of Canadian wheat by the government of Britain. The government made some arrangements for deferring the purchase of a certain amount of wheat, in order to make it possible for the British to buy a certain amount of cheese and bacon. I should like to suggest to the minister that, since $400 million are to be expended on wheat, and an arrangement was made for the suspension of some of that in order for the British to buy cheese and bacon, surely if the matter had been taken up with the British they would have been willing to arrange that four or five million dollars be used for the purchase of fruit. An important consideration in this matter is that you can keep wheat from year to year, but you cannot keep fruit. I think if the minister had made some arrangement such as that it would have been of great assistance to the fruit growing industry, of great assistance to the British, and to this government.

Before sitting down, I should like to deal with the loss of the British preference, because I believe the easy way in which our government gave up the British preference, upon the recommendations of its officials, indicates that the government did not examine the future possibilities as it should have done. When the British preference was given up, I stated in this house in 1948 that I was quite sure the government officials were wrong when they said there was no future in the British market for apples. On that point, I should like to quote from the record of the 1948 committee on banking and commerce. The matter was of some concern to the British Columbia members representing constituencies in which fruit is grown. I should like to quote briefly from page 234 of this committee report. The member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) is questioning Mr. MacKinnon of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It reads as follows:

Mr. Fulton: This would probably be the time to ask you about the loss of the preference on apples. I have studied very carefully, Mr. MacKinnon, the statement which you made to the Senate committee on trade relations and particularly the passages at page 43 where several senators were asking you questions on the loss of the preference and asking why our delegation gave up the preference. The tenor of your answer was that it was felt the British preference on apples was not of very substantial value and you said the British apple market was losing its attraction. I would like to read the words you yourself used when questioned as to the British apple production and you said:

At this point, the hon. member for Kamloops quoted Mr. MacKinnon.

I believe that they could produce this year all their requirements; they would not need to import a single apple. Apart altogether from considerations of exchange and trade agreements, they would not need to import an apple for their own use this year. The extent to which the orchards in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset and Norfolk have been developed is simply amazing. We had to keep in mind the consideration that we were dealing, as Mr. Deutsch intimated yesterday, with the livelihood of our people. The fact was that the United Kingdom market was becoming not only less attractive in that sense, but probably less real as regards the benefit of the preference; that is, in view particularly of the fact, in the short term, that she had no money with which to buy apples; and, in the long term, that it seems to be her policy to become self-sufficient in apples.

Then the member for Kamloops continued:

Now I hesitate to disagree with you, Mr. MacKinnon, naturally, but I should say this. I questioned the British food commission in Canada on those statements and I have a number of figures here which they gave me as to their own apple production, and I can find nothing in what they told me to substantiate your statement that the United Kingdom is seeking to become self-sufficient in apples.

Then later on, Mr. MacKinnon says:

However, it apparently is the fact that, from now on, barring the unforeseen catastrophe in the form of blights or bad weather, Britain will be self-sufficient as regards fresh apples.

There was further questioning of Mr. MacKinnon with respect to the question of the loss of British preference for apples, and at page 238 of the committee report he was asked the following question:

Just on that point, Mr. MacKinnon, was there any pressure by the United States or any other nation as to the elimination of this particular preference?

Mr. MacKinnon: No more pressure than was brought to bear by the United States in respect to many preferences.

Now that was the point, Mr. Speaker. At the time we were discussing this question in 1948, the two points I made were, first, that I was quite certain there were future possibilities for the sale of Canadian apples in the British market; and second, that pressure had been brought by the United States upon our delegation to relinquish these preferences, although at the same time they were trying to tell us that there was nothing worth-while being relinquished. I think any sensible person would realize that no competent United States businessman uses his pressure for the removal of a preference unless it means some advantage to him.

I think that the government made a big mistake in overlooking the future possibilities for the sale of Canadian apples in the British market. British Columbia must find a market for between two and a half million and three million boxes a year, in the export market, if the producer is going to experience any sense of stability. What are the facts? In 1948 our officials said this market had disappeared, that it had no future. The facts are these. Approximately within the last thirty days the Australians made a deal with Great Britain to supply three and a half million boxes of apples. At the present time the shops in England are full of United States apples. Large importations are coming from Italy; hundreds of thousands of pounds of apples, not boxes, are going to Great Britain. Going to Britain are also apples from Belgium and the Netherlands. The demand is there in Great Britain for Canadian apples. The correspondence I receive from relatives and friends in England indicates that they miss Canadian apples in the British market. Our government has relinquished these preferences, has done nothing, and these countries are taking advantage of the situation.

I have here a quotation I wish to give. It is from Country Life, the August 1949 issue. Country Life is an agricultural paper published in British Columbia. The article is headed: "British Lament Miserable Quality of Import Apples: Italian Disgrace Cull Pile", and reads in part as follows:

"Everyone in (Great Britain) was lamenting the miserable quality of apples—not only domestic, but imported supplies. The greatest criticism was directed at Italian imports which were said to have arrived in shocking condition and were a disgrace to a cull pile."

These are sentences taken from the introductory paragraph of a report, prepared by Fred A. Motz, agricultural economist, of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, following an examination of fruit marketing conditions in the United Kingdom, as part of the "study of foreign market outlets and competition with United States fruits, conducted under the provisions of the U.S. research and marketing act."

From my knowledge of what the situation is in Great Britain at the present time and from what I read in articles such as this, of the actions of the United States government, I think they are, shall I say, much keener than our government has been in finding markets for these commodities. I think there is no question about it, Mr. Speaker, that we made a big mistake in giving up the British preference, and when we took for granted what we were told, namely, that there was no future for Canadian apples in the British market.

I ask our government to give further consideration to the matter. I realize the sterling difficulties but I think these can be overcome if $4 million or $5 million of the $400 million used for wheat were diverted for the purchase of apples. Somehow or other I find this fault not only on the part of the government but on the part of officials and trade commissioners. Our trade commissioners are bright boys when it comes to selling industrial products; but it is my opinion that our trade commissioners are not as active and are not as keen, when it comes to selling agricultural products, and they do not understand the selling of agricultural products to the same extent that they understand the selling of industrial products. I ask the government to give consideration to the possibility of marketing Canadian apples next year by the use of some of these funds that are provided for wheat or by the acceptance of sterling, and the possibility of re-investment of that sterling in undeveloped areas.

I support the request of the British Columbia fruit growers' association for financial assistance from this government under this legislation. The resolution was read this afternoon by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones) and I am not going to repeat it. But without question—and I am quite sure the minister would agree with this—the fruit growers of British Columbia have been a patient group throughout the years in presenting their problems to this government. The minister knows that even during the war when we could have obtained from $1 to $3 more for cherries our organization—that is, the fruit growers' organization—voluntarily said "No, this is too high a price". There was a terrific demand. They willingly accepted a lower price on cherries and other fruits in order to keep customer good will and to serve the Canadian people at a reasonable price because they considered that the grower was getting a satisfactory price, and that is all they want. I think that the fruit industry's record in that respect is excellent. It has always taken a constructive approach. It has never pressed the government for assistance unless it was in a serious position. The fruit industry in British Columbia is in a serious condition at this time and I urge the government to give consideration to their requests and to their resolution.

I have on my desk a statement of a grower that I know in my own district, at Deer Park on the Arrow lakes. He is a small fruit grower who has made a reasonable living for the last few years. He sends me this statement which shows his returns for some of the fruit produced on his five-acre orchard this year. His return for this year shows that he is in the red on that production to the extent of $241.49. That is going to be the experience of a good number of growers in our district, and in British Columbia generally, unless some assistance is given by this government. Spraying costs, farm machinery costs, and box costs are going up. For instance, in 1939 we were paying 12 cents per box for apple boxes from the factory. Today we are paying 33·2 cents per box. Freight, machinery, sprays, fertilizers, boxes, all commodities, are going up while prices have dropped rather rapidly.

In conclusion, therefore, I urge the minister and the government to give consideration to this large industry which requires some support at this time in order to get through the present difficulty; and also to give consideration to plans such as those I have suggested in my few remarks, with a view to stabilizing the industry in the years to come. Immediate assistance in the present difficulty, long-term policies on the basis of commodity agreements, and the other arrangements I have mentioned, will I think do a great deal to bring a sense of security to the agriculturists and to the fruit growers now and in the days to come.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): I may say, Mr. Speaker, that when I came down here I had no intention at all of entering this debate. I had hoped to listen to my hon. and agriculturist friends express their opinions. But I was greatly interested in the remark made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and I thought it would be only right to remind him that there are places in the world where money is not necessarily the only consideration. There are places where men's votes and influence depend on other things than their position of wealth or economic prosperity. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce had been brought up in the north of Ireland, as I was, he would know that there is a group of people there who will vote Conservative or, as they call it, Unionist, and would so vote even if the hens laid three eggs a day.

Now that I am on my feet, I might say a word or two about the subject under discussion, namely, the continuation of these two agricultural support acts. I should like to add a word of my own testimony to what has been said by the leader of our party about farm affairs overseas.

Some doubt was expressed by someone on the other side of the house as to the accuracy of some of his statements about the prosperity of the farmer in Europe, and particularly in Britain. It was my pleasure to observe that at first hand about a year ago, and I should like to bear witness to it. However, for the moment I want to say that one of the results of our not trading with Europe and with Britain is that the people over there have been compelled to increase their own agricultural production, even if that production is not economic, or has not been up to the present.

There is a question here, and an interesting one, as to the extent to which increased agricultural production in European countries has been caused by our refusal to trade with them: our refusal first of all to accept the currency which they use; and, second, our imposition of embargoes and tariffs against their goods. Therefore, since we will not trade with them upon their own terms, they have to turn elsewhere. They have to get their agricultural needs where they can get them.

I found that the farmers in Britain, and in my native Ireland, were very prosperous. They were increasing their production. They were not complaining; and when you find farmers not complaining may I say that they are usually doing well financially. Just as an example, to support my own contention and the contention of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, let me tell you that I had a letter from a farmer in the north of Ireland not very long ago concerning a farm in which I have some interest. He is not working his own land any more; he is renting it out by public auction piece by piece; and when I tell hon. members that a field will be rented for the production of grain, say oats after a potato crop the year before, for £16 an acre, they will know that there must be some profit in growing oats in that country. If you translate that amount of sterling into our currency, even at the present rates, it amounts to a good deal of money. It must be remembered that the person who rents that land has to buy his seed and fertilizer, and provide the necessary labour to put the crop in and take it off. And, as the Minister of Agriculture well knows, owing to weather conditions, farming in that country is often not an easy job.

For these people there are just two alternatives. They must buy their needs, their feed, that is to say their concentrates, in the sterling area, if we will not sell these commodities to them, or else they must produce their own. So far as I was able to observe, they are doing both and getting along quite nicely in the process.

In the first instance they are subsidized and aided—I am speaking not of Britain alone but of Denmark, of Belgium, of France, and to some extent of Italy—by their governments, which are setting up an agricultural picture, which bodes ill for our ability to sell much agricultural produce to Europe in the future. Governments are giving very special consideration to agriculture, and since the land areas which are available or arable are all in use, and since they cannot increase production in that way, they are doing it by improved methods of production and by increased use of commercial fertilizer. These are encouraged, and may I say, in most countries, are subsidized by the government.

The people of Europe have not forgotten the last war. They have not forgotten the war hunger, the post-war hunger, nor the time when the bombs were raining death on them from the skies; and they are never again going to permit themselves to get into the position of being totally dependent upon the North American continent for their foodstuffs, and for their daily bread. They plan—and it is an organized policy in Europe today—to be as nearly self-sufficient in the matter of food production as it is possible for them to be.

I said that the governments were giving some assistance to the farmers. While the minister was speaking I jotted down one or two of the ways in which that is done. First of all, they are guaranteeing prices over a period of time in order to create a feeling of stability. A man knows pretty well ahead of time what he is going to get for his cattle, or what he is going to get for his grain. Second, they are giving assistance and subsidies to farmers who are prepared to drain new land, for there are still some bog and swamp lands which can be rendered tillable. But above all things, they are expanding agricultural research and education. And from the point of view of labour, I found farm labour in Britain and in Ireland much more prosperous and contented than it has ever been before. It has always been an underprivileged and depressed class. It was so in the days of my youth. The wages paid were scandalous. They had no decent standard of living, and they were expected to work from daylight till dark. That is another way in which governments have encouraged production. They have done it by assistance to housing of people who work on the farms, and in the establishment of minimum wages and minimum hours of work.

Up to this point I have been speaking largely of the production of grain and foodstuffs; but what I have said is equally applicable, if not more so, to the production of dairy products, of beef and of the livestock industry. The governments are helping in the matter of legislation, and this is where I am coming to the support act which we have before us tonight.

One interesting thing I discovered was that in certain countries, notably in Sweden, a man may not own or buy land unless he is a farmer. Second, he is not allowed to buy more than he can efficiently use.

There is the situation. The agricultural production of Europe is increasing. One has only to go over the statistics for beef, milk and grain this year to prove that. The question that we must pose to ourselves in this house is this: Is that increase in these products to be permanent? If it is, then it will present a serious problem to the farmers of this Canada of ours, and we shall have to look elsewhere for a market for our products.

I said that the increased production is due largely to the policies of some of their governments, and largely to our own mistakes. I submit that some of it is due to our refusal to accommodate ourselves to changed marketing conditions, and our determination to stick to conservative methods of marketing. Under normal conditions Europe will not need coarse grains this year. Many countries are now, and more are becoming, self-sustaining in the matter of dairy products, and in fact they are using much more because their standards of living are rising and they are demanding more of these types of foods. Subsidies are being given to farmers in Britain, Denmark and Belgium to produce milk, butter and products of that kind. Since this has happened, since we have lost those markets, and since there is little likelihood of our regaining them, whose fault it is need not concern us now. The point is that there are in this country farmers who are faced with the loss of these markets, and that is my argument. That is all the more reason why there must be planning in agricultural marketing in this country, and hence my support of the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, while I do not think hon. members of the C.C.F. have intentionally misled the house, they have left the impression that the greatly increased production in Great Britain has been due to Labour government controls and subsidies.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Charlton: Be that as it may, they have left the impression that in these last few years all the increase has been as a result of the controls and subsidies.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Charlton: The truth is that the acreage in Great Britain has been greatly increased, and much of that acreage was formerly virgin soil which had never been worked. Much of the increase can be traced to the increased volume of land in production, as well as improved methods.

[Mr. Knight.]

I suggest the minister should give the committee some information as to the quantities of bacon, cheese and eggs contracted for in the last few years, and the quantities sent under those contracts each year, together with the prices paid. That information would be useful if it were placed on record.

Mr. Gardiner: Dealing first with bacon in 1939, the first year of the contract, the minimum contracted for was 291 million pounds, and we delivered more than that. The figure for delivery is 331 million pounds. In 1940 the amount contracted for was 425·6 million pounds and we sent that amount. In 1941 the amount contracted for was 600 million pounds, and we delivered 600 million pounds.

Then, in the year 1942-43—and we were dealing at that time with what we called the hog year, running from October 1 to the following September 30—we contracted for 675 million pounds and sent 675·1 million. In the fifth year of the contract—and let me point out that in January 1, 1944, we switched over, so that when we give the figure of 700 million pounds it will be understood that it is partially due to the change which took place.

In the period of two years, from January 1, 1944, to December 31, 1945, we contracted for 900 million pounds, sending over 450 million pounds in the first year and 272·9 million in the second year. Then, in the seventh year, from January to December we had contracted for 350 million pounds, and sent over 225·9 million. In the eighth year we contracted for 225 million and sent over 176·4. In 1949 we contracted for 160 million. The figure I have here shows a delivery of 67·1 million down to a certain date, but it is not complete. My understanding however is that it did run to 100 million last year. It will be noted that the figures for the last number of years have not nearly met the amounts contracted for and which could have been shipped if we had produced it.

Then may I add there are other quantities here which are related to pork. I have in mind canned pork, hog casings, pork offals and the like, which would bring these figures up to the total amounts sometimes used when we are referring to pork products. However, the amounts are not large. I might add that lard would also be included.

Then, coming to beef: we did not have a beef contract until 1944. We did have one from January of that year until December 31, 1945, a two-year contract. The minimum quantity contracted for was 100 million pounds, and the actual quantity shipped amounted to 348 million. In the second agreement, from January 1, 1946, to December 31, 1946, we agreed to send 60 million and sent 119·8 million. In the third year we agreed to send 120 million and sent only 40·6 million. That was at the time when we began to arrange to send our beef to the United States instead of sending it to Great Britain. In the fourth year we had an agreement for 50 million pounds, and sent 16·9 million. We then discontinued, and sent our beef to the United States.

With respect to poultry: Our first agreement was of November 11, 1943. We agreed to send 250,000 pounds and sent 258·3 thousand. The next year we agreed to send 2,000,000 pounds and we sent 1,973,000 pounds. The third year we agreed to send 12,500,000 pounds and we sent 13,329,000 pounds. That agreement was dropped and we have been shipping to the United States since.

In the case of eggs, the first contract in 1941 ran from April 1 to December 31. In that year we contracted for 13,800,000 dozen and we sent 15,337,000 dozen. The next year we contracted for 38,100,000 dozen and we sent 33,402,000 dozen. The next year we contracted for 57,000,000 dozen and we sent 33,643,000 dozen. The next year we contracted for 50,400,000 dozen and we sent 79,920,000 dozen. The following year, from January 1, 1945, to December 31, 1945, we contracted for 50,400,000 dozen and we sent 42,000,000 dozen in shell form and 47,700,000 dozen dried. The sixth year we contracted for 83,000,000 dozen and we sent 54,000,000 dozen shelled and 14,000,000 dozen dried. The next year we contracted for 83,000,000 dozen and we sent 58,000,000 dozen shelled and 30,569,000 dozen dried. The eighth year we contracted for 64,000,000 dozen and we sent 36,270,000 dozen shelled and 26,976,000 dozen dried. Last year we contracted to send 46,000,000 dozen but the final figure is not in this book. We did send something over 40,000,000 dozen.

I imagine hon. members might be interested in cheese. The first cheese contract was in 1940 and covered from May 28 to November 30. We contracted to send 78,000,000 pounds and we sent 93,000,000 pounds. The next year we contracted to send 112,000,000 pounds and we sent 115,000,000 pounds.

Mr. Charlton: Could the minister also give the prices?

Mr. Gardiner: The first year, 1940, the price was 14 cents per pound. In 1941 it was 14·4 cents. In the third year, which was 1942-43, we contracted to send 125 million pounds at 20 cents and we sent over 142 million pounds. In the fourth year we contracted for 150 million pounds at 20 cents and we sent 116·2 million pounds. In the fifth year we contracted for 125 million pounds at 20 cents and we sent 123 million pounds. In the sixth year we contracted for 125 million pounds at 20 cents and we sent 126·7 million pounds. In the seventh year we contracted for 125 million pounds at 20 cents and we sent 92 million pounds. In the eighth year, which covered from April 1, 1947, to March 31, 1948, we contracted to send 125 million pounds at 25 cents and we sent only 56 million pounds. Then in the ninth year we contracted to send 50 million pounds at 30 cents and we sent 32 million pounds. Last year we contracted to send 50 million pounds at 30 cents and we sent 50 million pounds. We had about 20 million pounds left at the end of the contract period which the British would not take. There is still what I called the other day a little surplus which amounts to some 18 million pounds. After all, that is not very much cheese to have in Canada.

I do not think the evaporated milk figures are important except to the people who are selling that product. They do not represent a great volume and it would take quite a time to give them all. I shall not do so unless hon. members request me to give the details.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Has the minister given any thought to looking for markets for our agricultural products along the Pacific? We have been shipping to the English market for one hundred years. In 1858 there were considerable shipments of grain from Upper Canada to Great Britain and that has been going on ever since. I would refer the minister to the Turgeon commission on grain which reported prior to world war II that the only part of the world where there was a demand for the surplus grains of Canada was along the Pacific. I just throw that out as a suggestion.

A lot of time has been wasted discussing the various angles of the agricultural situation. Hong Kong is a tributary to Vancouver. For fifty years we have been subsidizing ships that run to Hong Kong, and yet I think the returns will show that the people of Hong Kong before the war were buying bacon brought from Czechoslovakia or some place in Europe. No effort was being made by our Canadian people to develop a market in that British port. There are 80 million people in Japan and that country should provide a market for some of our surplus products.

I recall a contract that was entered into by certain people in Shanghai for the purchase of ice cream to be manufactured in British Columbia. This transaction was upset by the outbreak of war. There is a civilization developing over there which is becoming quite modernized and the people are acquiring a taste for bacon, flour, apples and many other products which we have in Canada.

An hon. Member: And cheese.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Cheese and dairy products. It might be well to think of developing some of these sources of trade when we are finding the markets of Europe so difficult to enter.

Mr. Gardiner: The Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here at the moment. He would have a much more intimate knowledge of the matter that has been raised than I have. I agree with most of what has been said tonight, that the best market for our Canadian products is in Canada. Right now we are getting higher prices for most of what we do sell in Canada than we could get anywhere else in the world. This applies to practically all animal products except beef cattle.

As long as the farmer can sell all that he produces in Canada, that is where he is going to sell especially when he can get more here than anywhere else. When we think he is not going to get enough, under this legislation we provide him with another three and a half cents per pound for Wiltshire sides and three cents per pound for cheese, partly by way of subsidy and partly by saying to the consumer in Canada that we would like him to pay it. With that help our farmer is getting higher prices than he could get elsewhere.

That is just what we said to him six years ago when this legislation was put on the statute books. We told him that we would help him to get better prices for staple products than he could get anywhere else, and he has been getting them. I suppose it may be argued that he has not been getting them long enough. I do not know, but up to now he is getting it. He is going to sell all he can in that market. In that regard may I say that we were doing a lot of talking a short time ago about the price of hogs. We have eaten 32 per cent more pork in the last two months than we ate in the same two months last year. We have eaten so much that the price of hogs today is just about at the floor price where it was last year when we were selling Wiltshire sides to Great Britain at $36 a hundred. Because our own people are eating bacon at a higher price than it is now being sold to Great Britain we are not getting the bacon to send there at the present time. Just a fraction of what we had expected to send to Great Britain has gone over in the last two months. We are not so much concerned now as we were a little while ago about whether the 60 million pounds in the contract is going to be used up in the first six months. I say that in order to show that when you can sell hogs at the price we are selling them in Canada, when you can sell cheese at the price you are selling it in Canada, when you can sell butter at the price you are selling it in Canada, there is no use thinking about trying to sell them in China because the Chinese just do not pay that much for the food they eat even if they had the dollars to pay for it.

After you get through with Canada the second best market, provided they will let us into it, is the United States. That is proved by the fact that when I was out in Alberta the other day I warned them about the situation. I might say to my friend from Calgary West—and he is concerned about that country—that one of the reasons why I went out there was to point out to them that they are selling 500,000 head of cattle a year, and Saskatchewan is selling 400,000 head of cattle a year. By doing that for the last few years they have reduced the number of cattle on the farms by two million. If they keep on doing that for a few years longer we will be wondering where we are going to get our production. We will not be wondering what we are going to do to sell it. I was warning them against selling their cattle at that rate and putting in three million acres more wheat last year. I was warning them that they should not do that another year, that they should keep their cattle on the farms, that they should keep on feeding cattle and cut down on their wheat acreage.

I say that in order to point out that there is no way in which you can determine that you are going to sell products to a market that is not as good as the one to which you are selling them. There is no place else in the world where you will get a price for cattle that will cause our farmers to cut down their herds to the extent they are in order to sell cattle in the United States. When they started to do that they did not think they were going to have those prices for cattle long enough to cut down their herds. They thought they were going to get something for what they had carried over and then eventually come to a lower level, but they have not yet.

After we get by the United States, if we have anything left to sell to anyone, apart from the trade restrictions that are put on and the fact that people refuse to buy it, the best market is the British market. If after we get through supplying those three markets we have anything left certainly we start to hunt for other markets, but it is not very often we have much left. We are always prepared to sell our products anywhere in the world that we can sell them and get the same return for them as we can get anywhere else. We have our feelers out in every country in the world where products can be sold in order to get all the information we can. I repeat what I have repeated on a number of occasions—and I hope I will not start a discussion by saying it—that we are not experiencing any great difficulty in selling our surpluses. When I say "surpluses" I am speaking advisedly and using the word "surplus" in the broadest sense of the term: you produce more than you want to consume in your own country. I am not talking about what is left over at the end of the year. I could go through these figures in front of me to indicate to you that when we get to the end of the year we have not very much of anything left over, if anything.

An hon. Member: Except butter.

Mr. Gardiner: We have not much of that. We eat a million pounds of butter a day. You could eat in ten days in this country all the surplus we have carried over. If it snows until the end of April as it has today you will eat it all. We have not got any more than enough in this country if we go through an April such as we have often had.

Mr. Drew: It will be bad if we have snow in June.

Mr. Gardiner: I have seen snow in May and I have gone skating on the 7th of May.

Mr. Knowles: You go skating every month in the year.

Mr. Gardiner: My friend says I go skating. I used to do a lot of skating, but I don't any more.

Mr. Knowles: You skate on pretty thin ice, too.

Mr. Gardiner: I used to keep some people who are in the house fairly busy too.

An hon. Member: Not on thin ice.

Mr. Gardiner: No; we put the ice some place where it would not break through, but nevertheless we had it. In concluding my remarks on this matter, I want to say that we explore every market in the world for farm products. From time to time we are selling products in Israel, India, Greece, Italy and France. We sell them in every country where we can, and it is not always just because we are worried about surpluses. It is because we want to encourage people to do what some of my friends over here have in mind when they talk about barter. We like to make some of these people feel good by giving them what they want even if we have to run ourselves short sometimes.

Mr. Wright: I should like to say a word or two and ask the minister a question. The hon. member for Brant-Wentworth suggested this afternoon that members of this group had given most of the credit for the additional production in England to what has taken place in the last three or four years under the Labour government. It certainly was not our intention to give that impression to the house, and I do not think we did. I was in England in 1944, and I know their agricultural act which they had in force at that time encouraged people to break up land. I was down in Hampshire county, and one farmer I visited had put 400 acres of new land under cultivation, but he had a subsidy from the government of £7 an acre for doing so. That was one of the reasons why a lot of land was put under cultivation at that time, because of subsidies paid by the government.

I should like to ask the minister if he will answer the question which I asked during the course of my remarks with respect to the Agricultural Prices Support Act. Subsection 2 of section 9 of that act states that the board:

> . . . shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

If the press was correct the minister, in speaking to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at Niagara Falls, indicated that the floor which had been set under the floor price legislation in Canada was in no case less than 10 per cent more than the ceiling price that had been received for those particular agricultural products during and since the war. Can the minister tell us just how the board arrives at what is a fair relationship between returns from agriculture and those from other occupations? They must have some method of determining it. So far as agriculture is concerned, I know that the price of our implements has not gone down by 10 per cent, nor has the cost of wages gone down by 10 per cent. I do not think that section of the act has been taken into consideration in setting these prices. I wish the minister would give the house and the country some idea of what method the board uses in determining what is a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations in Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, the board has followed exactly the practice as outlined in what I read this afternoon, and exactly the practice stated in the legislation itself. If my hon. friend did follow what I said at the federation meeting at Niagara Falls, he will recall that I was asked that question there. On the night of the broadcast, when Mr. Galbraith was there from the United States, I was asked by Mr. Hope, who is well known to members of this house, how we arrived at our floor prices. I stated that the practice we had followed had been to set up an agricultural prices support board in 1944. We gave them the task of comparing the costs to the farmers at that time with the returns they were obtaining, that is for 1943, 1944, and 1945, the last three years of the war.

Then I said that in setting floor prices we went back over those figures and had them checked. Then we compared them with the prices that the farmers were paying for the same list of products now, and what they were getting for their products under the floors. Well, that was the first answer. Then Mr. Hope asked Mr. Galbraith which period would give the farmer the better return if it were taken as a basis for what was called parity, the period of 1943-45, or the period 1926-29, or the period 1909-14, which is the period used by the United States. Mr. Galbraith said he did not have the figures for 1943-45, but he did have the figures for 1943-48, and he said the best period in the United States was that period. He said the second best period was from 1926 to 1929, and the third best was from 1909 to 1914. If I remember correctly, he said that the highest one was about 15 per cent better than the other one. While he did not have the exact figures on the centre period, he thought it might be somewhere around 10 or a little lower, better than the period 1909-14.

The next day I was asked this question again in the open meeting, and I gave the answer that I have just given. Mr. Hope stood up in the meeting—I am sure that if he were here tonight he would tell you what I am going to tell you now—and said, "When I asked the question last night and got the answer I did from Mr. Galbraith, I was a little surprised; so I went right up to my room and took those figures." For the benefit of the members of this house, I might say that up until last year Mr. Hope was the economic adviser to the Conservative party on agricultural matters. He is now economic adviser to the farm federation. Mr. Hope said he went up to his room, took the figures which he had, checked up on what had been said, and applied it to Canada. He said, "I must say that the last period is still the better in Canada." He did not say how much better, but he said it was better in Canada. In other words, our base is the highest price.

What I want to say, in reply to the question that has been asked, is that we have checked the floors we have put in. A Mr. MacInnis, the gentleman who has been going around Ontario making speeches about hogs, got up in the meeting and said, "Can you give me those figures?" I told him I could not give him those figures now because I did not have them with me. I checked them before I agreed to the 32½ cents, and before I agreed to the figure that is being paid by all concerned. I said, "All I can tell you at the moment is that the price which was agreed to is highest." Well, I have sent him the figures since, and speaking from memory—I can give the correct figures later if it is necessary—it works out to 24 cents and a fraction for hogs that are now selling in Toronto at 27 cents and a fraction. You will find if you go over the others that there is not very much difference in the others as compared with that. In other words, we have not written a formula into the act; we are trying to use common sense in working out the figures. We think they are quite satisfactory.

Mr. Wright: I take it from the minister's reply that the period 1943-45 will be used in determining—or is it 1943-48?

Mr. Gardiner: The period we have been checking on is 1943, 1944 and 1945. We will continue to check on it. I do not say, neither do they in the United States, that when that has been worked out we are going to pay a 100 per cent floor price based on it. In the United States, they do not pay anything higher than 90 per cent, and most of the time they are paying 60 per cent. What I did say in Niagara Falls, and what I have said everywhere, is that, when we brought in this legislation, no farmer in Canada, no one anywhere, expected that we would set floor prices at the highest price level we would ever obtain for farm products. That is the price we obtained in 1949, the highest price we ever obtained.

The only criticism that has been made of what we have done is that we should have put the floor at the peak. We did not undertake to do that.

Mr. Wright: It is quite evident from what the minister has stated now that, so far as the government is concerned, it is not going to give a guarantee at all. It is only going to figure out the 1943-45 price and decide on each product as it comes up, whether to set the floor prices at 70 per cent of parity, 90 per cent, or 25 per cent.

Mr. Gardiner: The people learned a long time ago, and have demonstrated it quite a few times in recent elections, that the security of having a Liberal government in power giving them these undertakings is sufficient.

Mr. Charlton: Has the minister compared the prices in Canada for 1943-45 with the figures for the United States for the same years?

Mr. Gardiner: I do not think I have them here for the same years, but I think my hon. friend knows Mr. Galbraith. He is a native of Ontario, and has held prominent positions in the United States department of agriculture, as well as in United States universities. He has figured out prices for the United States, but has spent a considerable part of his time in this country. If my hon. friend does not know Mr. Galbraith, I am sure he knows Mr. Hope. These gentlemen have both said that the position is a better position, if you take those years, both in Canada and in the United States, than you could get by taking any other years.

Mr. Charlton: I am not questioning Mr. Galbraith's figures for 1943-48. Mr. Galbraith took the figures from 1943-48—

Mr. Gardiner: But Mr. Hope did not.

Mr. Charlton: The minister is taking the figures from 1943-45, and is not considering 1946, 1947 or 1948.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Hope, in making his statement the next day, took the period I took, and said he had to admit that it was a better period.

Mr. Charlton: Let us get this straight, Mr. Chairman. The figures the minister has just said were taken when floor prices were fixed on these products were from 1943-45; is that correct?

Mr. Gardiner: I did not say we took those figures in order to set the prices at all. I said we calculated what the relationship was in those three years and took what the relationship is now as between what the farmer buys and what he sells. We found that a certain figure was a better price for the farmer than if we took that particular relationship. We gave him more. We did not give him that amount.

Mr. Charlton: The only thing I can say is that it seems extremely strange that this price now with the subsidy paid by the government seems to be halfway between the old price and the new price in the contract. The same is true of both bacon and cheese. It looks extremely suspicious, as if they just divided it and said "There, take that" and let it go.

Mr. Gardiner: We did not do that. I am not going to allow that to go unchallenged. We did not do that. As a matter of fact, what did happen was this. The British said, "We will not pay you any more than 25 cents for cheese. It does not make any difference what you think about it. You people can make up your minds whether you want to sell us any cheese at all or not. If you want to sell us cheese at 25 cents, all right, we will take it." They said the same thing with regard to hogs. They said, "We will take your Wiltshire sides at 29 cents but we will not give you any more." As a matter of fact, when one of the newspaper reporters tried to put a different interpretation on it, Sir Andrew Jones himself came out in the press and said that was true. He said they refused to give us any more. It was the highest price we could get from them. Then when they said that was the highest price they would give we figured out what the proper relationship was. I may as well be quite candid with the committee. I do not think the price of farm products is going up when they are higher in this country than they are in any other country in the world. As I say, we figured out what the proper relationship was and we gave the farmer a higher return because we had said when we brought in this legislation in the first place that for a while he ought to have more than that worked out to. When we found that it was more, we put it halfway in between. I may say that the price of hogs is $28.75 in Toronto today. If my friend gets a broad enough smile on, he will be able to smile away the fact that that is about $1.15 higher than the floor price is for hogs at $36 a hundredweight for Wiltshire sides.

Mr. Charlton: The minister has just admitted that they did as I a moment or two ago said they did. Here is another thing. The minister has suggested that prices are higher here than in any other country in the world. I should like him to compare the price of potatoes here, for instance, with the price of potatoes in the United States; and also the price of beef here with the price of beef in the United States.

Mr. Gardiner: I say on the products we are talking about, the products that we have had contracts for.

Mr. Charlton: The minister said "farm products".

Mr. Gardiner: We are talking about products for which we had contracts with Britain. There were never any contracts with Britain for potatoes. This is with regard to bacon, hogs, dairy products, cattle and so on.

Mr. Argue: The minister has quoted the price for hogs at Toronto—the prevailing price, so he says—to prove that the present price in Canada today is a certain amount above or below, I am not sure which, the present floor price. I can tell the minister that the price for B-1 hogs at Winnipeg on March 16 was $28.50 a hundredweight and the price in the week of March 18 a year ago was $29.10 a hundredweight. In other words, there has been a drop in hog prices of $2.50 this year as compared with last year.

I have here the wholesale prices of eggs in Saskatoon for the month of February of this year and the month of February of last year. The wholesale price for this year is 39 cents; the wholesale price last year was 44 cents a dozen. There has been a drop in the wholesale price of 5 cents a dozen. It is therefore clear that no matter what period the minister has taken, and not for the purposes of establishing floor prices but merely for the purpose of checking, the fact is that there has been a substantial drop in the prices of these commodities at a time when farmers' costs have not gone down. For me at any rate it is not enough for the minister to say to this committee that he is going to check a certain set of figures and then the government is going to decide the floor. If the farmers of Canada want any security under this legislation, I think it needs to be written into that legislation, and we need a proper formula. I do not know what years the minister checked a year ago when he started to buy butter at 58½ cents a pound. I am wondering what years he is going to check this year when he sets the price, and if it is going to be a different set of years. I wonder if he thinks the cost of producing butter has gone down any, and I wonder if the floor price of butter is likely to drop within the next few days. I should like to ask the minister how long the floor price under hogs will be maintained, what the government hopes to do after the British contract expires in July, whether the government will endeavour to have new contracts signed after that date; and whether there is a contract signed or not, if the present support prices will continue for at least one year.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know that I need to answer the questions just as they have been asked because if I did I would have to search out the occasions which suit the government least and to quote those prices. My friend quotes a price of 50 cents for eggs or 44 cents for eggs at a certain period. During 1946 the average price of eggs was 44·3 cents. He has stated that they were at that price at some particular time. The lowest price was 38·4 and the highest price was 50·5. You can, of course, take different periods in between there and compare them with some other time in some other year and get almost any result you like. In 1949 the average price was 56 cents; the low price was 42·3 and the high price was 71·5. There is therefore quite a wide range there. As a matter of fact, it was partly to take up that range that we set 38 cents right across the year as the floor price, thus making it possible for the consumers to get eggs throughout the year at a reasonable price whereas the farmers would get a reasonable price throughout the whole year and not a low price when production is up and a high price when production is down.

Then as to butter, the average price in 1945, which is the year we have been talking about, was 35·2; the low was 34·1 and the high was 36·5. In 1948 the three comparable figures were 67·8, 65·3 and 68·5. In 1949 the average price was 61, the low being 58 which was our floor, which covered the greater part of the year; and 68·5 was our ceiling which was the highest price that there was in the year. We had a ceiling at the beginning of last year. Those are figures which indicate that you do not get very much by making comparisons as between today and some other date at some other time. The fact is that these prices for hogs today in Canada are higher than the floor makes it necessary for someone to pay. But when you look at comparable prices in 1941, cheese was 16 cents; in 1946 it was 23·8; in 1948 it was 36·5; in 1949, it was 33 cents. That is still double what it was back at the time we started these different policies. As to hogs, the prices were $11.17, $15.86, $24.96 and $24.59. That is for live hogs. For cattle, the prices were $8.95, $13.89, $21.25. I do not know how anyone can argue that the farmer is getting poorer when his prices are improving in that way.

Mr. Charlton: Did I understand the minister to say, in the prices that he quoted, that eggs averaged somewhere near 44 cents, with a low of 42 cents and a high of 55 cents?

Mr. Gardiner: In what year?

Mr. Charlton: 1949.

Mr. Gardiner: In 1946, 44·3 cents with a low of 38·4 cents, and a high of 50·8 cents. In 1949, 56 cents was the average with a low of 42·3 cents and a high of 75 cents. Of course these prices are wholesale prices.

Mr. Charlton: How did the minister arrive at 38 cents as the floor price for eggs this year?

Mr. Gardiner: If the hon. member will take a look at the prices for the different years that we have been mentioning he will find that it is not very far out of line. In 1941 the average was 34·6 cents, with a low of 24·8 cents and a high of 50·6 cents. In 1946, which is the year after the period we are talking about, the average was 44·3 cents, with a low of 38·4 cents and a high of 50·8 cents. Thirty-eight cents was the floor price in the year 1946. But if you put the test to it that we have been putting to these others you will find that it works out just about the same as it does for the other produce.

Mr. Wright: This afternoon the minister read into the record the speech which he made in 1944 when the prices support act was passed in this house. In that speech he said that due regard would be had for certain losses which the farmers had sustained in the thirties, and during certain of the war years, in the setting of floor prices under the act. I would take it to mean that in the setting of floor prices the lowest floor price should be at least as high as the prices in the 1943-45 period if they are to compensate the farmers for losses during the thirties and during the early years of the war, when the prices were on a level with other sections of our Canadian economy.

The minister has not stated whether in setting these floor prices these other considerations will be taken into account. I should like him to say whether he thinks the farmers have been compensated. Does he think that today, because of the prices they received during 1946, 1947 and 1948 or in 1948 and 1949, they have been compensated for any losses which they may have sustained in those earlier years? Does he intend to take that into consideration in setting floor prices from now on?

Mr. Gardiner: Under this act we set up a board to report to me from time to time what the situation is; and they report to me that up till now we are above that price in the returns that we are getting generally for farm products. I think it would be apparent to anyone who has been associated with agriculture that you may be able to pick out some particular product that for some period of time may be below, but the farmer on his return generally will be better off—and every farmer realizes that; I do not need to figure it out for him—now than he has ever been at any time. He knows that.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES PRICES SUPPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION IN FORCE

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation in force of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill which will be introduced when this resolution passes is to place section 9 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944, on the same basis as the other sections of the act.

Section 12 of the act provided as follows:

Section 9 of this act shall come into force on a date to be fixed, and remain in force for such period as may be determined, by proclamation of the governor in council.

Section 9 of the act was accordingly brought into force on July 23, 1947, by proclamation of the governor in council. When this bill is enacted, section 9 will be placed in the same category as the other sections of the act.

Mr. Higgins: I should like to say a word in connection with this resolution. Yesterday, as reported at page 1004 of Hansard, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Catherwood) asked what was the total consumption of margarine in Canada in 1949, and what percentage of the oils and other ingredients contained in margarine was imported. The answer given as to the consumption of margarine was 71,992,000 pounds, and that the utilization of oils and fats in margarine production during 1949 was 60,074,339 pounds, of which 44,814,521 pounds, or about 75 per cent, consisted of cottonseed, peanut, coconut, and palm kernel oils. The answer, however, states that these ingredients would be imported as raw product or refined oils. That means that these particular oils were being imported from the United States. What I want to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant is the fact that marine oils should be used. Marine oils have been used for a long time prior to this year. They are still in use, but for some reason or other the manufacturers of margarine desire to use these United States oils. The United States dollar situation is bad, but nevertheless these people are importing these oils and are paying United States dollars for them. I have referred to this matter before, but I do say, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the unemployment situation, not only as it affects the province of Newfoundland but the maritime provinces, and all of Canada, the use of marine oils should be made obligatory by the manufacturers of margarine.

In that connection I might add that the historic sealing voyage that was prosecuted in Newfoundland, and which the Secretary of State so ably described to a gathering in recent days, in former days by 31 ships, is prosecuted this year by only 4. The reason is that they cannot sell the seal oil. It is not my intention to delay the committee on this matter, but I would appreciate it if the parliamentary assistant would once again bring this matter to the attention of the minister. I feel it could be made a proviso, and would be as good as price support.

One other matter before I conclude what I have to say. I mentioned earlier the grave necessity, for the Newfoundland economy, of making available the conversion of sterling. In the last newspaper received from Newfoundland we find an account of a declaration made by the premier of Newfoundland in the legislature of that province on March 13. In that declaration he refers to a meeting held in Ottawa between the officials of the fisheries board, the Minister of Fisheries and the Prime Minister. He named the people who were present representing the codfish association of Newfoundland, and pointed out that there were present members of parliament and senators from the salt codfish section of Newfoundland, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

I know that all the Newfoundland members, with the exception of my confrère from St. John's West, and myself, were present. We do not know what went on at that time. The statement in the press, however, suggests—and perhaps the Prime Minister, who is now in the chamber, might make some comment on this—what took place. The newspaper article states that the premier had said:

—that the problem was not one of markets but to find ways and means of obtaining payment for the fish.

He states that the whole situation was thoroughly threshed out at Ottawa. Describing further the conference which took place, he states that a special committee was appointed to represent the five provinces, and meetings were held between that committee and the Minister of Fisheries and his senior officials. Then the article quotes him as follows:

I had the honour to introduce the representatives of Nafel and the salt codfish association to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada, when the problem was discussed with frankness and sympathy.

I can say with assurance that we found both the Minister of Fisheries and the Prime Minister to be well-informed on the situation, and thoroughly up-to-date in their information. I can say with equal assurance that they fully appreciated the situation and that they gave ample evidence of possessing a strong desire to be helpful. We were all very favourably impressed.

The impression I gather from that is that the problems of the salt-codfishing industry of Newfoundland have been solved, at least for this year. Would it be fair to ask the Prime Minister if he could say anything in the matter?

Mr. St. Laurent: What I would have to say is that the hon. member's assumption goes farther than anything that I said would justify. I did not say that the codfish problem was solved. I did say that the very best efforts were going to be put forth to solve it, and that there was reason to expect that those efforts might bear fruit.

Mr. Higgins: I did not intend to convey the impression that the Prime Minister had said that. But the inference from the premier's statement was to that effect.

An hon. Member: No.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

Mr. Bryce: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if he can tell the committee how much money has been paid out under the Fisheries Prices Support Act since it went into operation, in each of the years. Would he also tell us how those expenditures have been divided as between the Atlantic coast, the prairies and the Pacific coast? Would he also tell us how the surplus was disposed of and how much money he was able to get from the disposal of that surplus.

Mr. MacNaught: I have not the information with me. However, I shall read the question in Hansard and have the information for the hon. member when we are in committee on the bill.

Mr. Bryce: That will be satisfactory.

Mr. Noseworthy: Is the government considering having the manufacturers of margarine use fish oils, whale and seal oils? I understand a representative of the department was in Toronto some weeks ago to discuss the matter with the margarine manufacturers, with a view to inducing them to use those oils in place of some of the vegetable oils they are now using. What was the result of that interview?

Mr. MacNaught: I am informed that all the seal oil for 1949 has been disposed of satisfactorily, and that it is too early in 1950 to make any estimate as to what we are going to do with the 1950 product.

Mr. Higgins: Is it not a fact that it was solved at such a late date that it has the effect of more or less making this a token seal fishery this year?

Mr. MacNaught: The information I have was that it was sold satisfactorily.

Mr. Higgins: But within the last three weeks.

Mr. MacNaught: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Fournier, Hull (for Mr. Mayhew) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 54, to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF EXISTING LEGISLATION—ORGANIZATION FOR DEFENCE—CODE OF SERVICE, DISCIPLINE, ETC.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to revise and consolidate in one act the several acts respecting the Department of National Defence and the armed services of Canada, with provision inter alia for the payment of pay and allowances of officers and men of the forces, the salaries and expenses of members of the defence research board, fees and allowances of the members of the court martial appeal board, the compensation for loss or damage due to the exercise of emergency powers, advances to meet expenses and costs of calling out forces in aid of civil power, the acquisition and disposition of property and generally the costs of and incidental to the operation of the act, and all other matters directly concerning defence.

Mr. Pearkes: Would the minister make a statement now?

Mr. Claxton: Could we not have it in committee?

Mr. Pearkes: Very well.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the national defence bill which will be introduced if the resolution is adopted is to modernize and consolidate in one statute all legislation respecting the Department of National Defence and the armed forces of Canada.

The bill is a further step in the announced purpose to unify and co-ordinate all of the defence forces of Canada.

The bill is also a further step towards the complete Canadianization of the armed forces of Canada. If this bill is passed, all provisions governing the armed services of Canada will, for the first time, be found in a statute enacted by the Canadian parliament representing the Canadian people.

In content the bill is the largest to be put before this house since the session of 1934. It contains 251 sections but these will replace over 600 sections in the seven statutes now applicable.

During the last session of parliament the bill was introduced in the other place where it was my privilege to give an explanation before it was referred to the committee on banking on the motion of the government leader. In that committee and in the house itself, the bill was carefully and fully considered and passed with certain amendments on December 8, 1949. Since the prorogation of parliament took place on December 10, 1949, it was impossible to proceed with the bill in this house but, as hon. members are aware, the very earliest opportunity has been taken of putting the bill before you. In addition, hon. members here, many of whom have had distinguished careers in the armed forces of Canada in one or both of the world wars, have had an opportuntiy of examining the bill as it was put before the other place.

As I indicated in the house last year, it is the intention of the government to refer the bill that will be introduced in consequence of this resolution, and also the other two defence bills, to a special committee. I hope this suggestion will appeal to hon. members of the house as obviously it is a measure which can be dealt with most effectively in that way. I am in the hands of the committee and I can go on and make a full statement, or I can do it on second reading.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the minister but I think perhaps it might be as well to consider a point that should be borne in mind and we should do our utmost to avoid a certain possibility arising. You will recall that a motion was dealt with in this house which asked for a committee to be set up to deal with the broad problem of defence. Then at a later time proposals were put forward in discussion and it was suggested that there be a committee to deal with the more limited aspect of the defence problems, and that the estimates be referred to that committee. Contrary to our request and fully conscious of what the effect of that would be, we urged that this should be dealt with—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt—

Mr. Drew: Are you not prepared to listen to the rest of this?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the chairman rises it is the rule that the hon. member who has the floor must resume his seat. The chairman does not rise to his feet simply to interrupt an hon. member or for his own pleasure. There is a rule that provides that the member who has the floor should not be interrupted except for the purpose of raising a question of privilege or a point of order. In this case the leader of the opposition stood up and said that he was sorry to interrupt the minister who was speaking.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: One second, please. The minister sat down, indicating his willingness to listen to the remarks of the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition is talking about a matter which has been decided by the house by a vote and that vote stands as the judgment of the house. Later when the matter was brought up again there was an appeal from a ruling by the chairman which was confirmed by the house. I am quite willing to let the leader of the opposition continue the remarks he has started, but I want to warn him that we must not get into a discussion of a question which has been decided by the house.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, are you ruling that because—

The Deputy Chairman: It is not a ruling. I am only warning that I do not want a repetition of the discussion of the other day. I said I was quite willing to permit the leader of the opposition to speak but I am warning him that he should not go into the question that was decided the other day by the house.

Mr. Drew: I have no thought of going into the subject. It is quite obvious that this will not come up for consideration tonight, but for the purpose of facilitating the consideration of what course should be followed I would point out that as a result of that unfortunate ruling the other night the minister should find some way in which this committee can be set up.

Mr. Claxton: I have indicated already that there will be no difficulty about setting up the committee if that is the wish of the house. I made the suggestion at the last session that we should have a committee specially set up to deal with this bill. I had indicated in the words which the leader of the opposition followed that it was the intention of the government to set up a committee to deal with this bill and with the other two bills dealing with defence. This is quite a different matter from anything the leader of the opposition had in mind.

Our thought is that just as soon as the resolutions relative to the three defence measures are adopted the bills will be distributed. Then on the occasion of their second reading I propose to move that they be referred to a special committee. I have indicated already that that is the procedure the government hopes to follow and I do not think the leader of the opposition or anyone else would like to object to that.

I am in the hands of the committee as to how far I should develop the exposition of the bills before us at this time. It seems to me that having one act to cover the defence forces of Canada, and which would bring up to date legislation which has been on the statute books since 1868, with few amendments, is something that would appeal to the common sense and good judgment of this house. That is the purpose of the legislation.

If it is the wish of hon. members, I can make a full statement at this stage, but it seems to me that the time for that would more properly be when the bills were before us and the intentions of the government made known. My suggestion to the committee is that the most sensible course to follow would be for me to postpone any more extended remarks until the bills have received first reading and are in the hands of hon. members in all parts of the house. Then tomorrow if the business of the house permits we could proceed with them in the most orderly way possible. If that were done then it would be my hope that in consequence of the discussion tomorrow it would be possible for us to set up the special committee to deal with these three bills in order that we could have these measures, which I regard as of great importance, dealt with by a committee of the house. I suggest that, because of their peculiar character, because they are rather technical—certainly two of them—that is much the most convenient way of dealing with them.

Mr. Pearkes: In view of the extreme importance of this resolution, I think the house would like to have a full explanation at this time. The minister appeared in the other place and gave a very full explanation to its members. I feel that members of this house would like to have the same full explanation now because many of them have not had an opportunity to see the bill.

Mr. Claxton: I shall be very glad indeed to respond to the invitation of the hon. member for Nanaimo.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to make a few remarks on the question of order. I agree with the chairman's ruling that the leader of the opposition was not in order in the remarks he made, but I also agree with the leader of the opposition as to the importance of setting up a defence committee. I do not agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo as to the resolutions to which the Minister of National Defence has referred at this time. I do not think that any long or detailed explanation is required. They merely involve technical changes in the pension set-up, military law and all that kind of thing. An explanation at this time would mean very little to us. So far as I am concerned I would be quite prepared to move the whole thing along as rapidly as possible to a committee so that we may have something done about it.

At the same time I do not want the Minister of National Defence to create the impression that the bills to be based on these resolutions, and which it is intended to refer to a committee of the house, have anything to do with matters of national defence. I think there is no more serious, urgent and important problem facing members of the house today than a competent committee to sit down with the Minister of National Defence, his advisers and everyone else concerned, and go into the whole matter of defence. Personally I often feel sorry for the minister. He supervises the army, navy, air force, atomic energy, everything that has to do with the defence of Canada, and in a very threatening atmosphere. If I were he I would welcome handing over a lot of his responsibility to other members of the house rather than be the spokesman in the house, the apologist and the one who has to take it on the chin for a lot of people outside whom he knows very little about, or about what they are doing. He must accept their word for things.

The resolutions before us do not mean anything, so far as I am concerned. I am quite prepared to proceed, let them go through tonight, and get them to a committee where the technical details and changes in regulations and so forth can be looked after. Before the minister goes any further, I should like him to tell us whether it is the intention of the government in the foreseeable future to set up a committee of the house on the whole matter of national defence.

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, does the hon. member for Nanaimo still insist on having a full statement?

Mr. Pearkes: I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South just illustrate the importance of a full explanation at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I call it eleven o'clock?

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the helpful remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and I should also like to meet the wish of the hon. member for Nanaimo. In view of the difference of opinion, I think perhaps the only possible course to follow is to make a statement on this resolution, and then look forward with hopefulness to the appointment of the committee about which I have spoken, not the one to which the hon. member for Cape Breton South has referred, to deal with these bills as soon as possible.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will take up first the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance to amend the Transitional Measures Act, 1947. Then we will discuss the motion to set up a committee on old age security, and then the motion to refer the estimates of the Department of External Affairs to the standing committee on external affairs. We also hope to pass motions Nos. 4 and 12 on today's order paper.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 24, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VISITORS IN GALLERY—PORCUPINE COMBINES JUNIOR HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. Karl A. Eyre (Timmins): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the house the fact that sitting here in the south gallery are eighteen members of the Porcupine Combines junior hockey team and their executive. They are the junior champions of northern Ontario. Sixteen of these boys were born, raised and educated in Timmins and the north country. For seventeen of them this is their first trip to Ottawa, and naturally their first trip to see the parliament of Canada. I hope that they take home with them a good impression.

Mr. Graydon: They look like Progressive Conservatives.

ANSWER TO QUESTION AS TO TABLING OF STATUTORY REPORTS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have been informed, Mr. Speaker, and through you I should like to pass the information on to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that all reports have now been tabled. I have been handed a copy of the printed list made up under standing order 84, and opposite each item there has been written in the date when the report was tabled, or the comment "nil", which I am told means that there is no report under that heading.

Mr. Fleming: Will it be printed in today's Hansard for convenience of reference by hon. members?

Mr. St. Laurent: It consists of fifteen pages.

Mr. Fleming: It would be convenient for hon. members to have it.

Mr. Abbott: It costs money, too.

Mr. St. Laurent: I will get a copy for the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: Don't forget one for me.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. B. McCulloch (Pictou) presented the first report of the special committee on railways and shipping, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT AND AUDITORS' REPORT TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to lay on the table the following reports in English and in French: Annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1949, and the auditors' report to parliament for the year ended December 31, 1949, in respect of Trans-Canada Air Lines. These reports are being distributed today.

By leave of the house I move:

That the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1949, and the auditors' report to parliament for the year ended December 31, 1949, in respect of Trans-Canada Air Lines, tabled this day, be referred to the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 24, 1950

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, Friday, the 24th March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 18, for the relief of Doris Joan Guest Rigg.—Mr. Winkler.

Private Bills—Divorce

Bill No. 19, for the relief of Cora Elizabeth Jamieson Southam.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 20, for the relief of Audrey Brenda Holmes Burnett.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 21, for the relief of Barbara Edna Brownrigg Johnson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 22, for the relief of Aili Katriina Salokannel Martel.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 23, for the relief of Velma Elizabeth Buchanan Lowson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 24, for the relief of Gladys Harriet Hassall Thom.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 25, for the relief of Elisabeth Mavis Cann Jousse.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 26, for the relief of Eric Lacate.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 27, for the relief of Dorothy Margaret May Harris McCormick.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 28, for the relief of Sigrid Denston Day.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 29, for the relief of Beatrice Campbell McClay.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 30, for the relief of Catherine C. Goodrow Rogers.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 31, for the relief of Miriam Roberta Weir Caryer.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 32, for the relief of Marjorie Frances Murphy Cozzolino.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 33, for the relief of Mary Thomson Cadieux.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 34, for the relief of Veronica Pearl Faulkner MacKenzie.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 35, for the relief of Elizabeth Hampshier Atyon Reilley.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 36, for the relief of Sybil Elliott Karr Boulanger.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 37, for the relief of Mary Kennedy Dunn Anderson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 38, for the relief of Albert Ernest Curtis.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 39, for the relief of Annie Swales Barber.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 40, for the relief of Rebecca Catherine Pitts Duquette.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 41, for the relief of Edith Mary Stone Ryan.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 42, for the relief of Pearl Greenspan Abramovitz.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 43, for the relief of Harry Rudner.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 44, for the relief of Dorothea Joan Lawrence Gamble.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 45, for the relief of Walter St. Andre Bawn.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 46, for the relief of Alison Hamilton Brown Weldon.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 47, for the relief of Hazel May Wilkie MacLeod.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 48, for the relief of William Gordon Cascadden.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 49, for the relief of Romeo Lefebvre.—Mr. Winkler.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Bill No. 50, for the relief of Kathleen Veronica Thompson Davidson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 51, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Winsorlow Brisebois.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 52, for the relief of Margaret May Tuck Reicker.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 53, for the relief of Mabel Kearley Budgell.—Mr. Winkler.

SPRING STILETTOS

REQUEST OF TORONTO CITY COUNCIL FOR BAN ON IMPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. J. Henry (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is it a fact that Toronto city council has requested the Minister of Justice to take steps to ban the importation of certain stilettos, or spring knives, on the ground that such stilettos or knives are offensive weapons and not likely to serve any useful purpose? What action, if any, has been taken by the government in connection with the matter?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question. The answer to the first question is yes. As to the second question, I think that having regard to the fact that the request came as a letter from the city clerk of Toronto, I should simply read into the record the reply which I sent to that gentleman. My letter to him reads as follows:

> Thank you for your letter of March 8 advising me that your city council at its meeting held on March 6, 1950, decided to request us to consider the placing of a ban on the importation of "spring knives or stilettos" on the grounds that they are considered offensive weapons.
>
> I understand that what you are referring to by the term "spring knife or stiletto" is an article which is known as a spring stiletto. This weapon is similar to a spring knife except that it has no cutting edge, the blade when open being 3¼ to 4 inches in length. Mr. L. H. Taylor, the secretary of customs, informs us that stilettos are refused entry into Canada by virtue of an order in council passed under the Customs Act prohibiting the importation of certain offensive weapons without a permit, and no permit is given for stilettos, including stilettos of the spring type such as the one referred to in your letter.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROSPECTIVE DELIVERY OF FOUR-ENGINE TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence of which I have given him notice. In view of today's press reports, quoting a statement of the Minister of National Defence in regard to the new four-engine prototype transport aircraft which is to be delivered shortly to the Royal Canadian Air Force, will the minister inform the House of Commons as to the date on which the Canadian Commercial Corporation was advised that the Royal Canadian Air Force required this aircraft?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): As the leader of the opposition has said, he was good enough to give me notice of the question, but I happened to be at a meeting until a very late hour this morning, and I was not able to obtain the information that he desires. However, I can tell him that this aircraft was ordered to replace a North Star aircraft that was lent to Trans-Canada Air Lines, in consideration of a rent, in June, 1947. That aircraft was destroyed while in operation with T.C.A. on August 12, 1948. There was only one possible source from which to replace the aircraft, namely, Canadair Limited, from which it had been obtained, and which had the jigs and designs and so on. Negotiations continued steadily with regard to that aircraft. I have not been able to verify the exact date on which the Canadian Commercial Corporation was advised that we would want the aircraft replaced by Canadair, but certainly it would have been shortly after the date of destruction, because there was only one source of supply.

While I am speaking on this subject I should add that the press reports which appeared yesterday, and resulted in my making a release myself, follow an announcement which referred to this matter on May 18, 1949.

Mr. Drew: In view of the answer given by the minister, will he arrange that I be notified of the date, when he is able to obtain it?

Mr. Claxton: The Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for Canadian Commercial Corporation, will, I am sure, be glad to give that information on Monday.

Mr. Graydon: This is the first time anyone has ever spoken on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

INCOME TAX

ALLOWANCE OF TRADE UNION DUES AS DEDUCTION FROM TAXABLE INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Before the budget is brought down on Tuesday of next week, will the government reconsider the matter of allowing trade union dues as a deduction for income tax purposes?

Mr. Bradette: Why?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): The government will be giving consideration to many matters before the budget is brought down on Tuesday, and no doubt this one can be included in that consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO COAL CONTRACTS IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have received a telegram from the miners' union of Drumheller, Alberta, stating that the loss of coal contracts is creating an extremely serious—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a rule in the house that telegrams must not be read when a question is being asked before the orders of the day are called.

Mr. Johnston: Can the minister tell the house what policy the government has in mind, if any, to relieve this very serious unemployment situation?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any serious situation. There was a good deal of talk a month or so ago about the serious shortage of coal in western Canada. I have not been advised of any surplus production going unwanted. However, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

NEWFOUNDLAND

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL TAX AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. What is the situation in regard to the tax agreement with Newfoundland?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I returned to the city only at noon today, and I am afraid I cannot give the most up-to-date information. The last information I had, however, was that they were on the eve of complete agreement. There were some technical details to be arranged. However, so far as I am aware, it will be completed shortly.

OIL AND GAS

QUESTION AS TO EXPORT TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Vancouver Sun in an editorial of March 22, headed "British Columbia betrayed"—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid the rule must apply to the hon. member who has the floor, as it applied to the hon. member who spoke previously. Telegrams or newspapers must not be read when asking questions before the orders of the day are called.

Mr. Goode: There is a feeling in British Columbia that there have been discussions between the government and United States interests regarding the disposition of natural gas. Have there been any discussions in this regard?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I know of no discussions having to do with the export of natural gas to the United States in return for the export of natural gas from the United States to any other part of Canada. I can say positively that no such discussions have taken place.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TRANSFER OF ARMY PERSONNEL—HOUSING ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Almost a month ago I asked whether any relief was to be given to members of the army who were ordered to report for duty in the capital city of Ottawa. I asked whether they would be receiving relief because of the exorbitant rents they are now being compelled to pay when they arrive here with their families. I have received no reply to my question. This is a serious matter—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ferguson: I would interject this one point: One young member of the army—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. Ferguson: Will something be done immediately by the Department of National Defence to aid members of the army in the matter of accommodation when they are ordered to report to Ottawa for duty, so that they will not have to spend about $700—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the rather complete answer the hon. member received when he asked the question the first time.

WHEAT

ANSWER TO QUESTION AS TO MAKING CHURCHILL A DELIVERY POINT UNDER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) asked me a question with reference to the port of Churchill and its status as a basing point under the international wheat agreement. I have now obtained particulars from our representative at the international wheat conference in London. The port of Churchill is not a base point under the international wheat agreement, but arrangements have been made with the international wheat council that will enable Canada to utilize this port.

The arrangements are covered by resolutions passed at the twenty-third meeting of the executive committee held in London on January 31, 1950. The resolution adopted reads as follows:

> That No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat in store port Churchill, Manitoba, be designated a description of wheat under article 6, paragraph 4, and that the advisory committee on price equivalents be requested to advise the executive committee on appropriate maximum and minimum price equivalents for such description of wheat, it being understood that if Canada is requested to deliver wheat at maximum prices and/or if Canada requests importing countries to accept wheat at minimum prices the Fort William-Port Arthur prices basis should apply.

In accordance with this resolution Canada may negotiate and complete sales under the international wheat agreement for Churchill shipment at prices in line with c.i.f. prices at destination as compared with St. Lawrence shipment. If such sales can be made, Canada would secure the advantage of cheaper overall forwarding costs as the result of using this port. However, if Canada is called upon for wheat at the international wheat agreement maximum price or desires to put wheat at the international wheat agreement minimum price, we can only deliver wheat from Churchill at the Fort William-Port Arthur basic maximum or minimum prices as set out in the agreement.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Very simple, isn't it!

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to present a measure to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947, to provide that the act shall expire on the 30th day of April, 1951.

Mr. Drew: Explanation?

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Abbott: Now, or in committee?

Mr. Drew: Now.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, the bill to be founded upon this resolution is a comparatively simple one. It will provide for the extension of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act until April 30, 1951—that is, for thirteen months beyond the present expiry date.

While no other change is proposed, I should state that during the past year all the orders contained in the schedule to the act have been revoked except those relating to price and rent control. The government does not intend to invoke the limited powers now granted by the act to reimpose controls already lifted. Therefore the practical effect of the proposed bill is to continue the authority to control rentals only, for a further period. Thus we have arrived at the final stage in the difficult task of removing in an orderly way the controls introduced during the wartime emergency.

As the house is aware, the supreme court, by unanimous decision, has given its opinion that the wartime leasehold regulations are valid. I shall not refer at length to the reasons given by the distinguished members of the court in support of their opinion. I do wish, however, to draw particular attention to one general theme that is common to all of them, and for that purpose I shall quote from the opinion written by the chief justice:

> There is no doubt that under normal conditions the subject matter of rents belongs to the provincial jurisdiction under the head of property and civil rights, in section 92 of the British North America Act. There is equally no doubt that under abnormal conditions, such as the existence of war, parliament may competently assume jurisdiction over rents. The fact is that, as a consequence of the last war, 1939-1945, parliament has taken over the control of rents. The Fort Frances case supra is authority for the proposition that, notwithstanding the cessation of hostilities, parliament is empowered to continue the control of rents for the purpose of concluding matters then pending, and of its discontinuance in an orderly manner, as the emergency permits, of measures adopted during and by reason of the emergency. It follows from the different orders in council and acts of parliament, recited in the order of reference, that the exceptional conditions brought about by war, which made the wartime leasehold regulations necessary, are still continuing, that the orderly transition from war to peace has not yet been completed, and that, in such circumstances, parliament is entitled and empowered to maintain such control as it finds necessary to ensure the orderly transition from war to peace. The judgments of the judicial committee of the privy council in the Fort Frances case supra and in Co-operative Committee on Japanese Canadians v. Attorney General for Canada (1947) A.C., 87, are conclusive on this point.

Then, after referring to the chemicals reference, the chief justice concluded:

> In this instance, parliament has decided that the wartime leasehold regulations should be kept in force to a limited extent and to that extent, where necessary or advisable, to ensure an orderly transition from war to peace; and that, if they were abandoned abruptly and suddenly, unnecessary disruption would result.
>
> There is nothing in the facts in the order of reference which would justify this court in deciding otherwise and thus supersede the opinion of parliament; and, in the circumstances, this court may not doubt that parliament may competently maintain the regulations it has adopted to meet the emergency and its continuance. Therefore, the wartime leasehold regulations are not ultra vires either in whole or in part.

With some differences in emphasis and point of view, all the other justices make the same point, that the court would require strong evidence, which was not forthcoming, to justify it in superseding the declared opinion of parliament.

While this unanimous opinion enables the government to proceed with confidence in asking parliament to renew the authority for rent control for a further period, it does not in any way alter the declared policy of the government to bring federal rent control to an end with the least possible delay. Time after time, and on every possible occasion, this policy has been made clear and, as the house will recall, fairly substantial further relaxation of rent control was in fact announced simultaneously with the reference to the supreme court.

The government considers that it should not ask parliament to continue its emergency authority any longer than is absolutely necessary. These are extraordinary powers and they should be exercised with great discretion. As the chief justice has said, "There is no doubt that under normal conditions the subject matter of rents belongs to the provincial jurisdiction under the head of property and civil rights, in section 92 of the British North America Act." The federal government has never disputed this, and has in fact, over the past two years, offered to vacate the field to any province that desired to assume responsibility; and one province, Saskatchewan, has already arranged to take over on April 1, 1950.

For these reasons, the government does not intend to ask for a further extension of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act beyond April 30, 1951. It is the government's view that over the next thirteen months the operation of the relaxations now in effect, combined with additions to the housing supply, will have permitted enough adjustment to take place so that any problem which may remain can be dealt with adequately—and with closer regard to local conditions and needs—on a provincial basis.

The house will appreciate that it is not usual for a government to give notice so long in advance as to its intentions respecting future legislation, but the government has decided to do so in this case in order that any province which may consider it desirable to assume some measure of rent control may have ample time to take such steps as may be deemed appropriate.

The date—April 30, 1951—has been selected because it coincides with the earliest expiration date of the leases entered into in return for the eighteen and twenty-two per cent increases permitted a few months ago. Incidentally, hon. members may be interested to learn that from reports of rental officials in the field it is estimated that seventy-five per cent of landlords of self-contained accommodation took advantage of the permission to obtain an increased rental in return for a lease expiring not earlier than April 30, 1951. Not all of their owners, of course, could or did raise rents to the full extent permitted. I mention this high percentage of leases because it shows that if the supreme court had found the federal regulations to be invalid, a very high proportion of tenants would have had secure tenure in their present dwellings for more than a year regardless of any action taken by the provinces.

Notwithstanding this further extension of federal rent control, I wish to make it perfectly clear, so that there can be no misunderstanding of the position, that the government does not now, nor has it at any time, disputed the right of any province to enact legislation dealing with rent control, and that it stands ready to withdraw the federal regulations in any province the government of which makes a formal request to that effect.

If any provincial government believes that it could administer rent control more equitably or more efficiently, the federal government will be pleased to withdraw its regulations in that province on a date to be fixed by the province, thus removing any possible conflict of laws. In addition, subject to parliamentary approval, the government is ready to continue its previous offer to pay the cost of provincial rent control for one year beginning not later than April 1, 1950, up to an amount equal to the cost of federal rent control in that province during a recent twelve-month period to be agreed upon.

Before I sit down, perhaps I should say a word as to the policy to be followed in the administration of rent control during the remaining thirteen months before the federal regulations finally expire. In previous years I would have been most reluctant to say anything more than that the policy of orderly and gradual decontrol would be continued. Since only thirteen months remain, however, at the end of which time some provinces may wish to assume some measure of local rent control, it has been decided that no further adjustments will be made in rental ceilings or in the conditions affecting security of tenure, except in individual cases as permitted under the regulations as they now stand, or minor amendments to the regulations that may be found necessary. In short, there will be a standstill in rent control. The process of decontrol will, however, continue, as dwellings become vacant and thus free from control and as landlords who have not already done so, take advantage of permission to enter into yearly leases in return for higher rents.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the matter now before the house relates not only to the principle of rent control but also to the way in which rent control will be carried on. The fact that the Supreme Court of Canada found that it is not ultra vires of the power of the Canadian parliament to exercise a continuing measure of rent control does not dispose of the question whether rent control can best be dealt with by arbitrary powers that are undefined, or by an act of the parliament of Canada which will clearly establish the legal rights of both tenants and landlords.

I do not think that many, if any, hon. members will seriously question the claim that during a state of emergency such as war there are many things that must be dealt with in a way that would not be acceptable in time of peace under our principles of parliamentary supremacy and responsible government. The fact that during a period of war emergency powers were invoked to cover a very wide field of activities of the people of Canada in their daily lives is no argument in favour of carrying that device forward into the years of peace, even though there is good reason to exercise controls over some of the same subject matters that were under consideration at that time.

During the war years and the years immediately after the war a wide measure of control was exercised by parliament and by the government as the executive branch of parliament. The Transitional Measures Act of 1947 was, as the name implies, intended to carry forward certain wartime controls through the transitional period from war to peace. Now we have reached the point where it is intended to carry forward only the controls over rent, the other emergency powers having been allowed to lapse. The question arises, then, whether the further control of rents should be under emergency powers of this kind, or under an act of parliament which will state in clear and explicit terms exactly what the rights are of those who would be affected by its provisions.

This question is not being raised today for the first time. Last year the same measure was before the house. At that time there was some discussion relating to the course which would best meet our requirements, but the consideration which was given then did not relate to rent control alone. It related to the broader field of the transitional powers that were being carried forward at that time. The record will show we strongly urged that a bill should be introduced dealing with each of the subjects that the government of Canada thought should be dealt with under continuing measures of control. We pointed out that if the emergency powers could be carried forward in their existing form it was equally within the powers of parliament to enact legislation which would define the rights of those affected. It was contended that under the emergency powers the rights of tenants as well as landlords were not clearly defined, and that no one who would be affected by the continuing emergency powers could know definitely in advance what decision might be made.

On behalf of the party which I lead I urged a year ago that a bill should be introduced dealing with rent control, and that if such a bill were introduced it would receive the support of those sitting on this side of the house. I went so far as to express my own belief that a bill which properly defined the rights of tenants, landlords and all others affected, and provided a just measure of control, would receive the support of everyone in the house. Of course I was not in a position to speak on behalf of all hon. members. I still believe, however, that if a measure that fully protected the rights of tenants, landlords and all others concerned had been introduced at that time, it would have received support throughout the whole house.

Since that discussion took place a year ago we have received convincing evidence that there was reason to express concern about these loose and undefined powers exercised arbitrarily at the discretion of the government by order in council, without considering the views of members of parliament. I am not suggesting of course that the government exceeded the powers which were conferred upon it by the extension of the emergency powers dealt with under the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, which was extended last year. Then there was the substantial extension of rentals under the regulations which were announced in this house by the Minister of Finance last November. It will be recalled that at that time there was an increase of from twenty to twenty-five per cent in many rents, but the basic increase over a very broad field was twenty-two per cent. It is true that the increase was a permissive one, but it is also equally true that when landlords receive such permission it is in keeping with human nature that they should avail themselves of the invitation thus extended by the government. Whether there was any suggestion of justification or otherwise, that was the result. Therefore, by a measure which did not express the opinion of the house or of the parliament of Canada, rentals in Canada were greatly increased.

The war ended in 1945; this is 1950. There can be no reason for continuing rent control under arbitrary measures of this kind during the thirteen months which will be covered by the present extension suggested by the government. We certainly have now reached the stage of return to the ordinary peacetime procedure of parliament, when any measure of control affecting the daily lives of a large percentage of our people should be under a law of parliament enabling any Canadian to say: This is my right, and the courts of the land will protect me under that law. There is no sound argument in favour of the continuation of these emergency powers in this form. There is every argument in favour of the introduction, between now and the 31st of March, of a rent control bill which will deal fairly and justly with the rights of Canadians who will be affected by this legislation. I am confident that, entirely apart from any consideration of party point of view, any legislation which is just and affords proper protection to those affected, and which is enforceable by our courts under clearly defined terms, will receive the support of most members of the house.

If these emergency powers are extended in this way, there can be no assurance whatever that, without any advance knowledge on the part of hon. members who have been elected to carry on the business of the people of Canada, further orders may not be announced which will create additional hardship on many people throughout this country.

Mr. Abbott: Except the assurance the minister just gave.

Mr. Drew: And what assurance was that?

Mr. Abbott: Shall I read it?

Mr. Drew: I should like to know what assurance the minister gave that is any different than the assurance he gave last year, except as to the discontinuance of controls.

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid my hon. friend was not listening very closely. I said:

> Before I sit down, perhaps I should say a word as to the policy to be followed in the administration of rent control during the remaining thirteen months before the federal regulations finally expire. In previous years I would have been most reluctant to say anything more than that the policy of orderly and gradual decontrol would be continued. Since only thirteen months remain, however, at the end of which time some provinces may wish to assume some measure of local rent control, it has been decided that no further adjustments will be made in rental ceilings or in the conditions affecting security of tenure, except in individual cases as permitted under the regulations as they now stand, or minor amendments to the regulations that may be found necessary.

Mr. Drew: I was fully aware of what the minister said, but we have had too many examples of what can be done under those exceptions to be in any doubt as to whether or not the government would avail itself of them to the widest possible extent if in its discretion it decided it was wise to do so. That, after all, is not suggesting that the Minister of Finance is not seeking to convey to us in good faith his own appreciation of the situation. Without repeating to an extent that may seem to many hon. members an excessive return to the same subject, may I point out that a government that is able to stretch its conscience as it did in the suppression of the combines report is not a government that should be entrusted with this arbitrary power.

We have to remember that when these things are done we cannot even find out the basis on which that action is taken. To go back to the combines report, which establishes a pattern in other cases, we have to remember that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) has informed us of those cases in which he received advice to prosecute; but in the case where he is not prosecuting he refuses to tell us what the advice was. There is not an hon. member of this house who does not know that if the minister had received advice not to prosecute, that would have been one of the first explanations we would have been given. So we can all draw the conclusion, which I am sure is the right one, that he received a report recommending prosecution, and there is no other reason why he has not told us.

What I am pointing out right now is that a government which will follow that pattern in relation to a matter affecting the daily bread of the people of Canada will avail itself of the widest possible interpretation of every exception, such as those which have been just stated, if in its judgment it thinks some change should be made with respect to controls of this kind. I recall very well that last year the Minister of Finance, under whom this arbitrary authority is exercised, was unwilling to listen to any argument in regard to a change in procedure, but I suggest that he might still give consideration to a return to ordinary parliamentary procedure in this fifth year after the war and place before parliament a rent control bill which will contain in statutory form the assurance he has just given. If it is in fact the intention of the government that there shall be no change in the rental ceilings or in the regulations as they now stand, the simplest way to remove from the minds of hon. members of this house the slightest suspicion that advantage may be taken of this exception would be to incorporate these provisions in a bill which when passed will become the law of the land and be binding upon the courts as well as the government.

As to whether those measures in themselves would be adequate and satisfactory, that would depend upon the way in which they were set out in statutory form. Surely, however, if it is the intention of the government to allow no change in the levels now established, if it is the intention of the government to prevent further rental increases, that can be simply stated in a bill which could be quickly drafted and presented to this house for consideration. What we are doing now is carrying forward wide, loose and arbitrary powers under which no Canadian affected by them knows what will be the situation. The minister says: Oh, you have my assurance, with qualifications. No matter how much we may be prepared to accept that assurance in its exact terms, we must remember that the government as a whole is in a position to decide, and that in certain cases the government as a whole in making decisions has availed itself of every latitude offered by the qualifications previously expressed.

I do not think the government would have any difficulty drafting such a bill. Every hon. member who has been in this house during the discussion of this important subject recalls the number of times the government has stated that it would be an easy thing for the provinces to deal with. I cannot believe this government feels that the provincial governments are so superior in intelligence that they could draft rent control bills which it would be beyond the competence of this government to present to this house. The very fact that they believe the provinces could deal with this question so readily is surely the best evidence that they believe it could be dealt with by a bill, because it must be remembered that the provincial governments could not deal with it by any arbitrary measure of this kind. They could deal with it only under a bill passed by the legislature.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, once again I urge upon the government the importance, not only from the point of view of security in the minds of those affected but also from the point of view of returning to sound parliamentary procedure, of not continuing this emergency power, but of the government presenting to this house immediately a clear, understandable and workable rent control bill.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us today, notwithstanding what we have just heard from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), I am sure will find a great deal of support in this house. The fact that it is sponsored by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) will assure its passage here, regardless of the merit of the resolution itself. The circumstances leading up to the introduction of this resolution have created a great deal of public interest in the country.

There is today a great deal of public interest in both the resolution itself and the bill that will follow it. The bill that will follow this resolution will mark the culmination of the government's policy of wartime controls. All that is now left of those government controls is this little bit of rent control, a sort of relic of the former controls that were exercised under the Transitional Measures Act in the years since the war. One might question whether there is enough rent control left in Canada today to warrant all the trouble the government has gone to in order to establish its right to maintain that rent control. One might question whether this anaemic control will even outlive the next twelve-month period. As hon. members know, all the newer buildings which have been built since January 1, 1947, and all the newly-occupied houses and apartments since November 1, 1948, are already decontrolled and are unaffected by this resolution or the bill that will follow it.

Following on that was, of course, the government's permission for the increase of rents granted last fall which has already raised rents to just about all that the traffic can stand. There is not much particular merit in the statement made by the minister in his speech, giving the assurance that there would be no further changes in rents or no further increases during the coming year, since rents have already gone beyond the economic ability to pay of most people who rent homes.

Even though this bill may not mean much to the people of Canada and even though its passage is assured by the large government majority back of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), I still think that something should be said with regard to the condition of rental housing at the present time. First of all, I should like to register again my protest, and that of the party to which I belong, against the government's callous indifference to and utter disregard of the problem which hundreds of thousands of tenants across Canada are called upon to meet as a result of the government's increased-rental order that was made last fall. The government have shown a flagrant disregard of the problems of these people who, in such large numbers, placed their confidence in them in June, 1949.

There is today an acute housing shortage. I am going to assume, Mr. Speaker, that one cannot very well talk about rent without talking about houses, since it is with the rental of houses that we are concerned in this resolution and the bill that will follow it. There is nothing that the government has done for housing during the last four or five years which can be considered as being particularly creditable. Today the housing shortage is more acute in Canada that it has ever been in our history. On January 1, 1946, the backlog of housing units needed at that time was given officially as 648,000. In 1946, 1947, and 1948 fewer houses were built each year than were required to meet the current need or to keep up with the current demand; 1949 is the first year in which the number of houses built exceeded the current need for that particular year. Whereas there was a backlog of 648,000 houses needed on January 1, 1946, there was on January 1, 1950, a backlog of 711,000. In other words there has been an increase of nearly 10 per cent since 1946. The general housing shortage is more acute today than it was four years ago. The backlog is greater than it was four years ago. The deficit is worse than it was four years ago. Overcrowding, particularly in our large cities, is worse than it was four years ago or at any other time in our history. Slums and substandard housing have scarcely been touched during those years. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in a brief submitted to the Massey commission last September, makes this statement:

> The housing needs of the Canadian people have never been more critical than they are today.

If I may, I should like to review briefly the government's record in this respect because it is the government's failure over the years to meet the need that renders it necessary today for the minister to introduce the resolution that is now before us. The National Housing Act was first introduced in 1938. We were told then that its purpose was twofold: first, to provide home ownership through long-term federal loans at a low interest rate; and second, to provide homes for low income families through loans made to municipalities so that they might enter the field of building low-cost rental housing.

In the first three and a half years during which that National Housing Act was on our statute books, and at a time when there was a backlog of 500,000 houses needed, a sum total of 15,000 loans were made. Just think of it: 15,000 loans made to meet a backlog of housing units which at that time was estimated at 500,000. During those three and a half years, because of the conditions which would attach to the lending of money to municipalities, not a single municipality in Canada took advantage of that part of the act which was designed to enable them to enter into an agreement with the federal government for the building of low-rental housing. In three and a half years not one single municipality felt itself able to avail itself of the benefits which were supposed to accrue under that act.

Then in 1944 the act was revised. Again the emphasis in the act was placed on the provision of homes built for sale, but particularly for the middle and upper class income families. For those in the lower income brackets, in 1944 the government sponsored an insurance company scheme for the building of low rental houses. Housing Enterprises Limited was established and was supposed to build 5,000 houses a year, which were to rent from $35 to $40. Housing Enterprises Limited was established in 1945. In 1947 Housing Enterprises collapsed. In the two years in which it had been in existence it had started, though it had not completed, not 5,000 houses a year, but 3,276 houses in the two years. It discovered that the rental of those houses was no longer $35 or $40 a month but anywhere up to $70. As an enterprise to meet the needs of the low-income group of people who want houses for rent, it is generally agreed that Housing Enterprises was a complete failure.

If we look at the National Housing Act during those years from the standpoint of providing homes for the low income group, we find it proved a failure. The only people who benefited under the National Housing Act were those in the middle and upper income groups, and the finance companies which provided the money.

In the field of slum clearance, the act provided a measure whereby the federal government would pay 50 per cent and the municipality 50 per cent of the cost. Something like $20 million was set aside for that purpose. Up to date only one project of slum clearance has been undertaken under that regulation, namely, the Regent Park project in Toronto. Another section of the National Housing Act provided for assistance in the building of farm houses, houses for rural people; and from the date on which the National Housing Act was first put on the statute books up until December, 1948, one lone farm house in all Canada had been built. Therefore I would say that for rural housing the act was not particularly successful. In the field of co-operative housing the act again just did not work.

Last fall, when speaking on the amendment to the National Housing Act, the minister himself admitted the act was ineffective in so far as co-operative housing was concerned. Today, even with the amendment to the act which we passed last fall, it still does not meet the need of those people who want low rent houses.

I have discovered that in Toronto no one earning less than $3,000 a year, which is approximately $60 a week, can get a loan under the amended National Housing Act, to purchase a house. I hold in my hand a list of names and addresses, and the cost of the house, the monthly payment, and the income of the applicants. Application after application has been refused because the applicant himself was not in receipt of $3,000 a year. To apply for a loan in the city of Toronto the applicant must first get a statement from his employer showing how long and how regularly he has been employed. He must have a certified statement regarding what his annual income has been, and in every single case that I have examined where the income was less than $3,000 the applicant had been refused a loan. I have an instance of a husband and wife, both working, whose income together was well over $4,000. Yet the application was turned down because the man himself was earning only a few dollars below the $3,000 mark. Therefore for a purchaser to avail himself of a loan under the National Housing Act today he must earn at least $3,000 a year. That large group of wage earners, particularly in our large cities, who are not receiving $60 a week, or anything like it, are automatically excluded from the benefits of the act; and to date there is very little evidence that there are likely to be many, if any, projects undertaken in which the federal government and the provinces co-operate for the building of low rental houses.

A few days ago I asked a question when a notice appeared in the Toronto daily papers to the effect that the premier of Ontario had announced that his government was going to enter into an agreement with the federal government under the section of the National Housing Act which permits that co-operation in the building of low-cost rental housing. I inquired of the minister as to whether any agreement had been reached, or any negotiations carried on with the federal government, or whether that was the accepted policy of the federal government. The answer in each and every instance was that there had been no agreement, that there had been no consultation, and that it could not be accepted as the present policy of the government to enter into that kind of agreement.

So that the situation in which we find ourselves today is that while there is a particularly acute shortage of general housing, that need is greatest of all in the field of rental housing. In 1941 we find that 58·9 per cent of all the houses occupied in Canada were rented. That is what we find from the census of that year. In the larger urban centres, with populations of 5,000 or more, the percentage of rented houses was then 65·8 per cent. At that time it would have required well over 100,000 houses to prevent overcrowding in those larger centres.

In other words there were about 1,250,000 rented houses in Canada at the time of that census, or between 4 million and 5 million Canadians in that year of 1941 who were living in rented accommodation. So that this question of rentals, the increase permitted last fall, and the whole matter of rental controls can be said, under present conditions, to affect about 5 million Canadians, or more. On the question of rentals the booklet called "Mortgage Lending in Canada", published in 1948 under the authority of the national housing administration, had this to say concerning the operations of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation:

> The operations of the corporation indicate clearly that the housing need is much greater in the rental field than it is in the home ownership field. The supply of new rental housing, even including that built by the government, is only about 30 per cent of all residential construction. It is evident that many purchasers of new houses would have preferred to rent rather than purchase.

On the question of overcrowding, I think there is no one who will gainsay the remark that the housing emergency today is most acute for the poorest section of the nation, and that overcrowding is worse among the low-income group.

In 1941 we find, according to the census figures for that year, that 29 per cent of the entire population was living in overcrowded conditions. With the increased urbanization that has taken place since that time, and with the increased shortage of housing, that percentage would be much higher today than it was at that time. Even then, of those in the income bracket of $1,500 or less, there were at that time 40 per cent living in overcrowded conditions.

That was the condition in 1941, and certainly it is much worse today. The ordinary worker in these days just cannot buy any of the houses being built—certainly none of the houses built from loans made by the national housing administration. Last year the average cost of a dwelling unit, built with the assistance of loans from the housing administration, was $8,056. The average in cities is much higher than that. For instance, in Toronto it is impossible to buy even a one-storey bungalow of three and a half rooms—including the bathroom—for $8,000. Today accommodation of that kind ranges anywhere from $9,000 to $10,000.

On the assumption that the purchaser should not spend more than 20 per cent of his income on housing accommodation, there are only two or three groups of industrial workers who could possibly buy any of the houses being built. On that basis the only people who could buy even the very cheapest houses built with the aid of national housing administration loans are some who are working in the western coal-mining industry, the metal-mining industry, the steam railways and the pulp and paper industry.

Industrial workers in all of the nine leading industrial groups in Canada, including those engaged in manufacturing, iron and steel production, the automobile industry and building construction, receive incomes which, on the basis set forth by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, would preclude any of them from buying even the cheapest houses built.

Therefore there is today a great need for housing accommodation among people in that class. Of the 711,000 houses needed in Canada today I believe I would be correct in saying that by far the greater percentage of them are needed by those in income brackets which do not permit their buying at current building costs.

The bill that will follow this resolution will bring relief to that section of our people who are still living in rented houses that have not been decontrolled. As I have pointed out, large numbers of rented houses in this country have become decontrolled at various stages, but I understand that there is a fairly large section that will be affected by the bill to follow this resolution. I am quite sure that many hundreds of thousands of Canadians will breathe a sigh of relief when they read the minister's statement of this afternoon that there will be no further increases in their rents until April, 1951.

However good this legislation may be, it does not go far enough toward dealing with the root of the rental problem. Unless the federal government takes the initiative of entering into negotiations with the provincial governments whereby projects may be undertaken to provide low rental housing for the masses of our people whose income is less than $3,000 per year we shall still have reached no solution to our housing problem. It is that that I urge upon the government during this debate.

Mr. C. J. Henry (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time this session I deem it necessary to thank two great men in Canada for the opportunity of representing the constituency of Rosedale in this house. It is well known to hon. members that this riding returned to the Liberal party after being represented by members of the opposition for some fifty years. I have to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) for the excellent leadership which he and other members of the government gave during the election campaign of June, 1949. I have also to thank the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) for the manner in which he conducted his campaign and the attitudes he adopted at that time. As a result of these attitudes by way of a secondary reason, I am here today. I noticed a display of these campaign attitudes here today in this debate.

I note that in this debate as in others the attitude of the opposition seems to be, "We in the opposition agree with what the government is doing, but we think the government is doing it in the wrong way." The people of Rosedale objected to that general attitude on the part of the leader of the opposition and I think that was a factor in their turning to the Liberal party after many years of absence therefrom.

I think rent control has the approval of all hon. members in so far as the principle is concerned. Even as a newcomer to this house I recognized the necessity of bringing to the government's attention the need for the continuance of rent control, particularly within the Toronto area. As early as October 20, 1949, I drew this to the attention of the government, in a public way. I am pleased to see the continuance of rent control by this legislation now before us.

Last fall I received certain representations, many of a serious nature, from groups and individuals in my constituency objecting to the increases in rents which were permissibly made under the regulations. As a matter of duty I brought those to the attention of the government, but the permissive increases were put through notwithstanding. The inability to please all areas and groups arises from the administration of this measure at the national rather than the provincial level. It may be that greater satisfaction would have been achieved in the Toronto area if the provincial government had taken over rent control in the fall of last year when it was offered to them by the federal government. However, there seems to be apathy on the part of the provincial government in this connection and if the present housing emergency does not subside it may be that the provincial government will have an opportunity after thirteen months have passed of doing what perhaps they should have done in the fall of last year.

Positive steps have been taken by the federal government to solve the housing shortage. It is notable that during the last general election the housing shortage in the Toronto area was a critical issue, if I may put it that way, raised by the opposition parties and answered by the government candidates. The jury of public opinion in Toronto during the last federal election gave its decision in a definite manner. The result was most emphatic because today there are several Liberal members in this house which indicates the confidence of the people of Toronto in the government of the day.

Prompt action was taken at the last session in connection with housing. A total of $300 million was allotted under the amendments to the National Housing Act. It is only fair to say that that allotment of money has enabled the government of Ontario to go on with low-cost rental housing projects in the London and other areas, all of which will become a reality in the near future. I have not a copy of the verbatim report of the debates in the legislature of Ontario, but it is apparent from the press reports that the premier of Ontario intends to take advantage of the provisions of the National Housing Act and proceed with projects which will make available homes with a down payment in the neighbourhood of $500. This will be the result of co-operation between the dominion and the province of Ontario.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) seemed to belittle the efforts of the government in connection with large scale land clearances and the low-cost subsidized housing that would result therefrom. In the lower part of Rosedale riding is located the Regent Park housing development which is an example of what can result from co-operation between three levels of government, dominion, provincial and municipal. I am frank to state that the plausible, good-natured and well respected Tory mayor of the war-time period, Robert Saunders, came to Ottawa towards the end of the war and was received gladly by the minister then in charge of the National Housing Act, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). There arose out of their cordial conversations the Regent Park scheme.

I should like to give you a few details to show what has been done in this case where there was good will on all sides. The Regent Park project consists of a housing development within six square city blocks in the lower part of Rosedale riding. The land was expropriated by the city, and there are to be constructed thereon apartments on a low-cost-rental subsidized basis. The share of the dominion government is put forward for clearance of the land and the substandard houses are removed on a basis of 50 per cent payable by the dominion government and 50 per cent by the municipality. Under the proposed scheme the share contributed by the federal government is $1,150,000. This constitutes a sum which, if capitalized over the fifty year "lifetime" period of the scheme, at three per cent represents a contribution on the part of the federal government of $33,000 per year.

The citizens of Rosedale constituency in Toronto can consider that during the lifetime of the scheme the federal government is in effect contributing towards low cost rental housing in the area the sum of $33,000 per year. As I understand it, the government of the province of Ontario has to date matched the contributions of the federal government dollar for dollar. Ownership of the project is in the name of the city and it contributes the balance of the cost of construction. You may ask, what of the rents under this low-cost housing scheme? I have to tell you that the rents are based on an equitable rule, namely, "one week's pay of the family income for one month's rent." There are sixty-five apartment units erected to date and the average rent is $52 per month. It is noteworthy that the plan of rent is such that if the family income falls through unemployment, then the rent comes down, and presumably if their income rises then the rent goes up. This is a most equitable method of establishing subsidized low cost rental housing in the area.

I have been in these apartments and they are of the finest construction. It is noteworthy that citizens from outside the six square blocks telephone me and ask how they may procure an apartment in the Regent Park development scheme. So far one-third of the apartments planned have been the subject of a contract, and further action is being taken. In the end there will be 1,056 apartments. A group of 3,000 people are housed in the area now but when the project is completed there will be 4,000 there. Accommodation will be provided for 1,000 more people, and I know it is welcomed by the people of my constituency. It is not unfair to suggest that this notable effort in the field of housing was made by the federal government for the constituency despite the fact that, at the time it was instituted, the constituency was represented by a former member of the opposition.

I should like to point out to the minister before I take my seat that the housing problem in my constituency is not confined to the southern area only. There is a residential section of some thirty-five to forty years' standing north of Bloor street which is known to residents of Toronto as Rosedale proper. The need for housing in Toronto during the emergency of the war was great, and in that area there were many large homes containing up to twenty or thirty rooms each. Automatically they became establishments for the housing of certain troops and other people on wartime duties. Then the guest home movement increased in the area, and it was found necessary as a war measure to pass order No. 200 of the wartime prices and trade board which in effect superseded the residential bylaws of the city. It is one of the orders which will be renewed under this statute which we are discussing today. In the area there are not less than 200 to 300 guest homes housing upwards of 3,000 people who can be said to be for the most part white collar office workers. Order No. 200 of the wartime prices and trade board in effect legalizes the living conditions of the 3,000 people living in these guest homes. When the order is lifted, or the time comes when the government does not have the power to keep order No. 200 in effect, there are the bylaws of the city which prevent the existence of guest homes on a legal basis and the occupancy thereof by the tenants. It is recognized by the city that time marches on, and that perhaps the character of the area has changed. It is recognized that something should be done to protect the proprietary investment of the people who commenced operation of these homes during wartime, and also to protect the housing accommodation of the guests living in these homes.

I recognize that this is primarily a municipal matter. Nevertheless I think that the experience of the wartime rental administration of the government as it is recorded might be given to the municipal authorities for their guidance and benefit when they come to consider what provisions it may be necessary to change in the municipal residential bylaws. I say to the minister that if the city so desires it—and I think they would be glad to have it—he should make available to them the recorded information available in the rental administration of the wartime prices and trade board. I would also ask him to make available the services of his law officers when and if it becomes necessary. I think that is the least we can do because this problem will arise for solution on the municipal level sooner or later.

I conclude with this thought. Legislation having to do with rents and housing comes within the category of "must" legislation. It is a fact that until this government was returned at the last election the operation of this legislation was hampered, and that our housing legislation could be found just around the corner of interprovincial disunity. I commend the premier of Ontario for his spirit of co-operation, and in particular for his attitude toward the amalgamation of the city of Toronto and the outlying municipalities in that area. The mandate given candidates in the federal election was clear. National unity is the order of the day; and I believe that at the bar of interprovincial public opinion we are most fortunate in having the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and his colleagues in the cabinet, because they are without peers in this matter of national and interprovincial unity. I look forward to great things in future from our housing legislation and its administrative bodies.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I followed with some interest the remarks of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry) and the obvious satisfaction he took from the fact that seven Liberal members were returned from Toronto ridings at the last general election. In the view of the hon. member that seems to be quite sufficient to permit him to sit back now with complete complacency and behold with satisfaction the present state of affairs. If I am not mistaken, among the plethora of promises made by Liberal candidates in Toronto, which they hoped would help them to be elected, one made by the hon. member for Rosedale was that if he were elected he would see the housing problem solved, to use his own words, "before the snow flies".

Mr. Henry: I deny that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming: I accept the hon. member's statement, of course. I did not bring the file here with me, and I said I thought it was the hon. member who had made that statement. He denies it, and I do not intend to question his denial; but I am going to have a look at some newspaper files on the subject. At any rate that statement was made by one of those candidates, whose election no doubt was thereby helped.

If hon. members can contemplate housing conditions in Toronto and elsewhere with satisfaction, I am afraid they either do not know or are not concerned about the conditions under which many people are living. If housing conditions are so satisfactory it is probably unnecessary for hon. members to engage in the discussion of any legislative needs; but I was interested in what the hon. member had to say about the Regent Park development. The suggestion or inference the hon. member invited us to draw from his statement was that this Regent Park development was made possible only through assistance given by the federal government. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of some personal connection with the planning of that development in the first place, when I was a member of the Toronto city council, that the contribution by the federal authority to that housing undertaking was very small indeed. That is the one instance, as far as I am aware, in which a slum clearance program has been undertaken in Canada. It was a matter of satisfaction to us that when the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) went to Toronto last year and saw it, he acclaimed it as an eye-opener. From that many of us hoped the government would be prepared to make some show of generosity in helping to bring about the elimination of such slum conditions that exist in many of the urban centres of Canada.

What actually happened? I have mentioned that in this case the contribution of the federal authority was very small. Actually it amounted to only one-half the cost of land acquisition under section 12 of the housing act. After the Prime Minister's visit and the way he lauded the development, which was made possible largely by the enterprise of those concerned in the municipal government in Toronto, one might have expected that this sort of enterprise would be encouraged elsewhere. When the amendments to the housing act were brought down here last fall, however, we found that not one cent more was provided for reconstruction projects of that kind than was available previously. We still are limited to section 12 of the housing act, under which the federal authority contributes only one-half the cost of land assembly; and the amendments of 1949 do not help at all in the case of reconstruction projects.

I brought this to the attention of the house when we were in committee of the whole on those amendments. At that time I pleaded with the minister to extend the provisions, or to put upon the amendments an interpretation which would make those provisions available to assist in reconstruction projects. The minister had this to say, at page 2447 of Hansard for November 29, 1949:

> I think it is clear, Mr. Chairman, that where there is a section already in the act, namely section 12, providing for the redevelopment of land, it is not intended that this section should apply.

That was the new section contained in the amendments. That is the situation; and if the hon. member for Rosedale sees merit in the Regent Park development would you not have thought he would welcome the opportunity to rise, as I think I invited him and all Toronto Liberal members to do on the occasion to which I just referred, when these amendments were under discussion on November 29 last, and give some support to my request that the amendments be extended to include redevelopment projects? But the voice of the hon. member, along with the voices of the other Liberal members elected from Toronto, was silent. They did not have a word to say in support of the suggestion that assistance should be given to slum clearance by way of more generous contributions on the part of the federal authority to reconstruction projects.

I propose to speak very briefly on the resolution before us today.

Mr. Sinclair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: I can be longer if my hon. friend continues to encourage me.

I believe the statement my leader made today has put our position on this matter so clearly that no elaboration is required. I wish, therefore, to dwell on only two, or at the most three, points.

My leader called for a proper bill to put into correct legislative form the statutory enactments necessary to continue rent control, and urged that this subject, which is of such great importance, should not be left in the clumsy form in which the government asks that it be continued. The minister has stated that the powers conferred by the bill to be founded on this resolution are confined to price and rent control. He said all the other powers provided by the bill had disappeared except those concerning price and rent control, and indicated that it is not the intention of the government to make any changes in general in the present scheme.

Sir, if the bill is to have as confined an effect as the minister suggests, then the case for a proper rent control bill is stronger than it has ever been before. A year ago when this measure was under debate, the government indicated that there were twelve orders in council whose effect was to be continued by the bill. The minister has not given to the house today the particular orders that are to be continued by the bill. I take it that there are at most probably only two or three; probably they are P.C. 8528, P.C. 9029 and P.C. 5518. Those are the general orders in council which are to be continued, as I understand his statement, although on this point we shall ask for more information when we are in committee on the resolution. But, sir, the fact that, according to the minister's statement, the scope of these controls is to be confined now to rent control emphasizes, to a degree not hitherto present, the fact that it is quite unnecessary now to carry on this remaining hodgepodge of orders in council which will be continued if the measure before the house remains in its present form.

On the other aspect of the minister's statement I have one or two observations to make. My leader has already commented upon the statement of the minister, who said that it is not the intention of the government to interfere with the present rent ceilings or the present freezing regulations, except in certain cases. If the government's intention is so simple, sir, simple legislation now would suffice for the purpose without carrying on this hodgepodge of orders in council and the sweeping powers that are reposed in the government under the Transitional Measures Act.

What is the effect of a statement made by the government? We in the official opposition had some complaint to make in times past about the weight attached by the government to statements emanating from the government. What are these statements of intention? Are they binding assurances? If they are binding assurances, there should be no hesitation on the part of the government in writing them into the text of legislation. But the government does not seem to be anxious to see those statements of intention written into legislative form.

Let me give one or two illustrations of the weight attached by the government itself to statements of the kind that it has made in the house; and in this connection I ask hon. members to bear in mind the situation in which great numbers of people in this country found themselves at the beginning of last November when, without any warning whatsoever, without any reference to this house, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) simply announced sweeping changes in the rent ceilings, changes which affected hundreds of thousands of people whose protests, incidentally, were completely unavailing because parliament had no power to interfere.

The legislation was there, and the government exercised the power by order in council. As long as parliament is going to repose in this government powers by order in council to interfere with the contractual relationships between landlords and tenants on the scale on which those relationships were interfered with by those orders in council early last November, sir, the parliament of Canada will be completely by-passed. Parliament will not be consulted. Parliament will even have to sit by while the government takes measures that will interfere with the rights of the people and affect those rights far more than anything that will be done by direct action on the part of this parliament. That, sir, is a fundamentally wrong method; and I submit that it is high time parliament made up its mind that it will not any longer countenance such things. Where measures are required, as in this case they are, in respect of rent control, this parliament should take that responsibility; and parliament should reserve to itself, and to itself alone, the right to change, modify or terminate those measures. It should not be left to the whim of the government.

The minister invites us to accept, in lieu of or as a substitute for proper legislation, in a matter of high importance to the people of Canada, statements of intention on the part of the government. Let us consider the history of some such statements in the past. Sir, you and I well remember the statement made in this house in 1946, found at page 2547 of Hansard of that year, in which the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, in relation to a measure then before the house with regard to foreign exchange control, said:

> We have no intention of using this exchange control legislation to restrict anything but certain types of capital movement.

That certainly was a clear statement on the part of the government. What was the result? When it suited the government in November, 1947, to use powers in defiance of that assurance given to the house, powers which they purported to find in the very measure which was then under comment by Mr. Ilsley, they exercised those powers and, if you please, did it by radio decree without the slightest consultation of parliament. In a matter of such paramount importance to hundreds of thousands of Canadians, is it to be assumed by this house that the statement made by the Minister of Finance today will be given any higher regard or effect by the government when it suits their purposes at some future time to qualify it or to disregard it entirely, or that they will pay any more attention to it than was paid by the same government to this strong statement made by Mr. Ilsley in 1946?

You will not have forgotten, sir—and I am sure the house will not have forgotten—that when the present Minister of Finance was pressed in the house about that statement made by his predecessor in the same portfolio, an assurance that he himself was simply throwing overboard and was in effect completely repudiating, his answer was that it was only a statement that Mr. Ilsley made; he said that it was not a binding undertaking given to the house, but only a statement.

In the face of that experience, the same minister today asks us to accept, as a substitute for proper legislation, a statement on his part of the intention of the government in relation to circumstances as they appear to him to exist now. I say to you, sir, that this parliament cannot accept that statement made by the minister today as any substitute for proper legislation.

Then, sir, the Minister of Finance is not alone in the estimate that he places upon statements or assurances emanating from the government. I well recall that in this house a year ago, when a statement was made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) in which he announced that it was the policy of the government to ask the house to approve a loan of $4 million to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the development of television in Canada, I rose and asked him this question, as reported at page 2837 of Hansard:

> Will the radio committee have an opportunity of reviewing this policy and reporting to the house before the house is called upon to approve the loan of $4 million.

The answer of the minister was: "The answer is definitely yes." You will find that recorded in Hansard. That was a direct and categorical statement, one would have thought. If statements by the government are treated seriously by the government, one could not have asked for a more categorical statement than that one. But what happened to that statement? In December of last year it suited the purposes of the government to ignore that promise completely, to repudiate it, and to push through this house the same loan without the radio committee having been appointed or ever having had the opportunity to make the study which it had been promised that the committee should make before the government would ask the house to approve this loan of $4 million to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for that purpose.

Now, sir, there are other instances. I think those two are sufficient to indicate the estimate which the government puts upon its own statements to the house. And if the house or the country, in the face of the repudiation of those statements by the government when it suited their purpose, chooses to attach to the statement made by the Minister of Finance today some efficacy in substitution for proper legislation, then, sir, the responsibility will rest on those who are prepared to put in jeopardy the rights of Canadians by hundreds of thousands.

I say to you, sir, that parliament in a matter so important, must not continue the hodgepodge of sweeping arbitrary powers contained in this act. It dare not ignore its responsibility to enact clear legislation that will provide protection to those whose rights will be thereby affected, and who are entitled to know what their rights and liabilities are. If this parliament ignores that duty and chooses to accept ministerial statements which in the past have been treated so lightly by the government, then, sir, the majority in this house must accept the responsibility.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the people of my province of Manitoba, and of my city of Winnipeg in particular, have a double-barrelled grievance in connection with this whole matter of rent control. They have been misled twice within the past year. It is not yet a year since the federal election campaign was under way, when security for our people in every form was a Liberal propaganda item, when our people were led to believe that by returning Liberals to power they could get all of the security, all of the protection that was in the C.C.F. program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I am interested in the laughter that I am hearing from the Liberals on the other side of the house. It turns out now that in their opinion it was quite a joke that was played on our people. There was no notion in the minds of the people of Winnipeg, or the people of Manitoba, last June, that within four or five months after a sweeping Liberal victory action would be taken such as that on November 3, of permitting a further drastic increase in rent, which this legislation will not correct, since it merely keeps in effect for another year the ceilings established at that time.

Despite the fact that our people were misled in that way last June, they went through the same experience again in Winnipeg and in Manitoba last November. It was on November 3 that the Minister of Finance rose in his place in this house and announced the increases that were to become effective as at December 15. A provincial election was under way in Manitoba at that very time. Candidates of all parties, especially in the city of Winnipeg, realized what a burning issue it was, and they literally tumbled over each other trying to get in there first. Candidates of all parties promised that they would do something about it. The promises varied from one offer to another. Some of them were going to take over rent controls in the province right away. Others were going to press the federal government to retain the ceilings where they had been, and others of course would just have the matter looked into. But that promise to do something about rent control was made, as I say, by both Liberals and Conservatives in the coalition, and by the members of all parties in that election campaign, including at least one cabinet minister that I know of, if not more.

I was aware of that during the debate on rent control in this house on November 8 of last year, and made a statement just two days before that provincial election, bearing on what was happening there. I said, as recorded in Hansard at page 1562:

> I hope the people of Manitoba realize they are now being handed the same kind of half assurances that they were given by the Liberals prior to the 27th of June. Once the 10th of November is past, any thought that the Manitoba government would take over rent control in that province is just as far down the drain as is the promise—

Mr. Martin: What is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. Knowles: I am quoting from an expert in these matters, namely, the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Argue: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCann: This must be your birthday.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no. I continue with the quotation I was giving:

> Once the 10th of November is past, any thought that the Manitoba government would take over rent control in that province is just as far down the drain as is the promise of the federal government that they would protect the health and the living standards of the Canadian people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to support what I said a moment ago about that quotation being from an expert, and to make it clear that I was not just patting myself on the back, but that what I said was an accurate forecast of what would happen, I call the attention of the house to the issue of the Winnipeg Free Press dated March 22, just two days ago, the main story of which relates to a debate in the Manitoba legislature on the question of rent control. The official opposition in the legislature, which is the C.C.F., presented to the Manitoba house a motion condemning the provincial government for not taking over rent control and operating it on a provincial basis. What happened? The government moved an amendment to that motion expressing its complete confidence in federal rent control, thus sidetracking the real issue before that house; and a good many of the members who were candidates in the election and had promised that they would see to it that rent control was taken over voted for the government's amendment and thus defeated the proposal which called upon the provincial government to take over rent control as the Minister of Finance is urging them to do. Therefore the people of Manitoba find that they have been fooled twice, first on the 27th of June and again on the 10th of November, so far as rent control is concerned. They were led to believe on both occasions that by voting Liberal their rental situation would be protected. They now find that these promises have again gone down the drain, just as I indicated in my remarks on November 8 of last year.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, no one can vote against this measure. There is not much to it, but anything less would be unthinkable. All this measure does is to continue in effect the high ceiling on rents that is now in effect. It does not give to the people of the country any relief from high rents. It does not roll them back to what they were last December.

I could point out, as the minister said, that one province, facing up to its responsibility, accepted the minister's offer and agreed to take over rent control starting on April 1. That is the province of Saskatchewan. The result is that most rents in that province are still at the level which was in effect last December.

The people of Manitoba wanted something similar done in their province, whether by the federal government or by the provincial government. But they find that, despite the credence they have given to Liberal promises and Liberal assurances, they are not going to get it either way. The government in the provincial legislature moves an amendment expressing confidence in the federal administration of rent controls, and that meaningless motion carries. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) rises in the house and reads from a supreme court judgment, of which he approves, saying that this whole business is really a provincial matter, and makes it very clear that within thirteen months it will be thrown back to the provinces, in its entirety. What a hope!

It so happens that the constituency I represent has in it a large number of tenants who are affected by rent control. I can tell the minister and the house that during the two days I was home last November, when this issue was being fought out in the provincial election campaign, the protests over what was taking place were literally legion. Since then, next to the interest people have shown in the removal of the means test from old age pensions, this has been the question which has been the greatest concern of the people I represent.

I feel strongly about this. I feel that ever since the war the whole attitude toward rent control on the part of the government has been one of callous indifference to what has been happening to the Canadian people, particularly to workers who are tenants, who have had their rents raised time and again, making it extremely difficult for them to get along. Old age pensioners and others on small fixed incomes have had it very hard, too.

I agree with the position taken today by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) when he states that this matter ought to have been put in proper legislative form long ago. It seems to me that one of the things this parliament must somehow put a stop to is the way in which the government constantly arrogates power to itself which it can exercise without any reference whatever to parliament. We should have matters like this in statutory form so that we can approve or disapprove of them at the time they are being enacted, and so that we will know where we stand.

This method of legislating has given the government far too much power. The minister may say it has given them power at times to impose controls, which power they exercised during the war. But the only way they have exercised it since the war has been to continue to permit these increases.

I am not the only one in the house who is aware of the misery and suffering this brings to our people. Liberal members are aware of it, too. Indeed, they were very much aware of it last November, at the time the minister made his announcement; and my guess is that they have been getting just as many letters in the last few months as I have about the increases that have been taking place.

So we are in this position, that we will vote for the measure before the house because it will keep in effect what little control now obtains. But it is a pretty sad story, this whole business, the way this question of rent control has been handled. It has not been rent control at all; it has been rent decontrol, with many anomalies which have created all sorts of difficulties with complete unfairness to the people of this country as a whole.

There is something further I should like to say about this matter. Frankly, I do not like to be a suspicious person. I do not like questioning assurances given to me, particularly when they are given across the floor of the house.

Mr. Ross (Souris): You had better get to like it.

Mr. Knowles: There is something to the humorous interjection just made by the hon. member for Souris. I have been here long enough now to become sceptical of assurances. Far too often positive assurances given to us have not been kept. Today we have it again. We are given an assurance the keeping of which need not worry us too much, for the assurance is that a ceiling which is just about up to the sky will not be raised any higher during the next thirteen months.

However, this raises the whole question of parliament's being asked to satisfy itself with ministerial assurance rather than with clear-cut legislation put on the statute books.

The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) pointed to a couple of cases, and I shall point to several more, where ministerial assurances have been broken. One of them relates to a statute placed on the statute books, but one which contained an escape clause—just as there is an escape phrase in the assurance given by the minister today. And when it suited the government it used that escape clause, not just in a few instances of emergency, but used it 100 per cent.

The case I have in mind relates to the government's policy with regard to civil aviation. Hon. members here in the parliament before last will remember the present Minister of Trade and Commerce laying it down as firm government policy that within a year after the end of the war in Europe all railway companies were to be compelled to divest themselves of the ownership of any air lines. Not only was it laid down as policy in speeches delivered by the minister and in assurances given to the house—a policy which, by the way, was opposed bitterly by the official opposition; so that it cannot be said that it was non-contentious—but it was written into a statute.

I have here the act in question, to be found in the statutes for 1944-45, chapter 28 of which is an act to amend the Aeronautics Act. Section 12 (2) of that act states:

> No such licence shall be issued in respect of a commercial air service, owned, leased, controlled or operated by any person who is engaged in the transport of goods or passengers for hire or reward by means other than aircraft unless the governor in council is of opinion that it is in the public interest that such licence be issued.

And then turning to section 14, which is lengthy, we find it states—and I summarize—that every licence then in effect was to expire within one year after the end of the war in Europe.

So there, in statutory form, it was laid down that all of these companies, such as the air lines owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, were to be separated from ownership by railway companies, and no further licences to railway companies to operate air lines were to be granted.

Time went on. We reached a point one year after the end of the war in Europe. Then we got into the second year, at which time I began asking questions about it. What did we find? We found that, first of all, the government by a minute of council—a quite improper procedure—decided that that one year was to be treated as two years—in violation of the act—and then they further got around the act by letting all licences to aviation companies then in existence expire—every one of them. Then they reissued the whole lot under the terms of that emergency clause in section 12(2).

How do hon. members expect us to accept with complete assurance the statement made today by the minister, with an escape phrase in his statement, when we have had experiences such as the one I have described?

Then I think of some other assurances we have been given. During the session of 1948 I was a bit of a bother to the government over the question of its aviation policy in the Pacific. I had heard rumours that it was going to change its clearly-stated policy, namely that T.C.A. was to fly the Pacific. So I asked question after question, in one form or another, and was given the assurance that there was no change in that item of clearly-stated government policy. The session ended, and we went home. Within a week or so an announcement was made of a change in government policy, to the effect that flying the Pacific for Canada was being turned over to Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

I remind hon. members of what happened in August 1946 when there was before the house a motion calling upon the government to reconsider its announced intention of taking the second subsidy off milk. An amendment to a motion to go into supply was carried by the house. By a majority vote the house called upon the government to reconsider that matter. We asked the government what it would do about it, and were assured that the matter would be reconsidered. Then in a few days parliament was prorogued. A couple of weeks later the result of that reconsideration was that the subsidy was taken off, contrary to the expressed wish of parliament, and the price of milk went up.

Another instance that comes to my mind occurred on June 30, 1948. At that session we had had quite a bit of discussion about government annuities. By order in council the government had changed the basic interest rate upon which the annuities are based. As a result of protests from all sections of the house the promise was finally made by the government through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) on June 30, 1948, that a special committee would be set up at the next session to go into the whole matter. When I asked at the next session, and the next, when that committee was going to be set up I was unable to get a satisfactory answer from the minister. The plain fact of the matter is that the promise was ignored; another assurance was broken.

A few days ago the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) read from Hansard of April, 1945, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) introduced his white paper on post-war employment projects. My colleague read the specific statement that was made as to committees that would be set up, the money that would be voted, the way in which the government would implement that clear-cut assurance. Now the whole business has gone by the board.

When we were arguing last fall with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) about the McGregor report the minister assured us—although I certainly did not accept the assurance—that the report which he had received the previous December was really not in final form until October, 1949. In other words, the minister then—this was not his first answer; it was one of his subsequent answers—assured us across the floor of this house that he had kept the law, that he had tabled the report within fifteen days of its being in his hands in final form.

However, on March 22, just a couple of days ago, the same Minister of Justice in answer to some questions put on the order paper by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) let slip this bit of information, namely, that that report was referred on July 11, 1949, to J. J. Kelly, K.C., of Winnipeg for a legal opinion as to whether or not prosecution of the millers should be gone ahead with. It so happened that Mr. Kelly was subsequently appointed to the Court of King's Bench—that would be on the recommendation of the same Minister of Justice—and the matter was referred to another lawyer, T. N. Phelan, K.C., of Toronto, on September 20, 1949.

There it is in black and white that the report was in complete form so that the government could refer it to counsel for an opinion as to whether or not to go ahead and prosecute, and yet last fall the minister got up in this house and gave us his assurance that he was keeping the law when he knew as well as the rest of us did that he was not.

It is instances of that sort, and we are having far too many in this parliament, which make me sceptical about the statement the minister made today. The only reason that I can see for one counting on today's assurance being kept is its substance. The ceiling is now so high that the government could hardly push it any higher. If the ceiling were lower I am afraid the assurance would be in the same category as some of those we have had before.

We will have to support this measure to keep in effect for another thirteen months such federal rent control as we have, but I felt that I should take the time to register once again the protests of the people I represent against the way in which they have been fooled in connection with rent control. I felt also that I should take time to document the contention which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) and others have put forward as to the value of government promises. The government must get away from these ministerial assurances and get down to more clear-cut statements, which should be put down in black and white—in proper legislative form—so we will know where we stand.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to hold up this measure and I shall speak for only a few minutes, but there are a few things I should like to say. In fact what is before the house at this time is nothing. There has not been any rent control for some considerable time. All the minister proposes to do is to extend something that has not existed for quite a long time.

I look upon this matter of retaining rent control very seriously because it has been a long-drawn-out controversy in this country. It is in connection with this measure that I ran into the greatest amount of apprehension in all sections of the constituency that I have the privilege to represent and in all parts of the country that I was able to visit after the election was over. When it became apparent that the federal government were desirous of getting out of rent control various bodies like the Canadian Legion and the Canadian Congress of Labour were sufficiently interested to take the matter to the courts in order to test its validity. Those two bodies represent a large section of the people of Canada that requires either housing or the control of what housing there is.

This afternoon I think the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) put an excellent case before this house in the matter of housing. He definitely proved, largely from government statistics, that housing leaves much to be desired. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has assured the provinces that he is willing to hand over rent control. I understand Saskatchewan has passed an act but I do not know whether it has been proclaimed.

An hon. Member: April 1.

Mr. Gillis: I understand also that Alberta has stand-by legislation. If we are really honest about this matter I think we will have to admit that what the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) said this afternoon—I very seldom give him any credit for anything—is absolutely correct. If we are going to have laws, they should be made by this parliament and they should be given effect to by the courts of the country. The minister is asking us to pass a bill that will give the cabinet the right to make any change and throw the law around at will.

Mr. Knowles: As they have done.

Mr. Gillis: Certainly, as they have done. I think it is unreasonable to ask the provincial governments to take over rent control because you would then have ten different types of legislation across the country. I do not think the maritime provinces, including Newfoundland, would touch the thing at all and the result would be no rent control in that end of the country.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Newfoundland has its own rent control act.

Mr. Gillis: I am glad to hear that. The whole policy of rent control has proved ineffective and disturbing, so much so that a lot of money was spent by the two large organizations I have mentioned to take the matter to the courts. The courts have ruled that it is within the power of the federal government. Why could we not pass a basic act in this parliament which would clearly set out for all time where the landlord and the tenant and those affected stood, and leave the administration in the hands of the provinces? In that way we would have uniform legislation.

Some control is necessary because housing is still in an emergent condition. While the war is over the emergency in housing has not been taken care of. In my opinion it is much worse now in the larger centres than it was in 1940. I know there is not much use beating the air. I have filled pages of Hansard about it, and I am very much disappointed with what the minister is doing. I thought this afternoon he was going to tell us that, the Supreme Court of Canada having decided that the government had jurisdiction—

Mr. Sinclair: Jurisdiction to decontrol.

Mr. MacInnis: Jurisdiction to continue to control also.

Mr. Gillis: The question before the court was not whether they should decontrol or whether they could. As I understand it, the question before the court was whether the government had jurisdiction to administer rent controls in the circumstances. As I understood what the minister said, the decision was that they had that right, but they were going to continue to exercise it only up to April, 1951. If that is all that is going to be done, then as I said when I started to speak we are really beating the air about nothing. The minister stated this afternoon that 75 per cent of the landlords have taken advantage of the opportunity to increase rents. Those people who have been taxed an additional 20 or 25 per cent by way of rent have already had that done, so we are not going to cure anything there. The remaining 25 per cent of the landlords who have not taken advantage of the provision are probably housing unemployed. Rent control offices have practically folded up across the country. I think the sensible thing to do is to pass a basic bill in this house, have the provinces administer it, and settle the question once and for all so that we may get on with housing. In the final analysis the answer to the whole problem is a good, low-rental housing program, and we have not got that at the present time. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I had to make you come back to your chair, but I thought I should make these few remarks.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Benidickson in the chair.

Mr. Knowles: Can the parliamentary assistant tell us precisely what orders in council will be continued, and if those orders in council include price control as well as rent control will he tell us to what extent price controls are in effect?

Mr. Sinclair: The actual list of controls which will still be in effect will appear as a schedule to the bill, but so that hon. members may have the information in advance perhaps I should list them here. Perhaps I can give the list to Hansard later, but at the moment reciting the orders themselves the first group of four orders which will remain in effect are the ones under the wartime prices and trade board. They are P.C. 8528, P.C. 9029—perhaps I should tell you where you can find these fairly easily. P.C. 8528, and its amending orders, because it is an order made in 1941 which has been amended fifteen times, can be found on page 18 of the consolidation of orders in council passed under the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act of 1947. The king's printer prepared that publication. P.C. 9029, the wartime leasehold regulations, can be found on page 29 of the same consolidation. Those two of course are rental orders.

P.C. 34/4433 is the order in council which extended the Government Employees Compensation Act to employees of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation, which has almost finished its work. It can be found on page 45 of the consolidation. There are only eight or nine employees left, but until the corporation is completely wound up we have to cover these employees under the Government Employees Compensation Act. The last of the four wartime prices and trade board orders is P.C. 3122, consolidation of supplementary regulations, which can be found at page 46.

Transitional Measures Act

Mr. Knowles: Consolidation of supplementary regulations of what, of the wartime prices and trade board?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, of the wartime prices and trade board. There are two orders in council of the Department of Justice, P.C. 4600, which appears at page 68, and P.C. 6223 at page 69.

Mr. Knowles: Which deal with what?

Mr. Sinclair: One authorizes appeals in cases involving breaches of wartime regulations, and the second one provides for notice to the attorneys general of Canada and of the provinces in certain cases. Then there are the orders in council which will be revoked as of March 31, 1950, although they will still be in effect until that date. I can list them now or perhaps it would be just as convenient to have them appear in Hansard. There are six of them. Therefore that will leave under this act only the six orders in council which I first mentioned. With the permission of the house, we might have these two schedules printed in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sinclair: The schedules are as follows:

Continuation of Transitional Measures Act chapter 16 of S.C. 1947—amended by chapter 5 of S.C. 1947-48 and chapter 3 of S.C. 1949

Schedule to the Act

1. Orders in council still in force

Wartime Prices and Trade Board

P.C. 8528 1/11/41 Wartime Prices and Trade Regulations

as amended by

P.C. 8762 10/11/41
8837 13/11/41
9030 19/11/41
5092 15/ 6/42
5109 16/ 6/42
10277 10/11/42
11595 22/12/42
3206 22/ 4/43
6808 30/ 8/43
6242 18/ 8/44
8910 24/11/44
385 18/ 1/45
4410 22/ 6/45
60 7/ 1/47
392 31/ 1/47

P.C. 9029 21/11/41 Wartime Leasehold Regulations

as amended by

P.C. 3366 24/ 4/42
8973 1/10/42
3207 22/ 4/43
7570 1/10/43
6234 8/ 8/44
386 18/ 1/45
4409 22/ 6/45
5234 23/12/46
391 31/ 1/47

P.C. 34/4433 10/6/44 Government Employees Compensation Act extended C.P.S.C., etc., employees

P.C. 3122 25/7/46 Consolidation of supplementary regulations

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Department of Justice

P.C. 4600 7/6/43 Authorizing appeals in cases involving breaches of wartime regulations

as amended by

P.C. 6713 25/8/44

P.C. 6223 6/8/43 Notice to Attorneys General of Canada and of province in certain cases.

2. Orders in council revoked as of April 1, 1950 by order in council P.C. 1270, March 14, 1950

P.C. 7475 26/8/42 Regulations of Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation

as amended by

P.C. 39 6/ 1/44
5273 26/ 7/45
390 31/ 1/47
1711 29/ 4/47

P.C. 328 28/1/47 Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation

P.C. 3 4/1/44 Wartime Industries Control Regulations

as amended by

P.C. 6355 11/ 8/44
346 16/ 1/45
897 13/ 2/45
7156 29/11/45
477 7/ 2/47

P.C. 245 23/1/46 Steel Regulations as amended by P.C. 520 15/2/46

P.C. 1997 21/3/44 Timber Regulations

P.C. 1609 23/4/46 Construction Materials Regulations as amended by P.C. 337 31/1/47.

Mr. Knowles: The first one the parliamentary assistant named, P.C. 8528, is the one which established the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. Sinclair: Wartime prices and trade board regulations.

Mr. Knowles: If I understand it correctly that was the overriding board, and rent control is in effect a branch of the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Are the regulations of the wartime prices and trade board being kept in effect merely to provide for rent control or are there some other price controls still in effect?

Mr. Sinclair: There are no other price controls that I know of. The only one having any reference to price control is P.C. 34/4433, and that is because the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation was a price control and subsidy organization. There is a complete list of the main orders. You will find them all consolidated in this list I have given so that you can study them and ask these questions when the bill is up for second reading.

Mr. Knowles: The regulations that will be carried forward will not themselves be printed in the bill?

Mr. Sinclair: No, but the schedule to the bill will show the orders in council and amendments which are being carried forward.

Mr. Knowles: I realize that perhaps this is a matter for the minister rather than the parliamentary assistant, but I hope he will bring this suggestion to the attention of the minister. It seems to me that when you are passing legislation of this kind it is not satisfactory merely to have a notation as to where you have to go to hunt for all these matters. It would be far better to have a schedule attached to the bill setting forth the actual regulations referred to.

Mr. Sinclair: I thought I was being helpful. This is the first time that I know of where actual information as to orders in council has been given at the resolution stage like this. You will find it very little bother to turn to page 18 of the consolidation to find this particular order in council.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary assistant may have tried to be helpful but he seems to think it is perfectly satisfactory to pass legislation that does not include all its details, and that we should be very grateful to him for telling us where to find those details.

Mr. Sinclair: This is not legislation; this is only the resolution stage. In order that members may have warning of what is coming I hope I am giving you ample information by putting the schedule in Hansard before the bill is given first reading.

Mr. Knowles: But nothing more than the schedule is going to be in the bill; not the details of the orders.

Mr. Pouliot: It will be a book of numbers.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Fournier, Hull (for Mr. Abbott) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 56, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1950.

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1951.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

PRAIRIE TRANSMISSION LINES LIMITED

The house resumed, from Friday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benidickson for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to incorporate Prairie Transmission Lines Limited, and the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Edmonton East): "That this question be now put."

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments that remain to me tonight to speak on the bill which is now before the house, namely, the bill to incorporate the Prairie Transmission Lines Limited, I should like to review the point that I made when I last spoke on this matter as to the great concern felt by the people of the interior part of the province of British Columbia at the prospect that the pipe line may not be built through that area, but may be built in the greater part through the states of the United States, particularly Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

I have placed before you, sir, and before the house, a number of resolutions and telegrams that I have received from boards of trade and chambers of commerce throughout that entire district. Over the week end I have received several more, including, it might be noted, a copy of a resolution passed by a junior chamber of commerce of Burnaby, supporting the stand we are taking, that the pipe line must be built through British Columbia.

Mr. Goode: Will the hon. member permit a question? Did he say "Burnaby"?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Goode: Would he mind placing on the record to whom it was addressed?

Mr. Fulton: I have not got it with me, it is in my office. I will give it to the hon. member when I finish speaking in this debate.

Mr. Goode: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that it be placed on the records of this house.

Mr. Fulton: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Cruickshank: He has an opportunity to speak if he wants to.

Mr. Fulton: I shall be glad to do that if it meets with the approval of the house, or I could give it to the hon. member privately, if he prefers it that way.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Put it on the record.

Mr. Fulton: It is a fact that I have that letter. It seems to me that that indicates there is a widespread feeling throughout our province that some assurance must be given that this line will be built through Canada before this bill shall be allowed to pass. It is on that basis that I want to conclude this evening, by appealing to hon. members who understand the position which those of us from British Columbia have taken in this matter.

Mr. Cruickshank: That is some of us from British Columbia.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): A monopoly, a complete monopoly.

Mr. Cruickshank: Not Jacques Cartier or Alexander Mackenzie.

Mr. Fulton: I must say, Mr. Speaker, it does seem that this debate arouses a good deal of interest, although many of the hon. members prefer to make their contribution by way of interjection rather than by speaking so that we could know their stand. If they are so interested in the bill I suggest strongly that they should all take part in the debate so that we could know what their point of view is.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): We are opposed to the Tory monopoly.

Mr. McLure: Rubber stamps.

Mr. Ferrie: Filibuster.

Mr. Fulton: It is significant to consider the petition which is now before the other place from the company which is seeking this incorporation here tonight, where one finds that they have been applying for incorporation in order to build a pipe line on a route lying through the United States. The route has been fully described as that route which leads just across the southeast corner of our province; then it proceeds through the states of Idaho and Washington to the Pacific coast, where it splits into two branches, one going south to Oregon and the other going back up north to Vancouver.

I should like hon. members who disagree with our position to consider carefully the merits of their suggestion that we should allow this bill to go through, since, it is said, all that is sought here is the incorporation of a company, and that we should let the Alberta government decide on the route of the line, or let the board of transport commissioners decide it. Mr. Speaker, I am not speaking as a legal or constitutional expert, although I have given some study to the matter, but I believe that a very good case could be made out for the contention that neither the Alberta government nor the board of transport commissioners has any legal or constitutional authority to control the export of gas from Canada. The Alberta board is concerned primarily with assuring that sufficient supplies of gas are in that province to meet the foreseeable requirements of Alberta over the next fifty years. Once they have satisfied themselves on that score, they will consider granting licences to export gas; but I submit that if the Alberta board were to refuse to license the export of gas merely on the ground that the proposed line crosses the international border, their decision would be declared ultra vires, because that would be an interference with interprovincial and export trade. I submit they will have no authority to refuse to license on those grounds. In the same way, if hon. members will consider carefully the main oil and gas Pipe Lines Act under which the companies must apply to the board of transport commissioners for authorization, they will find in that act that the question of whether the line goes to the United States is not a consideration to be taken into account by the board in granting or refusing their application. You will not find any authority for the board to take into consideration the question whether or not the line has to be built into the United States. There is no authority, expressed or implied, for the board to refuse their authority merely because the company propose to build their line across the border. I submit that, in the same way, it would be ultra vires the board of transport commissioners to refuse to grant their authority to build a line merely because it is proposed to send it through the United States.

Indeed I would presume this matter has been given some consideration by those who are now applying for incorporation, because we find they have laid down the route they propose to build, and it shows clearly that for the greater part of its length it is to be through the United States. If they thought that the board could refuse or might refuse their application because of that fact they would not have included it in their petition. Therefore I say the only way we can be certain that the policy of building the line through Canada is followed is to insist upon the assurance being given by the sponsors of the bill before we pass it. If it is the desire to cut short this debate, and if it is desired by hon. members who say that they believe in the policy of Canada first, if it is desired to ensure that we shall have the line through Canada, then I suggest that the way to do it, and the way to cut short this debate, would be to amend the main Pipe Lines Act to provide that the board shall not grant authority unless the line is built through Canada. If that were done, then certainly I would cease my opposition to the bill, and I believe I can safely say that other hon. members who have been opposing it would cease their opposition; because then we would find that the line would be built through Canada, and we would be content to grant incorporation to as many companies as wish to build the line through Canada first.

However, until that assurance is given, or until the Pipe Lines Act is amended so that we may have the line built through Canada serving Canadian cities, and serving this country, with the benefits of the enormous cost of construction and the employment which will come to Canada—I say until that is done we must continue to oppose the incorporation of these companies because, in our view, it would be a great disservice to Canada and a negation of the principle that we must now build up our economy to provide opportunities for employment and expansion here at home.

On that basis I take my stand squarely in opposition to the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker the purpose of the bill now before the house is to incorporate a certain number of people under the name Prairie Transmission Lines Limited.

These persons are seeking permission to build and operate pipe lines for carrying gas and oil from sources in Alberta to certain points both within and outside of Canada.

The bill, however, carefully avoids any description of the route along which the promoters intend to build their pipe line. No map is attached, as is usual when railway companies seek incorporation.

The matter before the house has been discussed during at least two sessions. I do not think there is any precedent on record of such a lengthy discussion on a private bill.

So far more than thirty members have spoken for or against this measure. Two party chieftains, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) and the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) have taken part in the debate and voiced strong opposition to the bill.

At first, representatives of the provinces concerned, Alberta and British Columbia, were the only ones to show their interest in the matter by taking part in the debate, that has been rather bitter at times. But today, members from all parts of Canada, even from Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, have spoken on the bill, an indication of the importance of this measure. It also goes to show that the more we talk about it in the house, the more significant it becomes.

We must conclude, from what we read in the newspapers that it is a most vital question. We surely have grounds to wonder why it is so important and why it receives so much attention in the house.

In my opinion, members of the opposition took part in this debate because it dealt with the nation's natural resources and because it is in line with the "Canada first" policy, always practised by my party.

A nation's natural resources are its most valuable assets. It is the duty of every Canadian, whatever his home province and whatever the issue at stake, to see to the conservation of our country's natural resources and to their development in the best interest of our people.

If such is the duty of every citizen, I believe that the government, on whom rests so many responsibilities, has the dual obligation of considering the matter and making sure that the interests of our people as a whole are fully upheld.

Since confederation and especially since the beginning of the 20th century, this country has known an industrial development unparalleled in its history. From 1900 onwards, our lumber industry, our mines, our waterpower have been developed as never before.

Unfortunately, in several provinces, natural resources were, in most instances, developed only for the benefit of certain foreign companies and, very seldom to the real advantage of our people.

Let us consider, for instance, the forests in my province. Since the turn of the century our forests have been worked on such an extensive scale by pulp and paper companies that, to a certain extent, they have become depleted. At that time, there were no regulations to restrict their activities and, human nature being what it is, these people, whose appetite was never curbed, possessed themselves of all these assets and developed them for their own benefit only, meanwhile forgetting that they were laying waste one of the country's natural resources, one which might take centuries to rebuild.

Fortunately, the Quebec government, in the past few years, realizing this danger, has adopted legislation to save our forests. They have in this way required all those who work our pulp and wood resources to manufacture these products in Canada and to export them in a manufactured or finished state. In doing so, this government showed national consciousness.

This example was followed in several provinces. New Brunswick and Ontario among others, have followed suit and passed similar important legislation. This logical step had been taken for the sole purpose of protecting our forests, the government of the day realizing that they were a national treasure belonging to the population as a whole.

Natural gas is no doubt a different problem but nevertheless we have the power to study a charter which will allow us not only to develop a natural resource but also to export it.

The place we hold today among the exporting countries of the world is incomparable. However we can keep this rank only if we always proceed carefully, if we use our natural resources so that the products of our soil are developed at home and if we apply the principle of Canada first, in this case as in others.

As the leader of our party said the other day, the main reason why we oppose this bill is because we believe in the principle of Canada first. The members of our party were accused of filibustering, and of lengthening the debate but I sincerely believe that when they take such an attitude they are really anxious to carry out their mandate. I am personally glad that they have thus risen in protest and that, as representatives from all the province in Canada, they have put aside any selfish feelings to come to the aid of the people of British Columbia by helping them to secure an adequate and sufficient public service before a group of capitalists export these products to the United States.

The bill before the house provides for the development and export of Alberta's natural gas and petroleum resources. Protests were bound to come from members of the opposition who are all realistic people and believe that Canada should continue to forge ahead. We are of the opinion that our natural resources should be developed as rapidly as possible and to the greater advantage of our people. We oppose the measure because the promoters and supporters of the bill still refuse to say where the said company intends to build its pipe line. No one can claim I speak rashly in stating this, but all hon. members are convinced, I am sure, that the company's primary intention is to export this gas to the United States, and serve that part of the American nation first, probably in a way that will be detrimental to the interests of the people of British Columbia.

Making sure that this pipe line will serve Canada before the United States is one consideration, but we must realize that our neighbour to the south is probably the greatest industrial nation in the world and enjoys the highest standard of living. That country has attained its present development by adhering to the principle that the U.S. had to be supplied before the export markets. I do not deny that our neighbours are generous, that they export coal, petroleum and even gas to various parts of Canada. However, before allowing goods to be sent abroad, the U.S. congress has always made sure that American interests were served first. It authorized exports only after having studied every angle of the problem. I do not think any natural gas company in the United States could plan to export without submitting its program to the legislative body of that country and without showing exactly what route it would follow and how much gas it intends to export. This whole procedure makes it very difficult to secure a permit.

Unlike most of our other natural resources, gas is an exhaustible product. It differs from electricity which is a product that depends upon water power and water power abounds in this country. Once a river is harnessed, electricity can be produced from it almost indefinitely, or at least as long as the generators hold out. It is an inexhaustible resource, whereas natural gas is not. Let us take the case of Ontario. Towards the end of the last century, Ontario had a seemingly inexhaustible source of natural gas. I would not care to say it was wasted but it was used improvidently. Well, during the last three or four years this same province ran short of natural gas and had to import some from the U.S.A. That is why we cannot blame members who oppose this bill, who demand explanations and cannot vote on it one way or the other unless they know where they stand.

What must not be forgotten is that gas is used not only to heat houses and industrial plants, but that it also is—and this is possibly its greatest advantage—a source of power. It is that twofold value which we must keep before us in this debate.

Canada is developing and its population is steadily growing. We are now in the midst, moreover, of a wave of immigration which some call exaggerated. We used to think that industry could only establish itself in the east, in the two central provinces. However, nowadays some industries are seeking to establish themselves in the west and especially in British Columbia. They ask only to spread evenly throughout this country so that every province and every district may enjoy a fairly uniform standard of living. We must guard against any risk of exhaustion of these natural gas reserves before we even begin to think of exporting it elsewhere than in British Columbia.

The press have been unanimous in their opposition to this bill, but they are in favour of a route which would allow the interests of that province to be served first, before the interests of the large cities in northwestern United States.

In support of that statement, may I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to quote a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the British Columbia legislature. I quote only the last paragraph:

> Therefore be it resolved that the legislative assembly of the province of British Columbia urge upon the federal and provincial authorities concerned the advisability in the interests not only of British Columbia but of Canada as a whole, that such pipe lines be constructed through the Yellowhead pass and thence through the interior of British Columbia to Vancouver, with provision for the extension of the line to the Peace river block, so that when sufficient supplies of petroleum and natural gas are available in that area there will be an available outlet to market without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution was not passed by the British Columbia legislature as any ordinary measure. It stirred surprisingly high enthusiasm in view of the technical matter involved.

I would like to read from a press dispatch of the day following the passing of the resolution. It is readed: "Victoria unanimously supports B.C. pipe line". The dispatch goes on to say:

> The house got on its collective high horse Thursday. Party lines were forgotten as M.L.A.'s unanimously went on record for a gas pipe line from Alberta through B.C. to the Pacific coast.
>
> They feared that if they didn't do something, the U.S. would beat us to it.
>
> Even the public galleries grew enthusiastic. One after another, M.L.A.'s hopped up to say why, of course, the line should be in B.C.
>
> Opposition leader Winch said the C.C.F., too, wants the line in B.C. He urged the house to speak in a united voice for B.C. first, because there's a very powerful New York voice in the House of Commons . . .
>
> Everyone agreed pressure should be put on Ottawa to have the line in B.C. The resolution went through with flying colours and everyone thumped desks.

These quotations leave no doubt in our minds as to the doughty attitude of the entire legislative assembly of British Columbia. The provincial representatives have set an example that members of this house should follow unhesitatingly for, as I said a moment ago, natural gas is especially useful to industry. According to statistics supplied by the Department of Labour, Vancouver, one of our largest and most progressive cities, produced more than practically any other during the war. The past winter has been one of the worst in the city's history. There was more unemployment in Vancouver than anywhere else in the country.

The attitude of the British Columbia government and legislature is easily understood. This legislative body wishes to safeguard the future of that part of the country and the advantage of being able to supply natural gas to all the industries that settle in the province. This would provide employment for the people of British Columbia many of whom were without work during the past winter.

I said earlier that the sponsor and supporters of this bill have said nothing of the intentions of those who are applying for this charter, regarding the route they intend to follow in building the pipe line.

Well, the petition before the Senate today enables us not only to harbour no further doubts as to the intentions of the people applying for a charter but also to know once and for all that their project provides for the construction of a pipe line on a route that runs straight towards the United States, to serve the cities of the state of Washington before heading back towards Vancouver.

I shall read, with your permission, the description of this route. Among the powers requested by the petition in favour of the company, there are these:

To construct, maintain, own, operate and exploit one or several pipe lines to transport natural and artificial gas, and oil, within the province of Alberta and within the province of British Columbia, from a point in the vicinity of the city of Calgary in the province of Alberta to a point in the vicinity of Blairmore in the same province and thence to another point in the vicinity of Kingsgate in the province of British Columbia—

And here is the admission:

—and thence to the United States, leaving Canada at a point near Kingsgate in British Columbia and entering it again in the vicinity of Blaine in the state of Washington, and thence in a northerly direction towards Vancouver.

This shows the real intentions of the sponsors of this bill. The truth is now before us; that seems to me perfectly clear.

Those members who are anxious to conserve our natural resources and see to it that they are used to the best possible advantage of our people must oppose this bill. I am happy to notice that all the members of my party who have so far taken part in this debate have based their opposition to this bill on the same principle: Canada first and our friends afterwards.

I feel that the government, instead of protecting foreign interests by such a bill, should take the necessary means to allow the people to profit by the development of this natural resource.

Personally, since it is a matter of public utility, I feel that once these pipe lines are built and have reached a high degree of production the government should take them over in order to see that the people get all the natural gas they need. The users of these pipe lines will find the supply continuously decreasing. We therefore request the house to consider this viewpoint.

Canada, especially during the last ten years, has witnessed important discoveries. In the province of Quebec we have discovered the world's richest oxide and iron deposits. And the province of Alberta, one of the two provinces we are concerned with at this moment, has witnessed a discovery, a development and a marketing of petroleum which are truly unequalled in the whole world.

Well, I ask this house not to repeat the mistakes which were made at the beginning of the century when we allowed our natural resources to be exported without consideration for the people, without planning for the future and without making sure that future generations could use them.

In a country such as ours, where there is a sufficient quantity of these great natural resources, we shall not allow the people to go without that to which they are entitled. Before taking any action which may be regretted later on and in order to avoid, in regard to the natural resources which were discovered during the last few years and which our people will undoubtedly develop before long, the mistakes of the past, I am glad to state that I belong to the party which opposed this bill and which did so out of patriotic feelings based on the policy of Canada first. Such is the policy of the party to which I belong and I do not know of any better policy.

(Text):

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I fancy my intervention in this debate may be the source of wonderment to some hon. members, because I suppose no place could seem more remote from Alberta than the province of Newfoundland. But when we consider the many uses to which petroleum products are now put, when we consider the way those uses are being continually extended in the household, in industry and in transportation, I think it will be agreed that any hon. member of this house would be justified in speaking upon such an important matter. If we approach this as we should, as men having vision to look into the future as men had vision when they planned the construction of the transcontinental railways, I think we must regard these matters, and the work that has been done already in the oil development in Alberta, as only the beginning of a tremendous industry.

Many hon. members have knowledge of the importance attached to the oil industry in the United States. I believe it is not going too far to venture the assertion that this industry in Alberta may develop to the same extent. In the United States they regard oil as something more than an industry. I should like to call the attention of hon. members to a remark contained in the preface to a book called "A National Policy for the Oil Industry" by Eugene V. Rostow. This book was prepared by professors in economics and law at Yale university; in that preface the editor says:

Oil is more than one of the largest of American industries, in terms of the money, steel and men engaged in producing and selling it. Oil is an essential weapon of modern war, and oil policy must be judged ultimately from the point of view of national security.

When we apply that statement to the new oil industry in Alberta we may feel that the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) was right when he spoke of the importance of keeping these pipe lines within Canada, from the point of view of national security. If any further justification were needed for an hon. member, no matter from what province he may come, to take part in such an important debate, I think I could find that justification in two short articles I culled from the Gazette of March 21 of this year. The first is a column written by Frank Francis and headed "Trends, Talk and Trade". The subhead is, "Pipelines, Canada's wonder issue, still soaring," and the article goes on:

Textbooks say good news usage eschews superlatives, adheres strictly to simple facts. Well, one can adhere to simple facts but it is impossible to resist the urge to use all the superlatives in the book in describing what has happened to International Pipe Line 4's.

These were four per cent bonds issued by the Imperial Oil Company through one of its subsidiaries, in connection with the pipe line.

Yesterday this issue was quoted at 263-267. Probably these convertible debentures are worth this much. Some think they are. But the Street has long since given up trying to guess how high this issue will go.

The point is that this quote is up about 55 points over the week-end.

That was on a Monday, and over the week end it had gone up $55 on a $100 bond.

It will be recalled that it was originally offered at par last fall. Its rapid rise since that time has had no parallel anywhere, so far as is known.

Truly it can be said that this is and is likely to remain Canada's wonder issue from the standpoint of what has already happened in so short a time.

There was a message from Calgary published in the same newspaper on the same date, of which I shall read only part:

Crude oil and natural gasoline production in Alberta in the week ending March 13 increased almost 500 barrels per day to set a new all-time high of 74,123 barrels per day.

And then it goes on to list the accomplishments in the Redwater field and the various other fields where oil is being produced, and it continues:

The new record is almost 16,000 barrels more than the production a year ago at this time, all of which has been accounted for by the Redwater field.

Which is a comparatively recent discovery.

At the end of the new record week, a total of 1,335 wells in Alberta were capable of being operated.

Last year at the same time only 771 wells were capable of being operated. This is an increase of nearly 600 wells in one year. I believe those figures will give hon. members some idea of the extent to which this industry may yet develop.

I hope that what I have to say—and of course I do not know whether it will—will be a source more of illumination than of heat. I have listened to the debates on this subject this session and last session and I realize that this bill is now being introduced for the second time. I must confess that I did not understand it very well. Perhaps I do not fully understand it now. I am sure I do not. But I have made an attempt to do so because, as all hon. members will agree, we may have to vote on this measure. I am sure that other hon. members will agree with me that it is desirable to try to understand what one may have to vote on.

Whatever emerges from this discussion, I am sure that we are all in agreement that the province of Alberta is on the road to becoming fabulously wealthy.

I can remember, when I was a student at Toronto university many years ago, first hearing the magic name of Turner valley when it first came into prominence, and the great hopes that were then held for its future. Unhappily, however, we know that the province of Alberta did not realize the hopes which were engendered thirty-five or thirty-six years ago when Turner valley first came into production.

Mr. Harkness: They still got a lot of oil.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, and they are still getting a lot of oil out of it.

An hon. Member: A lot of heat.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): We are all familiar with the financial stress which the people and the government of Alberta went through during the thirties. We in Newfoundland are especially sympathetic with the people of Alberta and rejoice in their prosperity at the present time, because we were going through financial stress in those same thirties. While the government of Alberta adopted social credit as a solution to their problems, we adopted commission of government. The province of Alberta has since fallen on good times but, I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, since we got clear of the commission of government prosperity is not as booming as it was down there in Newfoundland while the commission of government was in existence. I trust—and I am sure we all agree on this—that the great wealth that Alberta now enjoys, and which seems to be without parallel in the history of any of our provinces, will bring happiness to her people and that that province will be the centre from which prosperity will spread to other parts of Canada and to other parts of America as well. To us who come from Newfoundland, your new province, where men are accustomed to work so strenuously and often to work so long without any reward whatsoever, the stories we have heard sound like dreams. We want to see these great blessings which Alberta enjoys used for the benefit of all the people of Canada; and we hope perhaps that even our fishermen, who often labour for months with no return from their labours, may be able to get some indirect benefits from the prosperity of this industry in Alberta.

Judging by the report of the Imperial Oil Company last year, much of their effort was unprofitable. The manager said that they were disappointed but not discouraged. Not so the government and the people of Alberta. I do not know if it is correct, but I have been told that in some places Alberta natural gas is so cheap that it is more economical for the municipalities to let the gas burn all day in the streets than to engage someone to turn the lights out and to put them on again.

It is possibly a good thing that the government of Alberta is in the hands of such earnest men as those who compose the Social Credit government, men like those we have here in this house. But I feel sure also, Mr. Speaker, that any visitor who comes to this house and looks down upon the hon. members will be able to distinguish the members from Alberta from the members who come from any other province, owing to the fact that they have such a carefree way about them. They do not seem to have a care in the world because their province is now so prosperous that they have little to worry about; whereas we who come from the other provinces, especially those of us who come from the tenth province, have many cares to burden us.

As it is nine o'clock, Mr. Speaker, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: It being nine o'clock, the house will now proceed to government orders.

OLD AGE SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY LEGISLATION, ALTERNATIVE METHODS, ETC.

The house resumed from Thursday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin:

That a joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to examine and study the operation and effects of existing legislation of the parliament of Canada and of the several provincial legislatures with respect to old age security; similar legislation in other countries; possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles; the probable cost thereof and possible methods of providing therefor; the constitutional and financial adjustments, if any, required for the effective operations of such plans and other related matters;

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

That 28 members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the house at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of this house, and that standing order 65 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary; to call for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting, and to report from time to time;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee for the use of the committee and of parliament, and that standing order 64 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): In resuming the debate, Mr. Speaker, on the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) to establish a joint committee of both houses to give further thought to the social question, I wish to congratulate him again on that move, which will be most helpful to the country. At the outset, I must say that the minister has taken the greatest care to improve health conditions in this country since he has assumed the functions of the head of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I shall try not to repeat what has been said by my colleagues who have spoken on the matter, and I shall also try to consider the whole matter from a human rather than a political point of view. I am assuming, in the first place, that every hon. member of this house desires the well-being and good health of his fellow citizens. That is natural. Let us suppose that a Canadian left this country twenty-five years ago and returned today. He would be astounded at the progress that has been made in social legislation. Twenty-five years ago there was no old age pension; there were no family allowances; there was no pension for needy mothers—

Mr. Noseworthy: Good old days!

Mr. Pouliot: There was no unemployment insurance, and the age of the hon. member for York South was much less than it is now, and it is the same with all of us. There are many social advantages that the people who lived a quarter of a century ago could not benefit from. Now we have made progress in that direction, and although it is impossible to expect perfection in the field of social security, Canada is one of the leading countries in that regard because of the efforts of the Prime Minister and the members of his government, and particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin).

Twenty-five years ago there were government annuities, but they were contributory.

There were some pensions for railwaymen, but they were also contributory. In these last years some benefits have been given that have been non-contributory in order to help the most needy.

I am very much interested when I hear a discussion about contributory social measures. In many instances those who are supposed to benefit from them have not the means to pay any contribution, and there are those who have been deprived of the means of paying any contribution. All hon. members of parliament must be familiar with some of those cases, which are due to poverty and ill health. Now we have the suggestion that a pension be given to invalids. There are hospitals where many invalids could be looked after: those who are fortunate enough to be able to pay for their hospitalization and care, and those who are not so fortunate, and those who through public assistance may go to the hospital and be looked after.

The people of Canada have a natural sympathy for invalids, all those who suffer, particularly and especially disabled persons. But we should not conclude that because a person is disabled he is needy. I knew the greatest lawyer who ever argued before the courts of the province of Quebec. He was disabled; he was a hunchback; nevertheless he was acknowledged as one of the brightest legal minds of Canada. Down home in Riviere du Loup the manager of a furniture factory was also a hunchback, but he had ample means and was the employer of quite a number of people. It is not only the disability that should be the reason for a pension. It should be the disability and the need because of some unfortunate circumstances that are difficult to establish.

It is very difficult to make a distinction between a disabled person who is needy and one who is not. But if the state is to consider these cases, each case should be considered individually. It is impossible to establish general rules in that regard, and probably that is one of the reasons why the disabled have not received a pension.

To what degree is a person disabled? That is the question that must be asked before granting a pension. But nevertheless the disabled deserve our sympathy, whether they are in a position to earn their own living or not. I know well a family where there are five children who are disabled and invalids. The five children are in one family. They are grown up now. They are hunchbacks. They are between thirty and forty years of age. They have been brought up without any help from the state, and I can only admire their parents for having taken care of them for such a long time. They could have gone to hospital and they would have been received there, and the cost of their hospitalization would probably have been paid under the public assistance legislation; but the mother and the father loved their children. The father was working to earn their living. The mother was taking good care of them and wanted to have them at home to look after them herself. I find it admirable. When it was suggested that they go to the hospital and be looked after by other people, just as is done in many other cases, the mother positively refused, and the children refused. They wanted to be together at home. Well, now, in very pitiable cases such as these it seems to me that these unfortunate people should be granted the same pension that is given to old people. In the case of old people it is age. They have the need on account of their age. That is the reason for the means test. The younger people who have suffered a greater disability than those who are old deserve the same consideration; and it would be much cheaper for the state to pay such a pension than to pay for their hospitalization. Considering the wages and the salaries that are paid in hospitals, the medical costs, the fees, the cost of treatment and so forth, it is impossible to look after an invalid and the disabled in a hospital as well as it is done in their homes and at the same cost. It would be much more expensive to look after them in hospitals than in their homes, if they are given the pension. This is the pension that has been requested for them.

I wish to be fair with those people. I do not tell them that they will have a pension—although I hope they will. I tell them I will never miss an opportunity to bring their cases before the House of Commons so that all hon. members may be made familiar with the circumstances under which they live, and the troubles they have.

In each individual there is an aspiration for justice, and there are cases which strike the imagination of all. We realize that there are family allowances for those under sixteen years of age, and pensions for the blind from the age of forty—

Mr. Martin: It is now twenty-one.

Mr. Pouliot: Yes, it is twenty-one now; and I congratulate the minister upon that. We realize that there are old age pensions and that there are pensions for needy mothers with children under sixteen years. This last-mentioned provision is made provincially, through a provincial organization.

Those who suffer disabilities which prevent them from earning their own living look at those people—and not with either envy or jealousy, because people who suffer are as a rule kind. But they will say, "How is it that those people who are in no worse condition than we are receive indemnity, while we are deprived of it?" That is the point they consider.

I am deeply concerned when an argument of that kind is advanced by one who suffers. They may be living in the woods or in the back country, far from the railways. They may live alone, deprived of the amenities of life; but they are deserving of our sympathy.

I am not complaining about social legislation, because I realize it was needed. After the exploitation of the forests ceased to be what it was during the war, there were many families who relied upon social welfare grants for their living. A poor woman, the mother of twenty children, wrote me one day stating that, as the mother of twenty children, she was thankful for the establishment of family allowances by the government. That whole family must depend on family allowances. I will not say that this is generous, because in most families the amounts received for family allowances are used in the education of the children, and to dress them comfortably so that they may attend school. All this is in order.

But there are some other cases—and if there were not so many it would be easier to deal with them—who, because of illness, a lack of work or because of some other circumstances, find that they must suffer. There is no reason at all in a country like ours for people suffering from a lack of clothing, or from undernourishment.

I do not wish to discuss this point at length, but during the war I found that there were Canadians who did not have much money, and some of whom were settlers in the back country who did not have sufficient money to buy warm clothing for their children during the winter. The result was that the children had to stay in their camps, instead of going out to play in the snow and to breathe the fresh air. I suggested that secondhand military clothing should be given to them. It was not expensive, and it was at hand, and had been used. For a time I succeeded in getting some of that clothing. I obtained some long overcoats and tunics, the only condition being that they were to be dyed.

On New Year's Eve one winter, in Riviere du Loup, just at the outset of the war, I distributed three hundred of those garments, and sent packages to the back country settlements. But this was stopped by Colonel Ralston and his associate minister under the pretext of economy. What happened? While the white men could not have any more of those garments, the Indians were permitted to have them; and quantities of that clothing were sold at 24½ cents a pound to rag pickers.

Those who were in charge of the colonization offices could not buy them at any price. I tried to buy some and I was told that an order in council would be required. I bring this to the attention of hon. members to show once again the stupidity of some people, and their lack of heart. They did not understand that it was better to give to good Canadians those clothes that had been bought with the money of the Canadian people, and at least as many to whites as to Indians. Instead of that, only the Indians were served, and quantities were sold to rag collectors. Shame!

This was a simple way of furnishing warm clothing during the winter months so as to decrease the discomfort and poverty of certain areas. It is not necessary to have a complicated system and to consult the learned economists and the great social masters about what is done in this or any other country. Perhaps we may learn something from what happens in other countries, but we must consider first what happens in Canada. Those who contend that everybody in Canada is rich cannot be right, because twenty centuries ago our Lord said, You have the poor with you always. I have compassion for the crowd, because that is a condition of existence in this world. Conditions cannot be changed completely but they can be improved. That should be our aim without political partisanship. We should join hands to try to improve the condition of the rather small number of Canadians who need help so that they will be more contented to live in this country. I want my fellow citizens to be happy. These people are not exacting; they do not ask for much. All they are asking for is a kind thought and the consideration that they deserve because they are not able to enjoy the amenities of life that most of us do.

When I meet these people I feel great sorrow and I regret that I am not rich enough to help them. This cannot be done by the individual, it must be done by the state. But if the state does it it means that the money must come from the taxpayers. Those who receive gifts from the state should bow to the taxpayers in thanks. This applies to the youngest child in receipt of family allowances as it does to the centenarian who receives an old age pension; each one should bow to the taxpayer for what is being done for him, and at the same time should not forget that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is his best friend.

Mr. Knowles: He should bow too.

Mr. Pouliot: I am glad that this step is being taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A committee will be set up and hon. members will be able to submit their suggestions, if not personally at least through those members of their party who will be on the committee. It is hoped that the committee can come to satisfactory conclusions as to how to improve the conditions of the poor, of the sick and of the disabled. There is no question but that we have prosperity in this country, but some sore spots still remain where people must suffer.

I would suppose that there are from 150 to 200 people in each constituency who suffer from disabilities that prevent their earning a livelihood for themselves and their families. Each hon. member should have a list of those special cases in his constituency which could be submitted to the committee. I had one prepared by the health unit in my constituency and it was found that there are from 150 to 180 cases deserving special consideration.

This is not a contentious matter or one in connection with which hon. members might use unpleasant expressions or proclaim that they are the only ones who are willing to do anything for their fellow citizens. That would not be true because we all want to do something. I am sure that the committee will do excellent work as soon as it starts to sit and I hope this motion will be passed tonight.

Mr. J. J. Smith (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there are a few observations I should like to make on this motion, and they will be brief and frank. Since coming to this house I have heard old age pensions discussed at some length. Amendments were moved by the oppositions to the speech from the throne at the last session and at this session condemning the government for failure to abolish the means test in connection with old age pensions. The supporters of the government were asked to support those amendments because it was claimed that in the election campaign we promised to do away with the means test. The government of the day has one supporter who did not make that promise during the campaign. I said that I was not in favour of the removal of the means test until the needier cases had been given assistance.

There seems to be one party, or at least one member of a party, who seems to forget that the supporters of the government are just as willing and anxious as he is that the needy people in Canada should be granted assistance. He would have readers of Hansard believe from the remarks of this hon. member that the rest of us are inhuman, that he is the only spokesman for the less fortunate people of our country. To hear him talk you would think that he was put on this earth for the sole purpose of looking after the needy people, and he was the only one capable of doing this.

Mr. Knowles: One could not ask for a better purpose.

An hon. Member: Whom are you talking about?

Mr. Lennard: Good advertising for somebody, whoever he is.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I am not a preacher nor a teacher and I have not had a university education. But I can speak on this subject from some practical experience. Since I was a young man I have been dealing with social services, not at the top level of government but at the lower municipal level. I was elected as a councillor and after serving two years in that position I was elected reeve of our municipality. I served as reeve for six consecutive years before coming here. According to the municipal records of Saskatchewan I was the youngest man ever to hold that office. I do not boast about that, but I am rather proud of it.

While I was municipal reeve I signed thousands of dollars' worth of cheques for social services, to help those who were not able to pay their hospital or doctor bills, to provide supplementary payments to old age pensioners and to those who were getting social aid. This idea of removing the means test in connection with old age pensions would be all right if the needier cases were looked after. I am thinking of those who are crippled, physically unfit, and through no fault of their own not able to look after themselves. I think they come first. Until they are taken care of I believe this talk of removing the means test from the old age pension is nothing but a lot of window-dressing and lip service.

If I may, I should like to refer to a case in my own constituency. In doing so, may I say that I am sure all other members of the house have had the same experience in their constituencies and also in almost all communities. When a municipal official collects taxes, just as the federal government does, to deal with social services, through taxation, they collect the money, make payments to those who are in need, and are never criticized if, in doing so, they provide, with a means test, money for social services to those who need it. It is possible that I might be a member of this house and not be very bright. There are many people who, I believe, are elected to the federal parliament possibly because the organization of the party put them there. But when a man is elected to a municipal council year after year he is running on his own steam.

When I was home at Christmas a man in my constituency asked me to witness a will. I knew him very well, and in speaking to him he brought up the question of the old age pension. I said to him that I did not think he needed the old age pension and he said, "No, I don't need it, but I would take it." I do not know exactly how much money he has, but I would suggest it is somewhere around $50,000 in bonds and cash. I said to him that the old age pension would not be any good to him, that he would get it and then he would have to pay it back in income tax. He said, "I am not paying any income tax now; I get enough from the interest on my bonds and the cash to keep my wife and myself." Anyway, he said the income tax would not take much of it.

Then there is another man in my constituency—and there are many such cases—who is a returned soldier. He has a small family and has purchased a farm under the Veterans' Land Act. He is paying income tax. That is all right, but at the same time this returned veteran is keeping his crippled mother. She was paralysed shortly after he came back from overseas, and his father died about the same time. She is bedridden or else in a wheel chair. He is supporting his mother, who is around sixty years of age, and as yet the state has not recognized its obligation to give that woman anything to keep her. I wonder if we would be justified in imposing more taxation on that veteran in order to give pensions to old people who really do not need them. I would like to see the means test broadened. We might get away with it in this house, but if a member of a municipal council handled social services in that way, he would last about as long as a snowball would last in a hot furnace.

I am not going to speak a great deal longer, but there are a few things I should like to say further. Let us keep our social services as a social service. The old age pension is a social service. I commend the minister for introducing the motion to set up a committee to investigate this matter because I think it needs investigation. I am not too surprised at the attitude of the C.C.F. party. They have always advocated something for nothing, but I am a little surprised at the Conservative party and the stand that some of their members have taken on this question. To hear the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Drew) speak on this subject you would think it was as simple as one, two, three; and the same applies to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). I do not know just why they take that stand.

Mr. Ferguson: Oh, oh.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I have the floor. I listened to a lot of your speeches and did not interrupt. The premier of Ontario takes a little different stand. I heard him say over the radio, and it was reported in the press, that old age pensions were the No. 1 problem of the Dominion of Canada. If it is the No. 1 problem, then it is not as simple as one, two, three. I am rather glad to note that there is at least one man in the Progressive Conservative party who is still speaking with common sense. If anyone is in doubt about where I stand on the question of old age pensions I hope I have made my position clear. My political opponents, if I have any, do not need to worry about the people in my constituency. I will see that they get my speech. A lot of people are worrying about how they are going to answer these little papers we received from newspapers. I am going to send them a copy of my speech and let the chips fall where they may. If anyone wants to insult me that is fine. They can say anything they like about me. They can say that I am an enemy of the old people but this is not true. My mother taught me when I was young to respect the aged and I have always done so. I am always mindful of the aged and am perfectly willing to help them any time I can do so.

I am not a poet, but there is a poem, part of which I remember from my school days. I will tell you the story leading up to it. The poem was in the Saskatchewan reader and possibly some members may have read it. There was an old lady who was trying to cross the street. Every time she went to cross the street she had to back up because of vehicles coming along and stopping her. There was a gang of boys farther down the street who were laughing at the old lady and joking about her plight. According to the poem one boy said:

> She's somebody's mother, boys, you know;
> I will help you across, if you wish to go.

I always remember that any time I am in a crowd. I am most mindful of the aged, and when I have a chance to help them I do so. I am not boasting, but I am rather proud of the fact that two weeks ago Sunday, when we were through curling, my deskmate let me off at the Chateau Laurier and I was waiting for the bus. I was standing in a crowd of some twenty men and women. I was not out in front. A little old lady came along, passed by some and said to me, "Son, will you help me cross the street?" I said, "Lady, I will be glad to do so." I do not know why she picked me. I do not think I look so kind, but I was watching, and I always do, for some aged person to help if I can.

There always has been a means test with old age pensions, there is now, and there always will be. The minister has introduced this motion to send the matter to a committee and I hope that the result will be successful. Regardless of whether or not it is on a contributory basis, we will always have a group of people whom we will have to help further and there will always be a means test. There has been a lot of talk about public opinion. I do not think public opinion is too strong on this issue. I believe the people of Canada realize that the government—our friends in the opposition will say it was under pressure, but let that pass—has recognized the fact that we must look after the unfortunate; that, as the saying is, the strong must carry the weak. That will always be the case; but in regard to having this free and that free, or getting something for nothing, I believe this idea is petering out.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I think we can say one thing for the hon. member who has just taken his seat; that is, he has the courage of his convictions. I have before me excerpts from speeches made in the House of Commons and the Senate—I suppose I should say "the other place"—in 1926 and 1927 in which I find thoughts very similar to the speech to which we have just listened. Perhaps I might give one quotation. I shall not name the person who made the speech, but it is taken from Senate Hansard for 1926, the year the old age pension bill had passed the Commons and was turned down by the other place:

> If this bill passes, the obligation of the children to look after their father and mother and grandmother and grandfather goes by the board . . . Is it judicious for us to impose upon our country such socialistic legislation as this—because it is nothing else—when there is no call for it?

The only difference between what this gentleman was saying in 1926 and what my hon. friend said tonight is that this is 1950, and the world has made considerable social progress since 1926. In 1926 many people called the old age pension act socialistic legislation and put the blame for it on the two labour men who were in the house at that time. Tonight, however, there are very few members who would get up in this house and call old age pensions socialistic legislation. Perhaps the prime minister of that day had a better understanding of the social implications of a measure of this kind than the member who has taken his seat. The prime minister at that time was Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, and this is what he said in introducing the measure:

> There is need for society to assist in the protection of its members against a condition which simultaneously places burdens upon the worker whose day's work is done, and on the worker whose day's work is just beginning. If the young are to be given a fair start in life, the care of the aged should not be their first responsibility.

I think most people would agree with that statement.

Coming to the resolution before us, I am sure it must be very disappointing to a great many people in Canada. The matter of old age pensions has been before the people of this country ever since it first became an issue in 1926, and it became law in 1927. Since I came here twenty years ago there has not been a session when we have not debated this question. It was debated at considerable length in 1931, and if I had time I should like to put on record some of the statements made at that time. This will be a disappointment to a great many people in Canada because they have been looking forward, not to a committee to investigate the abolition of the means test but to the abolition of the means test itself. As a matter of fact the country came very close to having the means test abolished in 1945, when it was included in the proposals made by the federal government to the dominion-provincial conference of that year. I shall read just a short paragraph which appears at page 37 of the proposals of the government of Canada:

> As part of the general proposals now put before the conference, it is proposed that the federal government would establish a system of national old age pensions entirely financed and administered by the federal government, and paid at the uniform rate of $30 per month regardless of means to men and women aged seventy and over in all parts of Canada.

Nothing could be clearer than that proposal. The government of the day, a Liberal government, was prepared to abolish the means test for those seventy years of age and over, and there was no question of where the money was to come from. They knew all about that. They knew, because during the war they were able to find all the money required to pay for our war needs. If we can find money to buy guns surely we can find money to look after those who built up this country, the fathers and mothers of those living in this country today.

I have three or four objections to the resolution now before us. In the first place I regard it as merely a stalling action on the part of the government. This idea occurred to the minister himself, and he referred to it. It would be strange if it had not occurred to the minister, because it is a tactic or manoeuvre with which this government is very familiar. In the session of 1943 and 1944 we set up a parliamentary committee to consider a draft bill providing for national health insurance. Perhaps that bill was not brought before the cabinet, and certainly it never received the endorsation of the cabinet, but the understanding that was conveyed to the people was that it was a government bill to provide complete health insurance on a national scale. I was a member of that committee. We discussed the bill seriously and in detail for two sessions. Then came the election of 1945; the government was returned to office, and we heard no more about national health insurance. Then when we arrived here in 1948 there was another great issue before the people of Canada. Prices were soaring. The people were finding their income being reduced every day. Something had to be done to keep the people quiet. All the members knew of the feeling in their constituencies. Opposition members would speak about it. Whether the members of the government would speak about it or not, they knew from their constituents what the attitude was with regard to rising prices.

The prime minister of the day proposed a resolution to refer the question of prices to a committee. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) was made chairman of that committee; and he knows at least one thing, namely, how effective a committee of this kind is to prevent a question from being debated in the house and how to give the impression that the government is doing something when it isn't. The committee sat for a whole session and brought in a report which was approved by parliament but about which the government did not do anything. Then when parliament adjourned a royal commission was appointed; but during the whole time that the parliamentary committee and the royal commission were sitting, prices were going up every day. The only people who made anything out of the committee and the royal commission were the solicitors who were employed at $125 a day to guide the proceedings. The whole cost of that investigation was almost $300,000 and the country did not get that much—and I snap my fingers—for it.

I have another objection to the resolution. The terms of reference are too narrow. Is not the day long past when this parliament should appoint a committee to investigate the matter of old age pensions separated from all other forms of social services? If a committee is to be set up at all, surely what we should do is to investigate the possibility of enacting a full program of social security for our people. But that is not what we have before us.

Old age is only one of the contingencies or one of the hazards that people meet in this modern world. There are a number of others for which provision must be made by society or, if you like the word better, by the state. What is the state? In a democratic country, is not the state an instrument that the people have fashioned for themselves to do collectively what they are not able to do for themselves as individuals? Surely whatever the people decide to do is proper for them to do.

I have a third objection to the setting up of the committee, and it is this. If the figures that have been reeled off so glibly by the minister, by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and by lesser members on the government side who spoke on this subject have any significance, value or content at all, we already have all the information necessary to take action.

I have still another objection to the committee. If the minister, in bringing information to the proposed committee, will not be more objective than he was with regard to the information he gave this house when he introduced this resolution, in my opinion the information we shall get will not be of much value. I am going to draw to the attention of the house a statement that was made by him when he was referring to social security legislation in New Zealand, and particularly to the old age pension part of their social security program. This will be found at page 638 of Hansard:

> The present old age pension under the plan in New Zealand amounts to £32 10s. a year, or something less than $100 a year. This amount increases annually by £2 10s., or $7.75, and will eventually, in 1988, reach a maximum of £130 a year, or roughly $400 in Canadian funds. Our maximum pension now in this country is $480 a year.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a misstatement of fact. The minister, in the words quoted, was not referring to the old age pension in New Zealand at all. When the minister was explaining the New Zealand old age pension I tried to get him to tell the house what the eligible age is for the old age pension in New Zealand. He mentions it here as sixty-five; but the part of the social security program he was referring to was universal superannuation and not the old age pension. I can understand the hon. gentleman's reluctance to give the facts. The old age pension in New Zealand is paid at the age of sixty years to men and women; and if the wife of a pensioner is not of an age to receive the pension in her own right, she may be and generally is paid a sum similar to the amount that her husband receives. The universal superannuation which is payable at the age of sixty-five began in 1940 at an initial amount of £10. It is increased every year by £2 10s. and now stands at the amount of £32 10s. It will reach its maximum amount of £130 in 1988. But it will not replace the old age pension when it reaches the maximum, as the minister suggested. There is no suggestion of that in any New Zealand legislation or in any statements that have come to my attention. I do not know what the present government in New Zealand may do with it, but until it is changed we might as well have the facts.

Let me now draw to the attention of the house the fact that in New Zealand there is in existence a complete social security program. It provides for the universal superannuation at the age of sixty-five, as I have mentioned, without a means test. It provides for an old age pension at the age of sixty with a means test, but a means test that is much more generous than the one we have in Canada. I have not time to explain the difference, but if the committee is set up—and I suppose it will be set up regardless of anything that I may say in opposition to it—it is also likely that I shall be a member of that committee; and I shall see to it that the information reaches the committee.

Let me recite the benefits under the New Zealand social security program: Universal superannuation, old age pensions, mothers' allowances, orphans' allowances, family allowances, invalids' benefits, miners' benefits—that is for miners who contract miners' diseases—unemployment and sickness benefits, and over and above all these benefits, all of which are paid in the same amount as the old age pension, that is £130 a year—there is an emergency benefit which the board, at its discretion, pays if the individual concerned is not covered by any of the benefits that I have already mentioned. Besides that there are medical, hospital, maternity, pharmaceutical and other special benefits for diagnosis, X-rays and that sort of thing. The services are financed by contributions on an income tax basis of 7½ per cent. If that does not provide sufficient to take care of all benefit payments, the balance is paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

I have the appropriation figures for 1948. In round figures the 7½ per cent tax brought in £29 million; miscellaneous receipts, £122,000; and general taxation, £15 million. The administrative cost—and this is what I want to draw to the attention of hon. members—was less than 2 per cent of the benefits paid. If we are to have a contributory old age pension scheme, I would suggest that hon. members look at the administrative cost of our unemployment insurance scheme before they embark on another such plan. I have the figures before me and they are illuminating. In the fiscal year 1947-48, the benefits paid out for unemployment insurance were almost $35 million. The administrative costs were $17,600,000. More than 50 cents was paid out in costs for every dollar paid out in benefits. In 1948-49 the benefits paid out were about $50 million, and the administrative costs were almost $19 million. They were not quite so high, but still very large proportionately to the benefits paid.

The minister would have done himself and this house a service if he had given the New Zealand program its proper evaluation. He would not tell the house what the eligible old age pension age was because he did not want hon. members to know that in New Zealand the eligible age was sixty and in Canada seventy. May I remark that so far as I know there is no other country in the world that has an eligible age of seventy.

A few days ago we heard from the Minister of Fisheries when he spoke in another debate. He told us of his attendance at the meeting of the International Labour Organization at Geneva. He told us what a useful organization it was, and it is. It is the only organization that was connected with the old league of nations that has survived. I wish to read to the house what the international labour office had to say about the New Zealand social security program.

> It is clear that in New Zealand we are faced with a social security system of a unique and novel character. It assures a minimum of subsistence to every citizen and his dependents in any emergency which may deprive them of their livelihood, and also a complete range of health services. All expenditure is defrayed from the social security fund, which is mainly fed by contributions. While the contributions are proportional to income, cash benefits vary with need.

Surely that is the kind of program that we want for Canada. I could repeat what other authorities have had to say about New Zealand social security, but time does not permit. However, before I leave it there is one other remark I want to make in regard to it. The minister mentioned that £32 10s was approximately $100 in our money. On September 17, 1949, the New Zealand pound was worth $4 in Canadian money. With the devaluation in Britain the New Zealand pound fell to $3.08, but the pound would still buy as much in New Zealand as it did on September 17, 1949.

I know the minister will have later information than I have, and if he wanted to tell the house the whole story he could have told it that in terms of purchasing power, food that could be bought for £100 in New Zealand would cost £172 in Canada. That was the relation in 1945. The spread is still greater in 1950, because the cost of living went up 11 per cent in New Zealand from 1945 to 1949 and 35 per cent in Canada in the same time.

Before I proceed any further, there is a point I want to make, and I want to be sure I will have the time to do it. I want to make it clear beyond the possibility of any misunderstanding where this party stands in regard to social security. We favour an over-all social security program, financed by contributions based on ability to pay. That is our position. Let me say further that we are opposed to the insurance principle, where each one takes out according to what he puts in. I am opposed to such a system because it is impossible to put it into effect. I am also opposed to it because, out of the incomes the great mass of the Canadian people are receiving individually today they cannot put by, either voluntarily or compulsorily, sufficient funds to take care of the various contingencies, including old age, which they will have to meet sooner or later. They have never been able to do that, and they are not able to do it now.

Let me draw to the attention of the house just a sentence from the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada to the minister of finance of that time on the operations of the bank for the year 1944. In this paragraph the governor was referring to the sale of victory bonds, five or six issues of which had been sold at that time. This is what he said:

> For many individuals victory bonds and war savings certificates purchased during the war period represent the first significant backlog of savings they have ever been able to build up—

That is not the end of the sentence, but the other part is not as important, and each could be a sentence in itself. The other part is:

> —and it is apparent that some high-pressure promoters of dubious or worthless securities are attempting to exploit these savings.

We will leave that part out for the moment, and consider the first part of the sentence, where Mr. Towers makes it clear that never before the war were the great masses of our people in this great and rich country able to save anything worth while. But they saved during the war partly because there was full employment, and, partly, because they could not buy certain consumers' goods and, besides, because of compulsory saving.

If the national income were distributed equitably, a contributory system might work; but, as I said before, its administration would be extremely expensive. But the income of the country is not distributed equitably; and any attempt by compulsion to make people who are already living below the standard of health and decency to provide through compulsory contributions for their old age will only intensify their poverty now, and means will have to be taken to make up for the income taken away.

Let me draw to the attention of the house the present position, so far as savings are concerned. The great mass of the people in Canada who had war bonds and war savings certificates have them no longer. The only other savings they have will be cash in savings accounts in the chartered banks. Every year a statement of loans and deposits, both savings and current, as at September 30, is tabled, and every hon. member has access to it. That return gives the number of accounts in the various categories. Those categories are five in number, and constitute (1) deposits of $1,000 or less; (2) deposits over $1,000 and up to $5,000; (3) deposits over $5,000 and up to $25,000; (4) deposits over $25,000 and up to $100,000; and (5) those in excess of $100,000.

I have the figures for 1948 and, with the exception of the fact that the total amount in the savings banks was greater in 1949 than in 1948, there is very little difference. We find that there were 6,605,952 persons who had savings accounts in our chartered banks, to a total amount of $4,048,535,319.

It looks pretty good, when we see that 6,605,952 Canadians have savings accounts. But the savings accounts of $1,000 or less numbered 5,718,549 and aggregate deposits totalling $953,101,895, or about $166 each.

Mr. Knowles: Most of them must have about a dollar and a half.

Mr. MacInnis: While 5,718,549 persons had $953,101,895 in savings accounts in the banks, we find that 887,403 persons had $3,095,433,424. If those figures mean anything at all, they must mean that the great bulk of the Canadian people have never been able to save enough to take care of a rainy day—and never will, under our present system of distributing wealth.

I said a moment ago that what we should be discussing now is not whether we have old age pensions on a contributory basis, on an insurance basis, with a means test, or without a means test. We should be considering an over-all social security program.

A large number of our unemployed are not covered by any benefit fund. Sick people are not covered; invalids are not covered; medical services are not provided; nor are hospital services, except in one or two provinces.

We have considerable social security services in the country, and it would be folly to deny it. But what we should seek to do is to integrate all of these under one scheme. The reduction in administrative costs alone would justify our doing so. I appreciate that this would require constitutional changes; but we have made constitutional changes before, and we should be prepared to make them again.

In the few minutes left, let me touch upon the question as to how we are going to provide these social services. During his speech the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr.

Martin) was good enough to refer to a statement I made in the house last year. If I may do so without seeming to place too much value on my own opinion, I should like to quote four lines from the excerpt read by the minister. They are these:

When we provide social services of any kind we are providing material things such as food, clothing, shelter and services of one kind or another, which must be produced by those who are working.

I think most hon. members will agree with that—that what we are providing for our old people is food, clothing, shelter and certain services. All of these things that our elder citizens will consume in 1950 will be produced in 1950. What they consumed in 1949 was produced in 1949. You cannot save eggs when you are twenty-one to eat when you are seventy. Nor can anybody save anything else. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) put that point quite clearly when he spoke in this debate. I am prepared to go along that far with the hon. member for Peace River and his party, but I cannot stay with them when they maintain that we can transfer the ownership of commodities from one person to another by merely issuing money.

Let us understand our economic system. The various parties to production have claims of ownership on the total value of the production. If all of the production cannot be consumed it is not because there is not enough money put into circulation in the production process; it is because, as I pointed out in the case of the savings account, some people receive more than they are able to consume while a great many receive much less than they are able to consume. The providing of social services is a means of equalizing the distribution of the national income. That cannot be done without taking from those who have more than they need and giving to those who have less than they need. I do not think anyone should be ashamed of taking part in organizing a measure that will perform that service.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) spoke on this matter. I do not see him here tonight but I wish to thank him for the kindly reference he made to myself. When he tried to tell the house how these measures could be financed I felt that either one of us, to use the language of the street, was "nuts". Because of the kind things he said about me I am not prepared to say which one.

I see you are getting uneasy, Mr. Speaker, and I shall relieve your uneasiness right away. May I say to the minister that this resolution is unworthy of this house.

An hon. Member: In your opinion.

Mr. MacInnis: And a very good opinion it is. What we should be concerning ourselves with at this time is how this great and wealthy country can provide for its people so that no Canadian will be in want. Either we should do that or we should stop boasting about the greatness and the wealth of our country. Unless we do what I propose we are not making proper use of our wealth.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am rising for the first time during the debate on this motion to deal with certain points that have been raised and particularly because of some comments which have clearly indicated a misunderstanding of the position taken by this party in regard to old age pensions. One of the hon. members who spoke this evening saw fit to take me to task for what he thought was my position in regard to old age pensions. I do not blame him for his error because I would be surprised if he had not absorbed some of the propaganda which has been employed to create an impression which has no relation to the realities of what the situation has been and is today.

The thing that is most disturbing to me with regard to this motion is not the subject matter of the motion or the fact that information will be obtained in this way; it is the indication that has been given in advance of the motion being dealt with that the government has receded from the position it took so definitely in 1945 and in fact on many occasions since then.

Mr. Martin: If that is the situation.

Mr. Drew: I am demonstrating clearly that it is the situation and that there is good cause for alarm and concern in the indications we have had as to the position of the government in connection with these immensely important requirements for the care of the aged people in this country.

During the course of this debate the suggestion has been made that with a contributory old age pension plan many of our old people would be deprived of the pensions they require because they would not have had an opportunity to pay into the fund an amount that would provide for proper pensions. That is absolutely contrary to every suggestion that has been made in regard to contributory plans.

After all, it is the same thing as unemployment insurance. The amounts are fixed, the contributions are fixed, but in order to qualify for the amounts provided by the statute it has never been stated that it is necessary for a person to have contributed a capital amount necessary to provide the payments. I want to make it quite clear that at no time, either in any suggestion of mine or in the suggestions put forward by this government at a time when they were putting suggestions forward without any qualifications in regard to old age pensions without a means test, was there a suggestion that these pensions would not be payable as a matter of right in accordance with the stated amounts. The question whether a pensioner might have had time to make full contributions in order to provide for his pension was never the subject of consideration.

In any remarks that I make about a contributory system of old age pensions I wish to remove any possible doubt that the pension should be payable at the stated amount to every pensioner, no matter how long he has been contributing. I say that now so that it cannot be subsequently suggested, as has been suggested, that the contributory plan we are proposing is one which would leave a number of our older people without provision for their old age, and in other cases would provide only a limited amount of pension. I have said that there was some reason to be concerned about the change of the position of the government as to this matter. There is not any question about it that in the submissions to the dominion-provincial conference in 1945 the dominion government proposed a plan of old age pensions without a means test. That was not a conditional proposal. It was not a proposal that was put forward with any suggestion that the dominion government still had to call in a lot of expert advice to find out whether or not they could do it. It was a definite and positive proposal, and I can say, as others here can say, that the provincial governments there represented discussed it with the understanding that the proposal was definite and would be carried out.

The explanation for not carrying out that provision was not that the government did not have the information. That is only a new discovery. The explanation that was given was that they had not been able to get agreement with the provinces, and consequently these beneficent provisions have not been carried out.

Mr. Mutch: That is a statement of fact.

Mr. Drew: It is the kind of fact that some of the members of the government and their supporters have been repeating without any relation to reality or truth.

Mr. Mutch: You should recognize better than anyone else if that is the truth.

Mr. Drew: Of course I recognize that the hon. member who has just spoken now does not agree with the plan that was put forward in 1945 anyway. I am talking about the statement put forward by the government and which enunciated principles that have been roundly condemned by the member who has just spoken.

Mr. Mutch: That might be an honest opinion. I was not talking through my hat.

Mr. Drew: I do not question that it was an honest opinion. It is a very comforting thing to find an honest opinion expressed once in a while on that side of the house. The point I am making is that the speech the hon. member made in Toronto to a group of businessmen, and which he repeated in the house with certain explanations and amplifications, was a speech that took issue in a very clear and understandable way with the principles enunciated at that time by the dominion government. Those principles were stated without reservation, and perhaps the hon. member may have also noticed that, when I said that the explanation given by the government was that they had not been able to carry this out because there was not agreement with the provinces, immediately the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters) nodded their approval of that statement.

Mr. Martin: What statement was that?

Mr. Drew: The statement that the reason the government had not been able to carry out the program that they put forward in 1945 was that they had not obtained agreement of the provinces.

Mr. Martin: Is that not right?

Mr. Drew: No, it is not right, and it has never been true at any time. It has never had an atom of truth behind it, never at any time.

Mr. Martin: Mere assertion is not argument.

Mr. Drew: No one knows that better than you do because you have been asserting this for years without any relation to what the facts are. In a few minutes I will demonstrate by actual quotations from different members of the government just how far the government has moved. This was the statement of Mr. Ilsley on June 27, 1946, in regard to this very matter, to be found at page 2914 of Hansard of that date:

> Nor can it introduce the over-all plan—

He was speaking of the government.

> —of social security we had contemplated without at the same time reaching a satisfactory financial agreement with the provinces. Several of the major objectives of the comprehensive dominion proposals which were announced last August must therefore be held in abeyance for the time being. They remain, nevertheless, an essential part of the program of this government.

That was old age pensions without a means test. There is no question about that. They did not have to inquire at that time whether they should or should not have old age pensions without a means test. On June 24, 1947, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare had this to say at page 4596 of Hansard of that date:

> My hon. friend knows that in the proposals which the government made to the provinces, proposals which were our policy in 1945 and every day since have continued to be our policy, this government is prepared to bring in legislation once it can get agreement with the provinces on fiscal matters.

He did not say that they had to find out from a committee which kind of old age pensions they were going to have. They were prepared to bring in legislation without asking anyone else to tell them what they could do. That has been the position that has been stated by members of the government. Then the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) on March 9 last year said at page 1302 of Hansard:

> The proposal for contributory over-all social insurance was one of those put forward by the federal government at the last dominion-provincial conference and about which it was not possible to reach an agreement. There has been no indication of any change since that time in the attitude of the representatives of the provinces who were opposed to the proposal put forward by the federal government.

The provinces did not oppose that proposal at any time, and I challenge any member of the house to find one place in the record of the dominion-provincial conference where the proposal for old age pensions without a means test was opposed or challenged by the representatives of any single provincial government in Canada.

Mr. Martin: I will meet that challenge right now. The proposals with regard to old age pensions put forward by the government in 1945 were a part of a pattern including proposals for health insurance, public investment and a whole series of matters. As my hon. friend knows, the proposals could not be taken singly. They had to be viewed as part of a pattern, and that pattern was opposed. My hon. friend, who was premier of the senior province at that time, was one of those who headed a government that was not prepared to enter into a fiscal agreement with the dominion government, which was a condition precedent to the whole proposal put forward by the government.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the applause that followed that wholly inaccurate statement is merely an indication of how little members know of what took place.

Mr. Ferrie: The people of Canada all know that you sabotaged that conference, and you know it.

Mr. Drew: You see, Mr. Speaker, we are merely receiving further demonstrations of how otherwise sensible men are misled by propaganda regarding things they do not know anything about at all. I intend to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was not one of the representatives at that conference, that the government of the province of Ontario never at any time opposed this proposal, never once. I remind the hon. member that the conference considering these proposals adjourned on May 3, 1946, with the statement by the then minister of finance (Mr. Ilsley) that they needed time to consider the various proposals then before them; and on that day the conference adjourned sine die with the clear understanding, stated by the minister, that the conference would meet again when those plans had been examined.

The financial measures to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is referring were not financial measures settled in a conference. Those financial measures were terms stated in June, 1946, without consultation with the provinces. They were terms the provinces were told they could take or leave; and they had no relationship to these general proposals put forward in the summer of 1945. Those proposals did not enter into the financial arrangements in any way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Well, of course, that simply demonstrates the ignorance of hon. members in regard to what did take place. The financial proposals put forward in June dealt with the financial arrangements the dominion government alone was prepared to offer in return for the provinces vacating certain tax fields. That was all. There are no other terms in that proposal; not one reference in those agreements to health, social security, construction or anything else.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We got tired waiting for them.

Mr. Drew: I could not help hearing that interjection. The government did not get tired waiting for them. The conference adjourned on May 3, 1946, with the statement by the Minister of Finance that they required time to examine those proposals. Then, without waiting to reconvene the conference, they said, "Take these, or else."

Mr. McCann: They never promised to reconvene the conference. I was there at that very time.

Mr. Drew: The minister who has just spoken was not a delegate at that conference.

Mr. McCann: No; you were the outstanding delegate.

Mr. Drew: I remember very well who the delegates were, and the minister was not one of them.

Mr. McCann: No, I was not a delegate; but I was a listener.

Mr. Drew: If the hon. gentleman was a listener and wants to find out what actually did take place let him read the verbatim record. He will find that just before the motion was put the present premier of Nova Scotia, who was also premier at that time, said, "I take it this does not mean that the conference will not meet again?" Immediately following those words the question was put, and the conference adjourned on that understanding.

Mr. McCann: But there was no answer to that question.

Mr. Drew: No answer to that question? Any honest man—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCann: They are all dishonest but you.

Mr. Drew: Any honest man certainly would have raised some question himself if that had not been the understanding in the mind of everyone present. It was the understanding upon which the conference adjourned, and it was the understanding which led to a continuing demand for that conference to be reconvened.

Mr. McCann: Why did seven provinces enter into agreements if that was the understanding?

Mr. Drew: I realize, of course, that at this hour on Friday evening the minister may find it a little difficult to contain himself; but I wish he would do so for a short time, because he might learn something of what took place at the conference at which apparently he was present but did not listen.

Mr. McCann: My recollection is as good as yours.

Mr. Drew: The proposals put forward by the dominion government were not the only proposals put forward at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: The loud laugh bespeaks the vacant mind. They were not the only proposals. Every province had proposals to put forward. The province of Ontario had printed proposals, which can be examined today in addition to the verbatim record. This is what the province of Ontario said in clear and unmistakable terms about old age pensions, as it appears at page 35 of its official submission:

> It is recommended that old age pensions should be paid to all citizens over sixty-five without a means test.

That is definite enough. That was the position we took then and the position we have continued to take. That indicates that, quite contrary to there being any opposition, the province of Ontario had clearly and definitely stated what it wanted in regard to old age pensions.

That position should not be so difficult for some members of the government to accept. When one of the members of the C.C.F. party offered the suggestion that at that time the dominion government had proposed that old age pensions should be paid without a means test, sharp objection was taken. In making this statement I say very definitely that our proposals have always been for a contributory plan, but I recognize the fact that the C.C.F. party has taken a different position. I do want to say very definitely that the hon. member of the C.C.F. party was quite right when he said this had been put forward by the dominion, and that old age pensions would be payable not as a contributory plan in the ordinary way but by the dominion government co-operating with the provinces. However, they were going to charge a special tax to everyone for the purpose of these measures; and that was definitely one of the things to which the government of Ontario raised some objection.

One of the proposals of the dominion government was that there should be a poll tax, estimated at $5, for everyone in the country sixteen years of age or over, whatever their income might be. We did say definitely that we did not believe the poll tax was a proper system of taxation, and I certainly have no regrets at having expressed opposition to a plan of that kind. I notice that suggestion has been dropped ever since that time, and it is not now proposed that any plan of this kind may be financed by a poll tax. That poll tax, I may add, was disguised. It was not called by that objectionable name, but was called a registration fee. But it was to be paid by everyone sixteen years old or over; and the Ontario government was by no means the only government to object to that proposal.

When the suggestion was made that the C.C.F. member who raised this point was quite wrong, I could not help recalling a speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), who is reported as having said at Armstrong on May 20, 1949:

> Our objective is health services for all at the expense of the state.

That is clear enough. That was a positive statement, which I presume was supposed to be taken seriously at that time. I grant that most of the other ministers did not go quite that far. On June 16, 1949, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) was reported as saying:

The government will do away with the means test for old age pensions.

I emphasize those words. He did not say, "We will appoint a committee to find out if we are going to do away with it, or if it can be done away with." He said the government would do away with the means test. Then on May 28, at Nelson, British Columbia, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew), as reported by the Canadian Press, had this to say; and there has been no subsequent amendment of this statement:

Provision of hospital services for the people of Canada and compulsory contributory superannuation are measures expected for the next session of parliament if the Liberal government is returned.

No committee, no inquiry, no doubts! The government knew what it was going to do. May I read it again:

Provision of hospital services for the people of Canada and compulsory contributory superannuation are measures expected for the next session of parliament if the Liberal government is returned.

Mr. Knowles: This is the second session.

Mr. Drew: Oh, yes; that, of course, referred to the last session.

Mr. Martin: You are getting closer over there.

Mr. Drew: Oh, it might be a long time—

Mr. Martin: No; I meant the two groups were getting closer.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, old age pensions are not getting closer?

Mr. Drew: Of course, it is not so many months ago, as time goes, that we were told that socialists were only Liberals in a hurry. I hope the hon. member has not forgotten that.

Mr. Martin: That the Saskatchewan people were Liberals in a hurry.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no.

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes.

An hon. Member: Get it straight.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no. I have the text of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order.

Mr. Drew: Then naturally we should be interested in what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) had to say. On June 8, speaking at Oshawa, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of June 9, the Minister of National Health and Welfare had this to say:

The Liberal government plans to call a dominion-provincial conference to discuss the establishment of a contributory scheme for old age pensions to start at sixty-five once the election is over and the political heat is done.

Mr. Martin: That is exactly what this government is doing.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no.

Mr. Pearkes: It is taking them a long time to carry it out.

Mr. Drew: That is exactly what the government is not doing. That is exactly what the government is failing to do. Instead of calling a dominion-provincial conference to put into effect a contributory old age pension scheme at the age of sixty-five without a means test, as stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on June 8, they are appointing a committee to find out whether they should even suggest a plan of this kind. That is exactly what they are now proposing. They want to find out from a committee whether or not what they said then should really be put into effect. Oh, no; it is not the same thing by any manner of means.

This is not anything new, Mr. Speaker, because in 1945, which was the year in which the conference to which I have referred met, in an election which had taken place earlier one of the statements published by the national Liberal committee, in an advertisement put forward under the heading "Just Plain Sense!" is this one, which is No. 9:

9. Contributory old age pensions—higher pensions, lower age limits, no "means" test.

An hon. Member: Read the one on the back.

Mr. McLure: They deny that one.

Mr. Drew: No; the one on the back did not deal with old age pensions.

An hon. Member: No, it did not.

Mr. Drew: It did not. You are quite right. That was another Liberal advertisement. These were all positive and definite statements. It is not the intention of this party to vote against the setting up of a committee if that is the only way the government will proceed. Certainly if the government is not prepared to carry out these undertakings and the undertakings put forward by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to call a conference to put this into effect, then obviously—

Mr. Martin: Is there not going to be a conference in the fall?

Mr. Drew: Oh, there is to be a conference in the fall because the financial agreements come to an end at the conclusion of this coming financial year. That is the only reason there is going to be a conference in the fall. Let there be no suggestion that this is a virtuous proposal by the dominion government. They waited until the last minute. These agreements are running out. There is to be a conference; and the only reason they are calling a conference, which has been demanded ever since the adjournment of the conference in 1946, is that they are obliged to have it in order that there can be new agreements. There is no other reason for it; and no one need expect anything else from them.

Mr. McIlraith: Whom will you convince?

Mr. Drew: Not you. I recognize that fact. After all, I am speaking for those who are prepared actually to judge the facts and to devote some reason and understanding to the problems that are before us.

Mr. McIlraith: And who did not see you in the earlier conference.

Mr. Drew: As to this proposal, the only thing that could be done would be for the government still to call a conference together immediately to deal with this subject. If they did that, and if the dominion government had the information which it claimed to have in 1945, this conference could dispose of this problem before this present session finishes, and the necessary legislation could be passed by the parliament of Canada so that the result of the conference could be interpreted in effective legislation before we rise some time a few months from now.

I see that it is eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): On Monday, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) will move the motion that appears in his name in Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, March 23, and which reads as follows:

> That on Monday, the 27th of March instant, and on Wednesday, the 29th of March instant, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all business except the introduction of bills, questions and notices of motions for the production of papers.

Without this motion we would spend the day on pipe line bills. On Monday we shall call Bills Nos. 16, 17, 56 and 54. Those are the four bills with regard to which motions were passed yesterday and today; two of the bills are sponsored by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), one by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), and one by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew). I understand that if these bills are not passed by both houses of parliament and sanctioned before March 31 the statutes will lapse.

If we were fortunate enough to complete this work we would take up the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), that is, the motion on which the debate was just adjourned and the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to refer his estimates to the committee on external affairs. If we were a little more fortunate we would take up resolutions No. 4 and No. 9 on today's order paper.

Mr. Fleming: Will the bills be called in the order named by the minister?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Bill No. 16, to amend the Agricultural Products Act, and Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, will be the first ones called. I really think the next one will be the bill to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947; and the fourth will be the fisheries bill.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 27, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON MONDAY, MARCH 27, AND WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, March 23, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) gave notice that today he would move the following motion:

That on Monday, the 27th of March instant, and on Wednesday, the 29th of March instant, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all business except the introduction of bills, questions and notices of motions for the production of papers.

On Friday night I announced that this motion would be moved today. In the absence of the Prime Minister, on his behalf I now move the motion.

Motion agreed to.

FARM LABOUR

ORDER IN COUNCIL AUTHORIZING AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Paul E. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table P.C. 1317, of March 14, 1950, authorizing the Minister of Labour to enter into an agreement on behalf of the government of Canada with each of the provinces for the movement and placement of persons in employment in agriculture and related industries, upon terms and conditions substantially in accordance with the form of agreement marked as schedule I attached but with such variations therein as the Minister of Labour may deem necessary to meet the requirements of the farm labour program of any province.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 55, respecting the Limitholders' Mutual Insurance Company.—Mr. Lesage.

Bill No. 57, for the relief of Zina Sarah Fletcher Tannenbaum.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 58, for the relief of Fred Marcus.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 59, for the relief of Belva Rubin Bercusson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 60, for the relief of Reginald E. Martin.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 61, for the relief of Dora Moore Holland Towers.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 62, for the relief of Betty Benditsky Kursner Kobernick.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Elizabeth Goodman Goldberg.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 64, for the relief of Helene Eugenie Hortense Holmes Said.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 65, for the relief of Amanda Doris Drachler Segalowitz, otherwise known as Amanda Doris Drachler Selton.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 66, for the relief of Florence Druckman Oliver.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 67, for the relief of Albert Gedeon Martin.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 68, for the relief of Brandel Avrutick Cutler.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 69, for the relief of Freda Geraldine Rodgers.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 70, for the relief of Hattie May Dawson Wood.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 71, for the relief of Marie Yvonne Bouchard O'Rourke.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 72, for the relief of Ethel Margaret Murphy Watson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 73, for the relief of Clifford Willis Collins.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 74, for the relief of Alfred Beatty Harris.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 75, for the relief of Claire Jeanne D'Arc Sagala De Montignac.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 76, for the relief of Nora Maria De Montignac Des Jardins.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 77, for the relief of Rita Annie Wylie Morrow.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 78, for the relief of Olga Veleky Stepanovitch.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 79, for the relief of Beatrice Norma Sabbath Finestone.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 80, for the relief of Adele Kuznetz Paquette.—Mr. Winkler.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FOOD AND DRUGS—SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

Mr. Campney:

Is any scientific research carried out in the laboraties of the food and drug divisions of the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Certain research work is necessary in devising new methods for detecting adulteration of foods and drugs and determining potency or safety of drugs and for the setting of standards for both foods and drugs. Fundamental research is also carried out on the physiological action of drugs and on nutritional problems. This research involves pharmacology, pharmacy, physiology, organic and biochemistry, microbiology, physics, analytical chemistry and mathematics.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEDICINES AND DRUGS TO SANATORIA

Mr. Gingues:

1. Is the federal government contributing to the purchase of the streptomycin distributed free of charge in the various sanatoria?

2. If so, what amount is being expended for that purpose in the province of Quebec?

3. What is the amount allotted to the St. Francis sanatorium of Sherbrooke?

4. Is the federal government contributing to the purchase of other medicine distributed free of charge in our sanatoria?

5. If so, how much (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) at Sherbrooke?

Mr. Martin:

1. Yes. The streptomycin which is purchased with the funds contributed by the federal government under the tuberculosis control grant is distributed free of charge in the various sanatoria, but beyond this the provinces act on their own initiative so far as free distribution of the drug is concerned.

2.

Fiscal year	Amount of approved projects	Amount expended
1948-49	$ 14,423.08	$14,423.08
1949-50	100,000.00	56,957.10*
1950-51	90,000.00†	....

*April 1, 1949 to Dec. 31, 1949.
†Continuing project pending approval.

3. 1948-49, $260; 1949-50, $5,445.

4. Yes. The drug PAS (paramino-salicylic acid) is purchased with the funds contributed by the federal government under the tuberculosis control grant for distribution free of charge in sanatoria in certain provinces, including the province of Quebec.

5. (a) 1948-49—nil (drug not generally available). 1949-50—$50,000 approved (no accounts submitted as yet for payment). 1950-51—$60,000 approved (continuing project). (b) 1949-50—no information available at the moment.

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE

Mr. Black (Cumberland):

1. Will the province of Nova Scotia make a contribution to the construction of the proposed Canso bridge?

2. Has an agreement been entered into with the province of Nova Scotia?

3. What is the estimated cost of (a) the bridge; (b) the approaches for highways and for railways; (c) all other expenses?

[Mr. Martin.]

4. What contribution will be made by (a) government of Nova Scotia; (b) government of Canada; (c) Canadian National Railways?

5. What is the estimated annual maintenance cost, and by whom payable?

6. When is it expected that (a) tenders will be called; (b) construction work will start; (c) construction will be completed and highway and railway traffic be carried across the bridge?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.

2. No formal agreement.

3. (a) $10,636,198; (b) $3,015,930; (c) $634,647.

4. (a) One-third of the cost or $5 million, whichever is the lesser; (b) balance of cost; (c) nil.

5. The estimate of the board of engineers is $68,000. Payable by the Canadian National Railways.

6. (a) July, 1950; (b) main piers in spring of 1951; (c) late 1953 or early 1954.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PENSIONS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many Canadian National Railways employees retired in each of the years 1948 and 1949 with retirement pensions of (a) $25 per month; (b) between $25 and $30 per month?

2. How many officials with salaries over $5,000 per year retired or resigned in each of the said years?

3. Did any of the said officials receive a bonus, retirement payment or any allowance whatsoever additional to or along with the regular retirement pension? If so, to whom, and what was the amount paid in each case?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. (a) 1948, 311; 1949, 355.
(b) 1948, 53; 1949, 87.

2. 1948, 28; 1949, 35.

3. The management of the Canadian National Railways has always taken the position that it would not be in the interest of the company or its personnel to make public information pertaining to the salary arrangements or remuneration paid to officers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many (a) married men; (b) married women; (c) single men; (d) single women, were paid unemployment insurance benefits in each of the months July, 1949, to February, 1950, both inclusive?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): The total number of persons who were paid unemployment insurance benefits in each of the months July, 1949, to February, 1950, is estimated as follows:

Number of persons, July, 1949, 65,957; August, 1949, 62,705; September, 1949, 65,443; October, 1949, 71,838; November, 1949, 104,320; December, 1949, 125,225; January, 1950, 218,963; February, 1950, 232,359.

The break-down requested is not available. However, of those who established benefit years in the period and who would be drawing benefit in the period, the percentage in each category is as follows:

Males with dependents, 38·2; males without dependents, 35·4; females with dependents, 1·4; females without dependents, 25.

BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. Fair:

1. How many pounds of butter were produced in Canada in the calendar year 1949?
2. During the same period, how many pounds of margarine were manufactured?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. 333,773,000.

2. 73,958,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—TAXATION DIVISION—ADVERTISING

Mr. Fraser:

1. What was the total cost of advertising done by the taxation branch of the Department of National Revenue in 1949 in (a) street cars; (b) buses; (c) daily newspapers; (d) weekly newspapers; (e) other mediums of advertising than radio?
2. What is the estimated total cost of the same form of advertising for 1950?

Mr. McCann:

1 and 2.

	1949	1950
†(a) and (b) street cars and buses	$ 15,746.63	$ 20,000
†(c) and (d) daily and weekly newspapers	11,985.05	3,000
(e) Other mediums than radio	Nil	Nil
Total	$ 27,731.68	$ 23,000

†No separate statistics are available.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES AND TOBACCO—CONSUMERS' EXPENDITURES

Mr. Diefenbaker:

What was the total amount of consumers' expenditures in Canada for (a) alcoholic beverages of all kinds; (b) tobacco; (c) cigars; (d) cigarettes, in each of the years 1948 and 1949?

Mr. McIlraith: Information not available. These statistics are not compiled in such a manner as to provide the information requested.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—OFFICERS WITH SALARIES OVER $10,000

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What is the salary of president of the Canadian National Railways?
2. What are the salaries of the vice-presidents and who are they?
3. How many other officials of the railway receive over $10,000 per year?
4. Who are they, what are their positions, and how much does each receive?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. $45,000 per annum.

2, 3 and 4. The management of the Canadian National Railways has always taken the position that it would not be in the interest of the company or its personnel to make public information pertaining to the salary arrangements or remuneration paid to officers.

IMPORTS OF BUILDING STONE

Mr. Sinnott:

1. How much building stone was imported from the United States in 1949?
2. What was the value of this stone?

Mr. McIlraith:

1 and 2.

Imports from the United States, year 1949

Item	Cwt.	Value
Granite, rough	†	$ 53,325
Granite, sawn	†	41,136
Marble, rough	†	24,880
Marble, sawn	†	30,259
Marble, ornamental, for churches	†	778
Building stone, other than granite or marble	301,702	213,475

†Quantity not recorded in trade statistics.

SUNNYBROOK MILITARY HOSPITAL—MILK AND COAL

Mr. Catherwood:

1. What is the contract price per quart for milk to be delivered to the Sunnybrook military hospital, Toronto, for the year 1950?
2. What is the contract price per ton for coal to be delivered to Sunnybrook military hospital for the year 1950?
3. Were tenders called for these contracts?
4. If so, what are the names of those who submitted tenders, and what was the amount of each tender?

Mr. Gregg:

1. Contract at present in force covering period November 1, 1949, to April 30, 1950: 55 cents per gallon.

2. Contract at present in force for the 1949-50 heating season: $8.43 per ton.

3. Yes.

4. Milk—Highland Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 55 cents per gallon; Acme Farmers Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Canada Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Uplands Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Rice's Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Rose Lawn Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Silverwoods Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 58 cents per gallon; Donlands Dairy, Toronto, Ont., 60 cents per gallon; Borden Co., Toronto, Ont., 60 cents per gallon.

Coal—F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $8.43 per ton; Dominion Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $8.87 per ton; Rochester & Pittsburg

Questions

Coal, Toronto, Ont., $8.96 per ton; Empire Hanna Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.00 per ton; Valley Camp Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.05 per ton; Canada Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.06 per ton; Conger-Lehigh Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.16 per ton; Dominion Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.19 per ton; F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.27 per ton; The Milnes Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.30 per ton; Great Lakes Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.33 per ton; Harbour Coal Co., Toronto, Ont., $9.70 per ton.

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN YARMOUTH, N.S., AND STATE OF MAINE

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth):

1. Have negotiations been carried on between the federal government and the government of the province of Nova Scotia concerning the provision of a ferry service between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and a port in Maine, United States of America?
2. If so, has financial agreement between the two parties been reached?
3. Has a conference between the two parties been held since March 9, 1950?
4. Will the construction be a joint undertaking?
5. Will the ferry be operated by the Canadian National Railways?
6. Are detailed scale plans now being prepared?
7. If so, what firm of naval architects has been engaged?
8. What decisions have been reached as to (a) size of ferry; (b) number, if any, of staterooms; (c) service speed of ship; (d) type of propulsion machinery; (e) number of decks; (f) automobile and truck capacity; (g) passenger capacity; (h) facilities for recreation; (i) facilities for catering?
9. When is it expected that the ferry will be put into operation?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.
2. No formal agreement.
3. Yes. On March 13, at Halifax.
4. Yes.
5. Yes.
6. Yes.
7. Messrs. Milne, Gilmore & German, Montreal.
8. (a) Length (between perpendiculars) 350'-0, approximately; maximum moulded breadth, 66'-0, approximately; (b) still under consideration; (c) still under consideration; (d) still under consideration; (e) 5; (f) 200; (g) 1,000; (h) still under consideration; (i) dining-room, cafeteria, lunch counter.
9. Summer of 1951.

SALES TAX—TEA AND COFFEE

Mr. Benidickson:

How much money was collected in 1948 and 1949 from imposition of sales tax on (a) coffee; (b) tea?

Mr. McCann: Information not available. No separate statistics are maintained of sales tax collected on individual commodities.

[Mr. Gregg.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PAYMENTS AND ADMINISTRATION COSTS

Mr. Fair:

1. How many persons received unemployment insurance each month since March 1, 1949?
2. What amount was paid each month?
3. What is the monthly cost of administration?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle):

1, 2 and 3.

	Number of Persons
March, 1949	240,088
April, 1949	191,677
May, 1949	150,747
June, 1949	111,811
July, 1949	65,957
August, 1949	62,705
September, 1949	65,443
October, 1949	71,838
November, 1949	104,320
December, 1949	125,225
January, 1950	218,963
February, 1950	232,359

	Amount
March, 1949	$10,399,831.63
April, 1949	7,605,833.49
May, 1949	5,511,135.01
June, 1949	4,113,253.49
July, 1949	3,371,182.48
August, 1949	3,716,999.74
September, 1949	3,671,772.62
October, 1949	3,845,541.33
November, 1949	5,048,372.50
December, 1949	7,181,001.68
January, 1950	11,781,142.67
February, 1950	13,605,340.11

	Admin. Costs
March, 1949	$2,471,112.43
April, 1949	1,429,407.67
May, 1949	1,522,019.11
June, 1949	1,642,382.37
July, 1949	1,569,649.60
August, 1949	1,545,802.60
September, 1949	1,660,634.72
October, 1949	1,546,303.91
November, 1949	1,649,243.73
December, 1949	1,771,172.81
January, 1950	1,663,546.12
February, 1950	1,887,465.94

Note: The exact figures are not available as to the number of persons receiving unemployment insurance each month. The figures given are an estimate based on the number of persons paid during one week of each month.

POPULATION

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth):

1. What is the present estimated total population of Canada?

2. What is the present estimated population of Canada between the ages of sixteen and seventy (a) male; (b) female?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Estimated population of Canada, June 1, 1949, (including Newfoundland, Yukon and Northwest Territories): Total, 13,549,000; male, 6,896,800; female, 6,652,200.

2. Estimated population of Canada between the ages of sixteen and seventy (June 1, 1949): Total, 8,779,800; male, (a) 4,471,700; female, (b) 4,308,100.

ST. MICHEL DE BELLECHASSE, QUE., WHARF

Mr. Courtemanche:

1. Was a wharf constructed at St. Michel de Bellechasse in 1949?

2. If so, who performed such work?

3. What was the cost of same?

4. By whom was the cement supplied, and at what cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. A contract was let for repairs to the wharf at St. Michel de Bellechasse, P.Q., in October 1948. The work is not yet completed.

2. Contract awarded to J. Lionel Bizier, Quebec, P.Q.

3. Amount of contract, $78,722.75.

4. Cement was supplied under item No. 9 of unit price contract at the tendered price of 90 cents per sack.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

INCOME TAX—REFUNDS

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. What is the amount of compulsory savings returned to the Canadian people during the months of January to June, inclusive, 1949?

2. What is the amount of compulsory savings returned to the Canadian people in each of the six months January to June inclusive, in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

3. What is the amount of compulsory savings returned to the Canadian people in each of the six months July to December inclusive, in each year, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

4. What is the amount refunded on overpaid income tax in each of the six months January to June inclusive, 1949?

5. What is the amount of overpaid taxes returned to the Canadian people in each of the six months January to June inclusive, in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

6. What is the amount of overpaid income taxes returned to the Canadian people in each of the six months July to December inclusive, in each year, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

7. What is the amount of payments made directly by the Department of National Revenue to Canadian citizens during the six months January to June inclusive, 1949, for reasons other than the refunding of compulsory savings and overpaid income taxes?

Mr. McCann: Return tabled.

PRINTING BUREAU BUILDING

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What was the cost of the site of the proposed printing bureau in Hull, Quebec?

2. From whom was the land purchased, and how much did each receive?

3. What is the total cost to date for surveys, architect's fees?

4. What is the estimated further expenditure required to complete this project?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Return tabled.

COMPOSERS, AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS—LICENCES, ROYALTIES, ETC.

Mr. Black (Cumberland):

1. How many licences did the government or the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada authorize the Composers, Authors and Publishers Association of Canada, Limited, Toronto, to issue in Canada in 1949?

2. What was the total amount collected for the issuance of these licences?

3. What was the total amount collected by the Composers, Authors and Publishers Association of Canada, Limited, in 1949, by way of fees, charges, royalties and other imposts?

4. What was the total amount collected in 1949 by the government in connection with such licences, fees, charges, royalties and other imposts?

5. Have increased charges been authorized for 1950 over previous years?

Mr. Bradley: Return tabled.

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD., PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. Higgins:

1. Have plans been made by the government to erect a federal public building or buildings in St. John's, Newfoundland?

2. If so (a) for how many buildings; (b) in what locations?

VANCOUVER POSTAL STATIONS AND LETTER CARRIER DEPOTS—LEASES

Mr. Green:

1. Which postal stations and letter carrier depots in Vancouver are held under lease?

2. What are the street addresses of such postal stations and letter carrier depots?

3. Who are the lessors named in the respective leases?

4. What persons signed such leases as or on behalf of the respective lessors?

5. What is the annual rental payable under each such lease?

6. To whom are such rentals now payable?

7. What are the respective dates of such leases, and for what periods of time do they run?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

GANDER, NFLD., AIRPORT

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and other papers relating to the agreement recently made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States, or any aviation companies of the United States, for the use of Gander airport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all reports in the possession of the unemployment insurance commission, dated since September 1, 1949, having to do with unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my hon. friend will let this stand, and see me personally about it. I should like to meet his request as best I can, but I am not in a position to do so at the moment.

Mr. Knowles: Stand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

FISHERIES

SIGNING OF HALIBUT TREATY BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Apparently a new halibut treaty between the United States and Canada was signed last week. Would it be possible to have a copy of the treaty tabled?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is true that a halibut treaty was signed last Friday afternoon by my colleague the Minister of Fisheries and the United States ambassador. The treaty will be tabled as soon as it is mimeographed and translated, within a few days.

MOTOR VEHICLES

IDENTIFICATION FORMS REQUIRED AT BORDER POINTS ON LEAVING CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue with regard to an order made by his department, to become effective next Thursday, under which the making out of new automobile identification forms is required to be made daily at the port of exit, or on every occasion on which a Canadian motorist crosses the border to visit the United States. This regulation, if carried out at such places as Windsor, Ontario; North Portal, Saskatchewan; White Rock, British Columbia, and other places—

Mr. Mitchell: Don't forget Niagara Falls.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did mention that there were other places, and I should have mentioned Niagara Falls and Prescott. This order will discourage traffic and result in chaos. It would seem to be a needless requirement. Will the minister reconsider the matter, and, instead of enforcing this order requiring the form to be signed each day, follow the old system of having one form operative for a year?

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): It is not a matter of giving reconsideration to an order that has gone out. There has been a very slight change in our system in order to ensure better control of Canadian automobile traffic to the United States. We are continuing the system heretofore in effect for border residents who have occasion to go to the United States regularly. The change does not in any way affect our American tourists coming to Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps I might ask a question arising out of the minister's answer. Is there not a new regulation which requires that a form be signed each time a person enters the United States? That is the information the officials at border points have. Will the minister explain what the new regulation is? He says that it does not affect certain points, but does it apply to all other ports of entry?

Mr. McCann: The new order will not affect people at border points who are in the habit of crossing regularly. They will have permits to indicate that they cross regularly, and those permits will be honoured for a period of six months. Persons who do not cross regularly will be required to fill in the form now being issued. There will be no inconvenience to those who live in Canada and go to the United States regularly and are known to the officers at the different ports of exit.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROSPECTIVE DELIVERY OF FOUR-ENGINE TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) asked a question, as reported on page 1086 of Hansard as follows:

In view of today's press reports, quoting a statement of the Minister of National Defence in regard to the new four-engine prototype transport aircraft which is to be delivered shortly to the Royal Canadian Air Force, will the minister inform the House of Commons as to the date on which the Canadian Commercial Corporation was advised that the Royal Canadian Air Force required this aircraft?

I am informed by the Canadian Commercial Corporation that it was first advised of this requirement on December 23, 1948. The contract demand for this aircraft was actually presented to the corporation on January 4, 1949.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ACT

EXTENSION OF OPERATION FOR A PERIOD OF ONE YEAR

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house to follow the same practice in connection with this bill and Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, that was followed on Thursday last in connection with the two resolutions. This bill contains only one section, to provide for the extension of the operation of the act for one year. As I explained the other day, this is merely to make it possible for us to carry out our undertakings under the agreements with Great Britain this year having to do with cheese and pork products.

On Thursday last I suggested that it would be quite all right to have full discussion of this measure when we were considering the resolution which preceded Bill No. 17. As the proposer of this measure I suggest that it might be helpful if we followed the same practice in this instance. If the suggestion meets with the approval of the members of the different groups, perhaps this bill could go through to third reading, and all discussion can take place on the motion for second reading of the other bill, or when it is in committee.

Mr. Charlton: In view of the fact that this bill is only for one year, we have no particular opposition to its going through at the present time.

Mr. Wright: I think we shall have to object to the procedure suggested by the minister. We recognize that this act is necessary for the carrying out of the present contracts, and we will support it for that reason; nevertheless we do not believe the act is sufficient to meet the present requirements of agriculture. We intend to move an amendment; therefore we cannot consent to second reading at this time. As was stated by a number of members of this group who spoke the other day, we feel that to extend the provisions for just another year does not meet the requirements of the agricultural industry in this country.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) if he is making a speech, but if he has spoken to a point of order, and if there is not to be unanimous consent, we shall have to proceed with this motion in the usual way.

Mr. Gardiner: While I cannot object to the procedure that has been proposed, I would point out that this bill only involves the continuation of powers which were given under the War Measures Act. I doubt if there is any way in which the house could continue this measure beyond a limited time, whether that time is a year or more than a year. There might be some discussion about that, but the position the government has taken since 1947 is that this kind of measure can be extended only for one year at a time. I think all the opposition have in general agreed with that principle. The only question is whether we extend it for another year or whether we do not extend it at all.

Mr. Wright: I cannot agree with what the minister has just said. The war has been over for some five years, and the emergency period following the war must now have come to an end—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture has moved that the bill be read a second time. If the minister has spoken on that motion, when he speaks again he will close the debate. Is the hon. member for Melfort now speaking to the motion, and has the Minister of Agriculture completed his remarks on the motion?

Mr. Gardiner: I was just attempting to raise a point of order as to what procedure we should follow. I would prefer to have that decided before going into the other matter, because the debate on that could last for two or three days.

Mr. Wright: The members of this group are not prepared to give consent to the second reading of this bill at this time without discussion.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture has moved that the bill be now read a second time.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is given second reading there are certain matters which I think should be discussed to a greater extent than was the case when the resolution which foreshadowed this bill was before the house. The house will remember that we gave consent to the resolution passing and to having the discussion on the resolution which preceded Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

We contend that the principle involved in this bill, that of setting up a board in Canada to take care of the export of surplus agricultural products, should be placed on a permanent basis rather than be extended from year to year as in the past, depending on the state of emergency which exists as a result of the war. We have followed that procedure for the last four years, and as a result of the temporary methods which have been followed we have lost most of our markets for surplus agricultural products. So far as we are concerned we see no possible way of winning back those markets under this type of legislation. Only when we have permanent legislation shall we be able to make agreements and supply our customers, not only in England but in European countries, with products which are uniform, and which we can guarantee to supply regularly from year to year. The European market is demanding uniformity of quality in the products supplied to them, and continuity of supply. I do not think that is possible unless there is permanent legislation to provide for the supplying of those markets.

Surpluses of agricultural products are beginning to appear all over the North American continent. The international federation of agricultural producers, when they met in Paris in 1948, realized this problem. They stated in their report:

> It is essential that effective machinery should be provided to deal with any surpluses that may develop, to ensure that they are directed to areas of the greatest need, and that such surpluses should not be allowed to undermine the world price structure.

When this organization met at Guelph, Ontario, a year ago, they came to the same conclusion, and they set up a committee which would make recommendations to the food and agricultural organization at their meeting in Washington last year. That committee recommended at Washington that an organization should be set up under FAO for the distribution of surplus agricultural products to needy areas throughout the world. The recommendation of IFAP was not accepted by the food and agricultural organization, which set up a commodity committee to endeavour to ascertain the best way to distribute surplus products. If we are to work in conjunction with international organizations, we must have a national export act under which surpluses can be collected in Canada and turned over, when the time comes, to the international organization for distribution in the needy areas of the world.

As a matter of fact the Minister of Agriculture, addressing the food and agricultural organization in Washington, indicated it was his opinion that the national government should set up some organization for performing this particular function.

He said:

> Any transactions developed under the short term trading functions will be subject to concurrence by the governments concerned, and the major details of such transactions will also be subject to agreement by governments.
>
> This being the case it hardly seems necessary to have an international agency actually buying and selling in commodity markets. It may even be questioned whether such activity in commodity markets by an international agency is desirable. It seems to us, therefore, that the question of the creation of a large capital fund for such a purpose is not necessarily an issue.

Later he stated:

> Lord Boyd Orr, in presenting his proposal for a world food board, had in mind the fact that the world had surpluses during certain periods and extreme shortages in other periods. It was his purpose to stabilize returns to producers and costs to consumers by setting aside surplus quantities in good years for periods of shortages. As has been pointed out in other conferences, however, national governments can, and do, perform this function . . .

In other words, it is one of the functions under the present measure which we are extending for one year, but we are only renewing it for one year and we do not believe that is sufficient. The minister went on to say:

> Canada, for example, has provided for the holding of stocks of wheat under government control. Moreover, it is probably consistent with other developments to envision the long-term holding of stocks as an element in an over-all commodity agreement.

I agree with the minister. If we are to carry out what he stated as government policy before the food and agricultural organization, we must have something more permanent than the act which we are now extending for one year. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce):

> That Bill No. 16 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introducing of a permanent agricultural products export act which would provide for the setting up of an export board, to fill present contracts, negotiate future contracts, and develop new markets abroad for surplus agricultural products.

Mr. Speaker: Possibly I might hear representations now on the question whether the amendment is in order. Does the amendment oppose or differ from the principle of the present bill?

Mr. Knowles: If I may say a word or two on the point that you have raised, Mr. Speaker, I think it is unnecessary to read in full citation 657 of Beauchesne's third edition. I imagine you have it in front of you now. It sets out what it is competent for a member to do on second reading, namely, to move a resolution—and I am now quoting the significant words of the citation—"declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill." I take it from the question you have asked, Mr. Speaker, that you have in mind the kind of ruling that has been given on a number of occasions, one of which is referred to in citation 659, where the Speaker ruled the amendment out of order because it did not challenge the principle of the bill. I think it is clear from what the minister said in the interchange which took place earlier that the principle of the bill is to do again what the government has done on a number of occasions, namely, extend the operation of the act for one year only. It is the extending of this kind of legislation for one year at a time which is the principle that the amendment challenges. The amendment contends that, instead of continuing the practice of having temporary legislation and extending it one year at a time, there should be permanent agricultural products export legislation. There are other questions that sometimes arise in connection with amendments of this kind, but if Your Honour will permit me the floor again to answer any other question that may be raised, I can save your time by saying nothing further now.

Mr. Speaker: I might ask one question now. Could the bill not be amended in committee to bring about the object which the hon. member moving the amendment has in mind?

Mr. Knowles: I do not see how that can be done, because when we get into committee there is only one section in the bill, and it changes only one section of the original act, namely, section 11, which fixes the expiry date. The only point before us when we get into committee is the carrying out of the principle which is before us on second reading, namely, the extension of the act as it stands, for one year and one year only. The amendment seeks a change in the principle before us at this stage; it seeks to put this legislation on a permanent basis and to broaden its scope, which certainly could not be done by amending the only clause that will be before us in committee.

Mr. Gardiner: The amendment suggested is not new. This bill has been before the house each year since 1947, as I said the other day; in other words this is the fourth time we have had to consider it. Each time, whether or not an amendment of this kind was actually moved, the point has been discussed in exactly the same manner as it is being discussed now. In other words it has been urged each year that we should have a permanent measure of this kind. On each occasion I pointed out that in 1938 the federation of agriculture had come forward and asked for a permanent measure—

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Gardiner: There is no "order" about it. Wait until I have finished.

Mr. Knowles: I rise to a point of order. The Minister of Agriculture is taking advantage of this opportunity to discuss the substance of the amendment, but the question before us now is a point of order.

Mr. Gardiner: I am speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no; you are speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Gardiner: The point of order is that the bill you are talking about is already on the statute book.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no.

Mr. Gardiner: If you will wait long enough, I will indicate that it is. The federation of agriculture came to the government in 1938 asking for a measure of the kind indicated in this amendment. In 1939 they returned with the same request, and at that time we said that until the end of the war the federal government intended to operate boards of that kind under the War Measures Act, and that we could do so only by virtue of the reasons which were given. In 1946, after the war was over, the federation came back and asked for this legislation in almost the very terms contained in this amendment, and at that time members of all opposition groups rose and proposed that we should pass an act of that kind instead of extending the legislation we had for one year at a time.

The matter was argued back and forth here in the house, and we decided not to pass a measure of that kind then. In 1947 we came to the same decision, and also in 1948. In 1949, however, we did pass it. Last week I met with representatives of all the provinces and of the federation of agriculture to discuss whether or not the act passed in 1949 was adequate to carry out the purpose for which it was intended, and the explanation given at that meeting was that with respect to all other products except these two, cheese and pork products, the powers we had under the War Measures Act no longer applied, and the only way we could bring about what they desired was through the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, which we had passed in 1949 and which covers exactly what is dealt with in this resolution. Under that act, boards may be set up to deal with the marketing of farm products, either interprovincially or internationally. With that statute already in effect I think it is out of order to move here by way of amendment to this bill that we should pass another bill amounting to the same thing.

Mr. Wright: Like the minister, I want to speak to the point of order. He is suggesting that the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, passed by this parliament last year, has the same effect as the amendment we are now moving. He knows differently. He knows that under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act provision is made for the setting up of producer boards over which the government has no control. The boards set up under that act cannot go into the export market today. It is this government, through legislation passed in this house, that decides on tariffs, on the availability of exchange, on the value of the dollar in the export market, and so on. Therefore the producers are beaten before they start with their producer boards. Only when this government sets up a board for the export of surplus products can we hope to compete in the markets of the world, and either get back some of the markets we have lost, or obtain new markets. That is the purpose of this resolution—to set up a government export board, not a producer export board. There is a distinct difference.

Mr. Gardiner: On the point of order, the act itself, a one-section act which was read to the house the other day by one of the members of the group taking this position, provides for the appointment of a board by the governor in council, and by no one else.

Mr. Wright: It says the governor in council may make regulations under the act.

Mr. Gardiner: Read the part before that, under which the governor in council decides the board to which it will give authority.

Mr. Speaker: The question has now arisen whether the object sought by the amendment is already achieved in an act now in force. I have not that act before me. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether the object of the amendment has already been attained; perhaps, therefore, I had better let the amendment stand until I can look at the act to which reference has been made.

Mr. Fulton: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, even if we accept the minister's contention, would the mere fact that there is another statute which does what is sought by this amendment necessarily make the amendment out of order? In the first place there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not the other statute is sufficient; but I would raise the question whether, even if it should be, that would necessarily mean that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: At least it would be unnecessary. If there is an act now on the statute book which does precisely what the amendment proposes to do, I cannot see that any good purpose would be served by permitting the amendment to stand.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am sure many of my constituents would wish me to say a few words on this subject, particularly in view of the remarks that have been made by members of the various opposition parties. No one will deny the importance of the British market so far as agricultural products are concerned, and this is particularly true with respect to wheat. It becomes important indeed when we recall that to a certain extent almost the entire economy of the west is directly or indirectly controlled by the price of wheat.

In the discussion it has become apparent that our C.C.F. friends place squarely upon the shoulders of the government the blame for our loss of export trade, particularly the reduction of our agricultural exports to the United Kingdom. They would like us to believe that if there have been reductions in the sale of certain agricultural products, that lessening in export trade is due entirely to the policies or attitude of this administration. Of course we know that many factors were entirely beyond the control of this government. In order to remedy this situation, our C.C.F. friends in this house have suggested ways and means of recapturing these markets; or, as the member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) put it, if certain things had been done these markets would not have been lost during the past few years. In order that I may be accurate in my reference to his remarks, I should like to quote from page 1059 of Hansard of the present session. After referring to the lack of dollars in Great Britain with which to buy our agricultural products, he said:

> . . . under which we would have accepted British goods in exchange for our food, we would have been able to make agreements similar to those which Britain has made with many other countries.

That is a very easy solution, Mr. Speaker. In other words the hon. member says that if the British people have not dollars with which to buy our products, all we have to do is trade produce for produce. Naturally if there is a shortage of dollars in Great Britain it is due to the fact the people were not able to exchange products on a basis that would enable them to secure dollars. The problem, therefore, is still in front of us. This suggestion is not a solution of that problem.

The leader of the C.C.F. party went one step further with the same argument, and suggested that if the British people have not the necessary dollars to purchase our agricultural products, then we should accept sterling; trade could be resumed on that basis. Again this is no solution to the problem. It is a similar attempt to the one just mentioned, because, after all, to accept sterling is merely to sell on credit. Putting it on an individual basis, I wonder if the farmers of western Canada are willing to accept I.O.U.'s for their products? It is obvious that trade could not be conducted on that basis, because the farmers could not afford it. When you bring it to the state level, the question arises whether the state is in a position to extend further free loans to Great Britain for the purchase of agricultural products.

I have noticed that the leader of the C.C.F. party has never at any time, nor have any of his supporters when dealing with this question, referred to an interest-free loan to the United Kingdom. They have phrased it as accepting sterling in payment for our goods. So, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the difficulty is the one experienced by many countries throughout the world, the exchange of goods for dollars. This was particularly true before devaluation of the British pound, because then the difficulty was that the British were more or less priced out of the United States market. Under those conditions, to suggest the trading of goods for goods leaves us with the same difficulty, because, for example, no one would trade two horses for one horse.

The official opposition, our Progressive Conservative friends, have taken a dangerously careless attitude, in my estimation. I believe they are completely blind to reality in their attitude towards increasing our exports to Great Britain. Our Progressive Conservative friends tell us that we ought to increase our markets in the United Kingdom, irrespective of the cost. Again and again they have referred to the United States as an unreliable market, as something that is meaningless, the importance of which can be dismissed by a wave of the hand. My main reason for participating in this debate is to counteract the idea that the market to the south of us is really unimportant.

The member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), in one of his speeches, referred to the United States as a country that produces the same type of surpluses we produce. There have been numerous speeches to that effect. I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce entitled "Foreign Trade", under date of February 4, 1950. It contains a summary of Canadian exports for the year 1949 which is quite revealing. It says:

> Canadian exports to the United States last year had a value of $1,503·5 million, which represents an increase of 0·16 per cent over that for 1948.

We must compare that with our export trade with the United Kingdom. This publication goes on to say:

> Exports to the United Kingdom, Canada's second largest customer, were valued at $705 million, representing an increase of 2·63 per cent over the figure for 1948.

There you have a comparison of the two markets so far as Canada is concerned. It is interesting to note that the increase in our exports to the United Kingdom amounted to 2·6 per cent. An hon. member behind me asks whether that is losing markets. I recognize that markets for certain types of products have been lost, but the over-all picture for last year shows that our export trade with Great Britain increased 2·6 per cent. Our export trade with the United States also increased, but only by ·16 per cent.

I still say that the market to the south of us is certainly the most important market. At this stage we should make every effort to increase our trade with the United Kingdom, particularly for agricultural products, but at the same time we must be careful not to do anything to harm the United States market. Whether we like it or not, the logical market for Canada lies in the United States. Unlike the member for Dufferin-Simcoe, who said that we should look east and west and forget about north and south, I say that we should look east and west, but we should be careful to look south as well. In that direction lies the best customer we have had in the past few years. We should not discriminate against the United States market. We were forced to do it; but fortunately our very good friends to the south were broad-minded enough to realize our difficulties and to understand the situation. Instead of retaliating, they have helped us further to overcome our difficulties. That is real friendship and real international co-operation. We have every reason to be thankful for what the United States people have done for us.

At this stage I repeat that in our dealings and in our efforts to increase our market with Great Britain, we should at the same time be very careful to allow no discrimination to intervene against the United States.

In the publication to which I have referred there is another interesting quotation which reads:

> Despite the over-all decline in exports from 1948 levels, three of the nine main commodity groups showed higher export values in the past year. These were the agricultural products group, which rose by 20·1 per cent to reach a total of $773 million.

Actually, therefore, in 1949 there was an increase in the export values of the agricultural products group. To continue:

> In the first of these groups, the increase was due to a larger volume of wheat exports at higher average prices than in 1948. These reached $435·2 million, as opposed to $243 million in 1948.

There is the real picture; there are the real facts as they stare us in the face. The actual figure in 1949 was $435 million as against $243 million in 1948. Yet we had member after member on the opposition benches rising in his place and telling us that we are losing all our markets, and that we are heading for certain doom in the years to come.

As I said, taking the over-all picture, the United States market, generally speaking, is our best market. We have yet to explore all the possibilities in that market. We know for a fact that so far as cattle are concerned it is a market that is advantageous to Canada. At the present time, owing to various factors, many of our agricultural products are not allowed to go freely to the United States. I am not going to enter into that phase of it, because it is a complex one. But I do not think it is fair or true to say that the Canadian government is keeping those products under permit merely to protect the British market, or, as has been said, that the government is doing it to keep the price of agricultural products down. Of course this might have been true during the war, but it is certainly not true today. That is not the reason at all for many of these products being kept under permit. The only reason for their being kept under permit is that in these various lines there is a danger that if we were to send all our surpluses of those products into the United States they would probably go to a region in which there is already a surplus, and it would have a bad effect. There would be a demand in the United States to prohibit the entry of those products into that country; therefore permits are required, and the products are distributed in areas in which a surplus does not exist. We are allowed to carry on on that basis. It has proved beneficial in the past; but still the fact remains that we do not know exactly what the possibilities might be, because there has never been a free exchange of these particular products.

I know that so far the Canadian government have always been careful not to do anything that would harm the United States market, and I am sure they will not take the observations of our Conservative and C.C.F. friends too literally or too seriously, and will continue to use sound judgment, as they have in the past.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill to amend the Agricultural Products Act, because I do not quite agree with the minister's interpretation of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright).

We in this group support the principle of the bill. We are going to vote for the bill when the vote is taken, but we believe in the terms of the amendment, namely,

> That Bill No. 16 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introducing of a permanent agricultural products export act which would provide for the setting up of an export board, to fill present contracts, negotiate future contracts, and develop new markets abroad for surplus agricultural products.

[Mr. Jutras.]

My few references to this bill will be with respect to the fruit industry, to which this bill is a matter of serious concern. The growers have done everything they can in the way of production. There are few problems so far as production is concerned. There are few problems in connection with the preparation of the product for market. They have done all they can so far as organization is concerned. They have an active organization, all within the power of the growers. The prospects for continued prosperity in the fruit industry depend entirely upon a good proportion of the crop being exported overseas. I believe the minister was correct in this sense, namely, that the other acts could be used—the Agricultural Products Marketing Act is one—if we were living under normal conditions, or what are termed normal conditions, with regard to export markets. The producer boards could organize export in the regular trade channels; but we are asking for this amendment to the act because of agricultural surpluses created by abnormal world conditions.

We do not think that sectional organizations or producers' boards can market surplus agricultural products satisfactorily under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, when we are facing a condition under which governments have to deal with varying exchange rates, international organizations such as the food and agricultural organization, the possibility of supporting the proposals made for an international commodities clearing house, and so on. In the opinion of the members of this group, that is beyond the capacity of the ordinary fruit producers' board or the legislation found in the Agricultural Products Marketing Act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are putting this amendment forward in the hope that the house will give it consideration, because we believe that if the house does accept it we shall have introduced into the bill some teeth that will make it possible for the government, with the other legislation, to take effective action with regard to the marketing of agricultural surpluses which now exist and without any doubt are likely to exist in the days ahead.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), because I too am interested in the fruit industry. I am particularly interested in this amendment, because it is something that would place our industry on a sound and solid basis, with someone to go to, someone to deal with effectively, in the matter of the disposition of fruit surpluses.

We know that a great deal can be done. Recently we read that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) visited England and came back in the matter of a couple of weeks with $25 million in orders.

If we had someone on a permanent basis, with the same power, to go to Europe, to New Zealand and Australia, to travel the world seeing markets as the minister did on that occasion, then I could see a future for our Canadian surpluses. I have in mind the fact that New Zealand, facing a similar problem, where their great difficulty was one of distance, overcame it by setting up import-export boards to find markets and to get commodities to shipping points in the cheapest and best way. Then they proceeded to sell those commodities abroad, as government units. They were successful in finding markets at distances double those confronting us in Canada. They sold in Europe, and were able to establish sound foreign markets for their agricultural products, particularly butter. We in Canada could learn a great deal from their success.

I urge the minister and the house to consider seriously the amendment suggested by this group. Otherwise nearly half our crop is at the mercy of conditions which, if they continue, may make it necessary for us to dump or destroy those commodities, or give them away, as we have done this year.

While I am not condemning the bill—indeed, I support it—I urge upon the house consideration of the amendment in order to give the measure now before us a permanent and sound life, so that we may build up an industry which is handicapped by the length of time it takes to develop it—fifteen years; this no one can change. I wish to seek a permanent solution, and the only permanent solution is to make this act a permanent one.

Mr. J. I. Hetland (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I rise, not so much to speak regarding the policies of the government, but more because of the criticism we have heard.

My constituency is mostly agricultural. We raise hogs and cattle, but our chief occupation is that of raising grain. When we have markets and receive good prices, because of the fact that we have few crop failures we have a reasonable degree of prosperity. I believe however that because we are producers of food the government will see to it that we will receive fair floor prices, so that we may be able to carry on. In my view, unless the producer is prosperous, no one else will be. If the farmer is not able to buy the products of labour it is not long before labour is out on the street.

Because I am a farmer I am naturally interested in the action taken by the government with respect to floor prices. If the farmers are to be given confidence in the future, we must have price support. If that support is not given there will be a greater flow of farmers to the cities, with the consequence that the unemployment situation will become worse. Today farmers cannot go into the labour market and obtain help, because most labourers do not care to go to the farms to work long hours for seven days a week. I believe however that labour and all other organizations will get behind this program of price support so as to keep our economy operating on the present scale. Workers will not enjoy shorter hours and good pay if the production of our farmers falls off to any considerable extent.

Farmers can tighten their belts to some degree, but there is the possibility that they may become discouraged and quit. The older folks may stay on the farms and raise enough for their own use, but certainly the younger folk will not. They will not stay on those farms, if other fields look greener. If we can maintain employment at its present level we will have a good market at home for our farm products. The home market is our best market. Even if we have some surpluses, surely that is better than to have scarcities. I believe, too, that labour and others will not complain too much about our program of price support if only they can keep up the level of employment and hold their jobs.

How are we going to keep farmers on the land? The only way I see in which it can be done is to give those farmers something to look forward to. Hon. members will know that the farmer is engaged in an occupation in which there are many hazards such as weather, drought, hail, grasshoppers and the like. If one more hazard is put in his path it may be just one too many, with the result that the farmers will leave the land to try something else.

I believe that on the whole our farming population is well satisfied with the way the government has handled our products in the past. Most of the credit for this should go to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). The opposition, both in this session and the last one, have tried to discredit the efforts of the minister. The fact remains however that when he was sick last fall those farmers were worried, and were wondering who could do a better job than he has done.

On many occasions our wheat policy has been criticized. I know of nothing that has been more universally accepted by western farmers than has this policy, and we want it continued. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) has criticized the last payment on wheat of twenty cents per bushel. His criticism dealt particularly with the comparatively small amount of interest that had to be paid out because the wheat board had borrowed a few million dollars from the banks in order to make this payment. I notice however that some members of the opposition are not now so anxious to be associated with the hon. member for Melfort in his criticism. I am sure the prairie farmers thought this last payment was a godsend.

Some members in the larger group of the opposition say that they were not supporting the hon. member for Melfort—

Mr. Ross (Souris): The official opposition.

Mr. Hetland: —in his criticism of the last payment of twenty cents made by the wheat board. Someone has told me that the criticism of the hon. member for Melfort has received support from the leader of the opposition group in the Senate. I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; I should have said "the other place". However, had I used that expression I might have misled many of my constituents; because out there, when folks wish to tell one to go to some hot place, and if they have a desire to be more refined or dignified in expressing their wish, they use the expression, "the other place". I apologize for having used the wrong expression today, but it will be realized I was in a tight spot. I did not wish to mislead anyone, nor did I wish to detract from the dignity of the other place.

The fact that most members of the opposition are now trying to run away from this criticism indicates that they believe the government has done a good job in paying out this amount of money, instead of leaving it to accumulate in the banks at a time when the farmers in dried-out areas were in such need. I know opposition members have to look for something concerning which they can criticize the government, but I suggest they should not have criticized this action, particularly when about one hundred per cent of the farmers are in favour of it.

Let me say as a farmer that the comparatively small amount we paid for interest on loans to make this twenty-cent payment does not bother me. But when it comes to future wheat payments or future markets, then I might have some anxiety. It is not that I blame the government because this is one thing over which they have not very much control. Certainly the government cannot be blamed for what happens in other countries.

Then I do not think we should be too critical about what happens in other countries because those countries are trying to do what they think is best for their people. If we try to meet them with the idea or intention of helping them in their predicament, then I believe something can be accomplished. We should let them know that we are anxious to help them out of their difficulties.

Surely if we know how to produce we should be able to find some way to distribute our surpluses. If we have small surpluses in certain cases, surely that is better than to have scarcities. Even with these floor prices I do think the government should let the markets carry themselves as far as possible. If there should be small surpluses at the end of the year I believe the government can well take care of them. When the $200 million fund is used over a period of years for this purpose there would be little loss.

We have to trade with the world, but it has to be a two-way market, or a twenty-way market as the minister said. The Canadian people have to be taught the fundamentals of trade. We have to take some goods for our own good because some day this trade will have to be equalized or balanced.

A word about home prices. Why should small export surpluses set the prices for our home market? The home labour market is not set by overseas wages, so why should the farmer's prices at home be set by competitive world prices? What is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander.

How are we going to get contracts? It takes two parties to make an agreement and all agreements will have to be on terms advantageous to both parties. During the war the price of wheat to the consumer was held down, so is it not only fair that the consumer should pay a fair price for farm products? I am not pessimistic about the future as I believe we have learned a lot since the thirties.

On June 27 last this government received a definite vote of confidence from the people of Canada so I believe there will be little criticism when it passes legislation that is favourable to the producers. If the fifty per cent of our people who are producers are not prosperous, the other fifty per cent cannot be. I am sure the government realizes that fact and will act accordingly.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was objecting to the amendment moved by this group he said that we already had on the statute books an act which covered what is proposed to be covered by this amendment. The minister was referring to the Agricultural Products Marketing Act which was assented to on April 30, 1949. Section 2 of that act reads:

> The governor in council may by order grant authority to any board or agency authorized under the law of any province to exercise powers of regulation in relation to the marketing of any agricultural product locally within the province, to regulate the marketing of such agricultural product outside the province in interprovincial and export trade and for such purposes to exercise all or any powers like the powers exercisable by such board or agency in relation to the marketing of such agricultural product locally within the province.

I think it is clear that under that act the governor in council may give certain powers to provincial boards similar to those that can be granted within the province. But it does not envision, as does our amendment, the setting up of a federal export board to fulfil the present contracts, negotiate future contracts and develop new markets abroad for surplus agricultural products.

As the minister said, this act is just a temporary act. Apparently it was enacted on the assumption that our contracts will be on a temporary basis. Our amendment asks for the setting up of an export board which will negotiate future contracts on a permanent basis. Very little has been done under the legislation passed last year and certainly that legislation does not envision an export board carrying out the functions we are asking for in our amendment.

Mr. Knowles: There is no power in that act to appoint a board of any kind.

Mr. Speaker: I raised two objections to the amendment, the first being that an amendment should not enunciate a principle different from the principle set out in the bill. I have noticed during the debate that a number of hon. members have said that they approved the principle of the bill, and also would support the amendment. I have come to the conclusion that the principle of the bill is to extend the act for one year, whereas the principle of the amendment is that permanent legislation be enacted. Notwithstanding what hon. members have said I am of the opinion that the principle of the amendment is different from the principle set forth in the bill.

The other point I raised was whether the amendment could not be moved in committee. As this is a money bill, and as its extension would involve the expenditure of money, I have decided that some objection might be taken to such an amendment in committee.

The other point raised was whether there was an act in force at the present time which carried out the objects of the amendment. The act referred to was the Agricultural Products Marketing Act. I am inclined to agree with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that that act does include the objects of the amendment. However, a number of hon. members seem to take a different view. The last hon. member who spoke suggested that provincial boards could be set up under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, whereas under the proposed amendment a federal board would be set up. In view of the difference of opinion I think I had better allow the amendment to stand.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Wright) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Argue	Knowles
Beyerstein	Low
Blackmore	MacInnis
Bryce	Noseworthy
Coldwell	Quelch
Fair	Shaw
Gillis	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Hatfield	Thatcher
Herridge	Thomas
Johnston	Wright
Jones	Wylie—23.
Knight

NAYS

Messrs:

Adamson	Gauthier (Lapointe)
Anderson	Gauthier (Portneuf)
Applewhaite	George
Ashbourne	Gibson
Bater	Goode
Belzile	Gosselin
Bennett	Gour (Russell)
Bertrand	Gourd (Chapleau)
Black (Cumberland)	Green
Blair	Gregg
Blanchette	Harkness
Boisvert	Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Boivin	Harrison
Boucher	Healy
Bradette	Helme
Bradley	Hetland
Brooks	Higgins
Browne (St. John's West)	Hodgson
Bruneau	Homuth
Byrne	Hosking
Campney	Howe
Carter	Huffman
Casselman	Isnor
Catherwood	James
Cauchon	Jutras
Cavers	Kent
Charlton	Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Chevrier	Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)
Clark	LaCroix
Cleaver	Lafontaine
Corry	Laing
Cote (Matapedia-Matane)	Langlois (Gaspe)
Cote (Verdun-La Salle)	Lapointe
Croll	Leger
Darroch	Lennard
Decore	Little
Dewar	Macdonald (Edmonton East)
Dickey	Macdonnell (Greenwood)
Diefenbaker	MacDougall
Dion	MacKenzie
Douglas	MacLean (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Drew	MacNaught
Dumas	McCann
Eyre	McCulloch
Fauteux	McGregor
Ferrie	McIlraith
Follwell	McLean (Huron-Perth)
Fournier (Hull)	McLure
Fulford	McWilliam
Gardiner	Martin
Garson
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Sudbury)

Matthews	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Mayhew	Smith (Moose Mountain)
Mitchell	Stanfield
Mott	Stewart (Yorkton)
Murphy	Stick
Murray (Oxford)	Studer
Murray (Cariboo)	Tremblay
Mutch	Tustin
Pearkes	Viau
Pearson	Ward
Poulin	Warren
Pouliot	Weaver
Proudfoot	Weir
Prudham	Welbourn
Roberge	White (Middlesex East)
Robinson	Whiteside
Rooney	Whitman
Ross (Souris)	Winkler
Sinclair	Wood—143.
Sinnott
Smith (Calgary West)

Mr. Harris (Danforth): I was paired with the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Breithaupt). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Cardiff: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Expiration.

Mr. Wright: Will the minister say whether the government propose to renew any of the contracts now in existence? I understand that these contracts expire in August, and I should like to know if it is the intention of the government to try to re-negotiate them.

Mr. Gardiner: The contract with Great Britain for pork products calls for delivery of a certain quantity week by week throughout the year. In other words it is not a contract that is tied down to August; it covers the twelve months, and there will be no question about its renewal before the end of the calendar year. Whether or not we will be taking delivery of a sufficient amount of pork products to fill the contract is another question. Present indications are that this may be the case. The cheese contract is for the whole year as well, so the only question involved is the renewal of the contracts for another year. As in other years, of course, this government is subject to the decisions that may be made by the other party to the contract.

Mr. Wright: The minister still has not stated whether it is the intention of this government to at least try to re-negotiate these contracts. I do not know whether the British government will be prepared to do so, but I would like to know if it is the intention of our government to try to have these contracts renewed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Gardiner: The Canadian government is the agency that pressed for these contracts in the beginning and has pressed for their continuance right down to the present time. We have not been responsible at any time for the withdrawal or cancellation of any contract. I would impress upon the committee that in all probability, considering that the government is pretty much the same as it has been for some time, we will go right on doing what we have done in the past.

Mr. Bryce: The minister said the sixty million pounds for this year was to be delivered week by week. Does that mean that if we fail to meet the weekly quota we lose that much, or can we make it up by sending an extra supply the following week?

Mr. Gardiner: The only way it could be affected would be by delivering more than the specified amount within a certain period, but we meet that situation by keeping it in cold storage in Canada and delivering it week by week until we come to the end of the year. We are not allowed to deliver more than the contract calls for week by week.

Mr. Bryce: Then that will be up to the meat board?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, and if the quantity supplied is sufficient to meet that weekly quota. I assume that if we were to miss a week, or if we did not have quite enough one week, we might lose that amount, though I am not too sure about it.

Mr. Bryce: Then for my own information I want to ask the minister another question. Does this contract price run out on July 31, or only the subsidy that is being paid? I understand the contract is good until December 31, but that the 32½ cents now being paid to the packers is only good until July 31. Would the minister straighten me out on that?

Mr. Gardiner: The contract does not determine that at all, nor does anything that has been said determine it. The circumstances as they proceed may determine it one way or another, but at the moment, as I said a little while ago, it looks as though in all probability the contract will continue right on through, without getting anybody into any trouble.

Mr. Lennard: Will the subsidy continue?

Mr. Bryce: If the minister would come out and say the government is right behind the farmer, and is going to see to it that he receives 32½ cents until the end of the year, the farmers would know whether they were coming or going. The way it is now, they do not know.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Just to follow that matter up, suppose the contract is not filled at the end of June, will the government continue paying the subsidy? As I understand it, the minister says that will expire at the end of June; but supposing the contract is not filled, and there is a great deal in what the member for Selkirk has said, that there is confusion among the western farmers. The western hog producers are fearful of what will happen to their markets on the first of July, 1950. The minister should give us more details as to what the policy will be following the first of July if the contract has not been filled.

Mr. Gardiner: It has been announced on a number of occasions, Mr. Chairman, but I do not mind announcing it again. When the 60 million pounds have been purchased and delivered to Britain, the undertaking in connection with the contract that the British will pay 29 cents a pound and the government will pay 3½ cents per pound is at an end. It is at an end when we have obtained the amount of Wiltshire sides which are necessary to fill the contract.

Now, anyone who goes out and says that is going to be the 30th of June ought to know what the facts are before he says so. I do not think it is going to be the 30th of June, and I do not want anyone saying I think that. There is a possibility it could be, but that depends on how many hogs the farmers deliver, and at what price. The fact is that the Canadian people are now paying from one cent to two cents per pound more for pork in Canada than the farmers could receive under the British contract. That condition could easily continue, and then the contract would go through to the end of the year and there would not be any difficulty.

Mr. Tustin: Does this bill cover only one product? No one has mentioned yet whether the government intends to requisition cheese, so I should like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to requisition cheese this year?

Mr. Gardiner: All I can say with regard to that is that the producers met me on Friday and asked that cheese be requisitioned. I have not taken the matter up with the government as yet, but we have been asked to requisition cheese.

Mr. Cardiff: Following up what the minister has said about hogs, I understand that as soon as we have supplied that 60 million pounds, the subsidy will be cut off, whether it is July, August or September, whatever time it is.

Mr. Gardiner: No, not if the Canadian people are as anxious to buy pork as they are at present. They are paying no attention to the floor price of 29 cents, and are paying about two cents additional. As long as that condition of supply and demand continues, there is not going to be any cut in the price the farmer obtains. As a matter of fact up until now, with the exception of probably one or two weeks, the farmer has had no benefit from this at all. The Canadian people are buying pork at higher prices than provided for in this contract.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, we know about as much now as we did when we started. If this contract is not filled by June 30, then what happens to the price of 32½ cents? Do I understand that the government subsidy is to be dropped if the contract is filled by June 30?

Mr. Gardiner: We shall go on buying pork until we get the 60 million pounds. If the contract is not filled on the first of July, purchases will be continued beyond that.

Mr. Charlton: But you will not be paying 32½ cents for it?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, otherwise we will not be able to fill the contract. There will be only one reason why we have not got it filled by the first of July, and that will be because other people will be paying much higher prices. If the other people do not buy at the higher prices, we will have the 60 million pounds. Up until now they have been paying the higher price, and while that condition continues we are not likely to fill the contract. The hon. member is right, however, in suggesting that the contract is not getting any more money for the farmer. Money is being obtained for the farmer from the fact there is a good market in Canada.

Mr. Charlton: Are we to understand that the 32½ cent price will continue after the first of July if the English contract is not filled?

Mr. Argue: If the English contract is filled, then the whole floor goes out from under hogs. The floor is tied up to the contract, and when the contract is filled, there is no floor.

Mr. Gardiner: I should not like to say that, because we shall probably do something else at that time.

Mr. Bryce: Tell us about it.

Mr. Argue: That is the reason why the farmers of this country are disappointed in the government's agricultural policy. They used to have a policy of announcing every year the price for the following year. Now, instead of making the policy more permanent, the minister says there is a price up until the end of June, up until the British contract is filled. After that, there is no floor under hogs.

Mr. Gardiner: There is no difference whatever, Mr. Chairman, between the position right now and the position in 1949. In 1949, the position was that there was a floor under hogs, owing to the fact that we sold Wiltshire sides at 36 cents. This made a certain price possible in Canada. In 1949 hogs sold at 7 cents above that price and, for that reason, we were not getting bacon to fill the British contract. We never did fill the contract. At the moment there are suggestions that we shall not be able to fill this one; I do not know, and I am not guessing. We have been accustomed to following the thing through to its finish. If we find there is some reason for doing something different from what we are doing, then we usually do it.

Mr. Argue: Under the policy last year, the government had a large contract which was not filled, and therefore the floor price remained throughout the year. This year there is a small contract, and as soon as it is filled—it will be filled if we ship in 1950 as much bacon to Britain as we did in 1949—there is no floor price.

Mr. Gardiner: There is no use having statements go on the record that are not correct. Right up until the end of 1949, within a month of the end of the year, the members on the other side of the house—I should say over in that corner of the house rather than on the other side—were making the same statements the member for Assiniboia has just made. It was true that we had not filled the contract up until the end of September or October last year. We got enough to fill this contract in the last six weeks.

An hon. Member: The packers did.

Mr. Gardiner: They had nothing to do with it; it was the farmer. Anyone who knows anything about farming, and apparently my friend does not know much—the member for Calgary East could tell him because he raises hogs—knows that the farmer in western Canada breeds his hogs in the spring of the year. Not a large percentage of the farmers raise two litters, because of the climatic conditions. These hogs are ready for market in October, November and December. That is where the big surplus of hogs is produced. Most of the hogs produced in the eastern part of Canada could be consumed in the eastern part of Canada. In order to get these supplies for the British contract or any other contract, we must wait until the latter part of the year. That is when we got them last year, and it is when we may get them this year. The present indications are that we are not going to get them in the early part of the year. The records over several years indicate that we shall not get them in July, August or September, so there are only the latter few months of the year left in which to obtain those supplies. If we run into difficulties at the end of the year, I think we shall have some way of meeting them.

Mr. Bryce: A man once told me that the Scottish people always died laughing. I asked him why, and he said that they began to see things just as they were passing away. I seem to be pretty well mixed up today, because I cannot get into a sensible argument with the Minister of Agriculture. I just do not know what he is saying. He is arguing two ways at the same time. I want the matter cleared up. I want him to tell us exactly where we are. Some time ago I said that the packing companies in Canada were paying less for pork than they had been before, and the minister told us that the consumer is paying more than he has ever paid before.

Mr. Gardiner: I was talking about the packer.

Mr. Bryce: What are you fellows thinking about in letting the packers get away with that robbery? It is robbery. Last September in Winnipeg the price was depressed from $30 to $24. Prices were depressed $9 a hog. The producer is getting $9 less and the consumer is paying from 1 to 2 cents a pound more. The packer is sitting and laughing up his sleeve at it, and the minister does nothing about it. We want you to settle these prices, and tell us what we will get for our hogs a year or two years ahead. If you do that you will have a steady stream of hogs coming to the market for Britain or anyone else who wants them.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Did I understand the minister to say that he has the power to seize products, even on the farm, if they were required to fill these contracts?

Mr. Gardiner: That is right.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I want to be clear about it because of what happened before we went into committee. The minister now has the power, or his officials have, to seize these commodities to fill the contracts?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Fair: In the event that the British contract is filled by the end of June and the Canadian people decide to switch to eating chicken or turkey or beef, and do not wish any longer to pay more than that which was guaranteed the farmer, namely, 29 cents a pound, will the government continue the subsidy of 3½ cents a pound?

Mr. Gardiner: There are too many "ifs" in it.

Mr. Fair: I just want to know whether we are going to be paid the subsidy if the British contract is filled, provided the Canadian people do not continue to purchase as much as they are doing at the present time.

Mr. Gardiner: The only answer that I can give you is that the Canadian people ate 32 per cent more pork in the month of February this year than they did in the month of February a year ago. If the Canadian people keep right on eating that much pork, or anything near it, all your worries are going to pass away, and why worry until you have to?

Mr. Charlton: I should like to ask the minister if he is going to do any worrying about it, if that occasion does arise. He made the statement a moment ago that the bacon contract with Great Britain was filled in the last couple of weeks of 1949. Did I understand him correctly in that?

Mr. Gardiner: No, it was increased from down to where it was, lower than it would require to be this year, in order to fill this year's contract. My hon. friend across the way said that last year we were producing a lot more and we were marketing a lot more. Well, this year we have a very small contract, and I was saying to him that there was not enough delivered last year until we got down to within, I said, two or three months of the end of the year. There was not enough delivered to fill this year's contract, but after that time—most of it in the last six weeks—we secured sufficient to bring it up to 100 million pounds.

Mr. Charlton: That would not fill last year's contract.

Mr. Gardiner: But it would fill this year's.

Mr. Wright: I just want to give a few more "ifs" to the minister. When I was speaking a moment ago he said that in all probability, on the receipts of pork we were now getting, the contract would not be filled for some time, that it might be October when the spring litters are coming on the market before there would be sufficient to meet the 60 million pounds of the contract. If that is so, and we find that in October our marketings of hogs are the same as they have been in October and November of other years, in all probability we will find that the contract will be filled right in the middle of the heavy delivery season next fall, with the government support price being dropped right in the middle of that season, and with the packers getting fairly large deliveries. We shall find the market too in the same position as we found the egg market just a short time ago. From what the minister has told us, that is the position in which we are likely to find ourselves next fall.

Mr. Gardiner: The contracts for the first three years of the war were from November 1 to October 31 the following year. Then we moved it up two or three weeks at a time until we got it from January 1 to December 31. What I said when we announced this program is that we were going back to the natural hog year, and any agreements that we make in the future will be as from the first of November to the thirty-first of October the succeeding year. Therefore in so far as any future arrangements of any kind are concerned, we are not worrying so much as some of our friends are, because we know from the statistics that there scarcely is ever enough pork produced, or at least marketed, between the first of July in any year and the first of October in any year to supply this market; and if we get down to the thirtieth of June without any trouble, we do not expect any trouble at all until at least the first of October, and then we are within thirty days of the end of the natural hog year in this country. That is what we expect to get back to this year, and any of our worries for the next year will start with October and go on into the next year.

Mr. Tustin: In the past years we have had large contracts for cheese with the United Kingdom government at 30 cents a pound. This year I understand the contract price is 25 cents a pound, plus a subsidy of 3 cents a pound paid by the federal government. I should like to ask a question along the same lines as the ones we have been asking in regard to pork products. Is the minister going to requisition cheese? Judging by the answer he gave a short time ago, that is his intention. When the 85 million pounds of cheese have been received by the government under requisition, will the 3 cents a pound continue on the remainder of cheese marketed during the year 1950?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, there is not very much in common between the position in relation to hogs and the position in relation to cheese. In the first place, in Canada we consume almost a billion pounds of pork, and we contemplate selling only 60 million pounds. On the other hand we export from Canada at least 70 per cent of all the cheese we produce, and that is the cheese that we are trying to anticipate; but we say we are going to sell 85 million pounds to Britain. If we are right in our calculations of the production for this year, which would be an increased production as compared with immediately preceding years, then we shall be taking a very considerable quantity of cheese from the farmers, if we get 85 million pounds in the whole year, and the remainder of the cheese is sold to the Canadian public.

The Canadian public is paying for their 30 per cent the extra 3 cents as well. That is the only way they get it. The result of that would be much the same as the other, I think, except that the means by which we shall arrive at the conclusion will not be the same. I think that cheese will market at a price which will be fairly satisfactory in relation to the floor price which has been established.

Mr. Tustin: I take it the answer of the minister is that the subsidy will apply only to the 85 million pounds?

Mr. Gardiner: Well, no; if the 85 million pounds, plus whatever is consumed in Canada, makes up the whole production, then the 3 cents will apply to it all. If there happened to be a surplus at the end, with which someone had to deal, then that again is the same question: the government would have to decide what they were going to do. At the present time we anticipate that the cheese will all be sold at this price.

Mr. Charlton: Has the 17 million pounds of cheese the government bought last year been disposed of? If not, where does the government contemplate disposing of it?

Mr. Gardiner: As a matter of fact we purchased over 20 million pounds, and I think there is somewhere between 17 million and 18 million pounds of it still in the hands of the government. That will be sold, we expect, on the Canadian market.

Mr. Charlton: How is the grade standing up on the cheese held over from last year?

Mr. Gardiner: I understand it is standing up very well. There is the occasional cheese that does go wrong, as anyone connected with the cheese business will understand. But there is nothing out of the ordinary in connection with the cheese in storage now.

Mr. Bater: The hon. member mentioned the bewilderment of the farmers at the present time. I would say that in my view in the last ten or twelve years the farmers of Canada from coast to coast have had a sense of security greater than they have ever had before. It is difficult to say, of course, what the future has in store. I should think it would be difficult to incorporate in the act any formula such as has been suggested. I do believe however that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce are well aware that a continuation of the general prosperity in Canada depends upon agriculture. I am convinced that between those two right hon. gentlemen, one of whom is connected with production and the other with the selling of that production to any country in the world, we may rest assured that they will see to it that it is done to this country's advantage.

Mr. Fair: In addition to what my neighbour down the line has said, I suggest he should have added the Minister of Finance and his crackpot staff, which restricts money to the people, in the belief that that is the way they can get rid of goods in Canada. Speaking of hogs, how many pounds of Wiltshire sides have been supplied under the present contract?

Mr. Gardiner: I am afraid if the hon. member uses those terms, in referring to the Minister of Finance, he will have to change his name.

Mr. Fair: I was asking the minister a question. Apparently he has this financial matter on the brain, and it would seem that he did not hear what I said. I asked him how many pounds of Wiltshire sides had been supplied under the present contract.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know that I have the figure right down to date. However, the last figure I did have was running considerably below last year's supply. It was running at about fifty per cent of last year's supply at the same time. I can dig those figures out of the papers I have here, if the hon. member wishes to have them. However, it was about 1,500,000 pounds less, the last time I saw the figures, for the first few weeks of the year.

Mr. Knowles: The minister is never stuck for a figure.

Mr. Abbott: His figures are right, too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A number of farmers in my constituency sold their hogs early in January, before the announcement of the floor price. Those sales were made at prices considerably lower than the floor price. There was no way to stop them. Possibly if I were to place a concrete example before the minister he would be able to give an answer that would be generally applicable to the many other farmers in positions similar to the one I have in mind.

The farmer to whom I am now referring shipped a number of hogs that were slaughtered on January 18, 1950. The price received at the slaughter-house at Moose Jaw for those hogs was $23.75 per hundredweight for part of them and $23.35 for those in a lower grade. The farmer in question, who is typical of a number of farmers in a similar position, asks this question: As the price was at this low figure for only a short time, until the government established a floor price, what is being done either by the government or by the companies to compensate producers for their loss during this period of adjustment?

The minister may at the same time explain how many hogs were marketed during the first eighteen days of January, and whether or not farmers who marketed at that time will be compensated for the difference between the price they received and the floor price established shortly thereafter. My personal view is that they should not be placed in a position in which they are discriminated against. They had no knowledge that a floor price was going to be established. They marketed at that time, and I think they have a good case when they ask for consideration.

Mr. Gardiner: The announcement of the floor price on Wiltshire sides was made in December, not January, and before the Christmas vacation. They did know what the price was going to be, so far as the price of Wiltshire sides was concerned. However, the statement that the price was low in the first two weeks of January is correct. Indeed, it may have been a little longer than that; I have not the exact figure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These figures are up to January 18.

Mr. Gardiner: But there was a period in the early part of January when the price was low. Now, I am not too sure—it depends on what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Moose Jaw.

Mr. Gardiner: That is a long way from Toronto. The position at Toronto was that if prices were comparable with the 29 cents, plus 3½ cents, which is 32½ cents on Wiltshire sides, then the price which would be obtained was, I believe, 26 and a fraction cents for hogs. Then, when you go back to Winnipeg on that basis you are down perhaps from 75 cents to a dollar, depending on the nature of the delivery. If you go back to Moose Jaw you go down that much further.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the difference?

Mr. Gardiner: The difference is 75 cents to a dollar as between Toronto and Winnipeg, depending on the circumstances of the case. However, we usually count 85 cents when we are talking about shipping. It can vary that much.

There was a period of time when I suppose all the people were trying to adjust themselves to new conditions. The farmers did not deliver as many during that period of time as had been their custom and, despite the fact that they were not delivering as many, the price was lower for a while. We were not getting as much to deliver under the British contract. But as time went along and they got adjusted to the new condition—it took about two weeks, or perhaps a little longer than that—from that time on, the price has been running a little above.

I follow the market; I have the prices on my desk every day, and I know that it has been running a little above what the 29 plus 3½ cents would make it absolutely essential for anyone to pay. I say in reply to the hon. member for Selkirk, as well as other hon. members, that while I have no reason to speak on behalf of the packers, I think probably sometimes he is a little hard on them. The packing houses last Thursday, when we were discussing this bill, were paying $28.75 for hogs. Under the floor price they do not need to pay that. They are paying that for hogs simply because they could get a higher price from the Canadian consumer than they could get under the British contract; they are selling at a higher price to the consumer. The price I was quoting was the price to the consumer. That is the price that is being paid for hogs on the market and that is higher than the purchaser of hogs needs to pay if he is going to stay at the floor. We have always argued that he is not necessarily going to stay at the floor, and as a matter of fact does not do so unless conditions force him into that position.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I take it from the words uttered by the minister that the government is making no compensatory payments to these farmers?

Mr. Gardiner: That is right.

Mr. Bryce: Who holds the Wiltshire sides? Are they held by the packer or by the meat board? If they are held by the meat board, who pays the cold storage?

Mr. Gardiner: Wiltshire sides are delivered to the meat board, if there are any Wiltshire sides coming on the market at the floor price. That is all we get. We hold them and storage has been arranged for with the British under the contract. Under certain conditions they pay for it and there may be some conditions under which we pay for it, but I do not recall them.

Mr. Bryce: How long can you hold Wiltshire sides with safety?

Mr. Gardiner: If the conditions were to develop that my friends have been anticipating, namely, if we had 60 million pounds at July 1, we would be required to hold 30 million pounds for the last six months. That can be done without risk in connection with the product.

Mr. Argue: Before I reply to the comment the minister made some time ago I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre who suggested that the farmer who suffered at the beginning of the year because of the government's indecision as to what floor price would be established is entitled to some consideration.

The minister said that I probably do not know very much about hog raising and I want to tell him that he is correct. But when I was a young lad of 16 years of age in 1937 I had 30 pigs which I was raising. They were a mile out of town and I had to walk out two or three times a day to feed them. While I may not have been raised on a farm as a boy I did have a few pigs and in that respect I probably know as much about hog raising as does the minister or anyone in the government service.

The minister made the statement that in 1950 the marketing of hogs probably would follow the same pattern as in 1949, namely, that many of the hogs would be marketed in the last three months of the year and sold under the British contract. I do not know whether that will happen in 1950, but I know that that has not been the general pattern of deliveries of bacon to Great Britain in the last few years.

Mr. Gardiner: It will not be this year either.

Mr. Argue: We are a bit alarmed because in the last three months the packers succeeded in offering to the government 37 million pounds of bacon according to the trade of Canada, exports, dominion bureau of statistics, for 1949, which was 55 per cent of all the bacon delivered. In the three months ending the year 1947 the packers offered to the government and delivered to the board only 48 million pounds out of a total of 232 million pounds during the year, or some 20 per cent.

I do not intend to place all the figures on the record, but I may tell the minister that in 1948 we delivered under the British contract in January 25·8 million pounds and 29·2 million pounds in March as compared with 7 million pounds in October, 4·2 million pounds in November and 7·2 million pounds in December. Therefore I do not think it is correct to say that the pattern followed in 1949 is likely to be the pattern followed this year. If the pattern of deliveries to the board in 1950 is similar to that of 1948 then there would be much more than 60 million pounds offered in that period of time.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Tustin: The minister said a few minutes ago that the government had 20 million pounds of cheese in storage. Is it the intention to use a portion of that to partially fill the United Kingdom contract this year? What success has the minister had in developing a market for matured cheese in the southern United States?

Mr. Gardiner: The statement I made a few moments ago was not that we have 20 million pounds in storage now. My hon. friend over here suggested that we had bought only 17 million pounds and I said we had bought over 20 million pounds in the year and now have somewhere between 17 million pounds and 20 million pounds in storage. That cheese has to be disposed of in some way. I understand that the question was whether we are going to use any of it to supply the British market. We have not determined that as yet.

We think at the moment—we may be right or wrong in this—that the Canadian people have not been great consumers of cheese largely because over the years that have gone by the poorest cheese has been palmed off on them while the best cheese has gone to the British market or elsewhere. There are some of us who think that we now have an opportunity of testing out this market with cheese that is well cured. If we do I hope we will get more than the British offered us for it. I said once before that I did not want to repeat the figure which was offered for the cheese some time around Christmas, but it was quite low. I am quite sure that unless we are able to get a little more than that for it none of it will go to Britain. We think we can sell it elsewhere, and our hope is that we can sell a lot of it in Canada.

The other question had to do with the market in the southern states. We have not been too successful there. When the British thought they could not get sufficient cheese from us last year they bought the surplus United States cheese which increased the price in the United States for a time. My understanding is that they now have considerable cheese. As I say, we have not been successful in attempting to market cheese there. On one or two occasions we have been in the position where we probably could have turned over some of that cheese at a price lower than we had paid for it. Someone might have made some money selling the cheese in the United States, but we do not think that that should be our objective. We think our objective should be to maintain the price of Canadian cheese at as high a level as we can and if possible to encourage the consumption of cheese in Canada. We hope to utilize cheese which we think is good cheese for the purpose of trying to encourage that consumption.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I realize that most of our cheese is produced in eastern Canada. In western Canada the dairy people produce butter rather than cheese. We also realize that butter and hog production go pretty well hand in hand. I know of quite a few dairy people in western Canada who are much concerned whether or not they should continue in the dairy business. I read an article reporting a speech of the minister delivered at the municipal convention held at Saskatoon about the middle of March in which the minister indicated that if necessary a campaign would be launched to prevent oleomargarine manufacturers producing to the extent that it would threaten the 400,000 Canadian dairy farmers. In all fairness I must admit that many farmers use oleomargarine, but the question that concerns me is what these dairy farmers are to do about continuing future production. They have an investment, and the fact that there is a guaranteed price for butter is not sufficient to keep them in business if the manufacture of oleomargarine is finally going to undermine them. It would be helpful to these dairy people if the minister could tell them what the campaign he intends to promote may consist of, or whether legislation is proposed. In all seriousness, may I say that it would be most helpful to dairy people west of the great lakes if they could be given a lead along this line. As I say, I am mindful of the fact that many farmers use oleomargarine.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not want to object about the direction the discussion is taking, but you will recall that when we started this afternoon I was hopeful we could get this bill out of the way and have all these discussions on the other one. Both measures are somewhat involved in matters such as the one that has now been brought up, but I think the discussion would come better under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am quite prepared to leave it if the minister will make a statement which will be somewhat encouraging to the dairy people of western Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: I think I could make a better statement at that time than if I were to attempt to answer the question under this measure. I would prefer to do that.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION IN FORCE ON AND AFTER MARCH 31, 1950

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Agricultural Prices Support Act is quite similar to the bill which was just passed. Under this measure the minister can do almost anything that can be done under the Agricultural Products Act except the seizure of products. I should like to make our position clear on the question of the amendment to the previous measure. What we voted against was the power left with the minister to seize agricultural products. In every other respect, as I see it—and I may be wrong—the Agricultural Prices Support Act gives the minister the power to do practically anything else that can be done under the Agricultural Products Act.

Mr. Wright: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct the hon. member if he means that under the amendment which I moved we were suggesting that there should be compulsion.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It is already in the act; it could not mean anything else.

Mr. Wright: I was not referring to this act at all. I was referring to a new board set up under new conditions.

Mr. Charlton: The party you represent has always been in favour of government controlled marketing of agricultural products.

Mr. Wright: And still are.

Mr. Charlton: That is the thing we are against. We are against government marketing of agricultural products. If you want to continue that kind of legislation and make it permanent, then, as I said previously, that is why we took the stand we did against the amendment. We do not want a continuation of government control of the marketing of agricultural products with the minister having the power to seize products of the farms.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, I suggest that the hon. member should be prevented from arguing about the substance of an amendment on which the house has made its decision, because if he is permitted to state his reasons for voting one way, other members could state their reasons for voting the other way. I think that question has been decided.

Mr. Speaker: That point was brought to my attention by an interjection a moment ago. I did not stop the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) because I thought he was merely making a passing reference. I think that is what he was doing, and I would ask him now to discuss the bill before the house. Probably I should point out to the house that the house did not agree to the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture that the two bills should be discussed at the same time. Not having agreed to that suggestion, the house must now discuss only the principle of the bill before it.

Mr. Gardiner: While that is correct in the strictest sense of the term, Mr. Speaker, I think I would hardly be playing fair with members if I did not say that they agreed to put the two bills through the resolution stage in the way they did—after all I had only asked them to consider the matter up until then—to speed up the passing of those resolutions. They did that, and I would hope that you would not now rule that they cannot discuss anything in the bill we just passed, particularly in the light of what I said just before it was passed. I think members will keep themselves within bounds in doing so, and I hope that you will permit a rather free discussion of the two bills.

Mr. Speaker: I was not in the house when the minister made his closing remarks on the last bill, but in view of what he has said I think I should allow considerable latitude in this debate. I would remind the house, however, that the question before it is the principle of the present bill.

Mr. Charlton: I appreciate your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I only wanted to make a few brief remarks about the other matter in passing. We of the Conservative party have always been in favour of legislation similar to that which is before us now. As I have stated before in the house, it was originally the policy of our party. We have no actual criticism of the principle of the bill except that the original act does not fix any formula for setting floor prices. Everything is left to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). In other words, he might still want to have a finger in the control. He cannot tell us how the present floor prices were arrived at except by the juggling of figures. There is no definite plan to relate it, in any way, to the farmers' costs. That is obvious, because their costs have not gone down, while floor prices have.

It is absolutely ridiculous and meaningless for the right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to endeavour to create the impression that Canadian farmers are receiving higher prices than farmers in any other country in the world, unless in each case he also shows the relationship of those prices to domestic costs. Can the minister give parliament the facts upon which he based that statement? Just this morning we received in the mail the latest Searle Grain Company report, that of Wednesday, March 22, from which I want to read one paragraph on the back page:

Supported British Agriculture

British farmers are being supported at the moment at prices for their products considerably higher than the prices at which most farm products could be imported. The London Economist in its issue of February 18 asks this question:

"In the course of time, increasing quantities of food are likely to become available from overseas which can be paid for in sterling. Supposing that the cost of such food is (as on present trends it certainly will be) substantially lower than the prices being paid to British farmers, what course will the government of the day pursue? Will it stand by the promise to purchase the whole output of British agriculture at whatever the cost? Or will it plead a prior duty to keep down the cost of living, and force on British agriculture a sharp and unpleasant adjustment?"

I think that is enough to show the minister was wrong the other evening when he said the prices of our agricultural products were higher than those of any other country. This quotation plainly shows that the prices of agricultural products in Great Britain are higher than those same products can be bought for elsewhere. All the figures the minister quoted last Thursday were wholesale prices, not prices to the producer; and in many cases there is a tremendous difference. For instance, the minister quoted 42·3 cents per dozen as the low price for eggs in 1949. I know, as do many hon. members, that the price to producers for ungraded eggs went as low as 16 cents a dozen last December. The government now guarantees the wholesaler who purchased those eggs for 16 cents a dozen a price of 38 cents plus storage for grade A large, which is rather a nice profit. It makes one wonder for whom the minister is actually working, the producers of this country or the wholesalers. A conservative estimate would be that one-quarter of the entire economy of this country is directly dependent upon agriculture. If our agricultural economy is allowed to deteriorate, the result must be obvious.

The other evening when the minister was reading his 1944 speech in the house, at page 1043 of Hansard, he said:

I hope that our markets for farm products for a period of years, possibly two or three or more, for most of our products, will be sufficiently good that we shall be able to obtain a price which is comparable with the price we are now obtaining for our farm products of different kinds. If so, the board that is in existence during that period of time will be keeping a check on what is happening during that period, comparing it with what happened during the war period—

I stress these next words.

—and immediately there is any necessity for taking action in connection with any farm product, authority is given the board under this legislation to purchase a surplus of that farm product at the floor price which the government of the day considers to be a reasonable floor in the light of all the facts existing in connection with the case.

Was that the situation when the floor price for eggs was fixed last fall or this spring? I do not think it was, because the government waited practically a month and a half before the floor of 38 cents was fixed. Certainly that is not "immediately." Then, in the same speech the minister quoted, he said:

Then I should say it would be unfair to the farmer immediately to require him to sell at the cost of production, without considering at all any losses he sustained because of the war or any returns he was denied through the controls established during the war. The suggestion was made that farmers had been denied returns in the earlier part of the war and that just at the time when in the ordinary course of events according to the experiences of the last war, he would have reaped some returns which would have been helpful to him, ceilings were placed upon prices, as a result of which he was denied as great a return as otherwise he might have received. All those matters would have to be taken into consideration during the transition period along the lines I have suggested.

Then, speaking over the radio from Niagara Falls on Monday, January 30, taking part in the national farm radio forum, he answered a question asked by Mr. Roy Marler of Alberta:

Mr. Marler: I would like to direct my question to Hon. Mr. Gardiner. My question is "What basis or formula does the government use in arriving at a support price?"

Mr. Gardiner: In the matter of arriving at a support price, we follow the plan or idea which was laid down in 1944 when we suggested that most of our farmers—at least as their opinions expressed in farm organizations—considered the years 1943-44 as very satisfactory from the standpoint of returns as compared with costs, and we estimated that 1945 would be a similar year. We hoped at that time the war would end in 1945. The war did end in 1945 and our undertaking was that we would keep a record of the situation existing—that is, the relationship between farm prices and farm costs in the last three years of the war; and through the transitional period, we would attempt to keep the returns to the farmers in that fair relationship to the cost of the products they had to buy. That, generally speaking, is the plan and formula.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say it was very generally speaking, with several ifs, ands and buts. Last Thursday evening the minister quoted the low price for eggs in 1949 as 42·3 cents. Let us look at the prices received under the contracts, during the years the minister mentioned. I find that the price in January, 1943, was 37 cents a dozen; in February, 36 cents; in March, 34 cents; and from April 20 it was 35 cents. In 1944 the price was 35½ cents a dozen, and for 1945 it was 39 cents in the spring and 44 cents in the fall, with fresh eggs at 48 cents, fall storage. Then if we take The Economic Annalist for February 1950, we see that the index of farmer's costs have varied a good deal in those same years. The average for 1943, 1944 and 1945, as I have worked it out, was 148. In 1943 the index figure of farm costs, taking eleven factors, was 143·4. In 1944 it was 148, and in 1945 it was 152·1. The average of those three figures is 148, while the index for those same costs as of 1949, the latest available figure, is 204. I think most hon. members will agree they have not decreased. It anything, they have gone up in 1950.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in arriving at the floor price the minister says that they took the figures for 1943, 1944 and 1945, based on the increase in costs since those years, and set the floor prices. As I calculate the changes and the increased costs using the low of 34 cents in March 1943 that would set the floor price for eggs at 46 cents. I should like to have the minister justify or substantiate his floor price of 38 cents for eggs which was set on January 26 this year.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the principle in the bill before us is quite simple. It asks that the Agricultural Prices Support Act be continued after March 31 of this year. I believe it is quite obvious to everyone that legislation is needed that will enable the government to place floor prices under farm products. During the last 15 or 16 months Canada has witnessed, as has the United States, a severe drop in farm income. Unless the government has legislation such as the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and unless the legislation is used in the proper manner, then there are sorry times ahead for the agricultural industry.

The farmers of this country are looking to the federal government to establish adequate floor prices under the main agricultural commodities. They believe that the low prices which have come about in the last few months have resulted directly from the policy this government has followed since the war. That being so, they are looking to this government to set proper floor prices. It is admitted by the government, and has been admitted by it since the end of the war, that the government does not believe in contracts for agricultural products on a permanent basis. In order that that point may be quite clear—

Mr. Gardiner: In order that it may not be repeated, I would say that is not true.

Mr. Argue: I shall repeat it, and it can be substantiated by a reading of the preamble of the Agricultural Products Act, under which the government fulfils the contract.

I have not the preamble before me, but I think the minister will agree that the Agricultural Products Act was set up under the Transitional Measures Act. When the minister comes before this house and says there is still an emergency resulting from the war and we should, therefore, pass this act for another year, he is saying that contracts are not going to be undertaken on a permanent basis. If the government were really anxious to inaugurate contracts for the sale of agricultural products year in and year out, it would bring in a permanent act, instead of asking us to extend the Agricultural Products Act from year to year under this emergency powers legislation.

I say, too, that if this government believed in bilateral contracts and the bilateral method of trading, then the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) would not have denied that the government would undertake such contracts. It would not have been necessary, if this government believed in the bilateral method of trading, for the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) to amend what I considered was an excellent speech, in which he advocated bilateral agreements. The difficulty in which we, as a nation, find ourselves is that, in spite of what the member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) said, I still consider Great Britain is our best market. Great Britain believes in bilateral contracts not only for exporting goods but also for importing goods. Because the British believe in that method of trading, and because this government does not believe in it, we find we have already lost a substantial portion of the British market for many farm commodities.

For example, while we shipped approximately 65 million pounds of bacon to Britain last year, under these bilateral agreements Britain purchased 20 million pounds from the Netherlands, 40 million pounds from Eire, and 40 million pounds from Poland. Under that contract, she may buy as high as 120 million pounds. Britain bought 100 million pounds of bacon under bilateral contracts and in addition took 90 per cent of the Danish surplus. While we supplied about 65 million pounds of bacon, Britain had contracts for the purchase of 200 million pounds.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Argue: When the house rose at six o'clock I was endeavouring to point out some of the need that has arisen for a support act, and why at this time a support act, with proper floors, was absolutely necessary. I had placed some figures on Hansard to show how we were losing the British market, and that the people of Great Britain had been able successfully, through bilateral trade agreements, to obtain large quantities of bacon from countries other than Canada.

In order to show how serious has been our loss of the British market for bacon, I might point out that back in the year 1938 Canada shipped to Great Britain 189 million pounds of bacon, whereas this year we are hoping to ship not more than 60 million pounds. This year the total value of our bacon contract is some $17,500,000; whereas in 1938, a year when we were just emerging from a depression, the value of the bacon shipped to Great Britain was $32 million, or almost twice as much as the present contract.

Policies adopted by this and other governments certainly affect the chances we have of selling our commodities in the European markets. As has already been pointed out, the devaluation of the British pound has made it more difficult for Canada to export agricultural commodities to that market. I might say that when the British made the decision to devalue the pound it was not because they wanted to, but out of sheer necessity. In my opinion devaluation of the pound was brought about largely because of the failure of Canada and the United States to purchase adequate imports from Great Britain. Because that is so, and because devaluation followed, we find a reduction in the price of bacon and of cheese under our contracts. The bacon contract price is reduced from $36 a hundredweight last year to $29 this year, almost the exact amount brought about through devaluation.

We in this group have always supported the United Nations, and the various bodies set up under the United Nations. We support the FAO, and we were sorry that when they proposed an international commodity clearing house arrangement for the disposal of surplus foods in the world's market our government, through our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), found it impossible to support that arrangement. Because of that, and because of the other factors that I have mentioned, we have the problem of disposing of agricultural surpluses. In my opinion that problem has been brought about largely because of the various policies adopted by the government since the conclusion of the war.

In his speech this afternoon the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras), as did the Minister of Agriculture last Thursday, emphasized the value of the United States market. Both the hon. member for Provencher and the minister made the statement that the United States is our second best market. While the United States may be our second best market for many commodities, in my opinion that country is not our second best market for most agricultural products. I agree that the first and most important market is our own Canadian market; but in my opinion after that the United Kingdom offers the opportunity of a permanent market for most of our agricultural products whereas the United States does not offer that type of market.

At the present time the United States has, according to the Ottawa Citizen of March 10, almost $4 billion invested in agricultural surpluses held by the government. In looking over the list of agricultural surpluses one finds that a great many of the surpluses in the United States are identical with the surpluses we have in Canada. According to that article the United States has 100 million pounds of butter held by the government, and 25 million pounds of cheese, both commodities that Canada has had some difficulty in disposing of at 1949 prices. The United States has 52 million bushels of barley on hand held by the government, and some 627 million bushels of corn. While the United States does provide a market for surplus Canadian cattle, I do not think that country is likely to provide an effective market for Canadian hogs if after the conclusion of the present agreement with Britain no other agreement is signed.

While the United States government does not hold hogs in surplus supply, nevertheless the 627 million bushels of corn and the 52 million bushels of barley could be converted into hogs in a very short time. One cannot see that the United States is likely to provide a market for Canadian wheat, although I do know that in his speech to the FAO conference last fall the Minister of Agriculture said that he hoped the United States would lift the embargo on Canadian wheat. Whether the United States will lift that embargo I do not know, but judging by the surpluses of wheat they hold, I am afraid that such a move would be of very little value to Canada.

According to the article to which I have referred, the United States has invested over $1 billion in wheat. The United States surplus of wheat held by the government amounts to some 475 million bushels. Therefore I do not feel that the United States will provide a market for Canadian wheat.

In the last few weeks and months we have seen a drop in many agricultural food commodities produced in Canada. At the same time we do know that the prices of coarse grains, such as oats and barley, are still high. No. 1 feed oats was being sold by the wheat board on Thursday, March 23, at 96 cents a bushel. No. 1 feed barley was being sold by the wheat board for $1.35⅞ a bushel. I believe that these prices for oats and barley are high in relation to the new prices established for bacon, eggs and other agricultural products. I do not suggest that the price of oats or barley should be reduced in any way. I hope that these prices will not fall, but when I read in the press that the Minister of Agriculture was suggesting to western farmers that they reduce their wheat acreage this year by three million acres I was wondering whether he did not know that such a reduction in wheat acreage would mean an increase in the acreages of oats and barley. If there is an increase in the production of oats and barley, with the present support prices under bacon and eggs and cheese at existing low levels, then in my opinion it is inevitable that oats and barley prices will fall.

So I say the government, through the floor prices it has adopted, through the suggestion that three million acres be taken out of wheat production—and as a result, of course, most of it will go into the production of something else, probably oats and barley, with increased supplies—is expecting a lowering of the whole level of agricultural products.

If that is the policy of the government, as it seems to be, then I certainly object to it in the strongest terms. I did not expect under this measure any lowering of prices for various agricultural commodities during the present year. The Minister of Agriculture, as reported at page 1043 of Hansard for March 23, repeated a speech he made when introducing the Agricultural Prices Support Act in 1944. In that speech he said this:

> Then I should say it would be unfair to the farmer immediately to require him to sell at the cost of production, without considering at all any losses he sustained because of the war or any returns he was denied through the controls established during the war. The suggestion was made that farmers had been denied returns in the earlier part of the war and that just at the time when in the ordinary course of events according to the experiences of the last war, he would have reaped some returns which would have been helpful to him, ceilings were placed upon prices, as a result of which he was denied as great a return as otherwise he might have received. All those matters would have to be taken into consideration during the transition period along the lines I have suggested.

I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could have considered the hundreds of millions of dollars of income the farmers of this country have been denied because of the government's policy over the last few years, when it was dropping the prices of bacon, cheese and eggs? Surely if the farmers are to receive something extra because of the money that was denied them, then floor prices should not drop. Floor prices should be held at the level prevailing in 1949, so that part of the money denied the farmers in the last few years could be made up to them.

I object that the bill as it now stands does not in any definite way set floor prices under agricultural products from year to year whereby the farmer can know in advance what floor prices will be. The other night the Minister of Agriculture reviewed some of the discussions which had taken place at the convention of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at Niagara Falls. He suggested in that speech that before Canadian floor prices were established he and his officers checked on the period 1943, 1944 and 1945. He made the statement in that speech that Mr. Galbraith, an economist from the United States, I believe, informed the convention that the basis of parity in that country was for the period from 1909 to 1914, and that that period was a good deal lower than the Canadian period of from 1943 to 1945.

The minister quoted Mr. Galbraith as having said that the United States period was in the neighbourhood of 15 per cent lower than the Canadian period. Then the minister quoted Dr. Hope, Canadian Federation of Agriculture economist, as having been surprised that the Canadian period was higher than the period accepted in the United States. Then the minister makes this statement, in reference to Dr. Hope:

> He did not say how much better, but he said it was better in Canada. In other words, our base is the highest price.

Well, Mr. Speaker, our base may be the highest price, but our base is not in legislative form. And our base, as used by the Minister of Agriculture, is only a base on which the government checks. Apparently it checks on that base, and then it sets a price lower than the base. It may be just as advisable—I do not know—to check on the base period in the early thirties, when prices were very low, and then, instead of giving that base period as the established price, set a price a good deal higher.

It is not enough to have a base period on which you are merely checking. If the Agricultural Prices Support Act is to mean anything, then the price relationship prevailing in the base period should be written into the act, and that should be the price below which farm commodities are not allowed to fall.

At this point I should like to quote from an article issued by the Michigan state college extension service, department of agricultural economics, at East Lansing, Michigan. This article is written by Mr. Arthur Mauch, and in it he points out the method used in the United States in the setting of floor prices. For 1950, under the basic crops, there is established a floor at 90 per cent of parity, and the basic floor under dairy products must be established at something between 75 per cent and 90 per cent of parity, according to the statute.

Then on the next page of the same article it sets out the various floors for 1950 for agricultural products in the United States, and shows that the United States formula arrives at a basic floor price for wheat of $2.12 a bushel; for butterfat, 63 cents a pound—5 cents higher than the present Canadian floor price under butter, and probably a good deal higher than the floor the minister may announce in a few days. I hope I am wrong in my assumption on that score. This table indicates that the floor in the United States under eggs is 51·6 cents a dozen, whereas the floor under Canadian eggs based, as the minister inferred, on the highest base period, is one of 36 or 38 cents a dozen. The floor under oats in the United States is 95 cents a bushel, as compared with the Canadian floor of 61½ cents; that under barley in the United States is $1.49 as compared with the Canadian floor of about 90 cents.

So, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize again that it is not enough to have a measure like this before the House of Commons. It is not enough for the minister to say, "We have a certain base period, and we are checking on that base period"—if after he checks on the base period he does not establish floors equal to the prices prevailing in that base period.

While the United States base period may not be as high as some other periods, nevertheless the actual floor prices adopted in that country by their formula are a good deal higher than the prices established in Canada.

Mr. Gibson: How many billions did it cost them?

Mr. Argue: There is the lumber king interrupting. I suppose he is pretty happy that some of the western Canadian wheat farmers' money is now being used to support timber prices. If he will accept wheat money for the support of timber prices I think he should be willing to give the farmer a little timber money to support the prices of his products.

Because I believe that the present bill is not acceptable to the western farmer as an adequate piece of floor prices legislation, because I believe that the government should not be presenting to parliament the same act that was presented in 1944 but should be presenting legislation that spells out a formula below which agricultural prices cannot fall, and because I believe that a change is fundamentally necessary, I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher):

That Bill No. 17 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introducing of legislation to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act so as to provide that floor prices should be established at such levels as to guarantee to producers a price-cost relationship not less favourable than that prevailing in the period 1944-48.

During that period certain farm prices were controlled and the farmers made a contribution to the rest of Canada through having to accept prices which were lower than they could have obtained elsewhere. I suggest that there should be legislation providing that the floor prices for agricultural products cannot fall below the level of 1944-48. If that were done Canadian farmers from one coast to the other would know that they had proper guarantees and they would not have to come to the minister every year just to learn how much smaller the contract is going to be or by how much their prices are reduced.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate. On Thursday last when the two resolutions were introduced we thought it would be advisable to hasten their passage through the house, but at this stage I desire to point out certain things which I feel are necessary in this type of legislation. I think all of us recall quite well the promises that were made in 1945 and 1949 with regard to the Agricultural Prices Support Act. We all know that there was a $200 million revolving fund set up under the act.

I think members of the house agree with the general principle of this act, but the workings of the act have certainly not come up to the expectations of the primary producers across this country. I agree with the statements made on the resolution stage by my colleague, the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton), and the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). I think most primary producers welcomed the legislation because it was heralded as a step in the stabilization of prices by which they would know from month to month what they were going to get for their products when they planted them; but that has not been the result so far.

I think we all support this legislation because of the degree of stability it will bring to labour and industry. Unless the purchasing power of the primary producers is maintained it will not be long before the men in the cities will be looking for jobs. That has been demonstrated definitely during the past few months. As the prices of farm products dropped, the number of unemployed increased. It is only reasonable to expect that, because it is the purchasing power of the primary producers of this country that keeps the wheels of industry turning.

As I say, the application of the act so far has been disappointing. As far as eggs are concerned there has been too little too late. That is not what the farmers voted for in 1949. Did it provide stability for hogs? It did after a large number of producers had suffered considerable losses through not knowing where prices were going. It took the government so long to make up their minds where they were going to set the prices and the result was losses for a number of producers.

Did it provide stability for butter? Only after the horse was stolen. Did it provide stability for honey? The price of honey is down to where it was in 1900. Did it provide stability for beans? Only in a very precarious way because the bean producers themselves provided the greatest amount of stabilization in the marketing of their commodity.

We need a realistic approach to this problem of agricultural prices support. Those prices should be arrived at by a definitely known formula. They should be arrived at after consultation with the various commodity groups that know something about the cost of production and the labour factors that go into the production of their particular product.

The prices support should be clear and be directly applicable to the primary producer rather than to the wholesale trade. We have seen the results of that so far as eggs are concerned. The wholesale trade can take care of themselves in all these changes that are taking place. It is the primary producer who gets the squeeze every time and therefore any floor prices legislation should be based on a scheme that will definitely assure the primary producer what he is going to get, not the wholesaler or the middleman.

I repeat that we require a workable formula, not one based on political expediency. In the past we have seen what political prices can mean to farm products. That is one reason why I opposed the amendment to Bill No. 16. I was afraid that the price that would be paid for goods that were requisitioned would have no relation to the cost of production or to the purchasing power that those particular goods might represent for the purchase of the products of industry and labour. We do not want a "tick, tack, toe, here I go" system of picking out what the price support legislation is going to be and the prices thereunder. Taking what it was last year, we do not want a guess as to what it might be next year. That is not good enough.

That is not what the farmers voted for. We want a formula based on the needs of Canada, on the needs of Canadian markets and the consuming public, because after all the home market is the greatest potential market we have. It should be based on reality, cost of production, purchasing power, and last of all, but most important, on the idea of maintaining the economy of the country because when the time arrives that primary producers are accepting 25 per cent less for their products than they have been, you are going to have unemployment and a decrease in income so far as the government in concerned. Income tax collections will fall as will sales tax receipts and with the expenditures to which this country is now committed you will find yourselves in a very serious situation.

The cabinet is the board of directors of the nation, a crown company in a sense. During the war they made certain promises to the producers that when the war was over they would be protected so far as their prices were concerned. Now some members of the cabinet are saying that conditions have changed and that we cannot now carry on with the program outlined at that time. When a company fails to carry out its promises or to honour its promissory notes it goes bankrupt and liquidation proceedings take place. That is just what will happen to this government if it does not carry out its promises to the primary producers. There will be a liquidation.

During the war years the primary producers contributed a very large sum of money to the maintenance of stable prices in Canada on the promise that when the war was over they would be taken care of. Now the government is reneging on its promise. Why do we ask for these particular safeguards? To ensure purchasing power in the hands of Canadian citizens who will continue to buy our products. The purchase of Canadian products will bring about increased employment. One thing that is bothering everyone in Canada today is the threat of greater numbers of unemployed in all our cities. If the purchasing power of the primary producers is reduced you will have more unemployment instead of less.

Recently the newspapers carried headlines regarding the rapid action taken by the government to protect the shirt and glove industry of Canada from competition with low-priced goods produced in other countries. They were not in as great a hurry to protect our primary producers from competition with low-cost products brought in from foreign lands. If it is good for one it is good for the other. It is quite possible that the farmer and the labourer might like to get a cheap shirt once in a while. The creation of a floor price formula should not be delayed until producers are discouraged, dismayed, or better still—mark my words, "better still" not "worse still" —fighting mad about it, because that will be all to our advantage. Again I say that while this legislation is not all that we would wish for, we welcome its introduction and hope that the amendments suggested will be carried out.

[Mr. White (Middlesex East).]

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise again this evening on these measures. However, the two bills are so closely related that I should like to make a few observations on the Agricultural Prices Support Act. First of all, we have heard a great deal, particularly during the resolution stage, about agricultural surpluses in Canada. It is a fact that for a great many years we have had the problem of agricultural surpluses, and apparently we will continue to have it for a few years to come. I was amazed at the attitude of the C.C.F. party as to these surpluses. If you will look at Hansard you will see at page 1047 the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) had this to say with reference to surpluses:

> It is not right, it is not just, that we should be piling up surpluses of agricultural commodities in Canada when there are hungry people in the world.

Again and again during the debate, various members of the opposition have referred to our surpluses. They have pointed to them as if it were wrong for Canada to have surpluses, and have even almost insinuated that there was something wrong with our economic system, something wrong with our system altogether that we should have such large surpluses in Canada when there were people starving in other parts of the world. I suggest that if we have large surpluses in Canada it is largely due to our system of government, our economic system, our system of free enterprise. Instead of something that should be looked upon as bad it is one of the best tributes that can be paid to our free enterprise system. There is no question that some countries in Europe have suffered destruction because of the war, but the same cannot be said of some other countries where people are starving but which did not experience the war at all. We have developed one of the most efficient systems, and when I say "we" I refer to the North American continent. We should be proud of it. Of course it raises certain problems. We have surpluses and the question is how to distribute them. At page 1052 of Hansard the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones) said:

> Obviously then, Mr. Speaker, our problem is one of distribution.

He would make it appear that the only problem involved is one of distributing our surplus goods. Of course when we go to the bottom of the matter it is much more involved than just the question of distribution. Fundamentally it is not a question of distribution but a question of production. We know that in most of these underdeveloped countries, where people are in need of our surplus products, if their production reached the same level as ours we should have no difficulty in sending our goods to them. Therefore it is much more a question of the lack of production in other countries than a question of distribution. Be that as it may, we have this problem, and we will have it for some time yet.

Reference has been made to the many plans put forward to take care of the situation, including the Brannan plan, the ICCH plan, and I believe the Dr. Hope plan. In my humble opinion, however, none of these plans solves the basic problem. We have surpluses. People are starving in other countries. If our surpluses are to get to the people in other countries who cannot pay for them, that can be done in only one way; that is, we will have to give them away. If we give something away we get nothing in return for it, and somebody has to pay. Under the Brannan plan the taxpayer must pay for the charity that is extended. The ICCH plan is much the same thing, only at the international level. In considering this latter plan, which has been referred to by the C.C.F. party and particularly by the Social Credit group, who seem to place a great deal of faith in it, I would point out that under it Canada would be perhaps the country to suffer most. There is one problem for which a solution is not found in any of these plans; that is, a way to prevent the disposal of these surpluses from depressing prices throughout the country. As far as I know no one has found a satisfactory solution to that branch of the problem.

It is all very well to say we can depend upon the treasury to make up the difference, but we must realize that if the bill that must be paid by the taxpayers of Canada or any other country became too large, no government could possibly continue such a plan for any length of time. With prices depressed, you can imagine what would be the plight of the farmers throughout the country, so in the end the problem would be far worse than it was in the beginning. So I say that while there is a great deal of merit in all these plans, we must face the facts. If something is given away someone has to pay for it; there is no way around it. We must make up our minds whether or not we are in a position to do that. If we should go ahead with such a plan we will have to decide whether the producer or the taxpayer is to pay the difference, or whether it should be apportioned in some other way. Basically the one thing we must face is that as long as it is a gift we cannot expect anything in return; so the cost must be borne by the people as a whole. It is all very well to say there is something wrong with our system of distribution because we have surpluses while other people are starving, but the matter is not so easily resolved, and we must face that fact sooner or later.

In the course of the discussion we have also heard from our C.C.F. friends a great deal of what I would call propaganda from their socialist friends in the United Kingdom. For a full day we had a recital of the wonderful things that have been done in the United Kingdom for the stability of agriculture, and we were told that conditions there were so much better than a few years ago. Well, I suggest to my hon. friends that instead of being so engrossed in their propaganda from overseas they should look around their own communities. Of course there have been great changes, in Canada as well as elsewhere. Compare the stability of agriculture in this country today with the position in the thirties. Compare the position of the farmer today with his position in the nineties. There has been a tremendous improvement, and that applies to most countries in the world. Everywhere there has been progress. A few years ago we heard all about Australia and New Zealand; now it is pretty well narrowed down to the United Kingdom, and they persist in spreading as much propaganda as they can with regard to things done outside our own country.

It would seem, according to our friends, that all our problems may be solved by what they used to call a planned economy, by the stroke of a pen. That was the generality; that was supposed to be the cure-all. Of course we know the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan, which has had to face realities, now is not so keen as it was on this planned economy. As a matter of fact they are dropping their plans like hot cakes, and have got rid of most of their supposed planning experts. Our friends of the C.C.F. in this house have not had that unpleasant experience, however, so they can still play with these generalities. Last Thursday they came forward with a new slant, or what I might call a new catchword. It was referred to by the leader of the C.C.F. as "forward pricing arrangements," which I suppose is the new version of the planned economy. That is very general; I suppose it embraces practically all production, all marketing and what not. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), in his usual clear and straightforward way, gave us a definition of what was meant by that terminology. He said, at page 1051 of Hansard:

> I mean by that that when we breed a cow we will know how much we will get for the steer three years hence.

That is supposed to be what the hon. member's leader called a forward pricing arrangement. Other speakers referred to the same subject, and they became so enthused over their discovery that when their leader had his turn he went still further and improved on the system. He said, at page 1064 of Hansard:

> . . . they know what it will be four years in advance, even before the cow is bred.

If that is not a super-planning theory, I do not know what is. It just goes to show how easily our friends can be carried away.

We have before us at the moment an amendment moved by the C.C.F. group which, as far as I can understand it, asks that a formula be placed in the act. I for one will support the bill as it is. No doubt it is another step towards stabilizing agriculture in this country. It is the fulfilment of a promise that the government made. A good deal of criticism was heard to the effect that the government had not kept its promises. Here is a promise that was made which the government is attempting to keep, but which our friends are trying to prevent it from keeping, in spite of the complaints they have made.

This raises the question of the formula. I am willing to admit that there might be some good in the formula. Before supporting a formula, however, I would have to know what the formula contains. From the experience of the United States, and from our farm leaders in the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, we know that no matter what formula we adopt, that formula must be of necessity a most flexible one. It must be adaptable from time to time. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, it is hardly a formula, if it has to be changed and adapted, or if it is left to the minister to decide to what degree the formula will be applied. If we have to have a formula of that nature, I cannot see any difference between that and the policy the minister is now following. Inevitably all conditions at the time have to be taken into consideration. It would seem, therefore, just as well to leave the matter in the hands of the minister and the cabinet. They have told us what formula they are using. Even if we placed another formula in their hands, we would still have to allow them to interpret it.

Frankly, I cannot see the merit of the amendment that has been suggested to this bill. We know that this bill is welcomed by the farmers throughout Canada. As I said, it is a step forward towards greater stability in agriculture. It is a step forward in the policy of this government. For the last few years this government has continuously tried to give a greater degree of stability to agriculture. I can say without fear of contradiction, and I said it during the last election campaign at all my meetings, that I doubt if in the history of this nation farmers ever had a better friend in any government than they have in this administration. The farmers realize it, Mr. Speaker. Since trust and confidence have to be placed in someone, they are quite prepared to leave it with the present Minister of Agriculture. I should have said that, of all the ministers of agriculture this country has known, certainly no minister has done more for agriculture and the stability of agriculture than the present minister. I doubt if anyone would attempt to deny that. His reputation in that regard is certainly well known.

I quite readily admit that some of the farm organizations, individual farmers and even ourselves, might occasionally prefer to have a set formula that could be applied mathematically, so we would definitely know where we were. Everyone realizes that that is not feasible, nor is it practical. Why get involved in more red tape, if we are going to end up the same way? I can understand my good friends in the C.C.F., because they have to plan and control everything. It is to be expected that they will press for any measure that will add more and more control, more and more planning. They do not believe in free enterprise. They do not believe in this system. They believe they can do everything better than the individual can do it. I am not surprised, therefore, that they should move this amendment. I do say it contributes very little, and I certainly propose to vote against it.

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words at this time. The member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) has made an excellent speech, which consisted largely of telling us what a wonderful fellow the Minister of Agriculture is. I know that is true in certain things. He played a fair game of football, or soccer as we called it at one time. He has always made money out of his farm. By that, I mean he has made money by growing crops. Some farmers make money from their farms otherwise, but he is a real farmer and makes money by growing crops, and without any guarantees of the kind he now gives since he has become Minister of Agriculture.

I venture to make a suggestion which I think will be quite unpopular in the farming portion of the constituency in which I live.

I am going to say now that I am quite content for another year. That may indicate how I shall vote. I do think it is about time that this parliament ceased to be operated by pressure groups. The farm group is one of the most important, and the labour pressure group is the other group. I think it is about time that we members of parliament started to look after the consumer a little. After all, he is the fellow who pays the bills. He has no organization. He has no way of getting at us. We are met by all these other people of influence who are organized to the nth degree, and so make themselves felt.

Someone will say, of course, that having said what I have just said, I am opposed to maintaining prices in agriculture; that is not so. I am one of those who still think that agriculture is our main and sustaining industry. In the time which I have lived, I have learned from experience that when agriculture lags in income, the whole nation lags in income. I believe there is a definite connection between the two statements. New wealth, sir, comes in only one way. You first take a natural resource, in this case the land; to that land you apply capital and labour, and you get new wealth. It is obtained in no other way, irrespective of what that natural resource may be. From these resources comes every bit of our new wealth, and it is only new wealth that makes a country prosperous.

Suppose you and I come by some stocks on the market tomorrow. We may sell those stocks at a considerable profit, but we must remember that that profit would come from the man who owned them before. No new wealth would be created by those city slicker methods of getting money on the markets, or on land or on anything of that kind. Having said that, I am in favour of the maintenance of prices. The amendment says minimum prices; I think it really means ceiling prices when the thing is worked out. Having said that I cannot come back and deny my first broad statement. But I am going to say to you, sir, that the minute we take the economy of Canada and patch it here and there and elsewhere with floors and ceilings, the closer we come to the destruction of our whole economy.

Mr. Wright: How about tariffs?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I will tell the hon. member something about tariffs. This country was made by tariffs put on by Sir John A. Macdonald under the national policy. Tariffs made this country, and the United States was made in exactly the same way.

Mr. Wright: Why not give the farmer the same protection?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am going to give you even more than that in a minute. Tariffs were the beginning of the industrial era of this country. We must always remember that tariffs were first made by any country as a means of self-protection. In those days the idea of nations getting along with one another was never agitated for or even suggested. It may seem strange for me to say this because I stand where I do. After all the tinkering we have done with markets, and since we have grown industrially, I am very much in favour of letting our products and our money take their places in the world's markets. Let us find out what our products are worth, and what our money is worth. My thinking now is all along that particular line.

I am in favour of holding the prices support act, as called for in the bill. I think that if we quit playing with our economy, if we quit this patchwork business, and let our goods find their own level in world markets, the better it will be for Canada. I do not mean world markets of the kind we have established recently, for example, in coarse grains. I know that what I say now will be very unpopular with all those pools and farm organizations in western Canada, which have been operated on a basis of hatred for the Winnipeg grain exchange, hatred, selfishness—

Mr. Ferrie: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Speak for myself! I am speaking for myself, and if you are capable of speaking for yourself you will have plenty of opportunity tomorrow.

So long as greed and fear are motivating factors in human conduct—and in my judgment they are, and I think they always will be—requests will be made for special legislation. But it is time the dominion parliament and government stopped being a "gimme" organization every time we are approached by any group of our population who are seeking a handout here and there.

Why should we tie our prices in this agricultural matter to 1944-48? The answer is that it certainly suits the producers of farm products, because it was in that period that, if we did not reach the peak, we reached a very high level. You may think, sir, that I have been arguing against this legislation, but I come back to say this. I support the idea of the extension of the Agricultural Prices Support Act. But I say at the moment I am not prepared to commit myself to having this parliament saying about one product, or one related series of products, that we shall maintain a certain level. True the amendment saves itself by saying that the relationship shall be preserved. I am one of those who hope that it will be preserved. I am one of those who know that in the country from which I come the farmers for a long time have had the short end of the stick. In other words, there was not any proper relationship between the prices they got for that which they produced and the prices they paid for that which they bought. I know that is a good slogan, but I wonder just how much it means. We say that in producing grain we get so much a bushel. Then we are told that the price of a binder or a combine in these modern days has been going up and up. But I have never had anyone yet tell me how many bushels of grain a binder will cut. I have never had anyone tell me how many bushels of grain a combine will cut and thresh. Until we look at the thing in that way we cannot make a comparison. We cannot just take the percentage of the rise in price, because we sell grain and produce every year. We buy a binder once every ten years and a combine in roughly the same time. Therefore in our thinking about these matters we must average the increase in the price of a farm implement over the period of time, and over the produce that it will process, if that is the proper word to use.

You may ask me, sir, where does the member for Calgary West stand on this thing. I am going to say that the principle of the relationship in our prices is more than a pious hope. It is something which is interrelated, very sound. We know that the farmer has got the worst of it in times gone by.

I now come back to the remark made by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright). I say to him that there is something in his question to me about tariffs. Tariffs are of two kinds. As a matter of fact they were put on for the protection of Canadian industry. Just suppose I made tin dippers over here—I know this is beneath his dignity—and suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made tin dippers over there, the gangway being the boundary between the two countries. A protective tariff was one which permitted me, and only permitted me, to be able to sell my tin dippers at the same price that he sold his, which were produced at a smaller cost because he had a tremendous marketing area compared with my small one. I think, sir, that those days have gone by. I refer to one particular company, the Massey-Harris Company. I remember years ago we had to protect Canadian implement companies; but today the Massey-Harris Company is one of the greatest sellers of farm implements in the United States of America. We all know that they practically saved American crops some two or three years ago by putting in their combines down near the gulf, working north and thereby practically saving the crop.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

My point is this: I think our industry—and I am saying this in answer to what my hon. friend asked—I think our industry in many lines has achieved a place where it does not need governmental protection from anybody. I will go a little further and say that those people who cannot operate without protection should first look to their own internal economy, their own costs, so that they do not need the cushion of a tariff.

Free trade, you say? No. I realize there are many conditions entering into this. If your labour costs in an exporting country—and we import into this one—are away below those of our workmen, then certainly you have to have a tariff. Why? Not to protect the workmen as such, but to protect the great numbers of our population who are engaged in working, perhaps not in that industry, but in one way or another. Our duty here, obviously, is to do the greatest good for the greatest number of people within our dominion. I think the amendment is wrong in endeavouring to tie the Canadian economy whose fluctuations are many, and some of them very quick indeed—I think it is wrong to endeavour to tie that economy to a given area, 1944 to 1948, without regard to the many things which may and easily can happen.

So, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for the amendment, because it is an advocacy of the principle of tying our agricultural economy to the rest of our industrial economy. And by that I mean this, that I think it is perfectly true that the farmers get too little of the income of Canada. That did increase—and in this particular period it almost reached parity, or in any event reached a point which was the nearest our farmers had ever come to it.

In view of that fact I am going to vote for the amendment. I do not like the 1944 to 1948 period or any other period being fixed as a yardstick; because we can find from the bureau of statistics in any year what proportion of the income those persons who were engaged in agriculture, having regard to the population, got, as compared with those persons who were otherwise engaged. So I am going to vote for the amendment in affirmation of the principle of a proper relationship between the economy of the farm and the rest of our economy—and for no other reason.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to comment on the amendment, but I have a few observations to make concerning the bill itself. Before proceeding with that, however, I think I should refer to one remark by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) in that surprising speech of his. Apparently he failed to see that when tariffs were put on they put a ceiling under prices of all protected goods. Call it a floor, if you like. They put a floor under all protected goods, when a tariff was put on. Yet he was opposing the idea of a floor. Probably in the quiet of his room he will figure that out.

We are living in a world in which men work together in giant combinations. The hon. member for Calgary West appeared to be objecting to having the farmers combine together—the farmers, who are the least protected of all the producers in our economy—to protect themselves against giant combinations of men far more powerful than they are. To me that was a matter of some astonishment.

Then, I should like to turn for a moment to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras).

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Blackmore: A dozen, if the hon. member would like to ask them.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I will not ask the hon. member to be that generous, because if I asked a dozen he would have to stop speaking. I shall ask only one. Perhaps I did not hear the hon. member correctly, but I thought I heard him say that I objected to farmers getting their fair share of the national income.

Mr. Blackmore: No, I did not say that. But I do not wonder the hon. member could not hear what I said, because as soon as I began to speak, twenty-five or so members of the House of Commons seemed to think that was the signal for them to start talking among themselves.

What I said was this: I pointed out—and I wish to be fair to the hon. member—that he seemed to object to having farmers have a floor under their prices.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): No.

Mr. Blackmore: But he failed to see that when tariffs are put on it automatically puts a floor under the price of every article that is protected by those tariffs.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Does the hon. member wish me to answer? Perhaps I should not.

Mr. Blackmore: If you wish.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Perhaps I will have eleven other chances; but when I use dice they have both the seven and the eleven. I prefer to play it that way.

The point I am trying to make is this: I never consciously made any such suggestion, that I do not believe in floor prices for agriculture. As I said, I believe agriculture is our basic industry and our greatest industry, and I would prefer to let other products relate themselves to the prices of agriculture, rather than have us start on a tariff basis by basing our farm position on those other products. I believe agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and everything should relate itself to it.

Mr. Blackmore: Well, I am very glad the hon. member for Calgary West was given the opportunity to put himself right, because he certainly had put himself wrong.

May I turn to the hon. member for Provencher. If I recall correctly—and I cannot be sure that I did understand him properly—he said that ICCH would result in a lowering of prices in all the contributing nations. Did I understand the hon. member correctly?

Mr. Jutras: Yes.

Mr. Blackmore: Well, I can understand why the hon. member would say that, if ICCH is to be supported with money taken from the people by taxation. But if ICCH were supported by money created by the state—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Never mind laughing. Let us remember that, when the hon. member for Provencher laughs at that, he confesses he does not know anything about what to do in a situation concerning which something has to be done.

There is my question. The nations today have not the slightest idea how to distribute the abundance of the Americas among the needy areas of Japan, Siam, Malaya and the other suffering countries. They have not any idea of how to do it. And because the United States does not understand how to do it, I understand that country is going to limit the number of acres in production this year to the extent of 30 million acres. That means that she is not going to produce on 30 million acres of land right at a time when there are over a billion people in the world starving for the production of those 30 million acres.

Mr. Jutras: The hon. member says that the United States and Canada and all the other democracies have no solution, but they have a good solution. In fact, I think they have a solution to the problem which will be implemented in the relatively near future. I propose to deal with that at some length when we take up the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Blackmore: We always hear of what is going to be done, but we never do see the start of it. The best evidence I can think of to show that the United States and Canada do not know what to do is this resolution proposed in the United States to reduce her production by 30 million acres next year. Imagine the richest nation on the face of the earth with $4,000 million worth of agricultural products on hand not going to produce on 30 million acres of land when there are over a billion people starving!

Mr. Gardiner: They are not going to do any such thing.

Mr. Blackmore: That is what is reported in the latest news.

Mr. Gardiner: No it is not.

Mr. Blackmore: I did not come down prepared to speak on that, but I have plenty of evidence to satisfy the minister.

Mr. Gardiner: They are going to stop producing grain because if they do not the soil will all blow away. However, they are going to produce grass and cattle instead.

Mr. Blackmore: We shall have to discuss that later on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Do hon. members imagine that I cannot do it now?

An hon. Member: We are pulling up apple trees.

Mr. Blackmore: You are pulling up apple trees and you do not know what to do with the fruit production of British Columbia.

Mr. Hatfield: Giving it away.

Mr. Blackmore: You are destroying the incentive to produce hogs. You are worrying constantly about surpluses. That means that you do not know how to get those surpluses to the nations where they are needed. You do not need any more proof than that; it is right there.

An hon. Member: They never thought of that.

Mr. Blackmore: I suggest that members of parliament ought to be more responsible. They are here to find a solution for these problems and until we put our minds to it we will never find it. If money were created representing the surplus goods within the nation and turned into the ICCH fund with which to market the goods abroad, then the goods could be marketed abroad even in the soft currency countries without any additional tax or burden on the nation sending the goods abroad. That is just plain common sense. I know that people shake their heads because they do not understand it, but that is no sign that it cannot be understood. I taught school 21 years and I had many students who did not understand the binomial theorem, but it was capable of being understood. If you would only stop talking and think you could learn a lot more.

The ICCH can be made an effective instrument in distributing goods abroad. Any one who has given any thought to the FAO and the ICCH realizes that they offer the solution. Then we are met with the argument put forward by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) who says that it cannot be done. His contention is in effect that we have to cease producing. The position of the United States today is that she has $4,000 million worth of goods and she does not know what to do with them. Let the hon. member for Provencher think that over. Knowing the circumstances, yet he persists in his attitude toward debt-free money created by the state to represent the surplus goods within the state. Until he realizes the possibilities of such debt-free money he is utterly useless to help guide this generation out of its troubles.

I should like to say a word or two about the bill. The right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was out west recently warning the people of Alberta and the west to discontinue sending their cattle to the United States in such numbers. He told the people in High River and elsewhere that they were going too far. The minister is reported in a Canadian Press dispatch in the Lethbridge Herald as saying:

> I cannot agree that you were justified in getting down to the usual number of breeding stock.

I have a high degree of respect for the right hon. minister but may I say to him that I have been a stock producer ever since I was old enough to get on a horse. I know what it is to handle cattle. I am thinking now the way the ordinary stock man is thinking when he hears what the minister says. He is saying, "Now, then, Mr. Minister, I wonder if you are prepared to give us a guarantee that two years from now we will be getting a price that will pay us? What guarantee are you prepared to give us? If you are not prepared to give us a guarantee of a profitable price and a market two years from today, surely it ill becomes you to come out here and tell us not to get rid of our breeding stock."

Men who lived during the days of 1918 and 1919 know what can happen. Many of us went through experiences that made us sweat blood. I well recall July, 1919, when you could sell beef-breeding animals at good prices. I recall my brother selling our herd of breeding stock, cows, calves and everything at $83 per head. Then we went through to the spring with a certain number of others and the price we got for those would not pay for one-half the hay we had put into the cattle during the year. Scores and scores of men who had produced beef cattle, many for as long as 25 years, were ruined utterly and have never recovered.

I am speaking on behalf of the beef producers. My constituency produces lots of good beef. What evidence have we that two years from today the bottom will not drop completely out of the prices of beef cattle? There is no evidence at all.

Mr. Gardiner: You have had five years' experience.

Mr. Blackmore: We had a good many years' experience before 1919.

Mr. Gardiner: Just one year after the war.

Mr. Blackmore: We had a good deal of experience before 1919. Prices kept going down until in 1932 one of my brothers who was handling our stock industry told me that our balance on the year's operations showed that we were $5 worse off for every cow we had on the range. When you counted the cost of breeding, the cost of vaccination for everything like septicemia and all the other things, the cost of raising the calves and so on we were $5 worse off for every cow we had on the range. We are lucky it was not worse. These illustrations are sufficient to show the kind of thing that beef producers face. I do not blame the minister for saying what he said, but may I suggest that if he wants western beef producers to keep their breeding stock he had better give some sort of guarantee of a floor price for the beef and of a market for it. That is all it takes.

The same thing is true of hogs. I think the minister referred to the hog situation, and he said it was very similar to that of beef. All that men need is some sort of guarantee that the price of hogs is not going to go down below a certain level. They will produce the hogs, and plenty of them. It was estimated the other day by one of the periodicals in my constituency that we are not producing one hog now where we were producing six only a very few years ago. There is a reason for that. It is the fact that the men who would be producing hogs have completely lost confidence in the Department of Agriculture. They do not believe they will be protected in the matter of the price for their hogs and the cost of the goods entering into the production thereof. If we want hogs let us guarantee a floor price and a market, and we shall get hogs in abundance.

Mr. Gardiner: We have had five years' experience of that too.

Mr. Blackmore: We have had five bitter years.

Mr. Gardiner: The price went up every year.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, the price went up, but it is a different story when you come to the cost of the things entering into the production of the hog. It is easy enough to look at the price of the hog, but when you look at the price of the barley and the other things entering into the production of the hog you find the bliss has a string tied to it.

According to the press the minister has just advocated that we reduce our wheat acreage by three million acres. I think that is a sound idea. He suggests that we produce oats and barley instead of wheat, and I think that is a sound idea, but it will not do much good to produce oats and barley if we are not sure of a good market for the hogs and cattle we produce with the oats and barley. Once more the soundness or unsoundness of the proposal depends upon prices and markets. I take quite a different view from the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith). Bless his heart, I do not believe he has ever had anything to do with the producing of real wealth in his life. I do not think he knows anything at all about what it costs to produce hogs, cattle, milk, cream, butter, eggs, or any of these things. He has stayed in town and probably lived on the cream of it all.

I say the time has come when farmers as the producers of the fundamental values of the nation must be protected against the attacks of well organized men who would destroy them if they had the chance. As the minister will argue—and correctly—the act is designed to give the farmer that sort of protection, and because it is so designed I support the minister in introducing the bill.

So far as I can see, there is no reason why there should not be a guarantee given for prices and markets in connection with all kinds of meats. I find in the October report of IFAP—I find it difficult to remember all these fantastic letter names—that there is not going to be any danger of a surplus of meats in the world so far as they can see. Here is the quotation on page 2 of the October issue:

> There is no serious prospect of surplus either in hard or soft currency areas for a number of commodities, e.g., meats other than pork.

They do not seem to be quite as hopeful about pork as they do about other meats, but I read that to indicate that we do not need to be afraid to encourage the production of meats if we are prepared to be wise in protecting the farmers' prices and markets.

As several members have already said, our greatest market is the home market in Canada. We have not begun yet to use our home market. I suppose there are millions of people in Canada who are not in a position to have the beef they would like to eat, and a good many other fine things that the farmers are prepared to produce. These potential consumers in Canada can all be made actual consumers, the potential home market can be made an actual effective market, if wise measures are adopted in respect of the Canadian economy. These wise measures will be monetary. Later on I expect to quote the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to the effect that our troubles are monetary. The trouble with the home market, like all markets in so far as they obtain for Canada, is a lack of appropriate monetary measures.

As to foreign markets, what is the trouble there? The minister himself has made the statement quite definitely that the trouble with our foreign markets is a lack of correct monetary measures. There is something wrong with the money. I think I will quote the passage in which the minister wisely made that statement. In a speech which he made before the food and agricultural organization at Washington on November 25, 1949, he said:

> Our monetary difficulties today threaten to reproduce the situation which existed twenty years ago, a lack of that free movement of food from those with food to spare to those in want.

That is perfectly correct.

> Unless some way can be found of solving this problem, we cannot hope for that "all-out" effort by exporting countries that is needed, if the people of the whole world are to be adequately fed.

The minister there speaks just as though he were becoming a Social Crediter, as if he were beginning to see the vision of Social Credit which would be the greatest honour that the minister has had conferred on him in his life, because he would then be able to see the way out of our difficulties.

It is one thing to say there are difficulties. I am glad that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) is in the house now and a bit merry because of what I have just said. It is one thing to say there are monetary difficulties and it is another thing to tell what to do to remove them. The problem confronting the Minister of Finance and the other members of the government is what to do about these monetary difficulties. Up to the present time there has not been a word from them to indicate that they know what to do.

I should like to deal for a minute or two with the matter of ICCH inasmuch as the hon. member for Provencher has brought it up in the debate. I can imagine that a great many people in the country would like to know something about what it is. I should like to quote certain passages from this IFAP periodical of October to give the people who will be reading Hansard an idea of what ICCH is. On page 3 I find the following:

> ICCH should be constituted as a public corporation with a capital fund equivalent to $5 billion. National quotas in this capital fund should be based on the national incomes of the member countries and be payable in the currency of the subscribing country. Twenty per cent of each country's quota should be payable on joining ICCH for the general fund of ICCH (referred to as the "free" capital or "revolving fund" of ICCH). The remainder of a country's subscription would be callable by the board on consent of the country concerned and earmarked, when subscribed, for the purchase of surplus commodities in that country. The ICCH should be empowered to accept subscriptions in convertible currencies from any country, in addition to its authorized quota, for the purchase of surpluses of the contributing country. All receipts and outgoings from transactions arising from original earmarked capital or added contributions, as distinct from "free" capital, should be held in a special account for the contributing country. Replenishment of capital, when needed, would be dependent upon additional subscriptions of capital by member countries burdened with surpluses.

Further down that page we have two other paragraphs which, taken with the one I just read, I think will give anyone a fairly good picture of the objective in view and the means by which it is proposed to attain that objective:

> (1) The exporting country would sell surplus wheat to ICCH at full market price and the purchase would be financed by the exporter contributing the value of the wheat to ICCH as additional capital. ICCH would then sell quantities of wheat to the importing country in addition to and not as a substitution for its usual purchases. ICCH would take in payment the currency of the importing country, even if it were at the time inconvertible. The importing country would guarantee against loss by currency devaluation. ICCH would hold this currency to the credit of the exporting country until enlarged trade or restored currency convertibility permitted clearing the account.
>
> (2) The exporter would sell surplus wheat to ICCH at a reduced price if the payment were in an immediately acceptable (presumably convertible) currency and provided that the quantity of wheat went to some special use in addition to regular consumption by the importing country. Such transactions would be financed from the revolving fund of ICCH established by the initially paid-in 20 per cent of capital, but would not normally involve any loss to ICCH.

I imagine practically everyone realizes, as I am sure the Minister of Agriculture must realize, that this proposal would be far too costly for the nations to participate in if the money required to finance it had to be taken from the people of those countries by means of taxation or by adding to their national debts. But if a contributing country were able to create debt-free money against the surpluses within its borders and make a contribution of that created money, the situation would be very different. It has been suggested—and perhaps this is the suggestion the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) has in mind, which he is keeping such a secret—that an ordinary nation like Canada, in order to finance the sale of its surpluses in soft currency countries, or countries lacking United States or Canadian dollars, would raise the money itself to pay for the goods it was going to sell abroad on credit, and would itself buy the goods and send them abroad, thereby eliminating the need to use the international organization. I do not think I would have any objection to that, except this; that if the nation had to raise the money through taxation of its people to provide a fund with which to buy surpluses of goods in order to give them away, which is practically what it amounts to, that nation would soon find the burden utterly insupportable, and would resort to a limiting of production rather than go to the expense of buying its surpluses and sending them abroad.

This brings us to the feasibility or otherwise of the creation of debt-free money. I do not propose to enter upon a discussion of that matter this evening. I have discussed it already in considerable detail in speeches in this house on March 16 and February 21 of this year, and October 25 of last year. I believe the arguments I advanced on those occasions would justify anyone in giving pretty careful thought to the feasibility of the proposal to create debt-free money within a nation to the extent of the surplus goods to be found available for sale. I submit once more that unless this government and the government of the United States resort to some such device they are going to find their agricultural problem completely bewildering, as the United States is finding its agricultural problem today. Already in the United States there has been talk about the dumping of their products upon the markets of the world at low prices. If any action is taken along that line it will more and more destroy our chances of selling our goods, and will generally demoralize the markets of the world.

This indicates the sort of problems which confront us. We simply cannot solve those problems by laughing at any new ideas that come along. In the five years mentioned by the minister—yes, in the last fifty years—we have pretty well proved that the problem cannot be solved by any methods followed by the government so far. If Canada would create debt-free money, which it would be possible for her to create against the surpluses she could easily have, then we would be able to accept sterling in payment for our goods sold to Britain. Or we would be able to accept any other soft currency, with which we could shop around and obtain many of the things we need. We would be able to store our surpluses and have something on hand in case of trouble. We would be able to finance barter arrangements, such as apparently were envisaged by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) the other day in that forward-looking speech of his.

The only limiting factor would be our productive capacity, together with our ability to become self-sufficient. Just being able to produce one or two commodities would not be enough. We should have to become more and more self-sufficient so our money would have a sound base, and then we would have no difficulty in creating debt-free money and putting it into circulation. Granted those two considerations, sufficient production from our abundant resources and a sufficient variety of production, we could do a great many things with debt-free money which to the orthodox financial mind appear utter impossibilities. Then we would be able to make ours a really expanding economy, rather than the restricted economy it is rapidly becoming.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word on this measure in view of some of the statements made in the debate thus far. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said every farmer realized that he was better off now than ever before. In my opinion that is not a fact. The hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Bater) has told us what a great job the members of this government have been doing and how well off our farmers are. Then I listened to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) this afternoon suggesting, if I understood him correctly, that we should concentrate on the United States market rather than the United Kingdom market. Certainly I am one of those who have always been in favour of the United States market, but the sad position is that the farmers of the United States invariably have the very same type of surpluses we have, and that makes things rather difficult.

Every year since I have been here I have stated that never since confederation have the farmers of this country received their proper share of the national income. They have never done so up to date. If my memory serves me correctly, according to the figures put out by this government, during the first world war the agriculturists of Canada received approximately 29 per cent of the national income. During the recent world war they received approximately 18 per cent of the national income.

We have been discussing markets of recent years, and current markets. According to the Sanford Evans statistical bureau, which is very reliable, a detailed survey for the first full calendar year following the war, 1946, reveals that our farmers in Canada suffered a loss of $378 million, over and above the great loss they had taken in the marketing of wheat. This is for livestock and coarse grains alone. This is a gigantic sum. When you have listened to the discussion today on the matter of tariffs and what not, when you take this amount of $378 million over and above the hundreds of millions of dollars lost in the marketing of wheat, it makes the great losses our western farmers have suffered because of tariffs look like peanuts.

In considering the matter of a formula, I have always advocated, since this act was brought into being, some formula based to some extent on parity; that is, a basis related to what it costs a farmer to produce these commodities. I believe that is a reasonable request. The farmer has not been receiving that. I have given you the figures for the full year of 1946, in which the farmer lost that great amount of money in comparison with what his neighbours in the United States received for marketing the same quantity of commodities. I believe we should bear that in mind. As I say, I followed the member for Provencher, but if I understood his argument it was not in agreement with a pamphlet put out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). It is entitled "Foreign Trade" and is dated December 10, 1949. It states:

> During recent years, as much as 44 per cent of our farm production has entered export trade. To take wheat again, as an example, about 75 per cent of our production has been sold abroad.

I realize that although some hon. members made their entire speech on wheat, it does not come under this act. Other farm production, however, is tied to the price of wheat; you cannot get away from that. These are rather startling figures. If we lose that export trade, then our farm people will not enjoy prosperity. I have never known a time in any nation, when agriculture was not prosperous, that anyone else in that nation was prosperous. I do not think you can get away from that. It is very important.

I was pointing out that it is quite important that the farm producer should receive prices which will compensate him for the cost of production. I have an interesting article before me, an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 20. It is entitled "It's Cheaper in Minneapolis." It reads as follows:

> Here in Winnipeg comparable cars cost approximately 20 per cent more than in Minneapolis. Refrigerator, range, vacuum cleaners, radio, and washing machine cost is 30 per cent more. In part this is traceable to the depreciated value of the Canadian dollar—90 cents in terms of U.S. currency—in great part however, it is due to the Canadian tariff and various Canadian taxes.

The article goes on to point out:

> It is also possible because in all cases the articles chosen for comparison were articles produced by the same companies either in the United States or in branch plants in this country. All must pay the 10 per cent premium either for the whole article or for the imported components which go into the Canadian-produced goods.
>
> To this there is one exception—electric ranges, the standards for which differ in Canada and the United States but do not materially affect costs.

The article points out that these two central points, Minneapolis and Winnipeg, are in the centre of the two nations, about the same distance from the great manufacturing centres. In the case of a Ford automobile—I suppose some people think our farmers are not entitled to an automobile—the price in Winnipeg is $2,037, and in Minneapolis it is $1,597. There is a like comparison in trucks, which are essential on farms today. In automotive parts, an eight-cylinder assembly for a Ford costs $255 in Winnipeg, and $231 in Minneapolis. An RCA Victor eight-tube radio phonograph costs $289 in Winnipeg, and $150 in Minneapolis. A certain type of electric range costs $369 in Winnipeg, and $244 in Minneapolis. There are many other articles listed on which similar comparisons are made.

On the following day, March 21, another article appeared on the editorial page of the Winnipeg Free Press comparing these prices. It is entitled "You pay more in Winnipeg." This article deals with electrical goods. It points out that electric clocks cost 40 per cent more in Canada than the same articles in Minneapolis. Glassware, clothing and other articles are also compared. It points out that the tariff is somewhat responsible for this condition of affairs. I do not believe there was ever a time since confederation when certain of these industries had greater protection than they have today, in these controls, taxes and embargoes applied by this government. All this adds to the cost of the agricultural producer of this country, and to the cost of living of every consumer of this country. There is no argument whatever about that. During a debate the other day, I placed on Hansard a set of figures which had to do with agricultural products in their raw state, and a comparison of the prices at St. Paul, Winnipeg and Minneapolis of the manufactured article. In the majority of cases the prices for the raw materials were considerably higher in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg, but when one came to purchase the processed article the prices were reversed, and were higher in Winnipeg than in Minneapolis. In many cases the cost of living in Minneapolis is cheaper than in Winnipeg. I believe that is proof that there is something radically wrong with our set-up in this country.

I am not unmindful of the fact that, I believe it was two years ago, a cost of living inquiry was conducted. It cost the taxpayers of this country a large sum of money, and proved nothing. Many members of this house spent a lot of time on that committee, but the outcome was a farce. Nothing was proven, despite the great cost of that committee. I just wanted to point out how unfairly the farmer has been treated by the government of the day. I have given the house a set of figures covering the cost of articles, which I think are essential on any farm, and which affect the consumers of this country as well. Neither the farm producer nor the Canadian consumer has been fairly dealt with by this government up to date. I think it is essential that we pass this type of legislation.

The ex-prime minister, in statements in 1943 and in the years following that, and the Minister of Agriculture as well, have made statements that, in view of the fact the agricultural producer in Canada was not receiving for his commodities prices comparable to those received in other countries, this situation should be taken into account in the years following the war. It is true that some articles bring fair prices today. I do think it is essential that a formula of some nature be written into this act, whereby the farm producer would have some idea, before the production period, of the basis upon which he would be paid during that production year. I believe that is very important. It is not only important to the farm producer, but it is also important to the consumer of this country.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): I know the house is anxious to have this bill passed, but I think we have an opportunity here which we should not pass by. The Liberal government has more municipal men with practical experience in its ranks today than it has ever had before. The time was never more opportune for every one of the Liberal members to join hands and see that the farmers get a fair deal.

I listened with much attention to that great orator from Calgary West when he spoke tonight.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): This is a stage entrance.

Mr. Sinnott: Lo and behold, here he comes!

Mr. Knowles: Never misses a cue.

Mr. Sinnott: He is one of those men who are experts on everything that goes on in the house. I must compliment him on his fine flow of speech. It reminds me of some of the gas wells that they have in Alberta. But after he has finished and you boil it all down it is just an amalgamation of words, and some of them big ones.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That is what a sentence is. You will find out one of these times.

Mr. Sinnott: We have been waiting for a long time to find that out.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): How true that is.

Mr. Sinnott: I have heard him speak so long and say so little in this house—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Now you are being brutal.

Mr. Sinnott: Too much emphasis has been put on the suggestion that the farmers have been getting too much for their products.

Mr. Drew: Who said that?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Whom is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. Sinnott: There is a big difference between what the farmer is getting and what the consumer pays. It is time that the consumers formed an organization to bring prices down. Last January I was on a farm in Saskatchewan and saw a 60-dozen crate of eggs. They graded 75 per cent A large, and they averaged out at 25 cents a dozen. Look at what the consumer has to pay for them in the store. There is a great difference. Would you say that the farmers are getting too much money for their eggs when they average out at 25 cents a dozen?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): No.

Mr. Ross (Souris): You are insulting the poor hen.

Mr. Sinnott: I have heard the hon. member for Calgary West say that he would rather starve than go back to the farm. That statement was made here.

Mr. Sinclair: He probably would, anyhow.

Mr. Sinnott: Has anybody heard of lawyers having a floor under their tariff, or a ceiling over it? They get all the traffic will bear.

Mr. Cruickshank: And they use margarine, too.

Mr. Sinnott: That is why we should give the farmer the fair deal.

I am in agreement with what some of the speakers have said here tonight as to a long period of time. I maintain that when a government is elected for five years it should proclaim a five-year program.

Mr. Cardiff: Right.

Mr. Sinnott: Back in 1919 and 1920 cattle were selling at a fair price. In 1919 and 1920 steers on my farm were selling for $50 after being fed for a whole winter. In 1921 the same steer sold for $33. That is why the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) pointed out that the farmers should know in advance what they are going to get for their produce. If we knew that, we would produce the stuff; there is no doubt about that. They are not going to produce pork, beef or anything else if they know they are in for a drop in price in the next year or two, because after all it takes three years to produce a good steer, and we want to be steered the right way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Even a steer can try.

Mr. Sinnott: It is all very well to say that the farmers are looking for protection. Tonight the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) stole quite a bit of my thunder. He read from a Winnipeg paper of March 20—and, I may say, it is a good Liberal paper.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Which one?

Mr. Sinnott: The hon. member quoted from the Free Press tonight. It points out where there is protection. In Winnipeg washing machines sell for $249.50; in Minneapolis they sell for $189.95. In Winnipeg Arrow shirts sell for $4.75 and in Minneapolis for $3.95. I suppose the men in Winnipeg are entitled to the same kind of shirt as they buy in Minneapolis. We have heard the remark, "he pretty near lost his shirt". Sometimes they do. Manufacturers obtain tariffs and preference for a number of years, but they never have to contend with the conditions that the farmers are up against. Farmers have a hundred and one things to contend with. They have to contend with grasshoppers, drought, army worms—

Mr. Cruickshank: And the Tory party.

Mr. Sinnott: For instance, this year I saw crops that produced 40 to 50 bushels to the acre, already swathed, all ready for the binder, and the next day they were covered with two feet of water. Was that any fault of the farmer? The farmers have these things to contend with. Therefore I say that every hon. member who has anything to do with farmers should get up and say his piece.

While I support this bill I still say to the Minister of Agriculture that he should have a five-year program.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I said at the beginning, when the minister introduced the resolution preceding this bill, that I was going to support it, and I have not changed my mind since. One thing that has worried me a great deal is that the prices that have been guaranteed to the farmer are all packers' prices. The price is not set for the farmer at all. The packer is getting the 32½ cents that we hear about in the house. One hon. gentleman brought up the matter of the price of eggs. The farmer was getting 18 cents, 20 cents and 25 cents; whereas the packer or the wholesaler is guaranteed a floor price of 38 cents, and that price comes into effect after they have left the possession of the farmer. That kind of legislation is not protecting the farmer; it is protecting the middleman, and that is what I object to.

The Minister of Agriculture has pointed the way. I do not know whether the farmers of Canada will follow it. He says that if they are not satisfied they should find markets for their own produce. It should be easy for us farmers in any part of Canada to set up co-operative organizations, and follow the produce to its logical end, namely, the consumer. As I see it, that is the only solution to the problem. I do not care what good intentions the Minister of Agriculture or the government has to give the farmer a square deal. If these prices are all set at wholesale levels after the products have left the farmer, then the farmer is still at the mercy of the rank and file who wish to buy.

I am supporting this amendment for the simple reason that it improves the minister's bill. My good friend from Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) tells us that there are too many controls in it. The only time we have ever had prosperity in this country was when we had controls on farm produce. That was during the first world war and the second world war, and during the time of controls since. Those were the most prosperous times Canada ever had, so far as the Canadian farmer getting his fair share of the national income is concerned.

So I am surprised to hear a sensible member like the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth speak that way about controls. I have just come back from Great Britain, and they have all kinds of controls over there.

An hon. Member: Do they like them?

Mr. Bryce: Yes, they glory in them. Indeed, they are so good that the Conservative candidates and the Liberal candidates said, "If you will only vote for us, we will keep them in operation." Every party agreed to that. There was no plank in either the Conservative or the Liberal platform over there that proposed to take one of those controls off. May I say to hon. members sitting to my right that it was a Conservative government that brought in controls. They were brought in in connection with the milk board. But they made it a control such as some we have dilly-dallied with in Canada; they never put any teeth in it. Then, after they saw it would not work, they made it compulsory.

I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) will agree with me that controls over there are doing a first-class job. Where there used to be five or six trucks going down the road to pick up milk, only one truck goes now. Where a farmer was trucking to Glasgow with his wilk, he now sends it to the local creamery. Everybody gets the same price; everybody knows what he is going to get. A person does not need to wait and see; he knows what he will get.

That is a good thing. My hon. friend from Brant-Wentworth really surprises me. Here is what a former prime minister was going to do for the people, when he brought in the marketing act. I am referring to page 2475 of Hansard for 1934. Section 14 of that act said this:

> Every person who fails to comply with any order or determination of the board or of a local board or any regulation of the governor in council shall be guilty of an offence and punishable on summary conviction with a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment not exceeding three months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Nothing like that is being done in this bill. We are doing something for the good of the farmers. It will be recalled that it was the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett who introduced the marketing legislation to which I have just referred. There is compulsion there, all right.

I believe the Canadian Bar Association has more representatives in the House of Commons than has any other group. Yet they are the first to rise in their places and tell us about the farmers losing their freedom. They say the farmer will have no freedom left. Let me say there is no organization today that has greater control over its members than has that bar association. They say whether a person may practise, where he will practise, and how long he will practise. It is the finest closed shop in Canada today.

I shall not speak at greater length respecting the bar association, because there are other members who will wish to speak in this debate. Here we have controls. Whenever a farmer rises in the House of Commons and tries to assert himself, tries to handle his produce and get all he can for it, we hear this hue and cry that his freedom is being taken away—"Let us go back to the old days, when the farmer was the first man to cut his own throat."

I have said enough about hog prices; I do not want to go into that again. But if we had guaranteed forward prices it would be of great advantage to the Canadian farmer. When he spoke this evening the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) took me to task. He said that in my remarks about forward prices I had gone so far as to say that when the cow was bred one knew what he was going to get for the steer. He also took to task the leader of this group, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), for saying that before a cow was bred one knew what he was going to get for the calf. There are none so blind as those who will not see. I can assure my hon. friend that that is a common thing. In Great Britain today one knows what he will get for his steers. Perhaps I should qualify that by saying that one knows he will not have to take less than a certain price quoted three or four years hence. So my hon. friend does not need to laugh at or to ridicule me for saying that that is an actual fact.

Over there they know what they are going to do. In that way one knows where he is going, and what he will get at the end of the road. But the way we have been going, we do not know where we are heading. The Minister of Agriculture is worried about so many people producing wheat today. Why are they producing wheat? They are producing it because they know what they are going to get at the end of so many years' time. They did not know before, but they know now. If he tells them what he will pay for hogs or eggs, then I am sure we will find use for the extra oats and barley he is asking them to grow.

I do not wish to take up more time, because my views are fairly well known in the House of Commons. There is only one thing further on which I should like to straighten out the hon. member for Provencher. When he was referring to exports to the United Kingdom he said they were up 2·6 per cent in volume—or in dollars, I do not know which he said. But he forgot to say that we were not up in agricultural products: we are away down on them. We are up 2·6 per cent on something else.

Mr. Jutras: I am sure the hon. member does not wish to misquote me. I have my notes here. What I did say was the value of agricultural products was up. Strange as it may seem, the facts reveal that there was an increase in the agricultural group.

Mr. Bryce: By price only.

Mr. Jutras: I said that.

Mr. Bryce: That is not volume; we sell in volume.

Mr. Jutras: I said that.

Mr. Bryce: You did not.

Agricultural Prices Support Act

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take only a few moments this evening mainly to speak about the problem which confronts our fruit growers in British Columbia. I shall be brief because the matter was covered fully and completely by the hon. members for Yale (Mr. Jones) and Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I should like to associate myself with what they said in that connection, and to add my voice to those which have been addressed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in requesting that some action be taken now, and that an announcement be made now, as to the assistance to be given to the British Columbia fruit growers, in view of the difficulties they face in marketing the 1949 crop.

There is a good deal of controversy around this question of support prices and support price legislation. It is not my intention to enter fully tonight into that controversy, although I support the principle that some assurance should be given to our farmers that they will have steady prices, that some measure should be provided by which they will be guaranteed their full share of the national income.

Whatever may be the views and controversy with regard to floor prices, it seems to me that there should not be any room for controversy with regard to the extending of assistance this year to the British Columbia apple growers. They are facing an emergency which is not of their own making and against which they are powerless to act, an emergency arising from the loss of their markets. I sometimes think that the permanent solution to the difficulties of constant or recurring surpluses and depressed prices followed by years of shortages and rising prices should not be sought merely in subsidies or a floor prices program, but should be combined with the building up of the domestic market so that we are better able to consume at home some of the things that we produce.

I do not suggest that we could ever make ourselves entirely self-sufficient, but I do think that we should aim constantly at producing in Canada a more balanced economy so that we are not so vulnerable and completely exposed, as we are now to the loss of overseas export markets. I am convinced that no solution will be complete unless and until steps are taken which will build and maintain a domestic market of really large proportions.

I should like to read one section of the Agricultural Prices Support Act which the bill now before us seeks to extend for another year. Section 9, subsection 2 reads:

> In prescribing prices under paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection one of this section, the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

Mr. Gardiner: I should like to correct one statement which the hon. member made. The hon. member suggests that the act is to be extended for just one year whereas the bill provides that the act shall continue in force on and after March 31, 1950.

Mr. Fulton: That was an inadvertent error; the time limit is being removed by the amendment. It seems to me that that section which I just read is the section to which we should be directing our attention, the necessity of ensuring to our farmers a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations. I do not think we can do that by prices support legislation alone because we will be faced, as the fruit growers now are faced, with vanishing markets and then where would we get the revenue to pay the support prices? That would not be available without increasing our population and building up a home market less vulnerable to the adverse conditions which now face our overseas markets. I think the two measures must go hand in hand and I urge the government to round out their prices support program by taking steps to build up our domestic market.

I turn more particularly to the problem faced by our fruit growers. Hon. members have heard of this before and I need not rehearse it in full. Their whole production and marketing program was geared largely to the existence of a market in the United Kingdom which through no fault of their own has now virtually vanished. As has been said before, a fruit grower's program is a matter of twelve to fifteen years. It takes that long to get a tree into full bearing. It is something that cannot be changed overnight. Surely the answer is not to go around pulling out more fruit trees and cutting down production. It seems to me that under those circumstances the fruit growers are entitled to the assistance of support prices, during those years when their markets have vanished, in order to tide them over their difficulties.

I should like to refer to the rising costs with which they are also faced. When you go into a store to buy an apple, particularly one of those wonderful British Columbia apples, you sometimes do not realize the high quality of the product you are getting. Sometimes Ontario members seem to be surprised when they are told what has gone into getting that apple to the market. First there is the planting of the trees, the tending of the trees each year, the spraying, pruning, irrigating, thinning; then there is the buying of the boxes, the packing of the boxes, hauling the boxes to the packing house, grading the apples, stamping the boxes and loading on the railroad cars. All those factors enter into the cost of production and marketing and every single item has increased during the last five years. Our growers are faced with tremendously increased costs and virtually disappearing markets.

As the house knows, the British Columbia growers were faced with a surplus this year that appeared to be unmarketable. Not wanting to see it go to waste and knowing that there was a shortage of this type of food in the United Kingdom they decided to make a gift of one million boxes of apples. The indications are that had they not sent that million boxes to the United Kingdom they would have been faced with a surplus of a million boxes or more for which no market could be found.

In view of what has been said during this debate and on other occasions, I hope the minister will no longer take the position that the British market is not a potential market for Canadian apples. The figures of apples purchased from other soft currency countries and even from the United States completely disprove the contention that the British are now producing their full domestic requirements in apples. I hope the minister will not continue to take the position that the United Kingdom is not an attractive market for us.

I hope he will give careful consideration to the suggestion put forward Thursday by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) that in negotiating food contracts with the United Kingdom in the future he will use every endeavour to persuade them to take $4 million or $5 million out of their allocation to buy apples in Canada instead of concentrating their spending upon wheat and one or two other things on which they now spend relatively large sums.

I ask the minister if he will let us know before this debate is concluded whether he will accede to that request. Will he let us know particularly what assistance will be given to our apple growers this year and when they may expect to receive it?

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can be accused of taking up much of the time of the house on this matter.

An hon. Member: Wrong night.

Mr. Cruickshank: It may be the wrong night, but let us pipe a little prosperity into the farmers of Canada generally as well as into British Columbia. I was not in the house when the floor price under butter was announced. I am not going to talk about fruit because my friends from British Columbia, who have spoken about it previously, know more about it than I do. I am particularly interested in a report I have just received in connection with butter. My information is that certain unscrupulous butter dealers are importing the despicable stuff they call oleomargarine and mixing it with butter.

Mr. Sinclair: Can you prove it?

Mr. Cruickshank: My young colleague took a lot of the time of the house to talk about the pulp industry of the province of British Columbia. I should like to have a couple of minutes to try to improve the lot of the dairy industry, and not entirely at the expense of the pulp men of the province of British Columbia. As I say, the information I have is that certain unscrupulous butter manufacturers, or so-called butter manufacturers, are bringing in oleomargarine, mixing it with butter, and passing it off on the trade. My information also is that under the pure foods act the inspectors are not able to ascertain if oleomargarine has been mixed with butter—

Mr. Sinclair: There is no difference.

Mr. Cruickshank: —if it has less than nine per cent globule fat content. This is a most serious matter to the dairy farmers. I am not going to say anything about the difficulties that the wheat growers and fruit growers are undergoing now. Those matters have been dealt with by various speakers. I am particularly interested in the dairy industry because I happen to own a dairy farm. If this situation is being permitted I want to know if the minister knows anything about it, and I also want to know if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) can tell me whether any complaints have been made as to oleomargarine manufacturers, or if it is possible for his department to ascertain whether oleomargarine is mixed with butter to any extent. The story we have in the province of British Columbia is that this has happened. We have the story that one firm manufacturing butter in the province of Quebec imported a carload of oleomargarine. They have never sold a pound of margarine in their lives before, but they imported a carload of oleomargarine.

Mr. Sinclair: To improve the butter.

Mr. Cruickshank: I should like to know for what reason the oleomargarine was imported. Surely one department of the government must have that information. Before I go on I should like to know whether either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of National Health and Welfare had any knowledge of the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not customary to ask questions of ministers when a bill is before the house on second reading. I suggest that the hon. member might ask his question when the house gets into committee.

Mr. Cruickshank: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Instead of asking a question I will make a statement. This has been done, and if it has not been done either of the two ministers should be able to refute the suggestion that it has been done. I am interested in the protection of the dairy farmers of the Dominion of Canada. I am not asking a question now; I am making a statement.

Mr. Sinclair: You are trying to build a straw man in order to knock it down.

Mr. Cruickshank: My young friend says I am building a straw man. That would be quite easy in Coast-Capilano because they are accustomed to straw men out there. I am making that statement, and if it has not happened I should like to have it refuted. The statement is that oleomargarine has been imported by a butter manufacturing concern in Canada to adulterate genuine butter.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to discuss some aspects of this question. One of the matters to which I should like to refer at the outset is one or two remarks which were made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) regarding the disposal of surplus commodities. It seemed rather strange that he should discuss such a subject when he is a member of the party on the other side of the house inasmuch as the problem of surpluses has resulted from the policies of the government of which he is a follower. He said that some members claim that it is a disgrace to have surplus products destroyed when people in other countries are starving.

Mr. Jutras: Let us be fair, Mr. Speaker. I never made such a statement. What I said was that some members had said that it was a disgrace to have surpluses in the country. That is an entirely different thing altogether.

Mr. Johnston: That is not the way I have it in my notes, and I think I took it down correctly. In any event, it can be verified in Hansard tomorrow. I have not heard anyone on this side of the house say that it was a disgrace to have surpluses. Certainly no member of this party made such a statement. What we and most members on this side of the house have said on more than one occasion is that it is a shame to have surpluses with so many people in want, even in Canada, and have these surpluses destroyed. One of the ways in which surpluses are handled under the present policy of the government—and it is well known to everyone in the house—is to destroy production. As was mentioned a short time ago, we have a surplus of apples. How does the policy of the government deal with that situation? The way they are endeavouring to deal with the surplus of apples in Canada is by paying as high as $4.50 per tree to have the trees pulled up in order to eliminate production.

Mr. Cruickshank: Oh, no.

Mr. Johnston: Oh, yes.

Mr. Cruickshank: When did we ever destroy production?

Mr. Johnston: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) the other day was discussing the situation in British Columbia. He pointed out that they have surpluses in their 1947 and 1948 fruit crops which they still cannot dispose of, and some of that surplus is being destroyed. That is the thing members on this side of the house are complaining about.

Mr. Cruickshank: Where is that?

An hon. Member: Fraser Valley.

Mr. Johnston: Read the speech of the hon. member for Peace River and you will find out where it was.

Mr. Cruickshank: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he tell me in what part of British Columbia fruit has been destroyed?

Mr. Johnston: In Nova Scotia—

Mr. Cruickshank: I deny that. It is not true and cannot be proven.

Mr. Johnston: In Nova Scotia they pulled up apple trees, and that is probably what they will be doing in British Columbia before very long.

Mr. Cruickshank: You said the Fraser valley.

An hon. Member: He did not say the Fraser valley.

Mr. Johnston: The hon. member for Peace River said it was during the election campaign that these surpluses were there.

Mr. Cruickshank: That is an absolutely untrue statement.

Mr. Johnston: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Cruickshank: Oh, don't I? I repeat—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, it could still be and he still would not know what he was talking about.

Mr. Cruickshank: I am not taking that statement. If the hon. member for Peace River is fair he will admit—

Mr. Johnston: Who has the floor now?

Mr. Cruickshank: —that fruit was paid for by the Department of Agriculture. Is that not correct?

Mr. Low: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, speaking in this house the other night I said I went into the town of Yarrow in the constituency of the hon. member and saw most of the 1948 berry crop and most of the 1947 berry crop lying in storage in hogsheads in the basement of the packing plant or out in the railway yard under the sun, and that the farmers had not received any returns for their crops at that time. That was during the election campaign of 1949.

Mr. Johnston: Now, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) has it straight—

Mr. Cruickshank: I haven't got it straight, and neither have you.

Mr. Johnston: Probably he did not know that place was even in his constituency, so we will excuse him; but he will have another opportunity to explain the situation.

Mr. Cruickshank: Did you count the vote in Yarrow?

Mr. Johnston: I believe the time has come when this prices support legislation should be made permanent, and we are pleased to see that is what the minister is endeavouring to do now. The farmers of Canada are in need of such security. They are not begging for it, by any means. It should be realized now that this is something they were promised during the war years. We all recall that during those years, when the prices of agricultural products were restricted and controlled and the farmers were forced to take less than they could get in the open market, they were assured that they would not lose in the long run by having their prices controlled. This is one way the government is taking to see that those promises are kept, at least partly; and for that I think the government should be commended. But of course it depends entirely upon what the floor price is going to be.

At this point may I urge that the floor price should not be below parity price for those things the farmers have to buy. In my judgment it is a shame that some supporters of the government, and more than that some who are in very responsible positions, should be permitted to go about the country making irresponsible statements. Some of the parliamentary assistants have been travelling about the country saying things which are not to the credit of either the party to which they belong or themselves. If those statements are not correct it is time the cabinet ministers, who are responsible for carrying out the policies of this government, corrected them; and it is also time they put these parliamentary assistants in their place. I want to refer to some of those statements for a moment, and I am going to quote from the Manitoba Co-Operator of February 23. The heading is "Hannam says Canadian farmers seeking reasonable price levels," and the dispatch goes on:

> Strong exception was taken by H. H. Hannam, president, Canadian federation of agriculture, to the remarks made by Leslie Mutch, M.P., parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, in an address on Wednesday to the Liberal businessmen's club in Toronto.

Why the assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs should be taking over the Department of Agriculture as well is quite beyond my comprehension; but apparently he is straightening out that department at the same time.

Mr. Gardiner: Everybody tries to run it.

Mr. Johnston: Well, perhaps it is time you got some good advisers rather than the ones who are poaching on your territory. The article goes on:

> Mr. Mutch was quoted as saying that the almost universal demand for some sort of security was evidence of a softening of the moral fibre, a narcotic of the weak-willed, excuse of the lazy and the refuge of the coward.

Mr. Sinnott: Would you call a farmer lazy?

Mr. Johnston: He is being called that by a member of your party.

> Mr. Mutch had classed the farmers of Canada as the second best organized of the "fear-ridden" groups, labour being first.

There is no doubt to whom he was referring with all these adjectives. He was referring to the farmers of Canada; and when he speaks of the farmers being weak-willed, of their policies as an excuse for the lazy, it seems to me he is going beyond the bounds of decency. It is an established fact, as everyone in this house knows, that during the war the farmer did as much work, if not more, for less return than any other worker in Canada; and because that was so they were assured by the minister that in the long run they would not be the losers financially. To have one of the parliamentary assistants come along now and class them as a lazy, weak-willed bunch, and so on, is certainly not deserved.

Mr. Cruickshank: He was speaking of his own group.

Mr. Johnston: He was speaking for the Liberal party, I presume.

Mr. Cruickshank: He was speaking of the parliamentary assistants as a lazy bunch.

Mr. Johnston: The article goes on:

In a statement issued at Ottawa, Mr. Hannam said: "If Mr. Mutch's remarks are to be taken seriously, they exhibit a most unfortunate attitude of mind...

He might have said "state of mind."

. . . and it is sincerely to be hoped he does not reflect the opinion of his minister or his government."

I think it high time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made a statement in that connection, so we may see whether or not the parliamentary assistant was expressing the opinion of his department or of the government, because after all one must remember that he occupies a responsible position.

"His remarks envision a return to the old economic anarchy of the past, wherein every man was for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

Now I would ask the parliamentary assistant who made that statement why, if there is any element of truth in what he said, the farmers are a fear-ridden bunch, or a lazy class of individuals. If there were any truth it would be because of the policies of this government. One has only to refer back to the hungry thirties to recall that one of the most poverty stricken groups in Canada were the farmers, who continually sold their goods for less than the cost of production. No other industrial group in Canada has ever been asked to do that. A short time ago mention was made of these other industrial groups that have protection, and at that time something was said about tariffs. These are a very definite protection for those producing secondary goods. Take the machines the farmer has to buy. The Massey-Harris Company is one of the greatest producers of farm equipment in the world, I would say, with markets all over the world; yet farm machinery is protected by a tariff. Take the manufacturers who make automobiles and trucks. No industrial group in Canada has greater protection; yet those are the very implements the farmer has to buy. So when the farmers ask for a little protection in this prices support act they are not asking for charity. They are only asking for the same thing that other organizations have had ever since Canada was created, and something they were promised because of the low prices they took during the war.

Mr. Gardiner: Why not pass the bill and let them get it?

Mr. Johnston: I am not so sure they will; that is the thing I am fearful of, that by the time this is put into operation the floor prices will be so low the farmers will not be getting anywhere near parity prices. May I say right here that I am of the opinion that the prices should be included in the bill, so the farmers would know exactly what they were going to get. The prices should be based on parity.

When we think of the trend in agricultural prices, it is not much wonder that the farmers across the country are fearful. Let me quote from another clipping which I took from the Manitoba Co-operator of March 23, 1950. It is headed, "Farm living costs advance but total farm costs lower." It reads as follows:

Over-all costs of commodities and services used by Canadian farmers showed a slight drop in the five months from August last year to January this year, while farm living costs increased, according to indexes compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Farther down the article continues:

Reflecting increases for foods, fuel, health and maintenance, and miscellaneous items for both eastern and western Canada, the index of farm family living costs rose from 174·5 for August to 175·3 for January. The latest index was 3·5 points above the index for January, 1949. Clothing and household equipment remained unchanged in the five months.

Indexes for farm equipment and materials increased 4·2 points, rising from 180·2 to 184·4, the latter level comparing with 180·3 in January last year. Among its components, price indexes were higher in January this year than in August for farm machinery, building materials, gasoline, oil and grease, feed, fertilizer, seed and hardware, but was unchanged for binder twine, while all sub-groups moved higher than a year ago except seed.

Is it any wonder then, Mr. Speaker, that the agriculturists are fearful lest the prices which are set under this bill are not going to be sufficient to give them anywhere near parity, when you realize that the figures I have just read indicate that the prices of those things which the farmers buy, and which are necessary to their production are all increasing? Is it any wonder that the farmers are fearful lest the prices which are set under this bill will not be sufficient to give them a fair return? I do not want to talk the bill out, or to carry it past eleven o'clock, but I do want to say that I think the minister would be doing justice to himself and the department if he were to put in this bill a price formula which would be parity for the farmers.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): I am afraid it is rather late to start taking a vote on this bill tonight. We would have hesitated to move an amendment to this bill had it not been for certain statements which the minister made on Thursday during the resolution stage of this bill. It had been hoped that when this act was to be continued indefinitely the government would be prepared to set floor prices under the act which would be reasonably satisfactory to the agriculturists of this country. But when the minister was giving his explanation, that did not appear to be what the government were going to do. He stated that they were using certain years, 1943, 1944, and 1945, to determine what the relationships were during those years, between what the farmer was receiving for what he had to sell and what his costs were.

Then he went on to say that did not necessarily mean that, although they used those years to get those relationships, the government was prepared to maintain that relationship. In fact, he said the opposite.

Mr. Gardiner: What I really did say was that there was not any place where they did undertake to give the exact relationship. I went on to say that the United States makes it 60 per cent in one case, 90 per cent in another, and so on.

Mr. Wright: So that we can be sure of what the minister said, may I quote from page 1076 of Hansard:

> The period we have been checking on is 1943, 1944 and 1945. We will continue to check on it. I do not say, neither do they in the United States, that when that has been worked out we are going to pay a 100 per cent floor price based on it. In the United States, they do not pay anything higher than 90 per cent, and most of the time they are paying 60 per cent.

I think the minister is wrong about that, because the United States is paying 90 per cent on most of the basic products, not 60 per cent. On some of the perishable products, 60 per cent is being paid, but on the non-perishable products they are paying 90 per cent.

The minister continues as follows:

> What I did say in Niagara Falls, and what I have said everywhere, is that, when we brought in this legislation, no farmer in Canada, no one anywhere, expected that we would set floor prices at the highest price level we would ever obtain from farm products.

We are not asking him to set them at the highest price level. We are asking him to put a formula in the act, under which we will know where the prices are to be set, not necessarily at the highest point for the product. If the government will accept the period, as we have suggested in this resolution, and will continue to maintain the relationship between agricultural prices and the cost of the things the farmers have to buy, that is all we ask.

Mr. Speaker, since it is eleven o'clock, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall continue the consideration of this bill, No. 17. Then we shall take up bills Nos. 54 and 56, an act to amend the continuation of the Transitional Measures Act, 1947, and an act to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944. If we conclude those bills in the afternoon, we shall take up the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At eight o'clock, the Minister of Finance will open the debate on the budget. When this debate is adjourned, we shall take up private bills, if it meets with the consent of the house. If not, we shall revert to the business we were considering before six o'clock.

Mr. Adamson: How long is it for private bills, one hour?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): One hour.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may say so, I think perhaps members would like to know that the legal advice we have is that these bills cease to exist at midnight on Thursday night. I thought all members should know that.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 28, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

LAURENCE A. STEINHARDT

DEATH OF UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA IN AIRPLANE ACCIDENT—MESSAGES OF REGRET AND SYMPATHY

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all hon. members will have learned of the air disaster this morning in which the United States ambassador, the Hon. Laurence Steinhardt, lost his life.

It was my painful duty this morning, in company with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), to call at the chancellery, at the United States embassy and also at the residence of the United States minister, Mr. Julian Harrington, to express the sympathy of the government and of the Canadian people on the tragic death of the ambassador, of the United States minister's son and of three officers of the United States Air Force. I feel sure all hon. members would wish to join in that expression of sympathy.

I should like at this time to read into the permanent records of parliament the statement I have already given to the press concerning this terrible disaster. My statement is as follows:

All Canadians will be shocked by the news of the air disaster in which the United States ambassador, Hon. Laurence Steinhardt, lost his life.

The death of Mr. Steinhardt is a grievous loss to the foreign service of the United States in which he has had such a distinguished career. For Canada it is the loss of an understanding friend who believed deeply in the value to each other and to the world of the friendly association of our two countries, and who contributed day by day in countless ways to the strengthening of our common bonds.

The tragedy is heightened by the fact that the son of Mr. Julian F. Harrington, the United States minister in Canada, also lost his life.

The sympathy of the Canadian people will be extended in full measure to Mrs. and Miss Steinhardt and to Mr. and Mrs. Harrington in their bereavement, and to the families of the three officers of the United States Air Force who also lost their lives in this disaster.

In the name of the government and people of Canada, I have sent a message of sympathy to the President of the United States.

Perhaps it would be appropriate to place the text of this message on the record. It is as follows:

Ottawa, March 28, 1950

Harry S. Truman,
President of the United States,
Washington, D.C.,
U.S.A.

I was shocked to learn a few minutes ago of the tragic death this morning of the Hon. Laurence Steinhardt. My regret will be shared by all Canadians; for in the comparatively short time Mr. Steinhardt was in this country he had won the respect and admiration of us all. I am sure that they would wish to join me in extending to you personally and to the people of the United States generally a message of sympathy in the loss of this devoted and experienced servant of his country.

Louis S. St. Laurent

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), personally and on behalf of those with whom I am associated, in the expressions of sadness and regret at the death of Mr. Steinhardt, and also the United States minister's son and members of the United States Air Force, and in conveying to their families the deep sympathy that we feel for them at this time.

Because of his close association with so many of us I should like to speak particularly of Mr. Steinhardt.

Death always brings sorrow and a final sense of loss. This is particularly so when someone of the great vitality and great human qualities that Mr. Steinhardt possessed is suddenly taken from us by a tragedy such as that which occurred near Ottawa this morning. Every one of us will join with the Prime Minister in the message of sympathy that has been conveyed to Mrs. Steinhardt and her daughter. It is to be hoped that for them there may be some measure of comfort in the knowledge that those of us who collectively represent all the people of Canada most wholeheartedly extend to them our deepest sympathy in the loss of a loving husband and father who had played so great a role in strengthening the ties of friendship and respect between his native land and our own.

Laurence Steinhardt was more than a great ambassador of the United States. He was a great human being. He sacrificed unusual material opportunities to serve his country through one of the most critical periods in the world's history. He was an outstanding lawyer, and until 1933 was actively associated with one of the most important and most highly respected legal firms in the United States. Before practising law he had been an accountant, and because of that special training was called upon to represent the government of the United States in many different countries in connection with the legal problems that arose out of the first world war. While giving him unique opportunities for personal advancement, this experience also trained him for the wider service of his country in the diplomatic field.

The late Hon. Laurence A. Steinhardt

Thus it was that, in his first year as President of the United States, President Roosevelt personally persuaded Mr. Steinhardt to give up his professional activity and serve the United States abroad. In 1933 he represented the United States in Sweden, where great events were under way. He remained there until 1937. From there he went to Peru, where he took part in the framing of the agreements that emerged from the Lima conference.

Then he went to Moscow, where his ability to speak many languages, and his knowledge of history and international politics, placed him at the forefront of those who were still seeking in every way possible to prevent Russia from making the fatal mistake of joining hands with nazi Germany. Those high hopes were shattered when the agreement was signed between Russia and Germany which brought on the second world war. Nevertheless he continued to work for peace in every way he could, and during the invasion of Finland by Russia he visited that area in an effort to restrain Russian aggression. In Moscow he met the Japanese foreign minister Matsuoka, both before and after his visit to Berlin, and did what he could to impress upon Japan the ultimate futility of the axis dreams of world conquest.

When the Russian government left Moscow, Mr. and Mrs. Steinhardt went to the new capital, and then later they went to Turkey where they remained from 1942 until 1945. Then they went to Prague where they saw the communist tyranny once again working in all its cruelty. In 1948, with this background of experience and service, Mr. Steinhardt came to Ottawa, at a time when the relationship between the United States and Canada had assumed such immense importance. Here he employed his truly remarkable gifts for the purpose of cementing the firm foundation of fellowship and understanding between these two democracies to which the Prime Minister referred and with which the Prime Minister is so intimately acquainted.

Great though Mr. Steinhardt's earlier achievements were, achievements which won for him the Medal of Merit, the highest United States decoration any civilian may receive, his greatest service to his country and to the world-wide cause of freedom was here in Canada during the past two years. He had great faith in Canada. In one of my last conversations with him he spent considerable time in describing the vast opportunities he saw in this country for rapid development in the years ahead. That affection for Canada and confidence in our great future undoubtedly guided the sympathetic interpretation of the Canadian point of view which he gave to Washington.

It is always a great shock to learn of the accidental death of a man of great vitality, courage, charm, and unusual ability. Nevertheless it is all too often the closing page of a life of great service. Loyalty to the supreme cause of human freedom knows no boundary. In mourning his loss at the very height of his attainments we also share a feeling of pride with his own fellow countrymen that under our free democratic system men like Laurence Steinhardt are prepared to forgo the bright prospects of personal advantage so that they may serve the cause of all mankind. Tragic though his death is, service to the things he loved has been given in full measure. Of him it may truly be said: "That life is long which answers life's great end."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those associated with me I wish to join in the universal feeling of sorrow that has been expressed at the passing of a gentleman who was not only a great citizen of his own country but a great world citizen. Those of us who had the opportunity from time to time of meeting Mr. Steinhardt were impressed by his charm, his gentleness, and his humanitarian outlook. He came to Canada as an ambassador with a background of knowledge of our country. I believe that in the days of his youth he travelled across western Canada, and years afterwards, when he was being received by Canadian ministers of the crown and other dignitaries, he said that he had received just as hearty a welcome when he knocked at the back doors of the prairie people as he received when he came here to represent his country as ambassador.

To Mrs. Steinhardt and her daughter we wish to express our deepest sympathy, and to the United States people our grief at the loss of a great ambassador. I should like to express also our sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Julian Harrington, whom some of us also know well. The loss of their only son will be a source of great grief to them; and I am quite sure that from one end of this country to the other the death of the United States ambassador and of members of his staff under such tragic circumstances will indeed be deeply mourned.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I speak for all the members of this group when I say that we were grieved to learn that this morning a plane accident had snuffed out the lives of a number of our American friends, among whom was Hon. Laurence A. Steinhardt, ambassador to Canada. I find it hard to think of words to express the sorrow we feel at the untimely passing on Canadian soil, through an accident, of so many citizens of our great and friendly neighbour to the south.

If I speak mostly of Mr, Steinhardt it is not that I feel less grief over the loss of his companions on the plane, but because he was the spokesman and mouthpiece of his country in Canada.

I knew Mr. Steinhardt, having met and talked intimately with him on a number of occasions after he came to Canada in 1948. On those occasions I felt the warmth of his pleasing personality and admired his great ability. I felt that he was a real friend of our country. He displayed a keen interest in Canada, in our development, and in all we are trying to do. We had the feeling that here was a diplomat of prime stature, having such an understanding of this country as well as of his own, and possessed of such unusual wisdom, that he could draw our two great countries together into closer co-operation in all our efforts. This I think he did.

The world is far too short of ambassadors of good will. Mr. Steinhardt was indeed one of these, and therefore his loss is all the more tragic at this time.

I wish, on behalf of the group which I represent, to express our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Steinhardt, her daughter, and the relatives of the late ambassador in their bereavement, and to the government of the United States, which has lost one of its most brilliant representatives. We must not forget those who are left to mourn each of the others who lost their lives in that most regrettable accident this morning. Our heartfelt sympathy and humble prayers go out to them also.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

GENERAL ORDER AMENDING RULES

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table two certified copies of the English version and two certified copies of the French version of a general order made by the Supreme Court of Canada amending the supreme court rules.

INCOME TAX

REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO RATES OF DEPRECIATION

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, many requests have been made to the government on behalf of farmers and fishermen that the new regulations fixing the rates of depreciation for 1949 and subsequent years should not take effect until 1950. As I previously explained to the house, suspension of these regulations would mean that farmers and fishermen would be entitled to no allowance in respect of depreciation for 1949. It has been decided, however, to amend the regulations so that farmers and fishermen will be entitled to claim, in respect of the year 1949, depreciation at the rate prevailing in 1948.

There have also been representations regarding the regulations covering depreciation for taxpayers other than farmers and fishermen, particularly in regard to some of the rates and to the limitation of the allowances to corporations to the amount charged in their financial statements. Because the regulations provide that taxpayers may continue to use the 1948 rates in computing their 1949 income, this matter is not of immediate urgency, but I should like to assure the house that careful consideration is being given to these matters, and that the government's decision will be announced in due course.

NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEETING IN LONDON IN MAY

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, members of the house may be interested to learn that yesterday the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Kingdom invited, through the chairman, the members of the North Atlantic council to meet in London in the early part of May. The Canadian government has accepted the invitation, and will be represented at that meeting.

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT

REVISION AND REPEAL OF DOMINION LANDS ACT—PROVISIONS RESPECTING SALE OR LEASE, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved the first reading of Bill No. 81 (from the Senate), respecting crown lands in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO BREAKING AND ENTERING, FORGERY, ETC.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. 82 (from the Senate), to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES

SERVICE TO THE ORIENT—SHEMYA, ALEUTIAN ISLANDS, AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Apparently there is some question whether Canadian Pacific Air Lines will be able to continue flying the route from Vancouver to the Far East by way of the Aleutians, by reason of an air field in the Aleutians being closed. Can the minister tell us what the situation is, and whether the service will be discontinued?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): The Canadian authorities were informed by the United States government some time ago that the United States Air Force was contemplating withdrawal from maintenance of certain air bases in the Aleutians, since these were no longer considered necessary by the United States Air Force, and the expense of maintenance was extremely heavy. One of these, Shemya, has been used by both Canadian Pacific Air Lines, and a United States air line, Northwest Air Lines, on their service to the Orient. It is understood that United States civil aviation authorities do not consider it feasible to maintain Shemya purely for civil purposes, in view of the extremely heavy cost involved. Should Shemya no longer be available, it will probably be necessary for Canadian Pacific Air Lines to contemplate use of a mid-Pacific route to Hong Kong and Tokyo by way of Honolulu, Midway, Wake and Guam.

The air transport board has already discussed this problem with the representatives of the United States civil aeronautics board and the United States state department, and it is expected that satisfactory arrangements can be made for use of this alternative route should the necessity arise, as seems likely.

SHIPPING

COLLISION BETWEEN VESSELS "GERTRUDE DA COSTA" AND "ISLAND CONNECTOR" IN HALIFAX HARBOUR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I should like to reply to a question which was asked by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) in connection with a collision which took place in Halifax harbour some days ago. A preliminary inquiry took place following the collision between the Gertrude da Costa and the Island Connector in the harbour of Halifax. The master and ten members of the crew of the fishing vessel, the Gertrude da Costa, lost their lives as a result of the casualty. The loss occurred following a collision with the Island Connector, which was outbound. The fishing vessel was inbound from a fishing trip to the Newfoundland banks.

On account of the heavy loss of life it has been decided to hold a formal investigation under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act into the circumstances under which the casualty occurred. The Department of Justice has been requested to name a commissioner to hold the investigation, and everything possible will be done to open hearings at Halifax at the earliest convenient date.

SYDNEY MENTAL HOSPITAL

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE—PROVISION FOR HOUSING OF PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister's department been informed of the destruction by fire of the mental hospital at Sydney, Nova Scotia, creating a very difficult problem in the housing of hundreds of patients in temporary quarters? If so, is there any immediate assistance that might be given to help solve the problem?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have been informed of the fire in question. As yet, however, no project has been suggested to us by the provincial government. Of course time has not permitted that to take place, but the matter will be followed closely in the light of the whole situation.

INCOME TAX

APPEAL BOARD—JUDGMENT IN CASE OF "MR. C." AND THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to bring a matter to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. On the 20th of March I asked whether the minister would produce the judgment of the income tax appeal board in the case of "Mr. C." and the Minister of National Revenue. I asked whether he would consider tabling the evidence and the reasons for judgment in that order of the appeal board. I now ask the minister whether he has given consideration to that request, and whether, in addition to delivering the judgment, he will table the evidence.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I understand that it is not the practice to table court judgments in this house. In this case, however, the judgment and the evidence are available under the statute setting up the income tax appeal board.

I have handed to the hon. member for Lake Centre a copy of the reasons for judgment and of the minutes of judgment in this particular case. So far as the evidence is concerned, that is not public or available because at the request of the appellant the case was heard in camera.

PUBLIC SERVICE

QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO FIVE-DAY WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, or, if it should be referred to some other minister, perhaps he will indicate to whom my question should be addressed. Would it be possible for a statement to be made at an early day as to government policy in the matter of the five-day week for government employees?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I believe the facts will speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker, as to what is government policy. The public know what are the hours now being put in by members of the civil service, and there is not apt to be any change until there has been a decision by the government to authorize a change. As soon as that is done, the hon. member may be sure the change will be quite apparent.

Mr. Knowles: Is the Prime Minister aware that some employees do get the five-day week, while others do not?

Mr. St. Laurent: My understanding is that those who are subject to civil service regulations are not on the five-day week.

AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION IN FORCE ON AND AFTER MARCH 31, 1950

The house resumed from Monday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gardiner for the second reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Argue.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at eleven o'clock last evening the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said that if these bills were not passed by Thursday they would automatically expire. It is not the intention of this group to try to hold up this legislation. We simply wanted certain amendments made which in our opinion would make it more effective; but we have no intention of filibustering so far as these bills are concerned.

Before we adjourned last night I had read a statement by the minister which indicated that though the period from 1943 to 1945 was being used by the government as a base period, this did not necessarily mean that floor prices would be based on that period. On further questioning the minister stated that the best guarantee the farmers in this country had with respect to floor prices was the fact that the Liberal party was in power, and they would look after this matter. In other words we are to have in Canada, if I correctly interpret the minister's statement, political floor prices. In the Annapolis valley, for instance, where we are to have a by-election in a short time, if the farmers want to feel that their crop will be taken care of next year, according to the minister they had better vote Liberal, or else.

As an industry, agriculture wants something better than that. We do not believe floor prices for agricultural products should be at the whim of the government. We think they should at least put in the legislation some assurance as to what those floor prices will be. In our amendment we do not ask that the floor prices be set at the highest point any agricultural product reached during the past number of years. Our amendment seeks to—> —provide that floor prices should be established at such levels as to guarantee to producers a price-cost relationship not less favourable than that prevailing in the period 1944-48.

In other words all we are asking in this amendment is that the relationship of agricultural products to the wages being paid labour and the returns to manufacturing and other industries in this country, which obtained during the period from 1944 to 1948, be continued. We think that is only fair. We believe there was a reasonably fair relationship in our economy during that period. The trouble is that agriculture has not been in a position to maintain its prices. When the farmers put in their crops they have to sow sufficient to meet the needs of the consuming public, not only when we have bumper crops but during periods when our crops may not be so good. The result is that a larger acreage has to be sown if we are to have that margin of safety which I think is desirable in any economy. Having established that margin of safety, I do not believe the farmers should be penalized when we have bumper crops and, as a result, have some surpluses coming on the market. In those periods the speculative interests who handle our agricultural products from the time they leave the farm until they reach the consumer are able, by reason of these small surpluses that may exist, to depress the prices of all agricultural products, and the farmers take the loss. The result will be that sooner or later the farmers will stop producing to the extent necessary to provide this margin of safety for our economy. When that time comes it will mean that if we should become short of any particular crop we shall have to go into the export market and buy to meet our own needs, and I do not think that is a good policy.

Under this legislation we should be providing a bridge for agriculture to carry it over difficult periods. Instead of that the government is simply providing a life preserver so that if the farmer should get into difficulty and begin to drown he can be thrown the life preserver and pulled out—maybe. Is that not political strategy? You see, a man is much more thankful to the person who throws him a life preserver, pulls him out and saves his life than he would be to the person who built a bridge which would keep him from falling into the water at all. Human nature being what it is, people often forget who built the bridge, but they seldom forget the man who rescues them when they are drowning. Apparently it is the intention of the government under this legislation to provide a life preserver in case the farmer is drowning. Then they will save him, and of course he will be thankful to the government that saved his life.

I do not think that is enough. That is not what the former prime minister indicated when this legislation was introduced. In a radio broadcast in 1943 Mr. Mackenzie King said:

> I wish tonight to thank the farmers of Canada for their magnificent contribution to the battle of production. I wish again to appeal to them to continue to help hold the front line against inflation by continuing to support the price ceiling. If, to help win the war, the farmers are asked to accept a ceiling on prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to ensure them against an agricultural depression after the war. As an essential part of its post-war policy, the government intends to ask parliament at the next session to place a floor under the prices of main farm commodities.

In fulfilment of that promise, the present floor prices legislation was passed in 1944, just prior to the 1945 election. Under this legislation we have spent some $6 million to $8 million in support of agricultural prices. The method that has been used in support of those prices tends to allow the price to drop to such an extent that the farmers producing a particular product become alarmed, hold protest meetings, and, when they finally get the ear of the government, the government places a floor under the price of that product. In our opinion, that is not sufficient. We have, therefore, moved this amendment. We believe that under this amendment, if it were adopted, there would be a fair relationship maintained in Canada between agriculture, industry, labour, and all the producers of goods and services.

I am sure many of the farmers on the government side of the house realize that this amendment is necessary if this act is to be effective in doing the job it is intended to do. I would urge upon them that they support the amendment, and see that agriculture is not left in such a position that it is dependent upon the whim of any particular political party. This is the parliament of Canada, and we should be prepared to protect our own economy.

Mr. J. J. Smith (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there are a few remarks I should like to make on this Agricultural Prices Support Act. Many speeches have been made in this chamber, some of them good, including the one made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), but his was greatly exaggerated. He said that the farmers in western Canada were disappointed with the treatment received from the Department of Agriculture and this government in the matter of floor prices.

At the outset, when we have floor prices under farm commodities, I believe those floor prices must be related to some contract. I do not see how floor prices can be set unless we have some idea of the contract to which those prices are to be related. There was a wheat board, and I believe it did a good job. There are people who will argue, among them possibly some members of this house, against boards, contracts, and that sort of thing. The administration which I support has taken the middle road. There is one party in this house that wants contracts and boards for everything, and another that would prefer not to have any.

Let us look at our wheat board. I believe a consideration of that subject is relevant to this prices support act. Mention has been made of the loss suffered by the western farmers during the war. I am not in a position to speak for the eastern farmer, but I think I can speak for the western farmer. I have been one, and I am still one. Possibly if I tried I could say what a farmer ought to have for his wheat in order to make his farming pay. I farmed throughout the thirties and paid for a farm during the forties.

Mr. Wright: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the wheat board does not come under this legislation at all.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): It does not? Very well, then; I shall discuss that later. I shall deal now with the amendment which is before the house, if that is in order, sir. It calls upon the Department of Agriculture to put floor prices under farm commodities; the amendment requests a floor price which may be considered somewhat high. Why do I say that? I said before that I thought any attempt to set floor prices for farm products should be related to a contract, or to the price that may be obtainable. If that is not done, the farmer may have to be subsidized by the rest of Canada. I do not think the western farmer wants to be subsidized by anyone. He has always been able to look after himself, and he is going to continue to do so. I do not want anyone from another part of Canada telling me that eastern Canada is carrying the western farmers. I do not want to have to swallow that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as this amendment is concerned, it looks good on the surface. In my opinion, however, an examination of it will indicate that it endangers our contracts and may prevent further contracts. Let us take beef, for the moment. We have no contract for beef, and at the moment our surplus beef is going to the United States. I presume if this amendment carries it will be necessary for the Department of Agriculture to guarantee the farmer a high price for beef. Suppose the United States decided that our beef could no longer enter the United States. We would have to look for a new market for our beef. Suppose the United Kingdom decided she could use some of our beef. At the moment beef is selling for about twenty-two cents a pound live weight. Do I say it is too high? No. But we would have to look for the new market, and I agree with other hon. members in this house that Great Britain is a good market. Suppose the minister of agriculture for Great Britain invited the Minister of Agriculture for Canada to negotiate a price for that beef. The British minister of agriculture may say that twenty-two cents is too high, but he would be willing to take it at sixteen or eighteen cents. Our Minister of Agriculture would have to say that there had been an amendment to the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and he, therefore, could do nothing but ask for the twenty-two cents. That would be a difficult position.

If the C.C.F. party had been elected, and the member for Assiniboia were the minister of agriculture, I do not think he would enjoy being put in that position. If the Conservatives had been elected—I am not sure I could pick the minister of agriculture, but I think the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) would have that portfolio. He would have to say that the parliament of Canada tied him down by setting a high price. Do not let anyone say I said the price was too high. If the Minister of Agriculture were called upon for such a purpose he could possibly take some advisers with him, but he could not take all the members of parliament to relieve him of the restraint this amendment would impose.

I am here because I talk plain English and I am going to continue to do so. I want to say further that I do not think it would be good politics for me to stand up and say—and I am not saying it—that the prices of agricultural products are too high, because I represent an agricultural constituency. However, the farmers in western Canada—and I speak for the people in the communities of Saskatchewan who have had crops; there may be farmers who have not had crops, and they may not be in a good position—the western farmers are not suffering and are not complaining about prices and markets today; and I say that to hon. members from eastern Canada.

An hon. Member: Are you with us or against us?

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I shall not have to speak too loudly if you fellows will keep quiet. I do not think I shall say how far back we might go, but we in western Canada a good while ago expected a decline in prices; and there is a good deal of credit coming to someone because we have not had a decline in prices. During the Christmas holidays I was speaking to a friend of mine; as a matter of fact he is a good friend, but he is such a socialist that he told me he would like to vote for me but he could not vote Liberal. Still he is my good friend. As I say, I was speaking to that friend, and I have some good friends in Saskatchewan who are C.C.F.'ers. He was talking about markets. He reads Hansard, and from reading Hansard for the last session of this parliament he gathered that we had no markets left and that prices had gone. He asked me about markets. I think he thought that I would give him a truthful answer. I told him that as far as I could see, we had not lost them yet; prices had not fallen too badly. He went on to indicate the figure that he thought the western farmers should have for wheat, and I may say that I agree with him. He said that any time the western farmer could get a dollar for a bushel of wheat at the elevator and get a fair crop, with other things in line with that price, he was not doing too badly.

Mr. Wright: What about the other things?

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I said that they must go with it. I will go into that right now.

Mr. Argue: That is what the amendment says.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I know what your amendment says.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I agree with my hon. friend that the farmer, when he seeds his crop in the spring, should know what he is going to get for a bushel of wheat. In the past that has been the big mistake in the set-up in the west. You talk about machinery. If I sow grain in the spring

I will gamble with the weather. But if I know what I am going to get for a bushel of wheat I will buy my machinery accordingly. No machine agent can come along and sell me a $4,500 combine if I know that I am going to get only a certain price for wheat. I would know whether I can pay that amount of money for the combine or any other machine. I am speaking strictly about the western farmer. The farmer in the spring sows his crop, and if he does not know what the price of wheat is, he will take a chance on buying, say, a combine or any other machinery at a big price; then when he comes to sell that grain the price may be down, and that is where he gets into trouble. The same thing applies if you buy land or anything else. I maintain that if we get a set price for wheat that will stabilize the price of everything else that the farmer buys; because the machine companies will put the price of their machinery in line with what the farmer is getting for wheat, or else they will keep it.

Mr. Wright: Is that what they did in the thirties?

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I am not talking about the thirties. In conclusion I want to put on the record a clipping from the Estevan Mercury of February 1, 1950. I do not often read from newspapers, but as it is often done in this house, I presume it is in order for me to do so.

The article is headed "Farm prices down in 1949—First decline in ten years", and reads as follows:

Ottawa.—Canadian farm prices were down in 1949, the first decline in ten years. However, the general average still remained more than 2½ times higher than during the 1935-39 period. The bureau of statistics reported that farm prices of Canadian agricultural products dropped 1·3 per cent from the 1948 record high of 252·6 to 251·3. This index is based on 1935-39 equals 100.

Responsible for the over-all drop were declines in prices of grains, dairy products, potatoes, vegetables and furs. Increased prices of livestock, poultry and eggs, fruits, tobacco and maple products failed to make up the loss.

The regional picture showed that there were small increases in Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These were offset by decreases in the other provinces.

Here are the indexes for western provinces, with 1948 figures in brackets:

Manitoba, 251·9 (254·6); Saskatchewan, 239·4 239·3); Alberta, 257·2 (256·2); and British Columbia, 244 (238).

During December there were price decreases from December, 1948, in almost all commodities. Compared with last November, however, the prices for livestock and dairy products were higher, while potatoes, poultry and eggs were down. General indexes in all provinces were down from the same month a year earlier.

The bureau reported that lower grain prices were largely a result of government authorization of the wheat board to undertake marketing of western oats and barley delivered by producers during the 1949-50 crop year.

[Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain).]

Under this arrangement the wheat board pays to producers on delivery of these grains an initial payment only. Not included in present figures is the money which will later be paid to farmers in the form of participation payments.

The bureau gives a statistical review of farm price indexes dating back to 1935. The review shows a drop from 1938 to 1939 but yearly increases from then on, right up to 1948.

Here are the indexes for the last sixteen years:

1935— 88	1943—157·8
1936— 96·9	1944—172·4
1937—119·7	1945—184·2
1938—105	1946—200·8
1939— 91·8	1947—212·5
1940— 96·8	1948—252·6 (all-time high)
1941—110·2	1949—251·3
1942—133·1

An hon. Member: Are you with us or against us?

Mr. Smith (Moose Mountain): I join with my friends in the opposition who have asked this government for contracts. They have said, however, that the government of the day had done nothing to get contracts. I should like any member in the opposition, or anywhere else in the house, to show me where the government of the day with regard to agricultural products have refused to sign a contract with any country in the world if they figured they were getting a fair deal for the farmer. If you can do that, I will sit down and never open my mouth again in this session. Well, no reply. It takes two to make a contract. I join with my friends in asking the government to get contracts; I cannot join with them, however, in their amendment to ask in one breath for a contract and in the other to tie that department down so that it cannot sign contracts. We know perfectly well that when a contract is made the Department of Agriculture must initiate it or must deal with the appropriate department of other countries and make that deal and the other country has something to say about the price. I am therefore not supporting the amendment.

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to drag out this debate, as I think the sooner this matter is dealt with, either by a vote or otherwise, the better.

The other night the minister announced that the statute with which we are now dealing will run out on Thursday night. In addition to other things, the amendment proposes to throw out the statute. It proposes that this bill be not read a second time.

An hon. Member: Not now read.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Yes, not now read, which means a hoist of the bill, and a killing of the bill.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Yes, it means a killing of the bill.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I am making my speech, and you can make yours later. I know how often we have heard from those one-and-a-half farmers in the C.C.F. during this session.

Mr. Bryce: What kind of a farmer are you?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): What is that?

Mr. Bryce: What kind of a farmer are we hearing from now?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I will tell my hon. friend, if he wishes to know, that I was born in the west, before he ever saw it. In addition, let me say this, that I farmed four and a half sections of land, which I don't think he has ever done. And in addition to that I wish to say this, that when I took over that farm—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask hon. members to address the Chair.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I wish to advise you that not only did I take over the weediest farm in the district in which I now live, a farm which I was told was hopeless, but that farm now has on it six happy families, and it is cleaned up.

In addition I wish to tell my hon. friend that I raised as many as two hundred head of Hereford cattle, and sold them; and that is more than he has done. And in addition to that I was in the delegation which came here to Ottawa to ask for prices from the government. I asked for dollar wheat, Mr. Speaker, but I did not see one C.C.F. member of parliament on either of those occasions. Some of them have wiggled over since we were through that. While we did not get dollar wheat, we got ninety cent wheat at that time.

To return to a discussion of the bill before the house, let me point out that section 9 of the act provides for the setting up of a board. That section provides that the board, subject to and in accordance with the regulations made by the governor in council, shall have authority—

(a) to prescribe from time to time, with the approval of the governor in council, prices at which the board may purchase agricultural products in the market;

(b) to purchase at such prices any agricultural product, if such product, on inspection, meets standards as to grade and quality prescribed by or under any act of the parliament of Canada . . .

(c) to pay to the producers of an agricultural product directly or through such agent as the board may determine the difference between a price prescribed by the board with the approval of the governor in council . . .

And then under section 10(2) there is provision for a revolving fund of $200 million of the money of the people of Canada to protect the producers. The act does not cover wheat, but it covers other farm products, under the authority of the governor in council, from time to time.

Now my hon. friends propose, in amendment, that the bill be not now read; and they go further and suggest that the government bring in a bill which would have the effect of guaranteeing to the producers a price-cost relationship. The mover of the amendment has suggested no prices; he has suggested no costs, except that certain years are taken. Those who support the amendment do not deal with any particular product.

As has been pointed out by the hon. member who preceded me, the government will have to deal with other countries, and it will have to deal with the Canadian consumer. It will have to make international deals, and otherwise; but in connection with certain products, it will have to deal chiefly with the Canadian consumer. From time to time those prices change, either up or down.

We do not know whether there will be another war; we do not know what will happen in connection with surpluses at any time. We do not know whether the British will buy more of our products. And I venture to say that if the government undertook for a term of years to accept prices which were not satisfactory during all those years, there would be another howl from members of the C.C.F. party in the House of Commons—and in no uncertain terms. The government has been fair, and so far as the farmers in my constituency are concerned, it has satisfied them.

I do not believe it is our duty when we come to the House of Commons merely to set up a whine to which the people of eastern Canada have to listen. We in the west do appreciate what the government of Canada has done. Particularly is that true in our dried-out area. We appreciate what has been done under P.F.A.A. and P.F.R.A. We believe that the farmers of Ontario, on the other hand, appreciate what the government has done in paying $20 million a year toward the freight on our coarse grains brought down here to feed their cattle and pigs. We believe they appreciate that. We are already getting certain benefits for our farmers from these actions.

When the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) spoke last night I could not make out what he was driving at. However, I noticed that when he had made his speech he was applauded by members of the Progressive Conservative party; they and their leader applauded it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): So did the Minister of Agriculture, and others on the government side of the house.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I do not think they did. This is what the hon. member said, as reported at page 1160 of Hansard:

I venture to make a suggestion which I think will be quite unpopular in the farming portion of the constituency in which I live. I am going to say now that I am quite content for another year.

So are we.

That may indicate how I shall vote.

I trust my friend will vote for the bill before the house.

I do think it is about time that this parliament ceased to be operated by pressure groups. The farm group is one of the most important, and the labour pressure group is the other group.

Then he went on to say this:

I am in favour of holding the prices support act, as called for in the bill. I think that if we quit playing with our economy, if we quit this patchwork business, and let our goods find their own level in world markets, the better it will be for Canada. I do not mean world markets of the kind we have established recently, for example, in coarse grains. I know that what I say now will be very unpopular with all those pools and farm organizations in western Canada, which have been operated on a basis of hatred for the Winnipeg grain exchange, hatred, selfishness—

And then he implies at the end of his speech that he is going to vote for the subamendment. Well, there is no subamendment; but there is an amendment. He says this—and I agree with him—

Why should we tie our prices in this agricultural matter to 1944-48? The answer is that it certainly suits the producers of farm products because it was in that period that, if we did not reach the peak, we reached a very high level. . . I support the idea of the extension of the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

That is the stand of my hon. friend.

Mr. Gardiner: He wishes to know whether the hon. member for Calgary West is going to vote for the amendment or for the bill.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): And I suggest that to carry out what the hon. member has so well expressed, in such eloquent language, he must support the bill before the house—because the amendment will do just the very reverse of what he was arguing.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If the amendment is defeated I will vote for the bill, of course I will.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): If you vote for the amendment you will kill the bill.

Mr. Drew: Nonsense.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): There has been quite a bit of dispute as to the matter of fixing prices. We heard considerable criticism of the speech delivered in Brantford by the Minister of Agriculture; but I venture to say that in making that speech, and in following it up, as he did, the Minister of Agriculture was largely responsible for selling 60 million pounds of our pork in Great Britain. They got it through at that rate. Now my friends turn round on the Minister of Agriculture and criticize him for the amount he is getting for that pork. I would point out that the taxpayers of Canada generally are subsidizing that sale of pork to the tune of $2,100,000. I believe the western farmers will appreciate that action. A total of 670 million pounds of pork is consumed in Canada, so another $23,500,000 will be paid by the consumers of Canada because of the increase in pork values the minister secured. Yet my friends argue that we are going to lose from the sale of wheat to Great Britain. Their prognostications there will again prove entirely incorrect.

There is a variety of views as to whether marketing should be conducted by the government and whether we should fix floor prices. I believe that those of us who come from western Canada are fairly unanimous that there should be floor prices for our farmers. We do not want to see the bottom drop out of prices; we want reasonable floor prices guaranteed so that there will be some stability to compensate for the sacrifices they made during the war and since in connection with prices. Some part of this burden should be borne by the general taxpayers who are not farmers.

The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) keeps quoting the Searle Grain Company Limited, but this company outlined a plan in the issue of their publication of March 22, 1950, that agricultural products should be handled and marketed solely through the open market and the usual trade channels and that individual support prices should be fixed. This is the so-called Brannan plan. Consumers would have the benefit of purchasing at open market prices whenever such prices fell below the support prices, and farmers would receive a cheque direct from the treasury of Canada.

This plan was strongly supported by Mr. Chapman, president of the Montana farmers' union. On the other hand, Mr. Kline, president of the American farm bureau federation, vigorously opposed the Brannan plan. Then there are other gentlemen in the United States who have made other statements. Mr. Kline made another statement at Washington in which he said that he was definitely against any such plan.

On the other hand we hear certain commendation of the policy followed by the Minister of Agriculture and which apparently meets with the satisfaction of the farmers of my constituency. I should like to quote what was said by the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at the convention recently held in Niagara Falls, and I quote:

During the past seven or eight years, the present agricultural program has been evolved between the federation of agriculture and its member bodies on the one hand, and the Minister of Agriculture representing the dominion government on the other. Canadian farmers have greatly appreciated this co-operative arrangement and the mutual understanding and confidence which it engendered.

The understanding, however, which farmers across Canada had of this program is that it was to cover both the war and post-war periods.

It has for a period of four or five years since the war. That is the commendation of the head of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. There is in our province a gentleman who is greatly respected by farmers of all political stripes. Dr. Hedley Auld, in summarizing the matter in January of this year, said this:

Figures given to the agricultural production conference held in Ottawa in mid-December showed that the United Kingdom can buy bacon from Ireland, Denmark and Poland for a fraction less than 31 cents per pound, then 36 cents in Canada; that cheese is available from New Zealand for less than 22 cents and from Australia for 19·2 cents per pound, compared with 30 in Canada; that these countries also have butter at 34·7 and 34·5 cents respectively, whereas our price is pegged at 58 cents; that Denmark's eggs are priced at 30·8 cents per dozen—

And again:

It would seem, therefore, that Canada cannot hope to retain an important share of the British food market unless and until our prices are brought more closely into line with those of competing exporting countries and exchange problems are more satisfactorily resolved.

Meanwhile, recent Ottawa dispatches indicate that cabinet ministers are not in agreement as to how much support should be given to farm prices through the Agricultural Prices Support Act. It should be clear that food prices cannot be maintained at their present levels. To do this would require state aid to farmers on a scale without precedent. But a policy of unsupported prices would surely invite a depression which would be most unpleasant, and it is improbable that many would solicit a return to the thirties.

I think his further remarks are significant because they indicate an unbiased opinion. He continues:

Her willingness to buy Canadian bacon and other products from Canada now and to defer acceptance of a corresponding value in terms of wheat is a concession which may be very useful to us in stabilizing values of other Canadian farm products in 1950.

Incidentally, it is my understanding that if the 1946 wheat agreement had not been made when it was drawn it would have been impossible to negotiate it at any later date. And without the wheat agreement of 1946 there would have been no Anglo-Canadian agreements for meat and cheese in 1948 and 1949. And without such agreements and with so many farm products of the United States declared "surplus," the problems connected with the marketing of Canadian food surpluses could easily have arisen a year or two earlier.

That is the opinion of an unbiased gentleman who has retired from public life. It is idle for hon. members of this house, such as the hon. member for Souris, to compare conditions in Canada with those in the United States where their home consumption is much heavier. It is idle for the Scotsman from Manitoba—I forgot his name—to contend that we should be compared with Great Britain, that they have a stabilized market over there for their farmers. Everything produced in Great Britain is consumed there and when you consume everything in your own country it is a simple thing to stabilize prices to the consumer and to everybody else.

I do not intend to speak at any great length except to say that my friends to your furthest left, the one and a half farmers, have been talking and talking in this house until some of us are getting tired listening. You would think that they had all the farmers on their side of this legislature. We have past presidents of rural municipalities, we have a number of former reeves who were in municipal life for many years, and we have farmers from Ontario and all the other provinces of Canada. On the Liberal side of the house there are more farmers than in all the rest of the house.

Mr. Homuth: How many farmers are in the cabinet?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): After all, the cabinet listens to the private members. In answer to the hon. member and his leader may I say that we are not rubber stamps. I have never been told yet how to vote in this house and I have never yet heard of a Liberal who has been told how to vote. In answer to my hon. friend I want to say that if there are any rubber stamps in this house they are to be found in his party. When we were dealing with the pipe-line bill I can remember how his leader waved the old flag and wrapped himself in it and then each and every one of the Conservative party got a little flag and was waving it. No truck and trade with the Yankees.

Mr. Homuth: My hon. friend is not a rubber stamp because a rubber stamp at least makes an impression.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): C.C.F. representations have been made to the government and no doubt the government will listen, but I trust that the government will also listen to the representations that have been made by the many Liberals who represent farmers in this house. We had the experiment of a socialist government in New Zealand. I was there ten or eleven years ago shortly after their Labour government was formed. I have heard from a minister of that government every year since I have been there, and if you check the history of that government you will see that all it did for the farmers of that country was to practically crucify them. It was the farmers and the liberal-minded people of the towns and cities of New Zealand who kicked out the Labour government the other day. They decided that they had had enough of taking farm prices, putting them in the general pot, and spending them on somebody else. We do not want too much government control in Canada. We want fair prices for our farmers. Western Liberals have been fighting for that for thirty years, and we are going to try to see that we get it. If we do not get it from the government, the carpings and wailings of my friends to the left will never stir any government to give them anything.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I shall not endeavour to follow the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart)—

An hon. Member: Nobody could.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in the address he has delivered, but he interested me when he spoke of the number of farmers in the Liberal party and of the high positions they have occupied. If I did try to compete with him I might point out that the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) was vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at one time, and that the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) was president of the rural municipalities association of the province of Manitoba. Therefore they are both at least as qualified as the hon. member for Yorkton and myself to speak on this question.

Mr. Sinclair: A couple of barefoot boys.

Mr. Sinnott: How many more have you got?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Progressive Conservative party has consistently supported the legislation first introduced in 1944 known as an act for the support of the prices of agricultural products during the transition from war to peace. We have continued to support that legislation. Mention has been made of the amendment and the effect it will have on the legislation. I cannot follow my hon. friend in his argument as to its effect. The amendment reads:

> That Bill No. 17 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introducing of legislation to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act so as to provide that floor prices should be established at such levels as to guarantee to producers a price-cost relationship not less favourable than that prevailing in the period 1944-48.

There would be no delay in connection with the bill. If a meeting of the agriculture committee were convened today under the chairmanship of the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Bater), with the efficiency that he brings to bear in the discharge of his responsibilities as chairman, it would not take that committee very long to arrive at a conclusion on this matter and bring the bill back into the house as directed in the amendment. For years we of the Progressive Conservative party have been advocating the establishment of parity prices. In April, 1941, I moved a resolution on one occasion in the house for the establishment of parity prices.

In his argument the hon. member for Yorkton quoted certain persons as authorities for the propositions he advanced. I am glad he did because he established in advance the authority of those from whom I intend to quote. He mentioned in particular the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Hannam. I accept him as an authority just as the hon. member for Yorkton did. In the Free Press Weekly Prairie Farmer Mr. Hannam had this to say about the agricultural situation:

> . . . Canadian farmers face a worse market outlook now than farmers of any other country.

He went on to set out the supporting facts. At the moment I am not placing the responsibility. I realize quite well that when the British minister of food was in Canada in 1947 he indicated that Great Britain would continue to buy Canada's food products, but I say that Mr. Hannam has stated the position of Canadian farmers generally. He pointed out the need of the establishment of parity prices. I should like to read a supporting excerpt from the Rural Co-Operator of February 28 last:

> Farmers, in their prices support recommendations, are not asking the government to maintain farm prices at peak levels.

The article goes on to quote Mr. Hannam as follows:

> "In its recent brief to the federal cabinet, the Canadian federation of agriculture asked that certain farm prices be maintained at December, 1949, levels, but these were certainly not peak prices" . . .

In quoting that excerpt, I realize that someone will say that the amendment covers the period from 1944 to 1948, and that there was in fact some decrease in farm prices during the year 1949. In any event, when the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture submitted his brief he asked for a parity price and he stated:

> . . . the level of returns to farmers in 1949 was substantially lower than in the peak year of 1948 because of a 30 per cent increase in freight rates and increased feed costs. Costs are still at 1949 levels . . . farmers, who went down one step in the level of their returns in 1949, had to suffer another and more serious step downward in 1950 with the reduced prices which resulted from loss or reduction of markets.

I shall support the amendment. I am in entire agreement with the hon. member for Yorkton in his attitude towards applied socialism; I have taken that stand in this house from the very beginning. But the amendment submitted by the C.C.F. party is not socialism; it is salvation for Canadian farmers because the situation is such that if the level of prices as fixed under the Agricultural Prices Support Act is a level that is below the costs of production then in reality such a floor level will be of no assistance to the Canadian farmer.

I realize the difficulties in fixing a floor price level because if the level is fixed too high, too great a contribution will have to be made out of the $200 million revolving fund. On the other hand, if the floor price is down in the basement, so far as price levels are concerned, then the legislation will be of no benefit whatsoever. On a matter such as this I should like to see the minister give members on his own side of the house the freedom to vote as they wish. I am not saying that any direction is given or that any member in this house is under pressure by an alleged farm bloc or any other bloc; but I do feel that this amendment represents what Canadian farmers in all parts of this country are asking for. Indeed, during the election campaign the question of price supports was discussed, and over and over the attitude of those supporting the government was stated to be that the price level should be maintained on a parity basis. I have the quotations which I could read if necessary. I intend to support this amendment.

It has been stated that this legislation must be passed before Thursday evening. No one wants it to fail, or to die by the efflux of time, but surely the house has a right to discuss this matter, even though it has been introduced within the dying days of the period during which it is in force.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Could not the group with which you associate have introduced a resolution earlier in the session, and left the act alone? And can you assure the house that the Senate, through your friend Haig, will pass this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the last part of the question?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Whether the other man in the other place will pass this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know who the other man in the other place is.

An hon. Member: You should.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not a mind-reader. I do not enter any controversy with my hon. friend on this, and he knows that under the rules only a member of the cabinet can introduce a resolution which would result in the expenditure of money. That is why something along this line has not been introduced by a private member. That is why various other matters to which I might make reference, such as the removal of the means test for old age pensioners, have not been introduced in the same way. If private members had the right to introduce such measures that one, in any event, would have passed this house. I am sure that if private members had the right to introduce a resolution providing for establishing parity prices it would have been done, and farmer members in all parts of the house would have given it their support. I appreciate that the minister will say this is a vote of want of confidence.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not going to say anything about it. Hon. members have enough sense to vote the right way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister will go that far, that is fine. Having enough sense for that, will he go further and say to those on the Liberal side of the house that they may vote on this matter as they will, instead of regarding the amendment as a want of confidence?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Follow the example of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in connection with coarse grains.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Our farmers everywhere, fearful of the situation, fearful of the prospects, fearful because of world conditions generally, are asking that they be protected against the danger of falling prices. In recent years we have learned what we did not know in the 1930's, or in 1928 or 1929. It is only within the last few years that nations everywhere have been bringing in legislation to provide against depression in farm prices.

I now bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a resolution which was adopted at a meeting of farmers in the county of Grey on January 26 of this year. They stressed the need for parity prices in these words:

That this body of representative Grey county farmers respectfully but emphatically urge the Canadian government to provide floor prices for farm products that will maintain returns to the farmer at least equal to 1949 levels until such time as other commodities, services and labour decline proportionately . . .

That was a meeting attended by farmers of all political beliefs; and they asked something more, which I believe deserves consideration by the government:

. . . or until such time as a royal commission has made a thorough study and report on parity reward in the various fields of service to our national well being.

The suggestion for the setting up of such a royal commission has been made in other provinces as well, and indicates a desire on the part of the farmers to secure the best possible information on the problem. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) made a very good plea on behalf of western members, when he said that we appreciate what the people in other parts of Canada have done for the west. I join with him in that statement. Over the years I have said in this house that membership here for a few months or a few years will convince anyone that there is not an east and a west operating against each other, and that we in western Canada owe much to the willing, benevolent assistance that has been given by eastern members in helping meet the problems of the west.

The farm price problem is serious, and requires all the thoughtful consideration we can give it. I believe the government should give some assurance that in the establishment of floor prices parity will be given paramount emphasis. On the one hand we have surpluses, while on the other side of the equation there is a demand for greater production in order to increase the world food supply. The minister was recently at Washington attending a meeting of the international agricultural organization where, with statesmen from other parts of the world, an endeavour was made to arrive at some formula for the distribution of commodities. No final decision was reached. Having regard to the fact that food is as essential in an over-all national defence program as the production of munitions, we in this house should do all we can to maintain price levels which will assure our farmers fair and proper returns.

The world situation today demands food, and economists are pointing out that, even at the rate food production is increasing, in fifty years there will be world chaos, for production will be exceeded greatly by needs. Food is needed to meet the conditions prevailing in countries which are ripe for communism. Food is pre-eminent as an antidote to communism. We must maintain our food production factory in this country, and I believe the government should give every consideration to the acceptance of this amendment, which is in reality but a suggested improvement of the present legislation. With food prices facing continuing reductions; when Marshall funds are no longer available for the purchase of Canadian agricultural products; with surpluses of farm products piling up in the United States; the problem of disposing of Canada's farm products becomes serious and challenging.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): I think I would be remiss in my duty, Mr. Speaker, if I did not make my position clear on this bill, especially in view of the remarks made by the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). He has suggested that we might be under some form of coercion, and not in a position to use our own judgment as to how we should vote on this bill. That being the case, I should like to say that, personally, I have never been told to vote in one direction or the other since I came to this house. I doubt very much if any other member on this side of the house has had any different experience.

This amendment moved by the C.C.F. party is one which I am definitely going to vote against. I shall tell you why. It is nothing more or less than a pie-in-the-sky amendment. It is quite similar to the amendment the C.C.F. party moved in connection with old age pensions, which was described by the member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), one of their own members, as a pie-in-the-sky measure. It was for that reason he did not vote for it.

Mr. Johnston: What do you mean by "pie-in the-sky"?

Mr. Harrison: All that I know, sir, is that the C.C.F. party in the province of Saskatchewan has become synonymous with measures of this kind, and they have been described in that manner. Possibly I could give you an illustration. I have before me a copy of Votes and Proceedings of the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan. As hon. members are aware, when these gentlemen bid for power in 1944 they suggested a pension of $50 per month. In this house, the C.C.F. members have suggested that we eliminate the means test.

Mr. Johnston: Would $50 per month be pie-in-the-sky?

Mr. Harrison: It was at that time. It may not be considered so today, but it has not come to pass in any event. There is some difference however—

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, will I be permitted to take part in this debate, and discuss old age pensions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I think it should be clear to all hon. members that their remarks must be directed to the bill under discussion.

Mr. Harrison: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I was merely giving the gentleman an illustration for which he had asked. May I be allowed to continue on that basis, and give it as an illustration? I think it has a bearing on the question the hon. member asked.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Harrison: Votes and Proceedings of March 21, 1950, of the province of Saskatchewan—

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Harrison: —states as follows:

The debate continuing, in amendment thereto, it was moved by Mr. Danielson, seconded by Mr. Tucker, that all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

This assembly regrets the failure by the government—

That is the Saskatchewan government.

—to give due consideration to payment by the province of the supplementary—

That is the $2.50 supplementary.

—old age pension allowance without a means test.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this matter being discussed, if I can do it too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I am sorry, but I have to call the hon. member to order. He is not allowed to discuss old age pensions on this bill, nor on this amendment. I should like him to address his remarks to the chair.

Mr. Harrison: Perhaps I could explain my position on this act by quoting the following editorial which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 25, 1950. It reads as follows:

We must recognize at once that the floor price plan is not an income guarantee for all farmers. There is no intention in the act of setting up a system whereby every farmer in Canada will be able to sell his produce at a profit irrespective of the market demand. This is not a parity price scheme, or even a Brannan plan, as farmers have in the United States. It is rather, the establishment of a minimum price system to prevent the repetition of the sort of situation we had in the 1930's when farm prices went to ruinously low levels.

At another point, the article continues:

The government will be accountable to farmers and consumers alike for the floors it sets. This will certainly not result in any "scientific" set of floor prices, but it will probably mean in practice a reasonable compromise between the producer and the consumer at a time when the ordinary machinery of the market breaks down for any one or a number of reasons.

We avoid this way the inflexibility of the parity price system—

That is the main objection I have to the amendment advanced by the C.C.F.; it is too inflexible a system. It will bring about the same set-up as there is now in the United States, where they have these parity prices. The price set is such that it is conducive to the extra growing of products that are already in surplus.

I continue to quote from the article:

This inflexible system is threatened today because it is encouraging overproduction in some lines at vast expense to the taxpayer and the consumer.

If we set up such a system, that is exactly what would happen. We would not be able to continue it. It is doubtful if even the great country to the south of us, with all its monetary resources, will be able to continue a system of this sort. Certainly, we could not offer our farmers in the west the same sort of pie-in-the-sky system they have in the United States. It is not feasible.

The article states:

It is a question of how long this policy can survive, even in so wealthy a country as the United States. We should be in for no end of trouble in Canada if we tried a similar policy and we think a majority of farmers know a Canadian parity golden goose would soon be expendable.

The Canadian floor price plan, as announced in the house, does not offer the Canadian farmer permanent agricultural prosperity. What it does offer him, we hope, is relief from the fear that he will be wiped out as a producer in times of adversity. If we can get this distinction clearly fixed in our minds now, we shall avoid a lot of trouble and discontent when the policy may have to be invoked in the future.

That is what our friends have been very good at, stirring up trouble and discontent. Possibly that is their idea in moving this amendment. I wanted to make my position clear and I am definitely going to vote against the amendment and for the bill.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): I am not sure whether it is safe for me to get into what is apparently a private Saskatchewan fight. There are people in the other parts of Canada who have to live off the land, however, and I think it is only right I should say a few words on this measure. When speaking on the resolution, I stated we were in favour of the prices support legislation. We have supported it from the beginning. I also stated at that time we were quite concerned about where the floor would be set. I am glad that this amendment has been moved by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) because that will give us an opportunity of expressing our opinion as to where the floor should be.

I was rather amused by the argument advanced by the member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). When he was speaking, I could not help thinking of the old man who had been in politics all his life and was coaching a young protégé the art of debating. He said, "When your argument is weak, yell as loud as you can". That is exactly what the member for Yorkton was doing. I do not think we can take much notice of the argument he placed before us. As I stated before, we are supporting the price legislation and we shall also support the amendment that has been moved by the C.C.F. organization. I do not want to have the benefits of the price legislation given to us as indicated by the Montreal Star in which there is an article entitled "The legal way" and which describes the way the lawyers do it. The article reads as follows:

> When a man gives you an orange, he simply says: "Have an orange." But when the transaction is entrusted to a lawyer, he adopts this form:
>
> "I hereby give and convey to you, all and singular, my estate and interests, right, title, claim and advantages of and in said orange, together with all its rind, juice, pulp and pips and all rights and advantages therein with full power to bite, cut, suck and otherwise to eat the same or give the same away with or without the rind, skin, juice, pulp and pips, anything hereinbefore or hereinafter or in any other means or whatever nature or kind whatsoever to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."
>
> Later on, another lawyer comes along and takes it away from you.

Mr. Knowles: Stare decisis.

Mr. Fair: I do not want the advantages of the prices support act given to us in that manner. I am quite satisfied that the farmers of Canada are entitled to this prices support legislation. We have been told by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), who should know, and who does know, that during the war years the farmers accepted prices far below levels to which they were entitled. This price legislation is simply giving us some of the protection that we have bought at a high premium during the war years. There is no reason in the world why the farmers of Canada should not be entitled to the same protective legislation as is being given to other industrial and occupational groups. The farmer is now paying costs of production which are as high as those in any other period over the past number of years, while we see the prices of our products dropping. There is no reason in the world why some legislation should not be passed to protect the farming industry; because if the farmers are placed back again in the poverty line, as they have been in many years in the past, then the whole economy of Canada must suffer.

Mr. T. J. Kickham (Kings): I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that it is the intention of the government to make the Agricultural Prices Support Act permanent, as indicated by the legislation which is now before us. I think this act has already proven its worth in supporting the price of eggs and butter. I am, however, greatly puzzled as to why the act has not been implemented with regard to our potato surplus in Prince Edward Island and in the maritime provinces. In our province—and I expect the same is true with regard to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—we are selling our potato stock for thirty-five cents a bushel and our seed for from forty cents to forty-five cents a bushel, which is about sixty-five cents below the cost of production. As I believe was stated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he first spoke on this bill, the purpose of the act was to reimburse farmers for selling below the cost of production. When we sell potatoes for thirty-five cents and forty cents a bushel, we are selling below the cost of production to the extent of sixty-five cents or seventy cents per bushel.

There is one thing to which I wish to call the minister's attention. A few years ago—I believe it was in the year 1944 or 1945; I am subject to correction on the year but it is immaterial for the purpose of what I am going to say—through the Department of Agriculture an embargo was imposed on our shipping seed potatoes from Prince Edward Island until the minister and the government were satisfied that the requirements of all the other provinces of Canada were satisfied. The Department of Agriculture erred to the extent that when the market for seed potatoes ceased to exist in the United States we found that we had still on hand in Prince Edward Island a large surplus of seed potatoes, which we had then to convert from one hundred pound bags into seventy-five pound bags. As a result, the loss incurred by both growers and shippers was considerable. More than that, at that time we could have shipped potatoes to the United States markets for from $1.75 to $2 per bushel, while the average price in the Canadian provinces ranged from $1.25 to $1.50. In all, we took a licking of about $400 per car.

Many representations have been made to the minister in the past two or three months requesting a support price, but apparently there is not going to be any support price in the maritime provinces. I could give the number of carloadings that I just received from our director of transportation.

To digress for a moment, I wish to say that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has been given great credit for the supply of cars he has put into Prince Edward Island each day. I believe there was an increase of something over 1,151 cars of potatoes and turnips shipped by rail up to March 22 this year, a considerable increase over last year. For the minister of industry and natural resources and the director of transportation for Prince Edward Island, I wish to extend our most hearty thanks to the Minister of Transport.

I think that the amendment proposed by the opposition looks to be a reasonable one, for this reason. The years from 1944-48 should be a reasonable period on which to base farm prices because I think we were then subject to ceilings. It is therefore my intention to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I say, Mr. Speaker, that in offering a brief contribution to the debate this afternoon, I do not think there is any occasion for the representative of an urban constituency to apologize for participating in a debate of this nature. I for one have always contended that the well-being and prosperity of agriculture is a matter of the first importance to the urban dwellers of this country. There cannot be any lasting or secure prosperity for the city dweller unless the farmer of this country enjoys security and prosperity as well.

There are good reasons, it seems to me, why representatives of all constituencies, whether urban, rural or mixed, should give support to the present bill. One has only to look back over the events of recent years to find ample justification, it seems to me, for supporting the measure. The fact is undeniable that the farmers of this country in those years did not receive for their products the prices they would have brought had there not been control of the sale of their products and ceilings on their prices. Now, when a time has come when markets are shrivelling and the outlook for the Canadian agriculturist is not nearly as bright as it has been in recent years, it is only right and fair that the Canadian agriculturist should say to all Canadians: "During the war and these post-war years I bore an especially heavy share of the load. Is it not fair that measures should be taken to equalize the distribution of the load?" We of the Progressive Conservative party had a good deal to say about this in connection with some of the contracts entered into with the United Kingdom. Much was said about it by this party in connection with the wheat agreement. We pointed out that, when the Canadian wheat farmer was called upon to market his wheat in the United Kingdom at prices then substantially below the prices his wheat would have brought in the open market, it was only right and fair that the burden of those contracts should be distributed equitably over the whole Canadian population, and not placed exclusively upon the back of the Canadian wheat farmer.

As I understand it, this measure seeks to bring to the farmers of this country a measure of equalization of burdens when, in recent years, they have been called upon to bear more than their fair share of the load.

The removal of the time limit in the bill calls to mind the full title of the statute. The bill to which we now refer as the Agricultural Prices Support Act was, as hon. members will recall, entitled "an act for the support of the prices of agricultural products during the transition from war to peace." It may be that the time has come to reconsider the full title of the bill, because I for one have the impression that, whatever may be said about the period of transition, it may not be possible to limit measures of this kind to what may be called a purely transitional period, because the remedying of the injustices of times past or, if you like, the equalization of a load unfairly borne in times past, may not be completely adjusted within what may be strictly called the period of transition.

There is one other matter I should like to mention in what I have promised to be only a brief participation in this debate. Prices, markets, sales and contracts are all inextricably interwoven, as must be apparent to anyone listening to this debate. That leads me to comment that it was with some consternation that I read this statement which appeared in a publication of the federal Department of Agriculture's marketing service. This document is published under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture, and purports to be the "Egg and Poultry Market Report of March 10, 1950". The article is headed in big, black, bold characters, "Poland, like Eire, points the way," and bears the further heading, "Central egg export agency established to handle all egg exports". Then this publication, issued under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture, proceeds to say:

> Comprising all private and co-operative exporters and carlot shippers.
>
> A recent government report "Polish Food Exports" tells how the economic reconstruction of Poland is being built on export trade.
>
> Sales efforts in eggs are being directed toward Germany, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Palestine as well as England.
>
> South American countries are also being approached in their season of short supply.
>
> A new system of country egg receiving and grading stations is being established and new cold storages erected in Poland.
>
> Egg breaking and market poultry processing and grading are being developed along modern lines.
>
> Remarkable the progress that can be made when an industry adopts an energetic export program.
>
> A program so organized that the producer may also share in the increment from that trade.

And this page concludes with these words in bold type:

> Developments in other countries are worth watching.
>
> To lead is better than to follow.

I have a comment to make about this kind of publication. I am shocked to find that in a publication issued by the dominion Department of Agriculture the farmers of this country, and particularly the egg and poultry producers, are being told that Poland is the country that leads the way, and that this country should model its pricing and marketing policies on those of Poland. I do not think that does justice to the intelligence of the farmers of Canada. Why should the methods of a country under a totalitarian regime be held up to the farmers of Canada as the kind of lead they should follow? I am shocked to find this in a publication issued under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture. I say, Mr. Speaker, that whoever is responsible for writing material of this kind, which appears in a publication issued at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada and under the authority of the minister, must have had a very undue appreciation of and liking for the totalitarian methods of the regime which prevails in Poland today.

It seems to me that Poland is not the kind of country that we should be looking to when we seek a lead in methods to be followed so as to bring justice and fair play to the Canadian farmer.

Mr. A. E. Dewar (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, having listened to one more agricultural expert across the way I think probably I had better make a few remarks in this debate. What I shall say first will not be received any too well by hon. members on this side of the house, although it may be received favourably by hon. members opposite. I am going to support the amendment—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dewar: —but only in principle, because I feel the principle embodied in the amendment is already in the bill.

Last evening our good friend from Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) spoke about wanting to give steers a fair deal. I wish to be on record with him in seeing that those steers get a fair deal. Then the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin) said that something should be done in connection with beans. Those who follow the comics, particularly Li'l Abner, will recall that lately that great detective, Fearless Fosdick, has been shooting everyone who eats beans. Probably that is the reason for the fall in the price of beans.

Let me refer briefly to the British market, about which much has been said. As I said in my speech one month ago today, by the calendar, or a period of twenty-eight days, the British people are going to buy where they can buy the cheapest. The holding of the British market is something which will be decided by the people in Great Britain. They and they alone will say, because they are going to buy where they can buy the cheapest.

We in Canada must consider that, when we talk about floor prices and the prices we are going to fix for our products.

In addition to that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), whom I respect in many ways, has argued that Great Britain fixes the prices on all her goods. I can understand that, because only a very small fraction of the food consumed in Great Britain is produced there. Anyone who stops to think will understand that the condition over there bears no relationship whatever to the conditions we face, when it is realized that primarily we are exporters and that they are consumers. His argument that they fix prices months or years in advance has no relationship to what we should or should not get in Canada.

Another hon. member said that there has been a great increase in the farm stock population of Great Britain. He has pointed out that they have 500,000 more cattle, two million more hens and 10,000 more sheep. Perhaps the fact that Great Britain has embarked upon this program of self-sufficiency, to serve her purposes—not Canada's—is the reason why some of the less popular products in Canada are not finding their way to the British market.

Last night the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) suggested that our pools constituted a pressure group. I said in my speech of a month ago, and I am going to say it again, that I fought against the pools probably more than all other members combined. There was no greater exponent or so-called authority on open market operations than the man who is speaking at the moment. But pursuing my thoughts, pursuing my studies and realizing the drift toward statism or nationalism, where the government takes control and operates these things, I came to realize that the quicker we wakened to the value of these pool organizations and co-operatives, the quicker we would get to a sound basis of operations. No hon. member of this house, particularly one coming from western Canada, should cast reflection upon the pools. If he does he has no business sitting in this house.

I repeat that I used to be very bitter about the pools and co-operatives, but I hope the Minister of Agriculture and the government listen to what the pools have to say. They are made up of farmers who are intelligent even though some of our opponents suggest that they are asking for sky-high prices. I had the pleasure during the Christmas recess of meeting a considerable number of farmers, and I went west shortly before the house opened. Of all the people I talked with in organized groups in the small communities there was only one who said that he wanted the price of wheat for 1950-51 to remain at the present level.

Our farmers realize the position of the consumers of Canada. The prices of hogs, cattle, bacon, eggs and other commodities are related closely to the price of wheat. They always have been and they always will be. If my hon. friends in the little groups to your left are sincere in their plea for labour and the labouring man they will not ask that prices be kept at their present high position. They will try to get them more in line.

One hon. member has said that the farmer in western Canada has been crippled. I said during the election, and I say it again, that if the farmers of western Canada have been crippled I hope that this government goes on crippling them because they have been crippled in a very fine way. If hon. members will take the trouble to look up the statistics issued by the bureau of statistics they will find that a greater percentage of farmers retire each year than any other industrial or business group in the Dominion of Canada.

I am not suggesting for a minute that the farmers should take lower prices at once, but I do suggest that the time has come when we have to level off. We have heard a lot of hogwash about the price of eggs. I came to Ottawa last fall and I think my family are in a position where we can pay 75 or 80 cents a dozen for eggs, but there must be 50,000 families in this area who cannot pay that price. The price was entirely out of line. At the same time, when the control was taken off the price got out of line again. I suggested, and I think rightly, that our government use their heads and let this thing kick around a bit. We do not want to price commodities out of the consumer's hands; we want the man on the street, the man on salary, to be able to afford to buy and enjoy some eggs.

As I said when I opened my remarks, I support the amendment, but in principle only. Therefore when I vote I am going to vote against the amendment, and when the bill comes to a vote I am going to vote for the bill.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take much time but I would like to say that I intend to vote for the amendment. I am not like the hon. member who has just taken his seat who says he has certain principles but who intends to vote against them.

Mr. Dewar: Those are the tactics you fellows employ in connection with everything that comes up in the house. You say you are for it in principle, but you vote against it.

Mr. Brooks: I am not an expert like the hon. member who has just sat down, but I am interested in agriculture because I represent one of the best agricultural constituencies in the maritime provinces. I am very much in favour of the prices support act as I hope it will be amended.

We have heard a great deal in this house about wheat. I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) speak this afternoon about wheat. I have been here for fifteen years and during that period, I venture to say, in the discussions on agriculture in this house the question of wheat has taken up ninety per cent of the time. Wheat is very important to the economy of this country and I am not surprised that considerable time is taken up in discussing it.

Canada has spent a great many dollars to support the wheat farmers in the west, despite what the wheat farmers in this house may say. Anyone who will go back over the records of the past fifteen years will find that to be a fact. My constituency is largely a dairying constituency and prices support for our products will be welcome indeed. The Saint John river valley is fast becoming an apple producing section and we are very proud of our apple production. I hope that this industry will receive all the encouragement that is necessary.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Kickham), who indicates that he is ready to vote according to what he considers to be his principles. He stood up in the house this afternoon and said that he thought this amendment was good for the farmers of Prince Edward Island. It is good for the potato producers of Prince Edward Island and for the farmers of all the maritime provinces. I hope that other Liberal members from the maritime provinces will follow the example of the hon. member for Kings and vote in support of this amendment and in support of their constituents.

There is some doubt as to just what is the situation with regard to potatoes in my province and in Prince Edward Island. A short time ago Mr. Duffie of New Brunswick arrived in Ottawa to consult with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and Mr. J. G. Taggart, head of the agricultural prices support board. When that gentleman left Ottawa he was under certain impressions which he had obtained from the minister. If the minister would not mind paying attention for a minute I should like to ask him a few questions. The Saint John Telegraph-Journal of March 21, in dealing with Mr.

Duffie's report to the Grand Falls, New Brunswick, potato growers, had this to say:

As explained by Mr. Duffie, the co-operative would enter contracts with individual growers at planting time to purchase their potatoes at a set price. The co-operative would also enter into a contract with the federal government providing for what amounts to a floor price for the potatoes sold by the members to the co-operative. The co-operative would also set up a selling agency, which could be an existing organization, a new organization or a provincial marketing board.

The grower would know at planting time what the minimum price would be for his crop and could get advances on his crop.

According to the statement of Mr. Duffie after talking with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), the grower would know at planting time what the minimum price would be for his crop.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not sure whether the hon. member was in the house the other night when the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Hatfield) raised the question and read the same article, I believe. I pointed out to him that what Mr. Duffie discussed with me was the act of 1939 and how it could be applied. That is exactly what he is dealing with there, the terms of the act of 1939.

Mr. Brooks: The article says that it was discussed with the Minister of Agriculture and Mr. Taggart, the head of the agricultural prices support board.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Taggart is the deputy minister of agriculture, and he is not the head of the agricultural prices support board. The head of it is Mr. Shaw.

Mr. Brooks: I think we will have to send somebody else in place of Mr. Duffie to consult with the minister because either Mr. Duffie is wrong or the minister is wrong. Anyway, he gave the impression to the potato growers of New Brunswick that, as stated here:

The grower would know at planting time what the minimum price would be for his crop and could get advances on his crop. The government would determine the minimum price, in consultation with the co-operative organization, and the minimum would not exceed 80 per cent of the previous three years' sale price.

That is so much in line with the amendment that has been moved in the house that I am satisfied it is at least what the potato producers of the maritime provinces expect, and what they believe they were told by the Minister of Agriculture when this delegation—

Mr. Gardiner: If I may be permitted to interrupt, I presume the hon. member wants to get the matter clear. The legislation passed in 1939 is the co-operative marketing act.

Mr. Brooks: I understand that.

Mr. Gardiner: Under it a co-operative may be formed. That co-operative appoints its officials, and then they may come here and get support not exceeding 80 per cent of the average price of the preceding three years. They can announce to their growers from that time the initial payment is so and so, based upon whatever the arrangement is. Then they can go ahead and plant their potatoes, and they know that is the least amount they are going to receive. That is all in the act of 1939. There is no necessity for any amendment to put it under this legislation.

Mr. Brooks: Now that a co-operative has been formed in New Brunswick, I understand that the farmers may expect a guarantee of 80 per cent of the price that they have received during the past three years.

Mr. Gardiner: No; just as Mr. Duffie says, they can expect an amount not to exceed 80 per cent, whatever is arranged for at the time.

Mr. Brooks: I am just quoting the report in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of March 21 as to what Mr. Duffie had to say on his return from Ottawa. As I said, I do not intend to take very much time. I should like to ask the minister whether he has received a resolution from the New Brunswick provincial government asking for support on potatoes for the balance of this season.

Mr. Gardiner: I think I have, and if I have not there was a delegation headed by the minister of agriculture of that province which made that representation.

Mr. Brooks: I should also like to ask the minister what he intends to do about it.

Mr. Gardiner: As a matter of fact, I have asked the two provincial governments what they intend to do.

Mr. Brooks: I see. It is just a case of passing the buck from one to the other. In the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of March 27 there is a headline reading:

United States moves to cut import of potatoes from Canada in next year.

I quote that simply to show the uncertainty of the United States market so far as potato producers in the maritime provinces are concerned. Our market can be cut off almost immediately as it has been in the past. We have been allowed to ship in certain quantities of potatoes at a certain duty, and then the market is suddenly cut off. I believe that shipments this year have been greater because of the support prices in the United States, but this situation is unsatisfactory to the United States; and, as in the case of all other products which the United States purchases from us, when they have a surplus of their own and they do not want our Canadian products they immediately take steps to cut them off. This is an indication that probably next year we will not be able to sell many potatoes in that market. I am not going to take any more time. I am strongly in favour of the amendment. As I said a few moments ago, I do not see how any Liberal member from the maritime provinces, having the interests of the potato growers at heart, can do anything else but support the amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my approval of the bill now under consideration. I know that it is the answer to the wish of the many farm organizations in my constituency which have forwarded to me some resolutions requesting that the government continue to support the prices of farm products. The people of the province of Quebec approve this attitude with regard to staple products.

I have carefully considered the amendment proposed by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), but I cannot endorse his argument nor the principle of his amendment.

I was amazed to hear certain members of the Conservative party stating that they supported this amendment as I am under the impression that the application of the principle of this amendment would put our agricultural economy in a straitjacket. By such legislation the government would be hindered in setting floor prices and prevented from making weekly or even daily adjustments, if necessary, that might become essential to Canada's economy and that are obviously in the best interests of the farmers.

While on the surface the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia may seem to protect the farmer, I have reason to fear that if the principle underlying the proposed amendment were applied, results would be quite different and in the end the Canadian farmer would be adversely affected.

On those grounds, I intend to vote against the amendment and in favour of the bill.

(Text):

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, since this legislation was introduced last week there has been considerable discussion as to the merits of the bill, and a number of suggestions have been made as to how it may effectively serve agriculture. I am very glad that all hon. members who have taken part in the debate have spoken in favour of the bill as it is generally applied. I am also very glad that many more members have spoken in favour of the amendment, because it is entirely in accord with the views I hold, and I believe it is in accord with the views of a great many members of the house.

Up to the present time the press in Canada has not been very favourably disposed toward price support legislation, but recently I noticed that two widely read publications have given their support to the idea. I am very glad to see this, because I believe all sound-thinking citizens of Canada should support good legislation of this kind.

It has been suggested that the large surpluses in the United States have been built up by price supports generally, and to a large extent that may be true. But large surpluses have a way of disappearing almost overnight, when a drought or something of that kind comes along, and large supplies could be beneficial to a country instead of being a liability, as they are at the present time. So far Canada has contributed very little under this price support program, which has been in effect since 1944. According to Fortune magazine it has cost the Canadian people only fifteen cents per capita per year for this price support legislation. Compare that with the cost of $25 per capita per year for the support of industry in Canada, and it does not seem a very large sum to pay in order to keep agriculture on an even keel. I feel that when this amendment is put into effect, as I know the minister will put it into effect, it will be of great benefit to our people.

I also believe that if the government had acted promptly when egg prices tumbled so drastically last December, the poultry industry would not have had to sacrifice so many of their flocks. The consumer may have to pay dearly for that next fall.

It has been said many times already in this House of Commons, but I do not think it can be emphasized too strongly, that during the war our farmers made great sacrifices in order to maintain production and keep down prices. That was without parallel anywhere else in the world. Now simple justice demands that those sacrifices be rewarded by the fulfilment of the pledge made at that time not only by the government but by the whole parliament of Canada.

I do not intend to speak at length, and would like to conclude by reading a resolution passed by the farmers of Haldimand county, the riding I represent, on January 27 of this year. I believe the minister has a copy of it, so I need not read the preamble which has already been brought to the attention of the house:

> Therefore be it resolved that the Haldimand county farmers assembled in open session respectfully and emphatically urge the Canadian government to provide floor prices for farm products that will maintain returns to the farmer at least equal to 1949 levels until such time as other commodities, services and labour decline proportionately.

The second resolution is:

> . . . be it resolved that we ask that all hogs be purchased at 30 cents, basis grade A, f.o.b. at the packing plants, Toronto.

When this legislation is passed, great responsibility will be placed in the hands of the minister. We hope and trust that in exercising it he will always have in mind the great sacrifices the farmers made during the war, to which I referred earlier. I believe he will; and if he does he will have the support of the farm people of Canada.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, which has continued for a fairly long period, but last night the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) made some statements which I thought should be answered. I was tempted to speak then, but decided not to. This afternoon the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Dewar) also made some statements which I think justify me in speaking on this question, though I represent a purely urban constituency.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle made the statement that industrial workers wanted to bring down the prices of agricultural products so that they could buy them cheaper on the market. I do not know of any organization of industrial workers in Canada that has said at any time the farmers were getting too much for their products.

Mr. Dewar: I think it is only common sense that eighty or eighty-five cents a dozen for eggs is too much for any worker to pay, no matter who he is.

Mr. MacInnis: That is just the kind of thinking, or lack of thinking, that causes misunderstanding between farmers and industrial workers. People who see eggs at eighty cents a dozen take it that the farmer is getting eighty cents a dozen. The industrial worker protests against high prices, but he realizes that the farmer does not get those prices, that the increase takes place after the farmer disposes of his product.

Mr. Dewar: Would you say that on the market in Ottawa, a secondary market, someone else gets the mark-up? Yet that is what I paid for eggs there.

Mr. MacInnis: That sort of argument reminds me of the arguments that used to be advanced by the opponents of the C.C.F. when we were first organized. They said that as a political party we were bound to fail because we were trying to represent the farmers and the workers, and that no single party could represent those interests because they were diametrically opposed. Of course they forgot they had been representing, or were supposed to be representing, those interests themselves ever since Canada was a nation. It was only when the C.C.F. came into being that they found the interests of those groups were diametrically opposed, so they could not be represented by any single party.

I claim that their interests are not opposed at all, that the farmer is essential to the industrial worker and the industrial worker is essential to the farmer. As a matter of fact much of the work that used to be done on the farms now is done in the cities. If the farmer did not have machinery to use on his farm he would not have any surplus to dispose of. Consequently the operation of producing wheat or eggs or beef today is not just something that takes place on the farm. It is a social operation involving the labour of thousands of people who never see a farm, perhaps; who would not know a grain of wheat from a grain of barley, or a Holstein cow from a Polled Angus.

When the hon. member for Calgary West spoke he said something to the effect that he wished this parliament would cease to be moved by pressure groups; I did not look up his exact words in Hansard. If this government or this parliament is moved by pressure groups, we have to realize that in this country we have pressure groups; and if we want to go into it further the next thing we must find out is how these pressure groups come about and how they operate. If today the farmer finds that he must come to the government to protect his interests in the disposal of his products, it is because, if the government did not intervene, the interests of the farmer would not be protected. If each farmer acts as an individual on his own behalf, he cannot today contend with the large aggregations of business that deal in large amounts, and under circumstances in which the individual is helpless. Over a period of years the farmer has realized that. He has seen the value of organization in industry and labour, and has decided he will have to organize as well. In doing that, he will have to come to the government for assistance. I think it is well that he should have to come to the government, because if this were to be a struggle between the various sections of the community, without the government acting as a referee, as it were, then the situation would be hopeless indeed.

One of the things that I have noticed in regard to government policy in this matter is that the government is trying to legislate merely for today, without any realization that there will be a tomorrow. They seem to hope that next year conditions will be such that the farmers will not need this legislation.

Mr. Gardiner: They won't have it if hon. members do not quit talking.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not believe that sort of policy is going to work. Legislation is passed for one year, and then when we are faced with the same problem next year, perhaps in a more intensified form, legislation is again requested. It would be much better if we were to realize that from now on, unless we have another war that consumes all surpluses, the farmer is bound to have surpluses. If he is going to benefit at all from increased production, then his products will have to be marketed in an orderly manner. Today only governments can carry out that kind of marketing organization.

I am going to support the principle of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to support the principle of the amendment by voting for the amendment, not by voting against it, a habit that is becoming somewhat general on the other side of the house.

Mr. Gardiner: May I just interrupt to explain again that this bill has to be through by Thursday night—not only through this house, but it has to go to the Senate, and, if there are any changes, come back here for approval. It has to be passed by midnight Thursday. I was hoping a vote could be taken tonight, and I did not want to sit after six o'clock to do that.

I do not want to plead sick, but I should have been in the hospital for the past three days. I do not want to have to come back here tonight to put this bill through. After all, the amendment only continues the act in force. There are no changes in it, and I understood all the members wanted it continued. There was another matter I wanted to discuss, but I did not think it was necessary to take time to discuss it now. It may become necessary to do so, however, if certain attitudes are taken and certain statements made. I should like to get this measure through.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): It is my desire to see this measure dealt with, and I hope the vote may be taken well before six o'clock. I do feel however, in view of certain things that have been said, that I should state the reasons why I propose to support the amendment that is before the house. I should like also to point out certain considerations that I think should be in the minds of the members when they are voting on the amendment.

First of all I do think I should mention the statement that was made only a short time ago by an hon. member that he supported the amendment in principle, but that he intended to vote against it. I would point out that on second reading of any bill it is the principle that is in issue. The detail is dealt with in committee. If a member supports the principle enunciated, either in the bill or in the amendment, it is the duty of the member to support what he accepts as a matter of principle, and reserve the right to deal with any detail when it comes before the committee.

Mr. Dewar: I suggested, did I not, that I was in favour of the principle of the bill, and therefore I supported it, but not the amendment?

Mr. Drew: I hope I can realize my desire to finish my remarks before six o'clock so that a vote may be taken. What we have before us is a continuation of the Agricultural Prices Support Act. It is necessary, in view of the fact that certain members, quite properly, send out copies of Hansard, that I should not let one or two remarkable statements that were made this afternoon go completely unchallenged. This is particularly true of the remarks of the member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). He said that if a member voted for the amendment, he killed the bill. Such a statement, of course, is so remote from reality it is difficult to deal with it in terms no stronger than that.

The fact is that the amendment itself asserts the proposition that the bill should remain in force, but that legislation should be introduced to give expression to the idea set forth in the amendment. The amendment itself would be meaningless if the bill were not to stand. Whether one agrees with the amendment or does not agree with it, every hon. member will recognize that the amendment simply says: We want the bill continued; but in addition we say there should be a further amendment setting out the differences which we assert. That is what the amendment says. The principle which the amendment asserts is that there shall be a continuation of the price level, not necessarily at the level which existed between 1944 and 1948, but a level which will bear the same relationship to costs as was the case throughout the period 1944 to 1948. That does not fix prices at a point beyond reasonable levels at all. Under this amendment, if there is a tapering off in costs generally; if there is a tapering off in the cost of production, then the price at which the product is sold will taper off accordingly.

I am not suggesting that this proposal is in itself sufficiently comprehensive to embrace the working out of details; nor is it suggested that it is. It should not be necessary for me to suggest in this house that I do not believe in what are described as socialist doctrines. Nevertheless I certainly intend, now and on any other occasion, to support any measure that is put forward from any part of this house which I believe carries out purposes I think should be carried out. So far as this bill is concerned, there is nothing doctrinaire about it. It is simply an assertion of a principle which has been put before the farmers of Canada by the Minister of Agriculture himself. When I say that, I refer back to a number of statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) with regard to the reasons why the farmers of Canada did not have the opportunity to avail themselves of world prices which were well above Canadian prices during the years from 1944 to 1948. Last spring the Minister of Agriculture said, and the same general proposition was repeated on a number of occasions—I am quoting from the Windsor Daily Star of February 10, 1949:

> Canadian farmers are entitled to prices which would justify their wartime sacrifices.

In that he was referring to the fact that Canadian farmers did not receive the higher level of world prices, and particularly the prices that were being received for certain commodities in the United States. Then he went on to say:

> Because there have been declines in the United States, people here are suggesting that food prices should drop to that level, forgetting that prices there rose during the war to a peak never experienced here.

What the minister was pointing out on that occasion was that prices had been held down here and that, because of the fact that farmers had accepted those lower prices, our prices should not be allowed to drop but should be carried forward into the years ahead at a corresponding level. As I understand it, that is exactly the purpose that is intended in this amendment. I think it is carrying out what the Minister of Agriculture said was the reason for those wartime sacrifices on the part of our farmers. Then I should like to add this quotation, although it gets slightly outside the particular proposition. The Minister of Agriculture said:

> The more closely we associate ourselves with them (the British) along trade lines, the brighter it is likely to be for the future of our country.

To that statement I subscribe. To come back to this general proposition, the Minister of Agriculture made the position clear, and I do not suggest for a moment that he has ever departed from that position. The farmers got good prices, according to his statement, but they did not get quite as high prices as they could have obtained if we had not placed a definite level on farm prices; but they are going to get better prices in the years ahead than they would otherwise have obtained because this is going to be a continuing level. This amendment simply says, "We accept the principle of price supports asserted in the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and we suggest that you carry out the undertaking to the farmers that the level be carried forward, as you yourself suggested, and that you relate the sale price to the cost of production on the same relative basis." While I do not think that this is by any manner of means adequate as a full working formula, nor do I suggest that on the long-term basis this meets the situation, I am supporting this amendment because it asserts the very proposition which we say the Minister of Agriculture has put forward, and which we say should be carried out.

In mentioning this bill, I would point out that the Agricultural Prices Support Act was intended to be not simply an instrument of government; it was intended to create producers' agencies and advisory committees. While mentioning the amendment, I believe that this board should be one really made up of producers, and the chairman should be a producer, not a civil servant who is a member of the Department of Agriculture. That is no reflection on the individual, on the way he approaches the problems, or on his desire to do a job.

Mr. Gardiner: May I be permitted to say a word just here?

Mr. Drew: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not sure that my hon. friend was here when this matter was discussed before. That question was submitted to the farm federation, and the board of the farm federation resolved that they preferred to have the chairman and eight other representatives on a board of sixteen which is advisory to the support board instead of having the chairmanship of the board. They agreed to that themselves and asked for it. That is the way it has been done.

Mr. Drew: I do not want to extend the time, but I understand that the advisory committee provided for by section 9, subsection (1) (j), has not actually been set up.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh yes, it has. It is the same advisory committee that acted on prices right through, as advisory to the prices board. They are going to meet again as a matter of fact, at the end of April.

Mr. Drew: Is that a general advisory committee, to assist the board in an advisory capacity?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes; and with Mr. Hannam as the chairman.

Mr. Drew: I am not going to extend that argument. I am simply going back to this. I am putting forward the proposition that the act was intended to create a board that was an independent agency of government, created it is true by statute, and that there should be not only an advisory committee but advisory committees dealing with particular subjects, to assist the board in its deliberations. I think that structure should be carried forward because it is essential, if satisfactory results are to be achieved, to have a board made up of experienced producers and then to have committees of people specializing in various particular types of production advising the board in regard to price levels. I merely make that observation with regard to the act itself, which is supported in principle by the amendment that is before us.

This board is of concern not merely to the farmers of Canada but to everybody in Canada because, as has been asserted already, the maintenance of adequate levels of farm prices is something that is of concern to every Canadian. If the agricultural economy of this country is threatened, then the whole of the economy of the country will be threatened at the same time.

I repeat that in supporting this amendment I am doing so because I believe it carries forward the very undertaking that was given to the farmers at the time they willingly accepted prices that were lower than world prices, with the assurance that this would give them a continuing level in the years ahead. I believe that this should be done at this time; but it could be done simply by introducing a further amendment to this same act, which could be dealt with easily within the time limit that we have. In voting for this amendment, I am voting to support the act in principle. In fact, voting for the amendment does support the act in principle. But in voting for this amendment I do so in the hope that the government will consider the introduction of some positive declaration of this kind as to the level at which prices will be kept. I repeat that this is only an expedient, that it does not meet the over-all requirement of wider markets unless there is to be a threat to the whole price structure within Canada; and that while this Agricultural Prices Support Act is an essential device to meet the present situation, we still must find those wider markets so that we shall have not only adequate price levels but also adequate demand for the things we produce. It will not be satisfactory if we simply have a price level that is adequate unless we are able to sell what we can produce on a continuing level of production. Therefore I urge support of the amendment by members on all sides of the house; and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that, in view of what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has said, you will permit the time to lapse, and take a vote on the amendment at this time.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Argue) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Adamson	Herridge
Argue	Higgins
Aylesworth	Hodgson
Balcer	Johnston
Beyerstein	Jones
Black (Cumberland)	Kickham
Blackmore	Knight
Blair	Knowles
Brooks	Lennard
Browne (St. John's West)	MacInnis
Bryce	McGregor
Cardiff	McLure
Casselman	Murphy
Catherwood	Noseworthy
Charlton	Pearkes
Coldwell	Quelch
Courtemanche	Ross (Souris)
Coyle	Rowe
Diefenbaker	Shaw
Drew	Smith (Calgary West)
Fair	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Fleming	Studer
Fraser	Thatcher
Fulton	Thomas
Gillis	Tustin
Green	White (Hastings-Peterborough)
Hansell	White (Middlesex East)
Harkness	Wright—58.
Harris (Danforth)
Hatfield

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson	Douglas
Applewhaite	Dumas
Ashbourne	Eudes
Bater	Eyre
Belzile	Fauteux
Bennett	Ferrie
Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)	Follwell
Blanchette	Fournier (Hull)
Boisvert	Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Boivin	Fulford
Bonnier	Gagnon
Boucher	Gardiner
Bourget	Garland
Bradette	Garson
Breithaupt	Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Brisson	Gauthier (Sudbury)
Brown (Essex West)	Gauthier (Lapointe)
Bruneau	Gauthier (Portneuf)
Byrne	George
Cameron	Gibson
Campney	Gingras
Cannon	Goode
Carroll	Gosselin
Carter	Gour (Russell)
Cavers	Gourd (Chapleau)
Chevrier	Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Cleaver	Harrison
Cloutier	Healy
Conacher	Hellyer
Corry	Helme
Cote (Verdun-La Salle)	Henderson
Cournoyer	Hetland
Croll	Howe
Darroch	Huffman
Dechene	Hunter
Decore	Isnor
Dewar	James
Dickey	Jutras

Kent	Murray (Cariboo)
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)	Mutch
Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)	Nadon
Lafontaine	Nixon
Laing	Pinard
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge)	Poulin
Langlois (Gaspe)	Pouliot
Lapalme	Proudfoot
Lapointe	Prudham
Larson	Ratelle
Leduc	Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche)
Lefrancois	Robertson
Leger	Robinson
Lesage	Rooney
Little	Ross (Hamilton East)
Macdonald (Edmonton East)	St. Laurent
MacDougall	Simmons
MacLean (Cape Breton North and Victoria)	Sinclair
MacNaught	Sinnott
Macnaughton	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
McCann	Smith (Moose Mountain)
McCubbin	Stewart (Yorkton)
McCulloch	Stick
McCusker	Stuart (Charlotte)
McIlraith	Thomson
McIvor	Tremblay
McLean (Huron-Perth)	Valois
McWilliam	Viau
Major	Ward
Maltais	Warren
Masse	Weaver
Martin	Weir
Matthews	Welbourn
Maybank	Whiteside
Mayhew	Whitman
Monette	Winkler
Mott	Winters
Murray (Oxford)	Wood—152.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Bradette in the chair.

On section 1—Section 9 of c. 29, 1944-45, continued in force.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister in a position to make a statement with regard to support for British Columbia apples?

Mr. Gardiner: No; I am not in a position to make a statement on British Columbia apples at the present time.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The minister was going to answer a question that I had asked.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to ask the minister when we can expect to have this matter settled. I am not anxious to hold up this bill. If the minister will give us as much information as he can I shall be satisfied, but if not I shall have to prolong the discussion.

Mr. Gardiner: The matter is under discussion and no matter what is done about this bill the decision will be the same. The people concerned know what the facts are and I do not think they are in any way concerned.

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Fulton: I happen to know that they are concerned.

Mr. Gardiner: I shall report the decision to the house just as soon as it is made.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The other day the Minister of Agriculture said that he would give me an answer about oleomargarine manufacturers putting the dairy people out of business.

Mr. Gardiner: I am afraid if I were to go into that in detail it might cause some discussion. All I will say at the moment is that we have about 21 million pounds of butter left at the present time. I have a short announcement which I probably should make in conjunction with my answer to the question. The Minister of Agriculture announced today that the agricultural prices support board is authorized to continue the purchase of butter on the basis of 58 cents delivered Montreal for one additional month, that is, until the 30th day of April. It is further announced that there is no change in the present selling price of government-held butter nor any change in the policy to protect purchasers of government-held butter as previously announced. The matter will continue as it is for one more month.

As to the other question that has been raised, some reference was made to it at the dairy council's meetings in the last two weeks, and I made some reference to it in the meeting at Saskatoon. The matter to which reference was made was that we have had a production of oleomargarine of a little less than 3 million pounds a month during the past year, and it is continuing along at about that rate. In the month of February for some reason the producers of oleomargarine put out over 8 million pounds. The dairy people have taken strong exception to that, and we take some exception to it largely because of the fact that we think it is putting an uncalled-for amount of margarine on the market at a time when it is essential that we market the surplus of Canadian butter. That is all that is involved in what has been said up to date. In addition to that, the only thing I can say is that the government put through a vote of $50,000 to advertise butter, and in the press across the country from time to time within the last few weeks you may have noticed these advertisements that have been inserted to help the sale of butter.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is certainly not a sufficient answer. The statement of the minister extending the purchase price for one month is simply in order that the dairy producers can sell their new butter there and the old butter will be disposed of through the trade. I think that is all that means. I raised this question the other day and pointed out that it was not satisfactory to the dairy producers, that they wanted to know whether they should remain in business. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill. I can question the minister on his estimates, and I may say that I want a better answer.

Mr. Gardiner: I have a full explanation, if you will leave it until my estimates are before the house.

Mr. Ross (Souris): On the question of oleomargarine, an answer made yesterday to a question on the order paper stated that some 73 million pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured in the year 1949. That is altogether different from the answer the minister has just given me as to the manufacture of oleomargarine during the past year, namely, some 3 million pounds a month.

Mr. Gardiner: I will be very much surprised if there is that much.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is the answer on Hansard yesterday.

Mr. Gardiner: Sometimes these answers are a little difficult to understand.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is very true. I have found that out myself in receiving from the minister answers that appeared to be a little difficult to understand.

Mr. Gardiner: For example, I asked for information to be brought to me last night—I have it in front of me—as to what weight of bacon had been exported to Great Britain in January. The figure I received was 40,930,000 pounds. I knew that did not give me what the house was asking for or what I was asking for. I said, "Where did that come from?" I was told that 38 million pounds of it came from months immediately preceding the end of last year. This was what was shipped; it was not what was taken delivery of. On receiving the information as to what was taken delivery of I find that it is less than 5 million pounds down to the present time since the beginning of the year. Therefore sometimes you have to get an explanation of these answers in order to understand exactly what they mean.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, there is no use in members showing impatience. We are dealing with an extremely important matter. There is no question of misunderstanding in this particular case, no matter what it might be in other cases. In response to a question on the order paper a reply was given yesterday. The question reads:

1. How many pounds of butter were produced in Canada in the calendar year 1949?
2. During the same period, how many pounds of margarine were manufactured?

There cannot be the slightest doubt that the question asks how many pounds of margarine were manufactured in Canada in the calendar year 1949. The answer given is 73,958,000. There can be no misunderstanding of that which would explain the difference between that figure and the estimate of 3 million pounds a month.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I will have to have the matter investigated myself. I am sorry I did not check this question before it was answered in the house. I have had the answer given to me a dozen times as to 1949, and it is 35 million pounds, unless everything has changed since. Somebody must have been storing it away underground or somewhere else, because up until the end of the year the figures indicated 35 million pounds. It was indicated in the press within the last two weeks that the highest production of oleomargarine ever experienced in Canada was in February, and it was a little over 8 million pounds. It would take 8 million pounds every month in the year in order to produce the figure that is given in yesterday's Hansard. There is something wrong with it.

Mr. Drew: I think every hon. member is anxious to expedite proceedings, but they cannot be expedited beyond a point that is in keeping with our obligations as members. I know that every hon. member will be in sympathy with the view that the minister should not be kept here any longer at this time than is necessary. We will all agree he should do something about his cold.

Mr. Gardiner: This has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. Drew: No, but it is a point that has been raised in relation to it.

Mr. Gardiner: It is not properly raised. It can be discussed better on my estimates than now because it does not belong here at all.

Mr. Drew: In order that the discussion may not be extended on this particular point, I suggest that the minister undertake to have his parliamentary assistant examine the matter, and that tomorrow or later in the week if it takes longer a statement be given to the house. If that is done we can pass this legislation now.

Mr. Charlton: I have no desire to continue the debate any longer, but I have a few questions which I think the minister should answer. If he wishes to do so he can answer them tomorrow or any other time at all. How much of the $200 million has been used in each of the calendar years since 1944? What products have been covered? What is the amount of each product covered, and what is the amount of each product purchased under the act? How much of the butter that has been purchased is not up to the grade that it was when it was put in storage?

Mr. Gardiner: We will get all that for you.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister say he will answer those questions?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, I will.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, I hope I may have unanimous consent to move that the house go into committee of ways and means to consider certain resolutions, and that the hour for private bills be deferred until the completion of what I have to say and the customary brief remarks of my hon. friend the financial critic of the opposition.

Mr. Drew: I do not wish to raise any question about the procedure, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that the position simply be that by consent the minister proceed at this time.

Mr. Abbott: I am in the hands of the house, Mr. Speaker. I move:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

In proposing this annual motion and in opening my budget for the year upon which we are about to enter I begin as is customary by reporting to the house on the general economic situation in which we are operating, and upon the economic prospects for the coming year.

The three years 1946, 1947 and 1948 were years of active and expanding business and employment in almost every part of the world. The work of physical, social and economic reconstruction not only created very high levels of employment and activity, but placed severe strains upon the available resources of manpower, equipment and materials in almost every country. These determined efforts to do so much in so short a time resulted in widespread shortages of various kinds and in open or suppressed inflation of varying degrees of intensity.

The year 1949 saw a considerable change in this balance of demand upon resources, and the improvements in output and in organization have lessened some, though not all of the economic difficulties with which the world is faced. In looking through the figures published by the United Nations I find that in those countries of Europe for which information is available the volume of production increased about 10 per cent during 1949, and that output as a whole is nearly 20 per cent above 1937. In Canada industrial output in 1949 was about two per cent above 1948, but more than 70 per cent above the 1937 level. In passing, I may add that Canada's increase in production over pre-war levels is greater than that recorded for any other country.

These improvements in production have had their effect on price levels and inflationary pressures. The December 1949 price levels in most countries of western Europe were less than five per cent above December 1948. It should be added that conditions of suppressed inflation continue to be a danger in some countries, and in most countries the effects of the September devaluations had not been fully reflected in their price levels by the end of December. Canadian wholesale price levels at the turn of the year were about two per cent below a year ago.

These increases in production have also resulted in a considerable improvement in the balance of payments position of western Europe as a whole. Over the past three years the current account deficits of ERP countries have been reduced from $7½ billion to just under $4 billion, and their trading deficit with the dollar areas has been reduced from about $7 billion to $3·8 billion. This improvement in their total deficit has been the result of a five per cent increase in total imports and a 40 per cent increase in total exports, though in respect of the dollar areas the deficit has been reduced by a drop of one-third in imports and an increase of one-quarter in exports. Reductions in imports by European countries were made possible by their improvements in home production and hence their reduced need for the abnormal volume of imports which was essential just after the war, but are also the result of deliberate administrative measures designed to keep their imports within the dollar resources that are available to them.

Hon. members will realize, of course, that while these improvements are very considerable, Europe still has a difficult road to traverse before viability at a tolerable level can be reached. Hon. members will also realize that, while we stand to benefit very substantially in the longer run by the restoration of a sound balance in world trade, in the shorter run we shall have posed to us in Canada a number of difficult problems, and the adjustments that we may be required to make in our economy will not always be easy or entirely painless.

Canadian economic activity is heavily influenced by conditions throughout the world, but it is particularly influenced by economic conditions and prospects in the United States.

Economic activity in that country experienced a moderate setback during the spring and early summer of 1949, but recovered during the second half of the year. The decline in United States industrial production during the first half of the year amounted to about 16 per cent, and the later recovery regained about half of this lost ground. While we can never escape the effects of sustained changes in United States business conditions, it is evidence of the current strength of the Canadian economy that we were so little affected by the United States recession. Taking 1949 as a whole, United States industrial production declined about eight per cent and Canadian output advanced about two per cent.

I turn now to a general review of our external trade.

Exports from Canada to all countries have been sustained at a high level throughout 1949. From a post-war low of about $2,300 million at the end of 1946 exports increased steadily and rapidly until the annual rate reached $3,000 million toward the end of 1948. During the first eight months of 1949 there continued to be an upward trend and the peak twelve-month figure of $3,120 million was reached in August. Since that month there has been some falling off and the exports for the twelve months ended February 28, 1950, were just under the $3 billion mark.

There have, however, been some significant changes in the direction of our exports, and having regard to our exchange problem, these changes have been in a satisfactory direction. Exports to the United States, which reached a post-war low of just under $900 million in 1946, climbed slowly through 1947 but very rapidly during 1948 to reach $1½ billion at the end of that year. They have remained at this level, with only minor fluctuations, for the past fifteen months.

This remarkable increase of $600 million in our exports to the United States in three years has been spread over all our principal industries, but the chief contributors to the increase have been farm and livestock products, wood and paper products, farm machinery and equipment, and non-ferrous metals.

Exports to the United Kingdom were at an annual rate of $600 million at the end of 1946; they climbed to $780 million early in 1948; dropped back to $650 million early in 1949; then recovered to about $700 million, and have been fluctuating narrowly about that figure for the past eight months. There has been more variability in the pattern of our exports to the United Kingdom. We have sold them more grains and more base metals, but they have bought less animal products and less timber.

Exports to all other countries increased from $800 million late in 1946 to about $1 billion at the end of 1947. Since then they have declined in an irregular pattern and are now at a rate of about $750 million a year.

Taking the last two years as a whole, a fall in overseas exports of about $300 million has been more than offset by an increase of $500 million in our exports to the United States.

On the import side, it would be agreed, I think, by all groups in this house that Canada should welcome increased imports from our overseas customers. But such an increase, to be of a lasting nature, must be based upon supplying goods which we need and like at prices which are competitive with the supplies available to us from our own producers or from other countries. Ever since the war, and more recently as a part of our policy of meeting our own dollar problem, we have taken special measures to help our overseas suppliers to surmount the transitional difficulties of the post-war period; but we cannot continue these indefinitely, nor should we convert temporary devices into permanent policies. It continues, however, to be our policy to encourage as large an increase as possible in our overseas imports, within the framework of our international obligations.

As the house knows, imports into Canada increased rapidly from the $1½ billion figure in 1946 to $2½ billion at the end of 1947. This increase of a billion dollars in imports was in part a reflection of world-wide price increases, in part a filling of the accumulated shortages of the war years, and in part the purchase of materials and equipment for incorporation in our heavy post-war capital investments. Largely as a result of our emergency import controls, imports were held at the $2½ billion level throughout 1948, and as these controls were relaxed the rate of import climbed slowly during 1949 to about $2¾ billion. There has been little change in the rate of import during the past six months, and such change as is discernible has been slightly downward.

As a result of our emergency import controls our imports from the United States during 1948 were held to a level about $200 million below 1947. With the progressive relaxation of these controls our annual rate of United States imports has come back to within $25 million of their earlier peak. Much of this increase has been in the field of capital goods and equipment which have been a necessary part of the continued capital investment program of Canadian industry.

Frankly we have been a little disappointed in the apparent inability of overseas countries to resume their traditional share of our import market during the past year. Late in 1946 our overseas imports were about $500 million; they rose steadily to $860 million early in 1949, but from that point they have been drifting downward and are now at about $800 million. If our overseas friends could get back their traditional share of our import market, they would be earning an additional $200 million a year with which to balance and eventually expand their consumption of Canadian products.

It is still too early for the world to have witnessed the full effect of the world-wide realignment of exchange rates which occurred last September. The immediate arithmetical implications of these currency devaluations, so far as we are concerned, were to raise the cost of our imports from the United States by 10 per cent, to reduce to the United States the cost of our exports by 9 per cent, to reduce the cost of our imports from most other countries by 24 per cent, and to raise the cost of our exports to most other countries by 31 per cent. At the same time United States exports would cost most other countries 44 per cent more, and relative prices between most of these other countries would be unchanged.

Changes in price relationships of this magnitude naturally set in motion all over the world a stream of price adjustments that is still going on. Some basic commodities traded in relatively free international markets, such as the base metals, were adjusted almost immediately to the United States dollar price; many other prices have moved much more slowly, and some hardly at all. The general effect, however, has been to reduce very considerably the wide international price disparities which had been developing at an alarming rate during the three preceding years.

The effect on Canadian trade has already been noticeable and is in a satisfactory direction. Notwithstanding the relaxation of many of our import controls, our imports from the United States have been declining for the past four months, and our exports have been increasing. In the four months November to February inclusive, our exports to the United States increased by nearly $60 million as compared with the same months a year ago, and our imports declined by about $25 million. That is, for these four months an adverse balance of trade of nearly $100 million a year ago has been reduced to an adverse balance of only $15 million.

In the same four months our exports to the United Kingdom declined by $20 million, and our imports from the United Kingdom were down by $3 million. Our overseas exports as a whole, however, were down by more than $100 million in these four months, and our overseas imports down by $12 million.

In a world where so many other factors are changing, one cannot isolate the effects of currency changes in any precise way, but I think that those which took place last fall should play a beneficial role in helping to correct the unbalance in the trading relationships between North America and the rest of the world. I should emphasize, however, that currency changes alone and of themselves are no cure for basic problems of maladjustment. They can do little more than give time in which the more fundamental measures can be put to work. However, so far as Canada is concerned, it already seems clear that the action we took in September last has, under the conditions presently prevailing, improved our trading position.

As the house is aware, exports of gold are not included in our merchandise trade figures. Gold production, however, has recently been showing a steady and welcome increase each year, due to the combined stimulus of an improved supply of suitable labour, the emergency assistance payments and more recently the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. Last year total production amounted to $148 million and most of that served to increase our exchange reserves.

Apart from merchandise trade and gold production, there are of course several other factors which enter into our international balance of payments on current and capital account, including tourist expenditures here and abroad, interest and dividend payments and receipts, freight charges and earnings, and various types of capital inflow and outflow. It is the combined effect of all these factors which account for the net change in our reserves of gold and United States dollars during the course of a year. I do not wish to anticipate the report of the foreign exchange control board for 1949, which will be available in the very near future and will contain a detailed analysis of our balance of payments during the past year and of the factors accounting for the change in our reserve position. All I need say here is that our surplus on international current account according to preliminary estimates amounted to about $193 million in 1949, a decline from the $450 million surplus reported in 1948; and that in the capital account the features of note were total advances of $120 million to the United Kingdom under the 1946 loan and a fairly substantial inflow of capital from the United States for direct investment, chiefly in connection with oil developments in western Canada. The end result of both current and capital transactions was a net increase of $119 million in our exchange reserves, bringing them to a total of $1,117·1 million on December 31 last, as I reported early in January.

This represents a very substantial increase from the low point of $461 million to which they had fallen in December, 1947,—a point so far below a safe margin that we had to secure approval from parliament for special emergency powers to control imports. These special measures were effective, and by the end of 1948 our reserves had recovered to $998 million. In the light of this improvement we were able to make extensive relaxations in our import restrictions, one result of which was that our rate of accumulation of reserves in 1949 was more moderate. However, with the improvement of $119 million that did occur, I was able to announce early in February two further groups of relaxations to take effect April 1 and July 1 respectively. When these are in effect I estimate that we will have covered about half the road toward complete removal of the emergency import controls.

In the meantime our reserves have shown a further substantial increase. I shall be publishing the March 31 reserve figure sometime next week, but as we are now so close to the end of the month, I think I should depart from our usual practice of reporting the size of our reserves only after the end of each quarter and advise the house that at the close of business on Saturday last they had reached the figure of $1,204·2 million. This represents an increase during the present quarter of about $87 million. I should add, however, that a considerable part of the recent increase is accounted for by a rise in Canadian balances held by other governments. To the extent that these balances are abnormally high and will be subsequently reduced it means that some of our exports in coming months will be paid for out of these balances and will not bring in new receipts of exchange. To this extent our reserves at their current level include the proceeds of some future earnings which have in effect been received in advance. Moreover, the second quarter of the year is the season for heavy transfers of earnings on United States investments in Canada. Hon. members who have studied our monthly reserve figures will recall that last year our reserves dropped by $90 million during April and May. Unless some unforeseen developments occur, I expect that our reserves may show a similar decline during the next two or three months. However, I would not, of course, venture to make any prediction in respect to the probable net change in our reserves for the new fiscal year as a whole.

As is customary on these occasions, I shall table at the conclusion of my remarks and ask to have printed as an appendix to today's Hansard the usual white paper which puts into convenient form all the more important economic and financial statistics. Accompanying these tables will be found brief explanatory notes and comments. It is not my intention to burden the house by reciting many of these facts and figures. I shall try only to give a broad and general picture. I do, however, urge hon. members to study the white paper carefully.

The latest estimate published by the dominion bureau of statistics over the week end shows Canadian farm cash income in 1949 to have been almost identical with the all-time record reached in 1948, which in turn was twenty-five per cent above 1947. Lower returns on dairy products, poultry products and furs were offset by increased returns on grains and livestock. Earlier estimates of net farm income for 1949, which are given in the white paper, show a moderate decline from 1948. The production of the fisheries was well maintained. Despite export marketing difficulties for some types of fish, returns to fishermen in 1949 were satisfactory, domestic demand being particularly good throughout the year. In those lines of production where our farmers and fishermen rely primarily on overseas markets the outlook for 1950 is less certain, but I would like to remind hon. members that our markets on this side of the Atlantic have increased greatly in recent years, and can, I think, be still further developed, especially for high quality products.

Employment in Canada has continued at a high level. The trend of industrial employment continued upward during 1949 until August or September; since then it has been moderately downward. The latest available figures for industrial employment, which are for January, show a decline of one per cent from a year ago. This, however, is a general average, and conceals a number of divergent trends in the components of the general index. For example, employment in logging and in the agricultural implement industry is down much more than the average; but in mining, in construction work, and in the trade and service occupations it is considerably higher than a year ago.

Total labour income, in spite of the one per cent fall in employment, has continued to increase, and its monthly rate at the end of the year was about five per cent above the same months a year earlier. Average weekly wages rose about three per cent during the year, while the cost of living advanced barely one per cent.

While the decline in employment as a whole has been small, the increase in unemploym nt has been greater, due, of course, to the fact that the total labour force continues to grow. The outlook for 1950 seems to be that the volume of employment will increase moderately, but it is possible that it may not catch up with growth in total labour supply.

Total unemployment, even at its seasonal peak, has not been large, judged by normal and usual conditions in this country. It has, however, been uneven in its regional incidence.

The largest single element in the past winter's unemployment has been the sharp decline in woods operations associated with the policy of the principal pulp and paper companies in reducing their heavy pulpwood inventories. Other pools of unemployment have been created by decline of particular export markets.

The marketing prospects for our pulp and paper industry appear to be good, and if these are maintained I would expect the woods operations next winter to be at a normal level. We shall continue to give all the help we can in finding markets for such other commodities as may from time to time find their markets upset.

I want to make it clear, however, that the central government cannot and should not attempt to assume responsibility for all these regional problems. In my mind the proper role of the central government in our federal state is fourfold. First, through its fiscal and g neral policies it should endeavour to create a favourable climate for healthy economic expansion and development. Second, it should have careful regard in planning its own operations for the best timing and the best placing of its capital and developmental expenditures. Third, it should recognize a special responsibility for the promotion and development of our basic primary industries and other industries of a national significance. Fourth, it should be ready to co-operate actively with provincial governments, and through the provincial governments with municipalities, in meeting regional problems that threaten nation-wide economic repercussions.

There have been times in the past when differences of view between the federal and provincial governments have received a kind of publicity which has led the general public to overlook, or at least to underestimate, the very large amount of practical day-to-day co-operation between the two levels of government. There is a great deal of this working together, and we are ready, in all appropriate circumstances, to extend this friendly collaboration.

With particular reference to the current situation I should remind the house that in preparing our estimates for construction projects we have deliberately been severe in cutting down requests for new construction, because in most parts of Canada building labour is fully employed on private projects. But where we have evidence that building labour will be available we have applied less severe tests to departmental requests for new construction.

The amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act recently enacted will not only relieve distress but will sustain purchasing power, and thus the general level of business activity, in many of the regions where difficulties were encountered this winter.

The consensus of informed views about the outlook for 1950 is that employment, output and price levels in both Canada and the United States will show no great change from 1949. The balance of probabilities for Canada indicates a moderate increase in the domestic and United States demand for our products, offset in part by a reduction in overseas demands, with prices tending slightly downward, and employment slightly upward.

A minister of finance must always remind the house that forecasts of this nature are beset with uncertainties. But under our parliamentary system, where both programs of expenditure and programs of revenue must be presented and approved in advance for a specified twelve months period, such estimates of the future have to be made. To some extent our expenditures, and to a much greater extent our revenues, will fluctuate with expanding or contracting business activity and with rising or falling prices.

However difficult, forecasts must be made. My forecast and my fiscal program for 1950-51 are based on the expectation of sustained high levels of production and employment, and can be summed up simply in an estimate that the gross national product, which is in fact the economic tax base, will be about one or two per cent higher in 1950 than in 1949.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS: 1949-50

In turning to review our revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year now closing and to forecast revenue and expenditure for next year, may I again call the attention of non. members to the detailed accounts provided in the white paper to which I have referred.

A year ago I forecast for the current fiscal year expenditure of $2,390 million and revenue, after tax changes, of $2,477 million, leaving a prospective surplus of $87 million. In re-introducing the budget measures on October 20 last I revised the expenditure figure to $2,460 million, including in it in this case the Newfoundland debt we had taken over, and I revised upwards the forecast of revenue, setting it at $2,545 million, after taking into account the small additional tax changes then proposed. This left practically unchanged my earlier forecast of the budgetary surplus. We have not yet reached the end of our year, and on the expenditure side in particular it is always difficult to estimate the payments to be made during the closing weeks. It now appears, however, that actual expenditures for the year will be about $2,438 million—about one per cent less than our last forecast—and revenue about $2,549 million—just a shade more than our October estimate. On this basis our budgetary surplus should be about $111 million. It is possible, however, that the actual out-turn when all the accounts are closed may differ slightly from this, but not by very much. In operations of the magnitude and complexity of the government's financial activities, an error amounting to only about one per cent of our expenditure appears to me to reflect exceedingly accurate estimating.

On the revenue side, the notable feature is still the remarkable buoyancy in our direct taxes, notwithstanding the successive reductions in rates that have been made. Direct taxes accounted for half our total revenue, and a large part of the indirect taxes that provide forty per cent of our revenue is levied upon things the purchase of which is usually some evidence of ability, as well as willingness, to pay.

Our non-tax revenue continues high. The post office is paying its way, when we include the wartime increase made in letter rates, and I hope that we can continue to cover the growing cost of postal services by charges for them. It supplies some free services to other departments, of course, and service of some kinds below estimated cost, but on the other hand the post office is not charged for its office accommodation nor for certain services such as those of our accounting and disbursing officers. In due course I would hope we can arrange that it will be charged with all proper expenses of its operations, that it will charge other departments for mail services, and that it will be able to show a modest surplus on a commercial basis of accounting.

We have continued this year to benefit from some abnormal post-war special receipts and credits, though now on a relatively modest scale, the total of this category being about $60 million. The chief components of this figure are $18 million from the sale of surplus crown assets, $16 million recovered on war contract settlements, and about $9 million in payments by European governments in settlement for supplies provided by the military authorities to the civil populations at the end of the war. We can still expect some receipts next year under these headings, but on a diminishing scale.

On the expenditure side, the most notable features have been the increased expenditures for social security on the one hand and national security on the other. The increase in social security—chiefly family allowances and old age pensions—was about $62 million; and the increase in national defence and defence research was $110 million. Newfoundland, too, added materially to our expenditures—as was evident from the $55 million provided in special supplementary estimates to extend our services to Newfoundland, and a non-recurring charge of $62 million to cover the assumption of the major portion of the former Newfoundland debt. There was another large non-recurring item in our expenditures represented by the net charge to our premium, discount and exchange account resulting from the revaluation of currencies and representing the decreased Canadian dollar value of our sterling obligations, the increased Canadian dollar value of our United States dollar obligations, and the increased Canadian dollar value of our holdings of gold and United States dollar balances.

Offsetting these major increases in expenditures that I have noted were a number of reductions in those items which arose out of the war, notably certain types of non-continuing payments to veterans, payments of subsidies of various kinds, and various administrative costs for temporary post-war organizations.

In addition to these major changes in our expenditures this year as compared with previous years, there was a wide variety of minor increases representing, on the one hand, higher costs due to the rise in salary, wage and price levels, and, on the other, expansion in various government services. I will not attempt at this stage to comment in any detail upon these, but the combined effect of these factors can be noted in the detailed statements of expenditures given in the white paper.

As usual, I should call the attention of the house not only to our budgetary surplus but also to the non-cash items in our revenue and expenditure and to the non-income or extra-budgetary receipts and disbursements, apart from security transactions, that must be taken into account in order to appraise our over-all cash position. In the past year we have had more than the usual amount of budgetary charges which did not involve cash expenditures, and consequently when we adjust our budgetary surplus for purely accounting items—such as the assumption of the Newfoundland debt, the revaluation of our assets and liabilities which are expressed in other currencies and the addition to our general reserve against active assets—we find that we have a cash surplus of $287 million as compared with the budgetary surplus of $111 million. To this we should add other receipts that do not constitute revenue, such as the increases in the trust accounts for the payment of annuities and pensions, and the increases in various other accounts on our books that we cannot treat as revenue. We must also take into account the repayments of loans and advances that have previously been made. These various receipts have added another $200 million to our cash. On the other hand, we must take into account heavy disbursements this year that do not appear on our books as expenditures. The largest of these has been the advances to the foreign exchange control board to acquire gold or United States dollars, which have amounted to $160 million. We have also disbursed $104 million in loans to the United Kingdom and other governments abroad, after taking into account repayments that we have received from such governments on other loans. We have also made substantial loans to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and under the Veterans Land Act for housing and settlement purposes. Adding these and various small additional items of a similar character, we get a total of cash disbursements other than budgetary expenditures of $420 million. This leaves a cash surplus of $67 million, apart from security transactions. This year the net sales of securities out of our securities investment account, the account through which we employ our surplus cash balances, have totalled $430 million. Adding this to the $67 million cash surplus that I have just mentioned, we have a total of $497 million available to reduce outstanding public debt. Actually we used $486 million for this purpose, the remaining $11 million being our estimated increase in cash balances at the end of the year.

FINANCING OPERATIONS

In my budget address of October 20 last I outlined most of the major transactions in what has been a notable record of financing during the present fiscal year, and here I need only finish that outline and summarize the results for the year as a whole.

At that time I referred to the campaign just beginning for the sale of the fourth series of Canada savings bonds. That campaign proved highly successful; to date approximately one million buyers have purchased a total of $304 million of this fourth series. I wish again to pay my tribute to the splendid work which has been done both by voluntary and professional workers in promoting the sale of these bonds.

On March 1 this year three separate transactions took place. An issue of $550 million of ¾ per cent six months treasury notes was sold at par to the Bank of Canada to refund a similar issue maturing on that date. On the same date a $325 million issue sold in 1948 and held very largely by the banking system became due and was refunded by an issue of $325 million 3-year 1½ per cent bonds sold at 99·30 to yield 1·74 per cent per annum. Also on March 1 a new issue of $100 million of six months deposit certificates bearing interest at ¾ of one per cent per annum was sold to the chartered banks at par.

The results of our financial operations and of certain other factors on our funded debt for the fiscal year as a whole may be summarized as follows:

1. Our funded debt payable in sterling increased during the year by a net amount of $52·6 million as a result of the assumption of certain Newfoundland sterling indebtedness in accordance with the terms of union offset in part by the effect of the revaluation of sterling.

2. Our direct funded debt payable in United States funds increased by $100 million because of the sale of a new issue in New York to retire C.N.R. and national harbours board obligations which were guaranteed by the government of Canada—a flotation incidentally, which, as hon. members will recall, set a new record for Canada's credit in the United States market. The Canadian dollar equivalent of our funded debt payable in United States funds increased a further $39·8 million due to the revaluation of the Canadian dollar.

3. Finally, in regard to our funded debt payable in Canada, the amount of our obligations, including refundable taxes, which matured or were called during the year was no less than $3,137·4 million. We met $2,213·3 million of this amount by refunding or conversion into new issues, $338·2 million from the proceeds of new borrowing in the form of Canada savings bonds and deposit certificates, and $430 million from the proceeds of sales of securities from securities investment account. Another $100 million in Canadian funds, not included in the cash surplus referred to above, was available from the proceeds of our issue in New York. The remaining cash required, $55·9 million, came from our cash surplus.

While I am on this subject, perhaps I may be permitted to deal with our probable financing requirements for the new fiscal year. As will be apparent from what I have to say later, I expect that we shall be able again next year to make some modest reduction in our funded debt from available cash resources but this reduction will certainly be much smaller than that effected this year. However, during the year there will become due or payable in Canada funded debt in the aggregate principal amount of $2,414·1 million.

Yesterday I made a public announcement to the effect that the government proposed to call for prior redemption on June 15, 1950, the first victory loan 3 per cent bonds which mature on June 15, 1951, and also on June 1, 1950, an issue of 3 per cent bonds sold in 1935 which mature on June 1, 1955. The amount required to pay off these called issues is approximately $745 million, and our cash resources will not, of course, be adequate for that purpose without a refunding loan. For that reason a new issue will be announced shortly before the time for payment of the called issues. It is expected that the new issue will include some longer term bonds suitable for general public investment as well as a substantial amount of short term bonds. This operation will result in a further reduction in the cost of interest on the public debt. Perhaps I should not let this occasion pass without again reminding all those who bought bonds during the war in such large numbers to examine their holdings and if they find they have any first victory loan bonds, make sure to turn them in on the call date, June 15 next, and thereby avoid any loss of interest.

FORECAST OF REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE, 1950-51

My forecast of our prospective revenue and expenditure for the new fiscal year is based on the expectations I noted earlier—that in general our national employment and income will be sustained at approximately the present level and that there will be a slight fall in average prices, more than offset by a slight increase in the volume of our production. Should conditions be better than this—as they could be if everything goes well—my forecast will be more than realized. Should economic conditions deteriorate, as they could, our revenue will fall off and our expenditure increase, as compared with the figures I am now putting forward.

In the light of what I have said, I expect that our present tax laws and other sources of revenue would produce in the next fiscal year a total revenue of about $2,430 million. For the convenience of hon. members and others, I have had prepared the usual table, comparing present forecasts with the figure for the year just closing, and I ask leave that this table be printed in Hansard at this point.

Forecast of Revenue

(Before tax changes)

	Fiscal year 1950-51 (Forecast)	Fiscal year 1949-50 (Actual-preliminary)
	(In millions of dollars)
Customs import duties	$225·0	$229·0
Excise duties	213·0	215·5
Sales taxes (net)	400·0	404·1
Other excise taxes	153·0	163·9
Income taxes
Individuals	530·0	611·5
Corporations	580·0	586·5
Interest, dividends, etc	46·0	45·5
Excess profits taxes	....	—2·5
Succession duties	29·0	28·5
Miscellaneous taxes	4·0	4·0
Total tax revenue	2180·0	2286·0
Non-tax revenue	200·0	203·0
Total ordinary revenue	2380·0	2489·0
Special receipts and credits	50·0	59·6
Grand total revenue	2430·0	2548·6

I should like to emphasize that our tax structure now is such that it is very sensitive to changes in employment and incomes, and relatively modest changes in these can have a more than proportionate effect upon our revenue.

The government became aware several months ago of these revenue prospects and of the desirability of keeping our expenditures this next year within the total revenue that we could foresee in the economic conditions I have described. We decided that we should plan to do this, and that, except in the event of a deterioration of economic conditions or an unexpected emergency, we should hold our expenditure in the coming year down to approximately $2,400 million. Consequently the treasury board, at the cabinet's direction, made substantial reductions in the estimates submitted by various departments, particularly those involving construction or the expansion of activities not of an urgent or highly productive nature. As a result, the main estimates, laid before the house on February 24 were held down to a total of about $2,309 million, despite the increase in costs of social security and defence and the expenditures required for federal services in Newfoundland. Moreover, we propose to continue this same policy in considering supplementary estimates, unless a major change in the economic outlook occurs. However, we must anticipate some supplementary and further supplementary estimates, including substantial amounts for the 1950 deficits of the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines. In addition, I would expect to make some provision in our accounts for reserves against our active assets and for contingent benefits under the Veterans Land Act. On the other hand we may expect some short-fall of expenditures below the limits provided in appropriation votes, but this is likely to be lower than in recent years, due to the outlook for more stable economic conditions and to the pressure put on the departments to keep estimates down to the minimum practicable amounts. All in all, I think we can reasonably expect to keep our expenditures in this new fiscal year to a total of about $2,410 million. On this basis our budget surplus should amount to around $20 million.

In so far as our prospective cash position is concerned, we must take into account non-cash items in revenue and expenditure and other cash receipts and disbursements. After adjusting our probable revenue and expenditure for non-cash items I believe we can expect a cash surplus somewhat higher than the budgetary surplus. To this we should add cash receipts in annuity, pension, and similar trust funds, and various deferred credits and suspense accounts. Taking all these items together we should have something in excess of $200 million dollars in cash over and above that required for cash expenditures.

Against this we must set our disbursements other than budgetary expenditure and redemption of our own securities. We shall probably require something over $100 million for housing loans and investments, including the married quarters program for the armed services, and nearly $30 million for Veterans Land Act loans. There will, I expect, be other minor loans and investments. There remains to be drawn $85 million under the United Kingdom loan agreement, but drawings on this loan will be offset in part by repayments on loans previously made to the United Kingdom and other governments abroad. On the whole, I would expect that our total cash disbursements would about balance with our total cash requirements for all purposes—apart from the sale, purchase, or redemption of our own securities, and apart from possible advances to or repayments by the foreign exchange control board because of changes in the size of our exchange reserves. As I have already indicated, it is impossible to forecast with any assurance whether our exchange reserves will increase or decrease by a significant amount and therefore whether we shall need to advance further Canadian funds to buy exchange, or can expect repayments on advances outstanding. On the whole I would not expect at present a movement in either direction large enough to affect our cash requirements to any important degree.

CONTINUING LEVEL OF EXPENDITURE

Our efforts to hold expenditures this coming year to the level I have described, despite the increases necessary for the social security legislation of last year and for defence, have caused me to realize that we must now expect for some time to have budgets as large as this one—that we must cope somehow with a continuing level of expenditure of $2,400 million, even in the absence of large scale economic difficulties or widespread unemployment. Our special post-war demobilization and transitional expenditures are now almost all behind us; we can expect a tapering off of some of the remaining payments for the veterans program and some of the other items which we have labelled "Terminable Services" in the estimates, but these we must expect to be offset by increases in other services required in normal times, particularly those on the development of natural resources. In years when economic conditions are adverse, we must expect not only lower revenues but higher expenditures to assist in overcoming these economic difficulties and to maintain satisfactory levels of employment and income. In good years we can hope to avoid such special expenditures and have buoyant revenues—but I doubt if the public or this House of Commons will really wish government services or activities to be reduced in years of prosperity to the degree necessary to get our expenditures much below this level of $2,400 million. If we get a substantial improvement in the international situation we may expect a reduction in defence costs that will materially lighten the burden on the budget, but it would be a bold man who would predict this with any confidence now.

Our union with Newfoundland has been warmly welcomed in every part of the country, and I am confident that the mutual advantages of this union will be demonstrated with increasing force as each year passes. But I think it is fair to remind the house that during the past year and over the next few years the accession of Newfoundland to Canada has imposed and will continue to impose a considerable net burden on the federal treasury. We share with our fellow citizens in Newfoundland a great confidence in their future, but in the meantime the social and developmental costs to be borne or shared by the central government will involve large net financial outlays.

Payments to provinces for statutory subsidies and compensation under the tax rental agreements totalled $104 million in the current fiscal year, and for the remaining term of these agreements the annual payments to the provinces concerned will be even larger than this year, whether or not any downturn in economic activity should occur in the next year or two. As already announced, there will be another conference with the provinces this fall, and whatever may be the eventual outcome of that conference, I think it is fair to assume that its decisions will not result in a lessening of the net burden on the federal budget.

Naturally we hope to reduce expenditures by improved efficiency in operation and by economies in administration. We have been making good progress in this direction in recent years in many of our departments—quietly but effectively. Since it has been accompanied in many cases by an expansion in the work of the department or unit concerned, it is frequently not evident from the figures. We are pressing ahead further with this work, and building up a corps of efficient operating and administrative officers. But we should not delude ourselves with the belief that we can significantly alter the scale of the budget in this way. Our civilian payroll is only about $310 million a year out of total expenditures of $2,400 million, or about 12 cents out of every dollar spent. The other 88 cents goes either for transfer payments or is paid for goods and outside services. It is only by reducing government activities or social security payments that any major reductions can be made.

REASONS FOR EXPENDITURES

This is an important and serious conclusion. We should realize how this situation has come about. Mainly it has been by reason of war and the danger of future war. Our huge debt service is almost entirely a legacy of war. We have a heavy continuing charge for pensions and other provision for war veterans, and expenditures on defence now total $425 million. All told, then, we must provide something over a billion dollars a year because of past wars or the need to prevent future war. This huge outlay from which we get no tangible return is unfortunate—but let us remember that this, in addition to the blood and treasure expended in the past, is the price we pay for the personal freedom, the civil liberties, the democratic politics and the economic prosperity that we enjoy as part of the western world.

The second major category of expenditure that has brought us to budgets of this size is social security payments—old age pensions, family allowances, and unemployment insurance, as well as other smaller items. For these three huge programs we are having to provide $457 million next year. I need hardly point out that this house and those parties to which its members belong stoutly uphold the need for old age pensions on at least the present scale and we must, of course, make adequate provi-ion for the unemployed.

Our family allowances, though costly because of the huge numbers involved, are among the most constructive forms of social security; for they provide improved opportunities for health and education for the children of our country. We can expect in future years to gain material benefits from the better citizens this program makes possible.

Apart from these costs of defence and social security, there is a great variety of services provided to business and the public, on which we spend hundreds of millions each year but which are demanded just as are the services of business itself—the post office, the canals, the airports and airways, the wharves and harbours and river works, the aids to navigation, the technical services to agriculture and the fisheries, the foreign trade services, to assist our exporters and importers, the statistical services, the employment service, and others of a like character. Money spent on these provides services which the public use every day, whether they pay for them directly, as in the case of the post office, or indirectly, as in the case of most others.

Finally, I think it is important for the house to realize how much is being done to improve our productive resources in the future. Our health program, for example, for which we provide now over $40 million a year, is not only improving significantly the treatment of the sick, but making real strides in helping o reduce the amount of disease and illness. That will reflect itself in due course in our national production. We are now spending large sums in discovering, developing, improving and conserving our natural resources—through such departments as Agriculture, Fisheries, Mines and Technical Surveys and Resources and Development. This is valuable, sensible work that will increase our national income just as surely and effectively as much private business expenditure will. The same is true also of the extensive work in the field of scientific research, which has been greatly increased in scale and of which we may, I think, be justly proud.

I shall not try to enumerate all the classes of activities. I have said nothing, for example, of such an important one as our housing program. The point I wish to emphasize is that the public, the responsible political parties, and this parliament have all willed the ends to which these efforts are directed, and it is here in the budget that we must provide the means. Unless we are prepared to reduce the scope or scale of government activities, we must now expect $2,400 million budgets in future years.

Nor can we escape the tax implications of this conclusion. We must have a tax system that will at least balance the budget in good years, in those times when private expenditures and exports will sustain our employment and incomes at high levels; for otherwise we should slide quickly into inflation at such times and pile up our national debt more quickly than we add to the economic and financial capacity of the nation to carry it.

The conclusion then which I reach is that no minister of finance in the foreseeable future will have an easier task than I have, namely, that of covering about $2,400 million of expenditure. In considering proposals for further major increases in our expenditures of a continuing nature, we must be ready to balance them with increased taxes. We can afford some modest increases in expenditures from year to year, or alternatively modest reductions in taxation, as our productivity and national income grow, but this dividend of progress is gradual and modest in size in relation to the ambitious plans that are so much in the air these days. What is important, I believe, is that we should now realize clearly that there is no prospective surplus from which proposed new programs of expenditure can be met. If the expenditure is worthwhile, it should be provided for by new or increased taxes or charges or by reducing some other services or activities of lower priority.

TAX POLICY AND TAX CHANGES

Given the conditions I have outlined, of continuing prosperity in which the positive and negative factors are rather evenly balanced, the wise and prudent fiscal policy calls for a balanced budget, or a budget which provides for no more than a modest surplus for the retirement of debt.

Last year I budgeted for a surplus of $87 million, and it now appears that we shall have a surplus of about $111 million. For the coming year I have already estimated expenditures at $2,410 million and revenues at existing tax rates of $2,430 million. That would leave us with a prospective surplus before tax changes of only $20 million. This leads me to conclude that no major changes in taxation would be wise this year. I am, therefore, proposing no important changes, but, as occurs each year, experience or changing circumstances require us to make a number of minor or technical changes in the tax laws, to remove anomalies, to secure greater equity, to clarify obscure points, or to meet special circumstances. In only two or three instances will there by any significant revenue implications in my proposals.

First, with regard to taxes on commodities, I propose that purchases by certain defined classes of institutions caring for orphans, the aged and the incapacitated be exempt from the sales tax effective July 1, 1950. The loss of revenue resulting from this change will not be large, but the saving in costs to these institutions will, I believe, be welcomed by those responsible for maintaining them. We have for many years exempted hospitals from the sales tax, and the institutions I have referred to are in many respects analogous to hospitals.

There is at present an extra five per cent tax on toilet soaps. For reasons which I shall not elaborate, chief among them the difficulty of drawing a clear line between toilet and laundry soaps, this tax has been very difficult to administer, and I am proposing that it be repealed effective midnight tonight. The loss of revenue will be about $600,000 in a full year.

The only other commodity tax change that I propose is the removal, effective midnight tonight, of the sales tax on ice cream, on drinks prepared from fresh milk and on prepared whipping cream. We have received strong representations from the dairy interests that the removal of this tax will give encouragement to the consumption of ice cream and dairy drinks at a time when sales of certain other milk products are declining. The loss of revenue in this item will be about $2 million in a full year.

The bill amending the Excise Tax Act giving effect to the above proposals will contain a number of other unimportant technical changes in the law.

As usual I wish to give public notice that no claims for refund arising out of the excise tax changes in respect of goods on which tax has been paid or is payable will be entertained by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue.

With regard to the Income Tax Act, no changes are being recommended in the rate structure. However, I am proposing certain amendments which will be of specialized but fairly widespread interest.

Last year we made some changes in the corporate tax structure, including a reduction to 10 per cent in the tax on the first $10,000 of profit of corporations. This tax abatement was intended to allow the small businessman to retain a larger proportion of his profits for growth. It was necessary, in order to confine the benefits to those who were intended to receive it, to allow only one corporation in a group of related corporations to secure the lower rate. At the time of the last budget and since, I have received many representations on this point, and I have given careful study to the suggestions which have been made for a less rigid limitation. Under the law as introduced last year companies are related if one controls another or is controlled by another, or if they are subject to common control. It is proposed that these provisions be relaxed in order to relieve particularly the cases where there is a substantial minority interest in the corporation. Under the new proposal, mere control will not be the criterion. I think it will achieve our original intention if some higher percentage of ownership is adopted in defining what we mean by related companies. It is proposed that companies shall not be deemed to be related companies unless there is related ownership of common stock to the extent of 70 per cent or more. This, I believe, will allow a wider group to obtain the preferred rate on the first $10,000 of profit, and will take care of most of the reasonable complaints against the law as passed last year.

Last year parliament approved a new system for depreciation allowances. Following considerable discussion in the house it was agreed to allow farmers and fishermen to continue under the old system. I expressed the opinion at that time that farmers would probably be better off under the new system than under the old. Apparently after having studied the new system many farmers are now inclined to agree with that view. Accordingly it is proposed to give farmers and fishermen the option of adopting the new system. It will, of course, have to be provided that once a taxpayer elects to adopt the new system it will not be permissible to revert to the old system.

The special write-off privilege for exploration and prospecting expenses in the oil and mining industries should, we suggest, be extended by adding a further year to the present periods provided in the law. It is also proposed to repeal the provision in our law which imposes a corporation tax on the income received by a trustee for holders of oil royalties.

During the past year there has been considerable uncertainty in the mining industry with regard to the position of prospectors and those who are engaged in developing our mineral resources. From the early forties onward, it has been the practice to interpret the law as not subjecting to tax gains made by bona fide prospectors and developers in discovering and proving up mining properties. As the house knows, our Income Tax Act was completely rewritten, and the new act has been in force since the beginning of 1949. The new act contains no clear-cut authority for the practice which has been followed during the past decade. The position under the law of these important groups should be clarified, and we are proposing this year to introduce an amendment which should allay the fears of many who have in recent months been concerned about this matter.

Perhaps I might also take this opportunity, in view of recent public interest in the question, to assure the house that it is not the policy of the government to tax capital gains. Under any income tax law there is always a very difficult problem in drawing a line between gains which are profits from carrying on a trade or business and those which are not. To my knowledge no tax legislation has ever been passed in any country that has removed all doubts on this score. In England, where our basis of income tax had its origin, the matter has been settled almost entirely by the courts, taking into account the facts in each individual case. Much as I would like to introduce greater certainty, I do not believe that it can be done satisfactorily by legislation. We now have a readily available income tax appeal board that has been set up to determine questions of this sort. I might add that, in order to facilitate the appeal procedure, it is now proposed to allow members of the board to hear cases individually, and also to allow the taxpayer, if he wishes, to go direct to the exchequer court instead of being required to proceed first to the tax appeal board.

In the budget of last March I announced that I had been considering further legislation to deal with the position of closely-held companies where their growth had been financed out of retained profits. I now have definite proposals which will be placed before the house for consideration. The new sections are bound to be complicated, and I hesitate to attempt to summarize them. I should, however, mention a few of the main features, with the warning that what I say cannot cover all the provisions which will have to be in the law.

Generally speaking, I propose to deal with the surpluses accumulated up to the end of 1949 in much the same way as surpluses up to the end of 1939 were dealt with in accordance with the recommendations of the Ives commission. This earlier legislation provided for a tax payable by the corporation, graduated, however, according to amounts receivable by individual shareholders. In the legislation now proposed, closely-held corporations may elect to pay a tax on undistributed income on hand at a flat rate of 15 per cent. This change will remove many of the troublesome problems encountered under the earlier legislation.

If the proposed legislation did no more than take care of past surpluses, a new problem with respect to the future would immediately start developing. I think it desirable, therefore, that the present legislation should provide a comprehensive solution to the problem as a whole rather than merely deal in ad hoc fashion with the past.

The Ives commission made a recommendation in respect of surpluses accruing after 1939 under which a proportion of annual profits might be retained by closely-held companies and be entirely free from personal income tax upon subsequent distribution. We have been giving a great deal of thought to this proposal but we feel that we cannot go quite as far as that recommendation. Under the proposals which we are recommending, a closely-held company may, to the extent that it pays out earnings in dividends, earn the right to capitalize an equivalent amount upon payment of a special tax of 15 per cent. It appeals to me as sensible to encourage these family corporations to pay reasonable dividends while at the same time making it possible for them to retain profits essential for growth and expansion without imposing on shareholders an almost impossible potential tax burden.

There will be proposed a number of other amendments of a technical character, but I need not burden the house with an attempt to explain them at this stage.

TARIFF PROPOSALS

When I presented the budget last October, I said that plans were under way for another set of multilateral trade negotiations under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. The concluding work on these plans is at present nearing completion in Geneva, where the countries participating in the general agreement are holding their fourth session. It has now been decided to hold the third round of tariff negotiations in Torquay, England, beginning September 28 of this year, and it is anticipated that some forty countries will take part. The proposed Torquay negotiations are a further step in the post-war program of international co-operation to reduce tariffs and remove other barriers which stand in the way of a freer flow of international trade. The original Geneva agreement of 1947 was widened last year at the Annecy conference to include ten additional countries. The main purpose of the Torquay conference will be to increase the value of the general agreement by expanding it to include more countries, to cover a broader range of commodities, and, in addition, to provide further tariff concessions on products previously negotiated. It is intended that at the conclusion of the Torquay conference all the tariff concessions resulting from the new negotiations, together with the original Geneva and Annecy tariff concessions, will be incorporated in a new set of tariff schedules which will run until January, 1954.

Canada will have an opportunity at Torquay to negotiate for further tariff reductions with the United States, the other participants in the Geneva and Annecy agreements, and also with a number of new countries. While the United States will, on this occasion, still be governed by the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which empowers the president to reduce tariffs by not more than 50 per cent of the 1945 rates, there is a considerable number of important items on which further concessions may be made.

I believe that in the present conditions of unbalanced world trade, the success of the Torquay conference will depend largely on the leadership given by the United States. If the United States is prepared to make significant tariff reductions, I am confident that these coming trade talks will make an important contribution to the restoration of a saner trading world. We in Canada are not unmindful of our own responsibility, and I can say that we will take this opportunity to consider appropriate adjustments in our customs tariff which should contribute to a better balance in our trade with the United States, the sterling area and western Europe.

In view of the important tariff negotiations which are scheduled to commence in a few months' time, the budget resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff which I am tabling contain very few changes in so far as customs duties are concerned, but in order to facilitate the compilation of a new consolidation of the Customs Tariff, several hundred items have been renumbered and rearranged covering products in respect of which changes have been made in recent years as a result of tariff negotiations at Geneva and Annecy. These items which are shown in resolution 3 continue rates of duty that have been in effect for several years, except in the case of tin plate, on which the British preferential tariff is being increased from free to 15 per cent ad valorem. During the negotiations at Geneva in 1947 the elimination of this British preference, coupled with a reduction in the most-favoured-nation rate from 17½ to 15 per cent, was agreed to by the British and ourselves as an essential part of the bargain by which we obtained very important concessions in the United States tariff, and at that time Canada gave an undertaking to make this increase effective as soon as the necessary legislation could be enacted. It is proposed that resolution 3 go into effect on June 1, 1950.

My other tariff proposals, which for the reason mentioned are of only minor significance, are included in resolution 2. The tariff is being reduced on dates for packaging and on compounds imported mainly from the United Kingdom for the manufacture of phonograph records. The other changes are mainly for the purpose of facilitating administration and the elimination of obsolete phraseology. Somewhat related to this latter category is an amendment being proposed in connection with the tariff item covering biological products. For some years the administrative authorities have held that penicillin and similar antibiotics were dutiable as chemicals. An importer appealed this ruling and his appeal was allowed by the tariff board. The decision of that board is now before the exchequer court. The whole field is one in which there have been important technological and industrial developments in recent years, and there is a need for investigation of all the pertinent facts and clarification of the tariff situation. What we are now proposing therefore is to insert in the tariff an appropriate definition of biological products to maintain the existing practice, and then refer the whole question of biological products to the tariff board for thorough investigation and considered recommendation. The tariff changes in resolution 2 which cover about twenty-five items will go into effect tomorrow.

I should add that the amendments being made to the Customs Tariff in these budget resolutions will not affect in any way the carrying out of the provisions and intent of the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

REVISED ESTIMATES AFTER TAX CHANGES

I may now summarize the effects of the proposed tax changes on the balance of revenues and expenditures. The various tax reductions which I have proposed should not in all involve a loss of revenue of more than $3 million. The revenue from the new tax available to closely-held companies in respect of accumulated earnings cannot be predicted, because we cannot tell how many of these companies will elect to take advantage of the new provisions in the next fiscal year. The revenue we receive could be quite large. I believe that it will at least be sufficient to offset the reductions just mentioned.

This, then, leaves our expected expenditures at $2,410 million, our expected revenues at $2,430 million, and our expected surplus for the coming year at $20 million.

CONCLUSION

There is little that I need add, Mr. Speaker, by way of conclusion. Canada is in a prosperous state of economic health. There are difficulties and uncertainties ahead of us; but when in our history have we been without difficulties and uncertainties? During the past year Canada has demonstrated the soundness and the resilience of her economy.

My hon. friends opposite have been discovering imminent crises and catastrophes almost every month for the past two years or more, and almost every month our trade has increased, our employment has increased, and new resources are discovered or developed. We all know, of course, that our geography and the nature of many of our basic resources make us vulnerable to sudden economic changes in the countries with which we do the greater part of our trade. But I suggest to all my hon. friends opposite that the calamities they fear are not imminent, and that if at some future time we have to face serious difficulties we shall find that we have never been better equipped and prepared to resolve them.

I wish now to table the budget resolutions:

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, amongst other things:—

1. That for the 1949 and subsequent taxation years, the provision under which the 10 per cent tax rate on the first $10,000 of income of a corporation applies only to one of several related companies be amended so that the test of relationship of companies shall be ownership of 70 per cent or more of all the issued common shares of capital stock of the corporation instead of mere control.

2. That in order to permit a private company to pay tax on undistributed income so that it may capitalize the undistributed income, the company may elect

(a) to pay a tax of 15 per cent on undistributed income held by the corporation at the end of the 1949 taxation year and

(b) to pay a tax of 15 per cent on undistributed income earned thereafter equal to the dividends distributed from time to time by the corporation during the period when the undistributed income was earned.

3. That for the 1949 and subsequent taxation years, there shall not be included in computing income amounts received in consideration for mining properties by prospectors who have prospected, explored or developed the properties, or by persons who have financed prospectors to do so, other than persons who carry on the business of dealing with the public in shares or securities or who dispose of the shares after carrying on a campaign to sell them to the public.

4. That special deductions from income to taxpayers whose principal business is the production, refining, or marketing of petroleum or petroleum products or the exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas or mining or exploring for minerals, be allowed for expenses incurred in the 1953 operations on the same basis as for expenses in the operations in the years 1949 to 1952.

5. That special deductions from income and taxes to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum or drilling for petroleum be allowed for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells in 1951 operations on the same basis as for similar expenses in 1950 operations.

6. That for the 1950 and subsequent taxation years, section 73 of the Income Tax Act, which imposes a tax on income from oil royalty rights held by a trustee as if the trustee was a corporation, be repealed.

7. That for the 1950 and subsequent taxation years, section 18 of the Income Tax Act, under which lease-option or hire purchase or like agreements relating to movable property are deemed to be agreements for sale and the payments to be purchase price and the purchaser to be the owner for purposes of depreciation, be extended to apply to all property except real or immovable property used in the business of farming.

8. That a non-resident be exempt from the 15 per cent tax on dividends received by non-residents in respect of dividends received by him from a company resident in Canada that derives substantially all of its income, directly or indirectly, from the operation of public utilities in the country in which the non-resident resides.

9. That individuals who were resident in Newfoundland on March 31, 1949, may, for the purposes of computing tax payable by them, elect to report their actual incomes for the whole year 1949 instead of that for the period after March 31, 1949, which is now adjusted to an amount that would correspond to his income for the whole year for the purpose of computing the tax.

THE EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Excise Tax Act and to provide, amongst other things:—

1. That the excise tax of 5 per cent on toilet soap be repealed effective on and after March 29, 1950.

[Mr. Abbott.]

2. That the sales tax on the following articles be repealed effective on and after March 29, 1950—ice cream; drinks prepared from fresh milk; prepared whipping cream.

3. That the sales tax on the following articles and materials be repealed effective on and after July 1, 1950: Articles and materials for the sole use of any bona fide public institution, certified to be such by the Department of National Health and Welfare in accordance with regulations approved by the governor in council, whose principal purpose is to provide permanent or semi-permanent shelter and care in residence for children or for aged, infirm or incapacitated persons, and that is in receipt annually of aid for their maintenance from the government of Canada or of a province when those articles or materials are purchased in good faith by that public institution for its own use and not for resale.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Customs Tariff, being Chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended, as follows:—

(a) By repealing subsection four of section five and substituting the following:—

"4. The said discount shall not apply in the case in which the duty does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or, in the case of a specific duty or a specific and ad valorem duty combined in which the computed rate does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or where the rate of customs duty under the British Preferential Tariff is the same as the rate of customs duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff, or to goods admitted into Canada which have the benefit of reductions provided for in the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1926."

(b) By repealing section fourteen and substituting the following:—

"14. (1) The ad valorem rate of duty set forth in Tariff Items 84, 85, 87, 92, 94 or 95 in Schedule A applies to goods specified in the Item imported at any time except during a period in which an order of the Minister under subsection two has applied the rate of specific duty set forth in the Item in lieu of the ad valorem rate of duty in which case the rate of specific duty set forth in the Item applies to goods imported during that period.

(2) The Minister may order that the rate of specific duty set out in a Tariff Item mentioned in subsection one shall apply to goods specified in the Item in lieu of the rate of ad valorem duty set forth therein for such period during each fiscal year as may be fixed by the Minister not exceeding the number of weeks mentioned in the Item: Provided, that, in the case of sub-items (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), or (i), of Tariff Item 87, the Minister may order that the rate of specific duty shall apply during two separate periods in a fiscal year but the number of weeks in the two periods shall not exceed the number specified in that sub-item.

(3) The Minister may exclude from an order made under subsection two, either at the time of making the order or at any time thereafter, goods to which the order would otherwise apply imported through ports in a specified region or part of Canada during the whole or any part of the period mentioned in the order in which case the ad valorem rate of duty applies to the goods so imported."

(c) By repealing subsection three of section sixteen and substituting the following:—

"16. (3) All such goods imported into Canada after the date of the coming into force of any such order of the Governor in Council which do not comply with the requirements of such order shall not be released from Customs possession until they have been so marked, stamped, branded or labelled under customs supervision at the expense of the importer."

2. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking thereout tariff items 16, 17, 28b, 77, 99e, 101b, 206a, 208v, 209d, 446h, 480a, 520c, 558b (a) and (b), 558d (a) and (b), 605a, 607, 696a, 705, 705a, 709 (a) and (b), 779 and 779a, the several enumerations of goods respectively and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of the said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said Schedule A:—

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
16	Eggs in the shell.....per dozen	2 cts.	3½ cts.	10 cts.	2 cts.	3½ cts.	10 cts. or countervailing duty.
17	Cheese.....per pound	3 cts.	3½ cts.	7 cts.	3 cts.	3½ cts.	7 cts. (weight of packages up to two pounds included).
77	Beans, viz.:—Tonquin, crude only; locust beans; locust beans, roasted or ground; locust bean meal..	Free	Free	Free	Free; 15 p.c.	Free; 20 p.c.	Free; 25 p.c.
99e	(1) Dates, dried, pitted, when in packages or containers weighing not less than ten pounds each. per pound	Free	Free	1 ct.	1 ct.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.
	(2) Dates, n.o.p.....per pound When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.	1 ct.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.	1 ct.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.
206a	(1) Serums, antitoxins, viruses, toxins, toxoids, vaccines and allergenic products, n.o.p., for parenteral administration in the diagnosis or treatment of diseases of man.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Biological products, animal or vegetable, n.o.p., for parenteral administration in the diagnosis or treatment of diseases of animals or poultry, when imported under permit of the Veterinary Director General.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
208v	Methyl ethyl ketone, n.o.p., and isopropyl acetate...	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.
209d	Potash, chlorate of, not further prepared than ground	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.
216g	Compounds, of which the chief organic component is shellac, imported by manufacturers of phonograph records for use exclusively in the manufacture of phonograph records in their own factories.....	Free	5 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
220c	Gasoline anti-oxidants for use in the production of gasoline.....	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.

284b	Gypsum tile	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
446h	Stampings of metal, or assemblies thereof, for use in the manufacture of bath tubs	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
453a	Metal parts, n.o.p., in any degree of manufacture but not coated, plated nor covered in any manner, for use exclusively in the manufacture of spectacle cases and jewellery boxes	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.; 10 p.c.	12½ p.c.; 25 p.c.	35 p.c.; 35 p.c.
480a	Invalid wheel chairs, with or without motive power; parts of the foregoing, including motive power and parts thereof	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.
520c	Linters of short fibres of cotton, bleached, when imported by manufacturers of paper, for use exclusively in the manufacture of blotting or other grade of paper, in their own factories	Free	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.
558b	Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, not more advanced than singles, not coloured, with not more than seven turns to the inch, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:—
	(a) Produced from cellulose acetate	5 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	5 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided that, in no case, shall the duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff be less than ... per pound	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.
	(b) N.o.p.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided that, in no case, shall the duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff be less than ... per pound	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.
558d	Rovings, yarns and warps wholly or in part of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, n.o.p., including threads, cords or twist for sewing, embroidering or other purposes, not to contain silk; yarns of synthetic textile fibres or filaments wholly or partially covered with metallic strip, one pound of which shall contain not less than 10,000 yards; under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:—
	(a) Produced wholly from cellulose acetate	7½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	7½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided that, in no case, shall the duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff be less than ... per pound	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.
	(b) N.o.p.	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided that, in no case, shall the duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff be less than ... per pound	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.	.....	24 cts.	28 cts.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
605a	Genuine pig leathers, n.o.p., and genuine Morocco leathers; so-called roller leathers	Free	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.
607	Leather, n.o.p., when imported by manufacturers of gloves or leather clothing, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves or leather clothing in their own factories	Free	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.
696a	Moving picture films, sound or silent, separate sound film track, slides and slide films, positive or negative; sound discs, records and transcriptions; models, static and moving; wall charts, maps and posters; when certified by the Government or by a recognized representative authority of the Government of the country of production or by an appropriate representative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as being of an international educational, scientific or cultural character; subject to such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	Free	Free	Free (various)	Free (various)	Free (various)
705	Settlers' effects, viz.:—Wearing apparel, books, usual and reasonable household furniture and other household effects; instruments and tools of trade, occupation or employment, guns, musical instruments, domestic sewing machines, typewriters, bicycles, carts, wagons and other highway vehicles, agricultural implements and live stock for the farm, not to include live stock or articles for sale, or for use as a contractor's outfit, nor vehicles nor implements moved by mechanical power, nor machinery for use in any manufacturing establishment; all the foregoing if actually owned abroad by the settler for at least six months before his removal to Canada, and subject to regulations prescribed by the Minister	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	Provided that the six months' ownership requirement as specified in this Item shall not apply in the case of bona fide brides' trousseaux and wedding presents.

705 Con.	Provided further that any dutiable article entered as settlers' effects may not be so entered unless brought by the settler on his first arrival, and shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of without payment of duty until after twelve months' actual use in Canada.
705a	Settlers' effects, viz.:—Machines and implements for agricultural purposes, moved by mechanical power, and motor vehicles valued at not more than fifteen hundred dollars, and boats for fishing purposes, if actually owned abroad by the settler for at least six months before his removal to Canada, and subject to regulations prescribed by the Minister of National Revenue.
	Provided that in respect to motor vehicles valued in excess of fifteen hundred dollars duty shall be payable only on the amount in excess of fifteen hundred dollars.
	Provided further that the said machines, vehicles, implements and boats may not be so entered unless brought by the settler on his first arrival, and shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of without payment of duty until after twelve months' actual use in Canada.....	Free	Free	Free	Free; Free	Free; 17½ p.c.	Free; 27½ p.c.
709	(a) Goods, including containers or coverings filled or empty, the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, after having been exported therefrom...	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(b) Goods, including containers or coverings filled or empty, which have once been entered for consumption in Canada and have been exported therefrom.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	All the foregoing under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.
	Provided that the goods are returned within five years from the time of exportation without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means, or combined with any other article abroad;
	Provided also that any such goods on which a refund of duty or allowance of drawback has been made shall not be admitted to entry under this tem except upon payment of duties equal to the refund or drawback allowed;

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
709 —Con.	Provided further that any of such goods manufactured in bond or under excise regulations in Canada and exported shall not be admitted to entry except upon payment of the Customs or Excise duties to which they would have been liable had they not been exported from Canada; Provided further that where the Minister is satisfied that a quantity of containers in a usable condition has previously been exported from Canada he may by regulation permit the importation free of customs duty of a like quantity of similar containers which are not the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada

3. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking thereout tariff items 5(a) (b) and (c), 7(a) (b) and (c), 8, 8a, 13, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 28a, 29, 29a, 30, 31, 39a, 39b, 41, 45, 47, 62, 62a, 66a, 74, 75, 76, 76a, 76b, 76c, 76d, 79b, 79c, 79d, 81(a) (b) and (c), 82(a) (b) (i) and (ii) (c) (i) and (ii) (d) and (e), 83(a) (b) and (c), 84, 85, 87 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k) (l) (m) (n) (o) and (p), 89(a) (b) (c) and (d), 92 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) and (i), 93, 94, 95, 99c, 100, 100a, 105, 105b, 105c, 105d, 105e, 106(a) (b) and (c), 106d, 108, 109, 109a, 109b, 110, 111, 114, 120(a) (b) (c) and (d), 123, 123a, 141, 152, 152a, 152b, 152c, 154, 156, 160(a) and (b), 161, 162, 163, 163a, 167, 178(i) and (ii), 178a, 178b, 179, 184a, 184b (i) and (ii), 184c, 184d, 199b, 207, 207a, 207b, 208i (i) and (ii), 208j, 208t, 232, 232a, 247a, 254, 254a, 262, 264, 264a, 266, 273, 273a, 276, 276a, 276b, 277, 277a, 278, 278a, 278b, 278c, 278d, 284, 305, 306, 307, 326(i) and (ii), 353, 353a, 366, 366a, 366b, 368, 383(b), 384 (a) and (b), 402b, 414, 414a, 414c, 429(g), 430b (I) and (II), 434, 440m (i) and (ii), 440g, 446g, 450, 451b (i) and (ii), 518, 519, 520, 522c, 523, 523(b), 523l, 523n, 524a, 532, 549, 549a, 549b, 553, 554e, 568b, 569 (i), 569 (ii), 569 (iii), 569 (iv), 569 (v), 569a (i), 569a (ii), 571, 571a (i) and (ii), 597, 597a, 598, 598a, 604, 605, 607 Pt. 2, 607a, 611a, 616(i) (ii) and (iii), 619a, 624a (i) (ii) and (iii), 654, 655, 656 and 710(b) and (bb), the several enumerations of goods respectively and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of the said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said Schedule A:

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
5	Animals, living, n.o.p.:—
	(a) Cattle.....per pound	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.
	(b) Sheep, lambs and goats.....per head	Free	$2.00	$3.00	Free	$2.00	$3.00
	(c) Silver or black foxes.....	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(d) N.o.p.....	Free	7½ p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	25 p.c.
7	Meats, fresh, n.o.p.:—
	(a) Beef and veal..... per pound	3 cts.	3 cts.	8 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	8 cts.
	(b) Edible offal of beef and veal.....per pound but not less than	1½ cts. 7½ p.c.	1½ cts. 7½ p.c.	8 cts.	1½ cts. 7½ p.c.	1½ cts. 7½ p.c.	8 cts.
	(c) Lamb and mutton.....per pound	4 cts.	6 cts.	8 cts.	4 cts.	6 cts.	8 cts.
	(d) Pork.....per pound	1¼ cts.	1¼ cts.	5 cts.	1¼ cts.	1¼ cts.	5 cts.
	(e) N.o.p.....per pound	2 cts.	2½ cts.	5 cts.	2 cts.	2½ cts.	5 cts.
8	Canned beef.....	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
8a	Canned pork.....	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
8b	Canned hams.....	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
8c	Pâtés de foie gras, foies gras, preserved, in tins or otherwise; lark pâtés.....	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	35 p.c.
8d	Animal liver paste.....	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
8e	Canned meats, n.o.p.....	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
8f	Canned poultry or game, n.o.p.....	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
8g	Extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated.....	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
13	Lard and animal stearine of all kinds, n.o.p. per pound	1½ cts.	1¾ cts.	2 cts.	1½ cts.	1¾ cts.	2 cts.
13a	Lard compound and similar substances; cottolene ..... per pound	1½ cts.	1¾ cts.	2 cts.	1½ cts.	1¾ cts.	2 cts.
15a	Honey-comb foundations, of wax.....	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.
20c	Shea butter.....	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
22	Preparations of cocoa or chocolate in powder form....	22½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c. or 3 cts. per lb. whichever is higher.
23	Preparations of cocoa or chocolate, n.o.p., and confectionery, coated with or containing chocolate, the weight of the wrappings and cartons to be included in the weight for duty.....	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	2½ cts.	2½ cts.	2½ cts.	2½ cts.	2½ cts.	2½ cts.
26	Coffee, roasted or ground..... per pound	3 cts.	5 cts.	5 cts.	3 cts. or 3 cts. and 7½ p.c.	5 cts. or 5 cts. and 10 p.c.	5 cts. or 5 cts. and 10 p.c.
26a	Imitations of and substitutes for roasted or ground coffee, including acorn nuts..... per pound	3 cts.	5 cts.	5 cts.	3 cts.	5 cts.	5 cts.
28	Coffee, green, n.o.p..... per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	5 cts. or 5 cts. and 10 p.c.
28a	Tea..... per pound	Free	2 cts.	8 cts.	Free or 4 cts.	2 cts. or 6 cts.	8 cts. or 10 cts.
	When in packages weighing five pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.
30	Pepper, unground.....	Free	5 p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	12½ p.c.
30a	Cloves, unground.....	Free	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.
30b	Cinnamon, unground.....	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.
30c	Ginger, unground.....	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.
30d	Spices, unground, n.o.p.....	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.
30e	Chilli pepper, unground.....	Free	5 p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	12½ p.c.

31	Chilli pepper, ground.....and per pound	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c. 3 cts.	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c. 3 cts.
31a	Ginger and spices, ground, n.o.p.....per pound and	3 cts. 7½ p.c.	3 cts. 10 p.c.	3 cts. 10 p.c.	3 cts. 7½ p.c.	3 cts. 10 p.c.	3 cts. 10 p.c.
39a	Starch or flour of sago, cassava, or rice....per pound	¾ ct.	1¼ cts.	1¼ cts.	¾ ct.	1¼ cts.	1¼ cts.
39b	Rice meal, rice feed, rice polish, rice bran, rice shorts per pound	¾ ct.	1 ct.	1¼ cts.	¾ ct.	1 ct.	1¼ cts.
39f	Arrowroot.....per pound	Free	1½ cts.	1½ cts.	Free	1½ cts.	1½ cts.
41	Salt, n.o.p., in bags, barrels and other coverings per one hundred pounds	Free	3½ cts.	7½ cts.	Free	3½ cts.	7½ cts.
45	Milk foods, n.o.p.....	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.
45a	Prepared cereal foods, in packages not exceeding twenty-five pounds weight each.....	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.
47	Castor beans, n.o.p.....per pound	Free	Free	2 cts.	Free	Free	2 cts.
47a	Soya beans, n.o.p.....per pound	Free	Free	2 cts.	Free	Free	2 cts.
47b	Lima and Madagascar beans, dried.....per pound	Free	½ ct.	2 cts.	Free	½ ct.	2 cts.
47c	Red kidney beans, dried.....per pound	Free	1 ct.	2 cts.	Free	1 ct.	2 cts.
47d	Calabar beans.....per pound	Free	Free	2 cts.	Free	Free	2 cts.
47e	Beans, n.o.p.....per pound	Free	1½ cts.	2 cts.	Free	1½ cts.	2 cts.
54	Hominy grits, corn grits, hominy feeds, and brewers' corn grits.....	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
62	Rice, uncleaned, unhulled or paddy.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
66a	Biscuits, sweetened or unsweetened, valued at not less than 20 cents per pound, said value to be based on the net weight and to include the value of the usual retail package.....	Free	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
73a	Cotton seed.....	Free	Free	10 p.c.	Free	Free	10 p.c.
73b	Broom corn seed, when in packages weighing more than one pound each.....	Free	Free	15 p.c.	Free	Free	15 p.c.
74	Seeds, as hereunder, when in packages weighing more than one pound each:—
	(a) Parsley and parsnip.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.
	(b) Beet, not including sugar beet.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.
	(c) Mangel and turnip.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
75	Seeds, as hereunder, when in packages weighing more than one pound each:—
	(a) Radish, leek, lettuce, carrot, borecole or kale.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	10 cts.	Free	2 cts.	10 cts.
	(b) Cabbage and cucumber.....per pound	Free	4 cts.	10 cts.	Free	4 cts.	10 cts.
76	Seeds, as hereunder, when in packages weighing more than one pound each:—
	(a) Tomato and pepper.....per pound	Free	7½ cts.	25 cts.	Free	7½ cts.	25 cts.
	(b) Cauliflower.....per pound	Free	12½ cts.	25 cts.	Free	12½ cts.	25 cts.
	(c) Onion.....per pound	Free	15 cts.	25 cts.	Free	15 cts.	25 cts.
76d	Root, garden and other seeds, n.o.p., when in package weighing more than one pound each....per pound	Free	2½ cts.	10 cts.	Free	2½ cts.	10 cts.
76e	Seeds, viz.:—Field, root, garden and other seeds, when in packages weighing one pound each, or less	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
76f	Annatto seed and mushroom spawn.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
76g	Seeds, viz.:—Canary, mustard, celery and sunflower, when in packages weighing more than one pound each imported for use exclusively in manufacturing or blending operations.....	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.
79b	Orchids, natural, cut, whether in designs or bouquets or not.....	Free	25 p.c.	40 p.c.	Free	25 p.c.	40 p.c.
79c	Flowers and foliage, natural, cut, whether in designs or bouquets or not, n.o.p.....	Free	12½ p.c.	40 p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	40 p.c.
79d	Trees, being seedling stock for grafting, viz.:—Apple, plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees, and buds and scions for grafting such trees; peach pits for planting purposes.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	Mulberry trees, cuttings, roots and buds, for sericultural purposes.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c.
	Trees, n.o.p., viz.:—
	(a) Apple:—
	September 15 to October 5, inclusive.....each	Free	3 cts.	3 cts.	Free	3 cts.	3 cts.
	October 6 to September 14, inclusive.....each	Free	6 cts.	7½ cts.	Free	6 cts.	7½ cts.

81 —Con.	(b) Plum and cherry:—
	September 15 to October 5, inclusive.....each	Free	3 cts.	3 cts.	Free	3 cts.	3 cts.
	October 6 to September 14, inclusive.....each	Free	8 cts.	9 cts.	Free	8 cts.	9 cts.
	(c) Pear, apricot and quince.....each	Free	8 cts.	9 cts.	Free	8 cts.	9 cts.
	(d) Peach, including June buds.....each	Free	5 cts.	6 cts.	Free	5 cts.	6 cts.
82a	Grape vines, gooseberry and currant bushes or roots.....each	Free	2 cts.	2½ cts.	Free	2 cts.	2½ cts.
82b	Raspberry, loganberry and blackberry bushes or roots.....each	Free	1 ct.	1 ct.	Free	1 ct.	1 ct.
82c	Rhubarb roots.....each	Free	¾ ct.	1 ct.	Free	¾ ct.	1 ct.
82d	Asparagus roots.....each	Free	⅛ ct.	¼ ct.	Free	⅛ ct.	¼ ct.
82e	Strawberry plants.....each	Free	¼ ct.	¼ ct.	Free	¼ ct.	¼ ct.
82f	Rosebushes, n.o.p.....each	1½ cts.	3 cts.	7 cts.	1½ cts.	3 cts.	7 cts.
82g	Nut trees, including grafted stock, and buds and scions for grafting nut trees.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c.
82h	Trees, shrubs, vines, plants, roots and cuttings, for propagation or growing purposes, n.o.p.....	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	30 p.c.	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	30 p.c.
83	Potatoes, as hereunder defined:—
	(a) In their natural state:—
	August 1 to June 14, inclusive..... per one hundred pounds	Free	Free	75 cts.	Free	Free	75 cts. (countervailing)
	June 15 to July 31, inclusive..... per one hundred pounds	Free	37½ cts.	75 cts.	Free	37½ cts.	75 cts. (countervailing)
	(b) Dried, desiccated, or dehydrated....per pound	Free	Free	2¾ cts.	Free	Free	2¾ cts.
	(c) Sweet potatoes and yams, in their natural state .....per one hundred pounds	Free	Free	15 cts.	Free	Free	15 cts.
84	Onions, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Onion sets and shallots.....	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than ¾ ct. per pound.
	(b) Onions, n.o.p.....per pound	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than ¾ ct. per pound.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
	Provided that, when the onions specified in sub-item (b) of Item 84 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 40 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
85	(a) Mushrooms, fresh, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty...per pound	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 10 cts. per pound.
	Provided that, when the mushrooms specified in sub-item (a) of Item 85 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of three and one-half cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 52 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of three and one-half cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
	(b) Mushrooms, dried or otherwise preserved.....	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 10 cts. per pound.
	(c) Truffles, fresh, dried or otherwise preserved...	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 10 cts. per pound.
87	Vegetables, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Asparagus.....per pound	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 3 cts. per pound from Apr. 15, to May 31.
	Provided that, when the asparagus specified in sub-item (a) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of three and one-half cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 8 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of three and one-half cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.

(b) Beans, green.....per pound Provided that, when the beans specified in sub-item (b) of Item 87 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 14 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 14 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c.
(c) Brussels sprouts.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
(d) Cabbage.....per pound Provided that, when the cabbage specified in sub-item (d) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of nine-tenths of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 26 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 26 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of nine-tenths of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from June 15 to Jan. 31.
(e) Carrots and beets, n.o.p.....per pound Provided that, when the carrots and beets specified in sub-item (e) of Item 87 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 26 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 26 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from June 1, to Feb. 28.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
87 —Con.	(f) Cauliflower.....per pound Provided that, when the cauliflower specified in sub-item (f) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of three-quarters of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 20 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 20 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of three-quarters of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	¾ ct. or 10 p.c.	¾ ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	¾ ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 2 cts. per pound from May 15, to Oct. 31.
	(g) Celery.....per pound Provided that, when the celery specified in sub-item (g) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 24 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 24 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 2 cts. per pound from July 1, to Feb. 28.
	(h) Cucumbers.....per pound Provided that, when the cucumbers specified in sub-item (h) of Item 87 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of two and one-quarter cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 12 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of two and one-quarter cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	2¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	2¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	2¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from June 1, to Oct. 31.

(i) Lettuce.....per pound Provided that, when the lettuce specified in sub-item (i) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 18 weeks and the number of weeks during which the specific duty may be maintained in force may be divided into two separate periods, the combined duration of which shall not exceed 18 weeks; and Provided that, whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1½ cts. per pound from April 1, to Oct. 31.
(j) Parsley.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
(k) Peas, green..... Provided that, when the peas specified in sub-item (k) of item 87 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of two cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 12 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of two cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c.
(l) Rhubarb.....per pound Provided that, when the rhubarb specified in sub-item (l) of Item 87 is imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one-half cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 10 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one-half cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.	Free	½ ct. or 10 p.c.	½ ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	½ ct. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from Mar. 1, to May 31.
(m) Spinach.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from May 1, to Oct. 31.

55946—80

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
87 —Con	(n) Tomatoes.....per pound	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	30 p.c. but not less than 3 cts. per pound.
	Provided that, when the tomatoes specified in sub-item (n) of Item 87 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 32 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
	(o) Watercress.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(p) Whitloof or endive, artichokes, horseradish and okra.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c.
	(q) Eggplant.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c. but not less than 2 cts. per pound from May 15, to Oct. 31.
	(r) N.o.p.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
89	Vegetables, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be include in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Beans, baked or otherwise prepared.per pound	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.
	(b) Corn.....per pound	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.
	(c) Tomatoes.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	3 cts.	Free	2 cts.	3 cts.
	(d) Peas.....per pound	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.	Free	1½ cts.	3 cts.
	(e) N.o.p.....	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
90f	Vegetable colourings and flavourings.....	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
92	Fruits, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Apricots.....per pound	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound from June 15 to Aug. 15.

Provided that, when the apricots specified in sub-item (a) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 10 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
(b) Cherries.....per pound	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 2 cts. per pound.
Provided that, when the cherries specified in sub-item (b) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of two cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 7 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of two cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
(c) Cranberries.....per pound	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 2½ cts. per pound.
Provided that, when the cranberries specified in sub-item (c) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 12 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
(d) Peaches.....per pound	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 1½ cts. per pound from July 20 to Oct. 1.
Provided that, when the peaches specified in sub-item (d) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 9 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one and one-half cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.

55946—80½

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
92 —Con.	(e) Pears.....per pound.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than ¾ ct. per pound from Aug. 1 to Dec. 31.
	Provided that, when the pears specified in sub-item (e) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 15 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
	(f) Plums and prunes.....per pound	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than ¾ ct. per pound from July 15 to Oct. 31.
	Provided that, when the plums and prunes specified in sub-item (f) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 10 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
	(g) Strawberries.....per pound	Free	1-3/5 cts. or 10 p.c.	1-3/5 cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	1-3/5 cts. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 3 cts. per pound from June 1 to July 31.
	Provided that, when the strawberries specified in sub-item (g) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one and three-fifth cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 6 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one and three-fifth cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
	(h) Raspberries and loganberries.....per pound	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	2 cts. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 3 cts. per pound from June 1 to July 31.
	Provided that, when the raspberries and loganberries specified in sub-item (h) of Item 92 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of two cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 6 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of two cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.

	(i) Berries, edible, n.o.p.	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 2 cts. per pound.
	(j) Quinces and nectarines	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 1 ct. per pound.
93	Apples, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:—
	May 20 to July 12, inclusive	Free	Free	20 p.c.	Free	Free	20 p.c. but not less than 3/5 ct. per pound.
	July 13 to May 19, inclusive.....per pound	Free	¾ ct.	20 p.c.	Free	¾ ct.	20 p.c. but not less than 3/5 ct. per pound.
94	Grapes, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Vitis Vinifera species.....per pound	Free	Free	2 cts.	Free	Free	2 cts.
	(b) Vitis Labrusca species.....per pound	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	1 ct. or 10 p.c.	2 cts.
	Provided that, when the grapes specified in sub-item (b) of Item 94 are imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one cent per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 15 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one cent per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
95	Cantaloupes and muskmelons, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty .....per pound	Free	1¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	1¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	1¼ cts. or 10 p.c.	20 p.c. but not less than 1½ cts. per pound from July 20 to Oct. 31.
	Provided that, when imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff the specific duty of one and one-quarter cents per pound shall not be maintained in force in any twelve months ending March 31 for a period in excess of 8 weeks, and whenever the specific duty of one and one-quarter cents per pound is not levied the ad valorem duty of 10 per centum shall apply.
99c	Raisins.....per pound	Free	3 cts.	4 cts.	Free	3 cts.	4 cts.
	When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
99h	Dried currants.....per pound When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.	Free	4 cts.	4 cts.	Free	4 cts.	4 cts.
100	Grapefruit.....per pound	Free	Free	1 ct.	Free	Free	1 ct.
105	Fruit pulp, with sugar or not, n.o.p, and fruits, crushed.....per pound	1½ cts.	2 cts.	3 cts.	1½ cts.	2 cts.	3 cts.
105b	Olives, ripe, in brine.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c.
105c	Olives, sulphured or in brine, not bottled.....	10 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	10 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
105d	Cherries, sulphured or in brine, not bottled.....	10 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	10 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
105e	Fruits and nuts, pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil, or any other manner, n.o.p.....	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
105f	Jellies, jams, marmalades, preserves, fruit butters and condensed mincemeats.....per pound	1½ cts.	3¼ cts.	5 cts.	1½ cts.	3¼ cts.	5 cts.
105g	Fruits and peels, crystallized, glacé, candied or drained; cherries and other fruits of crème de menthe, maraschino or other flavour.....	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.
105h	Oranges, grapefruit, or lemons, sliced or in the form of pulp, with or without the addition of preservatives.	Free	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free; 20 p.c.	20 p.c.; 25 p.c.	35 p.c.; 35 p.c.
105i	Fruits, frozen.....per pound	1½ cts.	2 cts.	3 cts.	1½ cts.	2 cts.	3 cts.
106	Fruits, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) Peaches.....per pound	2 cts.	2½ cts.	5 cts.	2 cts.	2½ cts.	5 cts.
	(b) Apricots and pears.....per pound	2 cts.	2 cts.	5 cts.	2 cts.	2 cts.	5 cts.
	(c) Pineapples.....per pound	1 ct.	2 cts.	5 cts.	1 ct.	2 cts.	5 cts.
	(d) N.o.p.....per pound	1 ct.	1 ct.	5 cts.	1 ct.	1 ct.	5 cts.
108	Honey in the comb or otherwise, and imitations thereof.....per pound	1½ cts.	1½ cts.	3 cts.	1½ cts.	1½ cts.	3 cts.

109	Nuts of all kinds, n.o.p., shelled or not.....per pound	1 ct.	1 ct.	3 cts.	1 ct.	1 ct.	2 cts.; 4 cts.
109a	Peanuts, green, in the shell or not further processed than shelled.....per pound	Free	Free	1 ct.	Free	Free	1 ct.
110	Cocoanuts.....per one hundred.....	Free	50 cts.	75 cts.	Free	50 cts.	75 cts.; $1.00
114	Palm kernels.....per pound	Free	Free	4 cts.	Free	Free	4 cts.
118	Lobsters, fresh.....	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
118b	Crabs and clams, in sealed containers.....	17½ p.c.	40 p.c.	40 p.c.	17½ p.c.	40 p.c.	40 p.c.
118c	Shrimps in sealed containers.....	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	40 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	40 p.c.
119	Sardines, sprats or pilchards, packed in oil or otherwise, in sealed tin containers, the weight of the tin container to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) When weighing over twenty ounces and not over thirty-six ounces each.....per box	3½ cts.	3½ cts.	6 cts.	3½ cts.	3½ cts.	6 cts.
	(b) When weighing over twelve ounces and not over twenty ounces each.....per box	2½ cts.	3 cts.	4½ cts.	2½ cts.	3 cts.	4½ cts.
	(c) When weighing over eight ounces and not over twelve ounces each.....per box	2 cts.	2 cts.	3½ cts.	2 cts.	2 cts.	3½ cts.
	(d) When weighing eight ounces each or less..per box	1¼ cts.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.	1¼ cts.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.
120	Anchovies, packed in oil or otherwise, in sealed tin containers, the weight of the tin container to be included in the weight for duty:—
	(a) When weighing over twenty ounces and not over thirty-six ounces each.....per box	3½ cts.	3½ cts.	6 cts.	3½ cts.	3½ cts.	6 cts.
	(b) When weighing over twelve ounces and not over twenty ounces each.....per box	2½ cts.	3 cts.	4½ cts.	2½ cts.	3 cts.	4½ cts.
	(c) When weighing over eight ounces and not over twelve ounces each.....per box	2 cts.	2 cts.	3½ cts.	2 cts.	2 cts.	3½ cts.
	(d) When weighing eight ounces each or less per box	1¼ cts.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.	1¼ cts.	1½ cts.	2½ cts.
123	Fish, prepared or preserved, n.o.p.:—
	(a) Kippered herring in sealed containers.....	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(b) Lobsters.....	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(c) Shell fish, n.o.p., including oysters, n.o.p.....	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(d) Salmon.....	17½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	30 p.c.	17½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(e) All other fish, n.o.p.....	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
141	Sugar candy and confectionery, n.o.p., including sweetened gums, candied popcorn, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar..... and, per pound	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c. ½ ct.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c. ½ ct.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
152	Fruit juices and fruit syrups, n.o.p., viz.:—
	(a) Lime juice	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(b) Orange juice	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free 10 p.c.	10 p.c. 10 p.c.	25 p.c. 25 p.c.
	(c) Lemon juice	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(d) Passion fruit juice	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(e) Pineapple juice	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(f) Grapefruit juice	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free; 10 p.c.	15 p.c.; 15 p.c.	25 p.c.; 25 p.c.
	(g) Blended orange and grapefruit juice	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(h) Fruit juices, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(i) Fruit syrups, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
153a	Grape juice in containers of more than one gallon capacity each:—
	Testing not more than 1·074 specific gravity at 60 degrees temperature.....per gallon	20 cts.	25 cts.	25 cts.	20 cts.	25 cts.	25 cts.
	And in addition thereto, for each increment of 0·01 in specific gravity above 1·074	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.
153b	Papaine	Free	5 p.c.	17½ p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	17½ p.c.
154	Mineral and medicinal waters, natural, under regulations prescribed by the Minister	Free	Free	Free	Free; 15 p.c.	Free; 20 p.c.	Free; 25 p.c.
156	(a) Whisky.....per gallon of the strength of proof	$4.50	$5.00	$10.00	$4.50	$5.00	$10.00
	(b) Gin, n.o.p.....per gallon of the strength of proof	$4.50	$5.00	$10.00	$4.50	$5.00	$10.00
	(c) Rum, n.o.p...per gallon of the strength of proof	$4.50	$6.00	$10.00	$4.50	$6.00	$10.00
	(d) Brandy.....per gallon of the strength of proof	$4.00	$4.00	$10.00	$4.00	$4.00	$10.00
	(e) Liqueurs.....per gallon of the strength of proof	$4.50	$4.50	$10.00	$4.50	$4.50	$10.00
	(f) Ethyl alcohol or the substance commonly known as alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl or spirits of wine, n.o.p.; spirituous or alcoholic liquors, n.o.p.; amyl alcohol or fusel oil, or any substance known as potato spirits or potato oil; absinthe, arrack or palm spirit, artificial brandy and imitations of brandy, n.o.p.; cordials of all kinds, n.o.p.; mescal, pulque, rum shrub, schiedam and other schnapps; tafia, and alcoholic bitters or beverages, n.o.p.; and wines, n.o.p., containing more than forty per cent of proof spirit.....per gallon of the strength of proof	$5.00	$10.00	$10.00	$5.00	$10.00	$10.00

	Provided, (1) that when the goods specified in Item 156 are of greater or less strength than the strength of proof, the measurement thereof and the amount of duty payable thereon shall be increased or decreased in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof. Provided, (2) that bottles and flasks and packages of gin, rum, whisky and brandy of all kinds, and imitations thereof, shall be held to contain the following quantities (subject to the provisions for addition or deduction in respect of the degree of strength) viz.:— Bottles, flasks and packages, containing not more than three-fourths of a gallon per dozen, as three-fourths of a gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than three-fourths of a gallon but not more than one gallon per dozen, as one gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than one gallon but not more than one and one-half gallon per dozen, as one and one-half gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than one and one-half gallon but not more than two gallons per dozen, as two gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than two gallons but not more than two and four-fifths gallons per dozen, as two and four-fifths gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than two and four-fifths gallons but not more than three gallons per dozen, as three gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than three gallons but not more than three and one-fifth gallons per dozen, as three and one-fifth gallons per dozen. Provided, (3) that bottles or phials of liquors for special purposes, such as samples not for sale to the trade, may be entered for duty according to actual measurement, under regulations prescribed by the Minister.
157d	Angostura bitters....per gallon of the strength of proof	$2.00	$5.00	$10.00	$2.00	$5.00	$10.00
9b	Nitrous ether, sweet spirits of nitre and aromatic spirits of ammonia .....per gallon and	$3.00 30 p.c.	$3.00 30 p.c.	$3.00 30 p.c.	$3.00 30 p.c.	$3.00 30 p.c.	$3.00 30 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
160	Alcoholic perfumes:—
	(a) When in bottles or flasks containing not more than four ounces each	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	90 p.c.	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	90 p.c.
	(b) When in bottles, flasks or other packages, containing more than four ounces each.....per gallon	$5.00	$5.00 30 p.c.	$5.00 40 p.c.	$5.00	$5.00 30 p.c.	$5.00 40 p.c.
	and
161	Perfumed spirits, bay rum, cologne and lavender waters, lotions, hair, tooth and skin washes, and other toilet preparations containing spirits of any kind:—
	(a) When in bottles or flasks containing not more than four ounces each	30 p.c.	45 p.c.	90 p.c.	30 p.c.	45 p.c.	90 p.c.
	(b) When in bottles, flasks or other packages, containing more than four ounces each.....per gallon	$5.00	$5.00 30 p.c.	$5.00 40 p.c.	$5.00	$5.00 30 p.c.	$5.00 40 p.c.
	and
162	(a) Vermouth, aperitif and cordial wines, containing thirty-two per cent or less of proof spirit, whether imported in wood or in bottles...per gallon	20 cts.	20 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	20 cts.	20 cts.	80 p.c. ad val.
	and
	Provided, that six quart bottles or twelve pint bottles shall be held to contain a gallon for duty purposes under this item.
	(b) Vermouth, aperitif and cordial wines, containing more than thirty-two per cent of proof spirit and not more than forty per cent of proof spirit	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.
	(c) Medicinal or medicated wines, n.o.p., including ginger wine, containing not more than forty per cent of proof spirit	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.
163	(1) Wines of the fresh grape of all kinds, not sparkling, imported in barrels or in bottles, for sacramental purposes, containing not more than twenty-six per cent of proof spirit.....per gallon	20 cts.	20 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	20 cts.	20 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.
	and

	(2) Wines of all kinds, n.o.p., including orange, lemon, strawberry, raspberry, elder and currant wines, containing twenty-four per cent or less of proof spirit, whether imported in wood or in bottles.....per gallon and	20 cts.	20 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	20 cts.	20 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.
	(3) Wines of all kinds, n.o.p., including orange, lemon, strawberry, raspberry, elder and currant wines, containing more than twenty-four per cent but not more than twenty-six per cent of proof spirit, whether imported in wood or in bottles.....per gallon and	55 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	55 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.
	And in addition thereto, for each degree of strength in excess of twenty-six per cent of proof spirit until the strength reaches forty per cent of proof spirit.....	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.	3 cts.
	Provided, that six quart bottles or twelve pint bottles shall be held to contain a gallon for duty purposes under this Item.
163a	(1) Prune wine, not sparkling, when containing not more than twenty-six per cent of proof spirit .....per gallon and	25 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	25 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.
	(2) Prune wine, not sparkling, when containing more than twenty-six per cent of proof spirit and not more than thirty-eight per cent of proof spirit .....per gallon and	25 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.	25 cts.	55 cts.	55 cts. 30 p.c.
	And in addition thereto, for each degree of strength in excess of twenty-six per cent of proof spirit until the strength reaches thirty-eight per cent of proof spirit.....		3 cts.	3 cts.		3 cts.	3 cts.
	Provided, that six quart bottles or twelve pint bottles shall be held to contain a gallon for duty purposes under this Item.
167	Malt, whole, crushed or ground, n.o.p., upon entry for warehouse subject to excise regulations....per pound	1/3 ct.	1/3 ct.	3/4 ct.	1/3 ct.	1/3 ct.	¾ ct.
167a	Malt flour, n.o.p., upon entry for warehouse subject to excise regulations.....per pound	1/3 ct.	1/2 ct.	3/4 ct.	1/3 ct.	½ ct.	¾ ct.
172a	Tourist literature issued by national or state governments or departments thereof, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, municipal and automobile associations, and similar organizations.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
172b	Prayer books, missals, psalters, religious pictures and mottoes, not to include frames.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
178	Advertising and printed matter, viz.:—Advertising pamphlets, advertising show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals; price books, catalogues and price lists; advertising almanacs and calendars; patent medicine or other advertising circulars, fly sheets or pamphlets; advertising chromos, chromotypes, oleographs or like work produced by any process other than hand painting or drawing, and having any advertisement or advertising matter printed, lithographed or stamped thereon, or attached thereto, including advertising bills, folders and posters, or other similar artistic work, lithographed, printed or stamped on paper or cardboard for business or advertisement purposes, n.o.p.
	per pound	5 cts.	10 cts.	15 cts.	5 cts.	10 cts.	15 cts.
	but not less than	....	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	.....	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(a) Provided that goods specified in this Item shall be exempt from customs duty when produced in countries entitled to the British Preferential Tariff and relating exclusively to products or services of such British countries, but not relating to Canadian products or services.
	(b) Provided that on goods specified in this Item when forwarded to Canada by mail, duties may be prepaid by customs duty stamps, under regulations by the Minister, at the rate specified in the Item, except that on each separate package weighing not more than one ounce, the duty shall be each.....	1 ct.	2 cts.	2 cts.	1 ct.	2 cts.	2 cts.
	(c) Provided that bona fide trade catalogues and price lists not specially designed to advertise the sale of goods by any person in Canada, when sent into Canada in single copies addressed to merchants therein, and not exceeding one copy to any merchant for his own use, but not for distribution, shall be exempt from customs duty under all Tariffs.

	(d) Provided that advertising and printed matter, whether imported by mail or otherwise, when in individual packages valued at not more than $1.00 each and when not imported for sale or in a manner designed to evade payment of customs duties, shall be exempt from customs duty when produced in countries entitled to the British Preferential or the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff.
179	Labels for cigar boxes, fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, confectionery or other goods or wares; shipping, price or other tags, tickets or labels, and railroad or other tickets, whether lithographed or printed, or partly printed, n.o.p.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided, that tickets issued by railway systems in the British Commonwealth, (not including railway systems operating in Canada), shall be exempt from customs duty, when produced in countries entitled to the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff.
184a	Periodical publications, unbound or paper bound, printed and issued at regular intervals, not less frequently than four times a year, and bearing dates of issue	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.; Various
199b	Containers wholly or partially manufactured from fibreboard or paperboard.....per pound	4/5 ct.	4/5 ct.	1½ cts.	4/5 ct.	4/5 ct.	1½ cts.
	Provided, that in no case shall the rate of duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff be less than	.....	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	.....	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
206d	Animal glands and animal glandular organs, and extracts thereof, wet or dry, (whether alcoholic or not), when imported by manufacturers of pharmaceutical or medicinal preparations for use exclusively in the manufacture of such preparations in their own factories	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
206e	Animal bile, in liquid or paste form, not further processed than concentrated, for use in the manufacture of bile acids	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
206f	Dried blood, n.o.p.	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	10 p.c.
206g	Blood albumen	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
206h	Dried blood, soluble	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
207	Bicarbonate of soda	Free	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.
207a	Butyl alcohol, n.o.p.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
208i	Nitrate of ammonia, when imported for use in the manufacture of nitrous oxide	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
208j	Nitrate of ammonia, n.o.p. and sal ammoniac	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.
208t	All chemicals and drugs, n.o.p., of a kind not produced in Canada	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
210g	Potassic nitrate of soda, n.o.p.	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
225b	Carnauba wax	Free	Free	10 p.c.	Free	Free	10 p.c.
231c	Gelatin capsules, empty, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture or compounding of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations	Free	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	7½ p.c.
232	Glue, n.o.p. and, per pound	15 p.c. 2 cts.	22½ p.c. 5 cts.	25 p.c. 5 cts.	15 p.c. 2 cts.	22½ p.c. 5 cts.	25 p.c. 5 cts.
232a	Gelatine, n.o.p. and, per pound	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c. 5 cts.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c. 5 cts.
247a	(1) Artists' and school children's colours; fitted boxes containing the same	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) Artists' brushes; pastels, of a value of one cent per stick, or over; artists' canvas, coated and prepared for oil painting	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
254	Gums, viz.:— (1) Copal, damar, benzoin, Pontianac, nattakuching, barberry, elemi, gedda, Senegal, tragacanth, mastic and sandarac	Free	Free	15 p.c.	Free	Free	15 p.c.
	(2) Amber and Arabic	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(3) Australian and kauri; lac, crude, seed, button, stick and shell; ambergris	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.
	(4) Gums and blends consisting wholly or in chief part of gums, n.o.p.	Free	Free	15 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.
259c	Castor oil	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free 25 p.c.

263a	Coal-tar benzol, when imported by refiners of crude petroleum, for use exclusively in blending with gasoline wholly produced in Canada	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
264	Essential oils, natural, viz.:—Geranium, rose, ylang-ylang, lemon, bergamot, orange, mandarin, citronella, clove and lemon grass	Free	Free	7½ p.c.	Free	Free	7½ p.c.
264a	Essential oils, natural and synthetic, n.o.p.; essential oils, natural and synthetic, containing other non alcoholic material, n.o.p., for use in the manufacture of products or preparations for medicinal, flavouring, toilet, or other purposes, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	7½ p.c.	7½ p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	7½ p.c.
264c	Menthol, natural or synthetic	Free	Free	10 p.c.	Free	Free	10 p.c.
266	Resin oil	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
266a	China wood oil	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
266b	Oiticica oil.....per pound	Free	Free	2½ cts.	Free	Free	2½ cts; 25 p.c.
273	Asphalt or asphaltum, solid	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
273a	Asphalt or asphaltum, n.o.p.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
273b	Asphaltum oil for use only for paving purposes	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
273c	Carbolic or heavy oil	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
276a	(1) Cotton seed oil, crude, when imported to be refined for edible purposes	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(2) Crude cotton seed oil, when imported by manufacturers of cotton seed meal and refined cotton seed oil, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such commodities, in their own factories	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(3) Cotton seed oil for canning fish	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(4) Cotton seed oil, n.o.p.	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.
276b	(1) Palm and palm kernel oil, crude, when imported to be refined for edible purposes	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(2) Palm and palm kernel oil, unbleached or bleached, not edible	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(3) Palm and palm kernel oil, not edible, for manufacturing soap	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(4) Palm and palm kernel oil, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
276c	(1) Cocoanut oil, crude, when imported to be refined for edible purposes	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(2) Cocoanut oil, not edible, for manufacturing soap	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(3) Cocoanut oil, not edible, when imported for use in the manufacture of refined coaoanut oil	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(4) Cocoanut oil, n.o.p.	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.
276d	(1) Peanut oil, crude, when imported to be refined for edible purposes	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(2) Peanut oil for manufacturing soap or for canning fish	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(3) Peanut oil, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	20 p,c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
276e	(1) Olive oil for manufacturing soap	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Olive oil for manufacturing tobacco	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(3) Olive oil for canning fish	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(4) Olive oil for use in the processing of textile fibres, including the finishing of fabrics	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(5) Olive oil, n.o.p.	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	20 p.c.
276f	(1) Soya bean oil for use in the processing of leather	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Soya bean oil for use in the manufacture of paints and varnishes	Free	Free	Free	Free	Eree	Free
	(3) Soya bean oil for use in the processing of textile fibres, including the finishing of fabrics	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(4) Soya bean oil for manufacturing soap	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(5) Soya bean oil for use in canning fish	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(6) Soya bean oil, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
284	Drain pipes, sewer pipes and earthenware fittings therefor, chimney linings or vents, chimney tops and inverted blocks, glazed or unglazed, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
284c	Earthenware tiles, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.

295c	Activated clay, when imported for use in the refining of oils	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
296i	Mica, phlogopite and muscovite, unmanufactured, in blocks, sheets, splittings, films, waste and scrap	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.
297a	Quartz, piezoelectric:—
	(1) Not further processed than cut into slabs or blanks and ground to shape	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
	(2) Fully manufactured ready for use in electric telephone, telegraph, wireless or radio apparatus	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
305	Flagstone, sandstone and all building stone, not hammered, sawn or chiselled	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.
305a	Marble, rough, not hammered or chiselled	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	20 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	20 p.c.
305b	Granite, rough, not hammered or chiselled	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.
305c	Marble, sawn or sand rubbed, not polished	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.
305d	Granite, sawn	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
305e	Paving blocks of stone	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
305f	Flagstone and building stone, other than marble or granite, sawn on not more than two sides	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
307	Marble, n.o.p.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.
307a	Manufactures of marble, n.o.p.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.
307b	Granite, n.o.p.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.
307c	Manufactures of granite, n.o.p.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	40 pc.
308a	Manufactures of alabaster, n.o.p.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
312b	Asbestos, crude	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
326	(1) Demijohns or carboys, bottles, flasks, phials, jars and balls, of glass, not cut, n.o.p.; lamp chimneys of glass, n.o.p.; decanters and machine-made tumblers of glass, not cut nor decorated, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	(2) Glass tableware, n.o.p., and illuminating glassware, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	(3) Opal glassware, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	(4) Cut glass tableware and cut glassware, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
352e	Metal parts in any degree of manufacture, coated or not, and wooden parts in the rough, when imported by manufacturers of spools, quills, pirns, bobbins and shuttles, for use in the manufacture of such articles, in their own factories	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c. 10 p.c. 10 p.c. 10 p.c.	10 p.c. 10 p.c. 10 p.c. 10 p.c.	35 p.c. 30 p.c. 45 p.c. 25 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
353	Aluminum and alloys thereof, crude or semi-fabricated:—
	(a) Pigs, ingots, blocks, notch bars, slabs, billets, blooms, and wire bars.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	30 p.c.
	(b) Bars, rods, plates, sheets, strips, circles, squares, discs and rectangles.....per pound	Free	3 cts.	7½ cts.	Free	3 cts.	30 p.c.
	(c) Angles, channels, beams, tees and other rolled, drawn or extruded sections and shapes.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(d) Wire and cable, twisted or stranded or not, and whether reinforced with steel or not.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(e) Pipes and tubes.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(f) Leaf, n.o.p., or foil, less than .005 inch in thickness, plain or embossed, with or without backing	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(g) Aluminum powder.....	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(h) Aluminum leaf, less than .005 millimetre in thickness.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(i) Aluminum scrap.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	Provided, that nothing shall be deemed to be aluminum scrap except waste or refuse aluminum, fit only to be remelted.
366	Watches of all kinds.....	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided, that when imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff, the duty shall be not less than.....each	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.
366a	Watch actions and movements, finished or unfinished	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.
	Provided, that when imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff, the duty shall be not less than.....each	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.
366b	Parts of watch movements, finished or unfinished...	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.
	Provided, that when imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or General Tariff, the duty on plates designed to hold in place four or more wheels or other moving parts shall be not less than per plate		5 cts.	10 cts.		5 cts.	10 cts.
368	Clocks, time recorders, clock movements, clockwork mechanisms, and clock cases.....	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Provided, that when imported under the Most-Favoured-Nation or the General Tariff, the duty shall be not less than.....each		40 cts.	50 cts.		40 cts.	50 cts.

383	Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, of iron or steel:—
	(b) Coated with tin, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.
384	Skelp of iron or steel, hot rolled, when imported by manufacturers of pipes and tubes for use exclusively in the manufacture of pipes and tubes, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the Minister	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.
392c	Forged golf club heads of iron or steel, with or without face or similar marking, but not ground, polished, plated or otherwise finished	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
402b	Woven netting, of iron or steel, coated, made from wire of 17 gauge or heavier, with meshes not smaller than one inch and not larger than two inches, with specially strengthened joints, when for use exclusively on fur farms, under regulations prescribed by the Minister:—
	(1) Of a class or kind not made in Canada	5 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	5 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) N.o.p.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
414	Typewriters	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
414a	Complete parts of typewriters	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
414b	Dictating, transcribing and cylinder shaving machines and complete parts thereof, including cylinders and unfinished wax blanks	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.
414c	Bookkeeping, calculating and invoicing machines and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
414d	Adding machines	Free	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.
414e	Complete parts of adding machines	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
425a	Lawn mowers designed for use with motive power, whether or not containing the power unit	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	32½ p.c.	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	32½ p.c.
426a	Machinery and apparatus enumerated in Tariff Item 412a, when for use by manufacturers of articles made from regenerated cellulose or cellulose acetate; complete parts of such machinery and apparatus, not to include saws, knives, and motive power	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.
426b	Veneer-drying machines, and complete parts thereof	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.
426c	Wire stitchers and staplers, either hand or power type, but not including motive power; complete parts of the foregoing	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	35 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
429	Cutlery of iron or steel, plated or not:—
	(g) Razors and complete parts thereof; razor blades, n.o.p.	Free	27½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	27½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(h) Safety razor blades	Free	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
430b	Screws, or iron or steel, coated or not:—
	(1) Wood screws	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	and, per one hundred pounds	.....	50 cts.	.....	.....	50 cts.	.....
434	(1)Locomotives and motor cars for railways, for use exclusively in mining, metallurgical or sawmill operations, n.o.p., and chassis, tops, wheels and bodies for the same, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(2) Locomotives for use on railways, and chassis, tops, wheels and bodies for the same, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
440g	(1) Manufactures of iron, brass or other metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use exclusively in the construction or equipment of ships or vessels, under regulations prescribed by the Minister	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Diesel and semi-diesel engines, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof, for use exclusively in the construction or equipment of ships or vessels	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
440m	(i) Unfinished parts of aircraft, n.o.p., not including parts of aircraft engines	Free	15 p.c.	27½ p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	27½ p.c
	(ii) Direct or inertia starters with or without related operating gear and parts thereof; generators; voltage control boxes; batteries; de-icing and anti-icing equipment and parts thereof, not including parts of rubber; vacuum pumps with related operating gear and parts thereof; landing and navigation lights; propellers; hydraulic jacks and pumps and parts thereof; aircraft wheels; aircraft brakes with related operating gear and parts thereof; aircraft tires and tubes; oil coolers; fuel pressure warning devices; exhaust gas analysers; pressure fire extinguishers; primer pumps; instruments excepting fuel contents gauges; bolts, nuts, cocks, turnbuckles, clevis and pins, swaged wires and tie rods; bars, tubes, extrusions and

	forgings of aluminum, aluminum alloys and magnesium alloys; steel tubing; all the foregoing when of types and sizes not made in Canada and imported for use exclusively in the manufacture or for spares, overhaul or repair of the goods enumerated in Tariff Item 4401 under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	Free	27½ p.c.	Free	Free	27½ p.c.
446g	(1) Electric apparatus designed for welding and parts thereof, not including motors	5 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	5 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) Mechanically-operated gas apparatus designed for cutting or welding and parts thereof, not including motors	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(3) Gas apparatus designed for welding or cutting and parts thereof, n.o.p.	5 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	5 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
446k	Tools of iron or steel, for use in machines, n.o.p., of a class or kind not made in Canada	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	35 p.c.
446m	Welding rods or welding wires of rust, acid or heat resisting steel, whether or not flux-coated	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
450	Roller skates and parts thereof	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
450a	Skates of all kinds, other than roller, and parts thereof	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	30 p.c.
451b	Pins manufactured from wire of any metal:—
	(1) Specially designed for marking systems	Free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(2) N.o.p.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	30 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	10 cts.	10 cts.	.....	10 cts.	10 cts.
461a	Automatic scales or weighing machines, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts of the foregoing, for use in Canadian manufactures	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
505b	Shingles of cedar, creosoted, vulcanized or otherwise processed or treated	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
511c	Skis	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
511d	Ski fittings	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
511e	Ski poles	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
518	Bagatelle and other game tables or boards	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c
518a	Billiard tables, with or without pockets; cues, balls, cue-racks and cue-tips	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
519	House, office, cabinet or store furniture or wood, iron or other material, and parts thereof, not to include forgings, castings, and stampings of metal, in the rough:—
	(1) Substantially of wood	15 p.c.	27½ p.c.	45 p.c.	15 p.c.	27½ p.c.	45 p.c.
	(2) Other than of wood	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	45 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	45 p.c.
520	(1) Raw cotton and cotton linters not further manufactured than ginned; waste wholly of cotton unfit for use without further manufacture	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Rags unfit for use without further manufacture, not to include used garments nor waste portions of unused fabrics	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
522c	(1) Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of cotton, including threads, cords and twines generally used for sewing, stitching, packaging and other purposes, n.o.p.; cotton yarns, wholly or partially covered with metallic strip, generally known as tinsel thread	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.
	(2) Cotton yarns, wholly covered with a double layer of metallic strip in single strand only, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of electrical conductors, in their own factories	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
	(3) Sewing thread, wholly of cotton, on spools, not to exceed 250 yards on one spool	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
523	Woven fabrics, wholly of cotton, not bleached, mercerized nor coloured, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.
523b	Woven fabrics, wholly of cotton, printed, dyed or coloured, n.o.p.:—
	(1) Valued at more than 80 cents per pound	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.

	(2) Valued at 50 cents or more but not more than 80 cents per pound	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.
	(3) Valued at less than 50 cents per pound	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	32½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	32½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3½ cts.	4 cts.	.....	3½ cts.	4 cts.
	(4) Woven fabrics, wholly of cotton, commonly known as denims, when imported by manufacturers for use in their own factories in the manufacture of garments	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	32½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	32½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.
523l	Woven fabrics, wholly of cotton, composed of yarns of counts of not less than 80 and not more than 99, including all such fabrics in which the average count of the warp and weft yarns is not less than 80 and not more than 99	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.	.....	3 cts.	4 cts.
523n	Cotton bags:—
	(1) Seamless	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
	(2) N.o.p	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
524a	Fabrics with cut weft pile, wholly of cotton or of cotton and synthetic textile fibres or filaments	5 p.c.	25 p.c.	32½ p.c.	5 p.c.	25 p.c.	32½ p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	3½ cts.	4 cts.	.....	3½ cts.	4 cts.
532	Clothing, wearing apparel and articles made from woven fabrics, and all textile manufactures, wholly or partially manufactured, composed wholly of cotton, n.o.p	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
532c	Curtains, wholly or partially manufactured, composed wholly of cotton, n.o.p	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
532d	Fabrics wholly of cotton, coated or impregnated, n.o.p	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
535g	Piassava fibre, not coloured, nor further manufactured than dried, cleaned, cut to size, ground and sifted	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
538b	Twine for baling farm produce	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.
547a	Bags or sacks of sisal	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
548c	Tablecloths, centre-pieces, and doilies of sisal, palm straw or cane straw	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound			4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
549	Wool not further prepared than combed, n.o.p. per pound	Free	10 cts.	15 cts.	Free	10 cts.	15 cts.
549a	Wool, not further advanced than scoured, not including wool of the sheep of the type commonly known as karakul, when imported by carpet manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of carpets, in their own factories.....per pound	Free	Free	15 cts.	Free	Free	15 cts.
549b	(1) Hair of the camel, alpaca, goat or other like animal.....per pound	Free	Free	15 cts.	Free	Free	15 cts.
	(2) Hair, cleaned or uncleaned, but not curled, dyed nor otherwise manufactured; and horse hair not further manufactured than simply cleaned and dipped or dyed.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(3) Hair, curled or dyed, n.o.p.....	12½ p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	12½ p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.
549f	Nets made from human hair.....	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
552a	Felt, splint, for use in making molded splints for medicinal purposes.....	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	25 p.c. and 20 cts. per pound
553	Blankets of any material, not to include automobile rugs, steamer rugs, or similar articles:—
	(1) Household blankets, wholly of cotton.....	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	5 cts.	5 cts.	30 cts.	5 cts.	5 cts.	30 cts.
	(2) Blankets, wholly or in part of wool or hair...	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	5 cts.	20 cts.	30 cts.	5 cts.	20 cts.	30 cts.
	(3) Blankets, n.o.p.....	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	5 cts.	25 cts.	30 cts.	5 cts.	25 cts.	30 cts.
554e	Filter press cloth of wool or hair (except human hair)	Free	15 p.c.	40 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	40 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	30 cts.	35 cts.	.....	30 cts.	35 cts.
568b	(1) Gloves of kid, n.o.p.....	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	45 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	45 p.c.
	(2) Gloves and mitts of all kinds, n.o.p.....	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	45 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	45 p.c.
569	Hats, hoods and shapes of fur felt or of wool-and-fur felt, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.....	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.

569a	(1) Hats, hoods and shapes of wool felt	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per dozen	45 cts.	90 cts.	$1.25	45 cts.	90 cts.	$1.25
	(2) Hoods and shapes, knitted, crocheted, plaited or woven, in a single piece, and hoods and shapes of braid, not sewn, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	10 p.c.
	(3) Hoods and shapes, n.o.p.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per dozen	.....	50 cts.	50 cts.	.....	50 cts.	50 cts.
	(4) Hats, n.o.p.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per dozen	75 cts.	$1.00	$1.50	75 cts.	$1.00	$1.50
	(5) Berets of wool, knitted and fulled	22½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per dozen	.....	50 cts.	65 cts.	.....	50 cts.	65 cts.
	(6) Caps, bonnets and berets, n.o.p., under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c.
570a	(1) Carpeting, rugs, stair pads, mats and matting of straw, hemp, flax tow or jute	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(2) Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of paper; carpet lining and stair pads	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	25 p.c.
	(3) Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of sisal, palm straw or cane straw	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
571a	(1) Mats with cut pile, of cocoa fibre—per square foot	2¼ cts.	3 cts.	5 cts.	2¼ cts.	3 cts.	5 cts.
	(2) Mats, n.o.p., rugs, carpeting and matting of cocoa fibre per square yard	6¾ cts.	7½ cts.	10 cts.	6¾ cts.	7½ cts.	10 cts.
572a	Carpets of sisal, palm straw or cane straw	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	40 p.c.	20 p.c.	20 p.c.	40 p.c. and 20 cts. per square foot.
597	(1) Pianofortes and organs, n.o.p.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) Pipe organs	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(3) Pipe organ player actions and parts thereof; parts of pipe organs, n.o.p.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(4) Parts of pianofortes and parts of organs, n.o.p.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
597a	(1) Musical instruments of all kinds, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	17½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(2) Phonographs, graphophones, gramophones and finished parts thereof, n.o.p., including cylinders and records therefor	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(3) Mechanical piano and organ players	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(4) Cylinders or records specially made for use in the study of languages, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Minister	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free	Free	30 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
598	(1) Brass band instruments, of a class or kind not made in Canada	Free	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.
	(2) Brass band instruments, n.o.p.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
	(3) Bagpipes and complete parts thereof	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	25 p.c.	25 p.c.
603a	Karakul skins, wholly or partially dressed, but not dyed	Free	Free	15 p.c.	Free	Free	15 p.c.
604	(1) Belting leather in butts or bends; and all leather further finished than tanned, n.o.p.	7½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	7½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	27½ p.c.
	(2) Sheepskin or lambskin leather, further finished than tanned, n.o.p.	7½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	7½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.
605	(1) Leather produced from East India tanned kip, uncoloured or coloured other than black, when imported for use exclusively in lining boots and shoes	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.
	(2) Genuine reptile leathers	Free	7½ p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	15 p.c.
607a	Leather, consisting of beef-cattle hides, horse-hides or sheep-skins, but not including suedes, Cabrettas, Spanish capes or African capes, when imported by manufacturers of gloves or leather clothing, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves or leather clothing in their own factories	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.
607b	Leather, not further finished than tanned, in whole hides, in grains, or splits, when imported by manufacturers of upholstering leathers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of upholstering leathers, in their own factories	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	15 p.c.
611a	(1) Boots, shoes, slippers and insoles of any material, n.o.p.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.
	(2) Canvas shoes with rubber soles	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.	20 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.
	(3) Boots, shoes and slippers of sisal with cork, sisal, leather or rubber soles	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	40 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	40 p.c.

	(1) Rubber, crude, caoutchouc or India-rubber, unmanufactured, n.o.p.	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.
	(2) Powdered rubber and rubber or gutta percha waste or junk	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(3) Recovered rubber and rubber substitute	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(4) Latex, being crude rubber in liquid form, not compounded beyond the addition of preservatives	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
619a	Rubber clothing and clothing made from waterproofed cotton fabrics and, in addition on raincoats.....each	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c. 50 cts.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	35 p.c. 50 cts.
623a	Handbags of sisal, palm straw, or cane straw, with or without lining	7½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	40 p.c.	7½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	40 p.c.
624a	(1) Dolls	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	40 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	40 p.c.
	(2) Toys of all kinds, n.o.p.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	40 p.c.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	40 p.c.
	(3) Mechanical toys of metal	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	40 p.c.	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	40 p.c.
	(4) Juvenile construction sets of metal or rubber, consisting of various stampings, punched or moulded, and connections therefor; parts of the foregoing:—
	(a) Of metal	Free	25 p.c.	40 p.c.	Free	25 p.c.	40 p.c.
	(b) Of rubber	Free	20 p.c.	40 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	40 p.c.
648b	Diamonds, rough or uncut, and not advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process, whether in their natural form or broken	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
654	Bristles, natural	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
654b	Broom corn	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
655	Pens, n.o.p., penholders and rulers, of all kinds	12½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	27½ p.c.
655c	Pen nibs of steel	Free	12½ p.c.	27½ p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	27½ p.c.
656	(a) Tobacco pipes of all kinds	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.
	(b) Cigar and cigarette holders	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(c) Cases for cigar and cigarette holders, cigar and cigarette cases, smokers' sets and cases therefor, and tobacco pipe mounts	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(d) Tobacco pouches	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
663h	Oyster shells, not further manufactured than crushed or screened, or both, for use as poultry feeds or in the manufacture of poultry feeds.....	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
710	Coverings, inside and outside, used in covering or holding goods imported therewith, shall be subject to the following provisions, viz.:—
	(b) Usual coverings containing goods subject to any ad valorem duty, when not included in the invoice value of the goods they contain.....	Free	7½ p.c.	20 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	20 p.c.

4. Resolved, that Schedule C to the Customs Tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended, be further amended by deleting therefrom Items 1211 and 1214 and by inserting in said Schedule C the following Item:—

1214	1. Common mongoose (Herpestes griseus) or mongoose of any kind; 2. Any bird of the Starling family (Sturnidae), except the European Starling (Sturnus vulgaris); 3. Any other non-game bird, except any of the following:— (a) a domestic bird of a kind kept for food purposes; (b) a bird intended solely for exhibition in a public zoological park; (c) a bird intended solely to be kept in confinement in a cage or to be used for purposes of public entertainment.

5. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon Resolutions 1 and 3 of the foregoing Resolutions to amend the Customs Tariff or Schedules thereto shall come into force on the first day of June, one thousand nine hundred and fifty, and shall apply to all goods mentioned in the foregoing Resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date, and shall apply to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

6. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon Resolutions 2 and 4 of the foregoing Resolutions to amend the Customs Tariff or Schedules thereto shall be deemed to have come into force on the twenty-ninth day of March, one thousand nine hundred and fifty, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing Resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

(See also Budget Papers at pp. 1277 et seq.)

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I think it was Churchill, Mr. Speaker, who once remarked that in a democracy the things we have in common are more than the things that divide us. It is therefore possible for us, in all sincerity, to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) on delivering a speech which is well within the established budget tradition of our country.

I doubt, however, that he enjoyed delivering it quite as much as he enjoyed the one a year ago. A year ago, Mr. Speaker, it was "Roses, roses, all the way". He had just tickled our ears with words about tax reductions. He had just cut what I suppose we might call a melon. He had primed the pump for the election in various ways.

Mr. Cruickshank: He did a pretty good job.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes, I will admit that. I am perhaps exhibit A in the case. We admit that the pump was well primed. After all, there were $460 million going to the farmers and by way of rebates to the income-tax payers. Then there were such small matters as the treatment of the Hong Kong veterans and the Canso bridge. Indeed, it almost looks as though there had been a surplus; because you will realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Canso bridge appropriation did not have to be used up and it is still available. There seems to be some difference of opinion between the Liberals here and the Liberals in Halifax as to just what the reason for delay was; but I do not think we lesser people need to go into these disputes between what I suppose the Prime Minister would call the master race. The only thing I would suggest is this. If a bridge 22 feet wide produced X votes, how many votes will a bridge 24 feet wide produce? We might get the genial Minister of Transport to work that problem out for us.

Today, Mr. Speaker, things are changed. The roses are somewhat faded. There is no melon tonight.

An hon. Member: There is a grape, though.

An hon. Member: And ice cream.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We may have ice cream, but it will not go well with the lemon which we have tonight. It is a wishy-washy mixture, I take it. There is no election in the offing today. We are just left to trudge along as best we may, without any of the allurements of a year ago.

A budget is, in some sense, a stocktaking and, in some sense, a report to the shareholders. I should like to take a few moments this evening to raise a few questions which I think a prudent man of business would raise in connection with the statement which has just been presented to us. The first thing, of course, that occurs to every man is what his taxes are; and the minister has made clear the position. It is not an exciting budget in that respect. None of us expected that it would be. We are just scraping along; no hundreds of millions of dollars to juggle with now. We are pretty well at the bottom of the barrel and just scraping along.

And that, of course, raises the question in the mind of the taxpayer about spending and about economy—because taxes result from spending. The taxpayer of course is not pleased to compare the first estimate of today with the first estimate of a year ago, and find that it is about $90 million up. Oh, I know the minister will be quick to say, "Yes, but our defence estimates and family allowances are up and we have $20 million for a trans-Canada highway." But, nevertheless, I think our prudent man will ask the minister what signs of real economy there are. The minister said of course that economies in many departments had taken place. I noticed he did not say all. I am sure he has very great difficulties, and I sympathize with him. I examined the Department of Agriculture. When you first look at the figures it looks as if there was a reduction but when you look further you realize that there is really no reduction because there was $12 million of which they were relieved in connection with western freight. When you look through the items—there are forty-five items—you find that there are twenty-eight increases and some ten decreases.

What the minister said is right. If we are going to have these services, then we have to pay for them. But our complaint is that there is no opportunity in this House of Commons for members to form a view at first hand because we never have the chance. We have no chance to talk to the civil service. Then there are hundreds of thousands of dollars in sundries, a few thousand here and a few thousand there, next to various publicity items which might add up to $5 million, which makes one wonder if we are spending too much money for that kind of thing when, actually, we are just scraping along.

There is one particular economy to which I wish to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) because it has to do with something he himself mentioned. I noticed the other day that a certain member of the other place suggested that we should practise economy by nationalizing the Canadian Pacific Railway, and amalgamating it with the Canadian National. I think I would just say to the Prime Minister, who made the mistake of telling the railway workers that our party favoured amalgamation, that I do not consider that that is the kind of economy that should be made, if indeed it is an economy, because of creating a huge monopoly. I add my voice to all others so as to make clear the position of this party in that matter, so that the Prime Minister will not make that mistake again.

I come to the next thing which the prudent man would be concerned with, and that is the state of business of the country. He would naturally look first of all at the external trade of the country. I think that the truth is now known. I am not an alarmist, and I am not preaching calamity, but I think the people are getting nearer to the truth. The bedtime stories we heard last spring from the two privy councillors, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which we might call "the great illusion" are pretty well put to rest, and the people are realizing now that our trade is actually slipping. They realize that in 1949 our over-all external trade dropped by about $87 million; and in the first two months of this year indications are that our over-all trade was $22 million down, and our trade with the commonwealth $45 million down.

Some of the items, as we study them, are rather interesting. We find that our trade to some foreign countries is only in the amount of a few hundred dollars, or perhaps even less. We find for instance, that in the last year—and I do not know whether this is significant—our exports of skunk skins to Great Britain were entirely stopped. I do not know what that has to do with international affairs.

An hon. Member: The socialists.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The socialists may have something to do with it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to suggest that the government is responsible for all this; but I am going to suggest that so far as we on this side of the house are concerned —and we are not told much—but so far as we can judge, there has been a negative approach on the part of the government.

We had a very interesting account from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) about his journey to Colombo. But what he had to say made one feel that he was just an onlooker—a friendly onlooker, I am sure. Indeed, he actually described himself as a "dollar gadfly." I have looked up the word "gadfly" in the dictionary, and I find that it is "a fly that bites and annoys cattle."

Well, whether that attitude would be useful at cabinet meetings, I cannot say; but I cannot believe that it was very useful at Colombo. Indeed one got the feeling that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had not gone there with any mandate from the cabinet that he was to try to help things along.

The Minister of Finance will say, "Oh, but you must remember that they are all in the sterling area, and that we are not a sterling country." I will agree with that. And without taking more than a second or two to discuss the point, I shall say that our complaint is that the government is to blame for keeping us in a strait-jacket and that it is going to get worse unless something is done about it.

There was a certain negation also I thought in the answer to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) who moved a resolution suggesting that we might have a commonwealth conference on trade. The hon. member for Lake Centre did not suggest that that was going to work miracles, but he did suggest that it was a reasonable thing to do; and I think many hon. members in this house felt it was a reasonable thing to do. But the Minister of Finance was entirely negative. He did not say that it would do no good. He said if we were invited to one we would go, but that we would not take the initiative. So I think it is fair to describe the attitude of the government as a negative attitude.

I say, further, if things were going well we might be content with a negative attitude on the part of the government. But I submit that even he will not say things are going well. He spoke some serious and grave words tonight. I suggest the situation is far from good.

One thing I am not overlooking, and that is the visits of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to Europe. When he comes back we have an optimistic statement. Perhaps if he could go there every day and make a statement every morning it might help. His feeling seems to be "A statement a day keeps depression away."

Mr. Howe: It has kept away for a good many years, hasn't it?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do like an optimist, and I like the Minister of Trade and Commerce; and there certainly is a place for optimism, so long as it is not overdone.

The next thing that this prudent man of business of whom I have been talking would ask is this. He would ask where we are going. It is true that we have had a fairly complete review from the Minister of Finance, in which he has said many things which are of interest. I think the minister contented himself largely with congratulating himself on the past; as someone has said, he was "resolutely facing the past."

But I think our prudent citizen, looking at things as they are, would have been troubled about things. He would see as I have said that we are just scraping the barrel now in the matter of income. There is nothing to come and go on. Secondly, he would remind himself of the international danger of which the minister has spoken, and of the certainty of higher defence expenditures. Thirdly, he would say to himself that the government, by its extravagant election promises to further social security, has got itself into a position where, with all the wiggling it can do, it can hardly get away from carrying out some of the things which it suggested during the election. Further, he would remind himself that we are just now beginning to feel the cutback; we are just beginning to feel the effects of the cutback of British purchases. He would remind himself that this fertilizing stream of Marshall aid, which has given to us so much, is likely to be dried up in another year. He would say to himself, "All this is happening at the end of years of boom, of the highest activity we have ever known, when, on the theory of cyclical budgeting which has been expounded in this house, we should be having much larger surpluses than we have." Taking those considerations together I think our friend will say that not everything is rosy. I think he would consider it incredible levity if it were considered in that way.

I think he will say further, "What will happen if we have even a minor recession which will cut down earnings and, of course, cut down taxes?" I think he will further say that we should have, and indeed we have had to a certain extent, an exposure of conditions by the government, but I think most of all he will feel that we seem to be coasting along, that the government has not really indicated anything except hope and optimism in dealing with the situation which is facing us. I think he would say finally that what is needed is a much more active attitude on the part of the government to help people to help themselves and to help develop this country.

We have in the west resources that are only now coming fully into being. We have great mineral resources along with the oil and coal in the prairie provinces. If there was a plan concerted by the government along with the provinces—I do not mean that the government should do things itself—if there was an effort to create an economy favourable to enterprise, what someone has called an economy of opportunity, it seems to me that there might be brought about that industry, energy and initiative to develop the resources which we need to help to carry this extra load.

On motion of Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood) the debate was adjourned.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 56, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the house now has before it the bill which arises out of the resolution debated on Friday last. The bill is quite brief, simply having the effect of continuing the statute for a period of thirteen months from its present expiry date of March 31, 1950. In one or two respects the bill does not contain what it was indicated to the house it would contain. When the resolution was in the committee stage it was clearly stated that the measure would contain the actual orders in council which were to be continued thereby. The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sinclair) is reported on page 1105 of Hansard of March 24 as saying:

> The actual list of controls which will still be in effect will appear as a schedule to the bill.

Then at page 1107 he is reported as saying:

> . . . the schedule to the bill will show the orders in council and amendments which are being carried forward.

The bill before the house contains no such thing. We must look to the consolidation of orders in council outside the statute and do a little subtracting in order to find out precisely what orders in council the house is now being asked to give legislative effect to in what I call a devious and improper way for a parliament to proceed. The parliamentary assistant will recall that a year ago the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), who piloted this same measure through the house in that session, told us that twelve orders in council were to be continued. We are now told that the twelve orders are still in effect. Much has been made of the fact that we have been told there has been considerable demobilization in the control structure, but we find that there are still twelve orders in effect. Six of them are to be terminated on March 31 while six will be continued for the remaining thirteen months of the life of the bill now before us.

In a statement to the house on March 24 the minister made it clear that the bill was intended to permit the government to continue rent control. He said, as reported on page 1089 of Hansard:

> . . . during the past year all the orders contained in the schedule to the act have been revoked except those relating to price and rent control.

I interpolate here that what I think the minister meant was that orders have been passed which will have the effect on the 31st of this month of terminating six of the twelve orders that were continued in effect a year ago. The minister continued:

> The government does not intend to invoke the limited powers now granted by the act to reimpose controls already lifted. Therefore the practical effect of the proposed bill is to continue the authority to control rentals only, for a further period.

Taking up the minister's statement for the moment, if the only purpose of this bill is to continue rent control, then there can be no room for argument or difference of opinion within the house. I have not heard any party or any member of this house object to the continuation of rent control. If that is the only purpose of the bill, then we are in agreement on the purpose. The question remains then as to the method by which the purpose is to be carried out.

Looking at the hodgepodge of orders in council which he was asking parliament to give legislative effect to for this further period of thirteen months, the minister, with commendable candour, said, as reported on page 1089 of Hansard:

> These are extraordinary powers and they should be exercised with great discretion.

May I comment upon the two phrases of that statement, dealing first with the second phrase, that they should be exercised with great discretion. I take it that there will be complete agreement with the formula thus laid down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), but if we are to judge his conception of what is great discretion in the exercise of such powers by the exercise that he and the government made of those same powers last November, when they brought in sweeping and blanket increases in rent control without the slightest consultation with the house, then the house will want more than the bland assurance given by the minister in his statement of March 24 before assuming that these extraordinary powers will be exercised in fact with great discretion.

I do not propose to review what I said on March 24 about the kind of statements that have been emanating from the ministry in recent years. I call the attention of the house to the low estimate placed by the government upon its own statements. I recall, as I did in the house last Friday, the way in which it suited the convenience of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in November, 1947, to turn tail upon the most categorical assurances given to this house in 1946 by his predecessor, the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, on foreign exchange control. I refer also to the way in which it suited the convenience of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) in this house last fall to turn tail on assurances that he himself had given to the house in April of last year that the radio committee would be consulted and would have an opportunity to report before the government would ask the house to vote a loan of $4 million to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the development of television. Other instances can be cited of the very low way in which the government has treated assurances that it gave the house, to which the house attached the utmost good faith when they were made, and upon which it relied.

Let me turn to the first branch of the statement made by the Minister of Finance. He said, "these"—referring to the powers that the government seeks to arrogate to itself by the present bill for a further period of thirteen months—"are extraordinary powers." They are extraordinary powers indeed. No member of the house can gainsay that fact. It is because they are extraordinary powers and because in this year of grace, 1950, five years after V-E day, there can be no excuse for the continuation of extraordinary and arbitrary powers in such a form, that we in the opposition have said that this is an utterly and inherently wrong method of dealing with the question of rent control. If the field within which, according to the minister's own statement, these extraordinary powers are to have their play is to be confined to rent control, what possible excuse can there now be for failing to bring before the house a proper measure to continue rent control?

In the face of what the minister has pictured to the house as a simplification of the situation, why must we now continue to have a situation where we do not find the law relating to rent control that parliament is being asked to pass in the legislation that will actually pass this house, if the house gives effect to it, and will receive the assent of the governor general? Why do we have to go elsewhere, why do we have to go to the privy council office to find out what is the law of the land on a measure that is of the highest importance to hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of Canadian people? Surely there cannot be any excuse five years after the end of the war for asking parliament to proceed in this way and to hand over to the governor in council the power to make law, or for that matter to clothe with the effect of legislation orders in council that were never passed by parliament, orders in council that were simply passed by the governor in council and repose today in the privy council office. That is precisely the effect of the present measure.

We are being asked to give continued legislative effect to something that never has been legislated, to something that in the beginning was order in council and will under the measure before the house continue to be order in council. In the year 1950 that is just as wrong as any type of procedure could be that the government could propose in this house. If the house sees fit to pass the present bill it will be continuing a situation where we do not find the legislation in the statute books of parliament, where we cannot find the law of the land in the statute rolls of the house, where the law of the land is to be found only in the privy council office, and where legislative effect is being given to the acts of a group that is outside parliament in its actions in this respect. There can be no possible excuse five years after V-E day, Mr. Speaker, for parliament subjugating and demeaning itself by giving legislative effect to orders in council in a situation of that kind.

What possible justification does the government give us? There has not been one word of attempted justification yet from the government benches of this abuse of the parliamentary method. There has not been the slightest excuse. It is true it might have involved a little draftsmanship in bringing in a bill that would select from this hodgepodge of orders in council those portions that require to be enacted in order to give proper legislative form and effect to rent control. Does it pass the ingenuity of those who are the advisers of the government to draft the necessary legislation? Would it have taken any longer for the house to deal with it? I do not think it would have. If it had been in proper form it would have taken less time because, as I have said, I think all members of the house are in agreement in supporting the principle of continuation of rent control.

That has not suited the purpose of the government. They have chosen rather to have parliament demean itself by continuing this hodgepodge of orders in council. I wonder how many hon. members of the house, who are again being asked in effect in the name of parliament to abdicate the proper use of the legislative function of the house in favour of the secondary method of giving legislative effect to something that was not done in the house, have really taken the trouble to read and scrutinize with care the remaining six orders in council which will be given legislative effect for a further period of thirteen months if the bill passes. I wonder, for instance, if they have read with care order in council P.C. 8528 and all the many amendments to it. If they have they will see that this order in council, apart from setting up the wartime prices and trade board, in clause 4 proceeds to clothe the board with sweeping and vast powers the like of which, apart from some aspects of rent control, are totally unnecessary now and, if the statement of the government is to be accepted, will not be used. They are powers the equal of which have never been conferred by parliament on any body in peacetime in the history of Canada. Yet parliament is being asked to give continued legislative effect to this order in council, and to confer on the wartime prices and trade board vast powers which the government itself now says it should not be necessary for that board to possess or exercise in view of the narrowing of the field within which the control system is to operate.

What a position in which to place the Canadian parliament: to vest in the wartime prices and trade board vast powers which the government does not even make the slightest attempt to pretend are required for the limited purpose of rent control! You know, Mr. Speaker, what many of these powers are. We find the broadest powers in order 8528 in reference to the investigation of the prices of goods and services. We have arbitrary powers vested in the board in regard to licensing. What possible justification can there be for continuing to give the board these licensing powers, when the duties of the board are to be confined to the administration of what remains of the system of rent control? Nevertheless, without the slightest explanation parliament is being asked to swallow this whole system of sweeping and arbitrary powers, and to give them legislative effect for another thirteen months. What possible justification can there be for continuing provisions like this, in paragraph 8 of this order in council:

> No person shall sell or offer for sale or supply any goods or services at a price that is higher than is reasonable and just, or withhold any goods or services from sale or supply for a price that is higher than is reasonable and just and, in any case where a person engaged in business accused under this provision has not kept such books of account as are necessary to exhibit or explain his transactions, the onus shall be upon such accused person to establish that the price is reasonable and just . . .

The government makes not the slightest pretence of offering any reason why sweeping powers of that kind should continue to be vested in the wartime prices and trade board; yet it asks this parliament to swallow them holus-bolus and continue to abdicate its own functions, something which this parliament cannot possibly contemplate if it is to retain its self-respect.

Then we have another provision, to the effect that no person shall acquire, accumulate or withhold from sale any goods beyond an amount reasonably required for the ordinary purposes of his business. What has that to do with rent control? It has not the slightest bearing. Why, then, should this parliament be asked to give it continued legislative effect?

That is only one order in council. If we turn to P.C. 9029, with all its amendments, it may be that more of that order is required because that was the general order in council in regard to rent control; nevertheless it contains powers that are not needed today; and I could go through the other four orders that are to continue in effect for thirteen months commencing April 1 of this year.

There has not been a sounder point of view advanced in this house during the lifetime of this parliament than that advanced by my leader in his speech on Friday last, March 24, when he told the government in plain, well understood terms that if it would bring in a proper measure dealing with rent control, a measure in proper parliamentary form, it would undoubtedly command general support from all parties. That would have been the sound legislative method, the method that would commend itself to a parliament prepared to be reasonable in its actions, sound in its approach to national problems, yet determined to assert the proper position of parliament as champion of the rights of the people. That is the approach that would have commended itself to any government that had, first, a proper sense of responsibility to the house, and second, a desire to see the house proceed by proper parliamentary methods. Apparently neither of these attributes is to be found in this government. Without any attempt at or pretence of excuse or justification they simply dump on the doorstep of parliament this whole hodgepodge of consolidated orders in council, asking parliament to forget its proper procedure, to forget that it is a parliament and once more to reduce itself to the status of a rubber stamp in order to give legislative effect to something that will not be found in the bill but will repose over in the privy council office.

If ever there was an issue crystal clear, it is the issue now presented by this bill. Last year the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) thought he had a case for the continuation of this measure because at that time twelve orders in council and five types of control were still in effect. At that time it will be remembered that we still had controls with respect to steel, timber and building materials. Whatever justification he thought he had at that time, however, has been completely swept aside by the action of the government in reducing those controls to one, that is, rental control. If the situation is as simple as the government has pictured it to the house; if the intentions of the government are as straightforward as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) pictured them in the house last Friday, then I say the government has deprived itself of the slightest shred of excuse or justification for asking parliament to abdicate its proper functions and swallow holus-bolus this hodgepodge of orders in council.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the measure before us is one that parliament will have to pass. As a matter of fact if we get that far with it and the government asks unanimous consent to give it third reading tonight, I will not object to waiving the rules so that can be done. The reason I make that statement is that some people are concerned lest they lose even the minimum amount of protection now provided under rent control.

In putting it that way I think I make it clear that while we are ready to support this measure, we feel we must take a few moments to condemn the government for the way it has handled this whole business of rent control, particularly during the last two or three years. The people of Canada, I am afraid, have become inured to this sort of treatment, and are resigned to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) the other day that the federal government intends to get out of rent control altogether by April 30, 1951. Nevertheless I feel the government should be told that thousands of people across this country—and this is particularly true in the city from which I come—resent the callous indifference the government has shown to this important problem in the lives of a great many Canadians.

While I am on my feet I want to say that to some extent I share the views expressed by the hon. member who has just spoken, though in part I may differ with him. I share his resentment of the fact that the bill does not include some of the things the parliamentary assistant told us last Friday it would include. Perhaps I resent it even more than the member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), because the statement the last speaker quoted was given as a direct answer to a question I put to the parliamentary assistant. He told us that there would be a schedule to the bill that would indicate the orders in council to be continued in force beyond March 31, and which would indicate also the orders in council to be continued only until March 31 of this year. The parliamentary assistant was a bit annoyed the other day because I was not satisfied with an indication of the orders in council by number. I wanted him to go further and give us a schedule to the bill which would actually set out these orders in council.

Mr. Sinclair: I even gave the page numbers on which they could be found.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member still does not seem to understand our complaint. He is boasting about the information he gave this house, which is found on page 1106 of Hansard of March 24, 1950. He stated categorically that that information would be included as a schedule to the bill. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant has seen the bill?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Where is the schedule?

Mr. Sinclair: I shall answer that when the time comes.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the parliamentary assistant will do more than answer the question. I hope he will implement his categorical assurance given the other night, by moving an amendment to put at least that much information into the proposed statute.

I want to say a bit more, Mr. Speaker, about the lack of information contained in the bill. While I share the views expressed by the member for Eglinton about the way in which this practice disregards the rights of parliament, I want to speak more particularly from the standpoint of the average citizen, be he a tenant or a landlord, who has a problem in the field of rent control. In a democracy it should be possible for a citizen who has to deal with a government department, or a government official, to be shown in black and white, and in simple language, what the law is. It should be possible to set before him a simple document telling him what his rights are. What a time any citizen, be he landlord or tenant, has today trying to find out what his rights are under this rent control legislation. As a matter of fact, as a result of the inadequate information that is available, many of these people write to their member of parliament for information. I think I know my way around the statutes, orders in council, regulations, documents, and the tremendous amount of material and information available to us here in Ottawa. I confess, however, that many of the questions that come to me in the field of rent control are presented in such a way that the only thing I can do is address a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott).

For example, a few days ago I had an inquiry about the present situation with respect to evictions. I knew there was something about that somewhere in the regulations, but it seemed to me a waste of time to try to find it, because I realized that if I did find it, it would probably have been amended since the time my copy of the regulations was issued. So I wrote to the Minister of Finance, and asked him if he would supply me with the latest office consolidation of the relevant orders, and in particular give me information so that I could answer the question I had received about evictions. I received a letter from the Minister of Finance dated March 22, 1950. I should like to read part of it:

> There are no regulations dealing exclusively with evictions, but I would refer you to section 2 and section 13 of board order 800. Section 2 lists the types of property and leases not affected by that order and section 13 tells the circumstances under which a landlord may recover possession in accordance with the law of the province in which the accommodation is situated. In addition to these two sections, subsection 3 of section 4 of order 813 provides "that a landlord of any lodging as distinguished from a self-contained dwelling may recover possession by giving to the tenant a six-months' notice to vacate", and section 7 of the same order provides "that a landlord of any self-contained dwelling may give to the tenant a six-months' notice to vacate if he needs the accommodation as a residence for himself and the members of his family."
>
> Yours very truly,
>
> D. C. Abbott

I proceeded to look up, in the two booklets which the minister sent along with that letter, the various orders, sections and subsections to which he referred me. I found I was right in my original thought, that it would have been useless for me to look it up, because several of those sections had been amended. Little bits of paper containing the amendments had been pasted in the booklet, or the changes had been written in in ink.

My whole point, Mr. Speaker, in presenting this example, is that in addition to the affront to parliament that this sort of procedure involves, it is unfair to the average citizen of this country, because he is not able to go into a government office and be shown a clear statement of his rights. He should be able to find it in the law of the land. One should be able to turn up a statute governing the matter in question, and find it there. If he turns up what we have before us tonight, Bill 56, he finds it has one section, which changes the expiry date of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947, so that it will continue in effect until April 30, 1951. That is all there is to it, and it tells him nothing. If, perchance, the parliamentary assistant decided it might be a good idea this time to keep the promise he made the other day, and put a schedule in the bill containing the information he said would be in a schedule to the bill, what would we then have in this legislation? We would have, as the member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) said the other day, a book of numbers.

There would be two sections to that schedule. I am basing this assumption on what the parliamentary assistant said, as recorded at page 1106 of Hansard of March 24, 1950. The first section would list those orders in council that are being continued until April 30, 1951. We would know that the first one was P.C. 8528 1/11/41, wartime prices and trade regulations. Under that, we have a list of 15 other orders in council by number and date. The effect of these orders in council is simply to amend the first one. Then, the second order in council would be P.C. 9029 21/11/41, wartime leasehold regulations. Then, there is a list of nine more orders in council which amend that one, listed by number and by date. I shall not bother with the other four groups under that first heading, having to do with the orders in council to be continued in force, because they deal with relatively minor matters, nor with the second group of six orders in council, which will be discontinued as at March 31 of this year.

The main question before us is the continuation of rent control. As I say, in order to do that, there are to be these many orders in council carried forward. I suppose the parliamentary assistant is thinking of saying that it would be ridiculous to include, as a schedule to the bill, all of those 26 orders in council to which I have referred. In speaking of 26, I mean P.C. 8528, plus its 15 amending orders, which, taken together, constitute the wartime prices and trade regulations; and then P.C. 9029, which is the wartime leasehold regulations, plus its 9 amending orders in council. One of the reasons that it would be ridiculous to carry all of those orders in council forward into a schedule is that most of them are now dead. As a matter of fact some of the material the member for Eglinton was reading here tonight, and complaining about, is a dead letter. He was worked up over some of the authority that seemed to be contained in them, but rather needlessly, I would say.

The member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) seems to be enjoying the fact that I am saying that about the member for Eglinton. I tell him, however, that if it is the case that most of those 26 orders in council are in the category of dead letters, would it not be a simple matter to boil them down to a few sections in the statute itself that would give the necessary authority for rent control? Would it not be a simple matter to put these regulations down in black and white in the statute so that people of this country would know what their rights are? Let me come back to my point. The whole purpose of the first sixteen orders in council referred to in this schedule, which the parliamentary assistant said would be in the bill but which is not in the bill, is simply to keep alive on paper the wartime prices and trade regulations as a base or an authority for there being a rent control division. Let us get rid of all that and simply enact, by one section of the bill, the rent control authority. Similarly, P.C. 9029 and its nine amending orders in council simply make various changes in the original constitution of the rent control authority, all of which could be boiled down and made clear.

A while ago I referred to the documents which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) sent me the other day. One of them is entitled:

Office Consolidation
May, 1949

Wartime Prices and Trade Board
Orders Respecting Maximum Rentals and Termination of Leases for Housing Accommodation and Shared Accommodation

When I look into the booklet I find that within the space of seven pages there is printed P.C. 9029 as amended by the nine amending orders in council referred to as item 2 in the promised schedule. Right there that suggests the possibility of boiling all this material, which it is quite hard to find, down to a fairly simple statement. The parliamentary assistant says, "Oh, you need the other orders in council in order to give authority to P.C. 9029". This parliament now has authority to constitute or to continue its constitution, if you will, the rent control authority that is in existence; and I submit that it is something of that kind that should be done.

Then after you get this P.C. 9029 by this devious process of carrying forward the whole raft of dead-letter orders in council, you then move on to the board orders; and their numbers, of course, run fairly high. I have reached as high as board order No. 813; but they do not all relate to rent control. Many of them, of course, dovetail into each other. Any time that a difficult question is put to the Minister of Finance or to the rent control people, they have to get the answer. They have to sit down and study this section and that, and make sure that one section has not been repealed by another. Would it not be a great deal simpler—in fact, would it not save time and labour for all of the people out in the various offices—if once and for all the whole business were boiled down to a simple statement?

I argue that point for the sake of efficiency and because I think it is unfair to ask parliament to pass legislation that is so involved as this is and is so far removed from parliamentary investigation or inquiry. I urge it also because it seems to me that the democratic tradition is a good one, namely, that the people of the country have the right to know what the law of the land is and have the right to know what their rights are. As the situation is now, any citizen, whether landlord or tenant, who goes into a rent control office is obliged to take the word of the official that he is telling him what his rights are or are not. One of the reasons that we get many letters from these people is not that they do not trust the official who is behind the counter in the rent control office but that they have been brought up in the tradition that citizens in a democratic society have a right to know what the law is.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The official does not always know what it is.

Mr. Knowles: Quite so. The official probably does what I do; he writes a letter to Ottawa, to the Minister of Finance, and gets a reply referring him to all these various sections, and gets a new book with the little slips pasted in so that he is brought up to date. Surely it is a fundamental rule that our citizens are entitled to know what the law is. When they go into a government office in Winnipeg or Vancouver it should be possible for them to see the law in black and white. They should know whether they are being given justice or not, and whether the law is being interpreted rightly or not. They should know when and where they may go to court to have their rights under the law protected, if they wish to do so.

I submit that it is not a good enough excuse simply to say that there are only thirteen more months with this and let us muddle along with it as it is. We have done far too much of that already, particularly since the war, with the habit that the government got into; and in my view this would be a good place to begin with the enacting of proper legislation.

One other comment I should like to make at this time is this. I suppose we have to accept the government's statement in the matter, a statement which is being carried forward into the bill, and that is that it is definitely going out of the field of rent control thirteen months from now. All previous extensions of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act have carried with them the possibility of that act being continued for another year by the simple device of a resolution of both houses of parliament. For the first time that device is not being included, and we have a bill which foreshadows a definite ending of rent control at the end of April, 1951. As I say, the people in my city of Winnipeg and in other cities across the country have had, in the last few years, so many hard knocks in the matter of rent control that they have become inured to the government's callousness; but I would not be doing my duty if I did not again protest the way in which we have had, not rent control, not protection of the interests of our people, but rent decontrol hastened or pushed forward at an unnecessary rate, particularly in view of the failure of the government to deal with the fundamental problem in this field, namely, the problem of decent and adequate housing for all our people.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): With the purpose of this act, Mr. Speaker, in so far as it relates to a measure of rent control, there is not much disagreement in this house. But there should be disagreement on the part of every member of this house with the procedure that is being followed if he really examines what this act does and what result is produced. As has been pointed out, there is a problem presented to the members in connection with this present act which proposes to continue the transitional powers for another thirteen months, by the simple fact that this is March 28 and that, according to the information conveyed to the government by the law officers of the crown, this and any similar act terminates at midnight the day after tomorrow. For that reason we are confronted with a situation in which, if we assert the position that should be asserted in regard to legislation of this kind, we can produce a situation in which there would be no remaining rent control, simply because of the dilatory conduct of the government and their failure to bring this legislation before the house in time for hon. members to have the opportunity of giving it ample consideration and of finding some alternative course.

Now, from the remarks that have already been made, I wonder how many hon. members realize exactly what they are being called upon to pass. Do members of this House of Commons realize—those of them who are showing sufficient concern to listen to this debate on this tremendously important bill—that what is now being sought is the power to continue not only price controls, but a very wide measure of control, not only over goods, but over services? And do they realize that under this act as presented, if it is passed by the House of Commons, the government could deal with human services in any way it might see fit, and without any limitation imposed by the act?

You may say that would not be done. Other things have been done by this government which have greatly surprised members of the house, as well as the people of Canada generally. I think a number of members have either misunderstood or misread the undertakings given by the government as to the scope of the continuing powers. I think many members of the house thought that it dealt only with rent controls.

I propose to speak about rent control, under this unsatisfactory method; but I also propose to speak of the other powers that are continuing. If this unsatisfactory method, this utterly unsound method of dealing with this particular problem, is to be adopted—and the very casual manner in which the government brings this on at the last moment would seem to make that almost a necessity—then it is quite true that it was necessary to continue the existence of the board which supervises the rent control provisions. That board is the board set up separately under order 8528, which was the original order in council establishing the wartime price and trade regulations. That order created the wartime prices and trade board, which is the board referred to in the rent control provisions.

Therefore in order to make the rent control provisions effective, without any change, and carry those loose provisions forward, it was necessary to provide for the continuance of this board. But they have gone a great deal farther than that, to provide for the continuance of the board. They have continued in force all the regulations that were put into effect, except those that were definitely limited in March of 1949.

Again may I say that a great many hon. members did not fully appreciate the effect of the provisions of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, which was discussed last year. Section 2 of that act reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in the said act or in any order or regulation set out in the schedule thereto, the wartime prices and trade board shall not
>
> (a) exercise any of its powers under paragraph (f) of subsection one of section four of the wartime prices and trade regulations; or
>
> (b) grant leave to prosecute any person for violation of subsection one of section eight of the wartime prices and trade regulations;
>
> with respect to any goods or services other than the goods and services with respect to which an order of the board was made under that paragraph and is in force at the commencement of this act.

Now, paragraph (f) of section 4 is the part of section 4 which relates to the fixing of certain maximum or minimum prices on certain goods, and relates only to the power of the board in relation to those. But it does not in any way limit the power of the board to deal with a great many other very important subjects. It does not in any way limit the power of the board to deal with everything from (a) right down to (m) of the powers that were originally conferred.

Then when you come to section 8 (1) with respect to the wartime trade board we find that section 8 is the one which relates to offences, penalties and prosecutions, and that the only subsection of section 8 which has been deleted is the subsection which refers to penalties for goods being sold at higher than a reasonable and just price. But it does not in any way remove any of the other penalties in relation to orders made by the board in regard to prices, or the control of goods or services.

Now, this is not simply an exercise in the definition of terms. Just let us see some of the things that are being continued by this bill that is now before us. I shall take only a few of them, to illustrate the extent of the powers that are being continued by this bill now under consideration. Let us take paragraph (g), for instance, of section 4 (1), which provides that the board shall have power—

> To prescribe the terms and conditions upon which, and the manner and circumstances in which, any goods or services may be produced, manufactured, extracted, refined, processed, stored, transported, purchased, sold, offered for sale, supplied, assembled, installed, constructed, distributed, exhibited, advertised, delivered, used or dealt in or with, either generally or by specified persons, and to prohibit transactions and acts not in accordance therewith.

Mr. Speaker, that practically gives this board power over every human activity in this country, either in dealing with goods, or in offering their services. This provides power in the hands of this government for the conscription of manpower under any terms they see fit.

Mr. Sinclair: Nonsense.

Mr. Drew: Someone says "nonsense". Well, that is some illustration of the way in which this government presents legislation. They do not even know what they are putting forward; and then they object to a discussion of a bill that this all-powerful government introduces.

Mr. Sinclair: Read section 2 of last year's act.

Mr. Drew: I have just read it, if you had been listening.

Mr. Sinclair: That is the section which says that any order in council which has been removed up to that time cannot be imposed.

Mr. Drew: It does not say anything of the kind.

Mr. Sinclair: Read the last three lines.

Mr. Drew: It does not say anything of the kind at all. It simply says that that relates to paragraph (f) of section 4 (1), and it relates to section 8 (1). And the whole of that section is governed by those two limitations.

Mr. Sinclair: With respect to those few orders in council in effect when this act was passed, on March 25, 1949.

Mr. Drew: I cannot hear the hon. member, but I am trying to guess at what he is saying. If the hon. member has anything to say I wish he would say it. I may say that I am not discontinuing my remarks.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is on the second reading and there is no question period.

Mr. Drew: This is no question period. If the hon. member has something to say to the house I am quite prepared to sit down and listen to it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What he intended to say was that when we have cancelled an order in council referring to these matters we cannot revive it or pass another.

Mr. Drew: That is exactly the point. The fact that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) comes in and supports this utterly preposterous statement by the parliamentary assistant is an indication that no one in the government knows what they are asking parliament to assent to.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are all wrong once more.

Mr. Drew: I am not all wrong. The government does not even know what it is asking parliament to do. What the act means is that if parliament by order in council cancels any of these provisions, they cannot be revived. That is exactly what the government should put before this house to deal with. If they simply want this act to retain the existence of the board they should cancel all of the wartime regulations except the one which provides for the board itself. When they do that, then under the act that was passed and to which the hon. member has referred it cannot be revived. But this is an order still continuing; this is an order still in effect.

That is exactly what the government should have done—cancelled by order in council all the provisions except that one part of this particular wartime order that is now carried forward and which creates the board necessary to administer the rent control provisions of the other order. I should like to point out some of the other provisions that are still here so that hon. members will know what is being dealt with. As an illustration, section 4, subsection (1) (h), provides:

> (1) The board shall have power
>
> (h) to require any person to obtain licences or permits from the board or from any person specified by the board; to prescribe the terms and conditions under which and the manner and circumstances in which such licences or permits or amendment thereof shall be obtained;

Then it goes on to point out what those licences may be for, and the next paragraph follows:

> (i) to amend, suspend or cancel any licence or permit issued or granted;
>
> (j) to prescribe the quantities of, the manner in which, and the terms and conditions under which, any goods or services may be bought, sold, supplied, distributed, delivered or used within prescribed periods of time and to prohibit purchase, sale, supply, distribution, delivery or use except in accordance with such prescription;
>
> (k) to require any person owning or having possession, control or power to dispose of any goods or services—

May I underline the word "services":

> —to deal with, use, dispose of or supply any such goods or services, in such manner as may be prescribed by the board; and no use, disposition or supply of any such goods or services in accordance with such manner shall constitute infringement of any mark, design, or other private or proprietary right;

Then it goes on to deal with manufacturing provisions. Those are the powers that are being continued. Some hon. members may be under the impression that an undertaking was given that those powers would not be exercised in the statement made by the Minister of Finance on March 24, but that is not what the Minister of Finance said. The Minister of Finance pointed out what powers were still in existence, which were the six orders to which the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has referred, which are as follows: 8528, 9029, 34/4433, 3122, 4600 and 6233. The two important orders are 8528, the one covering the wartime prices and trade regulations, and 9029 covering the wartime leasehold regulations.

Mr. Cannon: The regulations which the leader of the opposition has been referring to have been in force for eleven years. Does he think it will do much harm to have them in force one more year?

Mr. Drew: I am pleased to note that the very capable lawyer who has just spoken realizes that these are in force. I am happy that he has enlightened the parliamentary assistant to that extent. When he asks whether it would do any harm to have them still in force I would remind the hon. member that these orders were put into effect in the days of great emergency just after the outbreak of war. They granted powers that were justified and would have been accepted by the people of Canada only under those grave conditions. There is no occasion eleven years afterward for an hon. member to say, "You have had them for eleven years, you might just as well continue them." The fact is that on other occasions this government has revived statutes or powers that were available to them without notice to this House of Commons and to the parliament of Canada.

I for one do not believe that any hon. member of this house should let pass in this casual way powers of this kind that place in the hands of the government, at their whim at any time, full control over all business and personal activities of this country and full power over the personal services of our people, in whatever capacity those services may be performed. Yet that is what is before us. Let us see what the Minister of Finance said with regard to the exercise of these powers. He is reported at page 1089 of Hansard of March 24, 1950, as having said:

> The government does not intend to invoke the limited powers now granted by the act to reimpose controls already lifted.

That is no assurance that these powers will not be invoked. It simply says that the government does not intend to invoke. There are hon. members of this house who have been here for many years and who will recall occasions on which this government explained originally that they did not intend to do something but, finding they had authority and power to do it, felt that it was appropriate and necessary for them to exercise that power. This is only a declaration of intention and nothing more.

If the government has no intention of using these powers, then let them by order in council repeal tomorrow that part of order 8528 which does not relate to the mere creation of the board which is necessary for the purposes of carrying on the rent controls under order 9029. If they do that they will give evidence that they have no intention of exercising any wider powers. If they do not do that then every hon. member here must accept full responsibility for leaving powers in the hands of the government under which in time of any measure of stress powers and controls inconsistent with our system of parliamentary responsibility may be invoked.

I am going to leave my remarks as to these wide provisions at this time in the hope that between now and three o'clock tomorrow afternoon the government will recognize it has no occasion to continue such powers unless it has some intention not disclosed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). There is one simple way to demonstrate that, by passing the appropriate order in council which they can do in a matter of a few minutes with the knowledge before them. I am simply saying that for the time being I am going to leave the discussion of this particular subject so that the government will have an opportunity to consider the matter before the debate is revived tomorrow afternoon.

I will pass on to the provisions as to rent control. I have made our position clear on an earlier occasion. For the purpose of keeping the record quite straight I propose to refer to the position we took last year when these same measures were before the house. I do so because of the misinterpretation which has been placed upon the position which we took. On March 14, 1949, in the discussion of these very same measures, I had this to say, as reported at page 1449 of Hansard for that date:

> I would recall again that when the government of Canada asks us to give these loose powers to deal with rent control, with steel control, with timber control, with priorities, and with all these other controls, it has already said to the provincial governments, in effect: We do not believe that there is any emergency of the kind which necessitates our general authority; you go ahead and deal with these orders and we shall be very happy to leave the matter with you. Of course, the provinces will be called upon to deal with these by statute, and if they could deal with a rent control act, defining the rights of the tenants and landlords, then this house could have an act by which they could deal with other matters in the same way. And we should have them. There is no difficulty whatever in having proper acts of parliament to deal with each one of these subjects, which will restore to parliament its own authority, and which will restore to the members elected by the people of Canada their opportunity to say what the rights of the people will really be.

Further down on the same page I had this to say:

> If the Canadian parliament has any right to continue these powers, then it has the right and the authority to deal in the proper way with every one of the subjects covered in this omnibus bill; and that is the proper way to deal with it. But do not ask this House of Commons, do not ask parliament, to pass this omnibus bill which puts in one package all these loose and arbitrary powers in the way this one does.
>
> The continuance of these powers involves an extremely wide and arbitrary measure which permits ministers of the crown, and appointed officials who delegate their authority to others, powers which are not defined and which are expressly made free from the ordinary restraints of the courts; and they become in effect a sort of arbitrary power which we have come to associate with dictatorships in other countries.

I deal further with the same subject at page 1454 of Hansard for the same date in these words:

> I urge hon. members on both sides of the house, particularly those members on the other side of the house who have themselves criticized bureaucracy and the petty czars and dictators, that they vote against this resolution. By doing so they will insist upon proper acts being brought forward and they will also insist upon the return of true democratic parliamentary procedure in Canada.

The matter came up for discussion again on March 16, 1949, and on that occasion I was again discussing the question of dealing with these matters at that stage by loose orders instead of by clearly defined statutes which would leave no doubt about the rights of those affected by the legislation. I wish to quote these words from what I said on March 16, 1949, as reported at page 1545 of Hansard:

> I said before and I repeat that the government still has the opportunity to deal with this in the parliamentary way. Bring before this house a rent control bill that will really deal with the rights of tenants and the rights of landlords, and really establish the rights of our people generally; and the government will find support from every part of this house.

That was what I said in March of last year and it is what I say now. This is a subject which should be dealt with by a bill which will define the rights of those who are affected in such a way that from one end of the country to the other the rights of tenants and of landlords in their related capacities may be clearly determined, that they may be able to go to the courts to have decisions made in our ordinary constitutional way, and that they may be no longer subject to the arbitrary decisions of a board set up to meet the emergencies of war which has no place in this fifth year after the war in a free Canada.

On motion of Mr. Drew the debate was adjourned.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF GERMAN NATIONALS TO CANADA

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of making a short statement. On September 26 last the minister of mines and resources announced in the house that, while no change had been made in the existing regulations with respect to the admission to Canada of German nationals, it was the intention of the government to modify the enforcement of the regulations by considering applications for the admission from Germany of first degree relatives of legal residents of Canada. If approved, these applications were to be dealt with by special order in council. Consideration would be given to applications for the wife and unmarried children under eighteen, the husband, the parents aged sixty-five years and over, and the fiancee.

I am now tabling order in council P.C. 1606 passed on the 28th day of March, 1950, providing for the admission, without the necessity of a special order in council in each case, of German nationals who are close relatives of legal residents of Canada. Applications will be considered for the admission to Canada of the husband or wife; son, daughter, brother or sister, together with husband or wife, and unmarried children; the father or mother; the orphan nephew or niece under twenty-one years of age; the prospective husband or wife. The order in council also provides for the admission of displaced persons or refugees of German ethnic origin who were not German nationals on September 1, 1939.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall continue with the debate on this bill. When it is passed we will take up Bill No. 54, to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944. If time is left we will take up the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to set up a committee on old age security, and the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to refer his estimates to a standing committee.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

ECONOMIC INDICATORS

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS, 1949-50

BUDGET PAPERS

presented by Honourable D. C. Abbott, M.P., for the information of Parliament on the occasion of the Budget of 1950-51

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

(1) to make available in one place and in convenient form, as a supplement to the Budget, some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and other Government agencies, together with brief comments;

(2) to present a preliminary review of the Government accounts for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1950.

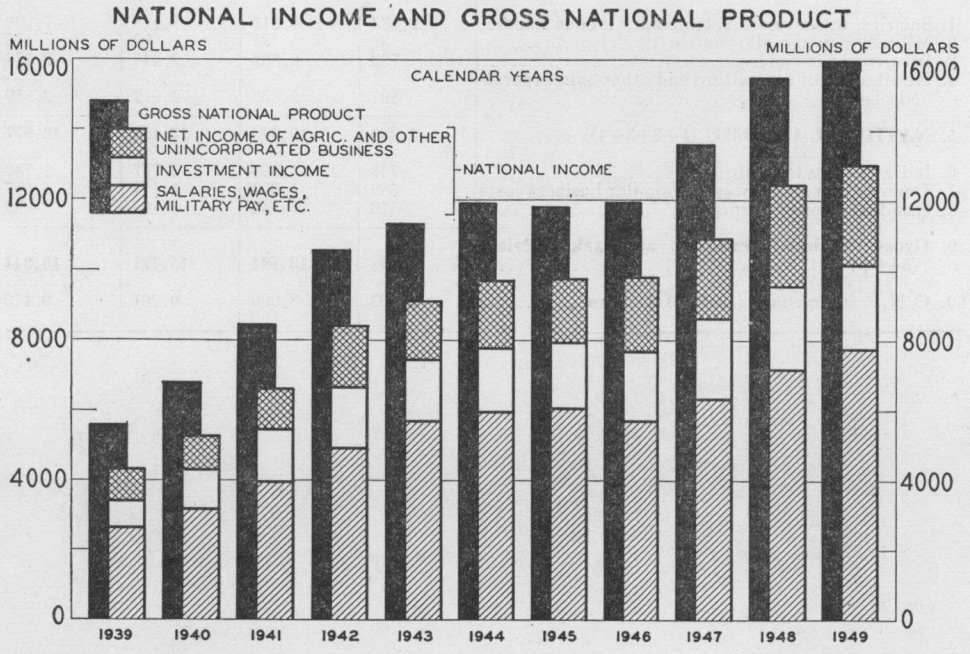
PART I

ECONOMIC INDICATORS

1. The National Accounts
   - National Income, Output and Expenditure
   - Personal Income and its Disposition
   - Saving
   - Investment
   - Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments
2. Employment and Wages
3. Trend of Prices
4. Balance of International Payments

The tables in this Budget Paper are based upon estimates provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and other Government Departments. Some of the figures appear for the first time; others have been published elsewhere. All 1949 estimates are preliminary and subject to revision.

Except where indicated, the figures for Canada do not include the Province of Newfoundland because of the lack of comparable data for the period prior to Union, March 31, 1949.



THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

National Income, Output and Expenditure

National Income measures the annual earnings of Canadian residents from productive operations. As such it includes salaries, wages and other forms of earnings by employees, in cash or otherwise, plus military pay and allowances. It includes corporation profits and other returns on invested capital. It includes the net income of farmers and of others who are in business on their own account.

Gross National Product is the value at market prices of all the goods and services produced in a year by the labour, capital and enterprise of Canadian residents. It is obtained by adding to National Income indirect taxes and such costs as depreciation allowances which may be regarded as entering into the cost of the goods and services produced, but do not form part of the incomes of Canadians. On the other hand, government subsidies, which reduce the price to the consumer or add to the income of producers, have to be deducted since they form part of the income of Canadians but do not enter into costs of production.

The goods and services produced in a year are either sold at home or abroad or added to inventories. Gross National Expenditure indicates how the Gross National Product was disposed of. Thus it measures the same total as Gross National Product but in a different way. Since foreign expenditures on Canadian goods and services, i.e., exports, form part of the earnings of Canadians in the Gross National Product, they are likewise included in Gross National Expenditure. While Canadian expenditure on imported goods and services is included in the totals of consumer expenditure, government expenditure and gross home investment, it is not part of the disposition of Canadian production and is therefore deducted.

Production and Income

The total value of goods and services produced by Canadians continued to rise during 1949, though at a lower rate than in the previous year. Eliminating the upward price change, it is estimated that national production in terms of physical volume increased by about 2% between 1948 and 1949.

Looking back to 1939, the national product has grown in value by over 180% and in physical terms by about 70%. Most of the increase in physical output occurred during the war years and can be attributed in large measure to the absorption of unemployed labour and resources. During the postwar years of high employment, output has shown a small but steady annual rise.

Income received in the form of wages and salaries rose by 7% between 1948 and 1949, reflecting the continued high level of employment and a further increase in rates of pay. Farm income, which has risen proportionately more than any part of the National Income since prewar years and which increased by about one-third from 1947 to 1948, fell by 5% between 1948 and 1949. Both lower prices and reduced crops account for the decline.

Investment income and the income of unincorporated businesses other than farming were up very slightly from the previous year.

TABLE 1

NATIONAL INCOME AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Salaries, wages and supplementary labour income.	2,583	6,212	7,113	7,630
2. Military pay and allowances	32	83	82	115
3. Investment income	783	2,307	2,348	2,373
4. Net income of agriculture and other unincorporated business	891	2,336	2,912	2,859
5. NATIONAL INCOME (1+2+3+4)	4,289	10,938	12,455	12,977
6. Indirect taxes less subsidies	737	1,604	1,767	1,782
7. Depreciation allowances and similar business costs	582	1,009	1,141	1,277
8. Residual error of estimate	−10	40	108	−93
9. Gross National Product at Market Prices (5+6+7+8)	5,598	13,591	15,471	15,943
10. G.N.P. in Constant (1935-39) Dollars	5,523	8,990	9,201	9,412

EXPENDITURE

The additional output produced by Canadians in 1949 was absorbed at home. Exports, which are a measure of the demand from outside the country, were about equal in value to the previous year.

Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services increased by $667 million, or 7% from 1948. This increase, though substantial, is less both in absolute amount and proportionately than in recent years.

Investment demands for plant, equipment and housing absorbed an even higher proportion of available labour and materials than in 1948.

From the peak of war expenditures in 1944 until 1947 the claims of federal, provincial and municipal governments on the available supply of goods and services declined steadily and sharply. In 1948 the trend was reversed and in 1949 there was another increase of 18%.

These changes in the expenditure side of the national accounts are analysed in greater detail in the following pages.

TABLE 2

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(MILLIONS OF DOLLARS)
1. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services	3,861	9,126	10,083	10,750
2. Government expenditure on goods and services	724	1,551	1,787	2,108
3. Gross home investment—
(a) plant, equipment and housing	554	2,057	2,663	2,829
(b) inventories	327	879	646	12
4. Exports of goods and services [1]	1,451	3,629	4,044	3,974
5. Imports of goods and services [1]	−1,328	−3,612	−3,645	−3,824
6. Residual error of estimate	9	−39	−107	94
7. Gross National Expenditure at Market Prices (1+2+3+4+5+6)	5,598	13,591	15,471	15,943
8. G.N.E. in Constant (1935-39) Dollars	5,523	8,990	9,201	9,412

[1] Minor adjustments have been made to the figures of current receipts and payments shown in Table 12 and in "The Canadian Balance of International Payments, 1926-48", Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to achieve consistency with the other component series.

Personal Income and Its Disposition

How much Canadians spend for consumer goods and services depends upon their personal incomes, their taxes and how much they decide to save, borrow, or spend out of previous savings.

The total of personal income differs from the National Income in several respects. For example, it includes only that part of corporation income which is actually distributed. Deductions from employees' total earnings must also be made for unemployment insurance contributions and similar contributions which, although forming part of the compensation for services performed, are not actually received by the employee within the year. On the other hand, transfer payments such as family allowances, old age pensions, veterans benefits and charitable contributions by corporations are included in arriving at the total of personal income.

TABLE 3

SOURCES OF PERSONAL INCOME

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Salaries, wages and supplementary labour income..	2,583	6,212	7,113	7,630
Deduct: Employer and employee contribution to social ins. and govt. pension funds.....	−34	−181	−223	−238
2. Military pay and allowances.....	32	83	82	115
3. Net income of agriculture and other unincorporated business.....	891	2,336	2,912	2,859
4. Interest, dividends and net rental income of persons	564	1,032	1,141	1,196
5. Transfer payments to persons (excluding interest)
(a) from government.....	249	848	851	917
(b) charitable contributions made by corporations.....	6	15	16	16
6. Personal Income (1+2+3+4+5).....	4,291	10,345	11,892	12,495

Personal income, like the National Income, continued to rise during 1949, but at a less rapid rate than in previous years. Wages and salaries were higher. Substantial payments by the Canadian Wheat Board and payment of the refundable portion of wartime income taxes added to personal incomes(1). As already indicated, however, farm incomes were somewhat lower as a result of poorer crops and lower average prices.

There was an increase in the total of transfer payments by governments. Family allowances and old age pensions involved significantly larger transfers in 1949, as a result both of higher average rates of benefits and a growing number of recipients. Unemployment insurance benefits were on a higher level, reflecting the increase in the numbers of unemployed, a high proportion of whom were covered by the insurance scheme. These gains were reduced by a further tapering off in payments of such postwar benefits to veterans as gratuities, rehabilitation benefits and re-establishment credits, which were at their peak in 1946.

(1) However, the total of personal income shown in Table 3 does not include the payment of the refundable portion of wartime income taxes.

The amount of personal income available for spending or saving is the total of personal income less direct taxes on personal income. In 1949, direct taxes fell sharply, accounting for less in absolute amount than in any year since 1945, and for a smaller proportion of personal income than in any year since 1941. As a result, personal disposable income rose by about 6% between 1948 and 1949.

Consumer spending increased in about the same proportion, indicating that net savings out of personal income were about the same as in 1948. There was a modest increase in dollar expenditure on perishable goods such as food, tobacco and beverages, and an even smaller increase in spending for semi-durable goods such as clothing. When price changes are eliminated, there was probably a small decrease in total volume of purchases of perishables and semi-durables. On the other hand, expenditure for durables—automobiles, furniture, household appliances, etc.—rose by an estimated 14% in value and about 9% in physical volume. Expenditure on services also increased substantially, reflecting in part the rising level of rentals.

As shown in table 4, it is estimated that consumer expenditure was 180% higher in dollar terms in 1949 than in 1939. Eliminating price changes in the interval and making allowances for the population increase, it would appear that, on the average, each Canadian is now consuming about 50% more of goods and services than in immediate prewar years.

DISPOSITION OF PERSONAL INCOME

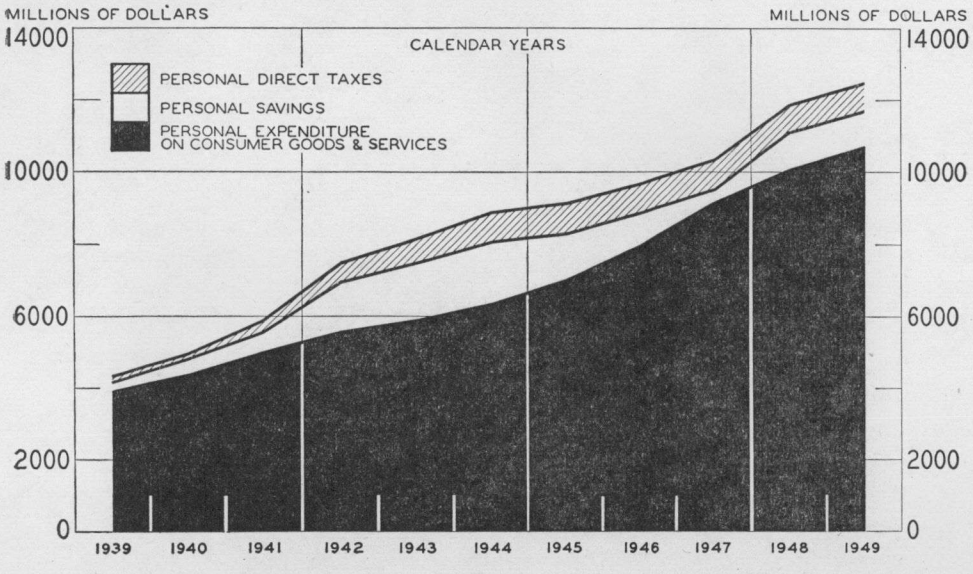

TABLE 4

DISPOSITION OF PERSONAL INCOME

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Personal direct taxes
(a) income taxes	61	694	717	674
(b) succession duties	28	61	57	56
(c) miscellaneous	21	36	47	56
Total direct taxes	110	791	821	786
2. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services—
Goods:
(a) Perishable—foods, tobacco, beverages, drugs, fuel, etc	1,644	4,305	4,852	5,074
(b) Semi-durable—Clothing, house furnishings, auto accessories, etc	508	1,430	1,586	1,602
(c) Durable—automobiles, furniture, household appliances, hardware, jewellery, etc	245	751	820	938
(d) Miscellaneous	45	152	190	202
Services	1,475	2,529	2,758	3,011
Net Personal Expenditure Abroad	−56	−41	−123	−77
Total Consumer Expenditure	3,861	9,126	10,083	10,750
3. Personal saving—
(a) personal saving excluding farm inventories	260	317	1,053	1,065
(b) net changes in farm inventories	60	111	−65	−106
Total personal saving	320	428	988	959
4. Personal Income (1+2+3)	4,291	10,345	11,892	12,495

SAVING

For the purpose of the National Accounts, saving is defined as being equal to investment.

Thus, a balance sheet can be constructed showing, on the one side, the sums which Canadians do not spend out of their incomes on immediate consumption—which are defined as saving—and, on the other side, the total amount spent for non-consumption goods such as factories, machinery, houses, additions to inventories, etc.—which are defined as investment.

Saving can therefore be regarded as the source of funds out of which investment expenditure is financed or, alternatively, investment expenditure can be regarded as providing an outlet for the savings set aside out of income.

A surplus of government revenue over expenditure adds to the total of saving. It is in effect a form of community saving. A government deficit, on the other hand, is a claim upon, and therefore a deduction from, private saving.

TABLE 5

SOURCES OF SAVING

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(MILLIONS OF DOLLARS)
Personal saving	320	428	988	959
Undistributed corporation profits	219	602	716	625
Undistributed Wheat Board profits	.....	37	−155	−84
Inventory revaluation adjustment(1)	−56	−18	−4	3
Depreciation allowances	582	1,009	1,141	1,277
Government surplus (+) or deficit (−)(2)	−42	816	807	398
Residual error of estimate(3)	−10	40	108	−93
Total	1,013	2,914	3,601	3,085

(1) The adjustment has been made only to grain held in commercial channels.
(2) See Table 10.
(3) See Tables 1 and 2.

Because of limited supplies of goods and services, particularly durables, and under the stimulus of loans and savings campaigns, personal saving was at a very high level during war years. During 1945, 1946 and 1947 consumption expenditures revived quickly and personal saving fell proportionately. In 1948, however, the trend was again reversed; incomes rose much more rapidly than expenditure for current consumption—probably because of sharply rising prices—leaving proportionately as much over for saving as in 1946. Personal saving remained at approximately the same level in 1949.

Corporate profits both before and after taxes were at levels somewhat below 1948. Dividends paid out increased by $73 million, leaving retained profits of about $625 million as against $716 million in 1948.

TABLE 6

CORPORATION PROFITS AND CORPORATE SAVINGS

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
Corporate profits before taxes(1)	618	1,828	1,969	1,914
Deduct corporate taxes(2)	−112	−724	−710	−673
Corporate profits after taxes	506	1,104	1,259	1,241
Deduct dividends paid out(3)	−287	−502	−543	−616
Undistributed corporate profits(4)	219	602	716	625

(1) Includes depletion charges and is adjusted for corporate losses, renegotiation of war contracts and conversion to a calendar year basis.

(2) Taxes paid or payable in respect of the calendar year's income, excluding the refundable portion of the excess profit tax. (See Table 10).

(3) Includes charitable contributions made by corporations. (See Table 3 Item 5(b)).

(4) See Table 5.

The gradual return to a position of balance between the expenditure and revenue of federal, provincial and municipal governments is reflected in the decline in the amount of saving accounted for by government surplus from $807 million in 1948 to $398 million in 1949.

The other substantial change in private saving was the further reduction in undistributed profits of the Canadian Wheat Board which, during 1949, made substantial participation payments to producers.

TABLE 7

DISPOSITION OF SAVING

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
Gross Home Investment	881	2,936	3,309	2,841
Net increase in foreign assets (including foreign exchange) adjusted(1)	123	17	399	150
Residual error of estimate(2)	9	− 39	−107	94
Total	1,013	2,914	3,601	3,085

(1) Minor adjustments have been made to the figures appearing in Table 12.

(2) See Tables 1 and 2.

INVESTMENT

The claims upon saving represented by investment expenditure in plant, equipment and housing were sustained at a high level in 1949. Net investment abroad and in foreign exchange, i.e., the net balance of international payments on current account, however, fell sharply from 1948 to 1949 (For more detailed discussion see section on Balance of International Payments). There was no appreciable investment in additional inventory.

TABLE 8

GROSS HOME INVESTMENT

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(MILLIONS OF DOLLARS)
Plant, Equipment, and Housing—Total(1)	554	2,057	2,663	2,829
New Residential Construction(2)	145	492	647	753
Other New Construction	126	564	806	847
New Machinery and Equipment	283	1,001	1,210	1,229
Inventories—Total	327	879	646	12
Grain in Commercial Channels(3)	127	22	55	— 1
Farm Grain and Livestock(3)	60	—111	— 65	—106
All Other Inventories(4)	140	968	656	119
Gross Home Investment(5)	881	2,936	3,309	2,841
Percentage of Gross National Product	16%	22%	21%	18%

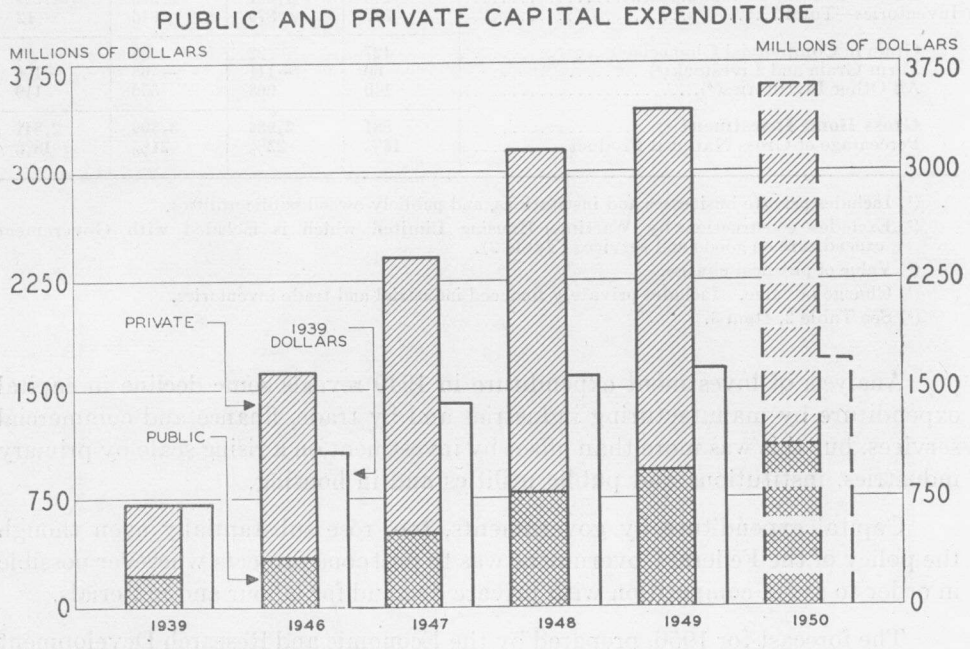
(1) Includes private businesses and institutions, and publicly owned public utilities.
(2) Excludes construction by Wartime Housing Limited which is included with Government expenditure on goods and services (Table 2).
(3) Value of physical change.
(4) Change in value. Includes privately financed industrial and trade inventories.
(5) See Table 2, Item 3.

Analysis of investment expenditure in 1949 reveals some decline in capital expenditure by manufacturing industries and by trade, finance and commercial services, but this was more than offset by investment on a rising scale by primary industries, institutions and public utilities and in housing.

Capital expenditure by governments, too, rose substantially even though the policy of the Federal Government was to postpone projects wherever possible in order to avoid competition with private demand for labour and materials.



The forecast for 1950, prepared by the Economic and Research Development Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, is for a continued upward movement in over-all capital outlay. Expenditure by institutions, public utilities and government are likely to comprise an increasing proportion of the total program. House building activity may tend to level off.

TABLE 9

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

—	1946	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949	1950(1)
	(Millions of Dollars)
Primary industries and construction industry	229	395	529	575	536
Manufacturing	321	539	579	522	496
Utilities	239	379	551	642	703
Trade, Finance and Commercial Services	164	203	281	258	291
Institutions	54	80	137	187	232
Housing	412	533	682	786	785
Direct Government	194	290	392	457	553
TOTAL CAPITAL EXPENDITURE	1,613	2,419	3,151	3,427	3,596
Total Capital Expenditure as a percentage of G.N.P.	14	18	20	21	22
Total Capital Expenditure in Constant (1939) Dollars	1,067	1,407	1,589	1,643	1,711

(1) Forecast.

Revenue and Expenditure of all Governments

In Table 10, "Government Transactions Related to the National Accounts", an attempt is made to bring together in one statement and under uniform headings the activities of all governments in Canada on a calendar year basis.

The table is designed to include only those transactions which have relevance for the National Accounts, and consequently the surpluses or deficits shown here do not agree with those shown in the various public accounts. It has been necessary to adjust the conventional accounting statements of fiscal year revenue and expenditure to exclude purely bookkeeping transactions as well as the purchase and sale of existing capital assets. Extra-budgetary funds such as unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and pension funds have been added, and surpluses or deficits of Government enterprises are likewise included. In the federal accounts some of the more substantial adjustments are as follows: addition of national defence recoverable expenditure, allocation of war refunds to prior years, adjustment of corporate taxes to an accrual basis, elimination of sales of war assets to business, and elimination of British Commonwealth Air Training Plan write-off from expenditure. In addition the federal figures have been adjusted to a calendar year basis by using the monthly figures published by the Comptroller of the Treasury. Government loans to foreign countries or accumulation of gold or foreign exchange are not included with government expenditure.

For purpose of analysis, expenditures by governments may be divided into two main categories: expenditures for the purchase of goods and services, and so-called transfer payments, i.e., family allowances, old age pensions, veterans benefits, the greater part of the interest on the public debt, etc., which do not arise from current production of goods and services. The first category represents the demands which governments place on the annual output of the nation. Transfer payments, on the other hand, simply add to the sums available for spending or saving by the recipient.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON GOODS AND SERVICES AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

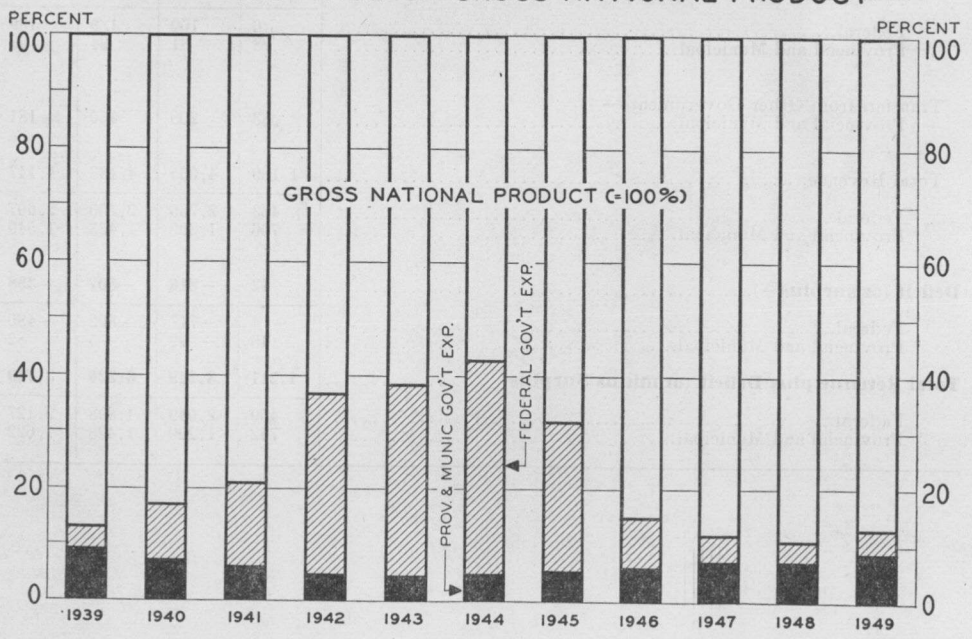


TABLE 10

GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS RELATED TO THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
Government Revenue—
Direct Taxes—Persons	110	791	821	786
Income and Excess Profits—
Federal	46	694	717	674
Provincial and Municipal	15	.....	.....	.....
Succession Duties—
Federal	.....	30	29	26
Provincial	28	31	28	30
Miscellaneous—
Federal	3	4	6	7
Provincial and Municipal	18	32	41	49
Direct Taxes—Corporations	123	759	751	720
Income and Excess Profits—
Federal	98	652	588	547
Provincial	14	72	122	126
Withholding taxes—federal	11	35	41	47
Indirect Taxes	720	1,781	1,842	1,857
Federal	310	1,136	1,085	1,043
Provincial and Municipal	410	645	757	814
Investment Income	99	345	346	365
Federal	−11	115	105	124
Provincial and Municipal	110	230	241	241
Employer and Employee Contributions to Social Security and Pension Funds	34	181	223	238
Federal	6	100	129	139
Provincial and Municipal	28	81	94	99
Transfers from Other Governments—
Provincial and Municipal	83	208	150	181
Total Revenue	1,169	4,065	4,133	4,147
Federal	463	2,766	2,700	2,607
Provincial and Municipal	706	1,299	1,433	1,540
Deficit (or surplus−)	42	−816	−807	−398
Federal	− 4	−717	−802	−480
Provincial and Municipal	46	− 99	−5	82
Total Revenue plus Deficit (or minus Surplus)	1,211	3,249	3,326	3,749
Federal	459	2,049	1,898	2,127
Provincial and Municipal	752	1,200	1,428	1,622

TABLE 10—Concluded

GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS RELATED TO THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

—	1939	1947	1948	Prelim. 1949
	(Millions of Dollars)
Government Expenditure—
Goods and Services	724	1,551	1,787	2,108
Federal	214	619	667	861
Provincial and Municipal	510	932	1,120	1,247
Transfer Payments	421	1,313	1,314	1,385
Federal	180	1,051	1,010	1,013
Provincial and Municipal	241	262	304	372
Subsidies	−17	177	75	75
Federal	−18	171	71	72
Provincial and Municipal	1	6	4	3
Transfers to Other Governments—
Federal	83	208	150	181
Total Expenditure	1,211	3,249	3,326	3,749
Federal	459	2,049	1,898	2,127
Provincial and Municipal	752	1,200	1,428	1,622

EMPLOYMENT AND WAGES

During 1949 the civilian labour force of Canada, including Newfoundland, averaged approximately 5,200,000, a gain through natural increase and net immigration of 110,000 over 1948. Employment averaged 5,055,000, an increase of 80,000 over 1948. Unemployment, defined as those wholly unemployed and looking for work, averaged 145,000 in 1949, an increase of 30,000 over the previous year.

There is a considerable shift in and out of the labour force during certain seasons of the year. The labour force and employment is normally at its peak around September 1. The total number employed at the seasonal peak in 1949 numbered 5,255,000, an all-time high for Canada.

The following table presents a comparative picture of the civilian labour force, employment and unemployment for the years 1946-1949. The annual averages do not include Newfoundland which was first surveyed in October 1949. Results showed a total labour force in Newfoundland of 114,000 composed of 95,000 males and 19,000 females.

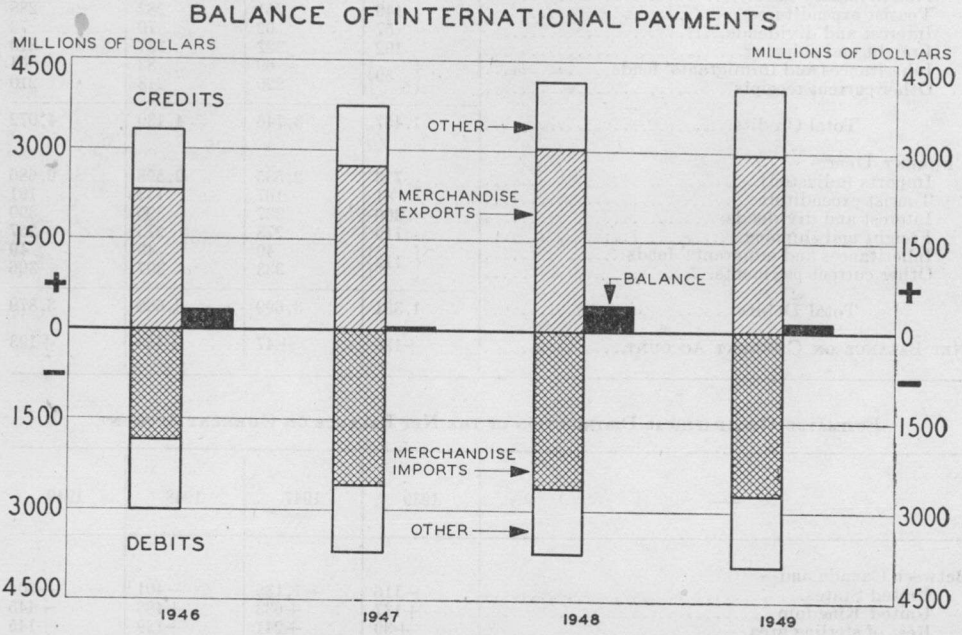
TABLE 11

THE LABOUR FORCE*

Annual Averages

(Thousands of Persons)

—	1946	1947	1948	1949
Civilian Labour Force	4,794	4,908	4,982	5,090
Male	3,720	3,841	3,919	4,002
Female	1,074	1,067	1,063	1,088
Unemployed	143	98	103	133
Employed	4,651	4,810	4,879	4,957
Paid Workers	3,124	3,262	3,372	3,469
Farm	146	119	134	144
Non-farm	2,978	3,143	3,238	3,325
Self Employed	1,126	1,158	1,160	1,160
Farm	679	661	668	670
Non-farm	447	497	492	490
Unpaid Family Workers	401	390	347	328
Farm	360	335	294	274
Non-farm	41	55	53	54



* Data do not include Newfoundland.

An indication of the trend of unemployment during the recent winter is provided by data on persons who have applied for work at National Employment Service offices. The average figures for November and December, 1949, were 206,000 and 274,000 respectively; and for January and February, 1950, an average of 362,000 and 377,000 respectively. Caution must be used in interpreting them as a measure of unemployment because they include some persons who had a job and exclude some unemployed persons who did not register. The increase in the number of persons looking for work was basically seasonal but reflected in some degree the impact of adverse weather conditions, lower overseas exports and currency revaluations. Present unemployment is concentrated in specific areas and industries; in many areas there is virtually full employment. The underlying employment trend is firm.

Labour income during 1949 was estimated at $7,630 million, 7% higher than in 1948. This increase was accounted for by a gain in employment of 2% and an over-all rise in wage rates estimated at slightly under 5%. Per capita weekly earnings, excluding agriculture, were estimated at about $43, compared to the 1948 average of $40.

Towards the end of the year, earnings showed a tendency to level off. Wage settlements generally showed provision for smaller increases in wage rates. As well, the easing of the labour market tended to retard the upward movement of wage rates in the unorganized sections of the labour market, such as agriculture.

Changes in hours worked per week had little effect on labour income in the aggregate, although short-time work was of significance in certain industries and a reduction of the standard work week was evident in others. On the whole, the number of hours worked per week in manufacturing during the year showed little change, the average of 42·9 being down fractionally from the figure of 43·2 for 1948.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

When goods are exported (unless they are given away) they give rise to payments or debts in favour of Canada. Similarly, when goods are imported they give rise to payments or debts in favour of the rest of the world. Other transactions, such as interest and dividend payments, the tourist trade, freight and shipping charges, also give rise to similar payments or debts in either direction. The difference between the debits and credits arising from these current transactions is referred to as the net balance of international payments on current account. When total credits exceed total debits within a year, the rest of the world has gone into debt to Canada or Canada has paid off some of her debt to the rest of the world. When total debits exceed total credits, the net position is, of course, reversed.

TABLE 12

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

ESTIMATED CURRENT ACCOUNT BETWEEN CANADA AND ALL COUNTRIES

(Millions of Canadian dollars)

—	1939	1947	1948	1949[1]
CURRENT CREDITS
Exports (adjusted)	906	2,723	3,030	2,988
Non-monetary gold	184	99	119	139
Tourist expenditures	149	251	282	288
Interest and dividends	57	62	70	73
Freight and shipping	102	322	337	310
Inheritances and immigrants' funds	{ 59 }	69	83	64
Other current receipts		220	218	210
Total Credits	1,457	3,746	4,139	4,072
CURRENT DEBITS
Imports (adjusted)	713	2,535	2,598	2,686
Tourist expenditures	81	167	132	191
Interest and dividends	306	337	325	390
Freight and shipping	119	278	275	257
Inheritances and emigrants' funds	{ 112 }	49	49	49
Other current payments		333	307	306
Total Debits	1,331	3,699	3,686	3,879
NET BALANCE ON CURRENT ACCOUNT	+126	+47	+453	+193

ESTIMATED GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE NET BALANCE ON CURRENT ACCOUNT

—	1939	1947	1948	1949
Between Canada and—
United States	−116	−1,135	−401	−604
United Kingdom	+137	+633	+488	+445
Rest of sterling area	+39	+241	+129	+145
E.R.P. countries	{ +66 }	+274	+229	+182
Other countries		+34	+8	+25
All countries	+126	+47	+453	+193

[1] Estimates for 1949 are tentative and subject to significant alteration.

Canada's net surplus on current account of $193 million in 1949 was $260 million less than in 1948. The change is split evenly between commodity trade and other current transactions. About $190 million of the change is the result of an increase in Canadian payments, very largely in payments to the United States, arising from increased imports from that country. The other $70 million of the change is the result of a decrease in Canadian receipts, chiefly in receipts from E.R.P. countries other than the United Kingdom, and resulted mainly from a reduction in exports to those countries. There was very little change from 1948 to 1949 in either the value of exports to or of imports from the countries of the sterling area (including the United Kingdom); consequently Canada's surplus on current account with the sterling area was substantially the same as in the previous year.

Compared with 1948 there were in 1949 considerably increased exports of wheat, newsprint, non-ferrous metals, and a few types of fully manufactured goods, and substantially reduced exports of other agricultural products, especially of meats, of most other forest products, and of manufactured goods generally. Export prices were slightly higher in 1949 than in 1948 and the volume of exports in 1949 was lower than in 1948 by some 3%.

An appreciable decline occurred in imports of coal and petroleum. Otherwise imports generally were higher, including large increases in fruits and vegetables and motor vehicles and parts. Import prices were slightly higher in 1949 and there appears to have been little change in the volume of imports.

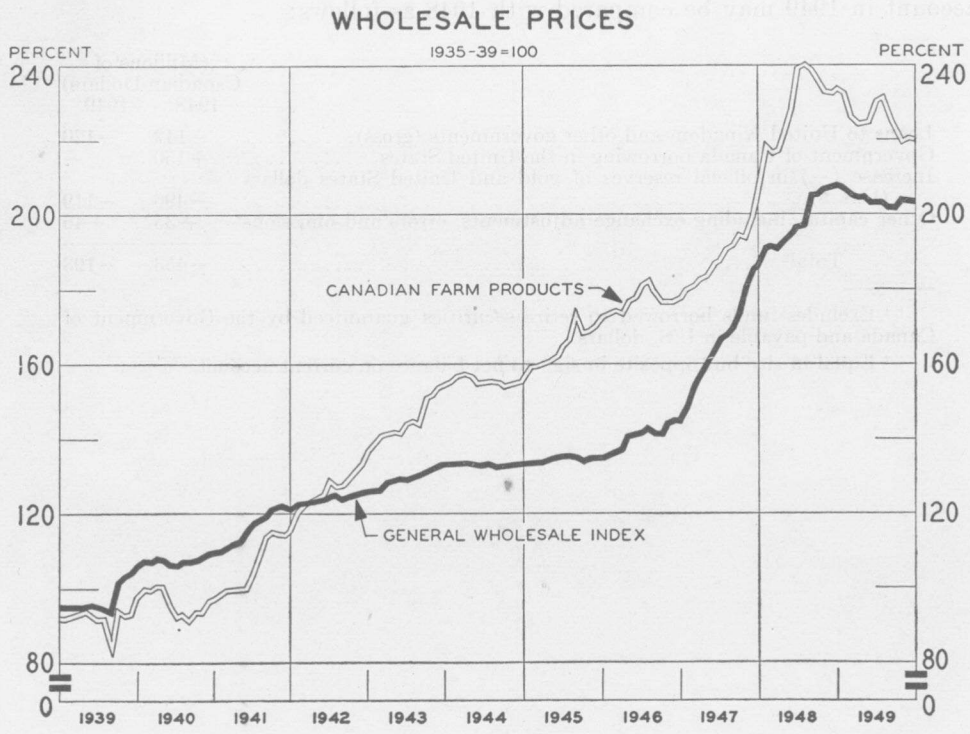
The available detail of Canada's international transactions on capital account in 1949 may be compared with 1948 as follows:

	(Millions of Canadian Dollars) 1948	1949
Loans to United Kingdom and other governments (gross)	−142	−120
Government of Canada borrowing in the United States	+150	—[1]
Increase (−) in official reserves of gold and United States dollars (U.S. $)	−496	−119
Other capital, including exchange adjustments, errors and omissions	+35	+46
Total[2]	−453	−193

[1] Excludes funds borrowed to retire securities guaranteed by the Government of Canada and payable in U.S. dollars.

[2] Equal in size but opposite in sign to net balance on current account.

TABLE 13



CANADA'S HOLDINGS OF GOLD AND U.S. DOLLARS

(millions of U.S. dollars)

—	Exchange Fund Account and Bank of Canada		Other Government of Canada Accounts	Private (2)	Total
	Gold	U.S. dollars	U.S. dollars	U.S dollars	Gold and U.S. dollars
Sept. 15, 1939	204·9	33·8	22·4	132	393·1
Dec. 31, 1939	218·0	54·8	33·4	98	404·2
Dec. 31, 1940	136·5	172·8	20·8	2	332·1
Dec. 31, 1941	135·9	28·2	23·5	.....	187·6
Dec. 31, 1942	154·9	88·0	75·6	.....	318·5
Dec. 31, 1943	224·4	348·8	76·4	.....	649·6
Dec. 31, 1944	293·9	506·2	102·1	.....	902·2
Dec. 31, 1945	353·9	922·0	232·1	.....	1,508·0
Dec. 31, 1946	536·0	686·3	22·6	.....	1,244·9
Dec. 31, 1947	286·6	171·8	43·3	.....	501·7
Dec. 31, 1948	401·3	574·5	22·0	.....	997·8
Dec. 31, 1949	486·4	594·1	(1) 36·6	.....	1,117·1

(1) Not including $18·2 million in United States dollars borrowed by the Government of Canada in August, 1949, and set aside for the retirement on February 1, 1950, of a security issue guaranteed by it and payable at the holder's option in United States dollars.

(2) Exclusive of working balances.

PRICE TRENDS

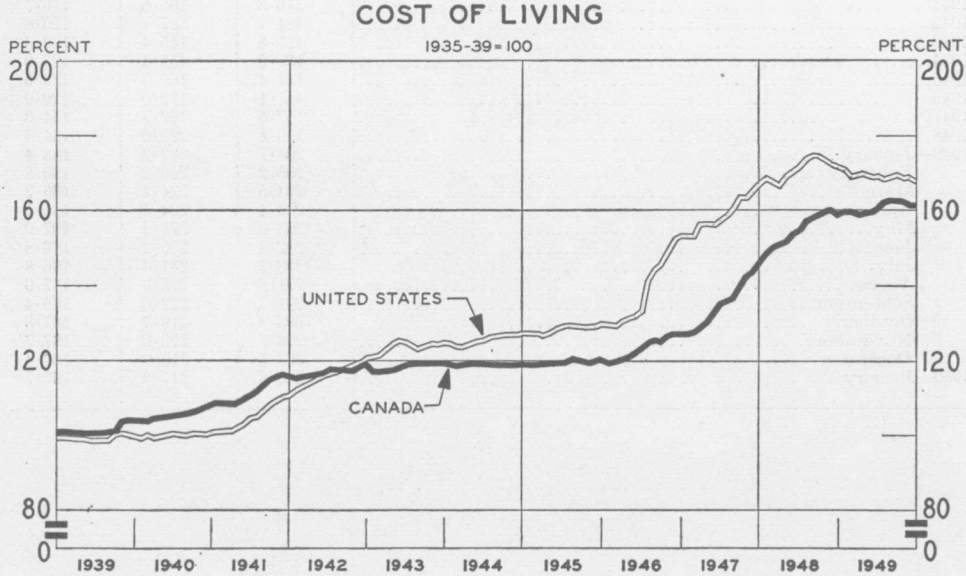
Taking the year as a whole, price levels in Canada in 1949 were higher than in 1948. The year ended, however, with the indexes of both general wholesale prices and the cost of living several points below the postwar peak.

General wholesale prices reached their highest point in December 1948 at a level about double 1939. Subsequently there has been a decline of about 2%. The prices of Canadian farm products reached their peak somewhat earlier—in July of 1948—at a level more than two and a half times the 1939 average and have since declined by about 9%.

The decline in agricultural prices found its reflection in a decline in food prices to consumers, which form a high proportion of the items included in the cost-of-living index. As a result, in spite of rising rents, the cost-of-living index is now about 1% below its peak of August 1949. However, rent increases which took place under the recent changes in rentals regulations are not yet recorded in the official index.

TABLE 14

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEXES
(1935–39 = 100)



Monthly Averages	Total	Canadian Farm Products	Fully and Chiefly Manufactured Goods
1939	97·8	92·6	99·0
1940	107·6	96·1	107·1
1941	116·8	106·6	116·7
1942	124·1	127·1	120·8
1943	129·8	145·4	122·4
1944	133·0	155·3	123·0
1945	134·4	165·3	123·6
1946	141·1	177·0	129·9
1947	167·5	189·7	154·3
1948	199·1	229·6	184·4
1949—January	206·7	232·2	188·4
February	205·2	226·2	186·8
March	204·5	224·2	185·2
April	204·4	224·5	186·6
May	203·0	225·2	187·0
June	202·8	230·2	186·8
July	203·2	231·4	186·8
August	201·8	225·9	187·0
September	201·7	222·6	186·4
October	203·9	219·7	187·8
November	203·7	220·0	187·7
December	203·5	219·9	187·4
1950—January	203·8	217·2	187·7

TABLE 15

COST OF LIVING INDEXES

(1935-39=100)

Monthly Averages	Canada		United States
	Total	Food	Total	Food
1939	101·5	100·6	99·4	95·2
1940	105·6	105·6	100·2	96·6
1941	111·7	116·1	105·2	105·5
1942	117·0	127·2	116·5	123·9
1943	118·4	130·7	123·6	138·0
1944	118·9	131·3	125·5	136·1
1945	119·5	133·0	128·4	139·1
1946	123·6	140·4	139·3	159·6
1947	135·5	159·5	159·2	193·8
1948	155·0	195·5	171·2	210·2
1949—January	159·6	202·2	170·9	204·8
February	159·5	200·4	169·0	199·7
March	159·2	199·1	169·5	201·6
April	159·3	198·5	169·7	202·8
May	159·5	199·5	169·2	202·4
June	160·5	202·9	169·6	204·3
July	162·1	207·2	168·5	201·7
August	162·8	209·2	168·8	202·6
September	162·3	207·0	169·6	204·2
October	162·2	205·0	168·5	200·6
November	161·7	203·3	168·6	200·8
December	161·5	201·9	167·5	197·3
1950—January	161·0	199·4	166·9	196·0

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1949–50

INDEX

	PAGE
1. Introduction	26
2. Summary of Governmental Financial Operations during the year	26
3. Summary of the 1949–50 Revenue and Expenditure Statement	27
4. Analysis of Revenues	30
5. Comparison of Actual Revenue with Budget Forecast	37
6. Analysis of Expenditures	38
7. Estimated Balance Sheet Position at March 31, 1950	44
8. Analysis of Changes in Principal Liability Classifications	46
9. Summary of Security Issues and Redemptions	46
10. Analysis of Changes in Principal Asset Classifications	50
11. Indirect or Contingent Liabilities	53
12. Supplementary Detailed Tables	55

55946—84½

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1949-50

1. Introduction

1. The figures appearing in this part must be regarded as necessarily preliminary and subject to revision. Although the Government's fiscal year ends on March 31, the books must remain open for several weeks after that date in order to record various adjusting entries, as well as all payments up to April 30 made on account of expenditures originating in, and properly chargeable to, the current fiscal year. For these reasons final figures for the current year will not be available for some considerable time.

2. SUMMARY OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING THE YEAR

2. Total revenues of the Government for the year ending March 31, 1950, are now estimated at $2,548 million. Expenditures, on the other hand, are estimated at $2,437 million. On the basis of these figures it would appear that the Government's accounting or budgetary surplus for the current year will probably total something in the neighbourhood of $111 million compared with $595·5 million for the year ended March 31, 1949. As a result of the current year's estimated surplus of $111 million, the Government's net debt (i.e. the excess of total liabilities over total active assets) will reflect a reduction of an equivalent amount.

3. In addition to collecting revenues and making expenditures in the narrow accounting or budgetary sense of those terms, the Government also receives and disburses substantial amounts of cash in other ways. These other receipts and disbursements relate to transactions which give rise to increases or decreases in the Government's assets and liabilities, and they do not, therefore, appear in what might be called the Government's income account for the year, nor do they enter into the calculation of the Government's annual surplus or deficit. In 1949-50 the total of these other disbursements exceeded the total of other receipts, and a large part of the cash provided by the 1949-50 surplus had to be used to finance the difference. The balance of cash available for the reduction of funded debt was, therefore, considerably reduced.

4. The following summary shows the nature and extent of these non-income account transactions and their effect upon the Government's net cash position. The figures indicate that although a total cash sum of $287 million became available to the Government as a result of the current year's budgetary surplus, this was reduced to an over-all "cash surplus" of only $67 million after financing the large cash requirements on non-income account.

	(millions)
Net cash balance arising from the current year's budgetary surplus (i.e., budgetary surplus of $111 million adjusted for non-cash items)*.			$287
Add other receipts—
Increases in annuity, pension, insurance and guaranty accounts.....		$ 99
Increases in floating debt, deposit and trust accounts, deferred credits and sundry suspense accounts.....		71
Repayments of loans—
By Canadian National Railways.....	$20
By provincial and municipal governments.....	4
By Crown agencies and others.....	6
	30		200
			$487

Deduct other disbursements—
Advances to the Foreign Exchange Control Board	160
Loans to the United Kingdom and other governments (net)	104
Loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	100
Loans to the National Harbours Board	20
Increases in other loans and investments (net)	25
Acquisition of sinking funds	1
Increases in Canada's subscriptions to the capital of the International Monetary Fund and of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development	3
Cost of loan flotations (portion to be amortized)	7
		420
Cash surplus—i.e., balance available for debt reduction		$ 67

5. As shown above the total of other receipts during the year amounted to $200 million, while the total of other disbursements amounted to no less than $420 million. The Government nevertheless reduced its outstanding funded debt by a net cash amount of $486 million. This reduction in funded debt was made possible through the sale of bonds out of the Securities Investment Account. This account is the one used to record temporary holdings by the Government of its own securities, such securities being held as a temporary investment of surplus cash balances.

6. A reconciliation between the "cash surplus" of $67 million, the net cash reduction in funded debt of $486 million and the net change in the Government's cash position during the year, is shown below:

	(millions)
Cash surplus—i.e. excess of total receipts from all sources over total disbursements	$ 67
Add—net sales of securities from Securities Investment Account	430
	$497
Deduct—net cash reduction in funded debt	$486
Net increase in cash balances during the year (i.e. balance sheet increase of $13 million less $2 million of an increase effected through revaluation of currencies)	$ 11

* To calculate the amount of cash made available to the Government as a result of the current year's surplus there must be added back to the accounting or budgetary surplus figure of $111 million the following items included in total expenditure which did not involve current outlays of cash: provision for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets, $75 million; provision for conditional benefits under The Veterans' Land Act, $7 million; the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, $10 million; assumption of part of Newfoundland's debt in accordance with Terms of Union, $62 million (after deducting sinking fund); and adjustments in various assets and liabilities consequent upon the revaluation of currencies on September 19, 1949, $22 million.

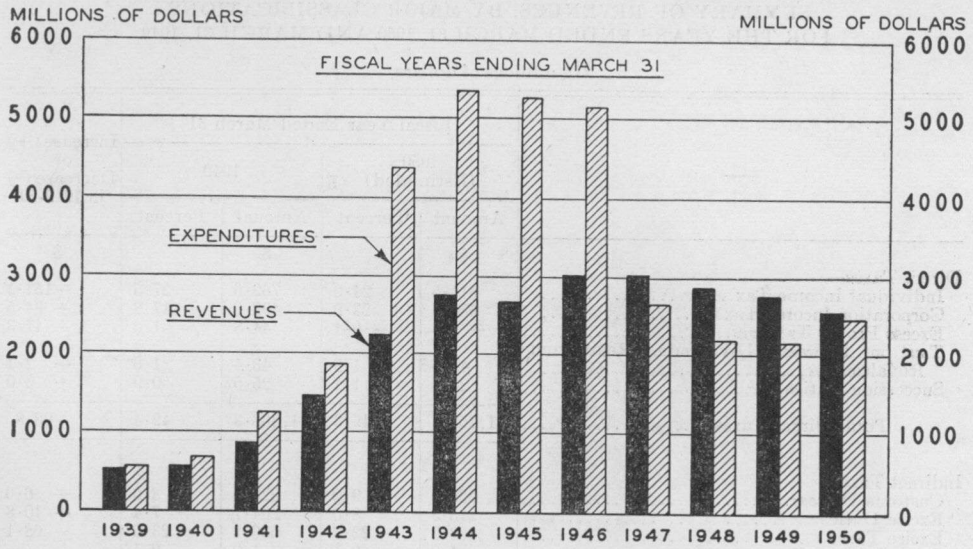
3. SUMMARY OF THE 1949-50 REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE STATEMENT

7. The table which follows gives a summarized statement of revenues and expenditures for the year ended March 31, 1950, with comparable figures for the four preceding fiscal years. More detailed tables, in comparative form, may be found at the end of this Appendix.

The Budget—Appendix

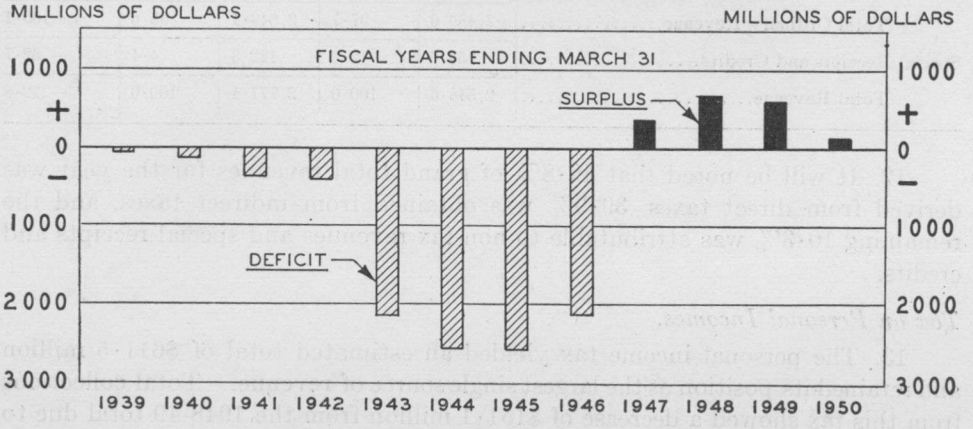
SUMMARY OF REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

(In millions of dollars)



—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31
	1946	1947	1948	1949	Estimated 1950
	$	$	$	$	$
Revenues
Ordinary revenues	2,363·2	2,588·5	2,629·8	2,649·1	2,489·0
Capital refunds	0·4	0·1	0·1	0·1	.....
Special receipts and other credits	649·6	419·3	241·8	122·2	59·6
Total Revenues	3,013·2	3,007·9	2,871·7	2,771·4	2,548·6
Expenditures
Ordinary expenditures	1,061·9	1,236·2	1,380·0	1,573·4	1,712·2
Capital expenditures	4·5	11·2	15·7	18·5	24·2
War, demobilization and reconversion expenditures	4,002·9	1,314·8	634·4	425·6	464·1
Special expenditures	17·4	31·9	63·1	34·8	40·8
Government-owned enterprises	1·3	10·7	18·7	39·7	52·3
Other charges, including the write down of assets	48·2	29·4	83·7	83·9	143·9
Total Expenditures	5,136·2	2,634·2	2,195·6	2,175·9	2,437·5
Budgetary Surplus or Deficit (−)	−2,123·0	373·7	676·1	595·5	111·1

8. Total revenues, estimated at $2,548 million for 1949-50, are expected to show a decrease of $223 million from the total for the previous fiscal year. Total expenditures, on the other hand, are estimated at $2,438 million, an increase of $262 million over the total for 1948-49.



9. Ordinary revenues are estimated at $2,489 million, a reduction of $160 million from the total for the previous year. The total of $60 million for special receipts and credits represents a decrease of $62 million from the total of $122 million received in 1948-49. The reduction in these receipts, which consists largely of refunds of previous years' war, demobilization and reconversion expenditures and sales of surplus Crown assets, continues to reflect the normal decline which is to be expected in revenues from this source.

10. On the expenditure side, all categories contributed to the over-all increase of $262 million. The total of ordinary expenditures increased by $139 million (from $1,573 million in 1948-49 to $1,712 million in 1949-50) and was attributable largely to increases of $26·7 million in family allowances, $27·2 million in old age pensions and pensions to blind persons and $21·9 million in premium, discount and exchange expenditures. The total for demobilization and reconversion expenditures, more than half of which represents defence costs, increased by $38 million (from $426 million in 1948-49 to $464 million in the current year). Other charges, including the write-down of assets, reflect an increase of $60 million from $84 million in 1948-49 to $144 million in 1949-50. The remainder is accounted for by increases of $6 million in capital expenditures, $13 million in government-owned enterprises, and $6 million in special expenditures.

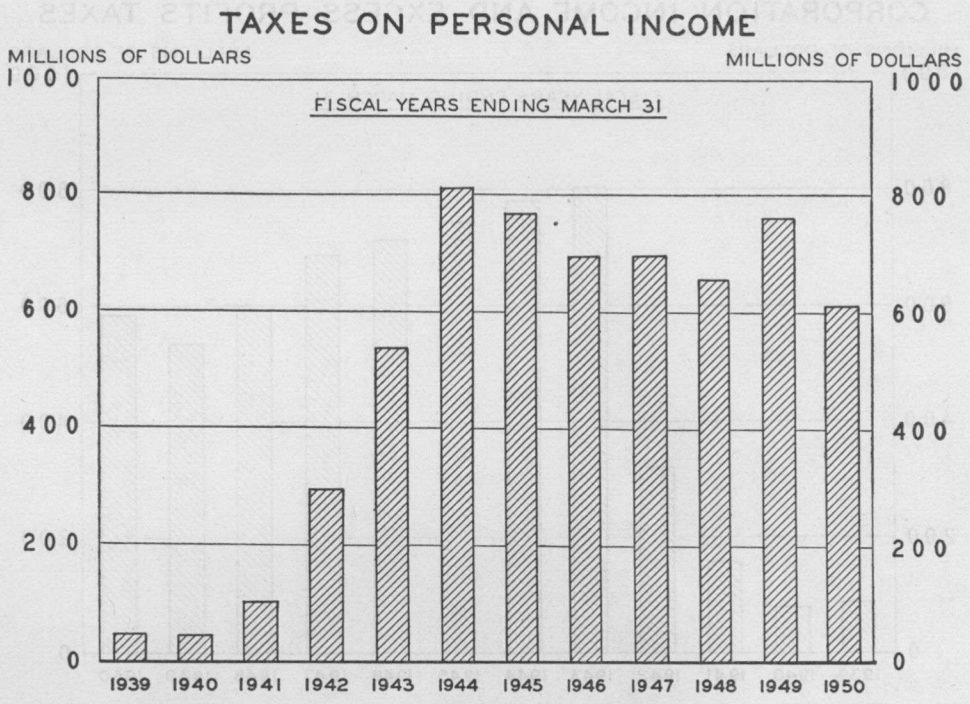
BUDGETARY REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

BUDGETARY SURPLUS OR DEFICIT

4. ANALYSIS OF REVENUES

11. Estimated revenues for the year 1949-50, classified according to major categories, are presented in the following table, along with corresponding figures for the previous fiscal year.

SUMMARY OF REVENUES, BY MAJOR CLASSIFICATIONS, FOR THE YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1950 AND MARCH 31, 1949



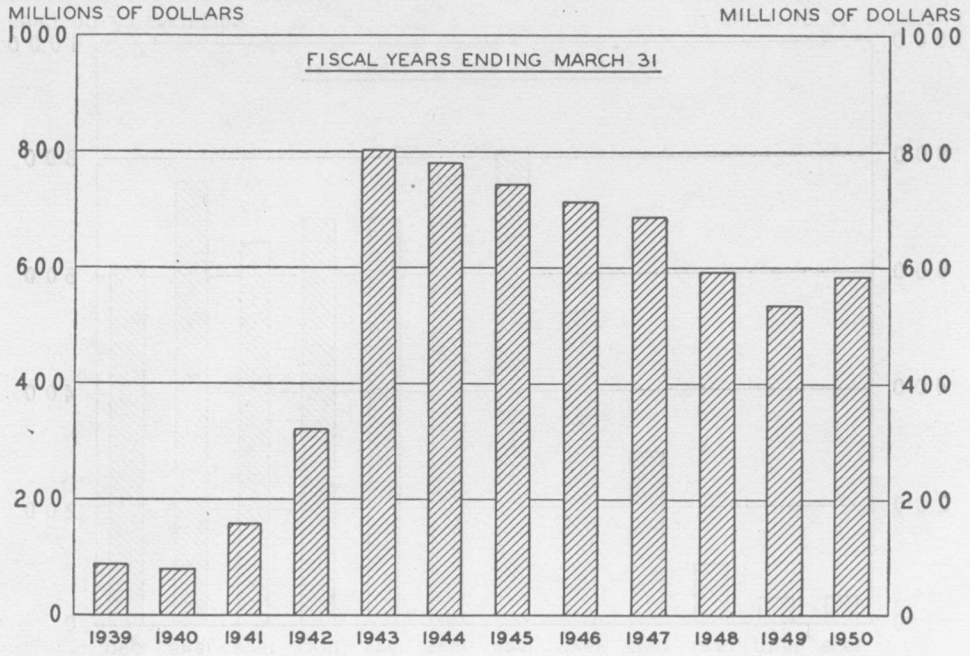
(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31				Increase (+) or Decrease (-) in 1949-50
	1950 (Estimated)		1949
	Amount	Percent	Amount	Percent
	$		$		$
Direct Taxes—
Individual Income Tax	611·5	24·0	762·6	27·5	−151·1
Corporation Income Tax	586·5	23·0	492·0	17·8	+ 94·5
Excess Profits Taxes	− 2·5	− 0·1	44·8	1·6	− 47·3
Tax on Interest, Dividends, Rents and Royalties	45·5	1·8	43·4	1·6	+ 2·1
Succession Duties	28·5	1·1	25·5	0·9	+ 3·0
Total Direct Taxes	1,269·5	49·8	1,368·3	49·4	−98·8
Indirect Taxes—
Customs Duties	229·0	9·0	223·0	8·0	+ 6·0
Excise Duties	215·5	8·5	204·7	7·4	+ 10·8
Excise Taxes	568·0	22·3	636·1	23·0	− 68·1
Other Indirect Taxes	4·0	0·1	4·0	0·1	—
Total Indirect Taxes	1,016·5	39·9	1,067·8	38·5	− 51·3
Non-Tax Revenue—
Post Office	84·0	3·3	80·6	2·9	+ 3·4
Return on Investments	90·4	3·6	107·9	3·9	− 17·5
Other Non-Tax Revenue	28·6	1·1	24·5	0·9	+ 4·1
Total Non-Tax Revenue	203·0	8·0	213·0	7·7	− 10·0
Total Ordinary Revenue	2,489·0	97·7	2,649·1	95·6	−160·1
Special Receipts and Credits	59·6	2·3	122·3	4·4	− 62·7
Total Revenue	2,548·6	100·0	2,771·4	100·0	−222·8

12. It will be noted that 49·8% of grand total revenues for the year was derived from direct taxes, 39·9% was obtained from indirect taxes, and the remaining 10·3% was attributable to non-tax revenues and special receipts and credits.

Tax on Personal Incomes.

13. The personal income tax yielded an estimated total of $611·5 million and retained its position as the largest single source of revenue. Total collections from this tax showed a decrease of $151·1 million from the 1948-49 total due to the reduction in tax rates announced in March, 1949, effective from January 1, 1949. The full effect of this reduction in rates was not apparent in 1949-50, because of substantial payments received during the fiscal year in respect of 1948 and previous taxation years, and also because tax deductions at the source continued for a period at the higher rates.



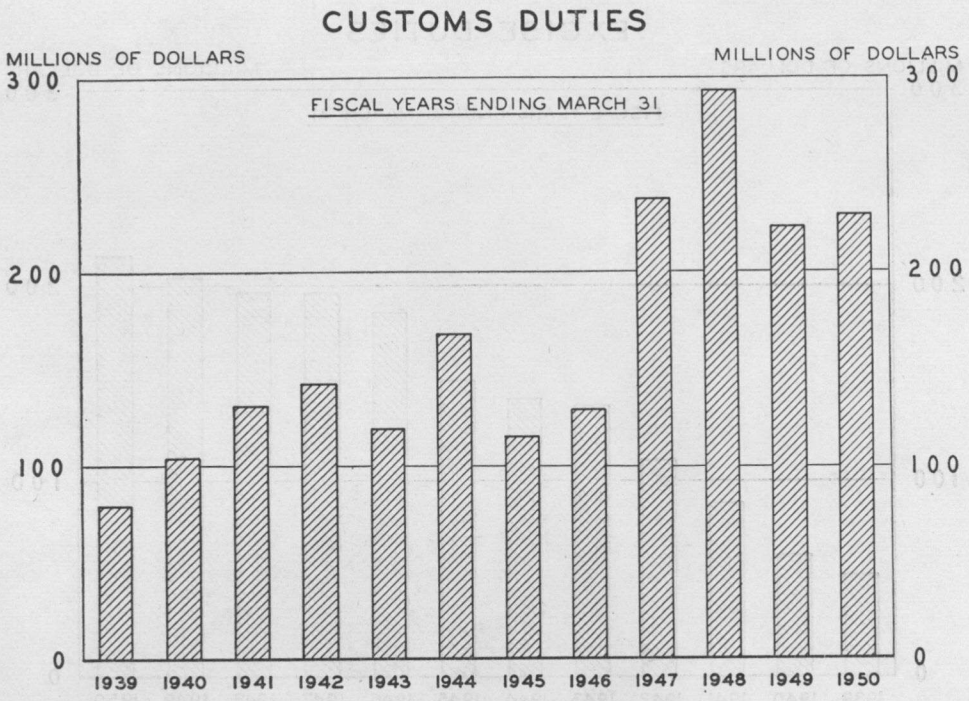
Corporation Income and Excess Profits Taxes.

14. Corporation income taxes yielded a total of $586·5 million, an increase of $94·5 million over the previous year's total. This increase is attributable to the decline during the year in tax refunds and adjustments in connection with the re-negotiation of war contracts, and apparently to somewhat higher profits in 1949.

The excess profits tax ceased to be levied on profits earned after December 31, 1947. Small clean-up payments were received during the year but were exceeded by refunds and adjustments.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS PROFITS TAXES

Taxes on Interest, Dividends, Rents and Royalties.

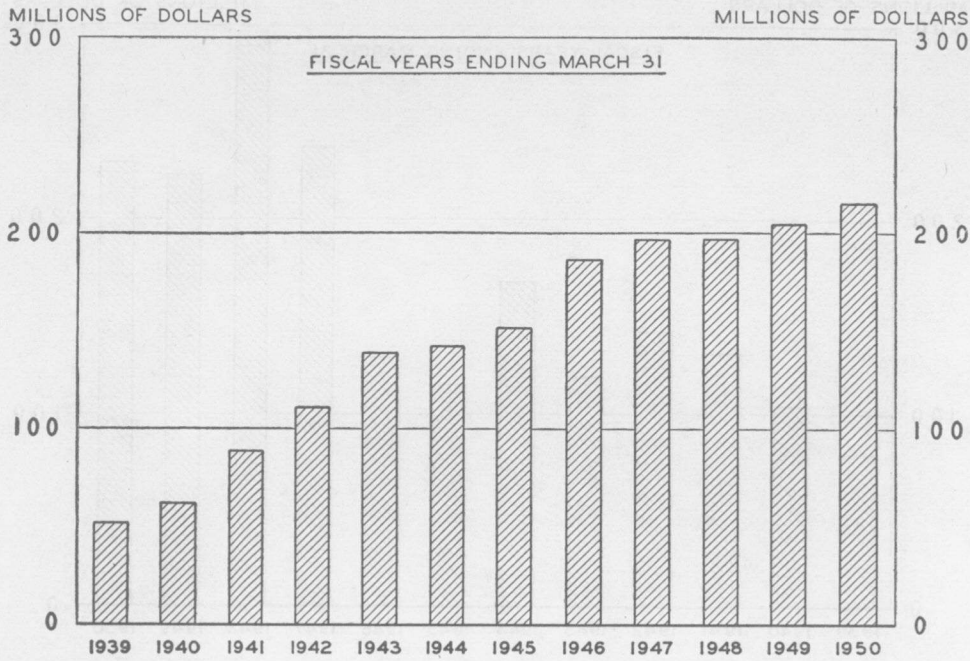


15. Revenues under this heading come from withholding taxes on certain payments made to non-residents. The 1949-50 total of $45·5 million is approximately $2·1 million greater than for the previous year, an increase largely due to a higher level of dividend payments during 1949.

Succession Duties.

16. Revenue from succession duties is estimated at $28·5 million for 1949-50. This is an increase of $3·0 million over the previous year's total.

Customs Duties.



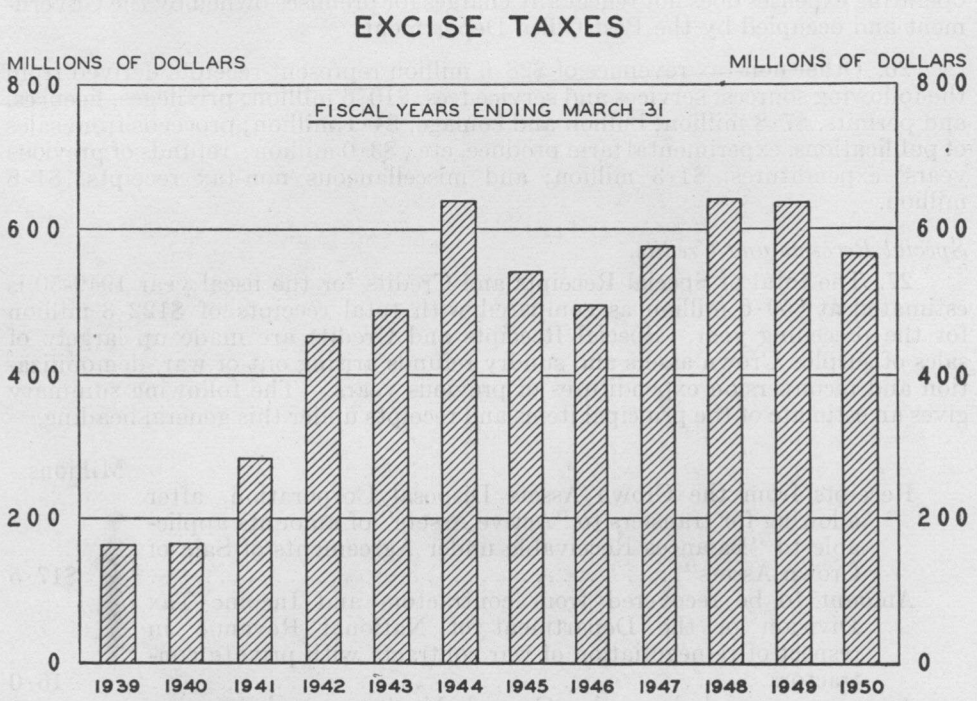
17. Net revenues from customs duties for the current year are estimated at $229·0 million, representing a moderate increase of $6·0 million over the 1948-49 total.

Excise Duties.

18. Excise duties are levied exclusively on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. In 1949-50 they yielded an estimated total revenue of $215·5 million, an increase of approximately $10·8 million over the previous year. Gross receipts from these duties, before deducting refunds, are divided as follows: $104·5 million from alcoholic beverages ($101·1 million in 1948-49), and $114·0 million from tobacco products ($106·2 million in 1948-49).

EXCISE DUTIES

Excise Taxes.



19. Excise taxes are levied on a variety of items under the Excise Tax Act. Total net collections for the year are estimated at $568·0 million, a reduction of about $68·1 million from 1948-49. The most important of these taxes in terms of revenue is the sales tax, which yielded a gross revenue of $415·5 million, an increase of $25·3 million over the previous year. This increase took place despite the fact that during the year fuel oils were added to the list of exempt items.

20. The second largest revenue source among the excise taxes is the tax on tobacco products which yielded approximately $83·4 million. This is an increase of 7·3% over the previous year's total reflecting the continued upward trend in tobacco consumption. Other tax sources showing small amounts of increase during the year were cigarette papers and tubes ($71,000) and wines ($110,000).

21. Despite these increases the over-all yield from excise taxes was reduced from the preceding year by the elimination, or reduction in rates, of taxes on a number of commodities and services. The taxes on beverages, candy and chewing gum, transportation tickets and communications were all repealed on March 22, 1949, and only yielded clean-up amounts during the year. The taxes on toilet articles, luggage, matches and lighters, smokers' supplies, and pens and pencils, were all reduced to 10% on March 22, 1949, and as a result yielded sharply reduced revenue during the year. The change of the retail purchase tax to a 10% tax at the manufacturer's level resulted in a lower yield from this source. The revenue from the tax on automobiles and rubber tires and tubes also showed a decline from the previous year. This occurred because the revenue from this source in the previous year reflected in part the temporary high tax rates imposed on automobiles up until the end of July, 1948, as part of the exchange conservation program.

22. The tax sources showing the largest decrease, and the amount of the decrease in each case, are given below:

	Estimated decrease from 1948-49
Beverages	$26,059,000
Transportation and communications	25,084,000
Candy and chewing gum	18,868,000
Toilet preparations and soaps	3,337,000
Trunks, bags, luggage, etc.	3,275,000
Automobiles, rubber tires and tubes	2,743,000
Matches and lighters	2,332,000

Other Indirect Taxes.

23. Small amounts of tax revenue were derived from the tax on chartered bank note circulation; from the tax on the net premium income of insurance companies; from a tax on the export of electric energy from Canada; and from a tax on the export of furs from the Northwest Territories. Total revenue from all these sources in 1949-50 is estimated at $4·0 million, about the same as the previous year.

Non-Tax Revenues.

24. Non-tax revenues for 1949-50 are estimated at $203·0 million, a decrease of $10 million from the 1948-49 total. Revenue classified as "Return on Investments", is expected to reach $90·4 million in 1949-50 as compared with a total of $107·9 million in 1948-49. The larger items entering into total receipts under this classification are: interest on advances to the Canadian National Railways, $21·8 million; Bank of Canada profits, $20·4 million; interest on loans to, and operating profits of, the Foreign Exchange Control Board, $16·0 million; interest on bonds held in Securities Investment Account, $5·6 million; interest on loans to foreign governments under part II of The Export Credits Insurance Act, $15·0 million; and interest on advances under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act, $3·5 million.

25. Also included in the general category of non-tax revenues are post office receipts, which are estimated at $84·0 million for 1949-50 as compared with a total of $80·6 million during 1948-49. It may be of interest to note that the total costs of operating the Post Office Department during the year are estimated at $83·1 million, so that receipts on this account exceeded costs by approximately $0·9 million. In making this comparison, however, it should be borne in mind that the total shown for Post Office receipts does not reflect the value of services rendered free of charge to other departments. Similarly the total shown for operating expenses does not reflect any charges for premises owned by the Government and occupied by the Post Office Department.

26. Other non-tax revenues of $28·6 million represent receipts derived from the following sources: services and service fees, $10·6 million; privileges, licences, and permits, $7·8 million; bullion and coinage, $4·1 million; proceeds from sales of publications, experimental farm produce, etc., $3·0 million; refunds of previous years' expenditures, $1·3 million; and miscellaneous non-tax receipts, $1·8 million.

Special Receipts and Credits.

27. The total of Special Receipts and Credits for the fiscal year 1949-50 is estimated at $59·6 million as compared with total receipts of $122·3 million for the preceding year. Special Receipts and Credits are made up largely of sales of surplus Crown assets and sundry refunds arising out of war, demobilization and reconversion expenditures of previous years. The following summary gives an estimate of the principal items and receipts under this general heading,—

	Millions
Receipts from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, after allowing for transfers to "Active Assets" of amounts applicable to "Balances Receivable under Agreements of Sale of Crown Assets"	$17·5
Amount to be recovered from contractors and Income Tax Division of the Department of National Revenue in respect of re-negotiation of war contracts with private contractors	16·0
Amount received from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation representing a sum in excess of the $5 million reserve fund established by the Company	6·5
Payments by foreign governments in settlement of military relief supplies	8·7
Amount to be credited to revenue in connection with Park Steamship Company Limited vessels chartered by the United Kingdom Government	2·7
Estimated surplus of the Canadian Arsenals Limited	2·0
Rental of land and buildings, revenue from meals and quarters and sundry receipts received by the Department of National Defence	3·3
Miscellaneous receipts, sundry departments	2·9
	$ 59·6

5. COMPARISON OF ACTUAL REVENUE WITH BUDGET FORECAST

28. The total revenues now estimated for the year 1949-50 will be only $3·6 million more than the revised forecast of revenues made in the budget speech of October 20, 1949. The revenues from sales tax, personal income tax and corporation income tax proved more buoyant than expected last March. By October it was possible to make a more accurate estimate and the revenues actually received during the year from all sources are quite close to the forecast made at that time.

DETAILED STATEMENT OF BUDGET FORECAST COMPARED WITH ACTUAL REVENUE FOR 1949–50

(in millions of dollars)

Source of Revenue	Budget Forecast of Revenue (Oct. 20, 1949)	Actual Revenue (Estimated)	Increase (+) or Decrease (−) in Revenue as Compared with Budget Forecast
Customs import duties	235·0	229·0	−6·0
Excise duties	215·0	215·5	+0·5
Sales tax (net)	406·0	404·1	−1·9
Other excise taxes	168·0	163·9	−4·1
Personal income tax	603·0	611·5	+8·5
Corporation income tax	588·0	586·5	−1·5
Interest, dividends, rents, royalties	48·0	45·5	−2·5
Excess profits tax	.....	− 2·5	−2·5
Succession duties	26·0	28·5	+2·5
Miscellaneous taxes	4·0	4·0
Total tax revenue	2,293·0	2,286·0	−7·0
Non-tax revenue	202·0	203·0	+1·0
Total ordinary revenue	2,495·0	2,489·0	−6·0
Special receipts	50·0	59·6	+9·6
Total revenue	2,545·0	2,548·6	+3·6

6. ANALYSIS OF EXPENDITURES

29. The table which follows presents a summary of expenditures, by major classifications, for the fiscal year 1949-50, together with corresponding figures for the previous fiscal year.

SUMMARY OF EXPENDITURES, BY MAJOR CLASSIFICATIONS, FOR THE YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1950, AND MARCH 31, 1949

(in millions of dollars)

——	Fiscal Year Ended March 31				Increase or Decrease (−)
	1950 (Estimated)		1949
	Amount	Per Cent	Amount	Per Cent
ORDINARY EXPENDITURE—
Public Debt Charges—
Interest on Public Debt	439·2	18·0	465·1	21·4	−25·9
Other Debt Charges	10·5	0·4	9·7	0·4	0·8
	449·7	18·4	474·8	21·8	−25·1
Subsidies and Compensation to Provinces under Tax Agreements (including Transitional Grant to Newfoundland)	103·9	4·3	101·4	4·7	2·5
Family Allowances	297·6	12·2	270·9	12·5	26·7
Old Age Pensions and Pensions to Blind Persons	94·0	3·9	66·8	3·1	27·2
Unemployment Insurance Act—
Administration and Government's Contribution	46·5	1·9	39·1	1·8	7·4
Premium, Discount and Exchange	22·0	0·9	0·1	.....	21·9
Agriculture	25·0	1·0	20·4	0·9	4·6
Citizenship and Immigration	18·3	0·8	.....	.....	18·3
Mines and Resources	.....	.....	46·3	2·1	−46·3
Mines and Technical Surveys	22·9	0·9	.....	.....	22·9
National Revenue	51·0	2·1	49·3	2·3	1·7
Post Office	83·1	3·4	77·6	3·6	5·5
Public Works	66·8	2·7	50·6	2·3	16·2
Resources and Development	26·1	1·1	.....	.....	26·1
Trade and Commerce	36·3	1·5	26·9	1·2	9·4
Transport	54·7	2·2	41·5	1·9	13·2
Veterans Affairs	175·2	7·2	183·0	8·4	− 7·8
Other Departments	139·1	5·7	124·8	5·7	14·3
Total Ordinary Expenditure	1,712·2	70·2	1,573·4	72·3	138·8
CAPITAL EXPENDITURE	24·2	1·0	18·5	0·8	5·7
DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION EXPENDITURE—
National Defence (Army, Navy and Air Services and Defence Research)	364·5	14·9	254·9	11·7	109·6
Veterans Affairs	52·8	2·2	87·3	4·0	−34·5
Wartime Prices and Trade Board (including subsidies, drawback claims of millers, and administrative costs)	4·0	0·2	29·2	1·3	−25·2
Agriculture	22·5	0·9	23·2	1·1	− 0·7
Trade and Commerce	6·5	0·3	13·8	0·6	− 7·3
Other Departments	13·8	0·6	17·2	0·8	− 3·4
Total Demobilization and Reconversion Expenditure	464·1	19·1	425·6	19·6	38·5
SPECIAL EXPENDITURE	40·8	1·7	34·8	1·6	6·0
GOVERNMENT OWNED ENTERPRISES	52·3	2·1	39·7	1·8	12·6
OTHER CHARGES	143·9	5·9	83·9	3·9	60·0
GRAND TOTAL EXPENDITURE	2,437·5	100·0	2,175·9	100·0	261·6

Ordinary Expenditures

Debt Charges

30. Interest on public debt was again the largest single item of government expenditure, the estimated total of $439·2 million for 1949-50 being 18% of the total expenditure for the year. Of the total interest payments, $408 million represents interest paid on the government's outstanding funded debt, while the balance of $31·2 million represents interest paid or credited to various annuity, superannuation, insurance and trust accounts. The substantial decrease of $25·9 million from 1948-49 is attributable in part to a reduction in the outstanding funded debt and in part to the absence of any payment during 1949-50 comparable to that in 1948-49 for the accumulated interest on the 1943 and 1944 refundable portion of personal income taxes, which were repaid in March, 1949. The reduction of $10·8 million in the payment of interest on the outstanding funded debt, and of $19·1 million on the payment of interest on the refundable portion of personal income taxes, was partially offset by an increase of $4 million in interest paid or credited to the various annuity, superannuation, insurance and trust funds.

31. The annual charges for the amortization of discounts and commissions, for other costs of new loan flotations which are not amortized, and for miscellaneous debt servicing expenses bring the total of all public debt charges for the year to $449·7 million.

Payments to Provinces

32. Payments to provinces for statutory subsidies and compensation under the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements amounted to $103·9 million. The net increase of $2·5 million over the total for the previous year is explained in the following table.

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	(millions of dollars)
All Provinces (excluding Newfoundland)—
Statutory subsidies	17·3	17·1	0·2
Compensation under tax rental agreements	73·4	84·3	−10·9
	90·7	101·4	−10·7
Newfoundland—
Statutory subsidy	1·9	—	1·9
Compensation under tax rental agreement	4·8	—	4·8
Transitional grant	6·5	—	6·5
	13·2	—	13·2
	103·9	101·4	2·5

A reduction of $20·2 million, equivalent to the amount which it is anticipated that the Government will have paid during the year to the seven provinces participating in the 1947 tax rental agreements on account of collections of the provincial 5% corporation taxes, offset by a general increase of $9·3 million in basic payments, accounts for the net decrease of $10·9 million in tax compensation payments.

Details of payments, by provinces, for the current fiscal year are:

—	Statutory Subsidies	Compensation under the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements	Transitional Grant	Total
	(millions of dollars)
Newfoundland	1·9	4·8	6·5	13·2
Nova Scotia	2·0	9·8	—	11·8
Prince Edward Island	0·7	1·8	—	2·5
New Brunswick	1·6	7·6	—	9·2
Quebec	2·9	—	—	2·9
Ontario	3·1	—	—	3·1
Manitoba	1·8	11·0	—	12·8
Saskatchewan	2·1	12·6	—	14·7
Alberta	2·1	12·3	—	14·4
British Columbia	1·0	18·3	—	19·3
	19·2	78·2	6·5	103·9

Family Allowances, Old Age Pensions and Pensions to Blind Persons

33. Payments for family allowances are estimated at $297·6 million for 1949-50, representing approximately 12·2 per cent of the total expenditures for the year. Part of the estimated increase of $26·7 million over the preceding year is attributable to the payment of $9·8 million to residents of Newfoundland. Elimination of the reduction in allowances payable for children after the fourth child, the reduction in the period of residence in Canada required for immigrants and settlers to one year prior to registration, and the natural increase in population in the eligible age groups, account for the remainder of the increase.

34. Expenditures for old age pensions and pensions to blind persons are expected to total $94 million, an increase of approximately $27·2 million over the total for 1948-49. Of the total increase, $2·2 million is attributable to payments to residents of Newfoundland; the remainder is due to an increase from $30 to $40 per month in the basic rate of pension provided in legislation enacted in April, 1949, and to an increase in the numbers receiving aid.

35. The estimated distribution of these payments, by provinces, is as follows:

—	Family Allowances	Old Age Pensions and Pensions to Blind Persons
	(millions of dollars)
Newfoundland	9·8	2·2
Nova Scotia	15·3	6·4
Prince Edward Island	2·4	0·9
New Brunswick	13·4	5·5
Quebec	95·9	23·7
Ontario	84·9	29·1
Manitoba	15·7	5·8
Saskatchewan	19·0	5·6
Alberta	19·8	5·4
British Columbia	20·8	9·4
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0·6	—
	297·6	94·0

Premium, Discount and Exchange

36. The revaluation of the Canadian dollar on September 19, 1949 is chiefly responsible for the increase of $21·9 million in premium, discount and exchange expenditures. Assets and liabilities payable in sterling and United States dollars, previously carried on the balance sheet of Canada at £1 sterling = $4·03 Canadian and $1 U.S. = $1 Canadian, were revalued as of that date to £1 sterling = $3·08 Canadian and $1 U.S. = $1·10 Canadian. An increase of $35·7 million in net indebtedness payable in United States dollars (consisting of an exchange debit of $39·9 million on matured and unmatured funded debt and outstanding interest, less a credit of $4·2 million on cash and securities held in New York) was offset by a decrease of $14·4 million in net indebtedness payable in sterling (consisting of an exchange credit of $19·4 million on matured and unmatured funded debt and outstanding interest, less a debit of $5·0 million on cash and securities held in London).

Citizenship and Immigration
Mines and Technical Surveys
Resources and Development

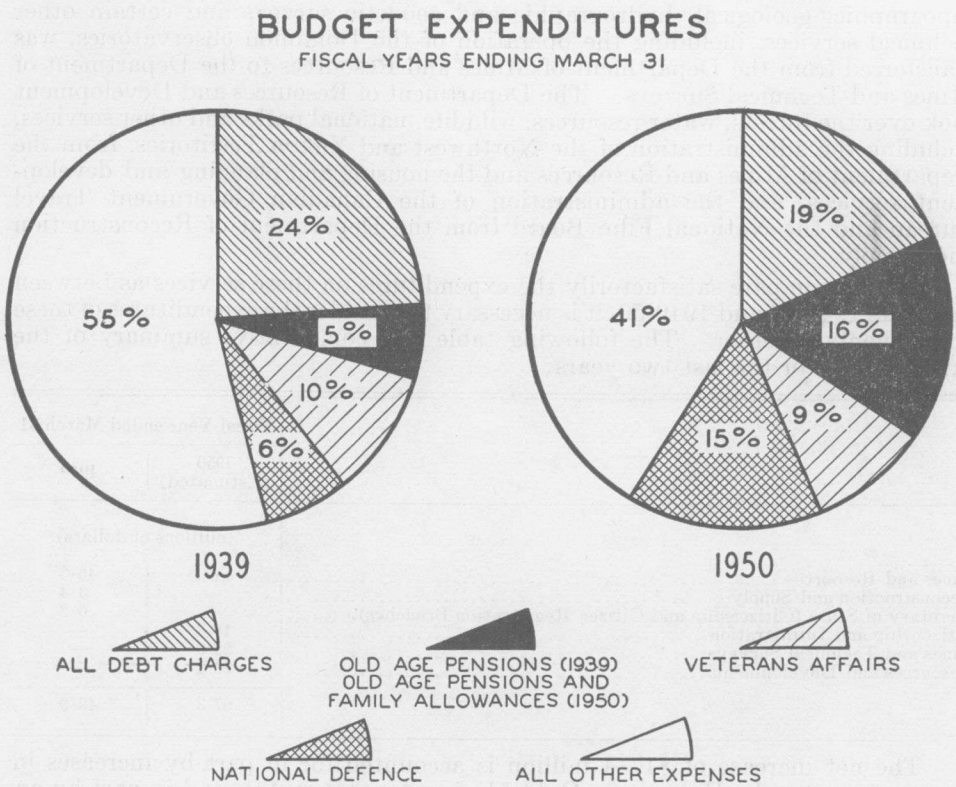
37. During the year the functions and services of the Department of Mines and Resources and the Department of Reconstruction and Supply were transferred to the newly created Departments of Citizenship and Immigration, Mines and Technical Surveys and Resources and Development. The administration of Indian Affairs and Immigration Services was transferred from the Department of Mines and Resources to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which also took over the citizenship and citizen registration services which formerly came under the Secretary of State. The administration of mines, and topographic, geological, hydrographic and geodetic surveys and certain other technical services, including the operation of the Dominion observatories, was transferred from the Department of Mines and Resources to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The Department of Resources and Development took over the forests, water resources, wild life, national parks and other services, including the administration of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, from the Department of Mines and Resources and the housing and planning and development services, and the administration of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau and the National Film Board from the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

38. To compare satisfactorily the expenditures on these services as between the years 1948-49 and 1949-50, it is necessary to consider the expenditures of these departments together. The following table is a comparative summary of the expenditures for the last two years:

—	Fiscal Year ended March 31
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	(millions of dollars)
Mines and Resources	—	46·3
Reconstruction and Supply	—	3·4
Secretary of State (Citizenship and Citizen Registration Branches)	—	0·2
Citizenship and Immigration	18·3	—
Mines and Technical Surveys	22·9	—
Resources and Development	26·1	—
	67·3	49·9

The net increase of $17·4 million is accounted for in part by increases in payments under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and in part by an extension of services and a general increase in service costs.

Public Works



39. Public Works expenditures still reflect the policy in effect during recent years of deliberately deferring, wherever possible, all expenditures on new construction and equipment. There was however an increase of approximately $16·2 million over the total for the preceding year, accounted for by a general increase in operational, maintenance and repair costs for public works and buildings and in the costs of dredging and improving harbours and rivers.

Transport

40. A general expansion of Air Services, with expenditures of $24·1 million in 1949-50 as compared with the total of $15·9 million in the previous year, accounts for the major part of the increase of $13·2 million in the expenditures of the Department of Transport. The remainder is attributable largely to a general increase in the costs of departmental services.

Veterans Affairs

41. The ordinary expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs for 1949-50 are estimated at $175·2 million, a decrease of $7·8 million as compared with the total for the previous year. The greater part of this decrease is attributable to a reduction in payments of pensions to veterans.

CAPITAL EXPENDITURES.

42. Expenditures charged to capital account are estimated at $24·2 million for the fiscal year as compared with a total of $18·5 million for 1948-49. The principal items in this category are the costs of constructing and improving civil airways and airports, the costs of dredging the St. Lawrence ship channel, and expenditures for construction and improvement of terminal facilities for the Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and Terminals.

DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION EXPENDITURES.

43. Demobilization and Reconversion expenditures for 1949-50 are estimated at $464·1 million, an increase of $38·5 million as compared with the total of $425·6 million for the previous year. An increase of $109·6 million in the expenditures of the Department of National Defence for Army, Navy and Air Services and for Defence Research was offset by decreases of $34·5 million for the Department of Veterans Affairs, $25·2 million for Wartime Prices and Trade Board, $7·3 million for the Department of Trade and Commerce, and a total of $4·1 million for other departments.

44. The greater part of the decrease in the demobilization and reconversion expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs is due to substantial reductions of $20 million in post-discharge rehabilitation benefit payments, and $13·3 million in payments of war service gratuities and re-establishment credits.

45. Of the estimated decrease of $25·2 million in the expenditures of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, $14·9 million is accounted for by a decrease in the cost of subsidies, and $9·7 million by a reduction in the amount of payments of drawback claims to millers.

46. Reductions of $2·4 million in payment of production and transportation subsidies for Canadian steel producers, and of $2·6 million in the cost of administration, reconversion and operation of Crown companies and plants, account for the reduction in the demobilization and reconversion expenditure of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

SPECIAL EXPENDITURES.

47. Special expenditures are estimated at $40·8 million for the year, an increase of $6 million compared with the 1948-49 expenditures. Increases of $4·2 million under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for the deficit of the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund and of $7·4 million in agricultural and other projects, are offset by a decrease of $5 million due to the grant in 1948-49 to British Columbia for emergency relief and rehabilitation in connection with the Fraser River flood disaster. The principal items making up the 1949-50 total of expenditures are: the deficit of the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, $12·8 million; expenditures under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, $3 million; the net operating loss of the Agricultural Prices Support Account for 1948-49, in connection with the 1947 and 1948 Nova Scotia apple crops and the 1948 Ontario crop of white beans, $3·5 million; irrigation and water conservation projects in the prairie provinces, $7·1 million; the deficit of the Canadian Wheat Board for 1947 and 1948 flaxseed and 1948 rapeseed operations, etc., $4·6 million; and Canada's share of the cost of repairing and reconstructing dykes and other protection of works in the Fraser Valley, $4·1 million.

GOVERNMENT OWNED ENTERPRISES.

48. Expenditures under this heading consist of the operating deficits of, and non-active loans to, wholly owned governmental enterprises established prior to world war II.

49. The increase of $12·6 million in this category of expenditures as compared with the previous year is accounted for largely by an increase of $8·5 million in the deficit of the Canadian National Railways from $33·5 million for the calendar year 1948 to $42 million for the year 1949. The over-all C.N.R. deficit for the year includes all interest charges paid on government advances. It should be noted, therefore, that although the charges to the government's expenditures for 1949-50 reflect the absorption of the C.N.R.'s total deficit of $42 million, the government's revenues for the year also included, under "Return on Investments", an amount of $21·8 million received from the railways for interest on such advances.

50. Other charges under this classification include $4·3 million for the 1949 operating deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines (as compared with the 1948 deficit of $2·9 million); $1·2 million for the 1949 operating deficit of the Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and Terminals ($1·2 million in 1948) and $4·3 million for losses of, and non-active loans to, the National Harbours Board ($2 million in 1948-49).

OTHER CHARGES, INCLUDING THE WRITE-DOWN OF ASSETS.

51. The total expenditures for the fiscal year in this category are estimated at $143·9 million, an increase of $60 million as compared with the total of $83·9 million for 1948-49. The increase is attributable to the non-recurring charge of $62·3 million in connection with the assumption by Canada of part of the Newfoundland debt in accordance with the Terms of Union.

52. The largest single item is again an amount of $75 million transferred to the general reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets. This reserve was established in 1940-41, and $25 million was set aside annually from that time up to and including the fiscal year 1946-47. In 1947-48, 1948-49 and again this year, the annual provision has been $75 million—the larger provision being deemed advisable to offset the charges that have been made to the reserve during recent years and to establish the reserve at a level commensurate with the government's active assets. The reserve now stands at $320·8 million.

53. Also included under this classification is the reserve provision of $6·6 million for conditional benefits under the Veterans' Land Act.

7. ESTIMATED BALANCE SHEET POSITION AT MARCH 31, 1950

54. The following table presents, in summary form, the Government's estimated balance sheet position as at March 31, 1950, with the comparable figures for March 31, 1949.

SUMMARY OF THE GOVERNMENT'S BALANCE SHEET POSITION AS AT MARCH 31, 1949, AND MARCH 31, 1950

(In millions of dollars)

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	$	$	$
LIABILITIES
Floating Debt	494·2	450·7	43·5
Deposit and Trust Accounts	136·6	107·5	29·1
Annuity, Insurance, Pension and Guaranty Accounts	816·6	718·0	98·6
Deferred Credits	11·7	4·4	7·3
Sundry Suspense Accounts	68·7	59·6	9·1
Province Debt Accounts	11·9	11·9	.....
Reserve for conditional benefits—Veterans' Land Act	19·9	13·3	6·6
Funded Debt	15,191·6	15,585·0	−393·4
Total Liabilities	16,751·2	16,950·4	−199·2
ACTIVE ASSETS
Cash and Other Current Assets	1,428·8	1,660·3	−231·5
Loans to, and Investments in, Crown Agencies	1,163·0	1,058·9	104·1
Other Loans and Investments	2,724·6	2,578·6	146·0
Province Debt Accounts	2·3	2·3	.....
Deferred Charges	62·6	65·8	− 3·2
Sundry Suspense Accounts	25·7	54·2	− 28·5
Total Active Assets	5,407·0	5,420·1	− 13·1
Less reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets	−320·8	−245·8	− 75·0
Net Active Assets	5,086·2	5,174·3	− 88·1
Net Debt (Excess of Liabilities over Net Active Assets)	11,665·0	11,776·1	−111·1

55. The aggregate liabilities of the Government at March 31, 1950, are estimated at $16,751·2 million, a reduction of $199·2 million from the comparable total at the end of the previous year. Unmatured funded debt outstanding, including bonds, treasury bills, deposit certificates and the estimated refundable portion of excess profits taxes, accounts for $15,191·6 million or approximately 91 per cent of all liabilities. Of the total unmatured funded debt now outstanding, only $499·7 million, or approximately 3·3 per cent is payable in foreign currencies—$437·8 million payable in United States dollars and $61·9 million in pounds sterling. A complete statement in tabular form of the Government's unmatured funded debt at March 31, 1950, with details of interest rates, dates of maturity, annual interest charges, and principal amounts for each loan may be found at the end of this Appendix.

56. Floating debt, consisting of outstanding cheques and interest, matured funded debt and similar demand liabilities is estimated at $494·2 million. Amounts at the credit of annuity, insurance, pension and guaranty accounts are expected to total $816·6 million.

57. The other principal items on the liabilities side of the balance sheet are: deposit and trust accounts (consisting of moneys deposited with or held in trust by the Receiver General for various purposes), $136·6 million; sundry suspense accounts (where some uncertainty as to disposition exists), $68·7 million; reserve for conditional benefits under the Veterans' Land Act, $19·9 million; province debt accounts (representing settlements arising from agreements at the time of confederation), $11·9 million; and deferred credits (consisting of balances whose ultimate accounting treatment is known, but which are held until certain conditions are met), $11·7 million.

58. Offsetting these liabilities, and in a measure explaining their existence —for a substantial portion of the total debt is attributable to loans, advances, and investments—are the Government's active assets. Essentially, these consist of assets which yield interest, profits, or dividends, together with very liquid assets such as cash and departmental working funds.

It is estimated, although some of the items are very difficult to forecast, that the totals of the principal asset categories at March 31, 1950, will be: cash and other current assets, $1,428·8 million; loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies, $1,163 million; other loans and investments, $2,724·6 million; deferred charges (discounts and commissions on loan flotations in the process of being amortized over the life of the loans), $62·6 million; sundry suspense accounts, $25·7 million; and province debt accounts, $2·3 million.

59. The reserve for possible losses on the ultimate realization of active assets which now stands on the books at $320·8 million is shown on the balance sheet as a deduction from the total of the active assets.

8. ANALYSIS OF CHANGES IN PRINCIPAL LIABILITY CLASSIFICATIONS DURING THE YEAR

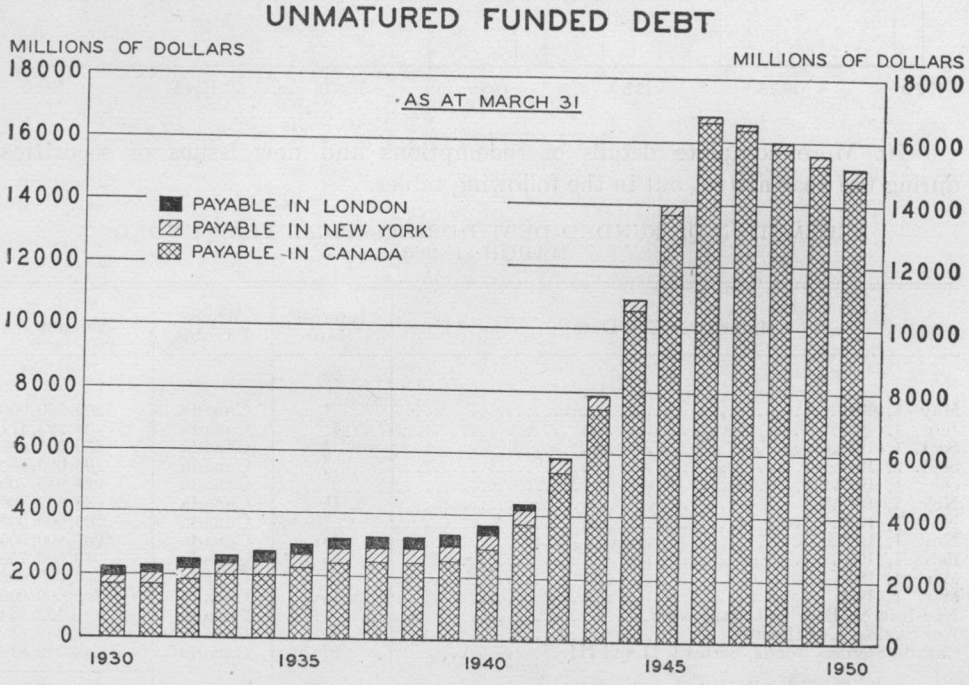
60. The most significant change on the liabilities side of the balance sheet was again the substantial reduction in the Government's outstanding funded debt. The unmatured funded debt decreased from $15,585 million at March 31, 1949 to an estimated total of $15,191·6 million at March 31, 1950, representing a total net reduction of $393·4 million. The various loan redemptions and flotations which resulted in this net decrease are described in greater detail in the following section.

61. Annuity, pension, insurance and guarantee accounts show an estimated increase of $98·6 million, attributable largely to increases of $59·3 million in government annuities; $16 million in the permanent forces pension fund; $8·9 million in the Civil Service Superannuation account; and $7·6 million in the cash balance of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

62. It is estimated that there will be an increase of $43·5 million in floating debt. An increase of $49·4 million in the amount of demand notes payable to the International Monetary Fund is offset by a decrease of $4·4 million in the amount of such notes payable to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

63. Other increases on the liabilities side of the balance sheet are: deposit and trust accounts, $29·1 million ($24·1 million of which is attributable to the deposit by the Government of Newfoundland of a portion of its financial surplus, as provided under the Terms of Union); sundry suspense accounts, $9·1 million; deferred credits, $7·3 million; and reserve for conditional benefits under the Veterans' Land Act, $6·6 million.

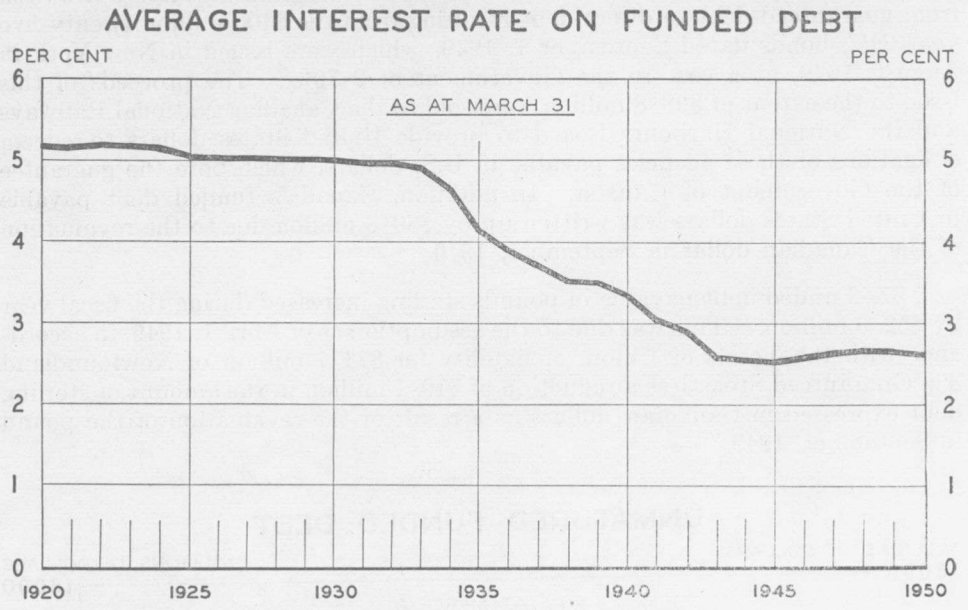
9. SUMMARY OF SECURITY ISSUES AND REDEMPTIONS DURING THE YEAR



64. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1950, Government obligations totalling $3,137·4 million and all payable in Canada matured or were called for redemption. The financing of these retirements was effected as follows:

	(Millions)
By refunding or conversion into new issues	$2,213·3
By proceeds of new borrowings—
Sale of Canada Savings Bonds Series IV	293·2
Sale of Deposit Certificates (part)	45·0
From available cash	585·9
	$3,137·4

65. The retirement of $585·9 million out of available cash represents the net reduction achieved during the year in the total funded debt payable in Canadian dollars.



66. Funded debt payable in United States funds increased by $139·8 million in the fiscal year. Most of this increase represented merely a switch from guaranteed debt to direct debt resulting from the $100 million twenty-five year 2¾% bonds dated September 1, 1949, which were issued in New York in August, 1949, at a cost to the Government of 2·79%. The proceeds of this issue to the extent of $98·8 million were sold to the Canadian National Railways and the National Harbours Board to provide United States dollars to redeem obligations of these agencies payable in U.S. dollars, which bore the guarantee of the Government of Canada. In addition, Canada's funded debt payable in United States dollars was written up by $39·8 million due to the revaluation of the Canadian dollar in September, 1949.

67. Funded debt payable in pounds sterling increased during the fiscal year by $52·6 million. This was due to the assumption as of April 1, 1949, in accordance with the Terms of Union, of liability for $71·7 million of Newfoundland 3% Guaranteed Stock less a reduction of $19·1 million in the amount of sterling debt expressed in Canadian dollars as a result of the revaluation of the pound in September, 1949.

68. From the above analysis it will be seen that the over-all reduction in the Government's outstanding funded debt during the year amounted to $393·4 million, i.e., the net reduction of $585·9 million in Canadian debt less the increase of $139·8 million in funded debt payable in New York and the net increase of $52·6 million in funded debt payable in sterling.

69. It is interesting to note that the average coupon rate on the Government's outstanding funded debt at the close of the current fiscal year is estimated at $2·61%. The comparable figure at the close of the previous fiscal year was $2·64% and on March 31, 1939 was 3·52%.

70. More complete details of redemptions and new issues of securities during the year are set out in the following tables.

REDEMPTION OF FUNDED DEBT DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1950

Maturity or Call Date	Interest Rate	Where Payable	Amount
	%		$
May 1, 1949	⅝	Canada	200,000,000
July 1, 1949	4	Canada	33,293,471
Sept. 1, 1949	¾	Canada	550,000,000
Sept. 2, 1949	¾	Canada	100,000,000
Oct. 1, 1949	3	Canada	324,945,700
Nov. 1, 1949	4½	Canada	289,693,300
Nov. 1, 1949	¾	Canada	200,000,000
Nov. 1, 1949	1¾	Canada	267,800,000
Feb. 1, 1950	3½	Canada	50,086,750
Mar. 1, 1950	¾	Canada	550,000,000
Mar. 1, 1950	1½	Canada	325,000,000
Non-Interest Bearing Certificates	.....	Canada	122,954
War Savings Certificates	3	Canada	42,682,632
Canada Savings Bonds, Series I, II and III	2¾	Canada	148,312,810
Total Bonds and Certificates	.....	.....	3,081,937,617
Repayment of Refundable Portion of Excess Profits Tax	.....	.....	55,416,413
Total Redemptions of Debt	.....	.....	3,137,354,030

NEW SECURITY ISSUES DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1950

—	Issue Date	Maturity Date	Interest Rate	Price to Government	Yield at Price to Government	Total Amount Issued	Renewals or Reconversion Included in Amount Issued	Amount Issued for Cash
PAYABLE IN CANADA			%		%	$	$	$
Issued to Chartered Banks—
Three Year Bonds	Nov. 1, 1949	Nov. 1, 1952	1½	99·45	1·69	210,000,000	210,000,000	.....
Three Year Bonds	Mar. 1, 1950	Mar. 1, 1953	1½	99·30	1·74	139,505,000	139,505,000
Deposit Certificates	Mar. 1, 1950	Aug. 30, 1950	¾	100·00	0·75	100,000 000	55,000,000	45,000,000
						449,505,000	404,505,000	45,000,000
Issued to Bank of Canada—
Six Months Treasury Notes	May 1, 1949	Nov. 1, 1949	¾	100·00	0·75	200,000,000	200,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Sept. 1, 1949	Mar. 1, 1950	¾	100·00	0 75	550,000,000	550,000,000	.....
Three Year Bonds	Nov. 1, 1949	Nov. 1, 1952	1½	99·45	1·69	90,000,000	90,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Nov. 1, 1949	May 1, 1950	¾	100·00	0·75	200,000,000	200,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Mar. 1, 1950	Sept. 1, 1950	¾	100·00	0 75	550,000,000	550,000,000	.....
Three Year Bonds	Mar. 1, 1950	Mar. 1, 1953	1½	99·30	1·74	185,495,000	185,495,000	.....
						1,775,495,000	1,775,495,000	.....
Issued to General Public—
Canada Savings Bonds, Series IV—Net	Nov. 1, 1949	Nov. 1, 1959	2¾	99·375	2·82	293,200,000	.....	293,200,000
Issued to Prairie Provinces—
School Lands Debentures	July 1, 1949	July 1, 1950	4	100·00	4·00	33,293,471	33,293,471	.....
Total Issues Payable in Canada	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,551,493,471	2,213,293,471	338,200,000
PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES
Issued to General Public—
Twenty-Five Year Bonds	Sept. 1, 1949	Sept. 1, 1974	2¾	99·25	2·79	100,000,000	.....	100,000,000
Grand Total	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,651,493,471	2,213,293,471	438,200,000

10. ANALYSIS OF CHANGES IN PRINCIPAL ASSET CLASSIFICATIONS DURING THE YEAR

Cash and Other Current Assets.

71. Cash and other current assets decreased by approximately $231·5 million during the fiscal year. The following table summarizes the changes in the various accounts in this category:

CASH AND OTHER CURRENT ASSETS

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	$	$	$
Cash in current and special deposits including blocked currency...	103·8	90·7	13·1
Other Liquid Assets—
Advances to Foreign Exchange Control Board.....	1,260·0	1,071·2	188·8
Securities Investment Account.....	18·3	455·8	—437·5
Sinking Funds.....	8·0	.....	8·0
Working Capital Advances—
Departmental.....	25·1	21·9	3·2
Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation.....	2·7	5·8	— 3·1
Other Crown Corporations.....	10·9	14·9	— 4·0
	1,428·8	1,660·3	—231·5

72. The two principal changes were a decrease of $437·5 million in the temporary investments held in the Securities Investment Account and an increase of $188·8 million in the advances to the Foreign Exchange Control Board, of which $160 million represents additional cash advances for financing the purchase of gold and foreign exchange, and $28·8 million, the elimination of the Board's revaluation deficit consequent upon revaluation of the Canadian dollar in September, 1949.

Loans to, and Investments in, Crown Agencies.

73. The aggregate amount of loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies increased from $1,058·9 million at March 31, 1949, to $1,163 million at March 31, 1950, a net increase of $104·1 million. The changes in this category of assets are summarized in the following table:

LOANS TO, AND INVESTMENTS IN, CROWN AGENCIES

(In millions of dollars)

	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	$	$	$
Bank of Canada Capital Stock.....	5·9	5·9	.....
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Capital advances.....	25·0	25·0	.....
Loans.....	190·0	90·5	99·5
Canadian Farm Loan Board—Capital stock and bonds.....	23·9	22·2	1·7
Loans to Canadian National Railways.....	744·4	764·8	— 20·4
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.....	7·7	3·2	4·5
National Harbours Board.....	105·6	85·3	20·3
Other Crown Agencies.....	60·5	62·0	— 1·5
	1,163·0	1,058·9	104·1

74. Loans during the year to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing loans, house construction and other building activities of the Corporation are expected to amount to $99·5 million. The total advanced to March 31, 1950, including capital advances of $25 million, is estimated at $215 million.

75. Loans to the Canadian National Railways of $744·4 million represent advances by the Government for capital expenditures, including the purchase of railway equipment, the retirement of maturing debt and the temporary financing of current operations. The decrease of $20·4 million reflects net repayments during the year.

76. The amount of $105·6 million shown for the National Harbours Board represents the net outstanding advances in connection with harbour developments at Montreal and Vancouver. These are the only advances to the National Harbours Board which are classified as active assets in the Government's accounts. The increase of $20·3 million during the year is largely accounted for by advances to the Board for the retirement of bonds originally issued to the public by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal for the construction of the Jacques Cartier Bridge.

77. The total of $60·5 million shown for Other Crown Agencies represents subscriptions to capital stock of, or advances to, sundry government agencies for capital, construction and other purposes. Of the total, $42·9 million represents the Government's investment in Polymer Corporation Limited. The remainder includes loans to, or investments in, Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited ($8·2 million); Export Credits Insurance Corporation ($5 million); and Northwest Territories Power Commission ($4·4 million).

Other Loans and Investments.

78. This group of assets includes loans to provincial and municipal governments; loans to the United Kingdom and foreign governments; the Government's subscriptions to the capital of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; and loans to veterans under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Acts. Details of the loans and investments in this category are shown in the following table:

OTHER LOANS AND INVESTMENTS

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	$	$	$
Loans to Provincial and Municipal Governments	98·5	102·4	− 3·9
Loans to United Kingdom and Other Governments	2,028·1	1,923·8	104·3
Canada's subscription to capital of the International Monetary Fund	322·5	300·0	22·5
Canada's subscription to capital of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development	70·7	65·0	5·7
Advances under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Acts	185·8	167·3	18·5
Miscellaneous loans and investments	19·0	20·1	− 1·1
	2,724·6	2,578·6	146·0

79. Loans to provincial and municipal governments include the loans to provinces made originally under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Acts and other legislation, and the loans to municipalities under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. The reduction of $3·9 million represents repayments during the year.

80. The loans to United Kingdom and other governments consist of loans to the Government of the United Kingdom under the authority of The War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942, and The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, loans to other countries under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act and miscellaneous foreign loans. Details of the changes in each of these categories are shown in the following table:

LOANS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM AND OTHER GOVERNMENTS

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1950 (Estimated)	1949
	$	$	$
Loan to the United Kingdom under The War Appropriation (U.K. Financing) Act, 1942	292·0	302·0	− 10·0
Loan to the United Kingdom under The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	1,165·0	1,045·0	120·0
Advances under The Export Credits Insurance Act, Part II	523·5	534·5	− 11·0
Miscellaneous Advances	47·6	42·3	5·3
	2,028·1	1,923·8	104·3

81. It is estimated that during 1949-50 the United Kingdom Government will have repaid $10 million of the interest-free loan granted under the provisions of The War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942, reducing the balance outstanding on this account to $292 million at March 31, 1950. During the year, however, additional advances of $120 million were made to the Government of the United Kingdom as part of the $1,250 million loan authorized by The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act of 1946. The total amount advanced under this agreement now stands at $1,165 million.

82. The advances under Part II of The Export Credits Insurance Act represent loans to certain foreign countries to assist them in purchasing goods and services in Canada. It is estimated that the total of outstanding advances under this act will be $523·5 million at March 31, 1950, representing a net decrease of $11 million compared with the total outstanding at March 31, 1949. A classification of these advances by recipient governments, showing the repayments during the year, is given in the following table:

ADVANCES TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS UNDER PART II OF THE EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

(In millions of dollars)

—	Total Outstanding at March 31, 1949	Repayments during 1949–50	Total Outstanding at March 31, 1950 (Estimated)
	$	$	$
Belgium	64·6	2·3	62·3
China	50·5	0·3	50·2
Czechoslovakia	16·7	.....	16·7
France	242·7	8·4	234·3
Indonesia	15·4	.....	15·4
Netherlands	118·1	.....	118·1
Norway	23·6	.....	23·6
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	2·9	.....	2·9
	534·5	11·0	523·5

Sundry Suspense Accounts.

83. The decrease of $28·5 million in this asset classification is attributable mainly to the elimination of the revaluation deficit of the Foreign Exchange Control Board following the revaluation of the Canadian dollar in September, 1949. The revaluation surplus which will appear in the Board's balance sheet will not be shown in the Government's accounts.

Reserve for Possible Losses on Ultimate Realization of Active Assets.

84. For the third successive year an amount of $75 million was added to this reserve with a corresponding amount being shown as an expenditure in the Government's accounts. There was no charge to the reserve during the year under review; the balance at the credit of the account being $320·8 million at the fiscal year-end.

11. INDIRECT OR CONTINGENT LIABILITIES

85. It should be noted that the balance sheet as summarized above does not reflect any of the government's indirect or contingent liabilities. Included under this heading, for example, are the government's guarantees of certain securities issued by various government owned enterprises such as the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, and the Saint John Harbour Commission; the guarantee of deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada; guarantees of certain loans made by chartered banks to veterans or farmers for certain authorized purposes; guarantees under The Export Credits Insurance Act; and certain commitments under housing legislation.

86. The following table gives details of the bonds and debenture stocks guaranteed by the government, and also indicates the nature and approximate extent of the government's other guarantees and contingent liabilities.

BONDS AND DEBENTURE STOCKS GUARANTEED BY THE GOVERNMENT
AS AT MARCH 31, 1950

Date of Maturity	Issue	Interest Rate	Estimated Amount Outstanding
		%	$
Sept. 1, 1951..	Canadian National	4½	48,022,000
Aug. 1, 1952..	Saint John Harbour Commissioners	5	667,953
July 10, 1953..	Canadian Northern	3	1,162,768
Feb. 1, 1954..	Canadian National	5	50,000,000
May 1, 1954..	City of Saint John Debentures assumed by Saint John Harbour Commissioners	5¼	3,329
Mar. 1, 1955..	Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited	5	9,400,000
June 15, 1955..	Canadian National	4¾	48,496,000
Feb. 1, 1956..	Canadian National	4½	67,368,000
July 1, 1957..	Canadian National	4½	64,136,000
July 20, 1958..	Canadian Northern	3½	5,636,507
Jan. 15, 1959..	Canadian National	3	35,000,000
May 4, 1960..	Canadian Northern Alberta	3½	550,727
May 19, 1961..	Canadian Northern Ontario	3½	3,597,518
Jan. 1, 1962..	Grand Trunk Pacific	3	26,465,130
Jan. 1, 1962..	Grand Trunk Pacific	4	7,999,074
Jan. 3, 1966..	Canadian National	3	35,000,000
Jan. 2, 1967..	Canadian National	2¾	50,000,000
Sept. 15, 1969..	Canadian National	2⅞	70,000,000
Jan. 16, 1971..	Canadian National	2⅞	40,000,000
Perpetual.....	Grand Trunk Debenture Stock	5	1,016,092
Perpetual.....	Great Western Debenture Stock	5	499,709
Perpetual.....	Grand Trunk Debenture Stock	4	5,446,783
Perpetual.....	Northern Railway of Canada Debenture Stock	4	22,591
			570,490,181

The Budget—Appendix

OTHER OUTSTANDING GUARANTEES AND CONTINGENT LIABILITIES AS AT MARCH 31, 1950

	Estimated Amount Outstanding
Deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada (Feb. 28, 1950)	$ 554,839,714
Bank advances, re Province of Manitoba Savings Office (Feb. 28, 1950)	3,740,078
Province of Manitoba Treasury Bill (Feb. 28, 1950)	2,500,000
Loans made by chartered banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944 (Jan. 31, 1950)	10,755,301
Loans made by chartered banks under the Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act (Dec. 31, 1949)	1,717,190
Guaranteed Bank Loans—Acadia Coal Company (Feb. 28, 1950)	438,000
Guarantees under Part II of The Export Credits Insurance Act (Feb. 28, 1950)	12,750,000
Loans made by approved lending institutions under The Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act, 1937 (Dec. 31, 1949)	11,551
Loans made by approved lending institutions under Part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, for home extensions (Dec. 31, 1949)	5,704
Loans made by approved lending institutions under Dominion and National Housing Acts	Indeterminate
Guarantees of land assembly projects under National Housing Act (Dec. 31, 1949)	806,035
Bank Advances, re Canadian Wheat Board (Feb. 28, 1950)	30,754,234

87. It will be noted that the total of guaranteed bonds and debentures outstanding at March 31, 1950, is estimated at $570·5 million, an increase of approximately $15·9 million over the amount outstanding at March 31, 1949. This increase was the net result of several transactions. The Canadian National Railways issued $70 million in $2\frac{7}{8}\%$ Bonds dated September 15, 1949 and maturing September 15, 1969 and $40 million in $2\frac{7}{8}\%$ Bonds dated January 16, 1950 and maturing January 16, 1971; less redemption on October 1, 1949 of $57·7 million 5% Bonds and on February 1, 1950 of $17·3 million 5% Bonds. In addition the National Harbours Board paid off on November 1, 1949, an issue of $19·0 million 5% Bonds.

12. SUPPLEMENTARY DETAILED TABLES

REVENUES

EXPENDITURES

LOANS AND ADVANCES AND INVESTMENTS

UNMATURED FUNDED DEBT

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF REVENUES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
TAX REVENUE—
Direct Taxes—
Direct Taxes on Incomes—
Individual Income Tax	691,586	694,530	659,828	762,564	611,500
Tax on Interest and Dividends	26,824	28,428	33,929	40,965	45,500
Taxes on Rents and Royalties	1,486	1,708	1,960	2,480
Corporation Income Tax	217,834	238,792	364,131	491,990	586,500
Excess Profits Tax	494,196	448,698	227,030	44,792	−2,500
Total Direct Taxes on Incomes	1,431,926	1,412,156	1,286,878	1,342,791	1,241,000
Succession Duties	21,447	23,576	30,828	25,550	28,500
Total Direct Taxes	1,453,373	1,435,732	1,317,706	1,368,341	1,269,500
Indirect Taxes—
Customs Import Duties	128,877	237,355	293,012	222,975	229,000
Excise Duties—
Spirits, malt, etc	91,274	97,820	97,675	101,105	104,500
Cigars, cigarettes and tobacco	98,228	101,163	102,116	106,241	114,000
Licences	39	40	37	39	40
Less refunds	−2,815	−2,979	−3,034	−2,733	−3,040
Total Excise Duties	186,726	196,044	196,794	204,652	215,500
Excise Taxes—
Taxes on Commodities—
Sales Tax	326,253	328,073	383,012	390,174	415,500
War Exchange Tax	41,198	338	.....	.....	.....
Automobiles, rubber tires and tubes	6,701	16,340	31,949	36,943	34,200
Beverages	16,657	18,635	23,767	27,689	1,630
Candy and chewing gum	11,904	13,277	18,279	19,888	1,020
Cigars, cigarettes and tobacco	70,229	76,318	68,606	77,665	83,400
Cigarette papers and tubes	4,645	6,943	6,419	6,999	7,070
Electric and gas appliances	1,272	7	2,824	3,894	.....
Furs	4,976	3,102	3,139	3,693	3,020
Gasoline	29,836	36,220	2,208	.....	.....
Matches and lighters	3,675	4,088	3,967	3,412	1,080
Phonographs, radios and tubes	646	2,526	5,325	3,562	3,060
Special excise on importations	787	1,185	2,113	279	.....
Sugar	9,974	11,339	10,572	.....	.....
Toilet preparations and soaps	7,107	7,522	7,146	7,757	4,420
Trunks, bags, luggage, etc	4,711	5,710	4,962	5,565	2,290
Wines	2,066	2,394	2,342	2,060	2,170
Jewellery, ornaments, etc	.....	.....	.....	.....	4,260
Sundry	3,811	5,109	4,716	4,700	2,250
Taxes on Amusements and Services—
Amusements	13,387	14,552	15,369	2,483	.....
Tax on pari-mutuel bets	2,188	2,510	2,519	105	.....
Transportation and communication	26,893	27,931	27,531	29,034	3,950
Stamps, including payment of taxes on jewellery, chinaware, cabaret attendance, etc	21,697	24,437	24,300	22,725	9,720
Licences, interest and miscellaneous	302	313	376	382	380
Less refunds (mainly sales tax)	−114,005	−29,845	−10,683	−12,871	−11,420
Total Excise Taxes	496,910	579,024	640,758	636,138	568,000
Other Taxes—
Chartered bank note circulation	270	220	188	166	150
Insurance Companies	7,951	8,796	3,004	3,339	3,400
Miscellaneous	751	690	613	531	450
Total Indirect Taxes	821,485	1,022,129	1,134,369	1,067,801	1,016,500
Total Revenue from Taxes	2,274,858	2,457,861	2,452,075	2,436,142	2,286,000

STATEMENT OF REVENUES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Concluded

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
NON-TAX REVENUE—
Post Office	68,613	72,978	77,759	80,604	84,000
Return on Investments	70,915	69,439	75,800	107,889	90,400
Bullion and coinage	4,954	2,098	1,731	3,253	4,100
Premium, discount and exchange	.....	.....	3,736	.....	.....
Other	16,322	16,355	18,745	21,202	24,500
Total Non-tax Revenue	160,804	160,870	177,771	212,948	203,000
Total Ordinary Revenue	2,435,662	2,618,731	2,629,846	2,649,090	2,489,000
SPECIAL RECEIPTS AND CREDITS—
Refunds of previous years' Special Expenditure	20	10	7	16	160
Special Receipts—War and Demobilization	626,616	412,763	225,757	117,121	58,928
Donations to the Crown	161	170	138	69	60
Canadian Wheat Board—
Surpluses in certain special accounts	.....	1,762	16	121	400
Canadian National Railways—
Net credit due to increase in Canadian National Railways Securities Trust Stock (contra)	22,631	.....	.....	.....	.....
Investment in Crown plants transferred to Active Assets	174	2,053	3,704	2,528	.....
	649,602	416,758	229,622	119,855	59,548
Capital and Non-active Accounts—
Capital Accounts—
Refunds of previous years' expenditure	376	110	61	82	2
Transfer to Consolidated Deficit Account (contra)	.....	.....	158	2,243	.....
Non-active Accounts—
National Harbours Board, reduction of indebtedness	.....	10	82	.....	11
1936 and 1937 Saskatchewan Seed Grain Loans Guarantees—
Adjustment pursuant to The Western Provinces Treasury Bills and Natural Resources Settlement Act, 1947	.....	.....	9,773	.....	.....
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, reduction of indebtedness	.....	1,105	256	80	.....
Write-off to Consolidated Deficit Account—
Canadian National Railways Securities Trust Stock—reduction due to retirement of equipment during calendar years 1946 and 1947	.....	1,308	1,885	.....	.....
Seed Grain and Relief Loans	45	54	63	45	20
Total Capital and Non-active Accounts	421	2,587	12,278	2,450	51
Total Special Receipts and Credits	650,023	419,345	241,900	122,305	59,599
Total Revenue	3,085,685	3,038,076	2,871,746	2,771,395	2,548,599
Less estimated amount of refundable Income and Excess Profits Taxes	72,500	30,200	.....	.....	.....
Net Total Revenue	3,013,185	3,007,876	2,871,746	2,771,395	2,548,599

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945–46	1946–47	1947–48	1948–49	Estimated 1949–50
	$	$	$	$	$
ORDINARY EXPENDITURE
Agriculture	10,319	13,300	16,311	20,376	24,974
Auditor General's Office	379	390	395	533	566
Citizenship and Immigration*	.....	.....	.....	.....	5,833
Indian Affairs Branch	.....	.....	.....	.....	12,450
Civil Service Commission	479	593	665	771	1,523
External Affairs	4,522	5,128	7,195	8,676	9,500
Finance—
Interest on Public Debt	409,134	464,395	455,455	465,138	439,200
Cost of Loan Flotations and Annual Amortization of Bond Discounts and Commissions	22,311	12,139	10,914	9,745	10,495
Premium paid on redemption of called bonds	5,842	271	35	9	.....
Subsidies to Provinces	14,447	14,383	33,394	17,095	19,170
Transitional Grant to Newfoundland	.....	.....	.....	.....	6,500
Miscellaneous Grants and Contributions	617	95	113	147	497
Civil Pensions and Superannuation	293	253	224	190	167
Government's contribution to Superannuation Fund	2,696	3,161	3,488	4,050	5,463
Premium, Discount and Exchange	14,734	9,172	.....	111	22,000
Compensation to Provinces under Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreements—
Income and Corporation Taxes	94,343	94,380	122,497	84,387	78,206
Gasoline Tax	3,709	.....	.....	.....	.....
Special payments in respect to matters supplementary to Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,432
Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury	5,565	7,521	8,933	11,103	11,162
Administrative and Sundry Expenditure	2,004	2,078	2,380	3,515	5,143
Fisheries	3,262	3,599	4,097	5,158	6,646
Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors	227	252	239	242	276
Insurance	199	212	237	263	315
Justice	2,848	3,194	3,917	4,025	4,364
Penitentiaries	3,258	3,806	4,564	5,863	7,232
Labour	1,620	2,010	2,319	4,712	5,335
Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—
Administration	6,185	7,496	17,641	18,965	25,016
Government's Contribution	12,514	15,200	17,500	20,103	21,500
Government Annuities—
Payment to maintain reserve	294	977	332	11,408	1,500
Legislation—
House of Commons	2,235	2,786	3,022	2,628	3,770
Library of Parliament	74	90	103	127	128
Senate	727	881	946	736	1,184
General	98	167	270	272	265
Chief Electoral Officer, including elections	3,091	144	151	287	4,447
Mines and Resources—*
Administration	164	173	268	366	.....
Immigration	1,524	2,047	2,665	5,564	.....
Indian Affairs	4,466	5,948	7,180	10,378	.....
Lands, Parks and Forests	2,689	4,962	.....	.....	.....
Lands and Development Services	.....	.....	5,630	11,863	.....
Surveys and Engineering	1,323	3,444	.....	.....	.....
Special Projects	.....	.....	2,554	126	.....
Mines and Geological Survey	1,303	1,847	.....	.....	.....
Mines, Forests and Scientific Services	.....	.....	5,318	17,970	.....
Mines and Technical Surveys*	.....	.....	.....	.....	22,918
National Defence—
Administration and sundry services	127	253	615	1,127	353
Pensions—Militia Pension Act	(1) —	(1) —	(1) —	4,863	5,000
Government's contribution to Permanent Forces Pension Fund	.....	.....	(2) —	7,867	9,046

(1) Included under Veterans Affairs.
(2) Included under Demobilization and Reconversion—Army, Navy and Air Services.
* See paragraphs 37 and 38.

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
ORDINARY EXPENDITURE—Con.
National Health and Welfare	7,294	8,616	10,815	14,381	16,900
Old age pensions, including pensions to blind persons	33,715	35,928	58,090	66,764	94,000
Family allowances	172,632	245,141	263,165	270,910	297,600
General health grants	.....	.....	.....	7,528	14,000
National Revenue (including Income Tax)	22,630	28,551	37,312	49,323	50,996
National War Services	5	.....	.....	.....	.....
Post Office	57,730	64,213	67,944	77,643	83,145
Prime Minister's Office	61	88	99	106	110
Privy Council	419	808	1,287	4,351	3,988
Public Archives	127	149	157	173	209
Public Printing and Stationery	238	293	536	753	905
Public Works	16,283	26,360	35,545	50,644	66,800
Reconstruction and Supply*	2,103	1,932	12,342	3,403	.....
Resources and Development*	.....	.....	.....	.....	26,098
Dominion Fuel Board administration, coal subsidies and subventions	2,339	1,776	1,143	([3]) —	([3]) —
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	7,284	8,604	10,406	13,717	16,100
Secretary of State	954	1,157	1,345	1,559	1,640
Trade and Commerce	6,356	9,776	10,846	24,778	31,382
Dominion Fuel Board administration coal subsidies and subventions	.....	.....	.....	2,164	4,921
Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions	994	1,103	([4]) —	([4]) —	([4]) —
Transport—
Administration and general	1,440	1,499	1,973	3,492	3,305
Air Service	4,196	5,653	10,390	15,932	24,135
Marine Service	4,895	5,963	6,831	8,176	10,194
Railways and Canals	3,391	3,702	4,073	5,124	7,582
Maritime Freight Rates Act	4,345	4,871	5,090	6,606	7,025
Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions, including Canadian Maritime Commission	.....	.....	1,764	2,166	2,414
Veterans Affairs—
Departmental Administration	1,142	1,680	1,677	2,225	2,235
Pensions (World War 1 and military)	39,996	40,771	41,227	.....	.....
Pensions (World Wars 1 and 2 and N.W. Rebellion, 1885)	([5]) —	([5]) —	([5]) —	102,951	96,000
Treatment and after-care of returned soldiers and allowances to dependents	28,551	44,303	46,286	69,937	69,390
Soldiers Settlement and Veterans Land Acts	3,160	6,551	8,092	7,885	7,591
Total Ordinary Expenditure	1,061,902	1,236,235	1,380,002	1,573,450	1,712,241
CAPITAL EXPENDITURE
Railways	2,313	2,654	3,809	3,239	3,875
Public Works	2,195	8,546	11,847	15,234	20,272
Total Capital Expenditure	4,508	11,200	15,656	18,473	24,147

([3]) See Department of Trade and Commerce.
([4]) See Department of Transport.
([5]) See War, Demobilization and Reconversion Expenditure.
* See paragraphs 37 and 38.

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
WAR, DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION EXPENDITURE
National Defence—Army, Navy and Air Services	.....	.....	189,360	238,915	343,467
National Defence—Defence Research	.....	4,090	6,024	16,033	21,005
National Defence—
Army Services	949,578	219,124	.....	.....	.....
Naval Services	241,759	64,873	.....	.....	.....
Air Services	524,330	99,271	.....	.....	.....
Reconstruction and Supply (formerly Munitions and Supply)—
Administration, reconversion and operation of Crown Companies and/or Crown Plants	.....	10,784	1,558	(6) —	—
Administration	6,858	4,140	1,305	122	.....
Housing development	.....	35,323	38,558	1,013	.....
Production and transportation subsidies for Canadian steel producers, etc.	(7) —	12,663	7,950	(6) —	(6) —
Research and development of jet engines and aircraft	.....	.....	4,500	(6) —	(6) —
Expansion of industry	112,675	.....	.....	.....	.....
Acquisition of U.S. Assets	1,906	.....	.....	.....	.....
Liquidation of contracts	.....	24,743	1,007	.....	.....
Termination of contracts	151,846	55,200	6,400	.....	.....
Other	5,522	4,287	1,056	242	.....
	278,807	147,140	62,334	1,377	.....
Resources and Development	.....	.....	.....	.....	317
Agriculture—
Disposal of agricultural products rendered surplus by the war	354	958	7	.....	.....
Freight assistance on western feed grains	17,317	18,828	20,092	18,154	16,900
Fertilizer subventions and freight allowance	438	283	.....	.....	.....
Subsidies and bulk purchasing of fertilizer	.....	.....	597	.....	.....
Subsidy on western wheat used exclusively as feed for live-stock	7,864	6,474	4,421	.....	.....
Subsidy on milk and milk products	41,659	36,759	1,861	.....	.....
Premium on hog carcasses suitable for export to U.K.	9,573	4,506	5,474	4,585	5,100
To provide for reserve stocks of feed grains	1,274	1,551	434	.....	.....
Sundry	4,499	1,757	347	439	491
	82,978	71,116	33,233	23,178,	22,491
External Affairs—
Contribution to International Refugee Organization	.....	.....	5,468	5,412	5,827
General post UNRRA relief	.....	.....	16,927	325	.....
Sundry	383	837	5	102	1,133
	383	837	22,400	5,839	6,960
Finance—
Comptroller of the Treasury	9,369	6,072	1,702	(8) —	(8) —
Wartime Prices and Trade Board—
Administration	14,753	12,738	5,794	3,321	2,621
Subsidies due to application of Order placing a ceiling over all prices	97,819	88,778	34,341	14,911	25
Advances for payment of drawback claims to millers and other manufacturers of wheat products	14,750	26,000	17,000	11,000	1,350
House Conversion Program	1,764	(9) —	(9) —	(9) —	(9) —
Halifax V-E Day disorders and explosion
Payment of claims	4,610	2,127	.....	.....	.....
Expenses of investigations	248	161	.....	.....	.....
Sundry	958	999	363	1,457	92
	144,271	136,875	59,200	30,689	4,088

(6) See Department of Trade and Commerce.
(7) Included in Expansion of Industry.
(8) Included in ordinary expenditure.
(9) See Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
WAR, DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION EXPENDITURE—Con.
Labour—
National Selective Service program	11,268	11,230	(10) —	(10) —	(10) —
Removal of enemy aliens from protected areas	2,203	3,161	.....	.....	.....
Vocational training for discharged members of Canada's Armed Forces	4,365	13,049	6,405	3,472	2,386
Vocational Schools — Payments to Provinces	607	2,442	3,264	(11) —	(11) —
Sundry	4,416	2,772	1,723	1,767	1,402
	22,859	32,654	11,392	5,239	3,788
Mines and Resources	3,475	2,498	1,812	989	.....
Mines and Technical Surveys	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,354
National War Services	14,245	29	.....	.....	.....
National Health and Welfare—
Old Age Pensions increased benefits	9,103	9,517	996	(11) —	(11) —
Sundry	2,135	157	107	31	.....
	11,238	9,674	1,103	31	.....
Privy Council	1,272	45	8	.....	.....
Public Works	6,205	3,651	1,242	.....	.....
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	4,775	1,896	1,627	.....	.....
Trade and Commerce—
Administration	.....	.....	.....	1,000	.....
Administration, reconversion and operation of Crown Companies and/or Crown Plants	.....	.....	.....	2,585	.....
Production and transportation subsidies for Canadian steel producers, etc.	.....	.....	.....	7,062	4,665
Research and development of jet engines and aircraft	.....	.....	.....	2,000	1,500
Sundry	1,772	682	126	1,157	316
	1,772	682	126	13,804	6,481
Transport	15,013	9,723	6,387	1,637	1,273
Veterans Affairs—
Treatment—Defence Forces	26,298	50,982	27,130	(12) —	(12)
Pensions—Defence Forces	22,200	33,763	40,517	(12) —	(12) —
Additions, alterations and improvements to departmental hospitals, including land purchases	7,371	8,334	6,805	5,095	3,700
Post-discharge rehabilitation benefits	32,131	96,762	78,323	44,826	24,900
War service gratuities and re-establishment credits	239,585	318,325	84,175	36,148	22,800
Sundry	774	273	418	1,181	1,390
	323,359	508,439	237,368	87,250	52,790
Other Departments	2,453	2,181	805	593	67
Write-off of Air Training Plan Loans and Advance as per United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	425,000	.....	.....	.....	.....
Mutual Aid (excluding administration)	766,862	.....	.....	.....	.....
Military Relief	34,463	.....	.....	.....	.....
Canada's Contribution to UNRRA	142,852	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total War, Demobilization and Reconversion Expenditures	4,002,949	1,314,798	634,421	425,574	464,081
SPECIAL EXPENDITURE
Agricultural and Other Projects	4,423	4,432	5,253	10,489	17,858
Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939—
Administration	327	333	450	402	450
Advances to Prairie Farm Emergency Fund	12,052	6,597	10,744	8,640	12,800
Wheat acreage reduction plan—
Administration	159	.....	.....	.....	.....
Payments of awards to farmers	397	2	.....	.....	.....

(10) Included in ordinary expenditure (Unemployment Insurance administration).
(11) Included in ordinary expenditure.
(12) Included in ordinary expenditure.

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
SPECIAL EXPENDITURES—Con.
Deficits—Canadian Wheat Board	.....	20,562	31,450	4,454	4,580
Subsidies on oats and barley, used as feed for live stock—Dept. of Agriculture	.....	.....	13,963	.....	.....
Reimbursement to Canadian Wheat Board for expenses of regulating deliveries of grain—Department of Trade and Commerce	.....	.....	733	128	.....
Reimbursement to Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses in purchasing materials, etc., on behalf of Dept. of National Defence—Dept. of Trade and Commerce	.....	.....	548	776	1,005
Fraser Valley, B.C., Flood Area—
Repairing and reconstructing dykes	.....	.....	.....	4,500	3,000
Grant for emergency relief and rehabilitation	.....	.....	.....	5,000	.....
Repairs to Federal Government structures and telegraph and telephone lines	.....	.....	.....	424	.....
Protection of works	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,125
Total Special Expenditure	17,358	31,926	63,141	34,813	40,818
GOVERNMENT OWNED ENTERPRISES
Losses charged to Consolidated Deficit Account—
Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and Terminals	688	888	932	1,220	1,221
Canadian National Railways	.....	8,962	15,885	33,533	42,043
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd	.....	.....	.....	.....	461
Trans-Canada Airlines	.....	.....	1,370	2,933	4,318
National Harbours Board	86	114	137	238	83
Total charged to Consolidated Deficit Account	774	9,964	18,324	37,924	48,126
Loans and advances non-active—
National Harbours Board	560	718	371	1,739	4,219
Total Government Owned Enterprises	1,334	10,682	18,695	39,663	52,345
OTHER CHARGES
Write-down of assets chargeable to Consolidated Deficit Account—
Reduction of soldier and general land settlement loans	36	232	3	.....	(13)
Reduction of Veterans' Land Act Loans	.....	129	2,097	1,000	(13)
Yearly established losses in seed grain and relief accounts—
Department of Resources and Development	45	54	63	45	20
Cancellation of Canadian Farm Loan Board Capital Stock	1	.....	.....	.....	.....
Canadian National Railways Securities Trust Stock—reduction due to retirement of equipment	.....	1,308	1,885	.....	.....
Provision for reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of Active Assets	25,000	25,000	75,000	75,000	75,000

(13) Included in ordinary expenditure.

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR CATEGORIES AND BY DEPARTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Concluded

(thousands of dollars)

—	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48	1948-49	Estimated 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
Other Charges—Conc.
Provision for reserve for conditional benefits under Veterans' Land Act...	464	2,663	4,505	5,631	6,600
Assumption of part of Newfoundland debt under Terms of Union.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	62,293
Canadian National Railways Securities Trust Stock—
Net change in Dominion's equity in Canadian National Railways.....	22,631	.....	.....	.....	.....
Transfer from Capital Account to Consolidated Deficit Account.....	.....	.....	158	2,243	.....
Total Other Charges.....	48,177	29,386	83,711	83,919	143,913
Grand Total Expenditures.....	5,136,228	2,634,227	2,195,626	2,175,892	2,437,545

The Budget—Appendix

ANNUAL CHANGES IN ACTIVE LOANS AND INVESTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(In thousands of dollars)

—	Fiscal Years Ended March 31
	1946	1947	1948	1949	Estimated 1950
	$	$	$	$	$
WORKING CAPITAL ADVANCES TO CROWN CORPORATIONS
Canadian Arsenals Ltd	.....	.....	2,500	2,500	.....
Canadian Commercial Corporation	.....	2,500	.....	1,000	Cr. 3,000
Canadian Wool Board	Cr. 6,947	Cr. 6,457	.....	.....	.....
Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation	Cr. 7,819	15,638	Cr. 19,341	Cr. 14,911	Cr. 3,016
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	1,293	.....	Cr. 345	Cr. 108	Cr. 1,085
Export Credits Insurance Corporation—Capital Surplus	2,000	.....	2,500	.....	.....
	Cr. 11,473	11,681	Cr. 14,686	Cr. 11,519	Cr. 7,101
LOANS TO, AND INVESTMENTS IN, CROWN AGENCIES
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Capital	25,000	.....	.....	.....	.....
Loans	.....	.....	22,500	68,000	99,500
Central Mortgage Bank Capital Stock	Cr. 250	.....	.....	.....	.....
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	.....	2,000	.....	1,250	4,500
Canadian Farm Loan Board	Cr. 2,401	Cr. 600	99	1,050	1,700
National Harbours Board	Cr. 66	151	Cr. 26	213	20,273
Railway and Steamship Companies	43,164	Cr. 20,521	81,717	4,067	Cr. 20,422
Crown Plants	Cr. 4,997	Cr. 41,101	.....	.....	.....
Other Crown Agencies	Cr. 6,613	Cr. 14,767	2,500	4,615	Cr. 1,498
	53,837	Cr 74,838	106,790	79,195	104,053
OTHER LOANS AND INVESTMENTS
Provincial and Municipal Governments	Cr. 4,350	Cr. 2,530	Cr. 63,629	Cr. 5,376	Cr. 3,852
United Kingdom and Other Governments—
United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand—Air Training Accounts	Cr. 249,504	Cr. 2	.....	.....	.....
United Kingdom—British Commonwealth Air Training Plan—Settlement	Cr. 200,000	.....	.....	.....	.....
United Kingdom—Loan under The War Appropriation (U.K. Financing) Act, 1942	Cr. 63,946	Cr. 95,800	Cr. 111,285	Cr. 29,487	Cr. 9,927
United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946—Loan	.....	640,000	368,000	37,000	120,000
Export Credits Insurance Act	67,412	267,983	130,934	68,196	Cr. 10,964
Other (U.K. and Other Governments)	111,497	Cr. 165,415	Cr. 5,712	2,060	5,336
Canada's subscription to Capital of—
International Monetary Fund	33	299,970	.....	.....	22,499
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development	36	48,750	16,250	.....	5,658
Miscellaneous—
Loans to veterans under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Acts	18,677	55,202	37,522	21,901	18,521
Dominion and National Housing Acts Loans	Cr. 14,721	.....	.....	.....	.....
Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown Assets	.....	13,503	Cr. 1,972	Cr. 1,230	Cr. 349
Other miscellaneous loans	Cr. 61	Cr. 10,550	Cr. 1,157	Cr. 588	Cr. 751
	Cr. 334,927	1,051,111	368,951	92,476	146,171
Net Total of Changes in Loans and Investments	Cr. 292,563	987,954	461,055	160,152	243,123

UNMATURED FUNDED DEBT AND TREASURY BILLS AS AT MARCH 31, 1950, AND ANNUAL INTEREST THEREON

Date of Maturity	Rate per Cent	Where Payable	Amount of Loan	Annual Interest Charge
			$ cts.	$ cts.
1950, May 1	3/4	Canada	200,000,000 00	1,500,000 00
July 1	4	Canada	33,293,470 85	1,331,738 83
Sept. 1	3/4	Canada	550,000,000 00	4,125,000 00
Nov. 1	1 3/4	Canada	335,690,000 00	5,874,575 00
Nov. 1	1 3/4	Canada	400,000,000 00	7,000,000 00
1951, Feb. 1	3 1/4	Canada	(1) 50,155,600 00	1,621,932 00
June 15	3	Canada	(2) 649,969,592 50	19,306,027 50
Nov. 1	1 3/4	Canada	500,000,000 00	8,750,000 00
1952, Feb. 1	3 1/4	Canada	(3) 50,500,000 00	1,625,000 00
Nov. 1	1 1/2	Canada	300,000,000 00	4,500,000 00
1953, Mar. 1	1 1/2	Canada	325,000,000 00	4,875,000 00
1954, Mar. 1	3	Canada	(4) 676,355,489 00	20,089,767 00
1955, May 1	3 1/4	London	2,930,121 84	95,228 96
June 1	3	Canada	40,000,000 00	1,200,000 00
June 1	3	Canada	55,000,000 00	1,650,000 00
1956, Nov. 1	3	Canada	(5) 855,607,410 50	25,414,081 50
Nov. 1	2 3/4	Canada	*284,780,000 00	7,831,450 00
1957, May 1	3	Canada	1,111,261,650 00	33,337,849 50
Nov. 1	2 3/4	Canada	*155,850,000 00	4,285,875 00
1958, June 1	3	Canada	88,200,000 00	2,646,000 00
Sept. 1	4	London	1,967,941 43	78,717 66
Nov. 1	2 3/4	Canada	*161,325,000 00	4,436,437 50
1959, Jan. 1	3	Canada	1,197,324,750 00	35,919,742 50
Nov. 1	2 3/4	Canada	*293,200,000 00	8,063,000 00
1960, June 1	3	Canada	1,165,300,350 00	34,959,010 50
Oct. 1	4	New York	110,000,000 00	4,400,000 00
1961, Jan. 15	3 1/4	New York	52,800,000 00	1,716,000 00
1962, Feb. 1	3	Canada	1,315,639,200 00	39,469,176 00
1963, July 1	3 1/4	London	2,176,198 85	70,726 46
July 1	3	London	*54,812,834 29	1,644,385 03
Aug. 1	3	New York	165,000,000 00	4,950,000 00
Oct. 1	3	Canada	1,295,819,350 00	38,874,580 50
1966, June 1	3 1/4	Canada	54,703,000 00	1,777,847 50
Sept. 1	3	Canada	1,691,796,700 00	50,753,901 00
1974, Sept. 1	2 3/4	New York	110,000,000 00	3,025,000 00
Perpetual	3	Canada	55,000,000 00	1,650,000 00
1950, April 6 Treasury Bills	·513	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,750 00
April 21 Treasury Bills	·512	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,000 00
May 5 Treasury Bills	·512	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,000 00
May 26 Treasury Bills	·513	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,750 00
June 9 Treasury Bills	·513	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,750 00
June 23 Treasury Bills	·512	Canada	75,000,000 00	384,000 00
Aug. 30 Deposit Certificates	·75	Canada	100,000,000 00	750,000 00
June 15 Non-Interest Bearing Certificates	.....	Canada	*148,700 00	.....
War Savings Certificates	3	Canada	*135,000,000 00	4,050,000 00
			15,076,607,359 26	395,954,299 94
Refundable portion of excess profits tax (estimated)	.....	Canada	*115,000,000 00	.....
			15,191,607,359 26	395,954,299 94
Payable in Canada	.....	.....	14,691,920,262 85	96·71%
Payable in New York	.....	.....	437,800,000 00	2·88%
Payable in London	.....	.....	61,887,096 41	0·41%
			15,191,607,359 26	100·00%

(1) Redeemable at 100½ per cent. Amount outstanding includes $ 250,000.00 redemption bonus.
(2) Redeemable at 101 per cent. Amount outstanding includes $6,435,342.50 redemption bonus.
(3) Redeemable at 101 per cent. Amount outstanding includes $ 500,000.00 redemption bonus.
(4) Redeemable at 101 per cent. Amount outstanding includes $6,696,589.00 redemption bonus.
(5) Redeemable at 101 per cent. Amount outstanding includes $8,471,360.50 redemption bonus.
* Estimated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 29, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VISITORS IN GALLERY—HOLSTEIN BREEDERS FROM ELGIN COUNTY

Mr. C. D. Coyle (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, we have with us today in the gallery to our left a number of the members of the Holstein breeders association of the county of Elgin, which happens to be the county I represent. Through you I should like to extend to them a cordial welcome and to express the hope that they have an enjoyable time while they are in Ottawa.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

REPORT ON ORGANIZATION AND BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION—SCREENING OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, on March 8 the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) asked me if I intended to table the report being prepared by Messrs. J. D. Woods and Gordon on the organization and business practices of the national film board. At that time I had not received the report, and while I did not give a definite answer, I indicated that I expected to table it.

The investigation was undertaken at my request after consultation with Right Hon. Vincent Massey, chairman of the royal commission on the arts, letters and sciences. The terms of reference under which the investigation was conducted were discussed with Mr. Massey, who informed me that they would serve his purpose as well and that the resulting report would be useful to him.

The report has now been received, and I have given preliminary consideration to its recommendations, some of which are along lines on which the government and the board have already been proceeding, others of which will require special consideration by the film commissioner, the board and the government.

Meanwhile, I feel that it would be of advantage to make the report public so that hon. members and others interested may also have the opportunity of considering its recommendations and the reasons given for them. I would accordingly ask the leave of the house to table a copy of the report. In offering to table it, I should emphasize that it is not a governmental document which there is any obligation to table, and that I should not like my action in this case to be construed in the future as a precedent which would prevent the government from securing confidential expert advice in dealing with administrative problems.

In the present case I think there is something to be gained by discussion of the problems set forth in the report and of the solutions suggested.

I am gratified, and I am sure most hon. members will be equally gratified, by the tribute paid by these experienced business consultants to the achievements of the board and to the high level of service of the board's employees.

The report indicates that where there are weaknesses in the organization and methods of the board, they are in most cases the natural outcome of a rapid period of growth under the exceptional circumstances of war. The situation was aggravated by the obviously inefficient arrangements for housing the board's activities, which were, in turn, the inevitable result of the space problem all government agencies have faced during and since the war.

I shall not attempt today to indicate how far and how rapidly the government will be able to implement the recommendations, some of which incidentally do not call for immediate action. Since I asked Messrs. J. D. Woods and Gordon to make the investigation, Mr. W. Arthur Irwin has been appointed government film commissioner, and, as the report itself suggests, the commissioner should have ample opportunity to review the organization and activities of the board before final decisions are made.

I should like to take advantage of this occasion to say a word about another matter relating to the film board. The screening of the national film board, undertaken last year in conformity with the government's established security regulations, has proceeded to the point where it was possible for me on February 21 to direct the commissioner to inform all government departments and agencies concerned that the board was in a position to undertake work of a secret nature. This of course applies to the Department of National Defence, and on the same day I advised the Minister of National Defence accordingly.

The screening of all employees of the board has been completed. Action has been taken in the case of a very few employees about whose trustworthiness the board was unable to feel any definite assurance. I hope no hon. member will press for details in the house about these matters, at least not until he has discussed confidentially with me any case that may be giving him concern. The reason is the one I gave the house on December 7, and which I should now like to repeat, namely that:

> It would be a grave injustice to such persons—against whom there is no charge of wrongdoing, but merely the absence of satisfactory evidence of trustworthiness—to proclaim their names publicly and thereby injure their reputations and their chances of alternative employment. What I wish to emphasize is that it is not the government which would be hurt by publicity but the men and women whose reliability and trustworthiness are under examination; and nobody wants to be unfair and unjust to individuals.

I think I should make one other point. The process of screening of government employees is a continuous one. There is the usual turnover, with new employees being taken on; but it is the earnest hope of all who have been concerned with this matter that the number of cases of untrustworthiness in the future will be as rare as they have so far proved to be.

Mr. Fraser: I should like to thank the minister for tabling the report. I think it is in the interests of the welfare of the national film board for the present and the future. I hope there is more than one copy of it; otherwise members will not have a chance to go through it.

Mr. Fleming: I do not want any of the details that the minister suggests should not be asked for, but would the minister care to indicate the number of the cases to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Graydon: How many ministers are there over there?

Mr. Martin: Twenty-one.

An hon. Member: More than there are on your side.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I should tell the house that during the course of the screening there were some 580 odd files examined, and as a result thereof, and for reasons which could be attributed to the security screening, there were three separations from the board.

Mr. Coldwell: I should like to ask a supplementary question, as to how the screening was carried on in connection with the three employees of the film board to whom reference has been made. Were they given a hearing before their employment was terminated? What opportunity did they have to meet the charges, if we can call them charges, that were made against them? Was any such opportunity afforded?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I said the persons concerned were given every consideration. As I have said before, it is a question of trustworthiness, and in that connection I would refer to what Mr. Ilsley said in the house in 1948, that there are no precise tests by which one can judge the matter of trustworthiness.

Mr. Fraser: Were they transferred to another department, or just let out?

Mr. Winters: There was a separation from the board. I have not followed the cases since that time.

OLEOMARGARINE

PRODUCTION IN 1949 AND EFFECT ON BUTTER CONSUMPTION

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement. Last night, in the course of discussion of Bill No. 17 in committee, the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) asked some questions as to the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) answered and said that the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada was better than 3 million pounds per month, making an approximate total of 40 million pounds for the year 1949. Some exception was taken to this statement, and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) asked that the matter be laid over, and requested that I make a statement today.

The total amount of oleomargarine manufactured in Canada last year was 73,958,000 pounds, and owing to the manufacture of oleomargarine the consumption of butter decreased in 1949 compared with 1948 to the extent of three and one-half million pounds per month, making a total of 42,345,461 pounds. It was this figure that the Minister of Agriculture used in his reply to the hon. member for Souris. The remainder of the oleomargarine either went into increased consumption or took the place of lard or shortening.

There were other questions asked by the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton). Unfortunately I have not received yesterday's Hansard yet, and I am not sure of the exact questions. I will try to answer them later.

Mr. Drew: As a matter of information, from what source does the parliamentary assistant obtain the figure of the decrease in consumption of butter in relation to the consumption of oleomargarine?

Mr. McCubbin: This is a statement given to us by the dairy officials of our department. I am only taking the figures of the amount of butter used in 1948 compared with the consumption in 1949.

Mr. Drew: After all, a statement of this kind is only useful if the basis upon which it is given is understood. The parliamentary assistant confirmed the earlier answer that was given as to the production of oleomargarine, namely, that 73 million odd pounds were manufactured last year. He went on to explain that the resulting decrease in butter sales amounted to something over 3 million pounds a month. I think it would be helpful to know how that figure can be determined.

Mr. McCubbin: Mr. Speaker, it is just as I have said. I can give to the leader of the opposition the figures indicating the consumption of butter per month in 1948 and the consumption in 1949, in which year there was a decrease compared with 1948. We take the stand that the 73 million pounds of oleomargarine represents what consumers ate, or what was used in place of lard or shortening.

Mr. Cardiff: In the statement just made by the parliamentary assistant, he said, as I understood him, that some 70 million pounds of oleomargarine had been used. I think he meant manufactured, did he not? Did he say "used" or "manufactured"?

Mr. McCubbin: I said that some 74 million pounds were manufactured, and that between 71 and 72 million pounds had disappeared.

Mr. Cardiff: Do I understand, then, that in 1949 we used 72 million pounds of oleomargarine?

Mr. McCubbin: We know how much was manufactured last year and we know what disappeared, by being used as a spread or made into lard or shortening; and some may be still in store. That quantity has disappeared, however.

PRECIOUS METALS MARKING ACT

EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO ARTICLES OF PALLADIUM

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. 83 (from the Senate), to amend the Precious Metals Marking Act, 1946.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CATTLE—TESTS FOR T.B. REACTORS—RESTRICTED AREAS

Mr. Bryce:

1. How many T.B. free areas have been established in Canada, by provinces, up to and including 1949?

2. What percentage of the cattle population, by provinces, would this represent?

3. How many areas, by provinces, are being tested this year?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Number of restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis by provinces, established by orders in council up to December 31, 1949: Newfoundland, nil; Prince Edward Island, 3; Nova Scotia, 18; New Brunswick, 15; Quebec, 70; Ontario, 52; Manitoba, 94; Saskatchewan, 169; Alberta, 28; British Columbia, 3; total, 452.

2. Percentage of cattle population by provinces in accepted areas: Newfoundland, nil; Prince Edward Island, 100 per cent; Nova Scotia, 100 per cent; New Brunswick, 100 per cent; Quebec, 83 per cent; Ontario 97 per cent; Manitoba, 76 per cent; Saskatchewan, 52 per cent; Alberta, 16 per cent; British Columbia, 34 per cent.

3. Number of areas tested or under test in fiscal period 1949-50: Prince Edward Island, 3; Nova Scotia, 6; New Brunswick, 2; Quebec, 35; Ontario, 44; Manitoba, 32; Saskatchewan, 39; Alberta, 5; British Columbia, 1.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EQUIPMENT AT MACDONALD, MAN.

Mr. Sinnott:

1. How much equipment is held by the Department of National Defence at Macdonald, Manitoba?

2. Can any of this equipment be bought for public use?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. 2,250 units of engineering, technical and armoured service equipment including personnel and load carrying vehicles.

2. No. These are required by the Department of National Defence.

NAVY, ARMY AND AIR FORCE—ESTABLISHMENT AND STRENGTH

Mr. Fulton:

1. What is the present actual strength of officers and men respectively in (a) the Royal Canadian Navy; (b) the Canadian Army; (c) the Royal Canadian Air Force?

2. What is the authorized full establishment of officers and men respectively in (a) the Royal Canadian Navy; (b) the Canadian Army; (c) the Royal Canadian Air Force?

Questions

3. What is the present authorized ceiling for recruitment of officers and men respectively in (a) the Royal Canadian Navy; (b) the Canadian Army; (c) the Royal Canadian Air Force?

4. What are the same figures as asked for under questions 1, 2 and 3 respectively, for the reserve navy, army and air force?

Mr. Blanchette:

(As at February 28, 1950)

1. Actual strength:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	1,292	8,029	9,321
(b) Army	2,756	17,966	20,722
(c) Air	3,127	14,141	17,268
Total	7,175	40,136	47,311

2. Authorized establishment:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	1,399	7,648	9,047
(b) Army	3,019	20,015	23,034
(c) Air	3,490	14,788	18,278
Total	7,908	42,451	50,359

3. Ceiling for recruiting as at present:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	1,584	8,016	9,600
(b) Army	3,019	17,981	21,000
(c) Air	3,490	14,310	17,800
Total	8,093	40,307	48,400

4. Actual strength:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	906	2,660	3,566
(b) Army	5,985	36,584	42,569
(c) Air	1,103	1,674	2,777
Total	7,994	40,918	48,912

The above numbers do not include 1,153 students in the university naval training division; 2,698 in the Canadian officers' training corps; 693 in the university air training plan; and 309 attending the services colleges, of whom 87 are navy, 131 army and 91 air force.

Reserve establishment for long term planning purposes:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	2,925	4,575	7,500
(b) Army	12,600	77,400	90,000
(c) Air	8,120	6,380	14,500
Total	23,645	88,355	112,000

[Mr. Fulton.]

Target fixed for 1950-51:

	Officers	Men	Total
(a) Navy	1,784	2,716	4,500
(b) Army	6,750	38,250	45,000
(c) Air	1,147	4,598	5,745
Total	9,681	45,564	55,245

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM BACON CONTRACT

Mr. Bryce:

1. For how many pounds of bacon was the 1949 United Kingdom contract?

2. How many pounds did Canada supply up to the 31st of December, 1949, on the 1949 contract?

3. How many pounds did Canada send this year on this 1949 contract at the 1949 prices?

4. How many pounds has Canada supplied on the new contract up to the 1st March, 1950, at the 1950 prices?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. 160 million pounds.

2. Shipped and in cure as of December 31, 1949, for 1949 contract, 100,484,314 pounds.

3. Balance of bacon put to cure in 1949 and cleared from Canadian seaboard in 1950 on 1949 contract, 27,971,592 pounds.

4. Shipped and in cure as of week ending March 4, 1950, for 1950 contract, 3,254,368 pounds.

MARKETING OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. Argue:

1. What boards or agencies have been granted authority by the governor in council, under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, to regulate the marketing of agricultural products in interprovincial and export trade?

2. What products are being handled by each board or agency?

3. What regulations have been passed by the governor in council under section 3 of the act?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. The Nova Scotia marketing board with respect to apples; the British Columbia fruit board; the British Columbia coast vegetable marketing board; the British Columbia interior vegetable marketing board.

2. The Nova Scotia marketing board authority is granted in interprovincial and export trade with respect to marketing apples only.

The British Columbia fruit board authority is granted with respect to marketing apples and tree fruits generally.

The British Columbia coast vegetable marketing board and the British Columbia interior vegetable marketing board have been granted authority with respect to marketing potatoes and other vegetables.

3. No regulations other than those included in the orders granting the authority for each board to extend specific powers in interprovincial and export trade have been approved or are in effect under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act.

COLD STORAGE SUBSIDIES

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

1. How many applications were received for cold storage subsidies under the Cold Storage Act, 1907, during each of the years 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949?
2. In each of these years, how many such applications were (a) approved; (b) refused; (c) under consideration?
3. In the province of Nova Scotia, to whom, and in what amounts were subsidies paid in each of these years?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. 1946, 25; 1947, 15; 1948, 32; 1949, 18.

2. (a) approved: 1946, 21; 1947, 10; 1948, 25; 1949, 13.

(b) refused: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, nil; 1949, nil.

(c) still under consideration: 1946, 4; 1947, 5; 1948, 7; 1949, 5.

3. United Fruit Companies of Nova Scotia, Limited:

Canning: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, $42,830.87; 1949, $19,987.74.

Coldbrook: (1) 1946, nil; 1947, $38,082.06; 1948, $17,771.63; 1949, $10,155.22. (2) 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, nil, 1949, $37,009.59.

Middleton: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, nil; 1949, $36,626.90.

Musquodoboit Valley Co-operative Ltd., Middle Musquodoboit, N.S.: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, nil; 1949, $1,083.41.

ACA Co-operative Association Limited, New Minas, N.S.: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, $8,198.88; 1949, $3,826.14.

Scotsburn Co-operative Creamery Limited, Scotsburn, N.S.: 1946, nil; 1947, nil; 1948, $4,812.24; 1949, $2,245.71.

MATTHEW HALTON

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth):

1. Is Matthew Halton an employee of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?
2. If so, when was he first employed by the corporation?
3. At what Canadian Broadcasting Corporation stations has he been employed, and for what period at each of them?
4. Where is he presently employed, when was he appointed, and what are his duties?
5. Does he express views held by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. McCann:

1. He is employed on a retaining fee basis.

2. June 15, 1943.

3. None.

4. He is based in London, England. He was retained in 1943 as a war correspondent. He is correspondent and commentator.

5. No.

C.B.C. PROGRAM "CITIZENS' FORUM"

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth):

1. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, over its trans-Canada network, carry a program known as "Citizens' Forum?"
2. If so, what is the purpose of this program?
3. Who arranges the programs, and who selects the speakers?
4. Has there recently been, on this program, a discussion concerning pensions for industrial workers?
5. If so, were there representatives of (a) workers or labour unions; (b) management?

Mr. McCann:

1. Yes.

2. To bring to Canadian listeners an exchange of views on public issues and to stimulate discussion among the listening audience.

3. The program is arranged by the C.B.C. in co-operation with the Canadian Association for Adult Education. Speakers are selected by the C.B.C. in consultation with a large number of organizations and individuals.

4. Yes.

5. Different participants spoke from labour and business management points of view.

COAL MINING—ASSISTANCE TO SASKATCHEWAN OPERATORS

Mr. Shaw:

1. Has the government provided any direct financial assistance since January 1, 1940, to establish coal mine operators in Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia, for improvement in efficiency of their operations through rehabilitation or mechanization?
2. If so, what are the names of all such operators, and what was the nature and amount of assistance granted in each case?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Apart from assistance paid to various western coal mine operators as a war measure and defined in the report of the royal commission on coal, there have been no payments by government of any direct financial assistance to coal mine operators in Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia for specific improvement in efficiency of operations through rehabilitation or mechanization.

2. Answered by No. 1.

FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL HEALTH LABORATORIES

Mr. Ross (Hamilton East):

Is there any duplication in the work carried out by the laboratory of hygiene and that carried out by the provincial public health laboratories?

Mr. Martin: No. The laboratory of hygiene provides special services to the provincial laboratories which they are unable to supply for themselves, that is, investigation of outbreaks of virus diseases, laboratory diagnosis of virus infections, et cetera.

The provincial laboratories conduct certain routine diagnostic tests on specimens which, though primarily the responsibility of the federal government, would be difficult, if not impossible, to ship to the laboratory of hygiene.

Any possibility of duplication is prevented by the close collaboration and consultation afforded by the technical advisory committee on public health laboratory services. This committee is composed of the director of each provincial laboratory and representatives from the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Defence, under the chairmanship of the chief, laboratory of hygiene, together with technical consultants as required.

STEEP ROCK IRON MINES—SUBSIDIES

Mr. Coldwell:

1. Is the federal government subsidizing in any way the production of iron at the Steep Rock iron mines?

2. If so, what is the rate of subsidization, and what has been the amount of it paid in each of the last four years?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. As a protection against the possible shortage of iron ore to meet war requirements, the government entered into an agreement with the Canadian National Railway Company in 1942 to assist in the development of this iron ore deposit, under which the government agreed to:

(a) Assist the railway to reduce the freight rate between the mine and Port Arthur, on the first 5 million gross tons of ore handled to the extent of 20 cents per gross ton, to be paid by the government to the railway.

(b) Assume the cost of construction of a railway spur from a point on the Canadian National railway line, approximately 1·5 miles west of Atikokan in a northerly direction to the mine property, a distance of approximately 3·3 miles, and an ore dock at Port Arthur, Ontario, together with storage and connecting trackage to handle the ore shipments.

The Canadian National Railway Company agreed to:

(i) Manage and operate the properties constructed by the government at their own expense.

(ii) Pay the government 6 cents per gross ton on all ore handled over the Port Arthur ore dock to be applied in amortization of the cost, without interest, of the spur, ore dock and track facilities.

(iii) Establish a rate of $1.32 per gross ton for the transportation of the first 5 million gross tons of ore from the mine to Port Arthur, which includes switching and handling charges; $1.12 per gross ton to be paid by the mining company and 20 cents per gross ton to be contributed by the government.

2. Payments by the government of 20 cents per gross ton towards reduction in the freight rate:

Fiscal year
1946-47	$165,829.95
1947-48	240,536.92
1948-49	136,553.43
1949-50	226,419.33

Payments by the government covering the cost of constructing the spur, ore dock and track facilities:

Fiscal year
1946-47	$380,818.57
1947-48	43,668.25
1948-49	197,397.33
1949-50 (to date)	22,170.55

Recoveries by the government under the amortization clause in the agreement, being 6 cents per gross ton on ore handled over the Port Arthur ore dock:

Fiscal year
1946-47	$ 47,749.00
1947-48	72,161.08
1948-49	40,966.03
1949-50	67,925.80

CIVIL AVIATION—SELECTION OF PILOTS

Mr. Whitman:

To what extent does Canada follow the United States, the United Kingdom and the international civil aviation organization in the system of selection of civil pilots from the point of view of physical and mental fitness to assume flying duties?

Mr. Martin: While the Department of Transport is charged with the actual licensing of all civil pilots, the Department of National Health and Welfare advises, by a set medical examination, on the physical fitness of all civil pilot licence holders. Through the Department of National Health and Welfare the civil pilot medical examiners are kept up to date on new advances and requirements in aviation medicine and are given a brief but intensive course in the theory and practice of aviation medicine. Physical fitness standards for civil pilots in Canada are no less strict than those in the United Kingdom and the United States, but are probably more effectively administered as Canada is the only country that has yet given training in aviation medicine to civil pilot medical examiners.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Knowles:

1. What was the total amount paid out in family allowances from April 1, 1946, to March 31, 1949, or during the nearest three-year period thereto for which records are available?
2. What was the total cost of administration of family allowances, not including payments covered by question 1, for the same three-year period?
3. What percentage did said total cost of administration bear to the total amount of allowances paid out?
4. What was the total amount paid out in old age pensions, including the federal and provincial portions thereof, from April 1, 1946, to March 31, 1949, or during the nearest three-year period thereto for which records are available?
5. What was the total cost of administration of old age pensions, not including pensions paid as covered by question 4, but including both federal and provincial administration costs, for the same three-year period?
6. What percentage did said total cost of administration bear to the total amount of pensions paid out?

VEGETABLE OIL IMPORTS

Mr. Hatfield:

1. What quantity of vegetable oil per month was imported into Canada in the year 1949?
2. What countries was this oil imported from?
3. Are there restrictions against the importation of vegetable oil?

Mr. McIlraith: Return tabled.

OLEOMARGARINE—IMPORTS OF VEGETABLE OIL

Mr. Hatfield:

1. Do the importers of vegetable oil for the manufacture of oleomargarine require a permit from the import branch or finance department?
2. What amount of American dollars was furnished to the manufacturers of oleomargarine for the importation of vegetable oils?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

REPORTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all reports in the possession of the unemployment insurance commission, dated since September 1, 1949, having to do with unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): If my hon. friend is willing to allow this motion to be amended by excluding any interdepartmental or privileged papers, we shall be prepared to let it pass.

Mr. Knowles: Could the parliamentary assistant explain what he means by privileged papers in this connection?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): I took a good deal of time in the house last week, on a motion similar to this, to explain what was involved in the departmental papers, and I do not think I should repeat what I said at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as modified?

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

REPORTED EVICTION OF TENANTS FROM PROPERTY IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to ask a question which I believe should be directed to the Minister of Resources and Development, though I am not sure. In view of the housing shortage, why are the tenants of a federal government property at 50 Argyle avenue, Ottawa, comprising some fifty adults and one hundred children, being given notice of eviction on June 15 in order to provide, it is alleged, further conveniences for the Supertest Petroleum Company?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): This question is directed to me, and I have received notice of it. The answer, so far as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned, is that the administration of the buildings in question is the responsibility of the city of Ottawa.

Mr. Coldwell: The city of Ottawa has them under some lease from the government?

Mr. Winters: I cannot say.

Mr. Coldwell: Can the government not intervene and stop these evictions, in view of the housing shortage?

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SEA ISLAND, B.C., AIR FORCE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): On March 23 I asked a question of the Minister of National Defence concerning the evictions which were to take place from the emergency housing accommodation at the R.C.A.F. Sea Island station. The minister said he would take up the matter with the Vancouver authorities. Can the acting minister give me an answer now? I understood they were to move out by April 1.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Acting Minister of National Defence): I shall take notice of my hon. friend's question and look into the matter immediately.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for the second reading of Bill No. 56, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned last evening I had pointed out that in addition to the powers conferred by the continuation of the wartime leasehold regulations, which were known as P.C. 9029, very wide powers were carried forward by the continuation of P.C. 8528. I further pointed out that those continuing powers went far beyond the continuation of the board that is necessary for the administration of the rent control regulations and that the continuation of this order provides authority to deal with most of the activities of our people in this country, including their personal services. Last night I said also that it was possible for the government to remove any uncertainty, because the government could, by order in council, revoke any part of P.C. 8528 which is not necessary for carrying on the rent control provisions. I believe such a provision is contained in the act to which assent was given on May 14, 1947. In section 4 of that act we find these words:

> The governor in council may revoke in whole or in part any order or regulation continued in force by or made under this act.

Other hon. members have put forward the argument, as I have, Mr. Speaker, that we should not be dealing with the continuation of this wartime rent control order, but rather with a rent control bill which would clearly define the rights of tenants as well as of landlords. I am sure that proposition is sound; I am sure it is consistent with our established principle of parliamentary responsibility. Nevertheless we are confronted with the inescapable fact that, by virtue of the delay of the government in presenting this measure to the house, there is now no possibility of dealing in a practical way with the alternative legislation which should have been put before us. We cannot fail to bear in mind that this control measure, unsatisfactory though it is, will terminate at midnight tomorrow night. For that reason it is certainly not my intention to oppose the passing of this bill, recognizing, as I do, that unless it is passed there will be no continuation of rent control.

Having said that, however, I do not think that the necessity for continuing the rent control measure in this unsatisfactory form should justify the continuing of measures under a wartime order in council, which places the whole of the human activity of Canada under arbitrary control if the government should choose to exercise it. Last night I expressed the hope that the government would take the simple steps necessary to remove any uncertainty, and revoke every part of that order except the part which sets up the board. It is still possible for the government to follow that course before this bill receives final reading.

Many hon. members do not seem to believe there is any occasion to question the existence of wide powers such as these. They seem to feel that until something has actually been done under orders of this kind, there is no reason for anyone to be greatly exercised about them. Merely by way of illustration, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out something that has recently been done under other powers, which illustrates the danger of permitting the government to use these loose powers for other purposes than those which were intended.

Doubtless every member of this house has seen reports in the press to the effect that a number of Canadians have been recently denied the use of the mails. This is a matter of greater significance than may appear on the surface. An explanation of what had happened was given by Mr. Turnbull, the deputy postmaster general. The explanation was as follows: Complaints had been received that certain people were using the mail for the purpose of soliciting the purchase of securities of various kinds. According to press reports, Mr. Turnbull explained that upon receiving complaints and examining these circulars, which related to oil development in Alberta, inspectors had been dispatched to examine the properties described. If it was found that what they saw at the property did not conform with the description in the circulars, the department took the step of denying the use of the mail to the people who had been sending those circulars.

This raises an extremely important issue, Mr. Speaker. It is clearly illustrative of the dangers of loose powers of this kind. In effect, what is being done by the postal authorities is the setting up of a securities commission in Ottawa, without any member of this house having given approval to that course. Do not let anyone suggest I am in any way seeking to prevent most effective steps being taken to restrain those who would sell securities, or anything else, by improper methods, or by circulars containing information which does not conform with the facts. But let us see exactly what has happened in this case. Someone has complained that the circulars do not correctly describe the properties or the ventures in relation to which securities are offered to the public. Then, acting as though it were a securities commission, the Post Office Department sends someone to ascertain whether, in his opinion, the property actually is in accordance with the description. The reason that this practice is so objectionable, Mr. Speaker, is this. There are laws dealing with matters of that kind. The Criminal Code clearly provides severe penalties for the use of circulars which improperly describe a property or ventures in relation to which securities are offered to the public. If circulars have been issued which do not correctly describe the properties or ventures which are referred to, and are therefore misleading the public, charges should be laid under the Criminal Code. I think every hon. member in this house would hope that charges would be laid. In my own opinion, charges are long overdue in regard to a number of the circulars which have been issued with respect to certain properties. But no member of this house has been called upon to say what kind of securities commission he wants set up. No member of this house has been asked to express his opinion as to how wide those powers should be. No member of this house has been told how a securities commission in Ottawa is going to relate its activities to those of securities commissions in the provinces. In fact, no member of this house and no member of parliament has authorized the Post Office Department or any other department to act in this way.

Mr. Sinclair: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Drew: Yes.

Mr. Sinclair: What relation have these remarks to the actual bill that is now under discussion?

Mr. Drew: In view of the fact that last night, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary assistant seemed to be wholly unaware of the dangers of such procedures, I was trying to illustrate to him exactly the dangers that are inherent in loose powers of this kind.

Mr. Sinclair: That is most thoughtful of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Drew: I am giving this information which, I admit, may not greatly help the parliamentary assistant, because it is quite obvious that he has not informed himself—or had not up until last night—in regard to the legislation which is before us. It is for this reason that I am hoping that, by an illustration of this kind, hon. members may be made aware of the dangers of loose powers exercised without the authority of parliament.

I return to the illustration I was giving. Since this is a current illustration, it should be the very kind that would help hon. members to understand why we should be exceedingly careful to see to it that the authority of parliament is respected. I think it must be of some interest to hon. members that these orders restraining the use of the mails by certain Canadians happened to coincide with similar orders made in the United States; it seemed to be a remarkable coincidence that our Post Office Department had acted at the same time as the United States, and in relation to the same people.

So far as I am aware, this parliament has not yet authorized anyone to act under instructions of the securities exchange commission in the United States; and I hope the time will not come when this parliament will ever authorize any Canadian official so to do. By all means let us co-operate to the very limit in preventing the issue of fraudulent circulars or fraudulent documents of any kind. But let us remember that in the United States there are procedures which have no place in this country under our legal system. Let us remember that the United States have a practice of issuing in a loose way orders which deny certain rights to citizens and which do not bear any resemblance to any procedure we have. In Canada we insist that our citizens be able to have their rights determined before the courts. In this particular case the Post Office Department, doubtless believing that it is acting in the best interests of the public, is exercising powers which were never extended intentionally by parliament, and is doing indirectly something that I am convinced parliament would not authorize.

I give that illustration because it indicates exactly the sort of thing that can happen under the wide powers granted and continued under this act, not in relation to rent controls but in relation to other matters—in relation to the control of personal services, the handling of goods, and other activities. I can only repeat that the government should not leave these powers in such a position that they can be put into effect by anyone and that Canadians may find themselves being dealt with under a procedure which denies to them the ordinary access to the courts.

I am not going to introduce an amendment, for the simple reason that, because of this confused procedure being followed by the government, we are dealing with an act which merely continues an order in council that could be revoked this afternoon. Consequently it is almost impossible, from the practical point of view, to deal with this particular subject. It is like dealing with quicksilver. This afternoon we might introduce an amendment dealing with a particular aspect of this matter, and it could be disposed of by order in council, as it should be. I present these arguments merely in the hope that the government, before this bill is finally dealt with, will remove from this continuing P.C. 8528 all those powers which do not actually relate to the setting up of the board which is necessary for rent controls.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I shall not detain the house for more than a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. For reasons that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave in his speech yesterday, and for some of the reasons which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) has placed before the house today, I believe that we should be considering a statute in which the powers relating to rent control would be clearly set out. Nevertheless, for the reasons the leader of the opposition gave a few moments ago, and because of the pressure of time—although there is still time for the government to reconsider its position in this respect—we propose to vote for the bill as introduced.

What I really rose to do, sir, was to pursue a question that I asked this afternoon of the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters), because it comes under the head of housing accommodation and rent controls. I have now a more complete written answer from the minister, which was handed to me a moment ago by a page boy, upon which I wish to make one or two comments. After all, rent control is a minor matter when we consider the need for housing accommodation. In his answer to the question I asked today with regard to the eviction from 50 Argyle avenue in this city of some fifty families and one hundred children, the minister said that the responsibility for the administration of emergency housing at 50 Argyle avenue, which was erected during the war on real property leased to the crown by a petroleum company, is in the hands of the city of Ottawa. What I wish to do is to comment on the part of the answer that the minister did not read, and which states:

> At the conclusion of hostilities the Argyle barracks was leased by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the city of Ottawa for use as an emergency shelter accommodation.

Consequently it appears that this property was leased by the crown during the war and again was leased after the war by a crown organization, namely, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. What I am anxious to find out is how long this lease lasted; is it still in effect; and why, in view of the rental and housing conditions in this city, a piece of property housing fifty families is being returned to a petroleum company which, according to the information I have, merely desires to turn it into a parking place for automobiles. It seems to me that the need of the people to park themselves and their children is much more urgent than the parking of automobiles.

I appeal to the government to look into this matter, to reconsider it, and to see that while the housing shortage lasts in this city, both emergency accommodation of this kind and ordinary accommodation for rent are made available to hard-pressed families and not handed over to a petroleum company for the parking of automobiles.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No. Now that it is apparently clear that the government is prepared to disregard—indeed I might say treat with studied contempt—the serious legal argument which was put before this house last night by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), and by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), I should like to say a word or two about it.

I must confess I hoped that the matter would not have been dealt with in this way. In the last parliament, when the majority was not so great, it would not have been dealt with in this way. But now we are getting used to the experience of having this house treated with what I think it is no exaggeration to characterize as studied contempt.

I just wish to point out that this argument was made last night in what seemed to me to be a cogent way. I do not propose to repeat it; I just wish to draw the attention of the house to what happened. Was the argument answered by any of the eminent gentlemen of legal talents who occupy the government benches? No, it was not.

Mr. Sinclair: They have not had a chance.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): You have that chance today. That is why I am making the point.

Mr. Sinclair: The hon. gentleman knew I wanted to rise. He rose first. I gave him the courtesy to go ahead.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am sorry; I did not know the hon. gentleman was going to rise. I waited until the Speaker was on his feet. I suggest he might have escaped this speech, which he may not altogether like, if he had been a little more prompt in rising. I waited, as I say, until I thought everyone was through, until the Speaker was on his feet. If I had any reason to suspect that the hon. gentleman was going to speak—

Mr. Sinclair: I want to tell the hon. gentleman that to get ready for my speech I spent all morning in reading over the speeches of the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Drew), and that was no pleasure, I can tell you.

Mr. Cruickshank: Two Rhodes scholars ought to be good.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We will listen with interest to what the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) is going to tell us. But with the array of legal talent that we have on the other side, it seems to me that we might be entitled to have someone speak who has been legally trained—not that I am trying to exaggerate legal training entirely. I had a little myself once, but it has mostly faded away. It may be of course that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano was going to read us an opinion from the Department of Justice, which, if he does, will qualify what I have to say.

Mr. Sinclair: I will not.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): If we are going to have merely the opinion of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano in answer to what was said here last night, all I can say is that it will have as much value as my opinion on how best to construct the bridge which I understand recently fell into difficulties in the constituency of the hon. gentleman who is going to speak next. But I will say this for him: whatever he says he will say with that tranquil consciousness of effortless superiority which endears him to us. He is probably familiar with that phrase; I did not invent it.

Mr. Sinclair: It was invented thirty years ago in the Oxford union; it has a beard on it.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to say one or two things. I shall be brief, because I am looking forward very much to the speech of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I am only sorry that I got ahead of him purely by accident. I would never do it wittingly; but I just want to make two points.

First of all, the leader of the opposition has made clear beyond peradventure the danger that there is with power lying about loose. I am sorry if the hon. member for Coast-Capilano did not understand the illustration given. In case he did not understand it, he can easily get one by looking back over the proceedings of this house. If he will look at Hansard of December 16, 1947, he will find a reference there to action taken by the Minister of Finance of this very kind, namely, powers exercised that this house had been assured were not residing in the legislation, and which to the surprise of everybody, apparently to the surprise of the ministry itself, were found to reside there, and were used, as the hon. member will recall, with great effect.

The second thing I want to say is this: This kind of treatment is part of a pattern that we are growing used to. I give one illustration; it has been in my mind ever since it happened, and I shall never have a better opportunity to get it off my mind than now. When this house opened in February the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), in a nonchalant way, undertook to invade one of the traditional privileges of this house, namely, the priority of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The leader of the opposition, in what I thought was a quiet, cogent, well reasoned speech, suggested that he should not have done that. In the course of his speech he also quoted some cogent phrases from the former prime minister of this country, whose opinion at one time was highly regarded by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house. I am not really complaining primarily that the views of the leader of the opposition, or of the former prime minister of Canada, were not followed; what I am complaining about is that that argument was not answered. All the Prime Minister said in reply was that he thought it was more convenient to proceed otherwise, and he did not deign to answer the argument which I thought any fair-minded man would say was a cogent one.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is part of a pattern; that is the kind of thing that we are getting used to in this house, and apparently we have to go on being used to it as long as there is this huge majority which will vote right. The only other thing I have to say is that I am very sorry I had to make this speech without the benefit of hearing the speech of the member for Coast-Capilano. I presume we shall now hear from him.

Mr. James Sinclair (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the last two speakers have started off by saying that their remarks were to be brief, and their remarks were brief. I, too, would have made my remarks brief except for a few things that happened last night. The Liberal members of this house have been put in an unfortunate position by the pressure of government business. Because we have no desire to stop the passage of these bills, which must be through before the end of the month, we have sat here in silence, a silence which has apparently passed for assent. At the same time the members of the opposition, as is their parliamentary right, have made long and protracted speeches about many things, working many things into many bills, as for example the leader of the opposition worked section 7(b) of the Postal Act into the act on transitional measures.

Last night at about ten minutes to eleven the leader of the opposition had just about concluded his remarks. I indicated to the house leader that I would try to finish the bill out in ten minutes, in which event it would have been over to the Senate today. However, the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman) made some remarks to the leader of the opposition which encouraged him to continue for the ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinclair: I am going to give proof of this.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Take it.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we shall listen to a number of extremely remarkable statements, but that is the most remarkable that I have heard yet, and one that has no relation to the truth.

Mr. Sinclair: The few hon. members who were here last night will recall the circumstances, as will the house leader and the leader of the opposition. I have brought in a little documentary proof, because I know from long past experience that the leader of the opposition generally substitutes a flat assertion for argument. If he takes Hansard —Hansard is not yet out—I went up to the Hansard office to get the manuscript—he will see that after concluding his main remarks from ten minutes to eleven until eleven o'clock he regaled this house, with obvious personal relish, with excerpts from his old speeches, a peculiar form of narcissism to which he is frequently addicted.

Mr. Fleming: What about Mr. Mackenzie King?

Mr. Sinclair: May I tell my hon. friend that I spent all morning reading his many speeches, all really the same speech, but I shall come back to him in ten or fifteen minutes. The first thing I should like to do is to speak to the bill which is now before us. I should like to give a short history and some reasons why after eight years we are asking for the last thirteen months continuation of the few measures which are still in effect.

This bill really stems back to the War Measures Act which was passed in 1914 by the Borden government. That was a most necessary measure and gave the government of that day wide powers and the ability to act speedily and with flexibility on the very grave and pressing problems which occur in wartime. Then at the end of the war, in 1918, the Conservative government of that day did not repeal the War Measures Act, but continued to use it—it was a matter of judgment—to enable them to hurdle the transitional period which always comes after the end of every war. The War Measures Act remained on the books then for 20 years and it was again made effective on September 1, 1939, when a state of war with the German reich was declared by this government although the actual declaration of war awaited action by parliament.

Looking back I think it was very useful that the War Measures Act had remained on the statute books of Canada for that period. The government of the day had the power to take action quickly. Under the War Measures Act as it was reinvoked in September, 1939, the government had wide powers to deal with the many emergencies which promptly arose. One of the first, of course, was the great dislocation in the ordinary economy of this country caused mainly by the artificial shortages which had occurred from the channelling of labour into the armed services and into war industries which resulted in shortages of materials and supplies. Therefore, it was necessary to impose controls which we would normally regard as unjustifiable in a free economy, controls to ensure that our economy would remain on an even balance, controls to ensure that everyone in this country would have a fair share at a fair price of what goods there were.

I think the system of price control built up by the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley and administered by Mr. Donald Gordon was the best in the world and it certainly won the admiration of the Canadian people; not perhaps all those who are professional politicians, but the little people of Canada who were protected by these controls.

In 1945 the Liberal government of that day, unlike the Conservative government of 1919, did not continue in effect the War Measures Act. On the other hand, they said that the time had come to come back to parliament for further authority, which they did in the fall session of 1945 after winning a really democratic vote of confidence of the people of Canada in their conduct of measures like this. I should like to read the preamble to the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, as follows:

> And whereas during the national emergency arising by reason of the war against Germany and Japan measures have been adopted under the War Measures Act for the military requirements and security of Canada and the maintenance of economic stability; and whereas the national emergency arising out of the war has continued since the unconditional surrender of Germany and Japan and is still continuing; and whereas it is essential in the national interest that certain transitional powers continue to be exercisable by the governor in council during the continuation of the exceptional conditions brought about by the war—

This is the important part of the statement:

—and it is preferable that such transitional powers be exercised hereafter under special authority in that behalf conferred by parliament instead of being exercised under the War Measures Act;

So we had the first of the transitional powers acts coming forward, as hon. members who were here will recall, in the fall session of 1945. It extended the powers for one year because even then the government was hopeful that the transitional period would pass quickly and did not ask for any longer extension of time. By 1946 conditions had improved to some extent as far as the free flow of goods was concerned and added relaxations were possible. A further extension was needed and the government of the day came to parliament and asked for an extension of one year.

Then in 1947 a large-scale revision was made. We were then two years away from the war. The hundreds of orders in council and directives which were in force during the war were reduced to fifty-seven and they were appended as a schedule to the bill. There was discussion in parliament at that time on every one of those orders in council and because of the action of members of parliament the number was cut from fifty-seven to fifty. When some hon. members say loosely that parliament has not seen these orders in council, may I remind them that every one passed in detail through this house as a schedule to the bill of 1947. The only changes made since that time in any of those orders have been by means of amending orders to restrict the powers given to the government under that bill.

In 1948 a further revision was made and there was an extension of time again for a year. Most of the wartime controls had now gone by the board. At that time the Conservatives were saying that we were too slow and should do what the United States was doing and eliminate most of the controls. At the same time the C.C.F. members were crying that we were going too fast, that we should hold on to the controls. We took the middle course and once again the people of Canada showed their approval of that course in the general election of 1949.

In 1949 we came and asked for one more year. At that time the hundreds of wartime orders in council which had dropped to fifty in 1947 was down to twelve. We asked for a time extension until March 31 of this year. This whittling-down process of controls and rationing continued as goods came into ample supply on the market.

We now come back to parliament in 1950. Last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) stood in his place and told parliament that this would be the last time extension we would ask for. This bill provides for a thirteen months extension to end the few controls which are now in effect. More than that, the number of orders in council is to be cut to six after April 1. We are in sight of the end of our policy of orderly decontrol.

The people of Canada realize this. The change in this country has been quite uniform. Some people may say that certain controls were taken off too rapidly, but in looking back at the whole picture I think that we have conducted our policy of orderly decontrol, trying to get back to the old free relations between buyer and seller, in sound fashion.

Both the putting on of controls and the carrying on of orderly decontrols took courage. The people of Canada have often paid tribute to the great courage and the high integrity shown by the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley and Mr. Donald Gordon in the matter of building up and administrating the wartime prices and trade board which did this great job. I do not think that enough recognition has been paid to the less glamorous but equally difficult job which has been done by the present Minister of Finance and Mr. K. W. Taylor in carrying out our decontrol policy. Today we have cut down from 6,000 employees, which was the peak, and many hundreds of orders in council, to the present six orders in council and 750 employees, of whom 500 are in rental control in the field and 250 are dealing with rental control problems and in the import quota branch here in Ottawa.

Another interesting thing has been the great change in the attitude in the house toward this matter. Only five hon. members in all have spoken on the two stages of the resolution and on the motion for second reading of this bill, and since last Friday the department with which I am associated has received not one single letter as a consequence of the announcement on decontrol then made by the Minister of Finance. Hon. members will recall that when previous controls were taken off alarms were stirred up in this house and it was said that the government had lost the confidence of the people. That is what happened at the end of every rationing or other control. Yet six months later things had levelled off and the country had taken one step more back to what we regarded before the war as being a free economy, and members had forgotten their original unfounded fears.

I can remember being alarmed myself once and how I caused quite a bit of trouble to the minister in connection with the decontrol of commercial accommodation which occurred a year and a half ago. I was sure that that was a most premature step, and spoke strongly against it. Yet as a consequence of this action, within six months new office buildings had been built across the country and good space was available. Landlords who had been getting exorbitant rents for old space because nobody was building new space or stores were having their rents hammered down to what they should be as decent space became available. Today we hear no demand across the country for a return to commercial rental controls.

I finish by saying that all this bill is is a last step in this eight-year program of necessary economic control which was a consequence of our entry into the war. Each year since 1945 we have been whittling away at these orders in council. It is true that we had great powers under the War Measures Act; it is true that we had the considerable powers given to us in the first transitional powers act of 1945; but these powers are now almost all gone and twice since that time we have gone to the real court of last resort, the people of Canada, for an indication of approval of those policies, in 1945 and 1949. I want to tell hon. members—

Mr. Knowles: A minority vote both times.

Mr. Sinclair:—that there is no part of the entire government program which came closer home to the little people of Canada, the people of my constituency because I represent an industrial riding, the worker and his wife who are trying to raise a family. It is these people whose confidence in this government's policies was responsible for the return of the government with the greatest majority since confederation, for the reduction of the Conservative party and the almost total obliteration of the C.C.F.

Mr. Knowles: A minority vote both times.

Mr. Sinclair: I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is most anxious to get on his feet. In my notes, which I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) will concede I did not write in the moment or two he was speaking, my next heading is "Knowles". I must start off by making an apology to the hon. member which I hope he will take in good faith. I have already spoken to him privately on the matter. The other evening when the minister handed me the bill there was attached to it a mimeographed sheet from the privy council office headed "Schedule to the act". After all, as the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, I am not a lawyer and I naturally assumed it was the schedule to the bill now before the house. It is actually what remains of the effective schedule to the act of 1947. In past years the courtesy has been extended of having the actual remaining orders in council placed on Hansard. I thought I was also extending a courtesy although it has not been very gratefully received by the hon. member. I want to point out, however—

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute. I am quite prepared to accept in good faith the apology the hon. member is making, but he had better make it in good faith and admit that he did not just say the other night he would place it on Hansard but that it would be a schedule to the bill.

Mr. Sinclair: I said it would be a schedule to the act because at that time I assumed it would, particularly as it was headed "Schedule to the act". It is actually a summary of what is left in force of the fifty orders of 1947, the twelve of which are remaining in effect until tomorrow night and six of these which will remain in effect after tomorrow night. It has been suggested by the hon. member that we should place the schedule in the bill. I am informed it has never been the custom to repeat things which are not being changed in an amending bill. Under section 4 of the act of 1947 there is provision for the revoking of orders, and as the years have passed by the schedule has become smaller and smaller as orders have been revoked.

I quite agree with the hon. member that even with the schedule there is not very much there which will be of help to a layman, but I want to say something on that point. The remaining orders in council are not going to be imposed on any citizen of the country who has never seen them before. Today every tenant in Canada under rental control has been under rental control for at least three years, and most of them for six, seven or eight years. It is three years ago since new buildings were decontrolled. Therefore all tenants are quite familiar with their old rights under the big schedule, and as these various orders in council have been removed tenants have remained quite familiar with the few restrictions left. If they are not entirely familiar, as was pointed out, they can go to the local rentals offices. It is quite true, as the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, that every government officer does not necessarily know all about the law. I have reminded him that there are not many lawyers who know all about the law.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the hon. member permit one comment? I want to make it perfectly clear that the only thing I had in mind was that the parliamentary assistant last night undertook to answer a purely legal question. I am not sneering at all at his knowledge of the general situation. My comment was directed to the fact that he undertook to disagree with competent lawyers on a purely legal question.

Mr. Sinclair: The hon. member has misunderstood the point I am making. Last night, in commenting on what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had said, the hon. member for Greenwood said that often the officials in the rental offices do not know all the law. I am pointing out that if everybody in Canada knew all the law, certainly if the ordinary layman could pick it all up from the law books, read them and understand them, there would be no business for lawyers, and that might be a good thing for Canada.

The next point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was that the people of the country are going to be left high and dry in 1951 with the end of federal rent control. I should like to remind him that the problem of rent control can be properly handled by the provinces, and I was going to say his own province, but the province of his heart's desire, Saskatchewan, has taken such action.

Mr. Knowles: Tell me what they do in my own province of Manitoba.

Mr. Sinclair: I want to say more than that. If further decontrol is necessary over the next thirteen months then the bodies which can do it best are those governments which are closest to the people, the provincial governments. In my own riding of Coast-Capilano there are two areas, north Vancouver and west Vancouver, where rental control is certainly still necessary, but there is a great area from Horseshoe bay to Powell river where there is no need for rent control today. After all, the provincial governments are closer to the people and to local problems, and if they desire to do so next spring they can move into the field and perhaps institute the process which is the reverse of the one we have commenced, that of partial decontrol, only in the necessary areas.

The hon. member also mentioned the complexity of these orders in council and he reeled them off. Actually the whole trend is the other way. Not one of the amending orders in council which I put on Hansard, no amending order after 1945, was an expanding order. Every one was an order stripping away and restricting power. Therefore, rather than being more and more complex, these orders are continually diminishing. Of course that is the whole intent of the policy of orderly decontrol. Finally he asked—and I think rather naïvely—why we did not put the whole thing in one act in simple language that every layman would understand. It may be heresy, but I had to consult a legal authority on this question. He immediately pointed out that today the whole problem is not entirely our problem. It is complicated by the landlord and tenant laws of every province, and even if we had the right to do so we could not produce a simple understandable law effective in every province which every layman would immediately know designated his rights as to the entire matter of rents. As I pointed out, every tenant who is affected by these orders in council today has been affected for at least three years, and most of them for eight years. They certainly know their rights, and they know where to go if they need further information.

Let me turn to the remarks of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). I hope he will pardon me if I do not spend very much time on them for the reason that we have heard the same speech for the last four years. I did not quite realize how similar his remarks were until I spent this morning in the library thumbing through the debates on this measure in 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949. I picked out a few of his words which he has used in every speech, lovely words such as "centralization", "dictatorship", "bureaucratic invasion", "unwarranted invasion of provincial rights", "sweeping totalitarian powers", and this lovely one, "assassination of the constitution". The funny thing is that when the hon. member works himself into a frenzy of indignation in the house he is never amusing, but it is very amusing to sit in the quiet of the library four years afterwards and read how the act of 1945 was going to assassinate the Canadian constitution.

Mr. Fleming: Which 1945 act do you mean, the act that was passed or the bill that the government introduced and then withdrew under a storm of protest?

Mr. Sinclair: Let me turn to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). I take considerable pleasure in analysing his remarks. I notice that he is busy writing but I know he is also listening. His was the old, old thesis that we have heard so often in the short time he has been in the house. He says that what we are doing is the right thing but we are doing it in the wrong way. I am sorry that we have not all received yesterday's Hansard, but I have the manuscript. Last night the leader of the opposition said there was no disagreement about the purpose of the things we are doing, and then he went on to say:

> But there should be disagreement on the part of every member of this house with the procedure that is being followed . . .

Let us look at the procedure now and see whether we are doing the right thing but in the wrong way. He makes his usual tacit assumption of course that the only right way to do anything in Canada is the way George Drew wants it done. The people of High Park and the people of Canada showed most distinctly that they do not want things done the way George Drew wants to do them, but do want things done the way this government has done them since 1935. His suggestion at this time is that what we need is a new bill, a complete bill covering the present rental control, so everything will be clearly stated, in orderly language. He wants a new act of parliament. I am going to refer to a legal authority, and I hope the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) is listening. This is not the Department of Justice, but an authority that I am sure even he will respect. It is the Supreme Court of Canada, which passed on this very problem by reference on March 24, 1950. The opening clause of the judgment, of course, is familiar to all. The chief justice said:

> There is no doubt that under normal conditions the subject matter of rents belongs to the provincial jurisdiction under the head of property and civil rights, in section 92 of the British North America Act.

Then he goes on and discusses various leading cases, and then comes to the summation of his opinion and that of the other justices:

> . . . in the circumstances, this court may not doubt that parliament may competently . . .

Then listen to these words:

> . . . maintain the regulations it has adopted to meet the emergency and its continuance.

Notice the words "maintain the regulations".

And listen to this:

> Therefore the wartime leasehold regulations are not ultra vires either in whole or in part.

Again, that is the present regulations which have worked so well for the last eight years.

Suppose at this eleventh hour, after eight years of satisfactory administration under this series of acts, we had brought in a new act this session. Hon. members on this side of the house and in the other corner know what would have happened. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) would have risen and thundered with all his eloquence that here the shilly-shallying government had changed its mind at the eleventh hour. He would ask, what was wrong with the old way? It had done well for years. But the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) would be in a much better position; after five years he would have something new in his speech. He would say we are not only deceiving the people of Canada, we are not only deceiving the parliament of Canada, but now we have tricked the supreme court because we gave them one set of regulations and as soon as they said they were intra vires we whipped in here and passed a new bill, which would be permanent.

I think it is necessary to have a return to reality, a return to the people of Canada. The laws of this country are not made for lawyers; they are made to serve the people. The people have been well served by the policies of the wartime prices and trade board since 1941, operating under this act. The people know the policy of this government has been one of orderly decontrol, and it has been successfully carried out. The people know also that we are rounding out that policy, and this bill is now only asking for an extension for thirteen months of these six remaining effective orders. If the Conservative party wants to delay the passage of this bill beyond tomorrow night, and end all rent control, the people of Canada will know that, too.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Duration of act.

Mr. Knowles: Will the parliamentary assistant give us more information, or at least clarify the information he gave us during his oration a few moments ago, in regard to the number still in the employ of the wartime prices and trade board. Perhaps he can tell us again the total number, and then how many of those are engaged in the administration of rent control and how many are engaged in matters that come under other regulations.

Mr. Sinclair: The information I have is that the total number is approximately 750, of whom 250 are here in Ottawa either engaged in rental control work—though that is a minor matter here—or in the import quota system, which also comes under the assistant deputy minister, Mr. Taylor. The other 500, which is a round figure that changes as the work decreases, are in rental offices across Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Those in the rental offices across Canada, the 500, are concerned only with rental control?

Mr. Sinclair: That is my information.

Mr. Knowles: Then I take it there are no employees who could administer any of these sections in the wartime prices and trade orders in council that are being carried forward in dead letter form?

Mr. Sinclair: This is perhaps not relevant to the section, but I am glad to give the information. One reason everything does not relate solely to rents is the fact that we still have a few carry-overs, such as appeals and convictions, under the prices board. Under the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation there are some appeals from the refusal of subsidies, and some of the employees—not across Canada, but here in Ottawa—are still engaged in that work.

That is why it was necessary to carry forward those orders, not to impose new controls or grant new subsidies but to clean up the odds and ends of that work that still remain.

Mr. Knowles: There was one other question. In replying to my remarks the parliamentary assistant dealt with the argument I had put forward that an attempt should be made to put into this statute a boiled-down form of the law as it now stands with respect to rent control. It seemed to me that he argued two ways. On the one hand he argued that it was too complex to put into a statute, and on the other hand he told me that most of the subsequent orders in council and board orders had been for the purpose of lessening the regulation and control and thus making the situation more simple. If his latter argument is so, surely it would be a simple matter to put it into statutory form. He knows as well as I do—and both of us may be grateful that we are not lawyers—that there are such things as office consolidations. In fact office consolidations are in existence now as far as these rental regulations are concerned. There is an office consolidation of P.C. 9029, which is the basic rent control order in council. That office consolidation sets out P.C. 9029 in the form in which it would be if you worked into it all the subsequent amendments. Board order 800, which I believe is the basic board order with respect to rent control, has been amended by subsequent board orders, and there is in existence an office consolidation of that. I am not suggesting it is necessary to change the rent control law to bring in something different from what was approved by the supreme court, but would it not be possible to produce what in effect would be an office consolidation of the law as it now stands and write that into this statute so people could see exactly what the law is?

Mr. Sinclair: I cannot add anything to the argument I made. My argument on the complexity of the rental law was based on the fact that we have ten provinces with different landlord and tenant laws which also would be involved in any complete analysis for a layman.

Mr. Knowles: That is the situation now.

Mr. Sinclair: That brings me to my last point. For the last three years the tenants and landlords of Canada have been working under these very regulations. Why should we, in the last thirteen months, go to the expense, if you will, or have the innovation of introducing a further consolidation? If this were an expanding control of course we would do that, but it is a control that has been constantly whittled down so that now it consists of only six orders, all of them now in effect and all well known to the people who have been affected by them for the last three years. Neither I nor the members of the government can see any real purpose that would be served.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary assistant and I represent constituencies in which there are areas where rent control is of concern to the people. He says that is so in only part of his constituency, but it affects the people in all parts of my riding. In view of the fact that the federal government is going out of this field in 13 months, does the parliamentary assistant recommend that his provincial government in British Columbia and the provincial government in my province of Manitoba get ready to take over the matter?

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, there is an excellent rule about minding your own business. I believe that is the course I would follow so far as the provincial government of British Columbia is concerned. The hon. member can govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member saying that he minds his own business so far as the provincial government of British Columbia is concerned?

Mr. Sinclair: I certainly do.

Mr. Knowles: I thought he fathered it.

Mr. Sinclair: You never saw me on a coalition platform.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to bring the parliamentary assistant back to some of the simple aspects of the argument advanced by the leader of the opposition and myself last night, and which the parliamentary assistant has completely overlooked today.

Mr. Sinclair: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we have been through the resolution stage and second reading of this bill. We are now in committee on the one clause of the bill which says the intent is to change this one date to April, 1951. I suggest that to be in order the hon. member must say it should be one month, twelve months, or thirteen months. On this clause, he has not the right once again to wander over the entire field, and give us the latest version of this four-year old speech.

The Chairman: The hon. member must direct his remarks to the clause under consideration.

Mr. Fleming: That is precisely what I am doing, Mr. Chairman. While the parliamentary assistant was putting on this interesting matinee performance, he ignored the fact that unnecessary but very sweeping powers continue, and that statutory effect will be given to those orders in council. He has said that these six orders in council are part of the schedule to the 1947 act. One does not find the text of them there, so he was completely astray of the mark.

Mr. Sinclair: There is a list of them there.

Mr. Fleming: But one cannot find the text of them in the 1947 act. All one finds is the number of the order, the title of the order, and the date of its passing.

Mr. Sinclair: So what?

Mr. Fleming: If my friend can restrain himself, with effort, for a moment, then we shall get on with this problem. I should like to put some questions to the parliamentary assistant designed to elicit from him such information as may be in his possession. He has assured us he has all the information the government possesses concerning the necessity for some of the provisions in at least one of these orders in council referred to in the schedule to the act.

The effect of the section now under consideration will be to extend, for a period of thirteen months, this Transitional Measures Act. Will the parliamentary assistant turn to this important and sweeping order P.C. 8528, which was passed to meet the war emergency when it was at its height. I am going to invite him to direct his attention to section 4 of the order, subsection (1), paragraph (a):

> 4. (1) The board shall have power
>
> (a) to investigate, of its own motion or on complaint, costs, prices, profits and stocks of goods and materials of any person engaged in the manufacture, importation, exportation, production, storage, transportation, supply or sale of any goods or services or any alleged or apparent offence under these regulations, and for the purpose of any such investigation the board shall have all the powers of a commissioner appointed under the provisions of the Inquiries Act;

Mr. Sinclair: Will the hon. member repeat the section?

Mr. Fleming: Section 4 (1) (a) of order 8528, appearing on page 22 of the consolidation that was used in 1947, but is not part of the statute.

Mr. Sinclair: I am informed that this is actually the section to which I referred in my speech, and to which I referred in answering the member for Winnipeg North Centre. Certain claims for subsidies under the stabilization act have been made, and if this section were removed there would be no authority to pay those claims, or refuse those claims for subsidies paid by the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation. That corporation, of course, had to have the power to investigate the books of these companies which applied for subsidies to make quite sure the companies had obeyed the price regulations.

Mr. Fleming: That is an extremely interesting answer. You see, it has nothing whatever to do with rent control. The amazing fact is that, while the whole case built up for the continuation of this order in council was the necessity for continuing rent control, when one specifically examines these sweeping orders, one is given an answer indicating this important provision has nothing whatever to do with rent controls.

Mr. Sinclair: The hon. member will remember that the minister told him that when he made his statement.

Mr. Fleming: I think it is the rule, Mr. Chairman, that only one member at a time should be on his feet. We are told now that this measure has something to do with subsidies, something completely foreign to the statement made by the minister and by the parliamentary assistant in relation to this bill; very interesting indeed, sir.

Let us now turn to the next one to see what that has to do with paying subsidies. I ask the parliamentary assistant what necessity there is for continuing this sweeping power in the wartime prices and trade board. I quote paragraph (b):

> To enter any premises and to inspect and examine any or all books, records and stocks of goods and materials in the possession or control of any person and to require any such person to produce such books and records at any place before it or before any person appointed by it to investigate, and to take possession of and remove any or all such books and records;

What is the necessity for continuing that sweeping order for a further period of thirteen months?

Mr. Sinclair: If the hon. member will just settle down, he will realize that the answer to this question is exactly the same. The minister in his statement pointed out, as I did, that, whereas the principal purpose of this order in council is for rent control, nevertheless there is this cleaning up process as well. There are still 7 or 8 employees of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation who are engaged in that task of paying out the last claims, the challenged claims, for subsidies under the price control policy. If we did not have this authority to continue the investigation, then those claims could not be paid.

Mr. Fleming: Again, a very interesting answer, read in the light of the statement made in this house by the minister last Friday which can be found at page 1089 of Hansard, March 24. He said:

> Therefore the practical effect of the proposed bill is to continue the authority to control rentals only, for a further period.

Perhaps if we go farther we shall obtain a little more information about some other powers besides rent control that the government is proposing to retain in favour of the wartime prices and trade board. Let me read paragraph (c):

To require from time to time any person who manufactures, imports, exports, produces, stores, supplies, sells, buys, acquires or accumulates any goods or services to furnish in such form and within such time as the board may prescribe written returns under oath or affirmation showing such information as the board may consider necessary with respect to such goods or services;

I ask the parliamentary assistant, what is the necessity for continuing that sweeping power for a further period of thirteen months?

Mr. Sinclair: The answer to the hon. member is the same as that which I just gave. It is necessary for the cleaning up of these odds and ends of our policy of price control and subsidies. It was mentioned by the minister in his opening remarks when he said that the only control power we are keeping is that of rent control.

Mr. Fleming: Where is that found?

Mr. Sinclair: At page 1089 of Hansard. The minister said:

Therefore the practical effect of the proposed bill is to continue the authority to control rentals only, . . .

But he does mention there are these other odds and ends to be cleaned up.

Mr. Fleming: Where does he mention them?

Mr. Sinclair: Not controls on prices, not added subsidies, but to finish up the payment of these few challenged subsidies which are now outstanding.

Mr. Fleming: I challenge the parliamentary assistant to point out any place in the speech the minister made last Friday where he said anything about its being necessary to clean up the odds and ends of price control. Earlier in the same paragraph of the minister's speech, we find this:

While no other change is proposed, I should state that during the past year all the orders contained in the schedule to the act have been revoked except those relating to price and rent control. The government does not intend to invoke the limited powers now granted by the act to reimpose controls already lifted. Therefore the practical effect of the proposed bill is to continue the authority to control rentals only, for a further period.

Mr. Gibson: The practical effect.

An hon. Member: What does price control mean?

Mr. Fleming: I fail to see the possible relevancy of that question to the matter before us, when the minister has said that the practical effect is to continue the authority to control rentals only. Surely that is quite enough. But apparently that was one of those mere statements of intention by which the government does not consider itself bound. Let us turn to paragraph (d), which reads as follows:

(d) to make public its findings or report in the case of any investigation or to withhold such publication if it considers the public interest would be better served by such withholding;

Let me ask the parliamentary assistant again what justification there can be for continuing this sweeping power for another thirteen months. It cannot be needed to clean up any questions of the payment of subsidies or adjustments of them.

Mr. Sinclair: If the hon. member will allow me to come forward again, I will get back to the earlier observation he made. I would ask the hon. member for Eglinton to read slowly the minister's words which are as follows:

While no other change is proposed, I should state that during the past year all the orders contained in the schedule to the act have been revoked except those relating to price and rent control. The government does not intend to invoke the limited powers now granted by the act to reimpose controls already lifted.

All price controls have, of course, been lifted. However, with regard to price control, we will remember that when we held down prices to below the cost of production so that the consumer could have the benefit of fixed prices, we had in fairness to subsidize the producer, whether it was the producer of milk, clothing or anything else. There are still such claims outstanding. The minister mentioned price control there and at the same time mentioned specifically that we were not going to reimpose any controls lifted, and of course all price controls had been lifted; nevertheless there is still need to have this authority to wind up the last claims for subsidies under the stabilization program.

Mr. Fleming: Has the parliamentary assistant to the minister any opinion from the law officers of the crown to substantiate his last contention?

Mr. Sinclair: The answer is yes, that Justice has so informed us. I understand, of course, that the hon. member for Greenwood will not regard that as a final authority. But that is the only authority I can go by.

Mr. Fleming: I do not think the hon. member for Greenwood questioned any statement made by the law officers of the crown. He questioned the opinions being bandied about the chamber by the hon. member. I should be much interested in having some further information about that statement attributed to the law officers of the crown. I do not think the parliamentary assistant should have any hesitation in giving to the committee, on a matter of this importance, the benefit of the opinion of the law officers of the crown. I am interested particularly in knowing if it goes the full length of saying that the retention of all these powers—not only the one to which I have thus far referred, but the ten or more in the subsections following—are necessary to complete the demobilization of price control as the parliamentary assistant now argues they are. Personally, I have only this observation to make: On the statements he has made today, the purpose in retaining these powers is limited to the matter of adjusting and paying some remaining odds and ends of subsidies. I am prepared to affirm that half or more of these powers are totally unnecessary for that purpose, if it is as limited in its effect as that. I therefore invite the parliamentary assistant to give the committee the benefit of that opinion of the law officers of the crown so that the committee will know whether the opinion goes so far as to say that the retention of all these sweeping powers is necessary to accomplish the limited purpose that the parliamentary assistant has just described, namely, the completion of some odds and ends of adjustments of subsidies.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Fleming: No, not carried.

Mr. Sinclair: The hon. member for Eglinton is of course anxious to have me relay legal opinions. I merely want to point out to him that in the drafting of this legislation the Department of Finance's own counsel was present and also they had the advice of the Department of Justice. On the first three sections he has mentioned, my assistant here says that the Department of Justice was consulted and did give their opinion. As to the remaining six orders in council, I would point out that as the need ends for any of these powers to wind up subsidies and payments, then these sections or these orders can be revoked. That has been the policy of the government since 1945; and it is certainly the policy of the government today.

Mr. Fleming: That is an interesting statement. The parliamentary assistant says that has been the policy since 1945. There is not one of these sections of this order that has been revoked yet by any order in council. The only revocation was the limited one introduced by section 2 of the 1949 amendment to this act, the limited one as applied to section 4 (1) (f) of the order. So let us not be led astray by sweeping statements of that kind.

As to this matter of the reference to the law officers of the crown, I am interested in pursuing that a little further. We know, of course, that before legislation is introduced into the house it is passed on in a general way by the law officers of the crown, as to whether it is within the competence of parliament or not; and I have more than a suspicion that that is all the legal opinion that was ever passed on this measure. Of course it is within the competence of parliament to pass this measure. In the light of the advice tendered to the government by the Supreme Court of Canada, in the recent reference to it, it is quite clear that this legislation is within the competence of parliament. But that is not the question I raised at all. The question I raised was this. What is the necessity for continuing these sweeping powers? What justification remains for the provision that the wartime prices and trade board should continue to possess these vast, sweeping and arbitrary powers? The parliamentary assistant has not yet argued that one of these powers is necessary for the maintenance and continuance of rental control. He knows better than to argue any such thing, because all the powers that are needed for the maintenance of rent control will be found vested in that board under the rent control order P.C. 9029. The parliamentary assistant therefore knows quite well that the only basis on which he can justify the retention of these sweeping powers is by going outside of anything that has been said on behalf of the government in this debate to date. And so he brings in these so-called odds and ends of subsidies. Let the parliamentary assistant come out firmly and say to the committee what he has invited the house to believe in a previous statement this afternoon, namely, that the law officers of the crown have advised that the retention of all of these powers is necessary and essential to the completion of the so-called adjustment of odds and ends of subsidies. Let him say that. Let him produce the opinion.

Mr. Sinclair: The hon. member is getting quite excited and is trying to put words into my mouth. He asked me whether the first three sections in connection with this legislation had been drafted after an opinion from the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fleming: No, I did not.

Mr. Sinclair: I informed him that was so. Then he extended his statement and asked whether everything in all of these orders in council had been referred to the Department of Justice, and then a moment later said that I had said that. I replied that in the drafting of this legislation we had the advice of our own treasury counsel and we had the advice of the Department of Justice. On this ground I stand. I can do nothing else. Once again getting back to this matter of the feeling of the people of Canada and these phrases which he has used such as "sweeping powers", and "arbitrary powers" may I ask what abuse of power there has been. Here is an orderly decontrol policy being carried to its logical conclusion, and once again the hon. member is flailing the air with these "sweeping powers" and "unwarranted powers" accusations.

Mr. Fleming: That is about as adroit a sidestepping of the issue as we are likely to see in this committee in some time.

Mr. Sinclair: That is a compliment, coming from the hon. member.

Mr. Fleming: The fact of the matter is that I have challenged the parliamentary assistant to produce any opinion from the law officers of the crown to the effect that the retention of these powers in the wartime prices and trade board is necessary for the only purpose that he has assigned for the retention of these sections, and he has not done that. I will now put to him the same question with regard to these remaining powers. If there is any justification for them, let him give that justification. Certainly by no stretch of the imagination can this power be said to be necessary to adjust any so-called odds and ends of subsidies. Listen to this:

(g) to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which, and the manner and circumstances in which, any goods or services may be produced, manufactured, extracted, refined, processed, stored, transported, purchased, sold, offered for sale, supplied, assembled, installed, constructed, distributed, exhibited, advertised, delivered, used, or dealt in or with, either generally or by specified persons, and to prohibit transactions and acts not in accordance therewith;

(h) to require any person to obtain licences or permits from the board or from any person specified by the board; to prescribe the terms and conditions under which and the manner and circumstances in which such licences or permits or amendment thereof shall be obtained; to issue, re-issue or refuse to issue licences or permits or amendment thereof to any persons; to grant general licences or permits; provided, however, that the issue to any person of a licence or permit shall not be deemed to affect the liability of such person to obtain a licence or permit as required by any other statute or law of Canada or any province thereof;

(i) to amend, suspend or cancel any licence or permit issued or granted;

(j) to prescribe the quantities of, the manner in which, and the terms and conditions under which, any goods or services may be bought, sold, supplied, distributed, delivered or used within prescribed periods of time and to prohibit purchase, sale, supply, distribution, delivery or use except in accordance with such prescription;

(k) to require any person owning or having possession, control or power to dispose of any goods or services to deal with, use, dispose of or supply any such goods or services, in such manner as may be prescribed by the board; and no use, disposition or supply of any such goods or services in accordance with such manner shall constitute infringement of any mark, design or other private or proprietary right;

(l) to require any person producing, manufacturing, extracting, refining, processing, storing, transporting, importing, supplying, assembling, installing, constructing, purchasing, selling, distributing, delivering, using or dealing in any goods or services to produce, manufacture, process, extract, refine, store, transport, supply, assemble, install, construct, purchase, sell, distribute, deliver, use or otherwise deal with any such goods or services, in such manner and in such priority to any other business of that person as may be specified by the board.

There is not one of these powers that is necessary for the continuation or enforcement of rent control; because, as I have already said, rent control order 9029 vests in the wartime prices and trade board all the powers that that board requires for the maintenance of rent control. Surely no sensible person is going to rise in his place and argue that powers as sweeping as those are necessary for the adjustment of the so-called odds and ends of subsidies, the settlement of a few claims for subsidy. Hon. members should realize this because I suspect there are not very many, certainly on the government side of the house, who have taken the trouble to read these orders in council or to appreciate the scope and breadth of their provisions. Today parliament is being asked to give to these orders the force and effect of legislative enactment for a further period of thirteen months. Let any hon. member rise in his place and say that those sweeping powers are necessary for the adjustment of the so-called odds and ends of subsidies.

Mr. Chairman, what the house is being called upon to do is an insult to parliament. What we are enacting here, on the invitation of this government, is simply a travesty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are one or two questions that I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant. They have to do with the submission made to the Supreme Court of Canada in reference to the continuance of emergency powers. The judgment delivered by the Supreme Court of Canada was one of the most striking ever delivered. It is one that peculiarly affects the constitutional set-up of this country. I say that because it is the first judgment on so important a matter passed by the supreme court since it became the supreme court. I use the word "judgment" advisedly, even though the chief justice properly pointed out that what the court was in fact doing was merely answering a question submitted to it as to whether or not the emergency powers in connection with rental control were continuing, and as such were within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament.

I want to find out first whether any appeal has been launched against the submission and the answers given by the supreme court. Second, if an appeal has been launched, by whom has it been launched, and in the normal course of events when will it be heard? This happens to be one of these matters that may still be appealed to the privy council. At the moment I am asking for information as to whether or not the privy council is going to deal with this matter.

No judgment has been handed down in years that indicates and emphasizes the responsibilities of the federal parliament as does this submission or reference which I am discussing; for in effect it says, as I interpret it, that when and if parliament declares the existence of an emergency, arising out of either war or insurrection, or in any other manner whatsoever, then the court will be bound to agree, unless there is very strong evidence to the contrary, that parliament had the right to invade the jurisdiction of the provinces.

As I understand the import of the judgment, it means that if we in parliament make the declaration, irrespective of the provisions of the British North America Act with regard to division of powers under sections 91 and 92, the court will be most loath not to uphold the declaration of emergency. It is the judgment on the reference which indicates just how far this parliament could go in invading provincial rights, unless the House of Commons and the Senate were most careful to ensure that there was in fact an emergency before making such a declaration in the preamble.

I notice that the parliamentary assistant pointed in the general direction of the Minister of Justice. I feel sure that the Minister of Justice will make some extended reference to this submission, which is one of the most outstanding in Canadian constitutional history.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the first point raised by the hon. member for Lake Centre, may I say that, so far as we in the Department of Justice are aware, up to date no appeal has been entered against the judgment in question.

With regard to the other observations made by my hon. and learned friend, I would very much prefer not to deal with a matter of this importance in the extemporaneous manner in which it has been raised today. But I think I should say that the point which the hon. member makes is not borne out by all of the judgments of the judges of the supreme court. Just taking at random from the judgments which I sent for only a few moments ago, when this matter seemed to be imminent, Mr. Justice Taschereau states in his judgment:

> In the present instance,—

That is, in the case referred to the court.

> —no evidence of any kind has been submitted to show that the emergency had disappeared and that normal conditions are now prevailing. On the contrary, common knowledge, to which it is surely permissible to appeal in a case of this kind, and the very valuable exhibits in the record which I have usefully consulted to test the accuracy of the statements, lead me to the irresistible conclusion that an emergency still exists as an aftermath of the war.

That is a judicial finding, not a legislative assertion, of an emergency. Then I quote again from page 13 of the multigraphed copy of the judgment as follows:

> It follows that if there is unmistakable evidence to make it clear that there is no emergency, the courts are duty bound to intervene.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that still Mr. Justice Taschereau?

Mr. Garson: Yes. He continues:

> Otherwise, we would reach a conclusion that is not justified by the British North America Act. Under the guise of "Peace, order and good government," it would be possible for the parliament of Canada to enact colourable legislation, and wrongly assume powers that belong to the provincial legislatures. Confederation has been erected on more solid foundations.
>
> But such is not the case. The war has created an emergency that justified the governor general in council to bring the War Measures Act in operation and pass regulations to meet such an emergency. Parliament then enacted the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act (1945) and the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act (1947) because in its opinion the emergency that arose out of the war was still existing, and for the express purpose of decontrolling, and to complete the orderly transition from abnormal to normal conditions.
>
> The regulations that were passed to reach that aim are essentially of a temporary character, and the laws from which they derive their validity are in no way permanent. They will come to an end with the emergency.

I mention that judgment simply to indicate that it is rather dangerous to generalize in the way in which I understood my hon. and learned friend did as to the nature of the judgment. I think I am right in saying that a judgment was delivered by every one of the judges who sat on the case and necessarily the reasons were not all the same. Reasons were given by Mr. Justice Taschereau to the effect that if there were a clear case of parliament attempting to declare, as a foundation for its jurisdiction, an emergency which did not in fact exist, then the jurisdiction would not stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many judges concurred with Mr. Justice Taschereau in his view on the question of the emergency which the minister has just enunciated?

Mr. Garson: As my hon. friend knows, on most occasions when judges concur with another judge they do not write judgments of their own, they simply say, "I concur in the judgment of Judge So and So."

Mr. St. Laurent: They each must write a separate judgment on a reference of that kind.

Mr. Garson: In this particular case each judge did write a separate judgment, and as the Prime Minister points out, on a reference of this kind each judge is under the necessity of so doing.

Another observation was made by my hon. friend with which, even on an extemporaneous basis, I think I shall have to take some issue. If I understood him correctly, he made a proposition to the effect that this judgment established some new principle of constitutional law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Garson: I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that he disagrees with that view. I think on reading the judgments of the various members of the bench he will say that they all followed closely two or three leading cases of the privy council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The point I was making was that this is a landmark because the Supreme Court of Canada is actually making this declaration in regard to the constitutional separation of powers and the right of the parliament of Canada to invade provincial jurisdiction when an emergency exists.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend says it is a landmark. It may be a landmark in the sense that it happens to be the first judgment of the new supreme court since ultimate appellate jurisdiction for Canada was conferred upon it, but not in the sense that it failed to follow in any way the other landmarks made by the privy council in the Fort Frances case, the Japanese reference case, and I think in a third case. I think I am correct in saying that almost every one of the judges in rendering his judgment referred, to a greater or less extent, to these judgments of the privy council. I think this is the limit of the extemporaneous contribution that I should make at the moment.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES PRICES SUPPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION IN FORCE

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 54, to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944.

Mr. Higgins: Is the parliamentary assistant going to make a statement?

Mr. J. W. MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): I did not intend to make a statement at this time because I understand there is no serious objection to the passage of this measure. I believe that some hon. members have a few questions to ask and I suggest that the bill be allowed to pass its second reading so that we can get into committee where I could answer the questions in an informal way.

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before acceding to the suggestion of the parliamentary assistant I have a couple of comments I should like to make. I assure the house that I am not going to delay the passage of this bill because I approve thoroughly of the principle behind it. As I understand it, the purpose of the bill is to make permanent the provisions of section 9 which outlines the powers of the fisheries prices support board. Under the former legislation there was a time limit but this bill will make the powers of the board permanent as long as the act is permanent.

I should like to refer to Hansard of the time this act was passed, for two purposes. There are some short excerpts I want to read. My purpose in doing so is to refresh the minds of hon. members because I believe that to a large extent fish is not a subject which attracts a great deal of attention on the part of hon. members. I should also like to refer to them for a purpose which I will outline as I proceed. When the original act was first introduced in the house the minister at that time was Mr. Bertrand. At page 5800 of Hansard for August 2, 1944, in speaking on the bill the minister said:

> But, Mr. Speaker, although we do not know exactly all that we are going to do, we know exactly what we are not going to do; that is, we are not going to let the prices fall to the low levels to which they fell in 1920, and again in 1932, 1933, 1934 and a few other years.

Further down the same page there are these words:

> First there is, under section 9, subsection 1(a) and (b),—

Those are the present subsections of the act.

> —provision that the fisheries prices support board may prescribe prices at which they will be prepared to purchase such commodities as may be named by the governor general in council. This, while not being exactly a floor price, will have the effect of ensuring to the primary producer the prices which the government is going to set for certain commodities . . .

At page 5801 of Hansard of the same date the then minister said:

> The second device, under section 9, subsection 1(c), is what we call a deficiency payment. The deficiency payment has already been in use under the salt fish board in 1939 and 1940 and was found to be workable. The feature of the deficiency payment is that under this scheme there is no interference with the natural fluctuations of price brought about by the laws of supply and demand. At the end of the year or of the season the board determines what the average price is to the producer of the fish on which a price has been set. If that average price is deemed to be too low to support and reasonably maintain production, the board, with the approval of the governor in council, sets a value on the unit commodity which in its judgment will bring sufficient return at this price to the producer . . .

Further down on page 5801 the minister said:

This is the policy of the bill. At the end of the year, as I said, there would be a calculation made as to the average price, and if the unit commodity has been sold below that average price the difference is paid between the average price and the price at which it should have been to give a fair return to all those who have sold this commodity.

Then there is an excerpt from the speech of the present Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew), to be found at page 5825 of Hansard of August 2, 1944. In speaking on the bill at that time the minister said:

I did not take part in the debate on the other bills, Nos. 161 and 168—

They were agricultural prices support measures.

—but I want to say a word on this, because I think that, of the three classes it is the desire to help, fishermen have probably suffered more than any other. They are in a very hazardous occupation. When they leave our shores to go out to fish they do not know what kind of weather they will encounter; they do not know whether they will have a catch or not, and when they come home they do not know what prices they will obtain. Therefore I think this measure is a timely one. It is hardly a coincidence that bills Nos. 168, 169 and 161 come in together and are all, in my opinion, aimed at the relief of the small man, the man who is unable to take care of himself.

He concluded his speech by saying:

I do not think any government will be able to withdraw it;

He meant the legislation.

they will have to improve it and bring it more in line with developing needs, and make it permanent. If it does not work, of course, the more temporary it is the better. So that I welcome the fact that it has been introduced at this time. and I do not deplore so much the shortness of the term, because I am quite sure that once it is in effect it will not be possible to withdraw it.

At page 5829 of Hansard of the same date the then minister of transport, Mr. Michaud, said by way of an official pronouncement:

By this legislation we say, "So far as this country is concerned, we will take care of the products of your industry and will assure you a return which will enable you to continue in that industry and at the same time maintain a decent standard of living." That is what this measure is designed to accomplish, and nothing more.

Further down on the same page he said:

After all, what the fisherman and those engaged in this basic industry want is an assurance that whatever may be the condition outside Canada, this country will see that they get a fair return, no matter if that must be accomplished by a violation of the economic law of supply and demand.

At page 5830 he said:

Section 9 (c) of the bill maintains the principle which was established by the salt fish board. During its operation that board worked to the advantage and benefit of the fishermen, because the great bulk of the exports could not be exported at a profit or even at the cost of production.

He ended his remarks by saying:

I submit that this measure will go a long way toward relieving a situation which has been deplorable and which has concerned all governments for many years. They had tried to solve this problem but unfortunately have been unable to do so, owing partly to public opinion and partly to conditions over which they had no control. Now, however, we are establishing a principle whereby those who are willing to help themselves will be helped, and I am sure that this measure will be of great assistance to the fishing industry.

Those are the main excerpts I wish to draw to the attention of hon. members. My reason for reading them is to clarify members' minds as to the situation at the time the legislation was passed. As hon. members will realize, Newfoundland members are particularly interested in fishing, but that interest also extends to a large section of Canada. It is my submission that the act was put on the statute books for the purpose of making possible a floor price for fish in times when it might be necessary. In case there may be any doubt about that, and as to the excerpts which I have quoted, on the 21st of March last in a radio address over the trans-Canada network the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) stated:

Another thing we are asking parliament to do at the present session is to review legislation to provide floor prices when they are required to give a measure of social security to our farmers and fishermen.

I presume that is the highest authority on the matter to whom we can refer at this time. Taking the words of the Prime Minister, I believe I am safe in assuming that this particular measure does give the government the power to set floor prices on fish. That being so, I want to draw to the attention of the house a particular situation existing in the newest province of Canada. Last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) stated in his budget speech:

But I think it is fair to remind the house that during the past year and over the next few years the accession of Newfoundland to Canada has imposed and will continue to impose a considerable net burden on the federal treasury.

I was very glad to hear those remarks because it gives us great hope that things will continue in the way that the minister outlined. We have a situation as to Labrador fishing that I feel I must bring to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries. Probably it has been done before, but certainly I would like some pronouncement from him on this matter, because the situation has become extremely serious. I have here the St. John's Daily News of March 20, which has a large black headline, "Labrador fish outlook is grim." I am going to read a few excerpts so the minister will understand the position of this committee of fishermen who called on the premier of Newfoundland concerning this problem. In this article Captain Malcolm Rogers, who was a member of the delegation, if not chairman, said:

"We are discouraged and disappointed men. We cannot possibly supply for the fishery if a price of at least $10 per quintal is not guaranteed beforehand.

We are determined not to go fishing until the situation is clarified to see if there will be a reduction in price. All we ask, if we are fortunate enough in securing a good voyage of cod, is sufficient money to be able to feed our families.

We have to go home now and tell our men that there is very little hope for the coming season's fishery. And apart from that there is very little hope of other employment . . .

We were told that our methods of fishing have been long outdated and that we might as well face the fact that new methods must be adopted. Speaking for myself, I have spent a lifetime building up fishing property. Now it is all of no use. I must put it 'on the mud to rot.'

When the proposed new methods are formulated we are willing to adopt them, but we are wondering what our industrious fishermen will do in the meantime to provide for their families."

That arises from the meeting of this delegation with the premier of Newfoundland, who is reported as having said at that time:

The premier held out no hope for the Labrador fishery this year, if present market conditions continue to exist. He frankly admitted that he did not expect one Newfoundland fishing schooner to go to the Labrador fishing grounds this summer.

There would be no difficulty in marketing the 1950 catch, but at a price which would not make it profitable for the fishermen to operate.

However, it is understood that negotiations are now being conducted at Ottawa in an effort to relieve the situation. And it is hoped that conditions will show some improvement.

That is my principal reason for rising at this time. I thoroughly agree with the principle of this bill, but again I would point out the situation that exists in Newfoundland. The procedure followed in preparing for the fishery is perhaps not known to hon. members, but it amounts to this. Prior to the beginning of the fishing season those who are going to engage in the fishery approach the local merchants in the various little settlements and arrange with them to obtain the necessary supplies of food, fishing gear and anything else they require. If those arrangements are not made and the fishermen do not get supplies, then of course there is no fishery. The situation now existing means that unless the merchants are guaranteed a price of at least $10 per quintal, as Captain Rogers says, they will not supply the fishermen, and then we will have no Labrador fishery.

I realize that this is a very small matter, when we look around at the members of this house and consider the important matters that are being conducted and the amounts of money that are being made, but I can assure you that unless this situation is remedied those people in Newfoundland who normally engage in the Labrador fishery will suffer very real distress. Therefore I would urge upon the minister and his assistant that they take all these facts into account. They might also discuss the matter with the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley), who unfortunately is not here at the moment, but in whose district many of these men reside, and who is fully cognizant of the facts. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay (Mr. Ashbourne), who is not here either, should be familiar with this situation as well.

Very sincerely and honestly I urge the minister that action be taken immediately. Otherwise many men will have to go on unemployment insurance, which will mean that many independent people who do not want to ask for help will be required to do so.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Coming from the town of Selkirk, Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this fish business, because when our fishermen are prosperous it means a great deal to our town. It was only about a year ago that I was worrying the minister to do something for the fishermen in Manitoba. I was not the only one; the situation was so serious that the government of my province were writing to him, along with the various fish organizations of northern Manitoba, in an attempt to get some support for the five million pounds of fish that had accumulated at different points on the lake.

As most people know, the winter fish taken through the ice normally are sold by the fishermen to local agents, who in turn sell to Winnipeg exporters. Usually the fishermen are financed during the season by these agents, and a final settlement is reached after the fish is sold. The trouble here is that, like the other support act, we have no formula. The Department of Fisheries did a wonderful job last year, but I cannot get away from the feeling that that job was done because an election was coming along. The more I study these matters the more convinced I am of that fact; and I am sure the minister would not want anything like that to be in the public mind. That could be altered by putting some formula in the act. As I look at this, if the Minister of Fisheries—not the present minister, but a future minister—is in a bad humour when some outfit from the Pacific coast or the Atlantic coast or the prairies comes along, he can say the figure will be 50 per cent. If an election is coming he can say it will be 80 per cent. If things are really bad and there is a by-election in the offing, he can say 100 per cent. I think we should do something about that.

These prices are paid at the packer level. The man this government wants to help is the man producing the fish, the primary producer. Instead of that the help goes to the man who has bought the fish. I want to quote briefly from the second annual report of the fisheries prices support board, for 1948-49:

> The Winnipeg dealers were holding heavier stocks than usual, of fish they had purchased, and especially of fish reaching them on consignment from the lake. They had recently discontinued buying. Manitoba fishermen had thereby sold less than half their last year's quantities. The surplus fish was threatened with spoilage, unless action was taken to buy and move it from the lakes into cold storage warehouses in Winnipeg.

A few days later the Department of Fisheries said they would buy 5 million pounds of frozen fish, including whitefish, saugers, pike, pickerel, trout and tullibee, at prices approximately 80 per cent of the going price for frozen fish. I do not object to that; that is all right. Further down in the report it is said that this price would be paid at the cold storage warehouses in Winnipeg. At that stage, the fish have passed into the hands of the packer, who can pay anything he likes for the fish to the man we are trying to help. I object to that. I want to see the primary producer get the benefit of this good legislation which has been put on the order paper, not the packer, who can look after himself quite well.

I said before that I supported this bill last time, and I am going to support it again. I should like to move an amendment—

Mr. MacNaught: I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I think he is creating a wrong impression. All the cheques for those fish went to the individual fishermen, and not to the packers.

Mr. Bryce: I do not think that is right, sir. I know that all the packing companies that held fish were paid for the fish. This money was not paid to the man who caught the fish up at Norway House—

Mr. Gibson: Perhaps they were on consignment.

Mr. Bryce: They were only partly consigned, Mr. Lumberman. When I asked about this matter, the return I was given showed where the money was paid, and where the fish went. They went to Canada Packers at a cent a pound to be made into fish meal.

[Mr. Bryce.]

Mr. MacNaught: That is where the fish went after they were bought.

Mr. Bryce: Yes, but the packers were paid for it. The fish companies in Winnipeg were paid, and I could put their names on the record. The primary producer is the man who goes out on the lake and fishes. He is the man who suffers all the hardships, and then has to take what the other fellow is willing to give him.

I am going to move an amendment, Mr. Speaker, which reads as follows:

> That Bill No. 54 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the introducing of legislation to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act so as to provide that floor prices should be established at such levels as to guarantee to those engaged in the fishing industry a price-cost relationship not less favourable than that prevailing in the period 1944-48.

This amendment is seconded by the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). I believe it will improve the bill, and it is for that reason I move the amendment.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the amendment. I do not think very much needs to be added to what has been said by the member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce). I come from a constituency on the Pacific coast in which a great many fishermen reside. The men who are engaged in taking the fish out of the sea are fairly well organized, and can generally get a fair deal with the packers and others who buy their fish. In eastern Canada I understand the fishermen are not so well organized, and are not in as good a position to get a fair share of the value of the product they help to produce.

I think we should pay attention to the point made by the member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) that on the east coast, where fishing is so hazardous an occupation, when the fishermen undertake to go through the hardships of bringing the fish to shore, they never know what they are going to receive for their fish. As a matter of fact, they have little control over the price they receive. Consequently, whether the fishermen participate directly or indirectly in the monetary benefits of price support, they should know before the fish are taken out of the sea what they are going to receive for their labour. As was said in the debate on the agricultural bill, it should not be left to the whim or caprice of a fisheries minister or a cabinet to decide what the price support may be.

I appreciate this bill. I see that it is to be continued for an indefinite period, but any amendment we may make now relating to the price relationship would not of course remain permanently. It could be amended in the same way that other sections of the bill are amended, if any change took place in the cost of living. Then another period could be taken to determine the price relationship. I suggest that this amendment does not hold up the bill. The bill could be passed with the assurance that the fishermen and those engaged in that industry will know exactly what price support will mean in actual practice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the amendment carry? Those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those against will say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. Bryce) negatived.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to make a few observations in support of what the member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) has said. I represent a constituency a portion of which, outside the city of St. John's, is principally concerned with the fishing industry as a means of livelihood. In St. John's West, the principal people engaged in this trawling business are established. It must be realized that we are principally concerned about the salt codfish industry in Newfoundland. It has always been a matter of great concern to the fishermen of Newfoundland to know what price they are going to get for their fish. As my hon. friend has stated, this business being conducted on a credit basis and not on a cash basis, in the spring of the year the fisherman generally goes to a merchant, locally he is called a supply merchant, and takes on supplies. He would like to know then, not six months after that, what he is going to get for his fish. Otherwise he does not know how the price he is paying for his supplies is going to relate to the price he is going to get for his fish.

Over one hundred years ago a law was passed that made it obligatory for the merchants to set up the prices when the men went to look for supplies, so that they would know what was going to be paid for the fish; and at various times since it has been found necessary. It is certainly desirable that as soon as possible, at the earliest part of the season, in August, the fishermen should be told what the price of fish is going to be.

In our country at the present time we have a fisheries board that has been in operation for about five years. At various times we have had various measures to help the fisherman. I remember in 1933 the merchants would not supply the fisherman, and the government had to come forward and give a guarantee that they would compensate the merchant if the fisherman was not able to pay for the supplies he got. I think it can be easily seen how important this business is in Newfoundland. There are 28,000 fishermen and through the various ramifications the number of people who are concerned with the successful progress of the fishing voyage is greater than that in any other industry in the province.

At the present time, in the month of March, the first fishermen begin to go to the Grand Banks from the southern portion of the island. They are engaged in trawling on the Grand Banks. As can be imagined, that is a strenuous life at this time of the year. As my hon. friend has said, it is the fishermen who go down to Labrador who are now the most concerned. In my constituency last year the chief trouble we had was that the people did not catch any fish. I do not know whether anything can be done for them except what was done by putting them on relief work initiated by the provincial government.

But as to the price of fish, of the two measures envisaged under the continuation of this act, one is that the government will buy the fish that cannot be sold. I should like the minister or his parliamentary assistant to tell us if anything will be done in Newfoundland this year with regard to that. We had some difficulty in disposing of the catch. I do not know whether it is all disposed of as yet. One of the things that saved the situation down there was that the fishing was not as great as it is normally. One of the purposes of the act is to see that there is a fair relationship between the return from the fisheries and that from other occupations. That purpose was stressed when the bill was introduced in 1944 and I hope it will be kept in mind for the future.

Last year the minister, speaking with regard to the fisheries, told us that he was going to set up three committees, I believe: one dealing with marketing, one dealing with technical services, and one dealing with consumers' services. I do not know whether he has been able to make any progress in this matter since then; but if he has been able to do so, I hope he will tell us what he has done.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) has pointed out the situation with regard to the Labrador fishermen, and in some respects what he said applied to other fishermen. It is desirable for them to know the price. That is why it is important that a floor should be set under the price of fish. It is important for them to know at as early a date as possible what is going to be paid for the fish, so that they will know whether it is worth while for them to go into it or not.

I do not intend to speak at any length. I just want to refer to this point. The amendment that was moved here, it seems to me, would not suit at the present time because there has been a decline in the price of fish and the fishermen have had to accept a lower price for fish than they were getting up to last year. But nevertheless there is a point beyond which we cannot allow the price of fish to go or, as in the case of the Labrador men, they will have to give up the fishery and they will not be able to go down there at all. The same thing may apply to the shore fishery. I am sure that the intention of this act is to prevent a large body of people from being put out of employment. I hope the minister will be able to give us some information on these matters.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I just wish to make a few brief remarks in connection with this resolution. I believe that I am perhaps as greatly interested in the fishing industry as any other member in the House of Commons. It is only a day or two ago that I heard the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) make the statement that the farmers of this country were the only people who were ever asked to sell their products at less than the cost of production. I did not contradict him at that time, but I should now like to say that I myself, on many occasions, have sold fish below the cost of production. I am greatly interested in the fishermen being protected to the extent that they will be able to make a fair living. At the same time I realize that even with this resolution we shall have many problems to face.

I have listened with interest to the hon. members from Newfoundland who have spoken within the last half hour, and from my experience I should like to assure them that it would be utterly impossible for the fishermen in Newfoundland to find a market for their fish in Canada. They will have to look to the same markets they have had over the years in order to dispose of their catch of fish. We in the maritimes have found it utterly impossible to sell any volume of fish in Canada. I have made the statement on the floor of the House of Commons on several occasions that some particular lines of fish that we produce are sold 100 per cent in the United States. That is the natural market for fresh fish, lobster, and all kinds of shellfish. In the dried-fish industry you have a different market that goes farther south. If the fisherman in Newfoundland expects to sell dried fish during the year 1950, I am convinced in my own mind that he will be obliged to seek a market in that same country.

There is a problem which arises in connection with price control and which has been discussed to a great extent down on the Atlantic coast. As I have stated, we sell practically all we produce in the United States, in competition with fish that are caught in the state of Maine. When this prices board was set up in 1944, all the papers in the state of Maine and along the New England coast line took it up immediately. The great worry among the fishermen in those states at that time was that we in Canada would be selling fish, the price of which was supported in Canada, in competition with Maine fish. They were bitterly opposed to Canadian fishermen having that advantage.

When the time comes, and if it is found necessary to support these prices, I believe that we may find a good deal of opposition in the state of Maine, in trying to compete with those fishermen there. I believe there is some way by means of which the fishermen may be helped to the extent that they can at least sell all they produce at the cost of production. Prior to the war, those engaged in the fishing industry had had many years of distress circumstances. Anything that might be done by this government to assist the fishermen down in that section would certainly be appreciated. But I know that we shall find that opposition from the fishermen in the New England states. I realize that it may be quite a problem and in the final analysis it might be responsible for a duty being placed on Canadian fish going into the United States. If a duty were placed by the United States on any of the fish that we produce, it would practically kill that particular industry down there. I just want to put one set of figures on the record again to indicate the extent to which we depend on those people for markets.

A few years ago—as a matter of fact, in 1948—I obtained the figures from the lobster company in the town in which I live as to the volume of their business transacted in the United States. In that particular year they did $4 million worth of business in lobsters. Of that total 96·4 per cent of the lobster was sold in the United States. Less than 4 per cent was sold in Canada. We have other industries down there—smaller ones I will admit—where 100 per cent of the production is sold in the United States. Legislation that may in any way interfere with the market we have enjoyed over the years would be very harmful to the fishing industry in that section. I am hopeful that this legislation may not bring about that condition, but at the same time I realize that we certainly will have a lot of opposition from fishermen in the New England states.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Coming into force.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, when the house was at the resolution stage, the hon. member for Selkirk asked a question, and I promised that when we were in committee on the bill I would answer it. I have the answer prepared. It is rather lengthy, and if I have the unanimous consent of the committee I will put it on Hansard.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to put the answer on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacNaught: The following is the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Selkirk, which is to be found on page 1080 of Hansard:

1. Expenditures for support

The net amounts expended by the fisheries prices support board for price support purposes in each fiscal year is as follows:

Year	East Coast	Prairie Provinces	West Coast	Total
1947-48	....	....	....	....
1948-49	$538,988.35	....	....	$538,988.35
1949-50	605,151.04	$264,688.34		869,839.38
Totals	$1,144,139.39	$264,688.34	....	$1,408,827.73

N.B. The 1949-50 amounts and the totals are preliminary and subject to audit.

2. Disposal of purchases

(a) East Coast Canned Fish (1948-49 and 1949-50)

	cases
1. Commercial sales to exporters at prescribed prices	3,036
2. Sales to united nations international children's emergency fund at discount of 15 per cent	7,479
3. Government authorized gift to middle east relief through Canadian Red Cross Society, free at dockside Saint John, N.B.	40,000
4. Government authorized gift to United Nations for relief of displaced persons in middle east	55,657
5. Government authorized gift to Canadian public and charitable institutions	44,819½
6. Samples and spoilage	35
Total	151,026½

Proceeds from sales (first two items) were $70,977.21.

As this support program extended into the present fiscal year, these figures are preliminary and subject to audit.

(b) Manitoba lakes frozen fish (1949-50)

	Receipts
1. Sold for reduction to fish meal: whitefish, sauger, pike, pickerel and tullibee totalling 2,328,572 lbs.	$28,889.80
2. Sold to fur farmers: whitefish and tullibee totalling 968,687 lbs.	14,653.95
3. Sold in Toronto market (for human consumption) whitefish, sauger, pike, pickerel, trout and tullibee totalling 31,088 lbs.	4,887.07
4. Filleting and reduction experiments: whitefish, sauger, pike, pickerel, trout and tullibee totalling 35,100 lbs.	....
5. Given to Department of Fisheries (for use in training inspectors): whitefish, sauger, pike, pickerel and tullibee totalling 9,951 lbs.	....
6. Spoilage and shrinkage: whitefish, trout, pike and pickerel, totalling 2,684 lbs.	....
Total	$48,430.82

These figures are preliminary and subject to audit.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I notice from the report of last year of the fisheries support board that research activities were carried on in the Gaspé peninsula and on the north shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Magdalen islands in 1948 to find out the relationship between fishermen's incomes and the factors affecting them. I wonder whether any work of that kind was done in Newfoundland during the past year.

Mr. MacNaught: Yes; similar work has been done in Newfoundland, and is going on all the time.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): By whom?

Mr. MacNaught: By officials from the fisheries research board.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): At Ottawa?

Mr. MacNaught: Yes, from the prices support board in Ottawa.

Mr. Gibson: Are any applications to the fisheries support board being considered at the present time in relation to any commodities? If so, where are they?

Mr. MacNaught: There is one.

Mr. Gibson: From what district?

Mr. MacNaught: One application came in for consideration a short while ago. It is from British Columbia and has to do with dogfish oil. Last week the board considered one from Newfoundland. It had to do with the salt fish situation.

Mr. Gibson: No decision has been arrived at yet?

Mr. MacNaught: No.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Would the same support apply to the fish that is exported as it does to the fish that is consumed or sold in Canada?

Mr. MacNaught: I understand that if the fish is to be subsidized it will not be exported.

Mr. Higgins: I may not have got the answer correctly to the question asked by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. Did the parliamentary assistant make a statement with respect to price support and the setting of a ceiling price on fish? Will the minister make a statement on that now?

Mr. Mayhew: I did not hear the hon. member's question. Will he repeat it?

Mr. Higgins: I understood from my colleague that the parliamentary assistant gave an answer to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni with respect to an application from Newfoundland to the prices support board. I did not hear it.

Mr. Mayhew: The parliamentary assistant said that there was an application before the board for a floor price on cod liver oil. That has been considered, but no decision has been rendered.

There is also under consideration what we might do to help the salt fish situation in the province of Newfoundland. No decision has been reached on that, although a recommendation is going forward.

Mr. Higgins: The minister has had a request, has he?

Mr. Mayhew: Yes, we have had a request. I do not know whether it is an official request, but the problem of the Newfoundland salt fish industry is one that has been carefully watched ever since the exchange situation developed, and we are giving it every assistance we possibly can. I think we would have greater success if there was less said about a surplus. You are creating a situation for yourself that makes it very difficult in Newfoundland when you tell the world that you have a long surplus of fish. I would like to tell them now that you have not got a long surplus, and let these people know who are looking for bargains that they are not going to get them.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask the minister who in the house has been making statements about surpluses in Newfoundland?

Mr. Howe: Everybody who rises in his place.

An hon. Member: You have.

Mr. Higgins: I have not.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

Mr. Mayhew: I had not intended to say anything on this matter because the parliamentary assistant was handling it. The hon. member for Selkirk implied that we had paid the money to the wholesalers rather than to the fishermen for the fish that were taken in Winnipeg last year. We obtained the names of the fishermen from the wholesalers who brought them in, and the cheques were sent to the individual fishermen, not to the wholesalers. We paid the cold storage people for the storing of the fish. Necessarily we had to bring them in, and they were on consignment there. We had to pay for the storage, but for the fish themselves the cheques went to the individual fishermen.

Mr. Bryce: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister another question. These cheques that went out went to the men that collected the fish, not to the men who took the fish from the lake?

Mr. Gibson: What is the difference?

Mr. Bryce: There is a big difference.

Mr. Gibson: It was a poor buy, anyway.

Mr. Bryce: It was not a poor buy at all. I am serious about this. Hon. members can laugh at me as much as they like; I do not care. I would not rise in my place and tell the hon. gentleman he was wrong if I did not know that I am right. I am positive that I am right, because I have been there and I have seen it myself; the men who actually drew the fish out of the lake did not get paid. The men who collected the fish skinned them, passed them on to the packer who got the cream off it. I have another question.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Bryce: I do not want to be heated about this, but I am going to be asked these questions when I go back to Manitoba.

Mr. Mayhew: I will give the hon. member all the information if he asks me in a proper way.

Mr. Bryce: The minister employed a technical consultant three months under the Fisheries Prices Support Act. What was his job? Who was he?

Mr. Mayhew: That is a question that could be answered when our estimates are before the committee. I should be glad to give the information then. We will give all the information. We shall tell you to whom the cheques were sent and how they were distributed.

Mr. Bryce: Will you take the question as notice?

Mr. Mayhew: Yes.

Mr. Higgins: I asked the minister a question a short time ago but he did not answer me. I should like to have cleared up the suggestion that some hon. member on this side of the house, meaning either the hon. member for St. John's West or myself, has been talking about the fish held in Newfoundland, and that if we did not talk too much about it there would not be so much there. I want to know if the statement was made either by the hon. member for St. John's West or myself.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I think the minister should be allowed to answer.

Mr. Mayhew: There has been a delegation here in connection with fish and that has been known to everybody. You have all said that you are in a difficult position, although probably that was not said in the house.

Mr. Higgins: We are.

Mr. Mayhew: That is all I was talking about.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will take up the motion under the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to set up a committee to deal with old age security. Then we will try to have the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the standing committee on external affairs. We will then revert back to government notices of motion and take up the motion of the Minister of National Revenue to set up a committee on radio broadcasting. If we are successful in getting that through we will take up the motion of the Secretary of State to set up a special committee to deal with amendments to the Dominion Elections Act, 1938. If we have any time left there are a few other resolutions to be dealt with.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 30, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

NEWFOUNDLAND

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF UNION WITH DOMINION OF CANADA, MARCH 31, 1949

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be the first anniversary of the union of Newfoundland with Canada. I am drawing the attention of the house to it today because I shall not be here tomorrow. Through the courtesy of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin), with other members I am making a formal visit to the historic town of Granby; a number of members, therefore, will not be here tomorrow.

I should like to take this opportunity to thank hon. members for the courteous manner in which they have received the members from Newfoundland since they came here as representatives from that province. I should also like to express the hope that the sympathetic consideration that has been shown Newfoundland and its problems will continue in the future. I trust that history will record the union as a happy one, and that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) will continue to feel proud of the major role he played in making union possible.

AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AS TO EXPENDITURE, PRODUCTS COVERED, ETC.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the night before last I agreed to answer certain questions asked by the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton). They are to be found at page 1205 of Hansard, and read as follows:

How much of the $200 million has been used in each of the calendar years since 1944?

He was referring to the $200 million provided under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

What products have been covered? What is the amount of each product covered, and what is the amount of each product purchased under the act? How much of the butter that has been purchased is not up to the grade that it was when it was put in storage?

Most of what was asked for was answered in a return tabled on March 10 at the request of the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright). I have other specific information which I shall read into the record. The information as to the amount used in each of the calendar years since 1944 is as follows:

Year	Commodity		Cost to December 31
1944
1945
1946
1947	1946 potatoes		$ 170,748.48
1948	1947 apples (Nova Scotia)		3,119,274.22
1949	1948 apples (Nova Scotia)..	$1,443,231.39
	1948 apples (British Columbia)	44,650.93
	1948 potatoes	1,646,839.34
	1948 white beans ...	194,419.88
	1949 dry skimmed milk	5,043.52
	1949 apples	867,992.33
Total 1949 calendar year cost		$4,202,177.39	4,202,177.39
Total net cost to December 31, 1949..			$7,492,200.09

Notes: Re agricultural prices support

1. At December 31, 1949, the board held stocks of butter, honey and cheese as follows:

Honey—2,985,322 lbs. (reduced to 2,956,062 lbs. on March 25, 1950)

Butter—40,694,784 lbs. (reduced to 21,248,000 lbs. on March 25, 1950)

Cheese—18,680,469 lbs. (reduced to 17,636,153 lbs. on March 28, 1950)

2. With the exception of 1949 the net cost as shown above is approximately the amount of money required for purposes of handling products under the act. However, in 1949 the maximum funds required for financing were in the neighbourhood of $40 million, since butter, cheese, dry skimmed milk and honey stocks were held at one time in November, 1949, at a cost of close to $35 million.

3. Up until March 15, 1950, more than half of the 48 million odd pounds of first grade creamery butter placed in storage by the board in 1949 had been regraded and resold for consumption in Canada. On regrading this amount of butter about 95 per cent of it was first grade creamery butter out of storage.

The direct answer, therefore, to the last question would be that about five per cent was under grade.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING—RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Browne (St. John's West) be substituted for that of Mr. Adamson on the special committee on railways and shipping.

That the name of Mr. Ward be substituted for that of Mr. Weaver on the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

Proposed Legislation

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEA ISLAND, B.C., AIR FORCE STATION—EMERGENCY QUARTERS

On the order for motions:

Mr. J. A. Blanchette (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): In reply to the inquiry made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) on March 23 and March 29, concerning evictions which were to take place from the emergency housing accommodation at the R.C.A.F. Sea Island station, I desire to state that information obtained from Vancouver is to the effect that owing to the progressive deterioration of the wartime constructed buildings which have been in use as emergency married quarters, and the fact that there has been some increase in availability of alternative accommodation, notice of intention to vacate the emergency married quarters by April 1, 1950, was given on December 1, 1949.

Seventy families were occupying emergency married quarters on December 1, 1949, and of these, sixteen have vacated quarters since notice was given. However, five families have been permitted to move in, so there are still fifty-nine families in occupation. No families will be put out, but extentions granted to continue occupancy must be of a temporary nature, as it is desirable that these emergency quarters be vacated as early as possible.

Mr. Green: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if there is any building project under way which would provide housing accommodation for these non-commissioned officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force at Sea Island? If not, is it a fact that the government is accepting no responsibility for obtaining housing for these men and their families?

Mr. Blanchette: I regret that I cannot answer the question at the moment. I will take it as notice.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 86, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Weir.]

ONTARIO-MANITOBA BOUNDARY

AMENDMENT OF MANITOBA AND ONTARIO BOUNDARIES EXTENSION ACTS

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 87, to amend the Manitoba Boundaries Extension Act, 1912, and the Ontario Boundaries Extension Act.

Mr. Graydon: There should be an explanation of this bill.

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): This is a very short bill, making certain small changes in the boundary between the two provinces to correct errors which I fancy have been discovered in the surveys, and on which the surveyors have agreed. I might put it this way: that it is just to straighten out a jog.

Mr. Graydon: This has no relation to the suggestion advanced by the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Studer)?

Mr. Maybank: I understand that suggestion was that Saskatchewan should be wiped out. I rather think the effect of this change will be to take away thirty-six feet from Ontario and give it to Manitoba.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN LOANS AND CREDITS TO OVERSEAS COUNTRIES

Mr. Thatcher:

1. Have any Canadian loans or credits, extended to overseas nations since 1946, been wiped out?

2. If so, what loans or credits, and in what amount?

Mr. Belzile:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

YUKON RIVER—USE OF CANADIAN WATERS FOR GENERATION OF POWER IN ALASKA

Mr. Green:

1. Has the government of Canada entered into negotiations or a contract with any corporation whereby water will be removed from the lakes at the headwaters of the Yukon river and conveyed to Alaska, there to be used to generate power for an aluminum plant? If so, with what corporation?

2. Is that corporation Canadian?

3. Is it a subsidiary company of a foreign corporation?

4. If such a contract has been entered into, what are the terms?

5. If such a contract is proposed or contemplated, what will the terms be?

6. What compensation will Canada obtain for allowing Canadian waters used for a project in a foreign country?

7. If preliminary or other work has been performed in Yukon on contemplation of such project, what has the work consisted of?

8. Where has such work been done?

9. Is any such work now in progress in Yukon, and if so, what work, and where is it being done?

Mr. Prudham:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Answered by No. 1.

5. Answered by No. 1.

6. Answered by No. 1.

7. Surveys have been conducted on the Yukon river in the vicinity of Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, and in the vicinity of the Yukon-British Columbia boundary.

8. Answered by No. 7.

9. No.

YACHT "SANS PEUR"

Mr. Herridge:

1. On what date was the Duke of Sutherland's yacht Sans Peur chartered from the British ministry of war transport?

2. On what date was the Sans Peur handed over to the Royal Canadian Navy, and at what port?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. October 12, 1939.

2. October 13, 1939, at Esquimalt, B.C.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—ELIGIBILITY OF HUSBAND AND WIFE

Mr. Argue:

When a wife and husband are each declared eligible for prairie farm assistance on the grounds that the wife owns and actually operates a farm apart and separate from her husband, must the wife (a) submit proof that she owns her own equipment, or produce receipts for payment of custom work; (b) show proof of having purchased supplies necessary for the operation of her farm; (c) have her own permit book?

Mr. McCubbin: Proof of eligibility required for a wife claiming to own and operate a farm apart and separate from her husband is the same as for any other applicant.

COLD STORAGE—APPLES—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

1. How many applications were received for assistance in the construction of apple cold storages in Nova Scotia, during each of the years from 1939 to 1949?

2. In each of these years how many such applications were approved?

3. To whom and in what amounts was assistance given in each of these years?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. 1939, nil; 1940, nil; 1941, nil; 1942, nil; 1943, nil; 1944, nil; 1945, one; 1946, nil; 1947, one; 1948, two; 1949, nil.

2. 1939, nil; 1940, nil; 1941, nil; 1942, nil; 1943, nil; 1944, nil; 1945, one; 1946, nil; 1947, one; 1948, two; 1949, nil.

3. United Fruit Companies of Nova Scotia, Limited:

	1947	1948	1949
Canning, N.S.	....	$42,830.87	$19,987.74
Coldbrook, 1	$38,082.06	17,771.63	10,155.22
Coldbrook, 2	....	....	37,009.59
Middleton ..	....	....	36,629.90

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

NAVY, ARMY AND AIR FORCE BENEVOLENT FUNDS

Mr. Fulton:

1. What sums have been paid out for benevolent, work by provinces, by the army benevolent fund, in each year since its inception in 1947, to date?

2. What sums have been paid out for the same purposes in the same period, by provinces, by the navy benevolent fund?

3. What sums have been paid out for the same purposes in the same period, by provinces, by the air force benevolent fund?

GENERAL A. G. L. MCNAUGHTON

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What sums of money, as (a) salary; (b) expenses, were paid to General A. G. L. McNaughton, during the year 1949, as (1) Canadian representative of United Nations atomic energy commission; (2) commissioner of the international joint commission; (3) Canadian chairman of the permanent joint board on defence; (4) chairman security council of the United Nations?

2. What income tax was paid to the government of Canada in respect of such salaries and expenses?

3. What is General McNaughton paid, as (a) salary; (b) expenses, as commissioner of the international joint commission?

4. What does General A. G. L. McNaughton receive by way of pension as a retired officer of the Canadian permanent forces?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER ADJOURNMENT FROM APRIL 5 TO APRIL 17

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, the 5th April, it stand adjourned until Monday, the 17th April next.

Mr. Knowles: Is it the intention of the government to propose any changes in the order of business for next week? In other words, if this motion carries, shall we have private members' days on Monday and Wednesday, in accordance with standing order 15?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not want to be too definite about it; I would have to consult my colleagues, but that was the understanding. Next Monday would be private members' day, and the Monday upon which we reconvene would be private members' day.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ANNUAL GRANT TO GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Railway Act to increase the annual grant to the grade crossing fund from $500,000 to $1,000,000 for six consecutive years, from April 1, 1951.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY LEGISLATION, ALTERNATIVE METHODS, ETC.

The house resumed from Friday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin for the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament on old age security.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, had the government placed on the order paper in 1946 this resolution to set up a committee to investigate old age pensions, I think they could have been commended for their action. But when it appears on the order paper now, four years later, the people may well ask what the government have been doing in the meantime. The people will undoubtedly look upon it as a delaying action. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) admitted that that charge would, in all probability, be made. I think it is well to remember that during the war the government promised the people time and again that at the end of hostilities an over-all social security program would be brought down. Surely by now the government must have the necessary information to enable them to do that.

Unfortunately the failure of the government to enact such legislation to cover our senior citizens is resulting in various industries being required by their employees to institute pension schemes. The cost of these schemes is included in the price of the goods that the industry provides, without the general consumer benefiting in any way from such a pension scheme. Whilst there may be, and undoubtedly is, some difference of opinion as to how far a scheme of social security would have to go before it may be termed adequate, there cannot be any doubt about the need for the government bringing down this session an over-all scheme of old age pensions based upon certain recognized standards. I would say there is an overwhelming volume of public opinion behind the demand for such action. Much credit is due to the various organizations that have been mobilizing public opinion behind the demand for pensions for our senior citizens.

The minister took a great deal of time in drawing attention to what we are doing for our old age pensioners in Canada, and what is being done in other countries. It is a pity that the minister did not also, at that time, draw a comparison between the per capita wealth of Canada and the per capita wealth of those countries with which he made comparisons. I should like to have seen the minister make a comparison between what we are doing in Canada and what the productive capacity of Canada is actually capable of providing.

Let me explain what I mean by a scheme based on recognized standards. Most people believe a pension payment should buy the old age pensioner food, clothing and shelter. Most members of the house would agree that would require an amount of at least $50 per month. When the minister spoke in this house two years ago he admitted that $50 per month would not be too much for that purpose. I believe there would be general agreement, therefore, that the basic pension must not be less than $50 per month. Then, it must be all-embracing so as to cover everyone, without being subjected to the humiliating and iniquitous means test. This would enable pensioners to enjoy additional comfort as a result of the savings they may have made in the past, or which may flow from jobs they are able to do in their old age. The pension must be paid at the generally recognized age of retirement, which I think most members will agree is sixty-five. Then, as production expands in relation to demand and unemployment increases, the government could very well reduce the age to sixty, so as to enable people to retire at that age from the labour market, and make way for the younger generation.

On the question of financing, I realize that we are on more controversial ground; but if we keep on a broad factual basis, I think we shall avoid a good deal of confusion. The principle of taxation on the basis of ability to pay is widely accepted in Canada. The federal government have the income tax field, and they also have control of the national financial policy. We in this group therefore believe that the federal government should assume the whole financial responsibility for the payment of the old age pension, and that funds for payment should be obtained in part from those with taxable incomes. I shall deal later on with where the balance might be obtained.

We in Canada have established exemptions from income tax on the ground that incomes below that level are too low to tax; that is to say, for married people we have established the exemption at $2,000 and for single people at $1,000. Apparently we take the stand that persons who are obtaining those incomes are obtaining only enough money to meet living costs, and that we therefore should not reduce those incomes further by income tax. For exactly the same reason that level of income should not be reduced by levies for old age pensions or other purposes. I therefore suggest that only income tax payers should pay into the fund. Then, at the age of sixty-five, all persons should be eligible to receive the old age pension; but to the extent that the pension exceeds the amount of the income tax exemption, the pension could be reduced.

It is interesting to note that that is the attitude taken by the Old Age Pensioners' Society of Alberta. I have in my hand a brief that I believe was sent to all hon. members. I want to quote from the first section of it, which reads as follows:

> 1. We want the pension age reduced from seventy to sixty-five years for men and sixty years for women, and the basic pension raised from $40 per month to $50 per month without the means test.
>
> We want the standard of living that is recognized in the Income Tax Act. That is to say, the ceiling on income in the Old Age Pension Act for a single man over seventy years of age is $600, but the single man over sixty-five years of age is exempt from income tax below income of $1,500. The married man with wife over seventy years old in the Old Age Pension Act has a ceiling on income of $1,080. The married man with wife is exempt from income tax if his income is less than $2,500. What we maintain is that the same standard of living should be recognized in both acts, and that the old age pensioners, single and married, should have their ceiling on income raised to the level of the exemptions on income for single and married as in the Income Tax Act. Both are based on a standard of living.

I think all hon. members will agree that that is a logical stand to take. When the committee investigates a scheme for old age pensions, I think they could well give consideration to this point. It would mean that no deduction would be made in the pensions of married persons with incomes below $2,500, and that no deduction would be made in the pensions of single persons with incomes of less than $1,500. After all, persons with incomes over that amount at the age of sixty-five would be able to live quite nicely without the payment of a pension. But in the first instance the pension should be paid to everyone, and then it could be recovered by income tax, from those with incomes above that level.

We are told that such a proposal would create a heavy financial burden. I contend that it would have just the opposite effect, that the payment of a pension of that kind would actually be an insurance, in part at least, against depression and would also provide security for our senior citizens. One of the main problems we face today is the question of markets. Lack of markets means increased unemployment, which means a reduction in purchasing power, which means a reduction in effective demand and consequently a reduction in production, resulting in depression. I therefore think it is of primary importance to maintain the purchasing power of the people at a level that is sufficiently high to buy the production of the country; because if that is not done, production will be reduced and unemployment will increase, and consequently the income tax base will be reduced. I therefore think it is of primary importance, Mr. Speaker, to maintain the purchasing power of the people at a level that will buy the production of the country.

When family allowances legislation was introduced into the house, it is interesting to note that it was recognized that the payment of family allowances would help to maintain the purchasing power of the people and would consequently help to maintain full employment. I quote from a revised draft, dated February 23, 1949, headed "Family Allowances—a Children's Charter for Canada", paragraph 4:

> As the years go by, family allowances can help to reduce sickness, disease, crime, illiteracy, inefficiency, and other social ills that have their roots in child upbringing. Since they are given to people who will spend the money, they will create a continuous demand for necessities which will result in increased production and employment.

You will get exactly the same result when you pay out money for old age pensions. Money paid out for that purpose will be spent, and consequently will help to maintain a demand against goods. Hence, Mr. Speaker, when surpluses appear and unemployment expands, the government will be justified in issuing national money for the purpose of buying our surpluses. To that extent, therefore, old age pensions should be financed by debt-free money instead of by expanding taxation, which would have the effect of reducing purchasing power. In that way you would be stabilizing the economy of Canada and helping to prevent a depression.

Old Age Security

I was amused by a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and quoted with approval by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The hon. member for Vancouver East, speaking on old age pensions, reiterated the statement that was quoted by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. But in view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was specifically referring to a statement that was made last year, I am going to refer to that statement only. I would say that this statement would undoubtedly be acclaimed by Wall street and by St. James street; and I cannot help thinking that every time a prominent socialist makes a statement of that kind there must be rumbles of deep belly-laughter in high places; because after all, if that policy is adopted, it means that you maintain a tight-money policy which bolsters the interest rate. Let me quote what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, and it is to be found at page 644 of Hansard:

> I must repeat however that, whatever we do, we must take care to ensure that any program we develop lies within the capacity of the Canadian people to maintain.

I am sure that all hon. members would agree heartily with that statement. He goes on to say:

> In this connection, I will recall the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver East as reported on page 469 of Hansard for October 3, 1949. It reads as follows:
>
> "Up to this point I have not said anything about how a social security program should be financed. I am dealing with broad principles and not with details. I do not believe that I have any illusions about how measures of this kind are paid for. They are paid out of the national income. That in turn comes out of national production . . ."

He goes on:

> "I say that, because there is an idea abroad that there is some mysterious source from which food, shelter and clothing can be paid for without taking it from those who produce it or have claims of ownership to it. There is no such way."

There is a remark that I should like to interject at this point. Unfortunately the number of claims coming forward at any given time are not sufficient to move your total product, with the result that surpluses occur; and if these surpluses are allowed to grow you will have either destruction of wealth or reduction of production, which of course means an increase in unemployment, reduction in production, a reduced standard of living and consequently a reduction in the income tax base. I go on to quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

> I believe those words of the hon. member for Vancouver East, Mr. Speaker, deserve to be re-echoed in this house. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that social security has to be paid for out of production.

[Mr. Quelch.]

Again let me interject: I am sure that all hon. members would agree with that statement, but shortly afterward the minister made an entirely different statement. I quote:

> With that in mind, what we wish to do is to develop, within the limits only of the financial capacity of our people.

If the minister had said, "within the productive capacity of the people," I would have agreed with him one hundred per cent; but financial capacity and productive capacity are two very different things. The Minister of National Health and Welfare and the hon. member for Vancouver East apparently regard the market value of the national product and the national income as being synonymous. They both ignore the fact that national income is invariably less than the market value of your national product. That is true of Canada. It is true of all highly industrial nations. Unfortunately in this country we have never set up a committee to investigate the question of the potential productive capacity of the country. But such a body was set up in the United States of America. A body of experts was asked by the Hoover administration to make a survey of the potential productive capacity of the United States. That body, under the chairmanship of Dr. Harold Loeb, made a careful analysis of the relationship between the national income and the national product. I quote from the report that was issued by the chairman in 1935, entitled "The Chart of Plenty," at page 71:

> The total national monetary income in 1929 did not equal the total price asked for the goods which could have been produced by the plant then existing. But instead of dropping prices until monetary income was able to command full production, which is the classical answer to this situation, prices were maintained and production was restricted. Consequently national monetary income did not in 1929, nor does it today, command the full production of our industrial plant. Which is another way of saying that the national income was not what it should have been. In fact since 1929 the national monetary income has been commanding an ever-decreasing volume of consumer goods, and the actual national income has become but a fraction of the possible national income.

I would not bother to take the time to quote this extract if it were merely an opinion, but it is a statement based upon facts, upon a survey made by this body of sixty engineers and experts appointed by the Hoover administration to investigate the relationship between the national income and the national production, which showed very clearly that the national income is not capable of buying the national product. But that is only part of the story. Even if the national income were equivalent to the market value of the national product, there would normally still be a lack of effective demand, owing to certain practices which are inherent in our system, such as the practice of saving, the re-investment of savings, and especially the plowing back of undistributed profits into new production, thus causing certain moneys earned by industry to reappear as costs before being made available as consumer purchasing power, thereby of course causing a deficiency of purchasing power to that extent.

That has been the history ever since the industrial revolution. People say: Well, if that is true, why did not the system collapse many years ago? Well, you have only to take what has happened to see how that has been overcome. For two hundred years prior to 1914 England maintained a very favourable balance of trade. Reginald McKenna, former chancellor of the exchequer, said that England's prosperity was dependent upon England's disposing of a certain part of her production in that way. The money paid out in that production, which was exported abroad and for which no goods were brought back in return, was made available to buy the goods that were left in the country. The same thing is true of the United States of America. From 1914 to 1949 the United States of America had a favourable trade balance of over $100 billion worth of goods. To a lesser extent it is true of Canada. From 1935 to 1939 the Liberals were in power in this country, and on an average we maintained a favourable balance of trade of $219 million a year. Will any hon. member say that the reason we did not bring imports into the country in exchange for those exports was that the people did not need them, when at the same time we had over a million people on relief? The importers in this country knew very well that if we brought imports into the country in exchange for that favourable balance of trade the people would not have the money to buy them, and the imports were not brought into the country.

I would say that the best example of the nation's inability to purchase the national product out of the national income may be found in the financing of the last war. Hon. members will recall that during the last war we maintained our production at a very high level, and the federal government found it necessary to take approximately fifty per cent of that production for war purposes. In order to pay for that fifty per cent of the national production they raised taxation to a very high degree. They borrowed enormous sums from the people—not merely the savings out of current national income but also savings of past income. And yet in spite of the fact that they taxed at a level higher than this country ever dreamed of; in spite of the fact that they borrowed enormous sums from the people, they were not able to obtain enough money from the national income to buy the national product. Therefore during the war the government had the banking system create for their use over $4 billion worth of new money, $3 billion by the chartered banks and $1 billion by the Bank of Canada. It must be quite clear that it is not possible to finance the purchase of the national product by money from the national income. On the other hand it is true that the physical costs of servicing the country must be met out of the national product. As I have already pointed out, the national product and the national income are two different things.

It will be remembered that during the war time and again it was reiterated in this house by the prime minister, the minister of finance and others, that no financial restrictions would be allowed to impede the war effort. The only thing we had to consider was whether we had the men and the materials with which to prosecute the war. Provided that we had the men and the materials available, we did not hesitate to carry on the production of planes, ships and other things needed in the war. But what happened after the war? As soon as the war was over we found the government going back to the pre-war mentality. Instead of considering whether we could do this or that in terms of wealth, we consider whether we can do it in terms of finance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare adopted that attitude when he spoke in this house. He said: "With that in mind, what we wish to do is to develop, within the limits only of the financial capacity." You never heard that expression once during the war. Nobody ever raised the question whether we could afford the money to build a ship or a plane. It was one thing and one thing only—whether or not we had the men and materials available to do it. Now we are being told that it is a question of finance. We have the goods all right, but we cannot finance the purchase of those goods. So, as I say, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already gone back to that reactionary pre-war mentality.

I should like now to quote from a memorandum presented to the dominion government by the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada on March 9, 1950. This is a memorandum which, I suggest, should be studied carefully by every member. I refer particularly to page 4, where it states:

> Throughout its history the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada has advocated that finance be the servant and not the master of the people. We strongly urge your government to take steps to revamp our financial operations. We note the continued existence of hungry people in many parts of the world and their needs for food and essentials of life. In Canada our producers are losing their markets rather than expanding them, only because our financial bottlenecks prevent the necessary adjustments whereby the growing chasm between our producers and the vast potential markets for their goods could be bridged. When we see such a situation we urge your government to find an effective solution to this problem of financing our home and overseas business. We are not prepared to remain as quiet bystanders watching the failure of our financial operations which, if allowed to continue, in effect will definitely assist in the spread of communism.

I do not think truer words than these were ever spoken. I am satisfied that if in future we allow surpluses to pile up on the one hand, and people to starve on the other, and permit a condition to continue under which the people who produce those goods cannot dispose of them because people requiring them have not the money we shall be permitting a very serious situation to exist in our country.

Some say that pensions should be on a contributory basis, meaning by that a basis similar to contributions to a pension fund on an individual basis. We in this group are definitely opposed to such a proposal, and for a number of reasons.

First of all, it would not be all-embracing. Those unable to contribute would not qualify; hence people in the low income group would derive no benefits from a scheme of that kind. I have in mind particularly subsistence farmers and small fishermen. Second, if contributions are on a compulsory individual basis, we will run into constitutional difficulties, and will also require complicated machinery for collecting the contributions. In either event the scheme would be greatly delayed. If on the other hand it was suggested that these benefits be available through voluntary contributions, I would point out that we already have that machinery available in the form of government annuities. My chief objection however to a compulsory contributory scheme is that people in low income groups require their total income to pay their living costs.

One point upon which I should like to touch before closing is that consideration should be given by the committee to including within the framework of the Old Age Pensions Act people who are permanently incapacitated, either physically or mentally. Some years ago the blind were included, and we believe the time has now come to include incurables within the act.

I would urge that in reviewing old age pension proposals the committee keep one main question in mind, namely the productive capacity of Canada, the ability to provide the goods required to meet the needs of an over-all old age pension scheme. If that capacity exists, then no artificial financial limitation should be allowed to defeat it. It is time that once again the House of Commons should remember the statement made in the house time and again during the war, that anything physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible.

Mr. Little: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Winnipeg South Centre): It had not been my intention to make any extended reference to the position thus far disclosed by members of the Social Credit party, and I would not do so now were it not for one or two observations by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) who has just spoken. I believe that toward the latter part of his speech he showed a very good reason for the setting up of a committee of this kind.

I find the hon. member using a number of terms which have been used by others but from all I can understand they do not use those terms in the sense in which he uses them. It seems to me one of the necessary things in connection with old age pension, or any other social security problem, is that we clearly understand the terms, and that we all have the same understanding of them.

I caught the hon. member speaking about "contributions" as though he thought contributions were pretty much like premiums on an insurance policy—or, if he did not think so himself, that he was under the impression many others did. Well, I, and a great many with whom I have spoken, do not hold any such views. It seems to me this confusion in terms is one reason for a complete examination of the question at this time.

There is of course a sharp difference of opinion among most members of the house—and I fancy most people in the country—and the Social Credit party, with respect to the manner in which a comprehensive old age pension plan should be financed. I listened to the hon. member saying, in effect, that family allowances, to the tune of about $300 million, have done much toward upholding the economy of the country; that when family allowances were instituted, arguments in favour of them were made in this house, saying just that sort of thing.

In his statement the hon. member is correct, because such statements were made, and I think they were sound. Experience has justified the making of them. It does not follow, however, that something which is true under one set of circumstances will be equally and universally true under other circumstances. "Circumstances alter cases" is an old saying in which there is a great measure of truth. It does not follow that because expenditures of $300 million through family allowance payments do good in the way described, that the same sort of thing, to the extent of a billion or two billion dollars, would have the same result, only in larger measure.

Surely that kind of reasoning must have some terminus. If such reasoning is applicable to money, then I am sure it would be asked why it could not be applicable to anything else. I am sure all hon. members will agree that while a drink of whisky may be exhilarating, and two drinks of whisky may be exhilarating, and three drinks—I do not know just how much further I should go in the counting, but we all know that a certain amount is exhilarating—there does come a time with practically everyone when the amount of whisky consumed does not exhilarate any longer, but rather it de-exhilarates. It knocks out. I do not know just where the taking of whisky should stop. With some of us it should stop before it starts, but some can go on for quite a while. That is the kind of argument that is made with reference to these so-called "support-the-economy payments": that if $300 million will be beneficial in supporting the economy when paid out as family allowances, an additional $1 billion paid out to old age pensioners, with the money just manufactured for the purpose, would do even more. It may be that in the proposed committee an examination of that sort of doctrine can take place. It may be that by process of question and answer we can come to an understanding of how far our Social Credit friends would like to go in this direction. It might even be that the rest of us, and the country at large, could determine how much sense there is in this doctrine and how much moonshine. Personally I have endeavoured to be as sympathetic as possible toward what I have heard, but I am forced to say I observe more moonshine than sense in social credit.

In thinking of this subject of social security Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of a line of Lord Tennyson. It is an apt axiom to guide our thinking. It is:

Watch what main-currents draw the years.

It seems to me the "main-current" of the years at present is the movement towards social security. For my part I am happy to be living at a time when men and women are paying so much attention to this, and are seeking to achieve such a benefit for themselves and others. I suggest that the achievement of social security is of necessity a process of evolution. It has to come step by step. I think that is the case with all reforms. I suggest that the Russian revolution of 1917 was an incident that should fortify us in that view. The establishment of this committee is one of the necessary steps in an evolution. I certainly approve wholeheartedly of its being set up. I think such a committee can obtain and record all sorts of information that may be of great value to the people of Canada as well as to members of the House of Commons.

Since anything resulting from the work of the committee and other conferences must have the wholehearted support of the people of Canada, it is important that all possible information should be obtained. I emphasize the point for this reason. At the present time, when Canadian government revenues are not as luxuriant as they have been—and they may continue to be not as luxuriant—a considerable number of people appear to be carrying on propaganda against what is commonly called social security, or, as they contemptuously express it at times, the welfare state. We see this not only in Canada but in a great many other countries. I believe the work of the committee can do a great deal by way of spreading facts on the record to negate this sort of propaganda so far as it is inaccurate or false.

I suggest that social security is a system to attempt to minimize the penalty for lack of financial success in our competitive society. Relatively few people can save enough in their most useful years to sustain them in the years when they are too old or too feeble to work.

Mr. Low: Yes, because the government taxes most of their incomes out of them.

Mr. Maybank: I do not know why the hon. gentleman wants to make a speech at this precise moment, but I suggest that he should not attempt to do so right now, because I want to make one myself, and I have not quite enough time to conclude the remarks I had intended to make. As I was saying, relatively few can save enough to take care of themselves in their old age or in periods of insecurity brought about by other causes. I suppose it is a fact that no person would be deliberately allowed to starve, but merely to have starvation prevented is not, as everybody will agree, social security. In my opinion social security is in the first place a recognition that those who have contributed to the national production should at least have the care of society when they cannot continue to contribute any longer. Second, it is a recognition that it should be received as a matter of right, and it should be received without humiliation.

In the motion before us we are only dealing with one aspect of social security, that of an adequate and sure old age pension. It must be that from the work of this committee a way will be seen to accomplish what we desire in the way of old age pension. The pension must be adequate, and it must be obtained as a matter of right. I think there is widespread agreement about the question of the means test. It must go. Contrary to some of the views that have been expressed in the house, I say at once that I believe the only certain way of doing this is to provide for old age pensions as a matter of contractual right.

Because I do not expect to be a member of this committee I should like to make some observations about the sort of thing that I hope the committee will discover and place before the Canadian people. As to the question of contractual right, it seems to me that when a contribution is paid, then we have the pension on that basis, the likelihood of any government having the temerity or effrontery to change the amount or conditions of payment adversely after the contract is made is reduced to practically zero. When there is no contract, the danger of reduction or changed conditions is always present. Some government will be more solicitous of its treasury than of the aged. The socialist government of Saskatchewan, having offered, with great fanfare, an old age pension increase, seized on the first plausible pretext to cut it. Socialists like to boast they are "in the van." They were in the van in trying to pare down old age pensions. Neither their act nor a somewhat similar act in the Tory province of Ontario would have been possible if we had had pensions on a contractual basis. So, from the point of view of benefit to recipients of old age pensions, a contributory system is by far the best system for us to adopt. There was a remark from the socialist benches a moment or two ago by way of defence against something I said, and it reminds me to point out a truth. We find socialists inveighing from time to time against what they are pleased to call the tardiness or the parsimony of the government of Canada. I think every person will agree, Mr. Speaker, that old age pensions legislation is not all it ought to be; but the record of the years can be searched in vain for an attempt by any Liberal government anywhere to seek to take something away from the old age pensioners, as the socialists of Saskatchewan did at the first opportunity.

Mr. Knowles: You reduced the other income allowable a year ago.

Mr. Maybank: Not only that; for the extra $2.50 they say they give they impose a special means test on their people.

Mr. Knowles: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Maybank: Well, all right, Mr. Speaker. Apparently hon. gentlemen wish to make intermittent speeches, but these will be shown to be facts before this committee; or if they can show they are not facts, they will have that opportunity.

Mr. Knowles: Fair enough.

Mr. Maybank: That is the one sensible remark we have heard from Winnipeg North Centre. Probably the hon. member will find that he spoke too precipitately, but at least he said "Fair enough" so at this moment, on that point, we are all agreed.

A little earlier I was referring to contributions. I say a contribution is not the same as a premium under an insurance policy. I do not believe it is possible to collect contributions to an old age pension plan in exact proportion to the benefits a person will receive. Moreover I do not think it is just that people should have to pay for old age pensions in exactly the way they pay for insurance. A contribution should be made, but it should be based upon ability to pay; on the other hand the pension should be the same for all.

I have spoken about bringing out information on various matters, and there is a specific matter I would suggest to the committee. I should like to see a full examination made of existing pension schemes, with a view to determining whether it might be good policy to assist many private schemes because of the tendency of those plans to cut down the over-all burden of the social security load. Perhaps this will illustrate what I have in mind. A large number of employers have joined with their employees to effect superannuation plans. Some of these plans take the form of the purchase of a government annuity for each employee. At the time many of these plans were entered into the rate on the annuity was 4 per cent. Since then we have changed the rate to 3 per cent. That would not have any effect upon those people already employed and in the plan, but it would have an effect on those who started to work afterward. In a short time an industry may have two classes of superannuation contracts, one of which will be more costly to the employee than the other, and I submit this is not a good thing, that it does not make for industrial harmony. I think we might very well consider whether in such cases it would be wiser to keep the rate where it was, or perhaps bring the rate up in all such cases, in order to give encouragement to plans of that kind.

There is information of another sort I think should be brought out clearly so all Canadians may know the story of pensions in other countries. Socialists are fond of decrying their own country, pointing out what their spiritual brethren do in other climes and thus contrasting what is done elsewhere with what is done in Canada. I should like to see all the facts along that line brought out in order to show just what the socialists do when they are in power, in addition to what they have done in Saskatchewan. The public should know, for example, that the spiritual brethren of the C.C.F. party first exact a toll from the people and then subject them to a means test before they grant any old age pension at all. That is the situation in New Zealand, and very much the same situation exists in various other parts of the world. In New Zealand a boy of sixteen who earns $100 has to fork over $7.50 for social security, and the greater part of that goes for old age pensions. But when it comes to paying the pension, it is subject to a means test.

The means test sometimes is said to be not very severe. Well, information on this might very well come out before the committee; but I know the means test imposed in New Zealand is sufficiently severe that while in 1946, the latest figure given in the New Zealand Year Book, the basic pension was £104, the means test reduced it to £89·2. Later figures may be found in the Statesmen's Year Book. The basic pension has been increased to £117, but the socialist means test cuts that to an average of £110. I think this gives the true measure of the socialist means test, together with the contributory system they have instituted. Expressed in dollars, the pension is supposed to be $360.35 a year, but the means test cuts it down to $341.36. In other words the payment is supposed to be $30.03 a month, but all that is paid is $28.45 a month.

This represents the C.C.F. at work. Here in the house and about the country, you know, we only have the C.C.F. at talk; and there is a vast difference. It ought to be brought out before the committee that this 7½ per cent contribution by the boy of sixteen, and by all others, is not the only payment made for this socialist old age security. A great deal of other taxation has to be collected in order that the $28.45 per month may be paid. Certainly I am no Pollyanna; I do not think everything here is right and good and perfect, and I would join with all men of good will in seeking to improve conditions. Unlike the C.C.F., however, I do not think the way to do this is by constantly decrying my own country. If our socialist friends would try to develop some pride in their country—in addition to the pride they have in themselves—instead of always depreciating it, they could be of more service to their country. I might say right now I think there is one condition that needs immediate correction. It is this ceiling on income for old age pensions. I think the ceiling should be raised at once. At present, one may have $10 per month if he is single, or $10 per month for a married couple, by way of other income, and still receive the maximum pension. I believe a pensioner should be allowed to earn more than that. He ought to be allowed to receive more of what is called "other income" before the pension is reduced under any means test.

In 1927, when the pension was $20 per month, a single man was allowed $10 of other income, and a married couple were allowed $20 of other income. Just looking at that one point alone, it would appear that the married pensioner is a little worse off in respect to this ceiling on other income. I think we should also keep in mind, when we are considering that matter, that today the dollar is a greatly wasted or shrunken instrument compared with what it was when old age pensions were started.

There is another comment I should like to make: I should hope it would be possible for this government to say to all the provinces that, so far as this federal government is concerned, there is no need to put a lien on the homes of old age pensioners. There is a great deal of fear in the hearts of pensioners over the possibility of losing their homes, and they do not like to seem to be signing away their little cottage when they go on pension. I think it would be a small thing for the government to effect that reform just as quickly as possible.

A committee such as this, Mr. Speaker, will make recommendations, despite what has been said in the house. I would expect very definite recommendations from it. I am sorry the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) is not in his place at the moment, because I have to speak of him. I am bound to say that not too much attention should be paid to his strictures. I could not help thinking that the way he dealt with the formation of this committee was rather like the scoldings of a shrew. I do not think too much attention should be paid to that sort of criticism. If a person scolds once or twice, he may be listened to. If he keeps on scolding a little more, he may be listened to in diminishing degree. After a while one will get into the frame of mind of putting the word "common" in front of the word "scold", and one will not listen to him at all.

The house will recall that the hon. member asserted that this committee which is being set up is powerless to make any recommendations, because the motion does not expressly say so. That grievance is clearly mythical. The power to make recommendations always resides in a committee. This mythical complaint stems from the member for Eglinton's experience on another committee. He regaled us with all his recollections of his experiences at that time. The trouble is that his statements do not square with facts. His trouble at that time was that he did not know what his rights and duties were, and because of his ignorance on that point he was helpless, and not very useful. One might have hoped that the passage of time would cure him with respect to this lack of knowledge. Unfortunately there does not appear to have been any advance. Perhaps he is a bit like the Bourbons, of whom it was said that they neither learned anything nor forgot anything.

The hon. member also read on behalf of his party some brave sounding phrases from their platform. The platform stated his party was in favour of pensions without a means test. The statement he read goes on to say, however, that there must be provincial agreement about this. We all know, and the country knows very well, what the Conservatives mean when they talk about provincial agreement. It has been made quite plain in this house that provincial agreement means unanimity. They have made it quite plain that there cannot be any kind of development in the country unless each provincial government gives its acceptance of the proposal.

A short while ago an esteemed member made a reference to the entrance of Newfoundland into this confederation. Despite the fact he came from the opposition side of the house, he spoke in what I thought were felicitous and acceptable terms. Every person was glad to hear him speak in this manner—even happier perhaps because the words were spoken by one who was on the opposition side of the house. As a matter of fact, we who were here remember that the Conservative party would have carried this unanimity idea to the extent that they would only have allowed Newfoundland into confederation if Mr. Duplessis would not have vetoed it. The Canadian people have shown that they know quite well that, no matter what promises are contained in the first sentence of a Conservative manifesto, there will be a "joker" around the middle of it. Unfortunately for the Conservative party, the ability of the people to read is not exhausted after the first ten, fifteen or twenty-five lines of print in one of their documents.

I wish to revert to some remarks that were made by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about these contributory old age pensions. I believe the statements should be examined. This member has indicated he is against a contributory old age pension plan, and that his party is against it. He is in favour of a contributory plan only if everything is comprehended in it. According to him a contributory plan is all right for complete social security, but not for any part of it. This really means that he and his colleagues would favour the institution of several different sections of a social security program, one by one or all together. No one of these sections would be directly contributory. All possible sections of a social security program would have to be developed before any contribution could be required. It would be only after all sections of the social security plan had become effective that he, or they, would say the plan should be put on a contributory basis.

Just for example, take the idea of a pension of $50 per month payable at the age of sixty-five without a means test. This would involve a cost of $615 million annually, and in ten years the cost would probably be around a billion dollars. Family allowances are now about $300 million, and health costs account for quite a number of millions today. As soon as health insurance is introduced, we will expect some hundreds of millions more to be added to the social security expenditure. The socialist plan would be to have no direct contribution for any of those schemes at all until everything was complete, and then a contribution towards this social security measure could be exacted.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this would be very difficult for any government to do. In the second place, the element of contractual right on the part of the recipient would not exist. I should point out, too, that even the socialists admit that benefits must be paid for by contributions or from some form of taxation.

If there is no direct contribution or tax, then there has to be payment by indirect taxation. If income taxes were doubled, it would not be enough to pay for it by way of ordinary taxation and they would have to revert to indirect taxation; that is to say, these taxes would be hidden and it would be denied that there was any contribution toward social security. My comment on that is that it is a most cruel form of taxation. It takes away a great deal from people who are least able to pay and it is just about the harshest sort of taxation there can be. Since they know that pensions must be paid for, and since they say there will not be direct contributions surely they must admit that the way they would finance social security is by many hidden taxes. The people all the time would be gulled—or the attempt to gull them would be made—that they were paying nothing for this social security. I think it is just possible that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be credited with a smart form of political double talk.

Mr. MacInnis: You ought to know.

Mr. Maybank: Yes, I have listened to a great deal of it and I have become a fairly good judge. We have a plethora of double talk from the socialist corner and naturally I have become an expert in the discernment of it. I rather think that the acme of smart double talk has been reached by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and that his colleagues will have to look to their laurels to catch up with him. It might well be, speaking of them and this proposal and their smartness, that an entirely different judgment would be rendered by impartial people when they were speaking of their integrity; it might be.

Before I close I wish to advert to certain other statements—

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit an interjection?

Mr. Maybank: Not just at this moment, if the hon. member does not mind.

Mr. Knowles: I just want it to be known—

Mr. Maybank: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that he just wanted it; and children are always like that: "I just want it now".

Mr. Knowles: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maybank: He should wait until I am through. He has no right to interrupt.

Mr. Knowles: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. Maybank: A point of order is a horse of another colour.

Mr. Knowles: I rise to say that I was prepared not to raise a point of order; but since the hon. member would not let me say that, I shall now have to do so. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to accuse another member of the house of a smart form of political double talk? If it is in order, and the hon. member wants to say it, all right. But I question whether that is parliamentary language.

Mr. Maybank: May I speak to the point of order, Your Honour. What I said was that it may well be that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be credited with an extremely high order—or low order, the nadir—of smart double talk. These were my words. It may be that he will be so credited. I added, with reference to him and others, that it is also possible that in point of integrity a different sort of answer would be reached. If that was not in order, and you so declare, Mr. Speaker, I shall bow to your ruling and withdraw it. On the other hand, referring particularly to a certain remark I made, the hon. member said: "If the hon. gentleman wants to say it." Well, I do want to say it. I said what I was intending to say. I meant it, every word of it; and even if I were forced to withdraw it, I would still think it. If I am in order, I will continue.

Mr. Knowles: To save time, Mr. Speaker, may I withdraw the point of order and say that I am quite prepared to submit my record to the people of Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Maybank: Quite so. I hope we can at least say that he has pronounced the benediction for himself and that he is now indicating that his contributions are closed for a little while. We cannot be sure, of course.

Mr. Knowles: That is right.

Mr. Maybank: He may want to make another remark of the same sort. I suppose, however, this sort of thing is like fleas on a dog; the dog has to put up with them.

Before I close I have to say that there are some statements attributed to my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch), with which I cannot quite agree. He, by the way, is my own member of parliament. I live in his constituency. I am satisfied with the representation I get. That is a general statement. But in certain remarks as reported in the press and in certain remarks in this house, he does not represent me adequately. There is an area of disagreement between us.

We part company, for example, when he describes the Canadian people as a fear-ridden people. He has conveyed the idea, it seems to me, that the Canadian people are so fear-ridden that they are striving frantically to effect security. Either the idea that they are fear-ridden has caused him to think that the people are frantically striving for security or else he thinks they are frantically striving for security and from that fact he concludes that they are ridden with fear. In the first place, I do not agree that the Canadian people are a fear-ridden people. I think there is a moral robustness about my co-citizens the equal of which is not to be found in most countries of the world, and which is not excelled in any country of the world. One will not deny that in every country there are some poltroons. I suppose Canada may have some but they are an inconsequential number, and as such they are clearly the exception to the general run of Canadians. I think that one should not single out an exceptional few for discussion and in such a discussion declare a conclusion about the Canadian people as a whole. Nor do I think there is a tendency on the part of the Canadian people to lean too heavily on government. The socialist endeavour to encourage them to do so has not borne fruit. The socialists did all they could to encourage people to follow them, with all their promises of getting something for nothing. The mere fact that there is such a small number of socialists in the house is in itself an evidence tending to show that Canadians scorn that sort of idea.

Mr. Thatcher: Do not be too complacent.

Mr. Maybank: I am just laying down the facts as they are at the moment. There really was no bargain-counter rush to obtain something for nothing from our socialist friends.

Again, the party to which I belong made it quite clear that social security had to be paid for. We were quite specific about it, and there is a large number of my party representing the people of Canada in this house at the present time. This, too, tends to show that our people are not wanting to lean too heavily on government.

In my opinion my colleague is wrong when he seeks to draw a distinction between social security and social justice. I never heard of social justice as a political maxim in the course of the election. Social security, yes, but not the other. I think it is a mistake—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but he has exhausted his time.

Mr. Maybank: Very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Mr. Maybank: I am nearly finished. If the house will permit me I shall conclude in a moment.

Some hon. Members: Let him finish.

Mr. Maybank: Thank you. As a matter of fact I think no distinction should be drawn between these two terms. I think that one of them is an abstract term and the other concrete. They are not antipathetical. Social security is the manifestation of social justice, or one of its manifestations. In order to get a full measure of social justice you have to achieve social security. I suggest to my colleague that it is mistaken thinking that belief in one excludes belief in the other.

It is also objected—it has been objected by him—that people make sharp inquiries about such things as superannuation when applying for employment, as though it indicated a softness or a fear. I confess I see nothing wrong with this. I think it is a mark of intelligence, not a mark of fear. After all, what is wrong with people in this day and age turning their thoughts seriously—and very seriously—and constantly, to endeavouring to accomplish a plan of security and comfort in old age? All of us can see the devastating effects of poverty. They are manifest everywhere in sickly bodies, stunted minds and problem souls. It is a fact that without help most people cannot possibly get freedom from that poverty in old age. That is to say, without help they cannot get what we call old age security. Here and there a person can struggle against grinding poverty, can make it sharpen his wits, can, through it, develop his determination and his ability. And so he will rise on obstructions to achievement. But where one triumphs over poverty a great many are broken or stunted by it. Hence it is no more than natural that people should seek constantly some means whereby penury in old age can be avoided. When we remember that one may succeed, we should not let the achievement of that one blind us to the breaking of the many.

We must never forget that poverty is wrong, vastly wrong, for it customarily produces those damaged bodies, minds and souls of which I have spoken. Therefore when people turn their minds and hearts to the avoidance of poverty they are acting naturally and sensibly. A person who thinks that way with respect to himself is using no more than common sense. When people think and strive in this fashion for the avoidance of poverty for other people their thoughts and their actions are simply applied Christianity. I cannot decry either common sense or Christianity.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw): I was going to take only five minutes on this matter, but in view of the remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken I think I shall take ten. Probably I am a little biased, but I did not think that several of his remarks were quite fair, and they were not quite up to the speech that the hon. member usually makes. For instance, I did not like his statement that socialists are always decrying their own country. I do not think I have ever decried my country. I may have decried the government, but not our nation. I am quite proud of my country, just as proud as is the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: He does not know the difference.

Mr. Thatcher: I am not going to take time to rehash a lot of political arguments.

Mr. Martin: No, let us get on.

Mr. Thatcher: However, there are one or two things I should like to refute.

Mr. Martin: I am approving.

Mr. Thatcher: There are one or two things I must say. The hon. member who has just spoken did not think that Saskatchewan has done a very good job on old age pensions. Certainly we have not done as well as we should have liked, but I can say that we have done considerably better than his Liberal friends in Manitoba. In Saskatchewan today we are paying a supplementary pension of $2.50 a month, which is not paid in Manitoba, and we are also giving hospitalization and medical care, which is worth at least $5 a month. This in total is about $7.50 a month better than my friends in Manitoba.

The hon. member who has just spoken suggested that we had a means test on the supplementary $2.50. We have a means test, but it is the means test which has been formulated and legislated by the federal government. We are only carrying it out. I am sure my hon. friend could hardly object to that. The member for Winnipeg South Centre said to his knowledge the Liberals have never cut down the old age pension. Well, they may not have cut down the pension, but in April, 1949, when the pension was raised, I remember they cut the extra income allowed, from $20 to $10 for single persons and from $30 to $10 for a married couple; therefore I think the effect was the same.

As I say, I am not going to talk politically this afternoon, but in fairness I thought the hon. member should realize these facts. I thought it was significant that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) spent five minutes dissociating himself from his colleague from Winnipeg South. Many of us did wonder whether it was significant that on the day before the Minister of National Health and Welfare brought in this resolution a parliamentary assistant—the member for Winnipeg South—was describing social security as a snare, a delusion and a fraud.

I was a little surprised too at my good friend, the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Smith), the other day, when he said that there would always be a means test on the old age pension. He said that opposition to the means test is just window-dressing. If there are many Liberals in the house who go along with that kind of philosophy, Canada's old age pensioners may have to wait quite a while for much needed reforms, from a Liberal government.

The resolution before us today calls for the setting up of a committee to study this whole question. As many opposition members have said, the chief fear we have is that the minister and the government may use this committee, as a kind of stall or a political dodge, to avoid taking action. We have seen that happen so often in the past that we fear such action today. We saw it happen on the prices committee; we saw it happen on the flag committee; and we saw it happen on the Indian committee. Repeatedly in the past, the government has used committees of this kind as a stall. We hope it is not going to do so this time.

Several weeks ago the minister gave an undertaking that this committee is not going to be used as a political dodge. I sincerely hope that his undertaking will be lived up to, because I am one who believes that this committee could serve a useful purpose.

Like other Canadians, I wish today that the government was placing before us concrete and tangible legislation which would be of some help to those who need assistance at once. After all, a committee to "study" the problem is not going to be of immediate help. Nevertheless I can realize the very real difficulties which face the government in bringing about the pension reforms that we want. I think most hon. members agree that there are about three main weaknesses in our present legislation. The age limit, of course, is too high, the amount of pension is too low, and the means test is something which is pretty vicious. All political parties recognize those weaknesses. I believe most members of all political parties today wish to do something about it. The question which this committee must decide is the best method which can be used to bring about the reforms we desire.

According to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), several weeks ago 293,000 Canadians are today receiving pension assistance. I believe he stated that the federal government is paying $103 million annually toward the cost, and the provincial governments are paying $32 million. In most places in which I have been in Canada I have frequently heard three specific reforms asked for. Most Canadians want a pension of at least $50, an age limit of sixty-five, and the abolition of the means test. That is the platform of the C.C.F. party, and I subscribe to it. Under certain circumstances, I believe it is absolutely feasible.

What would these reforms cost? As near as I can ascertain—if the means test came off, the number of pensioners would immediately rise from 293,000 to 675,000. Again, if my figuring is correct, such action would increase the cost of pensions to about $330 million. Then, if in addition we brought in the other two reforms, namely the age limit of 65, and the pension of $50 per month, it would cost about $660 million.

Every citizen will realize what that would mean. It would place an almost staggering burden upon a budget which, as we saw the other night, is already bursting at the seams.

There is one other point to remember, and that is the fact that medical science has made tremendous progress since the turn of the century. If it continues to make the same progress in the next fifty years, Canadians may hope to live to the age of ninety years. A child who was born at the turn of the century, could expect to live only forty-eight years in Canada. Today, in Canada a male child has a life expectancy of sixty-six years and, a female child, seventy-one years.

All this can mean only one thing, so far as old age pensions are concerned, and that is that pensions are going to be even more costly in the future. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) stated that C.C.F. members are always crying for something for nothing. I say that is not correct. We C.C.F. members who want pension reforms have no illusions, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has said, as to how they have to be paid for. They have to be paid for out of work, out of production, and out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

During the past week I received a letter from a trade union in the city in which I live. Last week I voted against a pension amendment offered by the Social Credit group, because it called for the deletion of the word "contributory". This union, which is one of the largest in my city—I believe it has about twelve hundred members—has written to me, and I should like to place several paragraphs of the letter on Hansard. They say:

> Our organization wish to express their disapproval of the stand taken by yourself in the recent debate in the House of Commons on the question of old age pensions . . . We feel that the matter of old age pensions is a direct government responsibility, and cannot see the necessity for all workers to contribute to their old age pensions.
>
> Trusting you will reconsider . . .

That union has done a wonderful job for the workers of Moose Jaw. Politically, I owe a great deal to it—indeed, I suppose I might not be here today if it had not supported me. Nevertheless, as their representative I must tell them that in my opinion they are labouring under a delusion and a misapprehension, if they believe that they can have pension reforms without contributing in one way or another to the cost. I wish they could have them without paying, but I am afraid the facts of life are otherwise. I have advised them accordingly.

I would like to see the means test removed right away, if we can find enough money to take such action. However, I admit frankly that if the means test is removed, it will probably have to be done on a completely federal basis. I think of the government in my own province of Saskatchewan. I do not know what would happen if tomorrow morning the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, "We are going to eliminate the means test on the present basis." Such action would mean that the provincial government would have to pay a quarter of the cost. Frankly, I am afraid the government in Saskatchewan, and those in eight or nine other provinces, would have to renege, because they would lack the funds to pay that 25 per cent.

If the means test is to be eliminated—and I say again I would like to see it eliminated—it will have to be done on a federal basis. Otherwise the federal government will have to give the provincial governments other sources of revenue. It is as simple as that.

I said a moment ago that I believe the C.C.F. program for old age pensions is a feasible one, but I also say that I am one who believes it is feasible only if pensions are to be on a contributory basis of some kind. I do not care what method is used, whether it is a flat levy on earnings, or whether the worker pays so much, the company so much, and the government so much. But I do believe that if we are going to have pension reform in Canada it has to be on a contributory basis of some kind. One such method has been advocated by the leader of my party. He has said that there should be a levy on all earnings above a minimum level, according to ability to pay. There may be difficulties in the way of bringing about a contributory old age pension scheme. The constitutional angle for instance has been mentioned.

I believe, however, that if there is a genuine desire on the part of the federal government, and a genuine desire on the part of provincial governments, we can soon have a contributory old age pension scheme in this country.

Let me repeat that I support the setting up of this committee, because I believe it could lay the groundwork for decent old age pensions in Canada. It seems to me that it is common sense to study the systems in New Zealand, Australia, Great Britain, the United States and elsewhere, to reject the worst features of those pension schemes, and to take the best features in order to weld together a system for Canada.

I take the word of the minister, that this committee will not be a smoke screen; I hope he meant what he said. When the vote comes I shall support the motion.

Mr. J. H. Rooney (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I should like to clear up a statement made under date of September 27 last when the Evening Telegram of Toronto carried a charge made by the Toronto labour council that "Rooney campaigned for 60 at 60 without the means test, and then voted against it when it was brought up in the house".

Under date of October 5, 1949, I received the following communication from the Toronto district labour council:

Be it resolved that the Toronto labour council condemns:

(a) the attitude of Toronto and district Liberal members of parliament who recently refused to vote in favour of a motion in the Canadian House of Commons abolishing the means test for old age pension despite campaign promises to the contrary, and

(b) the action of the Toronto Daily Star in suppressing the news of this vote in its columns.

And be it further resolved that we instruct the secretary to write to all Toronto district members of parliament who failed to vote against the means test requiring an explanation of their stand and communicate our feelings to the Toronto Star trustees.

Anticipating your reply, I remain

Yours truly,
Gwen Richardson,
Office Secretary.

My answer dated October 7, 1949, reads as follows:

Toronto District Labour Council,
167 Church street, Toronto.

Sirs: Your letter of October 5, 1949, received and contents noted.

I was sorry the Toronto labour council took the attitude it did in condemning people without knowledge of the facts. I also take exception to your Eamon Park, publicity director of the united steelworkers union, when he stated that I had campaigned for pensions without a means test. Never during my campaign was the means test mentioned.

If your body wishes my co-operation, as I had promised to you under a letter from me dated June 4, and addressed to W. D. Kearns, vice-president, Toronto district labour council, Labour Temple, 167 Church street, Toronto, I would ask you to make sure of the facts before you put my name in the paper or pass any resolutions. I am enclosing circular dated May 30, 1949, from the Toronto district labour council, and I am also enclosing a copy of my letter as outlined above, in answer to same. You will notice that in my letter on your circular nothing was said of the means test.

In reference to paragraph (b) of your resolution I would say that the Toronto Daily Star was right in not publishing this news until they were sure of the facts, and may I be bold enough to say that it would be far better for your council to do the same thing. Over the period of years that I have been in the city of Toronto I believe I have done much to secure work for the unemployed, and it is my intention to carry on that work. I have never done this work from a political standpoint. I did it because during the trying times of the thirties I knew the hardship of the unemployed.

I am also enclosing my campaign pledges, and for your information in my campaign addresses I only appealed for the support of those who thought I had done a fair job for the people of St. Paul's. Anyone in the city of Toronto to whom I could be of assistance always knew that my door was open. I am your friend. I have always been, and I hope to continue so.

Sincerely yours,
J. H. Rooney.

I did not use the abolition of the means test as a campaign issue, Mr. Speaker. I never spoke on any political platform nor over the air on the abolishing of the means test. Furthermore, I never at any time even mentioned the means test in any of my campaign literature.

Mr. Noseworthy: Are you in favour of removing it?

Mr. Rooney: I did not campaign on the means test last June—and this is your answer—but I am and always have been one hundred per cent behind the abolition of the means test. I am not only behind it; I beg this house and this government to be the ones who will make it possible. I am, however, going a step further than my colleagues. I advocate $60 at sixty years. Members of the house are professional and business men. My friends over there are laughing at me. I ask you man to man whether you would hire a man of sixty years of age or over? You know and I know that you would not. I am besieged with letters and telephone calls every day from men who are unemployed. The vast majority of them are from fifty up to seventy years of age. They spend days, weeks, months at the unemployment offices. You and I know that the vast majority will never be placed.

Have you ever taken a look at a man of sixty years of age who has earned his daily bread as a labourer?

Mr. Fleming: The minister should listen to this.

Mr. Rooney: Have you ever taken a good look at a man of sixty years of age who has carried coal on his back for thirty years? Have you ever taken a good look at men who have toiled in offices, shipping rooms, et cetera, from the time they were boys of seventeen and eighteen years, and have never got to first base? I have—

Mr. Noseworthy: Tell that to your minister.

Mr. Rooney: You and I know that the vast majority of men who have managed to keep themselves and their families in a respectable way, and still have managed to call the roofs over their heads their own by the time they are sixty or sixty-five years of age, are very lucky men. They are also very tired men. My plea for old age pensions is not just an impossible fancy. I base it on my experience during the depression. I do not think there is a man in this house who can speak with the experience that I had during the thirties. In the mornings, from 9 o'clock on, my room was filled with the finest of young Canadian citizens ready and willing to work, but what did we do? I am sorry to say we did nothing. Yes, we gave them a small hand-out every week, but if we had added another $7 per week and put them to work doing something, for example, building roads or power plants, things which we are now doing, it would have saved their morale, and in turn we would have had something to show for the extra money paid. We have nothing to show for the hand-out.

The city of Toronto has a wonderful island within its boundaries. We could have had a paradise and a great asset to the city. I tried and they said it was not practical, that Rooney was a dreamer. I acknowledge I am a dreamer. I dream that in some small way I can bring happiness to everyone in this great country of ours which has so much to offer but not people with enough imagination. You will want to know where the $60 per month comes in. If we retired those who were sixty years of age we would thereby make work for those seventeen and eighteen and over who are out of work. If we do not, what do you expect these young people to do? That is the source of so much of the juvenile crime about which we hear so much today.

You will ask how it is to be paid. There are many ways. As an accountant holding the degrees of C.P.A., F.A.E. and R.I.A., I hope you will appreciate that I know bookkeeping entries. Let us think of Donald Gordon, chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways, who, when appearing before the royal commission on transportation, gave the following information and plans. He pointed out that interest-bearing securities held by the government amounted to $760,494,825.11, and that interest received by the government during 1948 was $21,627,-032.82. Then the house is asked to vote to cover a deficit of $33,532,741.12. The suggestion made is to exchange the $760 million of interest-bearing securities held by the government for equity capital, and that the government should acknowledge an indebtedness to the Canadian National Railways in the amount of $300 million to bear interest at 3 per cent until discharged. This would be set up in the accounts of the Canadian National Railways as a capital fund to be drawn on from time to time to retire interest-bearing obligations in the hands of the public, or for capital additions to the property.

[Mr. Rooney.]

I cite this as an example. Let us set up a fund, the capital assets for which would be our citizens and resources which are unlimited. I realize that during the last fifty years a steady and constant rise has taken place in the average length of life of the people and that life expectancy has increased by about one-third. For instance, a child born in 1900, according to the insurance companies, had a life expectancy of forty-eight years. Today a male child has a life expectancy of sixty-six years and a female seventy-one years. If medical science makes as much progress in the next fifty years we can look forward to a span of life of ninety years. I know that would mean changes in our economic life, and we would have an enormous new demand for certain types of goods and services. If we have to worry about what will happen in 1971, I say give Canada back to the Indians and let us start over again. Canada will be a great nation with a large population and well able to look after her citizens by 1971; and by 1988, if we have imagination, we should be as big and as prosperous as our neighbour the United States and have our own gold, which God put in the ground for us, to back our dollars and our obligations.

In connection with mining I want to quote from The Northern Miner:

> This year the Canadian mining industry will reach a grand total of $2 billion paid in dividends.
>
> Last year the mines distributed a record of $118 million.
>
> That was more than the combined dividends of—
>
> all the banks
> all the oils
> all the liquors
> and all the pulp and paper companies.

At present the basic pension is $40 a month at the age of seventy, with a means test. The federal government contributes $30 and the provinces $10, while some provinces are paying bonuses. According to my figures British Columbia now makes an added payment of $10 without the means test. Alberta pays an additional $7.50 without the means test. Saskatchewan pays $2.50 with the means test; and in addition all three provinces provide complete medical care and hospital service free of charge. I know the removal of the means test would bring in the remainder of the 625,000 citizens in Canada over seventy years of age, according to my figures, or the 675,000 according to my hon. friend.

This is a great country, but we must realize the fear of the aged. Freedom from fear was set down as one of the great freedoms for which mankind longed; but the fear from which the aged seek freedom is intense and practical. It is the haunting fear not only of lack of means but of facing failing health alone without the assurance of some place of care and someone to care for them. That, Mr. Speaker, is our responsibility.

I have in my hand an account of the Moose River mine disaster in April, 1936, with which hon. members are familiar. All Canada stayed awake to hear news of Alfred Scadding, the late Dr. D. E. Robertson, and the other man who died in the mine. Remember, Mr. Speaker, there were three citizens; and all Canada stayed up to get the news about them. The other day in Ottawa a boy found some radium. All Canada was interested to learn what was going to happen to him. Remember, Mr. Speaker, in this case it was one boy. On March 1 of this year two miners and one mule got caught in a mine at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. Sixty diggers cleared away tons of coal, timber and so on, with their bare hands, and saved the men. Pete the mule was too big to get through the hole. At last reports they were feeding Pete and digging to rescue him a thousand feet inside a mountain. Remember, Mr. Speaker, in this case there were two men and one mule. I could go on and on, telling this house of the expense and work we would put forth to save someone in danger. Let us remember that we have 625,000 citizens in Canada, many of whom are equally in danger. Let us look after them.

I have read with interest the remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) on March 10, 1950, in moving for the appointment of a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on old age security. I believe this is a good start, and I will await their findings with interest. I hope the proceedings will not be so drawn-out that this house will die of old age in the meantime, since I notice that the first committee of this kind was set up in 1908, while we had another in 1924. Now, twenty-six years later, we are to have still another. I ask this committee to consider a contributory old age pension of $60 a month at sixty years of age, without a means test.

I remember reading some time ago a poem which I should like to quote:

> I hope some fellow will lend a hand
> To help my mother, you understand,
> If ever she's poor and old and gray,
> When her own dear boy is far away.

Let us help them while God gives us time. My hon. friend across the way seemed to enjoy himself while I was speaking. I have a book here which gives the history of what I and my associates did during the depression, showing the close co-operation we received in all parts of Canada. Also, for my hon. friend's information, I might say that the Save the Children fund in London, England, carried the name of Jim Rooney, together with the name of a man from India, for the work they did during the war. So while I am ashamed of my hon. friend over there who has been laughing, I should be very glad to show him our record in the city of Toronto.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 30, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, Thursday, March 30, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

OLD AGE SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY LEGISLATION, ALTERNATIVE METHODS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin for the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament on old age security.

Mr. C. J. Henry (Rosedale): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, since time is short may I say at once that I support the motion. As all hon. members know, considerable progress has been made throughout the world, particularly during this post-war period, in the matter of old age security. Better standards are prevailing today than were dreamed of in the years before the war. Canada holds a particular place of world leadership in this panorama of progress toward better standards of old age security. We Liberals take second place to none in wanting to see those standards maintained, because welfare enterprise goes hand in hand with private enterprise as far as we are concerned. Today it is a competitive race, as it were, in the field of welfare enterprise, to the end that private enterprise may survive and that we may have a system of old age security in Canada, amongst other things, which will enable democracy to prevail.

I direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that there are on this continent two great democracies, one in British North America, and the other in the United States of America. This problem of old age security is one of strictly internal concern to Canada, but I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is some necessity for setting our standards in accordance with those of the great democracy to the south, because it has always been the case that we must go shoulder to shoulder in many economic matters. I am adopting the comparative approach to this problem. I would remind hon. members that before Canada was a great industrial nation Canada was known primarily as an agricultural nation. In those days before 1920 a lost legion of Canadians were attracted towards the higher wage structure of the United States. That lost legion remained static in numbers throughout many years following 1920. It reached its greatest peak in the thirties, and I am glad to say the figures show that it has been steadily decreasing up to 1940, the year in which the last figures are available.

In 1940 there were 1,060,000 Canadians in the United States and when I say "Canadians" I mean people who were born in this country. Going back to 1930, the figure was 1,280,000; and in 1920, 1,125,000. It comes to this, then, that in the year 1940 we had something over 1 million Canadians in the United States. As against this, mention must be made that in 1941 there were 312,000 United States-born citizens in Canada. This reduced the lost legion, as it were, to approximately 748,000 Canadians. I say that this matter of a demand for wider social security today is bound to affect the wage structure of a young industrial country like Canada.

Let this committee consider what they have done in the United States about the question of old age security. Let this committee consider, too, what the United States may do within the near future. It is not my intention to tell the house at this time what the United States proposes to do; that will be a matter for investigation by the committee. But as the minister has said in his address to this house, there are some states in the United States that do provide old age pensions higher than the average in the United States, and higher than the average in Canada. The minister has referred to the fact that the average pension in three states of the United States is $60 per month. Those states are Washington, Colorado, and Massachusetts. There are six states of the United States in which there is a pension of $50 per month paid on the average. They are Alaska, Arizona, Connecticut, Nevada, New York and Oklahoma. This structure, of course, has to be taken in the light of the United States average which, I believe, is something in the neighbourhood of $46. I know all hon. members in all parts of the house were glad to know that the Canadian average monthly pension for the aged stands up favourably in comparison with our neighbours in the United States.

This structure for old age security in the United States, Mr. Speaker, has produced certain direct results which are attractive to labour, business, and all others concerned with old age security problems. There is a federal old age security system in the United States —it is called "contributory" because there are contributions by the employer and the employee. These contributions towards a monthly pension yield about $26 per month on the average at the federal level without any means test. In other words, this is the basic pension upon which the whole United States structure is founded. It is the key to the pension system of the United States, which has enabled labour to negotiate pensions, over and above that basic pension, as high as $100 per month in the state of Michigan. This has been accomplished by the employees of the motor industry. Labour has been able to negotiate similar pensions in other industries throughout the country at roughly similar figures. It is this basic pension which we lack in our social security system in Canada today.

As for the remaining part of the United States structure for old age security, it is similar to the Canadian structure because we have on top of this a non-contributory federal-state structure similar to that which exists here between the dominion and the provinces. I urge upon the committee serious consideration of the present benefits at the federal level in the United States. I mention again that $26 per month which is available without a means test. I urge upon the committee the thought that this is a basis upon which to negotiate pensions in the various industries organized within the framework of the labour movement of the United States. I urge upon them the thought that there may be a pension of $100 per month negotiated by labour in Canada if we have such a basic pension in this country.

Before leaving my discussion of the United States pension structure, I should like to draw to the attention of the house the figures taken from the 1934 house of representatives report upon social security in the United States; that was about the time old age security was introduced in that country. In that report, there are figures which show the delayed benefits under the American system. These delayed benefits are benefits that arrive after 30 years of service, and 30 years of contributions under the federal part of the scheme. Where a person is receiving the average salary of $175 per month, after 30 years of contributing under that scheme, a monthly benefit arises of $51; where the salary is $200 per month and there has been 30 years' service, under the United States system a monthly benefit arises of $61.25.

I conclude this part of my remarks by giving my submissions to this committee. In my view, the means test must go because it favours pauperism and snooping into the thrift of our Canadians. One more thought about the means test, Mr. Speaker. It must go because, in my view, it is childish. The premature retirement of our aged people from the labour pool is unthinkable in this day and age. One forces children to bed, Mr. Speaker, but adults retire.

The next submission I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is to urge upon this committee to examine the world picture. In the British commonwealth, there seems to predominate a common age of sixty-five years for old age security. In the dominion-provincial conference of 1945, a lowering of the age to sixty-five was recommended, and I urge this age limit upon the committee. Finally, I urge it upon them because it is equivalent to that of the United States, which is the one country that goes along with Canada in preserving private enterprise and the democratic way of life on this continent. The last suggestion I make is to let the committee look into the United States system, with its basic pension of about $26 monthly, which will enable labour to do its part in its way to bring up the standard of negotiated pensions on the Canadian side to that on the United States side. Let them consider the states that exceed the Canadian average with $60 at 65. Let this committee find out how that was done. I am sure that no hon. member of this house, including myself, wants this committee to recommend anything which is beyond the means of Canada to pay. But nevertheless, in this competitive scheme of welfare enterprise as between the United States and Canada, we must consider everything which has been done in that country. The minister in his address to this house was quick to point out that in the states of the United States where the payment goes as high as $60 at 65 on a monthly basis, these figures in excess of the Canadian average have been obtained by special contributions on the part of the states involved.

I am going to make a suggestion to one of the most co-operative men in the province of Ontario, namely, the premier. I think that when this committee report comes out, he will be able to gain much from it; and it is not beyond the realm of possibility that, in the light of this report, if this committee does its part in recommending the abolition of the means test and in recommending the lowering of the age, it will lead to co-operation between the provincial government and the federal government on the question of increasing our pensions by joint contribtuions between the provinces and the dominion.

This is the twentieth century, Mr. Speaker, and it has belonged, up to the first half, especially to Canada. Canada is an industrial nation and not the agricultural nation it was in the twenties. Let every hon. member be vigilant to watch the wage structure and the comparative social security measures available in other countries on this continent for those who may choose to go there. Let us keep Canada for Canadians. I think that we must go forward with social security measures at this time and maintain our place in the world panorama. I am not one who says we will kill incentive by doing these things. There was the visit to Toronto of the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch) and briefly, I say this about his speech: although he is a colleague of mine on the government side, he said "much too Mutch" for me. I repudiate his statements and place on the record my remarks here today.

Look at the United States of America! Look at this Dominion of Canada! A war effort was ours which knew no bounds and a war effort was that of the United States which knew no bounds. If you look at the maintenance charge figures of the United Nations you see there world production figures which reflect what the various countries of the world do in terms of world production. The maintenance charge figures assessed against the great nations of the world are as follows. The United States pays about 40 per cent of the cost of that great organization; the Soviet union pays about 6 per cent and our country pays about 3 per cent. Those are figures which indicate what took place on the North American continent; and the war effort of Canada and that of the United States was not killed or delayed by social security measures. Let us have no fear about welfare enterprise at this time in aid of private enterprise. Let this committee give us a national minimum of old age security within the capacity of this country to pay. Let them weigh the facts. Let them be the judges. We shall receive their recommendations with all due respect.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I am not rising to say a great deal, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter. But in view of some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) respecting the policy of the Progressive Conservative party, I feel that a few words would not be amiss. There is not a great deal at this time that one can add to the discussion; after having heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), the hon.

member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and representatives from the other parties, there is little left to be said. But as I listened this afternoon to the variety of opinions expressed by members supporting the government, I certainly agree that if any recommendation can come out of this committee, if it is composed of the members who have spoken this afternoon, the majority of them on the government side of the house, it will indeed be one of the most successful committees that have ever been set up in parliament. Even the parliamentary assistants cannot agree among themselves. The parliamentary assistant does not agree with the minister.

Mr. Fleming: The minister does not agree with himself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As I listened to the last speaker, I noticed that he raised the ante to $100 a month. The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Rooney) raised the ante also and decreased the age. Certainly all you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to have your own opinion, and there is something for everybody. As I listened to the debate this afternoon it appeared to me that parliament had now become an auction market where each exceeded the other in the variety of the suggestions that were made. You pay your money and you take your choice. What a variety of suggestions were made! What a series of auction market promises were advanced!

An hon. Member: What is your bid?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes; my hon. friend says "What is your bid?" That is a serious situation, as I see it, in discussing a matter of such importance as that of a social security program for this country. Indeed, as I listened to some of these hon. gentlemen speaking I found it difficult to understand why they voted as they did last fall on an amendment that was proposed in the house to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, which had to do with the removal of the means test. They could have found themselves at that time in a position where they could not successfully vote against such a resolution.

Mr. Knowles: They all did it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After all, Mr. Speaker, it is not the voice that counts in the House of Commons, it is the vote. It is not the opinion one voices as to what social security measure one wishes, but it is how one votes when one has an opportunity to convey one's wishes to the people of Canada. But it does look to one, even of a not suspicious turn of mind, as an endeavour on the part of the government to postpone and procrastinate on this problem. Indeed it is not consonant with some of the promises that were made during the election campaign.

Many of the older citizens of this country believed that, if the present government were returned, old age pensions without a means test would be provided. Today there is disappointment among the hundreds of thousands of the older people across Canada, when they know that this matter is not to receive the attention of parliament at this time, but that there is to be a further postponement.

I cannot see this committee carrying out some of the promises made during the election campaign. The minister said that at no time was there ever any suggestion by any minister of the crown of the removal of the means test. That is as I understood his challenge. Well, I checked up the records, and I found that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) made a radio address from Montreal on June 16, 1949, over station CFCF, and that was pretty close to the election. This is what the minister said:

> The government will do away with the means test for old age pensions.

That is contained in the radio speech as reported in the Montreal press. Then I refer to the promise made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) at Nelson, British Columbia, on May 29, 1949, as reported by the Canadian Press. He extended the promise considerably when he said this:

> Provision of hospital services for the people of Canada and compulsory contributory superannuation are measures expected for the next session of parliament if the Liberal government is returned.

These two promises made by ministers were in keeping with promises made everywhere in this dominion.

Mr. Knowles: It is always the next session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today, sir, in this house one hon. member after another rises and says: We believe in old age pensions without a means test, but we never said anything about it in the election campaign. Oh, Mr. Speaker, how this attractive promise was forgotten and not referred to is indeed an example of political campaigning that deserves the serious attention of this house. Those were the promises. Today what the people of Canada, including the old age pensioners, get in place of the carrying out of those promises is the setting up of a committee.

I rose for the purpose of suggesting an additional power for this committee, because the motion will pass. Since the motion will pass, it is the responsibility of all of us to endeavour to give the committee powers to meet the situation as we see it in our country today. The resolution reads as follows:

> That a joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to examine and study the operation and effects of existing legislation of the parliament of Canada and of the several provincial legislatures with respect to old age security.

I suggest that that does not mean very much. That information is now available, and no committee will secure any further information than the old age pension administration has today. Further on, the resolution reads:

> . . .possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test. . .

The door is left open there. "With or without a means test." That is a far cry from the promises made during the election campaign. I continue:

> . . .including plans based on contributory insurance principles; the probable cost thereof and possible methods of providing therefor; the constitutional and financial adjustments, if any, required for the effective operations of such plans and other related matters.

It is not with this that I am dealing. What I would like to suggest to the minister is this. In Canada today many companies are setting up pension schemes of their own. Last December the CIO made a declaration in favour of a retirement pension of $100 a month. In various industries the matter is being discussed. Plans are being formulated much along the line of the human engineering that is being done today through many large corporations in the United States. Yet in this resolution there is no provision to have representatives from labour and from industry come before the committee.

Mr. Martin: I hope they will be called.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But there is no power.

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister will allow me—there is no power to correlate their plans with the national plan. In many parts of the country today we find haphazard pension schemes being set up. When I say "haphazard" I mean haphazard with reference to a national scheme. Before this committee is set up there should be some declaration from the minister on behalf of the government of Canada as to the entire plan. What is the social security plan that the government has? It should not be done by dribs and drabs, by bringing in one measure after another, but by setting up in detail a national plan for a period of ten or fifteen years in advance. Once having declared that national plan, labour unions and representatives of industry should be brought before the committee so that their plans could be correlated and made to fit into the over-all national plan. If something along that line is not done, and if the national plan is not announced in advance, by setting up the committee we are going to find ourselves in a few years with the national plan on the one side, and with company plans on the other, and it will be impossible to correlate them into the national plan. I feel sure that the minister would be doing a worth-while work on behalf of his plan for national security in the years to come if he announced it, because I have read everything he has said on the subject. I have read his speech, and I listened to it with attention. But I see nothing of a national plan. I see merely an endeavour to deal with these matters one at a time, instead of having a great panoramic plan which will set forth the objectives, the aims and the means. Having done that it would be possible to bring into agreement the national plan as well as company plans.

I do hope the minister will consent to the amendment to the motion setting up the committee. I have been on committees and I know that when anyone gets into committee and wishes to raise a question as to whether a certain power is within the ambit of the reference, he finds himself up against a difficulty.

For instance, I see no power to report, and I support the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) in the position he expressed in that regard. The minister says the power is there. Well, certainly there is an inherent power; but there is no actual power granted to any committee set up to bring in recommendations. And if the government decides it does not want a recommendation that the means test be removed, then there will be no such recommendation.

That is the experience of every committee. In addition to that, if the government decides that it does not wish to have these company plans looked into, they will not be looked into. I suggest to the minister that he add a clause to provide for the convening, at the time the committee sits, of representatives of labour and of industry in those companies which today have company plans as well as those which have plans in contemplation, to the end that they will build their plans within a national plan.

I say that in all seriousness, because in the United States today the difficulty is becoming more apparent from year to year that within the national plan there is duplication with company plans, when such company plans are brought into operation.

In regard to the general question of old age pensions, our policy, the policy I support, is set forth in our party program. It is to this effect: A contributory social security program providing for retirement pensions at sixty-five, without a means test; and then there are various other matters not related to this motion.

No one need make any argument as to the removal of the means test. I think every hon. member would like to see it removed. Yet there would be no opportunity to vote on that question, unless the minister were to give his undertaking first that an opportunity will be given in that committee to vote as to whether the means test shall be removed and, secondly, that the committee will be given the opportunity to make recommendations.

If the minister will rise in his place at the conclusion of this debate and assure the house that the committee will be allowed to vote on the question of the removal of the means test, then I shall begin to see some reason for the setting up of the committee. If not, then it looks to me like postponement and procrastination.

Mr. Noseworthy: May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The debate will be interrupted while the house goes to the Senate.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

An act to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944.

An act to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

An act to amend the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

OLD AGE SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY LEGISLATION, ALTERNATIVE METHODS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin for the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament on old age security.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, we have before us tonight a resolution calling for the setting up of a committee to study all phases of the question of old age pensions. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) introduced this resolution on March 10 he made an eloquent and stirring appeal on the necessity of having this committee set up. When we heard the echoes of the minister's speech reverberating in the words of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) we were led to believe that the setting up of this committee would mark an epoch in Canadian history. Some of us might be pardoned if, on listening to the minister, we thought this was the first time parliament had given any thought to the matter of old age pensions. One would hardly believe that old age pensions had been in effect in this country for over twenty years, but would have thought we were starting from scratch, with no knowledge at all of the subject.

The minister gave a long account, pointing out in great detail the various purposes this committee would serve. One of the first and probably one of the most important functions of this committee, we were told, will be to help the government arrive at a policy in regard to old age pensions. That is what we were told, notwithstanding the fact that this government has been administering old age pensions for twenty-two years, and notwithstanding the fact that back in 1945 they made it quite clear to the country that they had a policy which was so clear-cut that some five or six pages of the so-called green book, or the proposals of the government, were devoted to an outline of the details. Then for four years, from 1945 to 1949, cabinet ministers, Liberal speakers and Liberal newspapers all through the country persisted in telling us that we had not obtained the social security measures outlined in those proposals because of two men, Messrs. Drew and Duplessis. We were told that but for the obstinacy of those two men at the dominion-provincial conference, the policies outlined in 1945 would have been fulfilled. At that time there was no question whatever of the government being at all uncertain with respect to its policy.

Now it appears that the government just has no policy. Otherwise, why call for a joint committee to help them decide on a policy? There is no policy at the present time, in spite of the assurances given the country by government speakers during the election campaign of 1949. I have here a number of quotations from Liberal speeches made during that campaign, of which I shall read one or two. Here is a statement by Senator Roebuck. At the time he was not a member of the government—and certainly not a member of this house; yet one would suppose that Senator Roebuck knew at least something about the Liberal party and its policy. The Toronto Daily Star for June 16 has this to say:

> The means test by which people over seventy are denied old age pensions if they have other income was a hideous thing and he approved—

That is, Senator Roebuck approved.

> —a recent statement by Hon. Paul Martin that the government hopes to abolish it.

Some of the Toronto members including the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry) had something to say about old age pensions. Of course he was a new man in the Liberal party at that time, but we had every reason to believe that he knew what he was talking about when, according to the Toronto Daily Star of June 2, he said:

> The Liberal party was prepared to agree with labour on its demand for a $60 monthly old age pension without a means test.

Mr. Hodgson: How many years ago was that?

Mr. Noseworthy: That was on June 2, 1949.

Mr. Hodgson: Surely not just before the election?

Mr. Noseworthy: Yes, a little while before the election. Then we have this quotation from the same newspaper under date of Oshawa, June 9:

> The Liberal government plans to call a dominion-provincial conference to discuss establishment of a scheme for contributory old age pensions to start at sixty-five once the election is over and the political heat is done, Hon. Paul Martin said here last night.

That is a little variation, of course, from the policy set forth by some other Liberal speakers. There is not the slightest indication in that speech that the government would have to call a joint committee of the house, nearly a year after the election, to spend some time studying the question in order that they might be ready for the dominion-provincial conference. Not only were we promised old age pensions without a means test, not only did the government make it quite clear to the country during the period of four or five years that they knew where they were going and that they really had a policy, that they only needed to be re-elected in order to implement that policy, but we were assured that, along with the old age pension, there would be a national health insurance scheme. It is rather surprising to find the committee has not been asked to study that question. It was something which was generously promised to our people during the election campaign.

The member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry), speaking in Toronto and as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of June 2, said:

> The Liberal party will give Canada national health insurance. Our clearest policy has been on national health insurance. We are ready with it, and have a great legal mind at the helm to put it into effect.

The Prime Minister himself, speaking in Toronto, is reported in the Toronto Daily Star of June 15 to have asked his audience a number of rhetorical questions. He did not really expect the audience to answer them on the spot. He called upon his audience and said, Are you in favour of family allowances? Are you in favour of this and that? And then he finally said, "Are you in favour of national health insurance which we have instituted and have started to realize?" I do not know just what the Prime Minister and the Liberals understand by national health insurance. I am sure that the country does not understand national health insurance to be the paltry measure of assistance that is being given to hospitals and health services today. That was not the meaning which the Liberals gave to the term "national health insurance" during the 1945 or the 1949 campaign.

It now appears that, for some reason or other, the government needs some assistance in arriving at a policy with regard to old age pensions. The minister, in very solemn tones, informed us that the country needed a committee. His statement to that effect will be found on page 636 of Hansard. Then, of course, he went on to state that we needed a committee to study the whole question of health insurance. I have received communications from well over 2,000 people in my constituency on this subject, but not one of them indicated that what they needed, or what they thought the country needed, was a committee. They implied in no uncertain terms that what they wanted was the removal of the means test now, in this session, by this government, and without any further delay. I am quite confident that the minister knows, and the government knows, what this country is asking for today. It is the removal of the means test now, during this session of parliament, and not to have the question delayed by a reference to any committee.

Apparently the government has undergone a change of attitude since it set forth its policy clearly in 1945. Just to remind the government, I shall quote again a few lines that have been quoted a number of times in this debate. They are to be found on page 37 of the proposals of the government of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference, under the heading, "National old age pensions at age 70". It reads:

> As part of the general proposals now put before the conference, it is proposed that the federal government will establish a system of national old age pensions entirely financed and administered by the federal government paid at the uniform rate of $30 per month regardless of means, to men and women age 70 and over in all parts of Canada . . .

That policy was quite clear. This country has understood that to be the Liberal government policy from that day until the time this resolution was introduced to have the entire question referred to a committee. There is some indication, in that resolution and in the minister's speech, that the government has changed its policy regarding old age pensions. Probably the note that is emphasized most in the resolution before us is the note of a contributory insurance principle, old age pensions based on contributory insurance principles. A number of the minister's remarks implied that the government is playing with the idea of establishing a contributory old age pension based on insurance principles. This would mean that each individual would pay a fixed sum, and would draw, as he does under an insurance policy, according to his payments. That appears to be the type of old age pension with which the government is toying at the present time, and which the minister particularly stressed during his remarks.

Mr. Martin: Nothing I said would warrant that statement.

Mr. Noseworthy: What are some of the purposes to be served by this committee? One of the things is that the committee is to attempt to discover the rate at which old people are increasing. We have to have a joint committee to find out that the number of old people is increasing, and to find out at what rate they are increasing. The committee is to ascertain how that will affect our old age pension scheme. Surely a department that has been administering old age pensions for over 20 years has full knowledge of the rate at which our older people are increasing, and has full knowledge of the effect which that will have on our old age pension policy. I fail to see what a committee of this house can add to the information which must of necessity be already in the possession of the minister's own department. We are to have a committee to study what those schemes will cost. The minister or at least the officers of his department now know what they will cost. They knew in 1945. There are three or four tables set forth in the proposals of 1945 which point out what the old age pension would cost Canada for the next twenty or twenty-five years under the various schemes of old age pensions, with and without the means test. The minister's department has that information. The minister himself gave us a table which would indicate that he has that knowledge. I fail to see where a committee can add one iota to that information which is already in the possession of the minister's department.

We are to study the various schemes of insurance in effect in other countries. The minister went on at great length to point out what those different schemes are. If you turn to the government proposals of 1945, Mr. Speaker, you will find there in 1945 almost the same information that the minister gave us in his talk on the introduction of the resolution. There is no question in the world that the department already has all the information obtainable with regard to the various schemes of old age pensions in effect in other countries.

This committee is to find out just what kind of insurance the labour congresses want. Just a few days before the minister made his statement—as a matter of fact, it was the day before he made his speech —the Trades and Labour Congress appeared before the cabinet, as they have on numerous other occasions, and pointed out quite clearly what they wanted by way of improvement in the old age pensions legislation. There is absolutely no reason for calling together a joint committee of this house and the other place in order to find out what the trade unions or the congresses of labour want. This is what they asked for in their brief to the government. They recommend:

1. That the means test be abolished.

2. That all old age and blind pensions become the sole responsibility of the federal government.

That, by the way, is exactly what the government promised back in 1945.

3. That the monthly pension payment be increased to $60—

That was what the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry) promised his people; he assured them that the Liberals accepted labour's demand for a $60 a month pension.

—as a preliminary and interim measure while the machinery is being developed for the implementation of a full social security scheme.

4. That the pensionable age be reduced for men to 65 and for women to 60.

We submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is just no point in asking a committee of this house to spend time trying to find out what labour wants. The minister and his officials know, as does every Liberal member of this house, that the trade unions and all other organizations interested in this question from coast to coast have been petitioning members of parliament and the government for one thing principally, namely the abolition of the means test here and now.

Then let us give a little bit of thought to what is going to come out of this committee.

Again the minister will have to pardon some of us for being a trifle sceptical. The minister took great care to point out that a committee was called in 1924 and that in 1927 we got the old age pension as a result of that committee. That suggests something to me. I, of course, may be somewhat critical; but that fact suggests to me that we are to get a committee now in 1950, as in the 1920's, and three years from now or in 1953 we shall be ready to abolish the means test or we shall be ready with a new scheme for old age pensions. By the time we get a committee and that committee takes the time necessary to go into all those fields of study that the minister outlined, and then by the time we get a dominion-provincial conference and get their agreement to a contributory old age scheme, get the legislation ready and get the legislation through the house, it looks as though it will be 1953, a most appropriate time for the introduction of an improvement in the old age pensions legislation.

Mr. Knowles: Just before the next election!

Mr. Noseworthy: As I stated once before in this house, the withholding of much needed social legislation until the eve of an election has over the years become the standard practice of this government. In 1945 it was family allowances. The legislation was passed and the cheques were all ready before the election was announced. All we had to do was to vote Liberal and the cheques would be mailed out. In 1949 it was not necessary to introduce any great scheme of social security. The government had plenty of money to mail out to the voters throughout the country without having to rely upon any improvement in social security. There were a few hundred million dollars in compulsory savings that were passed out in April, just before the election in June. That was a very appropriate time. It just happened, of course, that the time had rolled around for those cheques to be mailed. Then, of course, there were other hundreds of millions to be mailed out to the western farmers for their wheat crops of the three preceding years. That was a very appropriate time. It was all purely incidental, of course; it was all just a matter of course, a matter of no particular planning on the part of the government, to have those payments made just before the election. We would not accuse them of that. But the point is that here we have in Canada a crying need for an advance in social legislation to the point at least of removing the means test, and we have the government taking steps that will of necessity delay this social security until we come to the eve of another general election.

On the whole question of the means test I want to take just a few minutes. The means test today is regarded by the trade union movement, by labour, by the old age pensioners and by the Canadian public generally, to use the words of the Old Age Pensioners' Society of Manitoba, as one of the most iniquitous pieces of legislation that could be enacted by any government against its citizens. It creates a feeling of inequality, a feeling of dissatisfaction, and a feeling of suffering on the part of a great many people; it creates the kind of feeling that breeds communism.

If you want to breed communism in this country, continue to leave a large section of our people feeling that they are being discriminated against, and a large section of the public agreeing with them. If you do that you will be doing the very thing that will bring communism. In a country where freedom of enterprise is the watchword of our government, a government that prides itself on its support of free enterprise, one wonders when one sees the older citizens reduced to what amounts to a form of slavery. These older people must not earn more than a few extra dollars above their pension which, even with that pension, constitutes but a pittance, and is far from a reasonable standard of living. They cannot accept full or even part-time employment over any prolonged period of time. They have no freedom. They are regimented by a government that accuses other parties of regimentation. There is no country in the world today where older people are regimented more than they are under the means test which is in effect in this country. They dare not live in a respectable apartment, even if some friend wants to pay the rent for them, or a relative wants to do so. They dare not have more than a few dollars in the bank. They are not free men and women. As far as this country is concerned, this is not for our older citizens a free country, even though we are governed by a party and a government that prides itself on its free enterprise.

These older people cannot accept gifts from relatives or friends. They are discouraged from saving. If they save or accumulate a little they are penalized when they reach the age at which they go on old age pension. The means test reduces our older citizens to a state of pauperism, and leaves them the objects of pity, which, I submit, Mr. Speaker, is a condition that should not prevail in this country. There just is no excuse for the government dallying with this question until we come to the time when we are on the eve of another general election. It is unfair; it is cruel to these older people to pass this subject off to a committee that will require months and months to complete the study that is outlined to them; to bring the matter before the dominion-provincial conference; to reach an agreement with the provinces, and to get legislation through this house. The whole thing cannot be done in less than two or possibly three sessions of parliament. In the meantime the country is clamouring for the removal of the means test here and now. That, Mr. Speaker, is what this country and the people want, and not, as the minister says, a committee.

A few days ago I picked up this special notice in one of the Toronto papers. It is called "sacrificial luncheon." It is a luncheon provided by Carlton Street United Church in Toronto. This is the notice:

All women of the church are invited to a sacrificial luncheon, Wednesday, April 5, in the assembly hall. The free-will offering of this luncheon will go directly to the benevolent fund of Carlton Street United Church, which provides hot dinners for 2,500 old age pensioners in that district.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this country is not reduced to that state of privation where it is necessary, or should be necessary, for any organization to have to provide hot lunches for 2,500 old age pensioners in one city, whose pensions and whose incomes are not sufficient to enable them to provide themselves with hot lunches. That I say is a disgrace to this country and to this government.

Here is a quotation from the Veterans Advocate:

It is our opinion that the means test puts a penalty on thrift and a premium on improvidence. The applicant who has made no provision for old age is eligible for pension, without question and without difficulty. His thrifty and hard-working neighbour has to pass a diabolical means test before his application is considered.

The wastrel is too often in a better state than the industrious and ambitious who scrimp and save for old age, but who never achieve complete financial independence.

To iron out inequality, we would prefer to see old age pensions, without means test, applied universally at age 65. The family allowance act is a bonus to every new citizen at birth. It is based in a measure on a potential contribution made to the country's welfare. We take the young on faith and hope. The other and greater virtue should not be withheld from the old nor if extended should it be niggardly, mean and circumscribed.

It will be a long time before old age pensions can be placed on a contributory basis. Till such time this country cannot afford to be ungenerous to those older citizens, who have little but memory to live on.

I have time for one more short quotation from the News-Herald of Vancouver.

The time is coming when old age pensions will have to be given to everyone, as family allowances are today. Rich and poor alike will receive them and those with incomes over a certain minimum will pay them back in income tax. This will take a lot of bookkeeping, but it will remove the stigma that for some strange reason some people still attach to old age pensions. Many an old person is bitterly ashamed taking the pension and does his best to keep it a dark secret. This shouldn't be necessary.

I submit that what we should be considering at this time is how we can abolish the means test, or failing that how we can raise the ceiling on the earnings and income which old age pensioners may receive. These are two reforms one of which at least could be effected now and should be effected now. One is the removal of the means test, the other, the raising of the ceiling, as was already stated this afternoon, to $1,500 for single people, and $2,500 for married people.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, representing a constituency in which there is a very high percentage of elderly people, who live in that area on account of our usually mild winter climate, I should like to say a few words on behalf of those who are resident in my constituency and then I wish to say a few more words regarding a much larger group of elderly citizens who reside in every part of Canada. In the first place I must express some regret that the government has not seen fit to keep the election promises we have heard quoted, and to bring in some definite old age security legislation at the present time. However, seeing that the government is not prepared to do this, and that it intends to set up a committee, I am pleased to note that the committee is to be given wide scope.

At page 635 of Hansard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), when introducing the resolution, stated that the committee would study the operation and effects of existing legislation of the parliament of Canada, and of the several provincial legislatures, with respect to old age security, similar legislation in other countries and possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada with or without a means test. Then the minister went on to say that this committee——is to develop the best possible old age and retirement system that can be devised, with full consideration for the well-being of all Canadians. This proposed joint committee can do a real public service by its investigations in clearing the way for a better system of pensions, if that is thought desirable, after analysis, for our senior aged citizens.

Two years ago, at the annual convention of the Canadian Legion, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs described the War Veterans Allowance Act as being a form of old age security, or old age pension, which was made applicable to men who had aged prematurely by service in an actual theatre of war during the first and second world wars. Because it was a recognized fact that men who had seen service in the trenches had aged prematurely, an old age pension—it was then called a burnt-out pension, in the early years of the legislation—would be made applicable to veterans five years earlier than when pensions would be granted to the aged people of the country who had not seen service overseas.

May I ask the minister whether it is his intention to investigate, as one of the systems of old age pensions, the War Veterans Allowance Act, and to see how that will fit into his scheme for the new old age pension. Will those matters be referred to this committee? Hon. members on this side of the house have asked and pleaded for the setting up of a committee on veterans affairs. That request has been forwarded to all of us through innumerable branches of the Legion. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) has seen fit to say that no such committee will be set up.

Many of the problems which affect the aged civilian citizens affect the aged veteran. So far as the application of the War Veterans Allowance Act is concerned, the same problems appear continually. Representations have been made by the Canadian Legion for the removal of the means test. Representations have been made by the same organization for an increase in the basic allowance, so that that basic allowance may be brought in line with the old age pension schemes of the several provinces.

Representatives of the organized bodies of veterans will not have an opportunity of appearing before a special committee on veterans affairs. In view of this fact, and the fact that this committee is now being set up with the idea of providing the best possible pension scheme for all Canadians, will there be an opportunity for veterans to appear before this committee in exactly the same way as the minister intimated this afternoon that industrialists will be able to appear, and in exactly the same way as he intimated that representatives of labour would be able to appear? I am asking whether veterans, or the representatives of veterans, will be able to appear before the committee and point out to the representative members of the House of Commons serving on that committee why it is so desirable that the means test be removed from the old age pension the veterans are receiving, and why it is desirable that the basic allowance should be increased. Will they be permitted to make their representations in exactly the same way as will organized labour and industrialists who are to be permitted to come before the committee and point out why certain matters should be dealt with and considered by this wide and all-embracing committee of this House of Commons, which the minister is setting up in the hope of being able to devise the best possible old age pension scheme for all Canadians?

I admit that at the present time the federal government is paying all the war veterans allowances, and that the provinces have not been asked to make contributions in that respect. But that is only one of the many matters which could be discussed. Therefore I should like very much to hear what the minister has to say with respect to the opportunity to be given the veterans of this land to place their problems of old age before this special old age committee. I believe it is most important that they have this opportunity, in view of the fact that they have been denied the privilege of appearing before a special veterans committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Walter Little (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in connection with the setting up of this committee to consider old age pensions. As hon. members will know, a resolution stands on the order paper in my name this session, as it did at the last one. For certain reasons I did not present the resolution to the house at the last session. At this session the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) has placed this motion before the house to send the matter to a special committee for consideration. I am satisfied to wait until this is done and, if it brings in recommendations satisfactory to the old people I represent, I shall be for it. If it does not, then I shall have to have a chance to speak again with respect to it.

The resolution on the order paper at this session is in these words:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of introducing an amendment to the Old Age Pensions Act so that it would be on a contributory basis with no means test and paid to all persons reaching the age of sixty-five years.

I believe I should have said that it should be compulsory, because it is my view that we will never have a proper old age pension scheme as it is now. Mr. Ilsley said some years ago that that is the only way it would ever work, and I am of the same opinion. I would hope, however, that those in charge of this matter will not dilly-dally too long, until I am dead, and all the other old people are dead. I hope the committee will bring in a proper recommendation, so that the old people will be treated properly.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in the debate at this stage I feel like someone who attempts to gnaw meat from a bone from which most of the meat has been consumed. I wish to make a few observations on the resolution and certain aspects of the financing of old age pensions which will be considered by this committee. For a few minutes I want to discuss the right of Canadian citizens to old age security, and the abolition of the means test. First of all I believe the resolution should call for consideration by the committee of over-all security instead of being confined to one aspect thereof, the question of old age pensions. In my opinion there is no question that the country is waiting for the government to give consideration to a scheme of over-all security covering all Canadians. That is evidenced by resolutions passed by labour organizations across Canada, by both labour congresses and local labour organizations, by veterans' organizations, by farmers' organizations and by innumerable women's organizations. In addition to that, we find at the present time proposals for over-all social security in the platform of every political party in this house. Therefore there is no question that the country is waiting for the government to give consideration to the question of over-all security.

During recent weeks I think most hon. members of the house have realized more fully than ever that opposition to the means test is growing rapidly. I might say that even the Liberal government expressed the opinion in 1945 that the means test was undesirable. At page 37 of the proposals of the dominion government I find this under the heading, "deficiencies of the present scheme":

> The means test is generally recognized as undesirable after a certain age. It has been noted that about forty per cent of all persons of seventy years of age and over make application, satisfy the means test requirements and receive the pension. There is little doubt that a very considerable number in addition are not able entirely to support themselves, but are dependent upon their families, and refrain from applying for pensions because of the embarrassment occasioned by the means test.

I think it is generally recognized by the majority of Canadians—

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Herridge: —that the means test as it is imposed at the present time is a penalty on thrift, is unfair and is most unfortunate for those people who have small savings, industrial pensions, annuities and so on. During the last two or three weeks I have received dozens of letters from persons with small incomes, life savings, annuities or industrial pensions who cannot take advantage of the old age pension scheme and yet have not enough to live on.

I want to refer for a minute or two to the percentage of our population making provision for old age. In doing so I should like to refer to the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on March 3, 1949. I suggest that anyone who is interested in the statistical aspects of the question should read the speech made by the hon. member on that date. I understand the figures used therein were largely supplied by the research division of the minister's department. What do we find? At that date there were in Canada a total of 829,936 who were making provision for old age. We also find according to these figures that the population between the ages of 20 and 60 years totalled 6,676,700. That means that about 13 per cent of the people of Canada are making some provision for their old age. You may question these figures because of the increase in population and so on, but I am quite sure that the minister will agree it is safe to say that not more than 15 per cent of the people of Canada are able to make provision for their old age.

That is the problem facing the house and the committee, and it is a serious and important one. These are several approaches to the question of old age security. In the main we find there are two plans put forward by members of the house and by people outside the house. The first is some scheme of compulsory contributions based on the insurance principle. The second is the payment of old age pensions from taxation based on ability to pay. I think those who know me and my attitude to many questions in this house will realize that I am not given to advancing unsound financial proposals unsound schemes, or giving voice to Utopian ideas. I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) is listening with interest, and I trust on this occasion with considerable agreement.

Mr. Goode: Not with interest; you make a mistake.

Mr. Knowles: But with agreement.

Mr. Herridge: I favour payment from taxation mainly for two reasons. First, I believe it is unfair and unjust to collect contributions on an equal basis from the people of the country under the insurance principle to build up old age security. This afternoon, and in previous debates on this question, a good many members have said that they believe in the abolition of the means test. That does not mean a thing if you say at the same time that you believe in a compulsory contributory scheme based on the insurance principle. All you are saying is that you are going to give the people of Canada an opportunity to buy a life annuity or insure themselves against old age, and the government will be willing to accept the cost of administration. The bare fact of the matter is that would mean many people would be worse off than they are at the present time. It would simply mean that the government would spend $4 million or $5 million for administration and save $100 million at this time.

Throughout the ages it has been the accepted duty of the working population to care for the aged. Under the conditions that prevailed years ago, and possibly even up to recent years, it was much easier to do that than it is today. For instance, on the farms years ago there was ample room. Old people assisted with odd jobs. Costs of living were lower; standards of living were lower; and in the towns there was more room than there is today. People were not living in flats, small suites and crowded quarters. Odd jobs were available for older people under conditions which are not present today. Life generally was much less complicated and wants simple.

I want to emphasize that by paying taxes today for old age pensions we are only doing jointly and collectively what has been done individually for ages, namely, caring for the aged out of current production. I consider that is our duty, and this duty has scriptural authority for those who view life from that point of view. In my opinion contributions to old age security based on the insurance principle are unethical. I think that type of thing represents a form of swindle, and I want to demonstrate that by quoting a few figures. We know that the value of money has been declining all through modern history. To illustrate I wish to deal with a short table I have here. I have the complete table for one hundred years, and any member who wishes to see it is welcome to do so.

This is a table showing the purchasing value of the dollar as measured by the consumers' price index. It has been prepared by the Institute of Life Insurance, and for the year 1939 the dollar was taken as worth 100 cents. In terms of the dollar being worth 100 cents in 1939 the purchasing value in other years would be as follows:

1820	214·6
1830	261·8
1840	235·8
1850	258·4
1860	230·4
1870	147·3
1880	180·0
1890	184·2
1900	179·9
1910	149·7
1920	70·8
1930	86·9
1940	99·4
1949	59·1

This means that a person who commenced to pay into a fund for old age security in 1910, having paid in for forty years, would have put into the fund dollars worth 149·7 and would be paid today in dollars worth 59·1. I believe that is a sound argument against asking people to accept a contributory basis for old age security under the present money system. I do believe that current contributions are satisfactory, adequate and fair for current requirements such as health insurance, unemployment insurance, sick benefits and other current risks; but I repeat that anyone who has studied the history of money must realize that it is a form of swindle to ask people to contribute for old age security through the years on the insurance principle.

In further support of my argument I want to quote briefly from a news item from Washington appearing in the Christian Science Monitor of March 22:

> Federal social security plan held unsound
>
> A Brookings Institution official has hung tags "thoroughly unsound" and "financially reckless" on the federal social security program. He urged a pay as you go system.
>
> The spokesman was Lewis Meriam, vice-president of the foundation that carries on research into governmental activities. He told the Senate finance committee the old age and survivors' insurance program is "socially questionable".
>
> From a public finance standpoint, Mr. Meriam testified, it is "thoroughly unsound."
>
> The committee is studying a bill passed last year by the house to widen the coverage of the present social security act.
>
> Calling the present program "financially reckless," he said:
>
> "The old age and survivors' insurance system, as we have it today, saddles future generations of American citizens with a tremendous commitment for benefit payments in addition to other costs of government.
>
> "The safe course is to adopt a true pay as you go system, giving such benefits as are reasonable and within our present economic ability, paying the costs each year, and trusting to future generations to do likewise."
>
> He said the government has no "contractual obligation" to continue the present system.
>
> "In our judgment it should make fundamental revision now before the present benefits are readjusted to offset the change in the cost of living," he added. "The present offers an opportunity to shift to a financially sound system that may not come again."
>
> He said the law should provide benefits immediately for all persons in need because of old age or permanent disability . . .
>
> The levy, he added, should be high enough to pay the expenses of the program year by year. And he said the money should be earmarked for this purpose.

Therefore I claim that for financial reasons alone it is unsound, unethical and unjust to establish old age security on the insurance principle through compulsory payments.

My second reason for supporting old age security from taxation is that under present conditions in Canada I believe any other method is impracticable, when we deal with old age security alone. It might not be so difficult if we had an over-all security plan, but knowing the large number of submarginal farmers operating in Canada, the low income groups in the cities, the widows and others with small incomes, I believe it would be impracticable and utterly unsound to attempt to collect on the basis of a contributory system. There would be the expense of accounting, the expense of administration, and the cost of investigation. As far as the old age pension means test is concerned, I understand the cost of investigation accounts for a large portion of the cost of administration in the field.

Before concluding I want to say a few words about our ability to meet the cost. I am shortening my remarks considerably because I know the minister wishes to conclude this debate this evening, so I am not going to deal at length with this matter though I had prepared some figures I thought were quite sound and logical. As to our ability to meet the cost, our gross national income from production is around $16,000 million. According to the minister's figures I understand the possible cost of paying old age pensions in Canada on the present basis but without a means test, at the age of seventy, would be about $300 million, or something less than $200 million more than our present costs. If paid at the age of sixty-five without a means test the cost would be about $391 million, which means additional $300 million would have to come from the federal exchequer. In the first place, the money paid to old age pensioners is returned to society. It goes into the hands of merchants, and then into labour and other costs incurred in production. That sounds like a large amount of money; but with our tremendous production I say it is simply a question of organizing that production to serve human beings first. I noticed that when the minister was dealing with the possible increase in the cost of old age pensions in the years to come he mentioned some substantial figures; but in quoting those figures he failed entirely to take note of the possibility of greatly increased production in the years immediately ahead. I believe that is a factor which must be considered when discussing the cost of old age pensions in the future.

I believe these costs can be met by the Canadian people, and would be met cheerfully if they were raised by the imposition of a tax as an addition to the income tax, based on ability to pay. I quite agree with other speakers that we do not get something for nothing; everything has to be paid for. But this cost, like other costs of government, would come out of production and our production can meet these costs. I understand that during the war we made gifts to other countries totalling over $3,000 million, and rightly so. Surely, Mr. Speaker, in times of peace, with our opportunities for greatly expanded production, we can do as much for our own people. If we could do this for others in wartime, we can give our senior citizens old age security today, paid out of taxation based on ability to pay. If this administration thought it was necessary to increase the defence estimates by two or three hundred million dollars, they would be increased without any question. The money would be provided, and this house would vote it. We can do the same in the war against poverty and insecure old age.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that this house, if it were concerned about providing old age security, could establish legislation, and could vote the money to see that our old age pensioners have security on a satisfactory basis without a means test. I hope the work of this committee will result in this government finally taking action to improve the position of the worthy section of our population which is entitled to old age security.

Mr. J. H. Harris (Danforth): My anxiety, sir, is to see this committee struck, and to see it get down to work. I should like to see this committee do something about this problem; that is all that is concerning me. I am anxious about those with whom I have lived during the last forty years, who worked side by side with me, and who find themselves still working without too much security. I can think of 200; I can think of another 300; I can think of another 50 of them out in western Canada. Through no fault of their own, Mr. Speaker, perhaps because they have not been privileged to land on their feet, they find themselves getting older. Their wives, their brothers and sisters are all getting older; and they find themselves bereft of the security which you and I, sir, in this chamber have promised them for the last two or three years.

Now, let us get on with this job. Let us have this committee, and let us try to do something for those of our own age, and our own kind. Being the old man of Canada's House of Commons, it is easy enough for me to say that. I say it most sincerely. Eliminate the means test? Yes, for all of us who do not need to have a means test. Surely the committee can find some method of testing you and me, sir, and perhaps leave us outside the scheme. That is all right as far as I am concerned. I am thinking of those thousands and thousands of people who have been able to acquire for themselves only a modest home without a mortgage, and to raise a family. I am thinking of them. Do not tie the means test to them. The income tax department has reports on the rest of us, and you can do as you like with us. Do not apply the means test to these men and women who have perhaps less than ten thousand to their credit. Let them go free. They paid the shot in Canada during their lifetime. Give them an opportunity.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, in what the member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) had to say. I agree with him one hundred per cent in what he said about those who went through northern Italy, Dieppe, and elsewhere. Such an experience added ten years to their lives, and I think they should receive special consideration. Let me go one step further than the member for Nanaimo. I am thinking, sir, of three different families whose boys did not come back. I saw the hair of the lady next door turn from a beautiful black to white within two weeks. A little farther up the street there is a family that lost two sons, and I saw that family age twenty years within two years. Ten doors down the street from where I live, I saw another lady's hair turn from black to grey, and from grey to white. I think the member for Nanaimo might add to the category which he enunciated so well a few minutes ago, those of our citizens who lost their boys overseas. Through no fault of their own, they find themselves aged from one to ten to twenty years almost overnight. I say to this committee that when it is established it should find some means of giving consideration to those people who find they are not as physically fit, not as strong as some of the rest of us. Let us have the committee set up. Let us get down to brass tacks.

I have another reason for requesting action on this matter. In my office tonight there are two different plans from organizations with which I am associated, and in my office at home there are three different plans, if not four, concerning some sort of pension scheme for employees for whom, as president of different companies, I happen to be responsible. Some of them are insurance company ideas. I have forgotten, for the moment, what the name of one is, but it is from some sort of economic adviser. We who are responsible for employees must of necessity give consideration to these plans. We must think about those who believe we are honest, and who look to us to provide them with their weekly pay envelopes; that is our responsibility. Yet, in the offing, there is this committee which this house has not got guts enough—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harris (Danforth): I believe Churchill said that was a proper word. If it is not a proper word I am sorry, sir, and I withdraw it. I am sorry if I have offended the finer sensibilities of some of those whose sensibilities are not as fine as some of the rest of us.

Apart from that, I meant exactly what I said, Mr. Speaker. We do not want to escape our responsibilities, but we want to accelerate consideration of methods for helping our aged people who helped the general economy of Canada. We do not want to clutter it up, Mr. Speaker, with large premiums which are being paid to men who sit in mahogany chairs behind mahogany desks, and take a rake-off from the premiums which employees and employers pay these insurance companies. I am not mentioning insurance companies particularly, but if the state is going into this business, then it should get into it and get going. It should give those of us who have the honour and privilege of signing payrolls a chance, not to get out from under our responsibility but to co-operate with you in the responsibilities which belong in this chamber, so that, in the final analysis, we can work out some sort of economy as a result of which our Canadian people will take new interest in their work, and will go to work and help this country of ours to the destiny which belongs to it.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member who just took his seat does not imagine for one moment that those of us who are taking time to look this proposition over a little bit before we leap have not the intestinal fortitude to appoint that committee. Our concern is not that we do not dare to appoint that committee but rather that we suspect every committee that Liberals appoint. I have been in this house for almost fifteen years and I have never yet seen a Liberal-appointed committee before whom it was worth while to go and present a case. I will wager that the chairman of the committee knows exactly what they are going to find before ever they start at all. Just try to get by the chairman with something that he does not want you to say, and see how far you get. I speak as one who has been on these committees. I am not a newcomer who has had no experience. In my judgment, this committee is nothing in the world but window-dressing. I do not believe that it intends to do anything except just to whitewash the whole situation and deceive the people.

I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, a little bit about why I think that. We had a remarkable budget the other night. Everybody cheered the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). His picture appeared on the front pages of the newspapers all over the country; he was the hero of the day. That was quite as it should be. The Conservatives will not be able to find a flaw in that budget, to save their lives; and the C. C. F. will find it next to impossible to criticize that budget. The only flaw they will find in it is that it did not swat the rich quite hard enough. That budget was based on paying our way at the present time and paying off a little bit of our debt. I would say, in a general sort of way, that if we are unable to pay off some of our debt today, I do not know what chance in the world we shall have four years from today; so that from the minister's standpoint the budget was a perfectly sound one, and I do not see how he could go much farther than he did. But if you put into that budget $300 million, you will have a widely different result from the one he obtained; and it will take upwards of $300 million to accomplish the objective which most hon. members seem to be all settled and agreed that we should have.

An hon. Member: You know how to get it.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, I know more about getting money than my hon. friend will ever know, because my hon. friend is so obtuse that he is not open to a new idea of any kind whatsoever. If that were not the case he would be listening now instead of trying to get a speech in between mine.

Nearly everyone that I have heard speak here agrees that the means test must be abolished. I am in agreement that it should be abolished. Most of the hon. members, both on the Liberal and the Conservative side, are agreed that the pensionable age should come down to 65 or 60. I am in agreement that it should come down to 65 or 60. Most of them have the idea that there should be an increase in the pension. I also think there should be an increase in the pension. The problem is this: Where is the money to come from? If the members of the Conservative party, when they rise to speak, would give us the slightest idea as to where they would propose to get the additional money, I am sure that the Minister of Finance would come in here and listen with great eagerness all through their speeches. If our C. C. F. friends would tell us where they would get the money, I am sure he would listen to them. He might not agree with them, but he would listen to them.

Mr. Hodgson: You tell us and we will listen to you.

Mr. Blackmore: Good. I could ask for nothing better. Keeping in mind the budget we had the other night, Liberals and Conservatives, I ask you to tell me how you are going to figure out the additional money necessary to remove the means test, increase the old age pension and reduce the pensionable age to 65 or 60. When you begin to tell me that, I will be an eager listener. Merely to get up and say you want it done, with no suggestion as to how you are going to do it, remains just a weak futility. Let us face facts exactly as they are.

I am going to turn my attention for a few minutes to the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). Unfortunately, he is not in his seat at the present time. I want to talk to that man. I think that probably I should include with him the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), because all those gentlemen are sure that the money must come out of the taxpayer. If that is the case, they are right in accord with the Minister of Finance. They have no criticism of his budget or of his means of building a budget. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre this afternoon said that he had given considerable attention to the proposals of Social Credit and that he was quite convinced that there was in Social Credit not nearly as much sense as there was moonshine. It might be suggested that, generally speaking, a man finds what he goes out to hunt; hence I presume the hon. member has been spending a good deal of time in hunting moonshine. I am going to propound a suggestion for the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Social Crediters are not going to take this nonsense lying down. In the Social Credit group are men who are just about as well informed on economics and finance as any that are to be found in Canada, and they are not going to take the silly remarks of a lot of half-baked people without having something to say about it.

In the first place something must be done to discover how to make what is physically possible financially possible, as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) pointed out this afternoon. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had nothing to say about that. I suppose he agrees, and I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay West would agree—that is what I gathered from what he had to say—that all we need to do is to increase production and we can take the money out of the production. I will ask him how much he would have to increase the fruit production of British Columbia in order to get any more money out of it, when he cannot sell what he now can produce. That is the question. Just as soon as we get to the point at which we are producing all we can sell, to increase production brings down the price under the present financial system and decreases the money you can get out of the goods. Let us face that fact and put aside the nonsense. Let us remember that this parliament was elected to govern this country, not to talk nonsense. If the country is demanding that the old age pensionable age shall be reduced to 65, that the means tests shall be abolished and that the pension shall be increased, it is our business to find out how to do that. If we cannot do it under the system we are using today, we had then better begin to examine some other system.

Let us consider any one of the commodities you wish to name. We in Canada of course have not a great many surpluses. But down in the United States—and all hon. members are familiar with what is going on down there—there is in the neighbourhood of $4 billion worth of surplus agricultural products ranging over something like twenty different commodities. Can anybody tell anyone in the United States how they can increase the amount of money they can get by increasing the production of any one of these commodities or of twenty of them? As a matter of fact, every increase they make in such things as soya beans, cotton, wheat, oats, barley, rye, peanuts, and a whole lot of other things, weakens the state, because there is danger of a collapse in prices, and tends to decrease the amount of money they can collect from the people producing them. That is the kind of thing the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) must face.

What do you find when you face it? We find in the United States this remarkable thing. We find $4 billion worth of surplus goods already in the possession of the government, bought as surplus to keep the price structure from going down; and it is being held at a colossal cost to the nation. They have already appropriated, or they are thinking of appropriating, $2 billion more to buy the surpluses of next year. Will anybody, including the hon. member for Vancouver East, tell us how they are going to get money out of that production? They put money into that production, not get it out. In other words, an increase in production does not increase the amount of money available to the state beyond a certain amount unless they can sell the produce. These are cold facts.

Now, according to the information I have, at the very time when the United States has a surplus production of so many different kinds, they are talking of decreasing their military appropriation by $2 billion because they cannot afford the $2 billion. If you can think of anything more fantastically absurd than an attitude like that you will be doing wonderfully well. You will have to think about it in a nightmare, because no intelligent person can concede that a nation that can produce more of every kind of thing than they can possibly use, with a surplus of everything, cannot afford to have defence.

An hon. Member: Talk about Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: That is all right. The United States has the same financial system as we have. I am making this speech. If the hon. member is not content with the illustration of the United States, one of these days I shall come down with Canada as an illustration, because the situation is identical. We can take our beans in Canada as an illustration. I am using the United States as an illustration. The simple point is that where there is an abundance of goods, where there is a surplus of goods, surely the nation that is producing that surplus is able to afford greater expenditures. The big question is how to do it.

An hon. Member: Social Credit.

Mr. Blackmore: Social Credit is right one hundred per cent, and the only thing that is right. I am going to read a statement so that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) can read it tomorrow, if he will take the trouble to do so, which I doubt. I am going to read a little statement regarding Guernsey island from a book entitled "The Story of Money" by Sir Norman Angell. This book was published in 1929, before the last depression. It gives the essential facts of the famous Guernsey island experiment. I am going to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the hon. member for Vancouver East and those other men who are sure that money has got to come out of the taxpayer's pocket, where in the name of common sense they think the Guernsey islanders got the £3,000 with which they built their market? When they can answer that question they will be on their way to explaining things and not saying the silly things they are saying about money. I read from page 266:

> The story of the Guernsey market house has figured in many a currency debate.

I am skipping the rest of that sentence and starting here:

> The records show that the meat market, of the island of Guernsey, still standing, was built without any loan at all merely by the issue of pound notes, created for the purpose and which were gradually paid off as the rents came in. The Guernsey states in effect said: "We propose to build a market house. We will issue one pound notes with which we will buy material and pay the workers. Those who use the house must pay rent or charges in these notes. As they come in they will be destroyed. Ultimately they will all be destroyed and the island will have the house."

Old Age Security

I am skipping a number of sentences that do not particularly apply and go on toward the bottom of the page:

> The story is taken from Mr. Theodore Harris' account which was compiled from the original documents.
>
> The island of Guernsey has its own parliament, "The States." On the 12th of April, 1815, it appointed a committee to consider a scheme for enlarging the market. The committee recommended the issue of state notes, first to the amount of £3,000. "Thus," as the report to the committee reads, "at the end of ten years, all the notes would be cancelled and the states would be in possession of an income of £150 per annum, which would be a return to the £3,000 spent by them. Looked at from all sides, the scheme shows nothing but the greatest advantage for the public and for the states."

There is no doubt in the world that the Guernsey islanders obtained money without taking it out of the pockets of the taxpayers. There is no doubt about that, and from this time forward I think we have to admit that when anybody stands up and says the only money you can get comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers we shall have to accuse him of instigating communism, because that is just exactly what he will be doing. If we insist on increasing the amount of social services and increasing the taxes we shall get to the point where we shall have a communist state in fact if not in name, and there is just no other way out of it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will probably get ready a speech and deliver it to put himself right in the eyes of the intelligent people in the house.

What determines how far the Guernsey islanders could have gone in issuing these notes? The amount of goods and services which they had in the island, and the resources which they had from which to create more goods and services, is the thing that determines how many notes could be absorbed in use. As soon as there are more notes than there are goods and services there is a tendency to inflation. So long as there are fewer notes than there are goods and services there will never be inflation, and money will be completely sound. That principle is simple. If anyone thinks he can argue that principle away let him do so.

An hon. Member: Is it simple?

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, it is simple. It is just as simple as it is to breathe, but there are a lot of simpletons who have not got sense enough even to breathe right.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, there are three things which need to be done this year without further delay. In this respect I agree with the other hon. members who have spoken. There simply must be an increase in the pension. The age must be lowered to at least 65 and the means test must be progressively eliminated. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Acadia and several other hon. members today, to give substantial old age pensions all over the country would have a powerful influence on the production in Canada, because it would provide a market and certainly would have a tremendous influence on our consumption and a very material influence on employment in the country, because the pensioners would be able to buy the goods which we are able to produce. It would provide for us a market.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

There is a greater urgency for this increase of old age pensions and the spreading out of the pension over a wider area of population than some people realize. The age of the machines, which is rapidly developing against our generation, is putting more and more people out of work. For a good deal of time there has been opposition to that idea. Men have been trying to establish that machines do not put people out of work; that they actually increase the work which is available. Even the most hard-headed and reactionary thinkers in the United States are beginning to discover that the machines actually are putting men out of work. I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper or a periodical called Labour, which I think all hon. members receive. This issue is dated March 18, 1950. Here is an article on finance based upon findings of two of the best authorities in the United States. First of all we find the heading, "Higher efficiency blamed for addition of 750,000 to ranks of jobless". That is in the United States. The article states:

> This startling testimony came from J. A. Livingston, financial columnist, who is syndicated in many conservative papers, and from the magazine Business Week. Neither can be remotely regarded as "radical".
>
> "Production efficiency cuts jobs" was the headline on a column by Livingston. Then he went on to say: "Efficiency is beginning to creep upon us . . . you can see it in the unemployment statistics." He cited the figures—4,700,000 jobless in February, highest in nine years.
>
> In part, Livingston said, this is because "Post-war technological improvements are coming home to roost." Industries of all kinds, including the railroads, have installed labour-saving devices, and now "these improvements begin to pay off"—in layoff of workers.
>
> "Fewer men or less time are now required to do the same job," he declared.
>
> In the past year, unemployment rose by 1,500,000 and Livingston estimated that "half of that is attributable to higher output per worker." In short, labour's higher productivity has caused a loss of 750,000 jobs in one year.
>
> Very bluntly Livingston put this question: "Will increased efficiency raise hell with full employment?"

Well, that is pretty serious, in the light of the situation which confronts us. The condition is very much like that in Canada. Further down I cull this from the article:

"Magazine Echoes Warning"

Business Week, a leading organ of industry, made the same point—in perhaps even stronger terms. It did so in a lead article entitled "Unemployment, prosperity: Strange Pair."

"Labour productivity is rising—rising fast," the magazine said. " A Business Week survey confirmed that fact beyond question. It's taking fewer workers each year to produce our high volume of goods—so unemployment is creeping up."

Hence, "there's an unemployment problem again —even though the business boom is going full blast."

Output of goods and services in 1949 was about $259 billion, about the same as for 1948, after adjustment for price differences, the magazine explained.

"But in 1949 it took 3 per cent fewer workers to produce that output," it said.

In agriculture also, "the trend toward higher and higher production per worker is striking." Since 1947, employment on the farms has been dropping while production "has been as high as ever," the magazine reported.

The truth which is borne out in this article I have read is a very solemn truth. It indicates we have simply got to find some way or other of making the goods we are able to produce pay off in terms of finance, so that we can help those who are being displaced by machinery. This is having a very important effect on the old people, and it makes it more and more necessary that we be able to give munificently to those who are displaced after reaching the age of sixty-five years, and those who have reached the age of seventy.

An interesting article along the same lines appears in the Ottawa Evening Citizen, home edition, page 6, for March 16. In that article a United States scientist visualizes machines running the world in twenty years or less. Professor Norbert Wiener, the famous American mathematician, spoke in this fashion before an audience in the national research council auditorium at Ottawa on March 15. His speech is reported in the article of which I have given the head note. He says the time will come when we will displace men on a far greater scale than they are now being displaced. He says that the machine could take over a whole chemical plant, and that the du Ponts are doing it now, with an oil-cracking plant. He states further that the automatic factory can be used in manufacturing automobiles.

The meaning of all this is the same as the meaning of the evidence set out by Mr. Livingston and Business Week. It means that we shall be able to have plenty of production, but with fewer and fewer men, which means that man will be disposed of at an earlier age, so that probably by the time he reaches the age of fifty or fifty-five it will be no longer possible for him to obtain a job. And if we are unable to give a man a job, unquestionably we have to find some means of giving him a living without a job. That is just as simple and as clear as a star in a starlit, clear sky.

What are we going to do about it? Are we going to wait until the problem develops to such an extent that we can do nothing about it, or are we going to go into the matter now, closely, while yet there is time?

The percentage of our population made up of people sixty-five years of age and over is rapidly increasing, as was indicated this afternoon by one hon. member. In an article appearing in the Ottawa Journal of recent date we find the heading "Sixty-five too young to retire", a statement attributed to Glen R. Shepherd, M.D.

In this article are some figures which I am sure hon. members would find interesting if, in their busy lives, they may have overlooked them. These figures show that in 1940 there were 9,200,000 people in the United States more than sixty-five years old, and it is said that in 1980 there will be at least 18,501,000 who will reach that age. But the working ages of twenty to fifty-nine will not increase one bit. How are the increasing numbers of people over sixty-five years of age to live off the static or decreasing number of producers?

This is another problem which faces us. We are right up against it; we cannot sidestep it. What are we going to do about it? It is all involved in this matter of making financially possible that which is physically possible, and finding money from some source other than taxation. There is no question that we can produce the goods—all the goods we need. There has never been any doubt about our ability to do that. But to get money out of those goods is going to be our problem and that is the thing we are discussing tonight. There should not be a bit of difficulty in having those people in the United States who are able to produce support the 18 million people in 1980 over the age of sixty-five years, to whom I have referred, if the goods they could produce could be turned into money to support those people. They will be able to produce the goods.

We must find the means whereby we can translate goods into terms of money, and there is no conceivable way except through the use of debt-free money, as Social Crediters have advised and advocated, and as the Guernsey islanders demonstrated in their famous experiment of 1815.

There is no question whatever that we can pay adequate pensions in Canada. I do not doubt for one moment that our Canadian economy can produce more goods by far than our old age pensioners could possibly use, including all the people over sixty-five and all the people over fifty-five, if we have to put them all out of work, if we had just time enough to expand our economy, as we can do, and if we once get to the point where we can be realistic and turn into money the goods we are able to produce.

I have a letter here from which I should like to quote some excerpts. I think nearly every member received it. This letter is dated March 20, 1950, and comes from the office of the ex-chairman of the Welland county board of old age pensions and mothers' allowances, at Fort Erie, Ontario. This letter indicates that the writer of it has no doubt whatever that we can organize affairs in this country so that we can pay all old age pensioners, without a means test, a good pension. In the second paragraph he says:

> The total expense involved in this welfare service must amount to more than one-half of the cost of the actual pensions themselves—with all the machinery necessary in paying of same—and the initial and periodic investigations which many times cause real heartache to some of these elderly people who are afraid to earn an extra dollar in case they have it deducted from their cheque.
>
> Taking everything into consideration—the number now employed in keeping records, the expense of office equipment, furniture and supplies essential under the present system, I feel that it would be far cheaper to the country and more satisfactory to the pensioner if the following plan were in effect.
>
> When any person becomes seventy years old, he should send proof of age to the board at Ottawa with his application for pension. (Ottawa has the census records for checking.) The board could then issue in his favour a book of twelve cheques, dated one for each month—with an application blank for renewal inserted before the November cheque to be mailed to Ottawa then. This book should be taken immediately to any chartered bank and left there so that on the first day of each month, the pensioner could go to the bank, endorse his cheque for that month and receive his money.
>
> Under this system, all provincial and local boards, investigators, etc., would be eliminated. The old age pension should be paid to all persons, regardless of their financial condition, when they become seventy years of age (it should be sixty-five). I firmly believe that this proposed system would actually save the country money, and at the same time wipe out a great deal of the present dissatisfaction on the part of pensioners and provide comfort for many who really need it but are doing without under the present system.

There is a man who gives us hope even under the present system, under our way of doing business now. I think I am perfectly within the bounds of moderation when I contend that the old age pension must be increased, the pensionable age must be brought down to sixty-five, and the means test must be progressively removed. There is no need to have a committee to do that. If a committee is appointed to find ways and means of doing the thing we all know we ought to do, that is a different matter. Then the resolution should be so worded as to say that; but it is not so worded. In fact, I suspect that when the committee is in session if anyone were to attend and try to explain to the committee how Social Credit would be able to solve the problem he would not be given a respectful hearing at all. It would be a wonder if he were not ruled out of order by the chairman. Nevertheless, whether or not members of the house are prepared to back proposals to use debt-free money to finance what is physically possible, the simple fact remains that beyond any question it is the duty and responsibility of this house to see that these three objectives are achieved, namely: increase in the old age pension to make it adequate for the needs of the times; the reduction of the age to sixty-five; and the progressive elemination of the means test.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I offer no apology at this time for rising to speak for a few minutes. I have notes here for a forty minute speech but at the request of the minister I am going to cut it down to about five minutes. If it had been any other minister than the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) I think I would have had more heart to refuse, because I think a man should have the right to speak as often as he likes and as long as he likes. That is why we are sent here. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been a very good friend of mine. When I could not find a bed on which to sleep in Ottawa he was good enough to provide his for Mrs. Bryce and myself, and I appreciate that.

Mr. Martin: I will give a bed to every member of the house if they will follow suit.

Mr. Knowles: You are quite a bedfellow.

Mr. Bryce: I had thought that by this time the government would have been ready to introduce some arrangement whereby the means test provision could be removed. Most people with whom I have been in contact in my constituency were quite sure that it was going to be abolished after the election. I have visited other parts of Canada as well and I find the same feeling there. Everybody believes it is time that the means test should be done away with. I have the Winnipeg Tribune for March 25 and I see that the finance committee of the Winnipeg city council is in favour of the abolition of the means test. The heading of the article is:

> Abolish pension test, finance board urges.

The article reads in part:

> Abolition of the old age pensions means test has been advocated by city finance committee. By a 3-2 vote Friday it recommended to council support for a Winnipeg labour council brief proposing end of the means test, lowering qualifying age limit for pensions from seventy to sixty-five.

I shall not take the time to read the whole article, but in every paper you pick up today you find the same thing. Many people besides myself must have been misled by the propaganda of the Liberal government at the time of the last election. Many of our aged citizens, who have done a wonderful job of trying to provide for the eventide of their lives, find that the means test interferes so much in their getting what they really deserve. As I have said before, the man or woman who has been thrifty and tried to provide for a rainy day is penalized in obtaining the old age pension at the present time. No law should be allowed to exist that penalizes a man or woman for thrift, long considered one of the great characteristics of the Scottish race.

Having given my word to the minister, I do not want to take up too much of the time of the house. I have spoken on different occasions about old age pensions and have brought to the minister's attention the deplorable conditions existing among some of our elderly people who have no homes of their own. Let us look for a moment at the circumstances of the married male pensioner who has reached the age of seventy but whose wife is a little younger. He receives a pension for himself but nothing for his wife. Here you have two people trying to live on $40 per month. I am sure the minister or anyone else cannot expect a woman of sixty years of age to go out and work to provide extra income to maintain the home. It has always been my contention that women should receive the pension five years earlier than men. Other countries do it, and Canada should never need to take second place to any country in looking after her aged citizens, the men and women who have built Canada and made her what she is today, a great nation becoming greater.

This week I received a letter from a gentleman in Manitoba whose father is one of the men who are handicapped by the means test provision in securing the old age pension. He is over ninety and is one of the men who teamed wheat to Winnipeg with oxen. These are the people we are penalizing, the men who broke the trail, the men who built Winnipeg, the men who made Manitoba and Canada what they are today. When speaking on the question of old age pensions I always feel that we should forget our political affiliations, because there is no member of the house, no matter on which side he sits, who does not have sympathy for our aged citizens. As the law stands today, men and women who have been thrifty, who have paid taxes, and who have now reached the age of seventy years, find that they cannot get any money to augment what they have saved themselves in order that they may live in comfort. But the men and women who have never done well for themselves, perhaps through no fault of their own, who perhaps in many cases have never even paid taxes, are able to draw the full pension, small as it is. I would ask the minister to do away with the means test, to see that women receive the pension five years earlier than men, and that he blend old age pensions into an over-all social security scheme which will be contributory and will take care of people with arthritis and other incurable diseases who are unable to provide for themselves.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) had something to say today about double talk which I did not quite follow. Perhaps I was not listening closely enough. I do not think he made his remarks quite plain when speaking about New Zealand this afternoon. He told us what the people of New Zealand have to pay for social security and what they get for old age pensions. He made it appear that was all they received for their social security contribution. The fact is that they get over-all social security for the one contribution, including health insurance, sickness benefits, invalid benefits, maternity benefits, family allowances and old age pensions, as well as certain other benefits. In addition there are emergency benefits for any special situations that might arise. This makes quite a difference. Instead of the contribution paying only for old age pensions, it pays for all these other benefits I have mentioned as well. When I speak of an over-all social security scheme, that is the sort of thing I mean.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to take exception to the statement by my good friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) that we in this group are running down Canada. Personally I resent that very much. I came to this country as an immigrant more than thirty years ago, and I can assure every hon. member who is listening to me that my ambition has always been to be the best possible Canadian. Though my Doric has been a handicap in mastering the language of this country, in my travels to different parts of the world by land, sea and air, which I am sure compare favourably with those of the average member of this house, I have tried to be a good ambassador for Canada, in the land from which I came as well as in the other countries I have visited.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hold up the minister, but he will have plenty of time to close this debate before eleven o'clock. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the various speeches that have been made, and

I want to say a few words at this time because in my opinion some clarification is required with respect to this matter of social insurance and social security, contributory and non-contributory.

I am not going to argue over the justification for the setting up of a committee. The government has a sufficient majority to set it up, and we can do nothing to stop it. But if it is being set up on the assumption that there is not in this country already sufficient evidence on which to decide this question of old age pensions, retiring allowances, and all that sort of thing, I do not agree; that is not the case. As recently as 1942 the government employed a man named Marsh to gather the data this committee is now going to gather. He laid down for the government at that time the Marsh plan of social security. Every angle was gone into thoroughly, and he made certain recommendations with regard to an over-all social security plan.

If that was not good enough, we had the Beveridge plan, which is now partially in operation in Britain. Sir William Beveridge was brought to this country in 1942 and appeared before the reconstruction committee of this house, where we had a long and learned discussion with him on the same subject.

The point I want to make is that both the Beveridge plan and the Marsh plan were founded on evidence to support the establishment of a social insurance scheme. I do not agree with social insurance, for the reason that it covers only those who are able to pay and leaves the great majority, who are not in a position to contribute directly from their pay envelopes for that protection, not covered at all. I do not agree with that type of social insurance because it leaves out the very people who should be covered.

On the other hand, as we state, we believe in an over-all social security plan covering the more unfortunate people of the country, and this means taxing the wealth of the country. It will have to be contributed to. Often we hear the expression, "We must make it non-contributory," but I am afraid those words are loosely used. There is no such animal in this world. Nothing is non-contributory; the cost of everything has to be contributed to; and the only fair and just way of contributing is the way the people are taxed today. You strike certain exemptions, and tax the people above those levels; and in this matter of social security you would tax those who can afford to pay and cover all the citizens of the country, including those who cannot pay. That is contributory through taxation, and it is the only way you can cover all the people. So I wanted to draw this distinction. Social insurance only partially covers your people and leaves uncovered the great majority who are not in a position to contribute. On the other hand, social security will cover all your people, but you tax those above a certain income level, and all those below that level are also covered.

As to old age pensions, I think that is a misnomer which should be changed. The words "old age pension" presuppose charity, poverty, a gift from the state to enable you to just drag through the rest of your life. I think in future we should call it a retiring allowance. But if we are going to take one, two or three years to study the matter and then do something about it, I believe we should first take some steps to relieve the present plight of our aged people. One thing the government could do which would not cost them anything would be to step up the permissible earnings. I believe that could and should have been done. If the government does not want to remove the means test at this time—and it appears adamant on that point—then I think the minister should have recommended that action. There are thousands of aged people on the old age pension today who are not permitted to even try to earn a little something on the side to supplement it. If the government would remove the ceiling on permissible earnings many old people who are immobilized today would get out and try to do something to earn a little in addition. That would not mean anything to the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott).

Another very bad feature of that pension has to do with the person who has accumulated a little property. It is a lifetime struggle for the average person in the low income brackets to establish a two, three, four or five thousand dollar house for himself. Finally he arrives at the point where he receives the old age pension. The most disgraceful part of the whole matter is the position in which it places his heirs, in the event he draws that pension for three or four years before he dies. Before that little property can pass to his next of kin, the old age pension board in the province take the position that they have established an equity in that home. I have a file on my desk which covers such a case. I am not going to read it into the record, but in this particular case the man drew $2,000 by way of old age pension. The property was worth $3,000, and the old age pension board went to the courts to claim some of that money. They received $1,900, and that was paid to the old age pension board before that property could be passed on to the next of kin. I believe that is not generally known. I have heard it said on the platform by government supporters that that sort of action was never taken. I do not know what is done in the rest of the provinces, but that certainly has been done in the province of Nova Scotia. I believe in the province of Saskatchewan there is a saw-off around the $4,000 mark, and there is no interference with the property.

There are two things which I believe the minister could have done while we have been discussing this matter. I believe the equity established by the old age pensions board in properties such as those I have described should be wiped out. I believe the procedure followed in Saskatchewan should be made uniform across the country. Then the permissible earnings could have been stepped up. When the minister introduced this resolution, I heard him argue that all the provinces are in a position to do something for themselves by way of supplementing the old age pension. He said he did not want to make any invidious comparisons, and I do not think he did. He is a rather innocent person, good-hearted and quite charitable. In this particular case, however, he slipped a little. He went on to point out that the province of British Columbia had stepped up the pension to $50 per month. The minister said that Alberta had stepped up their pension with a supplementary payment, but that Saskatchewan had not stepped theirs up quite as high. The thing the minister failed to make clear was that conditions vary from province to province. The province of British Columbia, for example, last year had a provincial income of $105 million. A lot of that $105 million was gathered from extra sales taxes and luxury taxes. This enabled that provincial government to supplement the pension.

The province of Alberta is not as well off, but it had an income of approximately $79 million. The income for the Saskatchewan government last year was about $74 million. When you look at the provincial income of the maritime provinces, you realize those provinces have not the kind of income that would enable them to step up their pension. If there is any field in which unity is required, it is in this particular field of old age pensions. If the minister proved anything by his speech in the house, it was that, insofar as this matter of old age pensions is concerned, it is a national problem. He proved conclusively that there are differentials between provincial incomes from coast to coast. Unity will not be obtained until such time as old age pensions are made a federal problem.

In addition to considering the matter of the old age pension, we should be considering the whole question of a retiring allowance for those who produce the wealth. When the committee is set up, I hope it will take it upon itself to examine representatives of the unions across this country, as well as representatives of management. I have stated in this house before that I think the great difficulty between management and labour in the future will be this problem of providing a retiring allowance for workers. In wage negotiations across the country today, the employer and employee are locked. The minister knows that is the situation in his own city, in which the auto workers are having difficulty. There are stoppages of work, and it is all due to this matter of establishing a retiring allowance.

The only way the problem can be solved completely is to establish, as I have suggested before, national social security contracts covering all the workers in this country. It is the only way the white collar worker, the farmer and the industrial worker can be covered. If the pensions now paid under the different schemes by employers across the country, and contributed to by the employees, were all centralized under the federal government and put on a proper actuarial basis, then we would build up uniformity across this country. There would not be the overlapping of administration that there is today. We would not only settle this business of old age pensions, but settle the whole business of a general retiring allowance for the workers of this country who are on a very meagre allowance at this time.

I believe it was the member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) who made a comparison with what happened in the United States. I have heard it stated that certain industries in the United States were paying pensions of $100 per month. That is not true, because under the social security arrangement in the United States $36 per month is paid out of the federal treasury. The industry that has established a pension of $100 per month is only contributing $64 and the other $36 is paid by the federal treasury. I do not think that is a good arrangement. There is a lot of duplication in bookkeeping and administration. I believe the whole question should be investigated, and instead of establishing old age pensions—I think that name should be abolished—we should strike a general retiring allowance covering everyone in this country. A tax could be taken off at a certain level, just as it is now, but everyone in this country should be covered. I just wanted to make it quite clear that I am opposed to social insurance, because that presupposes that only those who are able to pay receive it. I am in favour of social security. I believe in the abolition of the means test now. I think it should be done. If the minister is not prepared to go that far, then I think he should at least try to do something about that property angle. There should be an adjustment there. While we are discussing the matter, may I say that I think the permissible earnings should be stepped up in order to give encouragement to many aged people who could go out and earn something if it were not for interfering with the present pension.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I had to hold up my hon. friend, but he has already had about twenty-five minutes on the subject. He still has some little time to go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Gillis: I want to make a correction, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), who is my legal adviser, tells me that it was not the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) who mentioned this $100 a month but that it was the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry). I want to make that correction.

Motion (Mr. Martin) agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE—APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO ACT OF BEHALF OF COMMONS

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): With the unanimous consent of the house, I should like to move that we set up the committee now. I would move accordingly, seconded by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier):

That Messrs. Ashbourne, Benidickson, Beyerstein, Blair, Brooks, Brown (Essex West), Corry, Cote (Verdun-La Salle), Courtemanche, Croll, Diefenbaker, Ferrie, Fleming, Gingues, Homuth, Knowles, Laing, Lesage, MacInnis, Macnaughton, Picard, Pinard, Richard (Gloucester), Robertson, Shaw, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Weaver, and Welbourn be appointed to act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of the joint committee of both houses of parliament on old age security and that a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that the above members have been appointed to act on behalf of the Commons on the said joint committee of both houses.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister a question? I understand that arrangements have been made with the other place for the appointment of twelve members of the other place to complete the personnel of the committee. Am I correct in that? My second point is this. Will it be possible to have the additional members from the other place appointed and the committee convened so that some steps may be taken prior to the Easter recess to plan the work to the end that while the house is in recess work may be put under way and that rapid progress may be made when the house reconvenes?

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. Martin: I thank the hon. member for mentioning that. My own desire to see the committee established at the earliest possible moment must have been obvious tonight. It was for that reason that I did not take advantage of the opportunity, at the end of the debate, to reply to what had been said during the course of it. It is the desire of the government that the committee be set up at once. I understand that arrangements are being made in the other place to deal with their motion tomorrow. I hope it may be possible for the committee to meet on Monday and to prepare for the major part of its work which, of course, will be after the Easter recess. I am sure that we shall all accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) who, in his speech tonight, urged that the committee get down to work at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister himself not to be a member of the committee?

Mr. Martin: The minister will certainly follow with great interest the work of that committee.

Mr. Knowles: But will have no voice on it.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson:

That votes Nos. 64 to 84 inclusive, of the main estimates 1950-51 be withdrawn from the committee of supply, and referred to the standing committee on external affairs, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): In view of events during the last three or four years, Mr. Speaker, and especially in recent months, since it has become known that Russia may have the secret of the atomic bomb, and with all the talk about the hydrogen bomb and its possible devastating effects, the result is that most Canadians at this time are deeply concerned with regard to our position as a nation in international affairs. The pillars on which our western civilization has been constructed were those of freedom, truth, mercy and justice. We find that during our time and in recent years two monstrous regimes have emerged which have not only challenged the principles of our civilization but also have gone out to mock and to defile them. The first was Hitlerism which, after a bitter struggle which brought a great deal of bloodshed, suffering and misery to millions of people, has been finally subdued and, we hope, eliminated for all time to come. The second was communism, which also defiled the virtues of our civilization, even before the second world war, and which has as a result of the last world conflict emerged much more aggressive, much more powerful and much more arrogant than ever before. Today it threatens our very existence and our way of life.

The world today is divided into two camps with two opposing ideologies: our western world with our way of life as we have shaped it through centuries of struggle for freedom, starting as far back as Magna Carta; and on the other hand, communism with its headquarters in the Kremlin, and which although purportedly championing the cause of the working class is doing nothing but carrying on a clever form of propaganda for the extension of Muscovite imperialism. During the course of this debate practically every hon. member who has participated has indicated a keen desire for peace and for some definite understanding with the Soviet regime. I share the same views and the same feeling. The sentiment of the Canadian people, I think, was ably enunciated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) when he spoke on March 3 on the floor of this house; as reported in Hansard at page 430, he said:

> Certainly this government would give every support to any new beginning which gave any promise of success. Let us not forget, however, in our determination or desire, our anguish to do something, that the road ahead will in any case be long and difficult. We shall have to walk it with patience and with caution, with persistence and with realism. If a new approach, for instance, did not get us anywhere—there is always that possibility—we must not even then give way to the inevitable reaction of despair which would follow.

In our efforts to seek a solution to our position as a nation in international affairs, it is worth while that we be reminded with whom we are dealing, based on the actions of the Soviet regime. It is the ardent desire of the Canadian people and, indeed, of all the people of the western world, to come to some understanding or devise some formula which would dispel the fear now existing and which would ensure us a lasting peace.

In our attempt to find some solution and to come to some understanding with comrade Stalin I think we should pause and examine some of the characteristics of communism and how it has operated to achieve and maintain the mighty power now held by Mr. Stalin and his advisers.

In bringing out certain facts pertaining to communism, and in making certain suggestions, probably a diplomat would do it in different form. However, I do not pose as a diplomat.

If a businessman wants to enter into a contract or some agreement with another person, he endeavours to find out all he can about that other person. Therefore let me, with a great deal of indebtedness to Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, president of Acadia university in Nova Scotia, who has made a similar enumeration at a public address recently given in Winnipeg, show instances of how Mr. Stalin and his group have operated. This, I say, will indicate with whom we are dealing. After completing a gangsters' agreement with Hitler in September, 1939, Stalin's army occupied eastern Poland, and the communists then proceeded to liquidate all educated and politically conscious elements in the population. Stalin ordered to be shot or transported from eastern Poland to Siberia 1,700,000 people who were either Jews, Poles or Ukrainians. Of these, approximately half a million were repatriated, and the Russians now report that there are no others left.

Another instance: A great many of the officer personnel of the Polish army in the last war, consisting of ten thousand officers, were mercilessly killed, most of whose bodies were found in the Katyn forest. These officers were official prisoners of war, protected by the Red Cross convention, and it is significant that the nazis were not found guilty of this crime at Nuremberg as the evidence points directly to Stalin's personal orders.

A further instance: Details of Stalin's type of genocide are available with regard to the three Baltic states, Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, which the Soviet armies occupied and incorporated into the U.S.S.R., not as a strategic move against Germany but in fulfilment of the agreement made between Hitler and Stalin.

Let me quote again from Dr. Watson Kirkconnell in this regard, with reference to the three Baltic states:

> Between August, 1940, and June, 1941, over 200,000 men, women and children from these little countries were shot or deported in cattle-trucks to perish in slave camps in Siberia and central Asia. In every known case, husbands were separated from wives and children from parents. After the Russian retreat in 1941, thousands of corpses of murdered citizens were dug up in jail yards and elsewhere and identified by their friends. Many of those whose photographs I have seen had been bestially mutilated by the communists.

Gregory Aronson in his book called "The Jewish Problem in Soviet Russia" summarized by Clare Boothe Luce before the House of Representatives, July 6, 1945, says:

> Approximately 50 per cent of the Jews who, before the revolution, had engaged in trade or in the professions, were physically exterminated. Partially this extermination was direct and violent; partially it was by the means made familiar to the world in German slave camps—the control of wages and of food and the forcing of labour to a point which prevented those marked for liquidation from obtaining enough food for their bodies . . . Likewise the cost of survival included the abandonment by Jews of their moral principles, their religious beliefs and practices.

From Dr. Watson Kirkconnell I again quote:

In other words, Hitler massacred those who were racially Jews; Stalin massacred those who were spiritually Jews. In Soviet Russia only the apostate Jew could survive, the atheist who had renounced morality and religion as bourgeois prejudices, the recreant who had spit on his Jewish faith and had become a rootless revolutionary. Not a single Jewish newspaper remains in Russia today.

Another group that has been exterminated is the Greek community of the Kerch peninsula. The entire population, men, women and children, were shipped to perish in an Arctic slave camp and Russian colonists took their place.

A further instance: The Russians in the second world war began their fighting by liquidating five supposedly autonomous republics within the Soviet republic, namely: the Volga-German Soviet republic; the Kalmuk Soviet republic; the Crimean Soviet republic; the Chechen-Ingush republic and the autonomous national region of Karachayev.

This was confirmed in an official Russian statement on June 25, 1946. The murder of these national groups, equal to the population of Canada's maritime provinces, had been disclosed in the Manchester Guardian as early as March 23, 1945.

Everything points to the fact that today the extermination of entire social groups is in full swing in Czechoslovakia and Roumania. But by far the greatest victims of Stalin's mass murders and extermination have been the Ukrainians. Between 1926 and 1932 there was a complete extermination of the Ukrainian Orthodox church, with all its clergy and its leaders. Between 1928 and 1930 the extermination of the Don and Kuban Cossacks, with all their officers and intelligentsia, took place. Since the occupation by the soviet armies of western and Carpathian Ukraine, during this last war, the soviets are effecting the extermination of the Ukrainian Catholic church in that area.

Stalin's supreme victory in mass extermination and annihilation, an achievement which he can look upon with pride and satisfaction, was in the period between 1930 and 1935 when he liquidated the Kulaks, and then exploited a famine for political reasons, which resulted in the death of millions of Ukrainians from starvation.

It is difficult for me to understand why so many people in the United States and Canada fell for that communist propaganda, when this famine was explained by the politburo as social engineering. We have heard of famines at various times, but never was more bestiality displayed than this famine exploited by Stalin and his commissars. Again using an expression by Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, "as a murderer Hitler was a small time operator compared with Stalin."

The legal term "genocide" had been invented by an American professor, R. Lemkin, in 1944, and was used in the indictment of nazi war criminals at Nuremberg. The crime of genocide is defined as an act committed "with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national ethnical, racial or religious group as such." It was intended to define Hitler's liquidation of the Jews, but the irony of the Nuremberg trials was that during such trials soviet judges participated, whose master comrade Stalin far surpassed the acts of any person in the history of mankind in wholesale murders and exterminations. Hitler murdered the Jews as Jews, but Stalin never murdered the Jews as such, or the Poles as Poles or the Ukrainians as Ukrainians. His explanation is that he was liquidating these people as class enemies, as saboteurs and as traitors to the spiritual homeland of the workers of the world. To him the Soviet union is the fatherland of all progress, and all acts of mass extermination through shootings, famines or slave camps are for the benefit of the bourgeois world, acts of social engineering.

Again I quote from Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, where he says:

But let us look at the evidence a little more closely. We may note that it is precisely as Jews that more than half the Jews in the Soviet Union were exterminated. Those who were prepared to abandon their Jewishness and become atheistic communists were spared; but Jewry as a religious community was marked down for destruction. The same was obviously true of two other religious communities—the Ukrainian Orthodox Autocephalous church and the Ukrainian Catholic church. It was not a recalcitrant individual here and there who was seized upon. The whole community had to be destroyed. The same is true of many national communities—the Ingrians, the Kerch Greeks, the Crimean Tartars, the Volga Germans, the Cossacks of the Don and the Kuban, the Kalmuks, and the peoples of the Karachayev and Chechen-Ingush autonomous regions. These people have disappeared forever from the map of the world. On the long lists of electoral districts of the U.S.S.R. published in Pravda of January 12, 1950, one will search in vain for these vanished communities, most of them formerly listed even in the Stalin constitution.

I have enumerated only a few instances of Stalin's modus operandi, and as based on the research work of Dr. Kirkconnell. I have done it for two reasons:

Firstly, in our ardent desire for peace let us know with whom we are dealing and how our potential enemy operates. Let me remind you that we are now in the midst of a cold war. We must not fall into that fatal fallacy whereby we want peace at any price and lose our self-respect. We certainly want peace but we want to have it with honour based on freedom, mercy, truth and justice.

My second reason is for defence purposes, and on this I shall elaborate. Although we must not underestimate the Soviet union's strength, we must also for defence purposes not overlook her weakness.

It is my submission that the manner in which the thirteen men in the Kremlin, with Stalin as the chief, acquired strength, is the source of their weakness. We may think for a moment that in exercising his acts of genocide on the Poles, the Ukrainians, the Jews, the Latvians, the Estonians, the Lithuanians and other national minorities as well as on religious groups, Stalin's problems within the Soviet union have come to an end.

We realize that, within the Soviet union, effective resistance to Stalin and his advisers has ceased under the circumstances. However, it should not be overlooked that there are certainly millions of people still living who have not yet forgotten the famine in the early thirties and the mass murders and extermination during the last war.

It is my submission that there are today millions of potential fifth columnists within the Soviet union who, although helpless at the moment, are waiting for the opportunity. Even today a certain force known as the Ukrainian insurgent army, UPA, is operating against the communists. Under date of February 22, 1950, in the New York Times as well as the Toronto Globe and Mail there appeared a news item concerning these insurgents. I quote the following from the Globe and Mail:

> Russian troops sent to Ukraine to quell revolt.
>
> Units of Soviet troops in Germany have been ordered to the Ukraine recently to assist in putting down an insurrection there, according to a front page article in today's Der Abend published in West Berlin.
>
> Der Abend today asserts that this story has been confirmed by Finns who have just been sent back from Russia and also by Stockholm reports.
>
> As in its account of the Leningrad plot, Der Abend's current version of Ukraine events declares that the participants include numerous Soviet officers who have deserted to the partisans because they believe that the politburo is preparing to war against the western powers. . . Estimates of the number of individuals active in resistance in the Ukraine total 20,000 to 30,000 Der Abend reports. They are, the story says, actively supported by a great part of the population.

We realize how difficult it is to get any real information from behind the iron curtain. I am not suggesting that the Department of External Affairs is not informed on this situation. It is my submission however that the Canadian government, as well as other governments of western democracies, should be prepared to take advantage of this weakness within the Soviet union for defence purposes, should the time arrive and we had to resort to all defences at our disposal. It is therefore my further submission that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should have in his department the type of assistant who could keep him fully informed on this matter.

When we consider the Kremlin's position outside the borders of the Soviet union, then it is apparent that Stalin's main difficulty at the moment is with his satellite nations. I now quote from page 111 of James Burnham's recently published book, "The Coming Defeat of Communism":

> The Soviet union has not yet succeeded in integrating the satellite nations into the communist system. The great public expression of this failure is Tito; but potential Titos and potential Titoism have been widespread throughout the satellite nations. Purges, liquidations, mass exilings to Siberia, trials, denunciations, have had to continue and multiply. Vice-premiers, generals, ministers, party members and non-party members, as well as cardinals and priests, have had to be dismissed or tortured or imprisoned or shot. Agricultural policy has had to tack and veer in trying to hold its course against the stubborn and sullen peasants.

We are hardly in a position to overstate the importance of Tito's defiance of the Kremlin even though he should eventually capitulate or be liquidated. Titoism is present in all satellite states—Gomulka in Poland and Markos, head of the Greek guerrillas, Hoxha in Albania, Rajk in Hungary and Kostov in Bulgaria.

Interesting developments are taking place in Czechoslovakia today.

Those who have made a study of communism as directed from the Kremlin realize that the ultimate goal is world domination. There is no question that the long and continued existence of Titoism would create a back-breaking strain within the communist movement and empire. Professor Burnham in his book with reference to Titoism says at page 112:

> From the point of view of the communist high command, there is this peculiarity to the Tito issue. If Tito succeeds in maintaining his independent position (which he can do only by aid from and links to the west, and a correlated wider political separation from the Kremlin) and if other Titos arise, then the communist plan for world domination cannot succeed.

We must realize that the threat of Kremlin world domination in its threat to our way of life and our very existence is startling and real. We appreciate the menace and we have taken certain defensive steps. The North Atlantic pact is an example as well as the huge budget appropriations for defence this year. Probably we would not worry too much about the means test, concerning which we have heard so much lately, and other forms of social security which we Canadians would like to have, if we did not have to appropriate these huge sums of money for defence purposes.

There are, however, very few Canadians who, realizing our position, have any quarrel with the government's huge appropriation of money for defence purposes. It may be that the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) may not see eye to eye with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) as to how the money should be spent, but I do not think there is any question on the part of the Canadian people as to the amount of money we appropriate for defence purposes. We are doing so because we are realists, because we cannot completely rely on wishful thinking that some day we will come to a definite and amicable understanding with comrade Stalin on the question of peace. The same principle applied when Canada took such a leading part in bringing into effect the North Atlantic pact. Being realists, our defence should not lie merely in the amount of moneys appropriated for guns, planes, tanks, submarines or other war material, although that is very important. We must also rely on other things that are available for defence purposes and especially take full advantage of the weaknesses of the potential aggressors. I have endeavoured to point out some of these weaknesses within the borders of the Soviet union as well as within the satellite states.

I should like to draw your attention briefly to our internal position in Canada. In doing so I should like to quote a portion of an article appearing in the Financial Post of March 18, 1950, which reads:

> Already a lot of organizations with fine democratic names have been exposed as ideological boiler shops. A lot of unthinking liberals and do-gooders who didn't investigate what they were getting into have been left holding the bag. Today there are three or four world-wide communist sales organizations. All are selling a highly marketable and desirable product, peace.
>
> The line is this: "If war comes it will be the fault of the Trumaniacs. The Soviet Union wants to ban the bomb. The others refuse to do so." In other words, condition our minds to accept the big lie, that if war does come, it will be of our making, not Russia's.

Then the article deals with a certain convention that took place in Budapest and it reads as follows:

> Recently the communist youth movement staged a world youth and student festival in Budapest behind the iron curtain. A young American who attended, writing in a United States magazine article, said he was "appalled" by what he called the "defamation" of the west. Among the hundreds of young delegates were thirty-two Canadians representing these organizations.

[Mr. Decore.]

Then the organizations are listed, and the article continues:

> At least twenty of the thirty-two delegates were known communists. Some were members of the "Beaver Brigade". This is a communist youth shock troop group. Since the war they have made annual trips behind the iron curtain to work with pick and shovel on communist work projects.

My reason for reading this article is to point out that, although there is the iron curtain, we in Canada allow Canadians to enter the Soviet union and her satellite states where they receive training and instructions in the art of communism and how to conduct a revolution. When they return to Canada we accept them, and naturally they act as leaders of potential fifth columns and continue to spread communist propaganda. I am not going to suggest what we should do, but I am leaving this matter with hon. members for their consideration. It may be, however, that our conception of freedom may go a bit too far.

The recent election in Great Britain has aroused world-wide interest and concern, not so much because we were interested in the victory of the Conservative party as such, or the British people's experiment in socialism, as because of the stand with regard to the Kremlin which that great wartime leader, Churchill, took after the second world war. Mr. Churchill was the first important statesman to warn the world at Fulton as to the intentions of Soviet Russia. He was widely criticized at the time but now four years later we know that he was right. He was roundly condemned for his stand on Greece when he was still prime minister of Great Britain, but subsequent events have proven that again he was right.

I do not wish to create the impression that I am a calamity howler so far as our relations with the Kremlin are concerned, but let me remind you of Mr. Churchill's speech approximately a year ago at Boston when he made this statement:

> I must not conceal from you the truth as I see it. It is certain that Europe would have been communized and London under bombardment some time ago but for the deterrent of the atomic bomb in the hands of the United States.

I am sure I am expressing the sentiment of all in the house when I say that I hope Mr. Churchill was wrong when he made that statement. Nevertheless he was right on so many other occasions. As a leading statesman of the world he probably knows Stalin better than anyone else in the western democracies. Since he made his speech at Boston we have learned that the Soviets have the secret of the atom bomb. If Mr. Churchill was right in making that statement, then the interesting and at the same time breathtaking question arises as to how long we have to wait, now that the Soviets have the secret of the atom bomb, before they choose to bombard London or Edmonton.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the house for many minutes but there is a matter of considerable importance which I should like to bring to the attention of the house before we go into committee. Earlier in the session I drew attention to the fact that the Canadian freighter, Lake Canim, sailed from Hong Kong with war supplies for communist China, and that she ran the nationalist blockade in order to deliver those supplies to the communist-held port of Shanghai. She made three attempts to do so. The first one was successful and two later ones were not. The matter of the blockade has been dealt with by the Department of External Affairs and a ruling has been given that the nationalist blockade could not be recognized as a blockade because it was not effective. As recently as March 22 a Canadian Press dispatch stated that the Montreal-owned freighter Argovan was to sail from Vancouver on March 23 with war supplies for the Chinese nationalist stronghold on Formosa. The dispatch goes on to say:

> Captain F. Delaney of Vancouver, master of the ten thousand-ton freighter, said that his ship will unload 75 surplus United States army tanks on the island's north coast . . .
>
> The Argovan is the fourth Canadian ship to take cargo into the Chinese civil war zone.

There we have two examples, one of a Canadian ship delivering war supplies to one side, the communists, and a few months later another Canadian ship taking war supplies, though they have not been delivered yet, to the nationalists. Canada is guilty of supplying war materials to both sides in a civil war. That is repugnant to a very large section of the Canadian people, and is not something of which this government can be proud. That has been brought about because the government has not declared a firm policy with respect to China; and I do feel that when this committee is set up it should be given definite directions by the government as to how it is to deal with this situation, because the Canadian people do not want to be guilty of fostering a civil war by supplying arms to both sides.

Motion (Mr. Pearson) agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will go into supply and consider the trade and commerce estimates until six o'clock. From eight to nine we will have private and public bills. After nine o'clock we hope to pass the motion of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) to set up a committee on radio broadcasting and the motion of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley) to set up a committee to consider amendments to the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. Fleming: Will those motions with respect to the setting up of committees not be called until nine o'clock?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Some days ago I had an understanding with the opposition that we would try to get into supply one day a week to take up estimates. One of the most important departments is trade and commerce, and tomorrow afternoon I think we will take up those estimates.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 31, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

NEWFOUNDLAND

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF UNION WITH DOMINION OF CANADA, MARCH 31, 1949

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of special privilege and of interest, I am sure, to all hon. members of the house, may I take a moment to refer to the event of which the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) reminded the house yesterday. Even if he had not done so I am sure hon. members would have felt that today should not pass without our recalling that at midnight tonight Newfoundland will have been a Canadian province for a full year. It seems to me that, without any formal motion, the house would like to extend to the people of our tenth province greetings and good wishes on this occasion. We have all been delighted at the way in which hon. members from Newfoundland on both sides have contributed to our proceedings. They are at home with the rest of us, and we are at home with them. That, I believe, is the spirit in which Newfoundland has fitted, and will continue to fit, into our Canadian union.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is the 31st day of March, and in a few hours we shall stand on the threshold of Newfoundland's second year as a province of Canada. It may not be inappropriate that at this time I should make brief reference to our first year of partnership with the other provinces of our nation. I want to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) for the words which have just fallen from his lips. They constitute an official confirmation of the fact that the other provinces of Canada and its citizens from east to west have received our people and our country as one of themselves.

From 1933 until 1946 Newfoundland experienced what some people were pleased to term a holiday from politics. In the latter year began a period of political warfare of various types which continued unceasingly until June of 1949. We had a national convention election, with all the guerrilla warfare and pitched battles which followed in its wake. We had the campaigns of two referenda. We had a provincial election, and, lastly, a federal election in June last. The net result of these three years of uninterrupted political battle was that we became the tenth province of the nation, with Liberal ministries returned to power in both federal and provincial fields.

To date, our experience of provincehood has been a short one—too short to measure long-term results with any degree of accuracy. But we can perhaps estimate broadly the prospects for the future, even by the short experience of the last twelve months.

The reception which was accorded to my countrymen and myself upon our first appearance in this honourable assembly of the Commons of Canada was so spontaneous and wholehearted that even the most implacable and irreconcilable anti-confederationist must have been convinced that our position here was not that of unwelcome guests, but that of valued members of the Canadian family of free people extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

During the year, changing world conditions indicated that difficulties lay ahead in many of our foreign markets, and there were indications that our favourable position as sellers, which had continued for a number of years, was disappearing. Outlets for pit props, pulpwood and sulphite practically dried up, with the resultant substantial unemployment in the industries concerned, as well as in certain other fields which ordinarily profit by their activity. In some sections of the country a short fishery added to our difficulties. In these circumstances the value of Canadian social services in the fields of unemployment insurance, family allowances, and indirectly even old age pensions, has been very substantial, and their beneficial effects are apparent even to the most casual observer.

The prospective problems which our people now face as a result of increased competition from soft currency countries, the devaluation of the pound, and the difficulty of obtaining convertible currency for sales in our European market, are of a character which might prove almost beyond the powers of an independent Newfoundland. Our people are heartened by the knowledge that their negligible bargaining power in the world markets is now supplemented by the weight and influence of this nation.

In the field of modernization of our basic industries there is much to be done. Aids to navigation and the industries of the sea, which are essential to any program in this field, are already under way and in contemplation.

Extensive research, aimed at increased production at lower costs, is to commence this year and will, I believe, in the foreseeable future, bring revolutionary economic improvement in this ancient and pre-eminently important Newfoundland industry.

Union has inevitably brought some stresses and strains. No reform was ever effected painlessly, but I am quite sure that the net effects thus far have been of great benefit to our people. And the unquestionable desire of the federal government to aid necessary development in every possible way gives confidence in the future, and an assurance that we made no mistake in joining the great Canadian family.

I have been a confederationist for nearly forty years. Our struggle to achieve union covered a period of three years of intensive effort against the honest, though mistaken, views of many opponents, and ended in victory but twelve short months ago. The experience of the year which is just expiring has proven to me that, amongst any achievements in my lifetime which may be laid to my credit, my share in bringing about this union stands pre-eminent. In the light of the events of the last twelve months, I am further assured that it is the effort in my career in which I can take the greatest pride.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself and the members of my party with the expression of good wishes that has been conveyed in this house to Newfoundland on the first anniversary of its becoming a member of this great partnership. I should think that on this occasion every Canadian would wish to extend to the people of Newfoundland the simple but well-understood greeting, "Many happy returns of the day".

We now share with the people of Newfoundland that justifiable feeling of pride which has been earned through centuries of effort and fortitude by the sturdy people who inhabit the oldest British colony in North America. Today one can still see there the souvenirs of these earliest settlements which really laid the foundation for the establishment of our system of free democracy on the North American continent.

Newfoundland, by its geographical position, was from the early days the bulwark of this settlement which gradually spread over the whole of North America. Much has happened since those early days when John Cabot, and others following after him, discovered the great possibilities of that rugged, challenging, and beautiful island. We have passed from the time of the small sailing ships to the present period of extremely fast transportation which now brings Newfoundland within a few hours of Great Britain and the European continent. It is in that modern world that the adjustments which are inevitable with a new association of this kind must be made. These developments of the past few years offer new opportunities to the people of Newfoundland, as they do to the rest of Canada. As a result of this union I would hope that vast new opportunities will open up for the people of that province, through the employment of their water power and other natural resources.

This marriage between Newfoundland and Canada, like even the happiest marriages, is not without some difficult adjustments. I feel certain that all Canadians who have welcomed Newfoundland so wholeheartedly into this union will express the hope that everything may be done by the government of Canada and the people of Canada to make the people of Newfoundland increasingly happy in this new association.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Although my remarks will not be lengthy, Mr. Speaker, they will be none the less sincere. May I say that we join with the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and all other members of the house in expressing our appreciation that at last confederation has been consummated. We hope and believe that the first year of this association has been a happy one, and we feel sure that it augurs well for the future.

The Secretary of State referred to the bitter controversy that occurred in Newfoundland prior to confederation. I was glad yesterday when the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) rose in his place, expressed his appreciation of the union, and introduced no note of partisanship. That, after all, Mr. Speaker, is the manner in which this house carried on the discussions which led to confederation. Differences of opinion there were with regard to details, but it is a happy instance of good will that, in reference to this parliament at least, there was unanimity in welcoming Newfoundland into confederation.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I think it is fitting, Mr. Speaker, that this house should mark the end of the first year of Newfoundland's membership in the Canadian family of provinces and the beginning of their second year. At this moment I do not wish to do more than to join with those who have spoken in wishing the people of Newfoundland well, and to say to them that it has only been about forty-five years since Alberta joined the confederation. We have had our ups and downs; we have had to kick a time or two about the way things were going; but, all in all, we have been happy that we came in. I am sure that the people of Newfoundland, at the end of their forty-five years, will feel the same way.

Judging from the calibre of the members of this house sent to us by Newfoundland, I would say that the people in Newfoundland in the future will be happy and will be one with us. I think we all feel much like the parents who have finally seen the last member of the family in at night and safely in bed.

Mr. J. H. Harris (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, it has been my happy experience during the last three decades to have associated with me two gentlemen from Newfoundland and their families. The Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley) spoke about some basic industry in Newfoundland. I just could not hear what he said, but I thought to myself that perhaps the greatest basic industry of the people there is to produce fine citizens, some of whom come and settle in other parts of Canada.

I want to take this opportunity of mentioning two names. One of them is Eli Frank Benson, a former neighbour of mine, whose dear wife is still alive, although he has passed on; she was the daughter of a Methodist minister. The family are still neighbours of mine. He had been associated with me for some twenty-five years, and did a great deal to help build up the industry of Canada. The other one is Stanley Patrick Martin, also of Newfoundland, whose widow and family are still in my community. These were two men from Newfoundland with whom it was my privilege to be associated. In common with thousands of others they did a great deal to help build up Canada. I hope that the basic industry to which I referred will continue to produce such men. I am happy to have this opportunity of being associated more and more closely with the province in which is included the constituency of the Secretary of State.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of being allowed to pay tribute to these two families.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Drew be substituted for that of Mr. Browne (St. John's West) on the special committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

House of Commons

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION ON REVISION OF CLASSIFICATION OF HOUSE OFFICIALS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to lay on the table of the house the report of the civil service commission respecting revisions in the classification of officials of the House of Commons.

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): May I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday or Tuesday next I shall move concurrence in the report of the civil service commission concerning the revision of salaries of the officials of this house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEK OF APRIL 3, AND MONDAY, APRIL 17

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Many hon. members have inquired as to the business of the house next week and when we reconvene on the seventeenth. Monday will be private members' day; Tuesday we shall resume the debate on the budget, and Wednesday will be private members' day. Monday, April 17, will be private members' day.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEA ISLAND, B.C., AIR FORCE STATION—EMERGENCY QUARTERS

Mr. J. A. Blanchette (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): In reply to an inquiry made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) on March 30 with regard to the accommodation of the air force now at Sea Island, may I say that there are thirty-five married quarters units under construction under contract arranged by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and it is expected that an additional seventy-five units will be allotted to the Sea Island station in the 1950-51 program.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 88, respecting the purchase by Canadian Pacific Railway Company of shares of the capital stock of the Shawinigan Falls Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Pinard.

FISHERIES

HALIBUT—RECIPROCAL PORT PRIVILEGES TO CANADIAN AND U.S. FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): May I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, notice of which I have sent him? Has the minister recently signed a treaty or convention with the United States government with respect to halibut fishing on the Pacific coast? If so, will the minister make a statement as to the provisions of that treaty, and whether it will extend or split the halibut season?

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): The convention signed last week with the United States is not a revision of the existing Pacific halibut fishery convention. The new convention gives to United States and Canadian halibut fishermen reciprocal port privileges on the Pacific coast. These privileges allow Canadian fishermen to land their catches of halibut and sablefish in Alaska or other United States ports, to sell them locally on payment of duty, or transport them in bond to any part of either country. Our fishermen are allowed entry into United States ports also to obtain supplies, repairs and equipment. Similar concessions are granted to the United States halibut fleet in British Columbia ports.

Formerly the two governments had to pass enabling legislation each year to make this possible. The new convention will permit the continuous exchange of these privileges. In addition, the new convention gives Canadian halibut vessels these rights in ports of the United States proper as well as of Alaska. It has nothing to do with a split season.

Mr. Green: May I ask a supplementary question? Is there not a treaty being negotiated between Canada and the United States which will deal with the halibut season and other related matters? If so, when is it expected that the treaty will be concluded?

Mr. Mayhew: There was a meeting of the halibut commission last fall in Prince Rupert, and also in Alaska. This matter was then discussed, but no agreement was reached. There will be another meeting of the halibut commission shortly, and they may decide then to split the season, or they may not. However, it will be decided by the commission.

Mr. Green: There is no new treaty being negotiated?

Mr. Mayhew: There is no new treaty. This is only a port privilege treaty. It is not a halibut treaty or an extension or renewal of treaty.

SEED AND FEED GRAIN

OATS, BARLEY AND WHEAT—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I ask him the question now because of the approach of the Easter recess. In the drought areas of the west it is being asked whether the federal government intends to do anything to assist the farmers in those areas to procure seed oats, barley and wheat, which are selling at a high price this spring. As the minister knows, the situation on the prairies is serious.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): As I have said on a number of previous occasions, the matter of supplying seed grain to farmers, either by gift or otherwise, has always been considered a responsibility of the provincial governments, both east and west, and there has been no change in that policy. So far as I am aware, the provincial governments of the west are making provision to have seed supplied to farmers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister permit one more question, having to do with feed oats and barley? Out west the price of feed oats is fifteen cents higher than it is in eastern Canada. The farmers want to know how that comes about, and are asking whether the government will do anything to give them similar advantages in the prices being paid for feed oats and barley.

Mr. Gardiner: It is just possible that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who handles the marketing of grain, may have some information which I have not. But I am not aware that farmers in the west are paying more for oats and barley than they are in the east. It is a fact that freight is paid on grain from Fort William east, but I was not aware that that lowers the price that they are actually paying for it in the east as compared with what the western farmer pays. It lowers the price as compared with what they would have to pay if the freight was not paid.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The complaint I have is that the western farmer is paying a higher price.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Just to clear up that one point, if I may, Mr. Speaker, the western farmer buys at the street price in his locality. To the street price must be added the freight to Fort William. Therefore I am quite sure my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that either oats or barley sell at higher prices in western Canada than in eastern Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am talking about grains for feed purposes.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

423. Departmental administration, $482,875.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Is the minister going to make a statement?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes. Perhaps in introducing these estimates, Mr. Chairman, I should make a statement. In doing so it will be my purpose to review briefly the trading position of the past year, 1949, and to give an analysis of prospects for the year 1950 as they are seen by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

A discussion of trade cannot be wholly separated from a discussion of the economic position of Canada. But as a good deal has been said about our economic position, particularly by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech and in earlier speeches, I will touch on the economy of the country only to the extent necessary to explain the trade position.

I need not tell hon. members that the past year has been one of extreme and violent world changes and adjustments. We have seen nations disappear behind the iron curtain. An example is the great nation of China, which was an important customer and supplier of Canada. Other nations have had changes of government which have not been to the benefit of Canadian trade. The shortage of dollars has caused the employment of restrictive practices, the result being prohibitions, quotas, and various arbitrary methods of cutting down dollar expenditures. We have been faced with a lack of convertibility of currencies, and this today is one of the serious obstacles to a free exchange of goods.

Another consideration has been the shift of economic power from Europe to North America, which has been important in dictating the conditions of movement of trade between North America and other countries. However, in spite of all these difficulties, the past year has been a prosperous one. Our economy has been riding pretty well on the crest of the wave. We can look back to 1949 as a very prosperous year for Canada.

I think it is remarkable that while other countries have been experiencing social and economic upheavals incidental to post-war readjustment, Canada has been almost totally unscathed during the reconversion period. I think it is too much to hope that we can complete our own adjustment fully without receiving a few scars, but up to the moment I think we can count ourselves as the most fortunate nation on earth in having escaped any serious difficulties in bringing about the adjustment from war to peace.

In discussing the future situation it is my purpose to give a fair balance as between the favourable factors and the unfavourable factors. As the Irish might put it, I intend to give a balanced statement, with the weight of the balance on the side of the unfavourable factor. I am not pessimistic about the future, but, as always, I shall try to give the committee my own outlook, and the reasons for it, without introducing undue optimism into the statement.

Let me give first a summary of trade for 1949. The exports for that year were very close to the peacetime high. As a matter of fact there was a drop in exports amounting to about three per cent of our total. Imports were about the same as in the previous year. We had a favourable balance of trade of about $250 million during 1949.

It is more and more the tendency, in discussing Canada's external trade, to discuss it in separate compartments. Perhaps I might first discuss our trade with the United States. That trade last year amounted to about $3,500 million, which is by far the largest trade between any two other countries in the world. As a matter of fact it is larger than the trade of the United States with any other four countries in the world.

Our exports to the United States last year were about the same as in the previous year, standing at about $1,500 million. Our imports from the United States increased by about $160 million. One contributing factor to that —and there are several—was the relaxation of restrictions that had been put on when we found it necessary to correct our dollar exchange position. But a very important contributing factor was the recession of business in the United States, which occurred about the middle of that year. Many items which up to that time had been in short supply became available from the United States in ample supply; as Canada was carrying out a very large investment program, a good many orders that had been placed previously were shipped in over the period of two or three months, and a great increase in our trade for those months appears in the statistics.

As I have said, however, we sold to the United States last year $1,524 million worth of goods, and we bought from that country $1,952 million worth of goods. In other words, we sent to the United States about fifty per cent of our exports, and bought from the United States about seventy per cent of our imports.

The balance of payments position on account of the larger imports without an increase in exports worsened by about $200 million, to which dividend payments from Canada contributed. So that our balance of payments position with the United States was about $200 million worse for 1949 than it had been for 1948. In other words, our adverse balance of payments position rose from about $400 million in 1948 to $600 million in 1949.

When we turn to the balance of our trade with the rest of the world we find the position reversed. Instead of being on the same side as our overseas customers vis-à-vis the United States, we find that in our overseas trade we are on the same side as the United States vis-à-vis most of the world.

Taking, for simplicity, our total merchandise trade exclusive of the United States, we had in 1949 an export surplus of $690 million and a current balance-of-payments credit of some $800 million. About fifteen per cent of our overseas trade was with the dollar countries of Latin America. That presented no dollar problem. But for the balance of our trade we had to meet the difficulty of selling in dollars as against other countries selling in sterling. The fact that we were able to maintain our position in overseas markets is, I suggest, rather remarkable, taking into account all the unfavourable circumstances that faced our trade in those markets.

When we turn to the United Kingdom we find that our exports to that country actually rose $20 million above the level of 1948. The year 1949 was in fact the year of greatest exports to the United Kingdom of any peacetime year in history. I call that particularly to the attention of the committee, because, from statements which have been made during the past year in the house, one would almost assume that our market in the United Kingdom was gone forever. The fact of the matter is that our exports to England actually increased during last year.

Our total overseas exports, however, fell by some $90 million, or less than six per cent of our overseas trade. The reason for that was that some of our trade in the previous year had been unusual, in that it had included replacement of capital equipment. There were large items such as locomotives and railway rolling stock shipped to India, Egypt and South Africa. There was the sale of ships to overseas buyers. Those unusual items more than account for the drop in trade. Had these capital replacement items been cancelled out, our exports to overseas markets would have been about the same as in the previous year.

Our imports from the United Kingdom were slightly higher than in the previous year. Determined efforts are being made to step up imports from the United Kingdom, but the program is necessarily long-range, and we expect much more decided improvement in that direction during 1950 than we were able to achieve in 1949.

To sum up our trade picture in two sentences, in 1949 our exports to the United States were maintained in spite of a recession there, while our imports were increased, largely for productive and new investment purposes. Our overseas exports fell about six per cent, and while there was an increase in imports from the United Kingdom, there was a small over-all decline in total imports from overseas countries. Our adverse balance of trade with the United States consequently increased significantly, while our large favourable balance with the rest of the world was slightly reduced.

Turning now to 1950, we expect that our exports to the United States will rise substantially, and we expect our imports from that country to fall. The trade returns for the first and second months of this year support that view. In January and February our exports to the United States were up $38 million and our imports were down $15 million, improving our trade balance with the United States by $53 million. We regard that as a trend likely to continue throughout the year, for various reasons which I need not go into, one of which is the increased production of exportable commodities in Canada, such as petroleum and iron ore.

We expect some drop in our exports to the United Kingdom and to the rest of the world. We have not been able to measure the extent of the drop. In the first two months of the year there was a drop in exports to England of $20 million, but it is not definite at the moment whether that fairly indicates the trend. The drop of $20 million in January and February was accounted for almost entirely by lower shipments of wheat. The reason shipments of wheat were lower was that we found it impossible to deliver wheat in sufficient quantity at the seaboard to meet commitments and had to ask the government of the United Kingdom to permit us to postpone shipments of a substantial amount of wheat. That wheat will come back into the trade figures in April and May, and I am not sure that the drop of $20 million in January and February is particularly significant.

We know that the government of the United Kingdom has in hand a belt-tightening program designed to save dollars and we are pretty certain to feel the effect of that program over the new year. On the other hand we believe that there will be an increase in imports from the United Kingdom as a result of the current dollar-sterling effort and in consequence of efforts that have been made already.

So far as the rest of the world is concerned, the situation in Argentina is disturbing to the point where we have been able to trade very little. Dollar markets have been practically closed in that country. Trade with the rest of South America continues on a fairly stable basis, and the probabilities are that exports to overseas countries, excluding the United Kingdom and the sterling area generally, will be on about the same level as those of the past year.

During the past year we took in various trade discussions, including the tripartite talks in Washington having to do with trade between the United Kingdom and the sterling area generally, the United States and Canada. We will also take part in another trade discussion at Torquay to follow up the trade discussions at Geneva and Annecy. It is well to keep in mind that the trade discussions at Geneva played a great part in opening up markets in the United States and making possible the considerable increase of exports to that country. Some forty nations will meet at Torquay in September of this year, and we hope that meeting will result in a still further lowering of trade barriers between participating nations.

As a trade promotional effort I may mention the international trade fair to be held once again in Canada at the end of May. This trade fair has been most helpful, particularly to our overseas customers in opening up Canadian markets for their goods. This year there will be a considerable increase in the displays from abroad. Through the agency of the trade fair I think the department is doing useful work in promoting the exchange of goods in a field where effort of that kind is badly needed.

Canadian trade at the present time reveals a number of cross-currents and divergent trends which may well seem confusing. In fact a good many can be traced to the same source—the chronic world shortage of United States dollars. There have been two outstanding considerations in the development of Canadian trade. One is the over-all growth of both exports and imports has increased two-fold and threefold in value in the last decade. The other is the increased proportion of our increased trade which we now carry on with the United States. There has been an increase from about fifty per cent in our total world trade in 1939 to 60 per cent of current world trade.

We find that we now have, and I think we can expect to continue to have, a good market for staple products which Canada traditionally exports, such as wheat, flour, metals, lumber, pulp and paper. These markets seem to be in excellent condition, and we do not expect any particular difficulty with such products. Canadian manufacturers are finding it easier to sell their manufactured goods in the United States than in Europe. I believe that our sales in Europe of manufactured goods depend largely on the amount of effort that is being put behind the selling. During my recent visit to Europe I met vigorous representatives of one of our large farm implement companies in Rome, in Paris, in Belgium and in Holland. As a result of the efforts being put forth by that company its sales in Europe have risen greatly. Because of that kind of selling that company is now the third largest manufacturer of agricultural implements in the world.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Was that from the Canadian plant?

Mr. Howe: I refer to a Canadian company with foreign subsidiaries, but Canadian exports play a large part in selling on the continent. That company has risen from twelfth place before the war to third place now in the list of farm implement manufacturers in the world.

I am glad to say that in all four capitals I met representatives of the government's own Polymer Corporation. That company is operating at full capacity, and has been since the war, largely as the result of a very active sales program. More than one-third of the rubber produced at that plant is sold in the United Kingdom and in Europe. That, I think, is worth noting at a time when synthetic rubber is being produced greatly in excess of demand and when the price of synthetic rubber is higher than the price of natural rubber. In spite of such handicaps this government-owned corporation is capable of carrying out a selling effort which is disposing of its output, more than one-third of which is going into markets which our manufacturers consider the most difficult in the world.

Mr. Coldwell: A pretty good recommendation for public enterprise.

Mr. Howe: Well, this is different; this is my enterprise. I could give other examples of manufacturers who are selling their products in Europe. They would all be manufacturers who are willing to spend money and effort on selling programs in Europe, and willing to send their top executives there to do the selling rather than third-string sales agents.

Canada must battle for agricultural markets, and in that battle Canada and the United States are handicapped in competing with producers in sterling countries. The dollar shortage plays its part but there is no indication that the markets are not sufficient to absorb Canadian products as well as those of sterling countries.

Mr. Fulton: What about apples?

Mr. Howe: That is a bright remark. We are talking billions, and my hon. friends speaks of apples, which incidentally are hardly food. Their main content is water. However, Canadian food products have an excellent position in foreign markets. Our wheat, in particular, is outstanding in quality. It is the preferred wheat in every country in the world. The grades are reliable, the protein content is high, and I have no particular worry about being able to sell Canada's wheat crop.

Our sales are being guided by our Canadian trade commissioner service abroad. We have able men in every country whose duty it is to warn us of market changes and to give us advice on market opportunities. I believe it is remarkable that when one market has been lost through restrictions or for other reasons, these trade commissioners have been able to find outlets for the same products in other markets. The world is wide and we know from experience that the loss of one market does not necessarily mean that no alternate market can be opened up.

One very striking fact is in evidence; the seller's market is over. Today all markets are buyer's markets, and in every market the Canadian exporter meets tough competition. I am glad to say that our price structure in Canada is such that we are well able to meet that competition wherever we encounter it, in the United States or in world markets abroad. It seems to me that a buyer's market is a normal market, and I am not particularly disturbed because of the fact that we are now in a market where the seller really has to work to dispose of his products.

A great deal has been said about Marshall plan dollars. They are not nearly such an important factor in selling today as many would suppose. It is generally considered that to sell in the sterling market, or in any foreign currency markets, there must be Marshall plan dollars. That is not so. The supply of free dollars is increasing all around the world, and each year we are becoming less dependent upon the Marshall plan. Of course that was the purpose of the Marshall plan—to rebuild the economies of the recipient countries so that by the end of 1952 that kind of support would no longer be necessary. A little later I shall say something about the Marshall plan as I saw it in operation at its headquarters in Paris, but I can say that only a very small proportion of our overseas trade today depends upon Marshall plan dollars, and much of that trade would be carried on if there were no such dollars. It is well to remember that overseas buyers do not purchase Canadian goods just because they love Canada. That may be a factor, but the main reason is that they need the goods. If the goods are needed badly enough, I think there are very few countries that are not able to finance necessary purchases at this time.

I might say something about the gross national product—that is, the value of everything produced in Canada in a certain year. I know our gross national product has been mentioned on other occasions, but its total amount is very closely related to the volume of our exports. Last year the gross national product in Canada rose to $16,000 million, being up $500 million from 1948. For 1950 we are forecasting an increase of between $200 and $300 million in the value of our national product. It is interesting to run back over the years to see how that value has increased:

	Gross national product (billions)
1926	$ 5·2
1929	6·0
1933	3·5
1939	5·6
1948	15·5
1949	16·0
1950 (forecast)	16·3

Mr. Wright: Has the minister the figures showing the physical volume?

Mr. Howe: Yes; I shall give those in a moment. First I should like to give the value of our production per capita—that is, the value produced for every man, woman and child in Canada:

1926	$ 550
1929	600
1933	330
1939	500
1948	1,200
1950 (forecast)	1,210

In terms of volume—that is, reducing values to the basis of 1926 and taking that year as 100—the figures were:

	Gross national product (billions)
1929	$115
1933	82
1939	124
1948	205
1949	211
1950 (forecast)	214

On the same basis, the volume per capita went up from 100 in 1926 to 152 in 1950.

Mr. Brooks: That is not per capita, like the dollar value?

Mr. Howe: No, the figures are production in billions of dollars. Taking 100 for the year 1926, the per capita figure is 109 for 1929; 73 for 1933; 105 for 1939; 151 for 1948, and the forecast for 1950 is 152.

We also expect a substantial rise in public investment in 1950. Investment, of course, stands side by side with our export trade, as a significant factor in the strength of our economy. I do not seem to have the figures for the increase, but I believe last year the total capital investment was approximately $3,400 million, and the prediction for 1950 is that it will be about $3,600 million. We expect 1950 to be the greatest construction year Canada has ever experienced.

It is interesting to note that since the end of the war there has been a total investment in capital equipment—that is in buildings, machinery and production equipment—amounting to $11,700 million up to the end of 1949. In other words, Canada has invested in plant and equipment practically the amount of Canada's total national debt in the five post-war years beginning with 1945.

Mr. Coldwell: Can the minister tell us how much of that is public and how much private investment?

Mr. Howe: I am afraid I have not that break-down with me today. I have a few notes before me, and I am trying to pick out significant figures as we go along. I will give the hon. member those figures later.

The trend for 1950 is towards a larger proportion in business properties, hospitals and government investment generally. A smaller proportion is going into factories and machinery than was the case in 1949.

One thing that has affected the situation this year, and will continue to do so in 1950, is the drop in agricultural production in 1949. Owing to weather conditions, there was an over-all physical production drop of about ten per cent. The wheat crop was about 26 million bushels less, yet there were 3·4 million acres more in production. Approximately 2·6 million acres had been taken out of other grains, and this, coupled with unfavourable weather conditions, reduced the coarse grain and flaxseed crop by 115 million bushels. The hay crop was about one-quarter less, putting pressure on our dairy producers. This will have its effect on exports in the early part of 1950, because, owing to these short crops, we have not as much to export as we would have had if the crop had been normal.

I should say that our forecasts for 1950 are based on average crops rather than on the subnormal crop that we had last year. If this year's crop is subnormal, the estimates will be too optimistic; if the crop is above normal, our estimates will be too pessimistic. In referring to agriculture generally, the five-fold increase in farm machinery sales in Canada from $52 million in 1939 to $239 million in 1948 and $255 million in 1949 hardly indicates an agricultural industry that is unduly depressed.

So far as the basic industries of Canada are concerned, the construction industry will have its biggest year in 1950. The newsprint industry is running at capacity for the present, and the indications are that it will do so throughout the year. The pulp market was soft during 1949, but has now strengthened, and Canada's pulp industry is running at full capacity. Indications are that this is likely to continue throughout the year. The lumber industry is in a prosperous condition. To illustrate how conditions change, I may say that last November the lumber industry felt itself to be in a serious condition. I believe that was mentioned in the house. Delegations from both the east and west waited upon the government, pointing out the serious conditions facing that industry. Today, however, the lumber industry is booked to capacity. I am told that industry has sufficient orders to keep it running at capacity for the remainder of the year.

To indicate the position of the west coast lumber industry, tenders were asked by the United Kingdom for 132 million feet of lumber. The west coast mills were unable to quote on the full order, not having unbooked capacity. The United Kingdom fortunately decided to extend the time of delivery and Canadian mills can thus quote on a substantial portion of the order. So far as the east coast is concerned, last autumn we were endeavouring to get the United Kingdom to call for tenders for $2,500,000 worth of eastern lumber from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and eastern Quebec. The call for tenders was delayed, but was finally issued in January and tenders were sent in for about $6 million worth of lumber. Instead of buying the $2,500,000 worth of lumber, the United Kingdom bought the entire $6 million worth. This will keep the eastern lumber industry booked with all it can handle, in addition to supplying the normal United States market and the domestic markets for the remainder of the year.

Mr. Brooks: I had intended to ask the minister a question along that line, but I should like to ask about the pit prop industry in New Brunswick. Can the minister give any information about it?

Mr. Howe: The pit prop industry is not going to be the industry it has been in the past. When I was in France I happened to pass a considerable forest that had been burned over. The timber from that forest was being cut up for pit props. I asked the man in charge where the pit props were going, and he said to the United Kingdom.

Pit props are the lowest form of lumber that can be cut, and it is inevitable that those using them will get them in the cheapest market. Taking transportation costs into consideration, the cheapest market is not likely to be Canada, although I understand small quantities of pit props are being sold. The pit prop industry, as we knew it during the war years, was an abnormal industry. I am afraid it will never reappear on that scale in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Brooks: At one time the minister suggested we might get a market in Turkey; has he any information on that?

Mr. Howe: Negotiations are still under way. We have had a market in Turkey, and I think its purchases this year will be about on the same scale as the purchases last year.

Mr. Brooks: Nothing definite?

Mr. Howe: Nothing closed.

Mr. Green: Will the minister comment on the attempt which is being made by the lumbermen in Washington and Oregon to have restrictions placed against the importation of Canadian west coast lumber into the United States? We read articles about these men demanding this and that, and I was wondering how serious that attempt is.

Mr. Howe: I am fully aware of the propaganda that is going out through newspapers on the west coast. I have heard no evidence that it has its repercussions in Washington. I can hardly believe that the government of the United States would reverse its thinking to the extent of putting up barriers against lumber, in the light of recent trade agreements that have opened that market. I cannot predict what other governments will do, but I should be greatly surprised if anything of the kind happened.

Mining is a growing industry in Canada. New properties are being opened up. The production of gold is increasing. While base metal prices are tending to fall, particularly the price of lead, the prices are still highly satisfactory and metal mining throughout 1950 will make about the same contribution in volume, if not in dollars, to our export trade as in 1949. Markets for fish are likely to absorb Canadian production. There is no indication that Canadian fish will not find markets abroad in the future as it has in the past. Among the industries that will be down for 1950 is shipbuilding. The demand for new shipping is not as brisk as it was immediately after the war, and devaluation has placed Canadian prices somewhat out of line. There was a great post-war demand from abroad for railroad equipment to replace equipment damaged by war. That demand has now been filled and our industries are falling back more and more on domestic orders, which are still substantial. But as to export markets, we cannot expect the same contribution from that industry. The same applies to machine tools, which has been an active industry in Canada but which again is largely dependent on domestic demand. As to the domestic consumer demand, we look for an active year, with no lessening of buying activity.

The wages paid in Canada this year are likely to be in total somewhat above the wages paid last year. There is no indication that the savings of the Canadian people are being depleted in any way and I see no reason why there should be any great let-down in domestic demand for manufactured goods. As to our two annual publications, "Public and private investment in 1950" and "The supply of building materials outlook for 1950", I may say that these publications have been in the printers' hands for some weeks now and I sincerely hope that I can put them in the hands of hon. members when the house re-assembles after the Easter recess. In the field of building materials, the situation will be better for 1950 than for past years. The only possible shortage might be in lumber for which an active export demand is bringing about prices higher than those of last year. But somehow or other we hope to have sufficient lumber for the requirements of the year 1950, and we think that other supplies will be in more adequate supply than in recent years, by reason of expansion of production capacity.

In making the predictions for 1950, I am of course assuming that Canadians will show at least the same initiative, enterprise and self-reliance as have the citizens of some other countries which are less fortunately endowed than we are. Up to this time we have had wonderful co-operation and a wonderful effort from both labour and management. I think we have a right to assume that the same condition will prevail during the year 1950 and that there will be the same absence of interruptions through labour disputes that we enjoyed in the year 1949.

Before sitting down, I may perhaps mention impressions gathered during a trip to Europe this spring. I should say at once that the trip was a holiday trip. My wife and I felt we needed a holiday and we decided to take one together for the first time that has been possible since 1939. The reason we went to the continent of Europe was that I was anxious to get the atmosphere of the continent and a firsthand view of conditions there. For the benefit of the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser), who seems to worry about such things, I should say first that all the expenses of the trip were paid by the Howe family and not by the public treasury. For that reason I have not felt it necessary to make any particular report.

I had several purposes in mind in looking about the continent. The first one was, as I say, to get the atmosphere of the present situation. Then I was anxious to call on Canada's customers. That used to be a good way of selling; and it seemed to me that a personal acquaintance with my opposite numbers in some of the European countries would be helpful. Then I wanted to discuss with members of governments over there the trade possibilities for the future and to make sure that we were not leaving any avenues unexplored. I wanted to talk with the great trading organizations that make their headquarters in Europe. They were customers of mine in the past before I entered public life, and it seemed to me that from their far-flung trading experience they would have a fair idea of the trading possibilities in every country in the world. Therefore I called on companies like Dreyfuss, Bunge, Continental and two or three other great trading companies and had talks with their officers. I also spent two or three days with the Marshall plan organization in Paris. I spent some time with Mr. Harriman and his assistant, Milton Katz, in going over the ECA program and discussing the improvements taking place in the countries that are receiving aid from ECA. I also discussed an organization that is less well known here, the organization for European economic co-operation. I found that I had underestimated the improvement that is taking place in ECA countries. It was evident on talking with responsible leaders in each country, and it was still more evident after going over the situation with Mr. Harriman and Mr. Katz in Paris. There is no doubt that Europe is making progress toward free convertibility of exchanges. A program to that end is advancing towards completion. An ingenious program has been worked out with reference to balance of international payments problems and an aggressive leader, in the person of Dr. Stikker of Holland, has been placed at the head of the program. I had a talk with him at The Hague, as a result of which I look for an early return of convertibility of currencies within Europe.

Mr. Coldwell: In Europe?

Mr. Howe: In Europe, yes. With that program is coupled the lowering of trade barriers and removal of restrictions.

Mr. Green: Does that include the pound?

Mr. Howe: It is hoped that it will include the pound. The British treasury is not fully in agreement, but would seem to be coming into line. The program is hardly workable without the pound. The objective is a program that will make the pound and European currencies freely convertible. You might take the offhand view that this will mean a European bloc, and that trade with America will be influenced adversely. I do not agree with that view. I put that hypothesis before the officials in Paris and it seemed to me that their answers were satisfactory. They seem to have provided safeguards against inflation, and for preventing that market getting out of balance with our own market. It seemed to me that they had satisfactory answers to the questions that I asked in that regard; and I came away convinced that such an arrangement is a logical first step toward the return of convertibility of currencies throughout the world.

I found that the countries I visited were becoming less dependent on Marshall aid, and more and more tending in the direction of the return of trade to private enterprise. In Belgium wheat and coarse grains are about the only commodities that are now handled by state agencies. In Italy and France more commodities are being handled by state agencies, but the list of those commodities is being cut down from time to time. There is a return in Europe to private trading, which I think is most favourable to Canadian trade. We in Canada find it easier to do business with private traders, who are concerned only with price and quality, than we do with governments that have other factors in mind.

I found the people in all four countries that I visited were working hard. That was particularly noticeable in driving about the country districts. Every square inch of land was being cultivated. Those who were working the land seemed to be cheerful and happy. Food was plentiful. There were no food restrictions in the countries that I visited. There was plenty of food at reasonable prices. Each of the countries had a population problem. The growth of population has outstripped the productive capacity of the soil. That fact is a worry in all of these countries. Wherever I went I met a discussion of the possibilities of immigration to Canada. We in North America, with plenty of land, are bound to give serious attention to that problem.

Mr. Green: Did the minister find that in the United Kingdom, too?

Mr. Howe: I did not visit the United Kingdom. On the day I left Canada an election date was fixed in the United Kingdom. On the day I left Europe the results of the election were known. I thought perhaps the timing was unfavourable for a visit from a Canadian cabinet minister. I had wanted to go to England, but I cancelled that visit.

The threat of communist domination, which was very evident and very serious during my visit in 1947, seems to have been reduced to manageable proportions. There are still large numbers of communists in France and Italy, but they are clearly in the minority. The dividing line has been drawn, and, assuming that the productiveness in those countries can be kept up, provided there is no shortage of food, I think the fear of communist domination in the four countries that I visited was much less than during my visit in 1947. I came back from that earlier visit feeling that there was a possibility that communism would sweep western Europe, as it has swept eastern Europe. I came back this time with a very strong feeling that that would not happen.

I must say that I never had a more enjoyable holiday. My wife and I combined a good rest with most enjoyable contacts with old and new friends in Europe. I hope that I may be privileged to repeat the holiday under similar circumstances before many years go by.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all hon. members have listened for the past hour with intense interest to the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Those of us who have spent some years in the house have come to know him as a great optimist. He certainly has been optimistic about Canada's future, at least for the next year. I am quite sure that every hon. member, irrespective of where he sits, hopes that that optimism will be fully realized, and even more.

The minister spoke on the matter of trade and economics and said that they could not very well be separated. I am sure we agree on that point. He spoke on the lack of convertibility of foreign exchange. That is one of the very great problems of this nation today. There is not much argument about that. He dealt at some length with our trade with the United States, and said that it was greater than that of any other two countries in the world. I accept the statement he made. He said that 50 per cent of our exports were to the United States, and 70 per cent of our imports were from that country, and that our adverse trade balance increased from $400 million in 1948 to some $600 million in 1949. He also pointed out that the manufacturers in Canada found it easier to sell in the United States of America than in Europe.

I am sure that most of us are very much concerned about the United States market. The minister also said that there was no trouble in selling Canada's wheat crop. That will also interest very many of us. May I add that the great nation to the south of us produces many of the same types of surpluses that we in Canada do. Especially is that true of agricultural production. Therefore we do have, as the minister said, very many of the same problems, in the matter of looking after foreign markets.

He also said that, as a barometer of agricultural prosperity in this country, farm implement sales had increased fivefold in the past year. They had increased from about $52 million to $230 million. I am sure that anybody who knows our farmers, particularly our western farmers, knows that they are great spenders. If you give them the money they will see that there is prosperity, and money moving in this country. That has been their tradition in Canada up to date.

The minister might have added that the cost of farm implements had increased 12 per cent in Canada during the past year. The estimated requirements of farm implements in Canada in the coming year, which the minister has been so optimistic about, are still over $200 million, and farm implements are still increasing in price. Of the Canadian farm implements 95 per cent are manufactured in eastern Canada. I know we cannot discuss in detail one factor which is going to enter very effectively into the rising cost, namely, freight rates. Increases have taken place in freight rates, and arguments are going on now. That will add considerably to the cost of farm implements. Of the estimated requirements for 1950, 60 per cent of the implements are required in the prairie provinces. Therefore we shall have quite an added cost over last year on these important commodities. That in itself is quite an item.

Our farmers, even sometimes when they have not the wherewithal to purchase these implements, are great buyers. They do try to keep up to date in modern equipment in so far as possible, and they should.

The Canadian people, despite all of this optimism, have a bit of fear about the future. I hope that that fear will not be realized. Some of us have it today. The Canadian people are now realizing that our trade is slipping, to some extent. In 1949 our over-all external trade dropped by about $87 million. In the first two months of this year indications are that our over-all trade was $22 million down, and our trade with the commonwealth $45 million down. I know I cannot discuss this, but measures have been proposed in this house to try to bring about a trade conference, which I think would be all to the good for our primary products. But the government defeated the proposal.

During the past year we have been very fortunate in that the Marshall aid of the United States—and the minister made some reference to that plan—has helped us. Money was supplied to the extent of several hundred million dollars by the United States, especially in order that Canadian wheat could be supplied to the United Kingdom. Had this all been done otherwise, our trade position with the United Kingdom would have been very different from that set out by the minister.

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Wheat could be delivered to them, involving several hundred millions of dollars of Marshall aid money.

Mr. Howe: Marshall aid money was applied to Canadian wheat; but we would have sold our wheat, whether it had been or not. Marshall aid money for wheat did not help Canada particularly. It did help Great Britain's dollar balance with other countries. The dollar balance with Canada was taken care of in other ways, without Marshall aid.

Mr. Graydon: It didn't do you any harm.

Mr. Ross (Souris): No, it did not do the minister's position any harm at all. That plan was made available to Great Britain to take much of our production, and much more wheat than anything else. That is what happened.

Canada is—and we will all agree, including the minister—a great exporting country. Our prosperity certainly depends upon export markets abroad. I pointed out that while we are deeply interested in United States markets, yet the United States and Canada produce many of the same type of surpluses. Therefore we both have to look abroad for trade.

I have here the December 10 issue of Foreign Trade, a most interesting journal put out by the minister's department. On the first page I find an article which, because of its interest, I shall read into the record. It deals not only with the export but with the domestic situation, and says:

> A reduction in Canadian export volume from the peak year of the war did not reflect corresponding reductions in production. It was due in part to increased domestic consumption. The Canadian agricultural economy, at the present time, was producing at a level that met the effective demand, and in some commodities tended to exceed it. But, the effective demand was restricted by monetary difficulties and trade restrictions, rather than lack of hunger, when the dollar supply was taken into consideration.
>
> "The importance of agricultural exports in our economy places Canada in a unique position," the minister declared. "Products of farm origin, while below wartime levels, still represent a substantial part of total exports, and of these wheat alone accounts for about 15 per cent. Canadian farmers, therefore, are still vitally concerned with world markets and are fearful lest monetary difficulties and other trade obstructions deny them entry to their natural market, which is the market of Great Britain. We are the nearest of all countries which supplied them in wartime. We still want to supply them until their needs are satisfied. If we did that, we would not have any marketing problem in those products which they required from us during the war.
>
> "During recent years, as much as 44 per cent of our farm production has entered export trade. To take wheat again, as an example, about 75 per cent of our production has been sold abroad. Thus, in relation to some other exporting countries, Canada has an economy which is particularly dependent upon exports; both from the point of view of the volume and the consequent reaction of Canadian prices to changes in world prices.
>
> "We welcomed the statement of the United States representative that they are anxious to put part of the area now in grain back into grass. The economy of Canada would benefit by that being done at an early date. It is essential for us to export 75 per cent of our wheat. Unless our exports can be maintained, we cannot continue to purchase large quantities of goods from the United States and the United Kingdom. We should purchase from other countries, including those two, such goods as they can produce at lower costs than they can be produced in Canada.

On that point, I think there should be more co-operation between the departments of our own federal government. It was pointed out during the discussion of the estimates of one department, which amounted to $420 million, that the purchase of one hundred F-86A aircraft had been recommended. I am not technically qualified on the subject, but that recommendation had been made. True enough, they were to be produced from a plant in Canada, financed to some extent by American capital. It was pointed out however that the Vampire machine, which has features which make it preferable, could be purchased from the United Kingdom for one-third of the amount asked for the F-86A.

I am not going to discuss the details, but if that suggestion is correct, then we see here where a saving could have been made, and our relations with the United Kingdom fostered, so that our trade might be helped in the matter of disposing of our own agricultural production. I am citing only that one example, but I do suggest there should be closer co-operation between departments of government in making purchases, so as to create a better export trade market.

Apparently there are different points of view held by different ministers of the federal government concerning the methods which should be followed. We heard the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) state that, while he was not speaking for the government, he was setting forth a plan for barter deals to boost Canada's trade, and to sell Canada's food and other primary surplus production in the non-dollar area. That is a plan which certainly should be given some consideration. He said it was his personal view, and it was evident that there is a great difference of opinion within the government on such matters. But even the fact of a minister of the government giving it serious consideration is of importance.

Many of our manufacturing and assembly people in Canada enjoy far greater protection under the federal government today than they have had at any time in the history of Canada. This comes about because of controls, taxation and the like. Many large industries now enjoy greater protection, as a result of federal government plans, than they have ever enjoyed. This has an important effect, because it all enters into the cost of production of the primary producer, and into the cost of living with which the consumers are faced.

When discussing another matter on March 27, I set out a list of figures, and they may be found at page 1168 of Hansard. At that time I was quoting from the Winnipeg Free Press of March 20, in which had been set out a list of articles, many of them very important not only to the farm producers but to the people generally throughout the nation. These figures dealt with an automobile which cost 20 per cent more in Winnipeg than in Minneapolis. Then there was an article which appeared on March 21 that dealt with many electrical fixtures, some of which cost as much as 40 per cent more in Winnipeg than they did in Minneapolis, despite the fact that both these cities are centrally located in the neighbouring countries, and are about the same distance from the great manufacturing areas.

In my view that great difference should not exist, in view of the degree of co-operation we profess to have with the nation to the south of us. As I said, I do not believe there was ever a time since confederation when certain of these industries had greater protection than they have today. Controls, taxes and embargoes applied by the government have added to the cost of agricultural products, and to the cost of living in this nation.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce is discussing his estimates I would ask him to explain why this situation should continue during these times. I also placed on Hansard some figures having to do with raw products —livestock and other such commodities— sold on the same date by agricultural producers at Winnipeg and, in the United States, at Minneapolis and St. Paul. Those figures may be found at page 801 of Hansard.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

It is a strange fact that in practically all of these instances the United States farmer received a great deal more for his raw product than did the Canadian farmer; yet when he came to buy a processed article, in most cases it could be bought cheaper in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg. Surely that situation requires some explanation to the consumer. It is a condition which should not be allowed to exist at this time, particularly in view of the measure of co-operation which we are told exists between these two great nations. I would ask the minister to give the committee some explanation as to why a situation of that kind does exist, because it is a matter of some importance.

The point is made, in the article from the minister's department to which I have referred, that it is essential to the economy of Canada that we export 75 per cent of our wheat. It is essential not only for the people who produce that wheat but, as indicated by economists, in the Sirois report of the 30's the production of wealth in the form of wheat and other grains has more to do with saving our economic system in Canada than anything else. There is not only the production of wheat, there is its transportation, financing, storage and the many other ramifications of this industry during the year after the crop is grown and delivered to the elevator. It is most important to the economy of this country as well as to those who produce the grain itself.

It is realized by many people that the powers of the Canadian wheat board expire on July 31, 1950. At the opening of this session I asked if the policy with regard to the handling and disposal of the 1950 wheat crop would be made known before the Easter recess so that our farmers would have that information before seeding time. The minister has stated that floor prices for oats and barley will be announced before seeding time, and I now ask him to state whether an initial payment will be made for the 1950 wheat crop which commences on August 1, 1950, in order that those who are going to seed may be given some guidance. I think that is most important.

While I am talking about the Canadian wheat board may I say that I think everybody in the house knows where I stand about it. I have always favoured the Canadian wheat board, and I am sure that with the feeling of this house in general it will be continued. I do not know what powers will be granted to it or anything of that nature, but, as I say, with the feeling of the house I am sure the board will be continued. I hope that a policy in this regard will be announced as soon as possible.

Mr. Howe: It will be announced next week.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The initial price of wheat?

Mr. Howe: It will be announced on Wednesday.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I thank the minister because I know the western farmer will appreciate very much having that information. I am glad to have that assurance from the minister. There is another matter about which I am greatly disappointed. On many occasions the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) has asked if an interim payment is to be made on wheat and coarse grains, especially to those people in the drought areas of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and some in Manitoba. The minister has stated that taking everything into consideration it cannot be made until the year is finally ended. I am sorry that that is the decision because I know that the hon. member for Lake Centre especially has been interested in this. It would have been most helpful to many farmers in the drought areas.

There are some matters of a local nature I should like to deal with at this time as I may not be here when the minister's estimates are being considered. One has to do with the Saskatoon elevator. As reported on page 989 and 990 of Hansard of March 21, I asked a question as to what grains were stored in this elevator during 1949. According to the answer given it has cost somebody, if not the Canadian taxpayer, approximately $6.56½ per bushel on the average for that year. The monthly average of grain stored was under 12,000 bushels and the cost of administration was $78,787.92. The original cost of this government-owned elevator was $1,632,068.66, the elevator having a storage capacity of 5,500,000 bushels. I have had a question on the order paper since March 21 asking for a further break-down of the types of cereals, seeds or other commodities stored here; who were the owners and what amount of charges was assessed to the owners. As I have pointed out, it apparently cost $6.56½ per bushel to cover administration costs of this government-owned elevator according to what was stored there during the calendar year.

When we were dealing with the minister's supplementary estimates we passed an item of just under $4 million to cover the deficit of the Canadian wheat board on flax purchased in 1948. Despite the fact that the minister said at that time that they were not concerned about storage problems, that they were concerned only with sales, it would appear that they did have a storage problem on their hands. I would imagine that some of this may have been stored through 1949 from 1948. If those charges have been added somewhere else, they would have to be added to the figures I have used. If this flax had been stored in Saskatoon it would have been available to processing plants throughout western Canada. I hope the minister will explain this matter in more detail when the proper item is before us.

The Minister of Agriculture is reported as having stated in a speech at Saskatoon to the Saskatoon rural municipal convention that a campaign would be launched if necessary to prevent oleomargarine manufacturers producing to the extent that it would threaten the 400,000 Canadian dairy farmers. In my opinion the Department of Trade and Commerce are responsible to some extent for this situation through the importation of cheap oil. I believe that 95 per cent of these oils come from countries outside Canada, some with very low standards of living. In some of these countries the people do not have to wear clothing and their standard of living is vastly inferior to that of the people in Canada.

Only a few days ago we were told of cheap Japanese shirts coming into this country and very prompt action was taken to protect the manufacturers of shirts. I submit that this matter is equally serious. I am quite sure that this importation affects our dollar position with the United States and I should like to know from the Minister of Trade and Commerce what he and his department are going to do in connection with the campaign spoken of by the Minister of Agriculture as intending to protect the welfare of Canadian dairy farmers.

Many agricultural matters are closely related to trade and commerce and at times our farmers find it difficult to know what department is responsible. In connection with many matters of agricultural production the Department of Trade and Commerce is responsible. The Department of Agriculture has to do with the sales of agricultural commodities apart from wheat, while wheat and coarse grains are dealt with by the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is some overlapping between the two departments.

I hope that the minister will be able to give a lead to our dairy farmers because, as I pointed out when we were discussing other matters, many of these matters go hand in hand. West of the great lakes we are not in dairying to a great extent, but there are a number of dairy herds there. Notwithstanding the fact that the price of butter has been guaranteed, I know personally that many owners of herds are thinking seriously of disposing of their herds because they fear that oleomargarine is going to put them out of business. It is the responsibility of this government to give these people a lead as to whether they should retain their herds and continue in dairy production or go out of business. I should like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to follow up what the Minister of Agriculture said on this matter because I am sure these people would appreciate a lead on this.

There are other matters that concern the manufacturers and processors of this country but there are colleagues of mine better able than I to deal with these. I am interested in the primary producers' point of view because, as I have often pointed out in this house, the basic industry of almost all nations, and certainly of Canada, is agriculture. The prosperity of agriculture has a definite influence on the prosperity of all Canadians, no matter what their vocation or calling may be. That is very important, and should not be overlooked. As I say, I know that others more conversant with the manufacturing and processing of these articles will have a great deal to say and many questions to ask the minister. I want to thank him for stating that he will announce these initial prices next Tuesday, to give a lead to our farmers.

Mr. Howe: I think I said Wednesday.

Mr. Ross (Souris): In any case it will be before we adjourn for the Easter recess?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I appreciate that very much on behalf of the hundreds of thousands of producers who will be vitally interested. I hope the minister will explain, even if I am not here, the great loss caused to the public treasury by the operation of the government elevator at Saskatoon, as well as the storage charges for flax in respect to the carry-over from 1948 to 1949 at the head of the lakes.

Mr. Argue: I was glad to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce state that on Wednesday of next week he will announce the initial prices for wheat, oats and barley for the coming year. I asked a question in that regard some time ago, and I am happy to learn that this announcement is to be made.

While I agree with everything the hon. member for Souris has said about the wheat board, I did not notice whether he said—he might have omitted it inadvertently—that he would support the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for wheat during the coming year. As far as I am concerned I support the idea of having the wheat board handle all the farmers' wheat, oats, barley and other grains.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

I hope the minister will find it possible to announce an initial price for wheat not less than the prevailing initial price of $1.75 per bushel. Further, I hope he will be able to announce a further five-year pool period, and that the present initial price will prevail throughout. Should the minister announce an initial price for wheat of not less than $1.75 per bushel, basis Fort William, as I hope he will, I suggest that the initial prices for oats and barley should be increased. If the initial price for wheat is $1.75, certainly the initial prices of 90 cents for barley and 61½ cents for oats are altogether too low. As a rough rule I believe barley should net the farmer two-thirds of the price he receives for wheat at his local elevator, and that the price of oats should be half the price of wheat. The minister will know the exact figures that would bring about that kind of relationship, but I would say that barley should be in the neighbourhood of $1.20 a bushel and oats about 90 cents, basis No. 1 feed Fort William.

I very much enjoyed listening to the minister this afternoon. He did not seem quite as optimistic as on other occasions in the past. During the first part of his speech in particular, he did give a more balanced picture of many of the factors entering into our export trade. I am glad he had the opportunity of making his trip to Europe; I was happy to hear his report this afternoon, and I am pleased to see him looking so hale and hearty after his journey. I hope Canada's trade in 1950 will be as good as it was in 1949, if not better. I do not want to make any dark predictions as to what will be our trade position. I believe the minister was wise in not attempting to emphasize the disturbing factors too much, because if he had done so he might have caused some panic in this country. At the same time, as far as Canada is concerned, I feel there is a growing pattern of trade that has some dangers in it. We are now, to an ever-increasing extent, tying both our export and import trade to that of the United States; and when we do that, prosperity or otherwise in Canada depends very largely upon conditions prevailing in the United States at any given time. This afternoon the minister stated that early last summer there was a recession in the United States. A recurrence of recession there could have very serious implications as far as Canada is concerned. Many of the things we produce have to compete with commodities produced in the United States; and while I would hope that trade throughout the world will be expanded, I would hope still more that we might see an expansion of trade with Europe, because I believe the policies being followed by many of those governments would be more likely to bring continuing high levels of trade and prosperity to Canada than we would achieve by tying our trade as we are more and more to that of the United States.

The minister went on to state that he expected exports to the United Kingdom from Canada this year to be down. He also said that the shortage of dollars is causing many European countries to adopt restrictive trade practices. He further stated that perhaps Canada would be able to come through the present period of readjustment with only a few scars. I believe that statement is correct. I only hope that the sections of Canada that get the scars will not be those sections that have always gotten the scars in the past, when any readjustment was taking place. I refer in particular to the industry of agriculture. While our export trade with Europe may be good on balance, nevertheless certain sections of agriculture have suffered and are suffering because of a falling off in the European market. The other evening the Minister of Finance stated, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said today, that while our markets in Europe for grain have continued at a high level, there has been a drop in the markets for animal products, timber and certain other commodities.

In the world as we have it today I do not believe we should have to worry about agricultural surpluses. I noticed what the minister said in reference to European countries whose populations were increasing, and his statement that they would have a continuing and growing problem of feeding those populations. Then he went on to say that this presented an immigration problem to Canada. I agree with that statement; and I believe that a country as wealthy as Canada should accept its responsibilities in the world. But I do not believe that immigration to Canada by people from European countries is necessarily the whole or the main solution. When we have certain agricultural surpluses in Canada, and when the United States has huge agricultural surpluses, those surpluses should be made available to the European countries. That would remove some of the pressure against European food resources.

The minister quoted figures to show that Canada's trade position with the United Kingdom over the whole of 1949 was better to the extent of an increase of $20 million in exports. He also made note of the fact that Canadian exports to European countries declined by about $90 million. I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce took a more realistic attitude this afternoon than that taken by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech last fall. In referring to devaluation during that speech the Minister of Finance said at page 974 of Hansard of October 20, 1949:

> It was agreed that the solution must be sought primarily in a rapid and substantial increase in dollar earnings through an expansion of trade.

The simple facts presented by the minister this afternoon show that, in the last few months since devaluation, there has been no increase in Canadian dollars earned by European countries. As a matter of fact, if I may quote what I said in the budget debate last fall, I feel I came a lot closer than the Minister of Finance to hitting the mark. My remarks are found on page 1335 of Hansard of November 1, 1949:

> I contend that devaluation, instead of bringing about an expansion of trade, will in fact bring about a contraction in trade. A 30 per cent devaluation of the pound sterling in relation to United States dollars means an increased price of 44 per cent to the British consumer of goods bought in the United States. That is certainly going to mean a substantial reduction of British purchases of United States goods. The same thing will be true to a slightly lesser extent in British purchases of Canadian goods.
>
> Then with respect to the British attempt to increase exports to this continent, Great Britain following devaluation can reduce by 30 per cent the price of her exports to the United States. But should Great Britain, for example, reduce the export price of British automobiles to the United States by 30 per cent, then she must increase the quantity exported to the United States by 43 per cent in order to obtain the same number of dollars that she has been receiving before devaluation. It is certainly doubtful to what extent Great Britain can increase her earnings of United States and Canadian dollars by reduction of price, since following reduction in price she must increase the quantity sold to earn even the same number of dollars as she earned heretofore.
>
> Rather, I believe the chief result of devaluation will be a further loss of the British market.

In the budget address the other night, the Minister of Finance told us that in the last four months there had been a decline in our exports to the United Kingdom by an amount of $20 million, and our imports from the United Kingdom were down by $3 million. Our overseas exports as a whole, however, were down by more than $100 million in the first four months; and our overseas imports by $92 million. In my opinion devaluation, instead of bringing about a better balance of trade, made it worse and has substantially reduced our exports to European markets. It has not increased the amount of dollars earned by European countries. I trust the government will take all necessary steps to increase our imports from European countries. I hope our exports to the United Kingdom will not fall during the coming year, as was forecast by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Our exports to the United Kingdom and other European countries should be maintained, and if we want them maintained then we need to increase our purchases of British goods. I hope the government will place greater emphasis on increasing our imports of British goods, rather than allowing the adjustment to come about through a reduction of our exports.

This afternoon the minister said there would be a battle for agricultural markets in the future. I believe that statement is correct. Our farmers are willing to help in that battle for the British market and other European markets. Our farmers purchased $255 million worth of farm machinery this past year, and they would be most willing to buy increased quantities of British machinery if by so doing they were guaranteed a market in Britain for bacon, eggs, cheese and other agricultural commodities. While the government has so far turned its back on the idea of a bilateral trade agreement, nevertheless I feel that such a trade agreement, by means of which farm machinery could be exchanged for farm products at present in surplus, would receive the wholehearted support of organized agriculture.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that the Marshall plan was not as large an item now in support of trade as it was in the past, but I suggest that the importance of Marshall plan aid should not be minimized. It could be important in getting a market for Canadian agricultural products, but if used the wrong way it could be a factor in taking from us the markets that we now have. It has been suggested by the foreign affairs committee of the United States house of representatives that of the $2,750 million to be voted this year for Marshall aid, $1 billion should be earmarked for the purchase of United States agricultural surpluses. If such a move were made, then Marshall plan dollars would make our market problem much greater than it is today. In order to try to insulate us from this sort of policy that might arise from time to time, and over which we have no control, I feel that the government, through an export-import board, should be increasing its role in international trade. Then, if the United States decided to do something like that, we would have a much safer hold on our markets than we have at present.

I noticed the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the prospects for marketing wheat and other grains in Europe were good for this year. I hope he is right. I should like to quote to him, however, the first paragraph of the Canadian wheat board report for the year ending July 31, 1949. It says:

> Increased production of wheat in Europe, ample wheat supplies available in exporting countries, the intensity of United States competition, the immediate effects of United States aid to various countries in western Europe and increasing difficulties in financing international trade, were important factors in the 1948-49 wheat position.

Along with that, I should like to point out to the minister that today the United States has a surplus of more than 475 million bushels of wheat. Then, I might ask him why the Minister of Agriculture suggested that western farmers reduce their wheat acreage by 3 million acres, if the markets for wheat and other grains are available, while the markets for secondary agricultural products are falling? Either the advice of the Minister of Agriculture was not sound or else the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce today, that our wheat market is assured, does not jibe with the actual prospects. I do not think there can be a reconciliation between the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture that wheat acreage should be reduced and the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that wheat and grain markets are secure.

We in this group supported the British wheat agreement. We also supported the international wheat agreement and we trust that it will work throughout the whole period which is for the next three years. We know that under the British wheat agreement we obtained a large share of the British market. But when we did that, we sacrificed some of the markets we had once had in countries on the European continent. For example, France in 1936 imported from Canada 6,250,000 bushels of wheat and last year did not import any Canadian wheat. Belgium, in 1936, imported 16 million bushels of wheat from Canada and last year imported just over 5 million bushels. Denmark, in 1936, imported from Canada almost 5 million bushels of wheat and last year imported only 4,567 bushels from Canada. The Netherlands, in 1936, imported over 7 million bushels from Canada and last year imported less than half a million bushels. We are going to have to maintain a market in Britain for the present quantity of wheat that is going to Britain, namely, 140 million bushels a year; or, if we are relegated in the British market to our 1930 position, then it is imperative that action be taken towards securing for Canada a better position in the European markets. The fact is that today Canada is supplying little of the wheat going to those traditional markets.

When I began my remarks I said that I hoped the Minister of Trade and Commerce would say that oats, barley and wheat at least, and preferably all grains, would be handled solely by the wheat board. As I have said before, the wheat pool organizations and the farm organizations in western Canada are not satisfied with the government's oats and barley policy in its entirety. They are glad that the wheat board accepts delivery of all oats and barley produced in western Canada but, as was shown by the Saskatchewan wheat pool in convention last fall, they are opposed to the speculative market being continued in the disposition of oats and barley.

I noticed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day, in announcing that there would be no wheat board payment this year—that is, before the end of the wheat pool period—said that one of the contributing factors was the stand taken by the opposition. I believe that is dodging the real reason why a payment is not being made. In my opinion, the real reason why a payment is not being made is that the wheat board has not large sums of money on hand with which to make a payment. A further factor is that farmers object strenuously to the wheat board's going to the banks and paying on money borrowed from the banks an interest rate five times as high as the rate earned by the wheat board on money it invests in Dominion of Canada treasury bills.

What I objected to in a previous speech was the fact that, before the 1948 wheat payment was made, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that "the payment is being made out of money now available in the wheat board fund." The Minister of Agriculture went further and said that the farmers would not want the government to borrow money in order to make a payment over and above the 20 cents a bushel. Then, during the same debate, the Minister of Agriculture made the statement that 20 cents a bushel would be provided for a further year. I should like to quote what the Minister of Agriculture said, as reported at page 1720 of Hansard of February 27, 1948:

> Under the plan of five-year payments that was brought into effect in 1945 the farmer knows that if there is drought he will have more money coming to him at an increase of twenty cents in each year, no matter when that drought comes.

I say that was a clear indication by the Minister of Agriculture that there would be a further large payment made this year and this spring. There has been no worse crop failure situation in western Canada for a long time than that which prevailed during last fall. The farmers need an additional payment now much more than they needed it at certain times in the past. I might say that I have had a great deal of correspondence from farmers as to the wheat payment, or the fact that there will be no wheat payment, and the method by which the government went about making that payment. In that respect I should like to quote a letter I received from Mr. Ed. McBride, secretary of the wheat pool committee at Viceroy, Saskatchewan. In writing to me he said:

> The farmers at Viceroy are very much disturbed by the rumours from Ottawa regarding our final payment from the wheat board.
>
> When the 20-cent a bushel payment was made a year ago, we didn't hear anything of a bank loan being made to help make it. In fact, we were told there was still a large surplus left after the payment was made.
>
> During last summer and fall different experts estimated the probable amount of the final wheat board payment to farmers at from 17½ cents to as high as 26 cents a bushel. Now they are saying we will only get a few cents a bushel.

I believe the government should be strongly criticized for having raided the wheat board fund in order to make a 20-cent additional payment just before an election, without telling the farmers that by doing so the wheat board would have to go substantially into debt. I would ask the minister, as I have already done, to continue the wheat price at not less than $1.75 per bushel and to increase barley prices to $1.20 per bushel and oats to 90 cents per bushel. I trust that the minister's optimistic forecasts will be proven right. I hope we may obtain markets during the coming year at least as great as those we obtained during the past year; but I hope that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government will adopt policies to increase our imports from European countries and that any adjustment that is finally necessary in our trading pattern will be brought about in such a way as not to bring scars to the agricultural industry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think that during this session this house has heard a more important announcement than that made today by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. After all, the whole prosperity of this country depends on whether or not our trade will be preserved during the months and years that lie ahead. The striking thing is that, while the minister spoke on so important a subject, few, if any, of his colleagues in the cabinet found it of sufficient importance to be in the house. I was particularly surprised at the fact, for which no doubt there is a very good reason, that the Minister of Agriculture was not present on this occasion, particularly when the discussion that will take place will necessarily be concerned to a considerable extent with the marketing of agricultural products. Wheat and its marketing are of very great importance not only to the farmers of western Canada but also to our economy as a whole.

First, I want to refer to a matter about which I asked some questions this afternoon. The hon. member for Assiniboia mentioned the situation in the prairie provinces. According to a report of the Department of Agriculture the drought situation in 1949 was the most serious in a period of eleven years of western Canada's history. If there is one thing more than another that has been emphasized by the western farmer in recent months it has been the need of having an interim payment made of the moneys in the hands of the wheat pool operated by the wheat board of this country.

It has been alleged that some members of the opposition criticized the payment last spring of 20 cents a bushel. I heard no such criticism from the official opposition, but the fact is that the payment was timed to be made in advance of the election. When it was made was there no suggestion that the money was being dispersed in a considerable measure from moneys borrowed by the wheat board?

When the Minister of Agriculture spoke in Moose Jaw in April, 1949, he advised the farmers that there was an additional amount to their credit of from 12 cents to 15 cents a bushel at that time. That statement could scarcely have been correct, for now we find that in order to make the payment the wheat board had to borrow moneys and did not have to the credit of the farmer at that time 33 cents to 35 cents, or even 20 cents, the amount advanced.

Mr. Howe: Is there not a difference between cash in the till and the actual credit position of the pool?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The statement—

Mr. Howe: There is the working capital item. The wheat board has to borrow its working capital.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the position. It was said that the money was available in the pool, and not that the pool had the credit and would be able to secure that much money.

Mr. Howe: Not the cash.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At that time the minister said that the wheat board had on hand in addition to the 20-cent advance from 12 cents to 15 cents a bushel to the credit of the farmer, which is a long way from saying that it would have to borrow in order to meet the situation.

Mr. Howe: He did not say that we had it in cash.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, he did not say, "we have it in cash". He said, "we have it available". Certainly when it is in credit it is not available, according to the interpretation placed on those words by the farmers in western Canada.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Howe: If the pool had stopped doing business that day it would have been available.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the farmer was told it was there. The farmer was not told that the 20 cents was borrowed, or any part of it, in order to make the payment in advance of an election.

Mr. Howe: It was not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was borrowed—

Mr. Wright: The consolidated revenue fund is available at that rate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What the farmers cannot understand is why that money had to be borrowed to make the payment for the amount the farmer will ultimately secure will be reduced by the very large amount paid out in interest.

Mr. Wright: To help in the election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Chairman, the fact that it was paid out just in advance of the election was, as you and I know, merely coincidental.

Mr. Knowles: The chairman may know it, but you know better.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am making another appeal to the minister in connection with an interim payment. I know he has made a decision on the matter and the wheat board have; but if he could see the letters hon. members from western Canada receive regarding this matter he would reconsider it in respect of the areas that were stricken with drought last year. The areas are readily identifiable. If payment could be made in those areas in advance of seeding operations it would indeed be appreciated by tens of thousands of farmers who find themselves in a position where they are unable to get credit. I again make that appeal, as I have over the past several weeks, that the minister reconsider it. I could give the minister, if he would care to read them, at least a hundred letters which have come in within the last week from farmers, particularly of central and southern Saskatchewan, who because of drought conditions last year doubt their ability to purchase their requirements and seed their land again in the next three or four weeks in the hope and expectation of a crop. I do not make this request as a general appeal for all of the western provinces, but for those areas where there was an almost complete failure in 1949.

There is one other matter that I should like to bring to the minister's attention. I asked a question today in connection with feed oats. After I had asked the question I received a letter from a dairy farmer who points out that on March 27 he endeavoured to buy No. 1 feed oats, and he had to pay 93 cents a bushel for them.

Mr. Howe: From what point was this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: At Qu'Appelle, near Regina. He said, "the price has been fixed by the wheat board." He points out that the farmer received 50 cents a bushel, and that there is a further 10 cents a bushel coming from the wheat board, according to the figures given to the house some weeks ago by the minister. What the farmers out there want to know is this. What about that extra amount of 33 cents a bushel? Who receives that? They also ask the federal government to protect them against having to pay a price per bushel 33 cents more than the farmer will receive from the wheat board for No. 1 feed oats that he has sold to them.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps my hon. friend would not mind my clearing up that point. It is quite legal for a farmer at Qu'Appelle to buy from any other farmer at Qu'Appelle. The price of oats at Qu'Appelle is the Fort William price less freight, and the Fort William price is—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ninety cents.

Mr. Howe: Not for oats; it is 61½ cents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Howe: It is 61½ cents, less freight, which will bring it to about 50 cents at Qu'Appelle. Unless he had the oats railed back from Fort William I cannot imagine how he got the price up to 90 cents. It does not make sense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly it. I cannot understand it, and neither can the minister. After I asked the question before the orders of the day this afternoon I received a letter from another farmer pointing out the unfairness to the dairy farmers in Saskatchewan in having to pay a price of 93 cents for No. 1 feed oats.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps my hon. friend can clear it up by writing back and asking who the vendor was.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can give the name of the vendor, but I shall not do so in the committee. It is one of the elevator companies.

Mr. Howe: I cannot believe an elevator company at that point—

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a matter which the minister should look into. I have given the facts, and I can give him the letter. I say it is unjust that a price such as that should be charged for feed oats to western farmers.

Mr. Wright: The western farmer is charged the Winnipeg price—not the floor price of the wheat board. He is charged the Winnipeg price plus whatever handling charges there are. Oats are selling away over the floor. The Winnipeg price today is about 90 cents, and the farmer has to pay 90 cents plus elevator charges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And that seems most unfair.

Mr. Howe: He could buy from any other farmer. The farmer in that area would sell to the elevator company or to the dairy at the same price.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what the farmer cannot do—buy from some other farmer—because it is a drought area. And it is because of that fact that I ask the minister to look into the matter. It is unfair that a farmer in a drought area should be required to pay so high a price in order to secure the necessary quantity of feed oats.

Today the minister drew an optimistic trade picture. By a movement of his head he now suggests that he did not. Well, I would not say it was a pessimistic picture; I thought it was optimistic, even for the minister.

So far as agriculture is concerned, I ask the minister whether the government has considered placing the marketing of all farm products under the Department of Trade and Commerce. It used to be there. It was until the present Minister of Agriculture became minister in 1936, as I recall. Now we have two bodies—the Department of Trade and Commerce looking for markets for wheat, and the Department of Agriculture looking for markets for other agricultural products.

Is there any reason why we should have two different departments of government looking for markets for agricultural products? Would it not be reasonable to have the Department of Agriculture look after production, the improvement of production, and all other matters relative to agriculture, and have marketing under one department, the Department of Trade and Commerce?

I now turn to our trade with Great Britain. As I listened to the minister I was impressed by the fact that he did not deal with what apparently is taking place, a world on a bilateral agreement spree, with multilateral trade receiving very little consideration. The result of bilateral agreements, and particularly those entered into by Great Britain, has been to threaten and diminish our trade.

When this matter was discussed last April the attitude then taken by the minister was that there were no danger signals to our trade and that our markets in Britain would not become less. He left about the middle of April, after making that statement, and went over to Great Britain. Yet upon arrival there he stated that one of his purposes in being there was to look into the trade situation.

I have taken the time to peruse some of the bilateral agreements Britain has made in recent months, bilateral agreements in which she is purchasing in continental countries agricultural and other products the market for which one would expect Canada to have. The minister himself, speaking on the radio network, in "The Nation's Business" series on November 20, 1947, used these words:

> Britain has been the traditional market for our wheat and certain other food products, and we must not let down our best customer.

She has for years been our best customer. I shall now ask one or two questions with a view to ascertaining whether anything can be done, even now, to bring Britain to a realization of the fact that she has been our natural market, and that we desire to co-operate with her. We cannot expect to export unless we are prepared to purchase in return.

I do not think the customs branch of the Department of National Revenue is doing as much as it should to co-operate in allowing Canadians to import into Canada the things Britain produces and which we in this country do not produce in sufficient supply. I have an example of this in mind and I shall give the minister the name of the company privately although for obvious reasons I do not wish to give it in committee. It is an example which, to my way of thinking, indicates that there is not that degree of co-operation that there should be between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Revenue.

I suggest that everything should be done to assure Britain that we are prepared to purchase from her some of the things which are not readily available in our own country. May I digress here to refer to the trend to bilateral trading by Great Britain.

On December 15 Britain signed a bilateral trade agreement with Sweden involving about $400 million in trade. Under that agreement Sweden supplied Britain with timber, newsprint, wood, pulp, wooden articles, iron ore and the like, in return for machinery, textiles, vehicles and increased quantities of coal, coke, steel and oil.

A few days later the effect upon Canada was shown when a shipment of 100,000 tons of newsprint to Britain in 1950 was cancelled. Canada is in short supply of heavy machinery and capital equipment. What is being done to channel Britain's heavy machinery into Canada? On December 17 Britain entered into a four-year agreement with Holland for up to 152 million pounds of bacon per year, and the result is a greatly expanded hog industry in Holland, based upon the prospects of a long-term market in the United Kingdom.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

On December 23 the United Kingdom signed a five-year meat contract at increased prices with Uruguay involving up to 100,000 tons annually, including pork and offals formerly purchased from Canada.

On December 27 Britain signed a five-year trade agreement with Yugoslavia of an estimated two-way trade value of $682 million, Britain to receive timber, lead, copper, corn and the like, in return for exports of wool, cotton yarns, chemicals, and a wide variety of heavy machinery and other capital equipment.

And so I could go on. Our apple market is gone. The minister spoke rather disparagingly of it this afternoon; but it is gone, and Italy now supplies the United Kingdom. Bilateralism is increasing. It denies the realization of the many hopeful speeches that were made in 1940, 1945 and 1946 of a world freed of trade barriers.

I shall be asked where the Department of National Revenue comes into this. A large Canadian company required replacements for certain heavy machinery in the form of special steel forgings that were made in the United States, in the Pittsburgh area, and in Coventry, England. Those were the only two places that they were available as far as I know. The company officers decided to purchase these parts in Great Britain in order to provide that country with additional Canadian dollars, but before making the switch they asked for a ruling by the Department of National Revenue as to whether there would be any duty on imports from the United Kingdom. They wanted to know if these items would be free when brought in from England as they had been when bought in the United States. After some time they received the reply that a thirty-five per cent duty would now be applied on the items for all further purchases, whether purchased in the United States or in Great Britain.

That is not the kind of co-operation between departments that will build up a two-way trade between Canada and Great Britain. I suggest that something be done to remove such difficulties, which are tantamount to obstructions. The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of February 1, 1950, carried another example under the heading: "Importer believes customs red tape worse barrier to imports than duty." The article reads:

> Red tape in customs administration was a worse barrier to imports from other countries than the actual duty paid on imported goods, a local importer said this morning.

He refers to the difficulty of disentangling the multiplicity of rulings made.

If we are going to encourage trade between Great Britain and Canada, if Canada is to be assured agricultural markets in the United Kingdom, we should do everything we can to encourage purchases of heavy machinery and the like in Great Britain. It is not a simple problem, and the minister, with all his experience, will certainly be the first to agree. I do feel that if the demoralizing influence of bilateral trade is continued and we build up in this world three blocs and two ideologies, the hope of peace dreamed of in San Francisco in 1945 will indeed evaporate.

I repeat there should be more co-operation between the minister's department and the Department of National Revenue to encourage the purchase of British goods in Canada. A few months ago our Canadian National Railways were unable to operate because of a shortage of coal. I am not saying that British coal could be used for the operation of our locomotives, but it could have taken the place of coal that was used for that purpose.

Mr. Howe: We buy every pound of coal that we can get in England.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what was said by a British member recently who stated that there was no reason why Great Britain could not supply us with a million tons a year.

Mr. Howe: For three years we have been begging for coal from Britain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just quoting what a Labour member said in the British House of Commons when dealing with this question.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps he is as careless with his facts as our Labour members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a private feud and I am not going to get into it. As one who is looking at this problem in the general way that a person of my training would, I would ask the minister what has been done about canvassing the manufacturers in Canada in order to find out what they can buy in Great Britain.

Mr. Howe: We have been over it with a fine-tooth comb.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have not been told about it then. I should like the minister to tell the house and the country whether our import defence requirements are being purchased in the United Kingdom to the greatest extent possible. I have read a number of articles published in the United States, one recently in an outstanding journal, to the effect that Canada is not purchasing her defence requirements in the United Kingdom to the extent she should.

We sent delegations to Colombo. According to a recent issue of the New York Times there is a market in India and Indonesia that can be developed. Will the minister say what is being done in that regard? I have read in the British Hansard that the British board of trade is doing everything it can to build up trade there, not only for the present but for the future as well. The delegations went over there and they returned without letting us know what had been done about exploring the possibilities of trade in India and Indonesia. I would ask, too, to what degree have the recommendations and suggestions as to trade which were made recently by the Minister of Fisheries been considered and accepted by the cabinet?

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Maybank for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the motion of Mr. MacDougall: "That this question be now put."

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks on this bill tonight I should like to re-emphasize that there has been on my part—and having followed this debate closely I think I can say with accuracy that there has been on the part of others who have spoken in opposition to this and the other bill—no suggestion that we are opposed to the eventual export of gas and oil to the United States. All we have asked for, and what we are still asking for, is that before our gas and oil goes to the United States market the line transporting it should pass through Canadian territory and serve Canadian industries and cities along its maximum length before crossing the border into the United States. Indeed, we have been careful to make it clear that there is no suggestion that we should attempt to curtail the export of these resources to the United States after Canadian needs have been met.

I refer to this because I noticed a report in the Vancouver Daily Province of Saturday, March 25, appearing at page 3, commenting on some remarks made by myself and other hon. members during this debate. That report contains this passage:

Mr. Fulton said he would not oppose the bills if the government saw fit to amend the original Pipe

Lines Act in such a way that Canadian oil could not be exported into the U.S.

He had received representations from various segments of industry in his constituency, including chambers of commerce, appealing to him to see that the oil and gas did not leave this country.

I said no such thing on the occasion referred to. I made no suggestion that the main act should be amended in the way suggested in the newspaper report. What I said, and what I repeat, was that as far as I was concerned if the government would see fit to amend the main pipe-line act so that any company seeking incorporation to build an oil or gas pipe line must build it for its maximum length through Canada first, before it crossed the border, I would not oppose the incorporation of any company that wished to obtain a charter to build a line under those terms. The position has been made so clear by those of us who have spoken in opposition to these two bills—that what we are seeking to do is serve Canada first but not serve Canada only, and not deny the export of gas to the United States—that I cannot understand how any report in the press could become so confused. As a matter of fact what I said on the occasion referred to was that if the government would amend the original act in the way I suggested, quoting Hansard at page 1109:

—we would be content to grant incorporation to as many companies as wish to build the line through Canada first.

That cannot be taken in any way as a suggestion that we should deny the ultimate export of these resources to the United States, after our own needs have been met.

In conclusion I want to refer to a little history which I think will be of interest to the house, and which I know will be of interest to my colleagues from British Columbia, though in this case they may not agree with the opinions expressed. In the course of my reading during this debate I went back to the debates at the time of the incorporation and construction of the Canadian Pacific railway, in order to see what was said then as to the need for building this great line through Canada to serve Canada first and build up a nation north of the 49th parallel. I found this very interesting remark in a speech delivered by Sir Charles Tupper in 1882. I am going to read it so that hon. members may see why I feel it to be so important that this pipe line go through our own territory. As I say, other hon. members may not altogether agree with the sentiments expressed; in fact I think Sir Charles was a little off in some of his geography, though not in his sentiments. He was off in his geography, of course, because he did not have the advantage which is available now to all hon. members of visiting our province and, in particular, my district. Referring to the proposal that the Canadian Pacific railway should go through the Kicking Horse pass and down through what we call the interior of British Columbia, he said:

This is a matter which would be of great importance not only to the line but to the country, because it would penetrate the best district in British Columbia, that is the Kamloops district—

There is an unsolicited testimonial that was delivered in 1882. With the support of so great an authority as Sir Charles Tupper, one of the founders of confederation, I think hon. members will see why I am so anxious, together with all my colleagues from British Columbia on this side of the house and one on the other side, that this line should be built through British Columbia, through Canada first.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay hon. members long, but I have something to say that has not been said as yet. The other day I heard the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) made a good speech; that is, it was good for the opposition. He was trying to convince the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) that it would be a good thing for the country if he were to appoint a committee of this house. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is a good thing for the national defence of this country to have a committee, it is a good thing for the development of our natural resources to have a committee. We have a committee and, Mr. Speaker, I think it is an intelligent committee, worthy of being trusted. Any man who stands up in this house and says that we should not trust that committee is asking us not to trust him. Some of these men who do not want the resources of Alberta to be developed are saying, "Do not trust me because I shall sell you down the river."

When I look over this committee, I find the name of the member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). I think he is worthy of being trusted. I trust him with the development of the natural resources of this country. Then, there is the member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy); a high-school teacher, and an intelligent man. Yet he is asking this house not to trust the committee of which he is a member. The member for Queens (Mr. McLure) is another member of the committee. I think he is an intelligent man, and worthy of being trusted; a good committee man. I believe we can trust this committee to do this work. If there was ever a time in the history of this house when I believe the government would be justified in forcing closure, it is now.

The people in the country are asking this question. They are asking what is behind this opposition to the pipe line. I know there is gas behind it, and there is oil; and so far as I can see the gas will not be sold without the oil, because the province of Alberta is wise enough, according to the member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), not to remove the pressure of the gas and thus lose the oil. As I have said, this committee should be trusted, but I expect that even after I have spoken there will be a lot of people who will say we should develop the natural resources of this country for Canada; we should save them for future generations. To them I would say, why ship wheat to England? Why not turn the wheat into flour in Canada, and ship the flour?

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the best thing to do is to develop the natural resources of our country. We should have the gas and oil from our country meet the gas and oil from the south, so that the people who are asking for this gas and oil can have it. I say, send this bill along; develop the natural resources of our country, and cure any unemployment we have.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor). At times I feel he is almost my representative, because I am responsible for a large industry in his riding. I have been surprised that he has not been struggling to give us Alberta oil in place of United States coal to help support that industry. That is a matter of his judgment, however, or lack of judgment; I know he is sincere in his conviction, so I do not want to be too critical of him.

While I represent a district somewhat removed from the particular district in which the most direct benefits will accrue from the utilization of that great resource in Alberta, I feel that it is rather encouraging to find so many people in this house interested in this oil in Alberta. No similar number of people in the world enjoy the bountiful resources that we do in Canada. I do feel that there is probably only one real issue at stake. I have listened to those who are familiar with the problem this issue presents, and I find there is only one real contention. It seems to be whether this pipe line is going to be built through Canada first, or is going through the United States first. There is no use in talking about technicalities, or this commission or that commission, or what the provinces have to do. This line can be built through Canada first if this house so wishes.

This is a private bill, but it is rather interesting to note the keen concern and support the government has given it. I know there are members of the government, who are absent tonight, who have not been very active in the debate. I know there is one hon. member from British Columbia who has taken an active part in the debate. I feel that the members from the other provinces are here to form a national representation. After all, this is the forum that represents this great nation. I feel rather keenly that we are dealing with an issue that can mean a great deal in the years that lie ahead. The trend of our development in this country, Mr. Speaker, is interlocked with the great possibilities that surround this issue. While I am still not perhaps as old as the oldest member in the house, in the last quarter century I have seen great changes in the trend of the development of this young nation. I can recall when any man aspiring to parliament would speak of agriculture as the basic industry of Canada; the backbone of the country.

I well recall saying, on one occasion back in 1927, that at some time we might find it difficult to sell our wheat. Some of the members from western Canada laughed at me and said, "You do not know much about western Canada's ability to produce; you will never see wheat below a dollar a bushel. We will always be an agricultural country. We control the bread basket of the world." Since that time, Mr. Speaker, as you have observed, that trend has changed far more rapidly than our fathers ever dreamed it would change. Today we have a country, perhaps showing the effects of two great wars, that has been industrialized until now rural activities make up only about 30 per cent of our national enterprise. Canada has rapidly become an industrial country. Canada is a cold country, Mr. Speaker. Its climate is different from that of the southern states, and many other places. More than anything else, Canada needs food and clothing. If this country is to have a well-rounded economy, it must encourage the production of those things essential to a high standard of living. As every hon. member knows, there is nothing much more important to the women and children of poor families across this dominion than warm clothing and a warm house. Fuel, in other words, is a problem in many districts. We in this country have for years depended on many million dollars' worth of United States coal. We have been importing large amounts of it. We know that today there is no fuel on the North American continent that can compete with natural gas. That fact has been proven across the line. We know that with high wages, with coal being shipped for long distances, and with freight rates increasing, the price of coal is ever on the advance.

We know that if we are going to develop this country in competition with that great republic to the south of us, we must do as it has done. While we will listen to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and other people make statements about the great development or the great markets we have in the United States, with which we all agree, nevertheless, we are similar to the United States in many respects. We produce similar agricultural products and similar industrial products and we are more or less in competition with them.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that in the province of Ontario where we have had the greatest industrial development has been where we have had the power, where we have had hydroelectric developments and where we have had coal, just as old England and other countries overseas in the last century developed great industrial progress and led the world in industry because they had the horsepower and the fuel. They had the steam-generating plants and what drove them and made the country great. Therefore not only is this great potential resource important but it is vital to this young dominion for household needs, for providing the horsepower requirements of the industrial plants, and for commerce in general. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that coal to heat a house costs twice as much money as natural gas. We might look across the border to the south of us and take a lesson from there, because no matter how much experience you may have had or how you have watched this country grow, if you want to foresee the future of Canada you can see it better in the light of what has developed just across the border.

It is said that the nineteenth century belonged to the United States. That great leader of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier—I think he was the greatest they have ever had; I have not seen any since that ever came up to him—said that the nineteenth century was the United States' but the twentieth century would be Canada's. There is no one worthy of being in this house who cannot visualize that greatness in the future and who cannot realize what is happening.

I can well remember that, when I first entered the House of Commons, our annual budgets were under $400 million. Now they are $2,400 million. Our national income now is $16 billion; the difference is greater perhaps in high inflationary dollars than in physical volume, but nevertheless it shows the trend of the times.

We have a small population but, in fairness, it must be admitted that we are making great progress with that small population. While the United States of America has since before the war had an increase in population which is more than our total population, nevertheless, percentagewise, we are keeping reasonable pace with them. Because of our great resources, the power and the potential reserves such as Alberta gas and oil, even the weaknesses of the present government cannot deter great progress in this country. We have a great country, and a virile and hardy people; and I am satisfied that this country will grow, as has the United States of America, even though parts of it are a little bit colder than parts of the United States.

The United States' experience has shown that the most rapid-growing and spectacular industry on the North American continent at the present time, is the gas and oil industry. We have other great industries but the one that has been most dramatic, the most rapid in development, and the one that is now most spectacular in its relationship to our North American economy is the gas and oil industry. I cite here North American development because, after all, we are very similar. We are closely allied in relationship to the United States of America. We live beside the United States. Although there is that invisible line that separates us, we are tied together in customs, in trade and in national defence; we are tide together in outlook and in aspirations. I can see that, in the future, that close relationship with that great republic and with the British commonwealth of nations offers the greatest hope for security and peace. By the very fact that the people in the United States are annually investing about $1 billion in their gas and oil development they have shown that they realize what it means. The volume of gas and oil transported by the United States pipe lines from the far south into the more thickly populated areas has increased; from 1940 to 1948 it doubled. There is a $3 billion plan now under way in the next five years, and it is estimated that in the next three years it will be double that. There is a country that has great experience in development; it is the greatest industrial country in the world; and it developed with resources and people similar to those we have in this country.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Gas and oil.

Mr. Rowe: Gas and oil. At the present time a 2,000-mile gas line is being built from Texas into the New York section. The domestic sales of gas to householders in the United States now amount to a billion dollars a year. Householders to the number of 15 million are served by gas. Gas is being used even in those areas close beside great potential deposits of coal that we are importing here into Canada. Much of what is involved in this issue is national energy and power; it is not only a question of fuel but of power for industry. Today the United States of America, with its gas lines, provides to householders as well as to industry, through gas pipe lines, almost three times as much power as it does through all its vast water powers. Realizing what our great hydro developments have meant to the old province of Ontario, I can visualize in years to come what the gas pipe lines and the oil development of the western provinces of Canada may mean to them in the next twenty-five years.

We are challenged here, Mr. Speaker, as representatives of this dominion, to pause and realize whether we should divert these lines and send this great potential natural power over to the United States before it serves our Canadian people. I know that someone may say that is not exactly the issue, that they can build the line wherever they like, and that all we need to settle this whole argument is for those of the government who seem to be so interested in this private bill to tell us that this line is going to be built in Canada first, to serve Canadians first and then serve the people of the United States later, just as the United States would do if the positions were reversed. Forty-nine per cent or almost half of all the national energy and power for the industries of that vast country to the south of us is obtained from oil and gas and only four per cent is hydroelectric power or water power.

The question therefore has been considered to be an issue in that country. The fact that in the last twelve years twelve times as much money has been spent in the development of these transcontinental gas lines in the United States is indicative of the possibilities for the future. There are the United States Pipe Lines, Panhandle Eastern Pipe Lines, New York and Richmond Pipe Lines, Transcontinental Gas Transmission Pipe Lines Incorporated, Texas Eastern Pipe Lines and Tennessee Pipe Lines and many others. For instance, the Transcontinental lines alone in the United States spent $191 million before they had a dollar of revenue. The soundest investment houses in the United States, the Boston Mutual, the Metropolitan Life and the leading financiers of the United States, grabbed these securities and gave them bonds at good rates because they saw the possibilities of cheaper heat and power. Surely we in Canada, Mr. Speaker, should realize what it could mean to this country when the great republic to the south of us is piping gas almost two thousand miles; and they are ready to back that investment privately and otherwise. I ask, Mr. Speaker, should we not pause? I ask the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), does he criticize us now for pausing to discuss whether we are going to send Alberta oil over to the United States first? Are we going to let Alberta oil mean more to the United States than it does to Alberta or British Columbia? That is all we want to know. Personally I am glad to see that there are several companies ready to build pipe lines. We shall have no trouble getting the gas transported. There will be no trouble to get these lines built.

As the hon. member has just said, it does not matter how many lines you may approve. We are not opposing the building of a pipe line. I have no axe to grind, Mr. Speaker. I do not know the personalities in either case, but I feel that I would be derelict in my responsibilities as a member of this house if I did not do everything in my power to see that these lines were developed east and west rather than north and south to start with. I am satisfied that there are greater possibilities in western Canada than many people have yet dreamed of.

In many parts of the United States the domestic requirements are now beyond the supply. Utility companies are asking the governing bodies to restrict the use of gas for domestic purposes, because they cannot build the pipe lines as rapidly as needed to serve the people who want the gas from down in the far south. Gas is an exhausting resource. I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the future population of this country is not 15 million but 50 million. I have every confidence that in another 25 years, with the progress that you have observed in the last quarter of a century, you will see in Canada the greatest development going on in any place in the world. I am sure that western Canada will be a great industrial centre. It is bound to be. That development will not come by chance. That development will not come by saying that all is well. That development will not come by saying that, if the opposition will keep quiet and not face the dangers of the future, all will be well and we shall be prosperous. You know, Mr. Speaker, that development will come where there are great resources. People live where they can sustain a high standard of living. People seek employment where there are great resources and possibilities. History has shown that there is no greater factor in the development of any country than the possibilities of power. In the old days it was coal; then it was hydroelectric power; and now we are in the oil and gas age. The fact is that the United States of America is now leaning more towards that, and it shows the possibilities that we have in the years that lie ahead.

Natural gas costs little more than one-half manufactured gas. As I have said, the recent development of Alberta gas and oil is, to my mind, the most spectacular single feature of hope in our rapidly changing Canadian economy. I do believe that there is a tendency to feel more or less inferior to the United States of America. I take second place to no one in this house in my admiration for the great advancement of the republic to the south of us, the great market for many of our products. When the United States is prosperous, as it is at the present time, Canada, with about only one-tenth of the population, with similar customs, is bound to be prosperous.

I do feel—and I believe it has been the policy of the party to which I belong—that Canadian resources should be developed first for the benefit of Canadian people. I know that some of my hon. friends across the way used to be free traders. Now they are not just sure what they are. I know there are those on the front benches across the way who will say we must look north and south. I know that their grandfathers stood for commercial union with the United States as far back as 1885. I know that some of our grandfathers feared we might be annexed to the United States. One extreme is perhaps as bad as the other. But I am satisfied now that even those who believed in free trade a few years ago, and believed in building north and south and in supporting the United States and keeping us, as has so often been said, hewers of wood and drawers of water, in this advanced age do not want to be diggers of gas and oil for the benefit of developing the great western state of Washington ahead of British Columbia or Alberta. All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to look at the map of the United States of America. If you look at the map you will see that the pipe lines are built up from Texas into New York, and into all that great industrial area where about 60 per cent of United States industry is situated. If you will look at that map you will see that that is where the pipe lines are going at the present time. There are not many pipe lines over in the state of Washington. Not long ago I noticed a United States writer said that that would be the next state developed in the United States. Since we have found a great bonanza of gas and oil in the province of Alberta, if they can get the pipe line down through the United States they will develop Washington as they have indicated.

I want to see Washington developed, Mr. Speaker, but I prefer to see Alberta and British Columbia developed first before we take our resources over to develop the United States of America. That is not an unfriendly attitude. Someone said here the other evening in a rather reckless tone, "No truck or trade with the United States of America." It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that many hon. members on the other side of the house have heard nothing about our Conservative policies except a few catch phrases such as "no truck or trade with the United States", or "brick for brick."

Mr. Abbott: There is not much else.

Mr. Rowe: No? I will tell you one or two things about your party's policy before I am through. I well remember the hon. Mr. Dunning, an ex-minister of finance. It was not "brick for brick" with the United States of America. He said, "We will have a countervailing duty. Every time they put on a duty in Washington we will put on one here." In other words, Washington would fix the duties for Canada. There has been a great change of heart. You are no longer a free trade party. There are more protectionists, subsidizers and bonusers on the other side of the house than there are on this side. You are no longer free traders. You may criticize us for "no truck or trade with the United States." But the United States is just as friendly to a virile policy to develop Canada first as it is to any wishy-washy policy that does not know where it is going. I know that you talk about trade.

Mr. Hodgson: A twenty-five per cent austerity program.

Mr. Rowe: When you talk about trade, Mr. Speaker, we shall have bountiful resources of gas and oil for the United States of America. We have sold them a lot here, and we have sold them a lot before. Oh yes, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) smiles.

Mr. Abbott: Where do you sell your product?

Mr. Rowe: And it doesn't hurt your department, either.

Mr. Abbott: Not a bit, no.

An hon. Member: Manufactured in Canada first.

Mr. Rowe: We sell our product in the United States, yes, but we do not sell it in crude form, and we pay substantial amounts of money into the treasury of Canada. I am also proud of the fact that we give employment to 2,500 heads of families.

I want to see a pipe line developed in western Canada that will send gas and oil over to Kamloops. I want to see a gas line to Kamloops, and down through the central part of British Columbia, and then down and across into Vancouver. And then, if you wish to go down farther—there may be plenty of it left—pipe it down to Seattle and those other places.

I do not agree with the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor). I would like to see it in Fort William as well. That little company to which the Minister of Finance has referred spends a million dollars each year for American coal. I would rather spend a million dollars each year for Alberta gas and oil.

Mr. Howe: What about Alberta coal? What about this "Canada first?"

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You can't get it there, and you know it.

Mr. Abbott: A little higher price, then.

Mr. Howe: It is different when it comes home.

Mr. Rowe: This afternoon—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): When you learn something about coal, I will talk.

Mr. Rowe: The minister does not disturb me a bit. This afternoon he said he could not use it on the railroads, but tonight he wants me to use it. He does not disturb me a bit by that remark, because I read his speech in Montreal, and I heard him make a few months ago or a year ago just as wild a statement as he made before when he said that the future of this country depends upon trade north and south.

Mr. Howe: Who said that?

Mr. Rowe: You did, in Montreal—and so did your friend, the Minister of Finance. The policy of the Liberal party for the last half century has been to develop trade north and south rather than east and west. The policy of this party, down through the years, whether there have been few of us here or not—and I am not discouraged because there are only forty or so of us here: I would rather be here with forty who are serious and concerned than here in smug complacency with 180.

I tell you, I see a future for Canada. Some may be surprised when I say that, having been here as long as anyone, I am not a bit discouraged, because I am satisfied that we shall have a sound period of development, and that Canada will become what our forefathers thought it would be. I am satisfied that when we have sound leadership the tide will turn, when the goose is not hanging quite so high as you men have it at the present time. We shall be over there and you will be over here.

I say that because the government of today cannot laugh this off as they have laughed other things off. Someone will say—indeed I wonder someone has not said it, because I have heard it half a dozen times in the last while—that you won the last election.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): A hundred times.

Mr. Rowe: You won the last election, true. But remember—

Mr. Abbott: And the one before that, too.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, and the one before that. Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. I can see this government wobbling under its own power, and complacently sitting by.

The other evening, in answer to a question, the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not sure whether or not the pipe lines were going to be built in Canada. He did not seem to care whether they were or not. He did not mind their being built in Canada, if it was practical and economical to do so. I do not think he would rather build them in the United States than in Canada.

Mr. Howe: Thank you.

Mr. Rowe: You're welcome. I don't want to charge you for anything.

Mr. Abbott: You are going well.

Mr. Howe: Don't stop.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you. If it amuses you and interests the rest, then I figure I am doing something. But I sometimes wonder what is behind all this. Why all this secrecy? I am glad I am getting some of your followers interested. I always feel I am making headway when the backbenchers are asking questions, and when the Minister of Finance is laughing.

An hon. Member: You talk on nothing.

Mr. Rowe: You talk all the time on nothing. Someone has said "If it is practical we will support it; if it is economical we will support it." Economical to whom?—to Canadians, or to Americans? Practical?—yes, it is 350 miles shorter.

An hon. Member: What about cost?

Mr. Rowe: Over here I hear the question, "What about cost?" Maybe it will cost more.

An hon. Member: What is a million or two.

Mr. Rowe: Oh yes; it was only a few years ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, "What is a hundred million?"

Mr. Abbott: Coming up!

Mr. Rowe: One of the most eminent authorities on the building of pipe lines on the North American continent is the firm of Ford, Bacon and Davis, Incorporated, of New York, and they say that this is completely practicable and absolutely economical in all respects —that is, by the Canadian route.

Someone suggests it might cost more. Yes, it might. The United States of America is spending billions of dollars a year to bring gas pipe lines to their householders to reduce their cost of living and improve their standard of living. If you have a pipe line that will serve for twenty years, with a right of renewal, is it not economical and is it not of interest to the Canadian people?

I am convinced this route should be built in Canada; and I know as well as every other hon. member within sound of my voice that it will be built in Canada if the government of Canada wants it built in Canada. You can pass it on to the railway commission, you can pass it on to the provincial government of Alberta—you can pass it on to whom you wish; but if this line to Kamloops and through the central part of British Columbia and the northwest part of the Peace river district is neglected, the onus is on the government of Canada.

Mr. Howe: Why does it have to go through Kamloops?

Mr. Rowe: You understand why you won't take it through there.

Mr. Howe: Is it on account of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton)?

Mr. Rowe: Would you rather have it a hundred miles south in the United States?

Mr. Howe: You wouldn't mind five or six miles, would you?

Mr. Rowe: All you have to do is look at the map. I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he would rather have it a hundred miles south, in the United States, through the American west, a hundred miles back up to Vancouver—and make Vancouver the back door of Washington state.

Mr. Howe: Who is going to do that?

Mr. Rowe: He laughs best who laughs last. I say that if this route is built through the United States first it will be a monumental blemish on the present government for the next twenty-five years.

An hon. Member: Will they still be here?

Mr. Rowe: Someone says they will still be here. That is some of their smug complacency. They do nothing; it does not matter, so long as it does not happen to them.

Mr. Abbott: It all depends on the opposition.

Mr. Rowe: There is something to be said for stability; there is something to be said for a permanent policy of using our own resources. From an aviation point of view Edmonton is almost the centre of the world.

An hon. Member: Were you ever there?

An hon. Member: The Americans did it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It will be the biggest airport in the world.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. Rowe: I have been there quite often. I guess I have been in as many other parts of Canada as the hon. member. I may not have learned as fast as some, but I have seized on a few things.

Mr. Winters: You are a smart boy.

Mr. Rowe: You are a smart boy yourself. You are one of the young fellows who learned faster than I did.

Mr. Kickham: Tell us about the thirties.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad the hon. member can remember back that far. He was not here, but I know that he was thinking about something else altogether. Look at the great industrial development in this country both in time of war and in time of peace. If we ever got into a conflict with another country—I am not going to say what country it might be—if we ever got into a conflict with another powerful country, Alberta and British Columbia might be in the heart of things. Would it not be a good thing to have a pipe line down through the centre of British Columbia to serve those people in a time like that? Have you no hope for British Columbia industrial development? Have you no hope for the development of the northeasterly and Peace river sections?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Who looked after us in the last war?

Mr. Rowe: We are all in favour of having the closest association with the United States of America, but we can be a strong ally of that country only by keeping ourselves strong. Our own protection depends upon our own strength. Our own standard of living depends upon our own industrial production. Our industrial production depends upon our own strength. Our own strength depends upon our future freedom. Our future freedom depends upon whether we are going to—

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I rise on a question of privilege as I come from the Peace river district. I come the longest distance of any hon. member to this house.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Is parliament to be thwarted by a little wilful group of men—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): —who deliberately—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad the hon. member has come so far because he must be impressed when a group the size of this can dominate a group the size of that. It is worth coming that far to see.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Rowe: I was watching the clock and I thought I had a couple of minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe can continue only with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Is parliament to be reduced to being an annex of the stock exchange?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has spoken already in this debate. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Sinnott: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): There is a very grave—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member speaking on a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I am asking whether parliament can be frustrated and held—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has stated his question of privilege. I might also point out that the hon. member has spoken in this debate and I am afraid the rules prevent his speaking a second time.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I listened to a debate of this type at the last session and for part of this session and possibly I have been enlightened. I think perhaps some hon. members will be surprised when I state that my views are similar to those held by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe).

An hon. Member: The first convert.

Mr. Sinnott: I hold in my hand a pamphlet put out by the Westcoast Transmission Company which I believe is the only company that has come out for an all-Canadian route. I do not think this parliament is concerned about how many pipe lines are built so long as the applications provide for all-Canadian routes. While pipe-making facilities in Canada at the present time may not be able to meet all requirements, I think Canada has shown during the war that we can manufacture just as well as they can in the United States. If it is decided that a line is to go over an all-Canadian route I am sure we can find the material to construct such a pipe line in Canada.

On motion of Mr. Sinnott the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for private and public bills has expired and the house will revert to government notices of motion.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER ANNUAL REPORT AND REVIEW POLICIES OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue) moved:

That a select committee be appointed on radio broadcasting to consider the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and to review the policies and aims of the corporation and its regulations, revenues, expenditures and development, with power to examine and inquire into the matters and things herein referred to and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, and to send for persons, papers and records;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary;

That the committee have power to meet while the house is sitting;

That the committee shall consist of the following members: Messrs. Balcer, Boisvert, Cote (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville), Decore, Diefenbaker, Fleming, Fulton, Gauthier (Portneuf), Gauthier (Sudbury), Hansell, Henry, Isnor, Kent, Knight, Langlois (Gaspe), Maybank, McCann, Murray (Cariboo), Richard (Ottawa East), Robinson, Riley, Smith (Moose Mountain), Smith (Calgary West), Stewart (Winnipeg North), and Whitman;

That the presence of at least nine members shall be a quorum of the said committee; and

That standing orders 64 and 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some brief remarks on this resolution to set up a select committee on radio broadcasting. Since the national radio system was started in 1932 different governments have thought it appropriate that committees of the house should be appointed from time to time to study the activities of the system and to consider general broadcasting questions. Through the years different committees have formulated principles upon which broadcasting in Canada is based. They have also made a number of important recommendations which have been carried out following their reports.

We believe it is a good thing to have committees on broadcasting such as that proposed in this resolution. Broadcasting is different from most other public activities. Parliament long ago decided that broadcasting should be entrusted to a public corporation having a wide degree of independence of the executive government. There were two important reasons for this: first, that broadcasting, which is quite different from ordinary government administration, should be carried on by a corporation able to follow many of the methods of private enterprise in its work and having the necessary flexibility in its operations; second, that broadcasting, carrying as it does much information and opinion, should be run by an independent and impartial body which would be free from any question of partisan influence.

Under the Canadian Broadcasting Act the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not answerable to me or the government for its actions in carrying on its broadcasting operations, and the government is not responsible for the actions of the corporation in carrying on its broadcasting under the act. The corporation is of course responsible to the overall jurisdiction of parliament. In effect it reports directly to parliament as a whole. That is why it is particularly appropriate that a committee of this house composed of members of all parties should examine the activities of the corporation.

The government does support the principle of a strong, national, publicly-owned broadcasting system independent of any possible partisan influence, flexible in its structure and in its methods. This is a principle agreed upon by all major political parties in the past, and we believe approved by the vast majority of Canadian citizens. The corporation itself is independently responsible for its daily actions in carrying out its trust. It seems fitting, therefore, that a committee of parliament should examine the reports of the activities and plans of the corporation, and get information and explanations which it wishes directly from its officers.

Under the broadcasting act the government has a responsibility for approving large capital commitments by the corporation. Since the war we have approved the establishment of facilities to extend or improve the services to the people of Canada in different areas. We have also provided loans for other purposes. These developments have been all moves toward the kind of national coverage which was always envisaged for this particular system. New transmitters in Alberta, Manitoba, southern Ontario and the Saguenay district went into operation in 1948. Last year a new medium power station was added on Cape Breton island, which it is hoped to improve in the future. This year a new 10 kilowatt station will go into operation near Windsor to bring national service for the first time to the people of southwestern Ontario. The power of station CBM, serving English-language listeners in the province of Quebec, will also be raised to 50 kilowatts, and the power of CBR, Vancouver, will go up to 10 kilowatts. These power increases will improve the service to listeners, particularly in parts of these regions away from the larger cities. They will also protect for Canada the classification of the frequencies under international agreement. I want to stress that point, because it is very important.

On the union of Newfoundland with Canada we made provision for the CBC to take over the facilities of the broadcasting corporation of Newfoundland, and to incorporate them into the national system of Canada. Line connections between the two systems previously had not existed; but by strenuous efforts of engineers of the Canadian National Telegraphs, the Department of Transport, the CBC and other co-operating authorities, a permanent connection was established just in time for the day of union which, as we heard in this house, was exactly one year ago this midnight. I think the house will agree that this was an important development for the greater Canada. The first day of the new confederation last year people in Ottawa and all parts of Canada were able to hear the ceremony at St. John's, and listeners in Newfoundland as well as other parts of the country heard the ceremony on parliament hill. Since then listeners in Newfoundland have been able to hear much of the same broadcasting that goes out to other Canadians, and listeners in other regions have been able to hear voices and reports on the air directly from that new province. Probably no single Newfoundlander, any more than any other listener, likes all the network programs he can hear, but I think the national radio system has helped and can still help much further in promoting mutual knowledge and understanding between the new province and the other regions of Canada.

The committee will have before it the annual report of the corporation. The report speaks bluntly of the basic financial position of the system, and of the danger of having to reduce services severely unless the revenue basis is changed. The fundamental difficulty seems to arise from the fact that because of the general increase in price levels during the last twelve years cost rates to the corporation have risen greatly, while at the same time its main revenue rates have remained unchanged. The corporation faces a number of demands from different parts of the country for new or improved services. It reports that it will not be able to meet these demands, and will in fact have to cut its services drastically unless its revenue basis is changed. The committee will undoubtedly wish to examine the finances of the corporation. It may wish to consider questions of present expenditures and revenues. It may wish to consider the basic situation of the corporation looking to the years ahead, though it may wish to leave basic financial questions until the report of the royal commission now sitting under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. Vincent Massey is received.

The royal commission is making an extensive study of broadcasting questions. It has held hearings now at many points in nine provinces. I understand that it will have a further series of hearings in Ottawa in April which, with a following visit to Newfoundland, will likely complete its public sittings. I understand we may expect the report in a few months; and I believe this report will be of great value in view of the wide study made by the commission not only of the national system but of other broadcasting activities and of a large number of submissions from the public. This committee may decide to deal with some broadcasting matters which appear of immediate concern, and to leave others for consideration after the report of the royal commission has been made.

Television is one very important aspect of broadcasting that is being studied by the royal commission. In this house a year ago I gave a statement of the interim policy of the government in respect to television pending the report of the royal commission. We thought the time had come to begin the development of television in Canada, and we thought that at the beginning a foundation should be laid to provide for a basic service of Canadian television in the national interest, using Canadian talent and Canadian ideas, and with provision for participation by private enterprise. To this end the policy provided for permission to the C.B.C. to establish production centres in Montreal and Toronto, with associated transmitters, and for the first financing for such development. These centres would be set up to supply a certain service of programs to other stations which might be established in other areas. In view of the high costs of television we suggested that any private groups interested in any area should join their resources to try to provide the best possible operation. So far no such applications have been made. The C.B.C. is going ahead with the production centres in Montreal and Toronto.

No doubt the royal commission will have recommendations to make on the further development of television. The committee may wish to consider present plans. I hope that, in any study of television questions, full consideration will be given to the national needs and interests of Canada as a nation. Television is very far from being just a question of whether certain interests should have the opportunity to set up an operation on one of the few public air channels available. Such an opportunity becomes a monopoly position to a large extent, and therefore the question needs careful consideration, with full thought for the future as well as the present. Television as it develops will become a strong social force. That force can be for the good, or the opposite. It can serve to weaken the nationhood of Canada, or to strengthen it. I believe that all studies of these matters should be on the basis of how television can best serve the public in a good sense, and best serve the interests of our Canadian nationhood, under our special Canadian conditions.

As well as carrying on its national service in Canada, the C.B.C., acting as agent for the government, operates the international service broadcasting by shortwave to other countries. This service was started during the war. I can remember members from across the house pressing particularly for its establishment. We thought that it would be also very useful in peacetime in helping the knowledge and understanding of Canada in other countries. Now in a time of "cold war", I think its importance is even greater than we expected it would be. It is very useful, I think, for the service to be able to help keep people in other English-speaking and Latin-American countries informed about Canada; about our attitudes, our activities, and our trading possibilities. But perhaps now it is even more vital to be broadcasting regularly to people of many countries in Europe, where the seeds planted from the east are at work, and where knowledge of how this Canadian democracy works and thinks can be so encouraging. Canada, while not one of the great powers, has a voice that is listened to with respect in many parts of the world. One of the ways in which that voice is heard in a very direct way is through the international service. And where the service goes behind the iron curtain, as it does with the well-established Czech service, I think its value is inestimable.

The service is carried on in close continuous consultation with the Department of External Affairs, and with other departments as appropriate. The responsibilities of the service have always been recognized, and great care taken to carry them out properly and securely. In consultation with the proper government authorities, and with full use of the R.C.M.P., careful measures have been taken over a period of years to make sure of the security and the loyalty of the staff of the service. The measures taken have not been sporadic, but form a continuous process. They started on a general basis in 1946, were made still more detailed in 1948, but are still going on and will continue to go on. I am kept informed of the measures taken, and I believe they provide the fullest possible assurance of a loyal staff. For that reason I regard as very unfortunate remarks made outside the house tending to reflect unfairly on members of a staff that have not only shown their integrity by their work and attitudes, but have also been checked very thoroughly by the proper agency, and when a watchful eye is always being kept. Because precautions are taken, it is no reflection on members of a staff. They are merely added safeguards which are necessary these days in such a service.

It is unfortunate that because the international service is beamed to other countries it cannot be heard easily in many parts of Canada, so that it is difficult for Canadians to know what it is saying daily to other countries. Probably the committee will wish to examine some of the output and activities of the service. I can assure them that if they visit the international service headquarters in Montreal they will find that it is quite fascinating to see and hear the daily work of the service.

I think the committee might also be interested in going to Montreal to see the Radio Canada building, formerly the Ford hotel. It has been partly occupied for some time, and shortly will be fully occupied. We arranged to buy and transform this building to provide headquarters for the international service, which had been housed in several unsatisfactory locations, the main one of which it had notice to vacate. It provided for the consolidation in one building of all C. B. C. operations in Montreal, which had been scattered among different buildings under highly unsatisfactory conditions. The national service of the C. B. C. will pay proper rent for its share of the use of the new building. I think that on seeing the new building the committee will agree that it will provide very satisfactory quarters for the complicated Montreal operations of both national and international service for a decidedly reasonable amount under present-day costs.

Mr. Speaker, the national radio system has a task that is more complicated, difficult and expensive than is realized by many Canadians, and perhaps by many members of the house. It has to try to cover this huge country of ours from the Avalon peninsula to Vancouver island, with all its different regions and time zones. It has to maintain services in two languages. Above all, it has to try to meet the varying tastes and wants of different people. There are plenty of things on the air which I do not like or do not agree with. But I know that probably some other people like them or agree with them. The national system should be completely impartial in trying to meet tastes of different groups in as fair proportion as possible, and giving different opinions equitable chances to be heard.

I hope that members of the committee, in considering the programs and activities of the corporation, will take a large view. I hope they will consider matters not from narrow viewpoints, but on the basis of the general good and fairness to all opinions, tastes and needs in Canada. And I hope particular objections or criticism will not prevent them from taking pride in an over-all Canadian accomplishment.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): On March 17, when this notice of motion was read in the house, I rose to protest against the appointment of this committee. I did not do so because I had anything against any member of this committee, but because the minister disregarded one province in Canada, Prince Edward Island. For the size of the station, the Prince Edward Island broadcasting station is superior to anything of its kind in Canada. When one looks at the set-up of the committee, one finds that there are two members from British Columbia; three from Alberta; three from Saskatchewan; two from Manitoba; six from Ontario; six from Quebec; one from Nova Scotia; one from New Brunswick; one from Newfoundland; and none from Prince Edward Island. Now, that is the protest I am entering.

Mr. McCann: Why did your party not appoint you?

Mr. McLure: I had nothing to do with it. I do not want to be a member. Why did you discriminate against my province?

Mr. McCann: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not appoint the committee, and I did not discriminate against anybody. As I understand it, the appointment of committees is a matter for arrangement between the whips, and they try to give representation to all the different parts of the country, and to the different parties.

Mr. McLure: The minister should have looked over the committee if it was appointed by somebody else. He should know his geography sufficiently well to see that every province is represented on this committee.

Mr. Knowles: He knows it when he is collecting taxes.

Mr. McLure: If we are to pay licence fees and taxes to support broadcasting, why can we not have representation on this committee? That is my protest. I do not believe that any member in this house will want to have Prince Edward Island left off this committee. As hon. members know, for instance, and especially those from the maritime provinces, we have the finest broadcasting station of its power that there is in Canada. I refer to station CFCY, the friendly voice of the maritimes.

To show how popular it is with the members from the maritime provinces, when the list is made out for the broadcasts from parliament hill, the four members from Prince Edward Island are included. Then the members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick all want to get on that station, notwithstanding the fact that they have stations in their own provinces. Seven or eight more from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are on the program and there is a waiting list of eight or nine more to get on. Then when we want to see that our province has its rights protected in this committee, the minister does not even give us representation on it.

Here and now, before this committee is set up, I want him to appoint a man from our province. If he says that he has nothing to do with it, then I tell him to let the matter stand aside for another day and let him give instructions that our province be represented. I should like to inform him that I am not anxious to get on this committee; I have more work now than I can do. But there are three other members from Prince Edward Island. My colleague, the hon. member from Queens (Mr. Douglas), knows broadcasting and broadcasting conditions. I cannot see why he could not be placed on this committee and why it could not be made a committee of twenty-six. I do not want to see anyone taken off it. Let all the other provinces have their present representation on it. But in the name of goodness, do not discriminate any more against Prince Edward Island. This government has always discriminated against our province; and even in this small matter they go to work and discriminate again. I want to know right now from the minister whether he is going to grant my request that he add a representative from Prince Edward Island, the cradle of confederation, to the membership of this committee. I think he should give an answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I think the hon. gentleman has reason for complaint, Mr. Speaker; because, after all, there are twenty-five members on this committee. There are five Progressive Conservatives, two C.C.F., one Social Credit and seventeen Liberals. It seems to me that among the seventeen Liberals one could have been found from Prince Edward Island. I did not rise for the purpose of saying that, however, except to join my plea to that of the hon. member and to urge that something be done to meet the lack of representation of Prince Edward Island.

I greatly regret that this year I shall not be on the radio committee. I have been on every one of the radio committees that has been established by this house in the past. I have found great interest in the work and have enjoyed it immensely. It is only because of the pressure of work that I am not able to sit on that committee this year. During the years I have been on the committee I have watched the development of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I remember, as the minister stated in his address just now, that when first of all the commission was set up, followed by the corporation, it was generally agreed among all parties in the house that a national system of broadcasting should be dominant in this country. I think that the corporation has performed a remarkable service to the people of this country in the few short years of its existence. When I have the opportunity to do so, I invariably listen to some of its many good programs. I want to compliment the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on their Wednesday night program. I think those of us who heard the program this week, for example—the music, the songs, the description of Sweden—realize the value of interpreting that country to this one even as our international service of our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation interprets Canada to Sweden and to the other countries.

I think the educational part of the work of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is the phase of it that should be specially noted and specially mentioned. Whenever I get the opportunity I listen in even to "Kindergarten of the Air", a remarkable program. A few days ago a little boy whom I know in this city, while listening to "Kindergarten of the Air", heard the kindergarten teacher who was giving the broadcast say "take your thumb out of your mouth." The little fellow had his finger in his mouth and he pulled it out immediately, so interested and intent was he on the program. Programs that are of educational value we get regularly only through the broadcasting corporation. Once in a while we get perhaps a program over one of the private stations; but the regular programs that are of educational value are heard from day to day and week to week over the C.B.C.

I think too that a great deal of credit is coming to the corporation for the work it has done in raising the standards of appreciation of music and for some of the opera that we have heard by the Canadian opera singers, young men and women of the conservatory of music in Toronto, young men and women who have won various awards in competition, joining together to give Canada the kind of entertainment that we have hitherto been unable to get from our own citizens.

I enjoy the opera which comes from the United States on Saturday afternoons in the winter, but I enjoy much more the opera that comes from the C.B.C. from our own Canadian artists; because I like to think that this country is developing not only in the material but in the cultural way. I think that the broadcasting corporation has done an excellent job in bringing together these young singers, training them and enabling them to give the kind of program that we have heard from time to time, this winter more particularly, as well as last winter.

Then of course I know of the awards that have been given to the broadcasting corporation for some of its programs. Some of the productions on "Stage 50" programs, as well as some of the Wednesday evening programs, compare in artistry and in cultural value with anything that is done elsewhere. I think it is remarkable that the C.B.C., with its limited resources, has been able to retain the services of several outstanding young men and women—I will not mention their names because there are several of them—who have given Canada a fine example of what can be done in the field of drama. Out of this C.B.C. programming in opera and drama, I have hoped that we are getting nearer the day when we shall have in this country a national theatre, with opera, drama and ballet assisted and even subsidized by the state itself. I know that when I meet people who come from some of the small European countries such as Latvia they tell me of the fine opera houses and the fine national drama that they had in the city of Riga. I wonder when we are going to have something similar in our own country, because after all man does not live by bread alone. We need the cultural activities as well.

This evening, just before I came down to the house, I listened to one of the very excellent talks in the series given by Professor Phelps of McGill university, stories of travel, on the interpretation of Britain, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales and so on. They have been of a very high order and I have, as others have, enjoyed them very much indeed. Another example is commentaries from overseas, commentaries by Matthew Halton and others who speak without any censorship, and who speak as they see it, not always of course acceptable to some because we have men of different views and different types on the air; but none the less giving us a picture of international affairs that is well worth while from the point of view of the progress and education of the Canadian people. Of course I should not omit to say how valuable the commentaries from the United Nations have been ever since the United Nations was set up. I think these projects should be commended when we have the opportunity to commend them. No private stations, with their dependence on advertising, give us the kind of programs that we are getting from the broadcasting corporation.

I should like to see advertising entirely eliminated from Canadian radio. I know that probably that will not be done now. I noticed, though, the other day that a spokesman for the association of broadcasters, when speaking in New York, suggested that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should do no advertising. Well, I wish that were possible. Perhaps it might be made possible if the government recognized that, if we are to have advertising and the private stations are to do it, something, say 25 per cent or 30 per cent of their gross receipts from advertising, should be handed over to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to enable them to put on the cultural and other programs that they think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should be undertaking. In that way perhaps advertising could be eliminated from the C.B.C., and the others, if they were permitted to do so, could go ahead. If they set aside 30 per cent, we will say, of their gross advertising receipts, a substantial sum would come to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Perhaps they have that in mind, because naturally if they think of cutting out all the advertising from the C.B.C. they must of necessity have some views as to how the money would be raised to carry on the kind of work that the broadcasting corporation must undertake on behalf of Canada.

I want to say that the many activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the forums and the other programs that I have already mentioned, are heartily supported by organizations of our farmers, of our workers, and of our professional people, and so on, because they give to Canada something that we seldom get in any other way, namely, a free and frank discussion of problems that are affecting the people.

I sometimes go to the United States. I was there the other day, and as usual when there I hear comments on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The comments are favourable, indeed laudatory. Again and again I hear the remark that our news service is particularly appreciated on the other side of the line because it is not sponsored. There is no advertising. As a rule the news service is pretty objective in its reporting. Of course

I understand that the broadcasting corporation news room has to rely on the Canadian Press, and on the United Press and other news gathering agencies. But with the agencies that are supplying the news to it, the C.B.C. does the best job it possibly can, and one which I think is pretty objective reporting as a rule—objective, of course, from the news agency in the first place, and secondly, objective when put together by those who write the scripts for the newscasts over the C.B.C.

When the committee is set up I hope it will go into this matter of advertising. Advertising on the radio, and particularly on the private stations, has become a sickening experience. I do not know what kind of people some of these advertising agencies think our people are. These singing commercials that you hear are examples. One would think that they were appealing to a nation of morons. Then the statements that are made with absurdly extravagant claims are obviously ridiculous. You hear one soap company telling you that its product washes clothes whiter. Then a few minutes later you hear another soap company contending that its particular soap contains some ingredient or other that makes the clothes whiter than new, and so on. You know perfectly well that they cannot both be telling the truth, and you know perfectly well that what they say are unmitigated falsehoods.

An hon. Member: Soft soap.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, this goes over the air. I sometimes wonder why protests do not come from some of the leading church authorities against these particular claims. I remember about a year or two ago protests against Rawhide's program which followed pretty closely a church period in the morning. Well, I listen to Rawhide occasionally. His program is liked by a great many people. It is a corny sort of program. He brings along a lot of very good recordings, and makes some amusing comments. There is nothing objectionable, nothing sacrilegious in it, but if you follow the program that comes after Rawhide—I refer to the Breakfast Club—you will find a mixture of prayer, sentimental music, hymns and advertising of pork products and bologna. It seems to me that if there is anything sacrilegious, it is the use of prayer and hymns for the advertising of pork products and bologna. I could not quite understand the objection to Rawhide when there was toleration of a program like the Breakfast Club on the air. Each day we hear other programs on which the advertising is making claims that are absolutely false.

Mr. Knowles: They will be praying for you tomorrow morning.

Mr. Coldwell: I hope it will be much more effective than the bacon with which they supply me in the morning.

I also want to say that I have followed with a great deal of interest the criticisms of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by the private stations. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters is, in my opinion, a closely knit combination in this country. I believe that if the Combines Investigation Act were amended, as it should be, to prosecute combinations in the supplying of service, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters would come under the heading of a combine. I happen to have before me the rate sheets of most of the stations in Canada, sent out by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. I have forgotten how many there are, but it is a very large volume. Some of them are originals, some of them are photostatic copies, but they are all alike. Some of the rates for the same power are alike. Some for the same power with different coverage are not alike. You find however that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters has a standard rate for the various stations of Canada. They have their time classification, and their standard rates structure for broadcasting.

The one I have in my hand, picked at random, is for station CFNB, Fredericton. It has class A rates for various periods, including from 6 p.m. to 11 p.m. daily, and class B from 6.30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. to 12.15 a.m. daily.

I notice one reminder printed in heavy black letters at the bottom—and this will be of interest to members of parliament—is that political broadcasting takes single time class A rates, which is the highest rate of all. It seems to me if we were really the democracy we like to think we are we should be promoting free discussion whenever possible and in every possible way, within reasonable limits of course as to time, at the lowest and not at the highest rates.

I appreciate that private stations do give reports from parliament hill. I am also reminded however that when an election comes round radio time is available in large quantities to those who can purchase it, but it must be purchased at the highest rate.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Does the hon. member know that at election time the newspapers do exactly the same thing?

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member says that at election time the newspapers do the same. That is right; I know that is perfectly true.

Radio Broadcasting

But let me point out that, through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the parliament of Canada alienates to a private station a public utility or channel. The newspaper, of course, is purely a matter of private enterprise in every respect, and on a very different basis.

Radio occupies a public air channel and, as such, it is a public utility and in a different class altogether from newspapers or magazines. So I suggest that when the committee meets it should go into the manner in which private stations are operated, examine their logs once again and see how much, or more likely little, they are doing to develop local talent, see how much they are giving to spot announcements which interrupt programs during most of the day. It should see to it that protection is given to the Canadian public against much of the kind of radio we are getting today.

I wish to criticize the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, too, after I have complimented them on some of the things they have done. When the C.B.C. was established it was never contemplated that the high-power channels granted to this country under the Havana treaty should be alienated to private stations. It was never contemplated that we would have stations privately-owned with power of from 10,000 to 50,000 watts; and it seems to me that over the last few years the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has played into the hands of powerful broadcasting interests in this country, and has alienated valuable channels which should have been retained for the public.

I have read the debates in the house, and I sat on the radio committee for years and know it was never contemplated, perhaps until the last radio committee sat, that these channels reserved for high-powered stations would be turned over for private operation. It was always considered that these would be the property of the people of Canada, and for the use of our publicly-owned radio system.

I regret very much indeed that over the past few years, perhaps in the past ten years, these have increased in power, bit by bit, first from 1,000 to 5,000, then from 5,000 to 10,000 and then from 10,000 to 50,000—all the way up. And bear this in mind, that the high-powered station may be a menace to the local community station. I have no criticism of the local community station that is doing the job some of the local stations are doing. I believe that in any national system of radio broadcasting there should be an opportunity for local community stations. But local community stations do not require 50,000 watts. They do not require 10,000 watts; and they should have been kept within the limits discussed in the house years ago of 1,000 or, at the most, 5,000 watts. We have some very good smaller stations across Canada, but these powerful 50,000-watt stations are able to get the advertising and to blanket the countryside over the area that should be served by the community stations.

The minister referred to television. I have noticed, and read with a good deal of regret, that certain private interests have been invited to participate in the establishment of television in this country. I believe television is too dangerous a medium to be placed in commercial hands. I will tell you why: it is because it is going to be a very expensive medium to use; and for that reason only powerful organizations will be able to put together the kind of program and pay for the kind of broadcasting that will have to be done on television.

A couple of years ago I witnessed a demonstration. This was not a demonstration against privately-owned television, but rather one to show what might be done in the field of television. This is what can be done: the presentation on that occasion showed a kitchen in which there was a lady preparing to make a pie. In doing so she took from the shelf a certain brand of flour. Not only did she name the flour and thus advertise it, but the picture was there before the eyes of those who were watching. The same applied to all the other ingredients—right down to the package of eggs to be used. Each ingredient was advertised not only by name but by picture, which is much more potent.

It seems to me that if television is to be used in that way it will be almost impossible for any of the smaller interests, who are producing commodities in competition with those of some of the large business concerns across the country, to survive. Precisely the same applies to the big departmental stores that will be able to advertise their wares by television, while the smaller merchants in the same area will find the competition from those larger stores almost impossible.

I say advertising should be kept off television waves altogether, that it must be entirely in the hands of an independent government organization—and when I say "independent", I mean independent of the day-to-day control of the government of that day. It must be used as a public educational facility. That is going to be costly; and if we are going to have that kind of television, which I suggest is the only kind we can safely have, then I think we shall have to find in some way the ways and means of financing it from the public treasury. I know it is impossible to get people to agree to an increase in the radio licence fee, but I think we must see to it that the corporation is adequately financed. Speaking personally, I think the radio in my home is worth, not $2.50 a year but many times that amount because of the real pleasure it gives to some one permanently shut in. But of course all people do not look at it that way. Not all can afford any more than the present moderate licence fee. Therefore we have to look for other ways and means of financing the organization.

If advertising is to be discontinued and if the private stations are to take over and have a monopoly of advertising as they apparently demand, then I suggest that they should give thirty per cent, we will say, or more of their gross receipts from advertising for the upkeep of the national radio system and as payment for the use of a very valuable channel granted to them and over which they have a monopoly.

I do not want to detain the house because there are others who wish to speak on this matter, but I do want to say that over the years I think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has performed a worth-while service for this country, from the point of view both of amusement and of education. It has raised our appreciation of music and it has brought to us drama such as we never had the opportunity of hearing, not only in our homes but in many of the smaller communities across the country.

I hope the committee to be appointed will go into the affairs of the corporation very thoroughly and will produce a report that will give the broadcasting corporation encouragement, that will help to put it on a better financial footing, and that will enable it to serve the people of Canada even better than it has since it was first established.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am happy this evening to add my voice to this debate and make some suggestions which I believe are valuable and which may prove of assistance to the committee being set up as it progresses with its work. The other day I was talking with a gentleman about Canadian radio policy and he abhorred the fact that a committee was to be set up at this time. It may surprise you when I tell you that this gentleman is connected with independent radio in Canada. He said to me, "Do you think it is fair to the Massey commission who are sitting to consider this very thing to have a committee of parliament set up now? Would it not be more fair for parliament to wait until the Massey commission has reported and then on the basis of that report let the committee proceed, along with the other work it is expected to do, and bring in its conclusions and recommendations?"

I replied that there had not been a radio committee for the last two or three sessions of parliament and that there had been pressure from different sources, quite often from members of the house, that as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a government corporation—there might be some legal technicality as to whether it is a crown company, but as far as I am concerned it is to all intents and purposes—it was about time that it came under the review of parliament. Then I told this gentleman that the terms of reference of the Massey commission were much broader than the terms of reference of this committee, that the Massey commission were dealing with the arts and sciences.

Mr. Speaker: The other day the question came up as to whether the house should discuss the proceedings which were taking place before the royal commission and I ruled at that time that the proceedings of that royal commission and the evidence given before it should not be discussed in this house.

Mr. Hansell: Thank you. May I point out that I am not discussing the proceedings of the Massey commission; I am simply stating that that commission is doing a job and that the terms of reference of the commission are broader than the terms of reference of the committee. I was simply stating that as an answer to the criticism from a radio man of the setting up of this committee.

I told him that even though certain evidence had been given before the commission it was not likely that when the same people gave evidence before the committee they would change it. I said that in all probability any briefs submitted would be along the same lines. Another point comes to my mind more forcibly since you have raised the point of order. I do hope that anything presented to the radio committee will not be ruled out of order because the commission is sitting.

Overlapping between the two bodies cannot be avoided. I believe the minister should give us assurance that this committee will be completely free to discuss radio policy, no matter whether that policy is before the commission or not. As I said, in all probability any briefs submitted to the committee would be the same in content as those submitted to the commission; but the appraisal of the evidence and the conclusions drawn might differ from any conclusions or recommendations that might be made by the commission itself. So I do not believe this committee should be set up if its hands are going to be tied. That puts the matter in a nutshell as far as I am concerned.

There is another matter I should like to state, since I feel rather keenly about it. We in this corner of the house, and I in particular as a member of other radio committees, have been accused at times of being opposed to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This is not so. I go a long way with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) in what he said tonight. We in this corner of the house want to state emphatically that we think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have done a good job in many respects. I would compliment them on their efforts to keep the air clean. They have been able to avoid the sensationalism which sometimes characterizes United States radio, and they are to be complimented on that. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar referred to Canadian newscasts as compared with United States newscasts, and said that many Americans had complimented him on our news broadcasts. He indicated the reason was that here there was no advertising. I do not know that this is particularly the reason our United States friends may have been impressed by our newscasts. I do not think they object to an advertising plug in the news as much as they object to the sensationalism that characterizes some of the United States newscasts. Some of their commentators like to dig up a lot of dirt and spill it into the ears of the American people. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are to be complimented on their attempt to keep the air waves of Canada clean. They do not stand for slander and such things; character assassination is not tolerated.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Did you ever listen to Matthew Halton?

Mr. Hansell: I have heard him, but frankly I never tune in particularly to listen to him.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The greatest character assassin on the air.

Mr. Hansell: I will let that stand as my hon. friend has stated it. I am not going to make that statement, but since he has done so I am not going to contradict it. I have not heard Matthew Halton deal in that sort of thing because I do not tune in to hear what he says. Frankly, I think he is biased. There is no question in my mind but that the gentleman is a socialist and his commentaries are thereby coloured. That is why I do not listen to him.

Mr. MacInnis: Does that not apply to all speakers?

Mr. Hansell: Perhaps it does, largely. I do not know whether it is possible to get commentators who are not at least slightly biased by their own thinking. It does seem to me that somehow or other—and I know I am criticized when I say this—the corporation has gathered unto itself an over-supply of that type of mentality. That is just by the way; I do not have that in my notes, but it is my reply to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith).

The radio corporation, I believe, have been fair in respect to advertising. They have not permitted the sort of advertising in which people vie with one another in price cutting, and so on. I believe that is a good feature, and there are many others. I agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar with respect to the opera program that is sponsored by the C.B.C., though some advertising firms also have done a good deal along even that line. I might refer to the program known as "Singing Stars of Tomorrow". Opera, I know, is not keenly appreciated by a vast majority of the Canadian public. Just the same it is extremely valuable in the cultural life of our country. I am a bit of an opera fan myself; yet I do not understand one word of the Italian language, I am not a musician, I hardly know one note of music, and I play no instrument. Yet gradually over the years I have become quite an opera fiend in a small way. It is a taste that has to be acquired; and when it is cultivated it is surprising how it will grow on one. Whether or not you understand the words, you get the story, you feel the thrill of the music and the singing.

Well, all that is very complimentary to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We are not opposed to it. We are opposed to some of its policies, and we think perhaps radio itself could be made somewhat freer by a revision of the regulations. We have strongly opposed the principle that the corporation should also be in control of radio in Canada. We do not believe that is a good thing. It does not matter whether it is the C.B.C. or any other crown corporation; the same principle would hold. That is our belief, and we have opposed matters along that line.

In the matter of finance, I am not opposed to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation being subsidized. I do believe that, working as they are in the commercial field in competition with independent radio stations, they should be able to operate within the confines of their commercial revenue, plus the approximately $5 million a year they receive from radio licences. I do not believe the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should have to come to the taxpayers for any more money. I may not be an expert at scrutinizing these expenditures, but $5 million is a great deal of money. When that amount is given to the broadcasting corporation, over and above its commercial revenues, I believe that is enough without taking money from the taxpayers.

I should like to say something about the talks department of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am not doing so in an overcritical fashion. I would say the same thing if huge networks were under the control of independent radio stations. I do not believe the best way for all shades of public opinion to be expressed over the air is through the channel of any centralized authority. It does not make any difference to me whether it is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or whether it is a network brought into existence by independent radio people. Here we have a committee of men set up. The number is not important; it may be a half dozen or it may be more. This committee of men decides that some topic or other is to the fore, so they should have different views about it expressed. The problem arises as to whom they will ask to express those views. They say, "We will ask Mr. So-and-So, Mr. So-and-So, and Mr. So-and-So; they represent different views, so we will ask them to take part in this particular program."

There is a tendency there to centralize within those few men the opportunity—I am not saying they take advantage of it, but I am saying we reach the danger point when we give a few men the opportunity of channelling or moulding the mentality of the Canadian people. I feel quite keenly about the matter because that involves something going out over the air in respect of which the people have no say as to whether or not they want to hear it.

It may be said that the social credit view is sometimes heard over the air by reason of the fact that this party is asked to take part in these broadcasts. I am not concerned about whether or not my party is asked to express its views. My particular point is that John Doe out at Pumpkin Centre may believe he has some wisdom that is of value to the Canadian people. Has he an opportunity of putting his views before the Canadian people? I know I am perhaps using an extreme illustration. There is no way by which this man can talk to the Canadian people. Nevertheless, he can start in a small way. This is not the function now of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. If John Doe of Pumpkin Centre wants to broadcast some of his wisdom, he can go to the local station, which would be an independent station, and say, "I want to talk on the radio." He would be told that the rate was so much. He has to have the money, of course; I know that. We can say what we like, but one cannot do anything in this country without having the money. One cannot eat without having money. After all, perhaps in Pumpkin Centre the rates for the local station would not be very high.

Many people have started in that way. If what they put over the air has any merit at all, it is not long before they are talking over the same station again. If the material has real merit, then the person is speaking over more than one station, or perhaps has a weekly program. Through a natural process that person's ideas take shape and begin to grip the imagination of the people. I believe that is the natural way the thing should develop. Now, I say there is danger in centralizing the authority in the hands of a few. It gives them the opportunity, if they care to take it, of moulding the thinking of the Canadian people.

It is an easy thing to popularize something. As a matter of fact, I suggest that the United Nations organization has been overpopularized. A man almost takes his life in his hands if he says anything against this very august body. Why should that be so? Simply because a mentality has been created among the people that takes it for granted that such an organization is the right thing. Who said it was the right thing? I know I cannot talk about the United Nations tonight, but the United Nations might be a dangerous thing. Because it has been popularized, however, people take it for granted that it is a valuable institution. It might be, but it might also be a dangerous institution. Well, that is the power of radio; that is the power of propaganda. I say to you, therefore, that we do give a tremendous opportunity to a few people by placing the direction of the talks department in their hands.

There are just one or two other things I wish to mention. I should like to say something with respect to the political broadcasts that are given by the various parties in the house. This is not in criticism of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation particularly, but I believe that the formula now contained in what is generally known as the white paper on political broadcasting should be changed. Even though the Liberal party have such a tremendous majority in this house, I do not believe that they should have the lion's share of radio time.

I understand that the three opposition parties here—the Conservatives, the C.C.F. and the Social Credit party—are in agreement on having that time equally divided among the four parties. If the three parties are agreed to that, then there is only one party that is not agreed to it; and that is the party which, in spite of its majority in the house, were elected by a minority vote of the people of Canada. The question is this. Should those who are elected by a minority vote of the people of Canada have the lion's share of the time on the air? As a matter of fact, I proposed this division of time in the radio committee a year or two ago, and I know that it might be looked upon as a sort of wild-eyed suggestion. But the fact of the matter is that because the Liberal party have such a big majority, they should have the least time.

What are you putting over when you are putting over talks to the people of Canada? Is the objective of those talks to inform the people of Canada? Are you putting over ideas or are you putting over a party? If you are putting over ideas, then the ideas of the smaller groups are just as valuable, as ideas, as any that the Liberal party may have. Some of us over here, of course, think theirs are far more important; but naturally, there is a difference of opinion there. But it is the new idea that should be propounded and should have at least an equal amount of time in comparison with the ideas that supposedly have already arrived. If the Liberal party have already arrived, then the people have had their ideas already. Why talk any more about it? I suggest that it might be as well if a change were made in the formula by which this radio time is divided up among the political parties.

I come now to television. I appreciate what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has said with respect to the power of television, that it might be extremely costly and therefore that only wealthy advertisers would be able to use it. I believe, however, it will be proven that television is tremendously overrated. At the present time it is, of course, a novelty. Anyone first looking at and listening to television will, of course, sit there by the hour. But radio has one advantage over television and it is simply this. The housewife can go about her work in the house and listen to the radio; but she cannot go about her work and listen to and look at television at the same time.

Mr. MacInnis: In order to get more out of your wife, you should not have a television set.

Mr. Hansell: I therefore propose to hon. gentlemen who are married that if they want to get more work out of their wives, they should not instal a television set.

Mr. Knowles: They would have to get an automatic dishwasher and an automatic clothes washer at the same time.

Mr. Hansell: Personally, I like to have the radio on and tuned to a nice musical program; at the same time I find no difficulty in sitting down and reading a book while the radio is playing music to me.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Watching your wife work.

Mr. Hansell: No. I do not mind if my wife is right beside me or in a chair not far away, reading a book at the same time. Sometimes I like to read a little bit, and I can do it while the radio is playing sweet music in my ears. But I am going to tell you that you cannot do that and look at television at the same time. Because of its novelty today, the value of television is overrated. I believe that people who instal television sets will not have them turned on nearly as much as they will have their radios on. Advertisers therefore will, to a large extent, stand by the old radios just the same.

Again, if you wish to get the best effect from television, you should not have too much light in the room; and as a rule people do not like to sit in the dark for very long.

Mr. MacInnis: It just depends.

Mr. Hansell: Yes, I know; it all depends on who is there. There is just one other matter I wish to mention in connection with television. I am inclined to think that if the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would leave the field open to private broadcasters to develop television side by side with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, television would come to Canada much more quickly than we think. It is on its way; it is developing fast in the United States; and it would come to Canada much faster than most people think. But of course if other channels are not open for development by private concerns, and if the development is to be confined to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, then we may have to wait longer than we otherwise would. I hope that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will not seek to monopolize this field. If they permitted private interests to develop a few channels in Canada, I believe that television would come much faster, that even the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would save a good deal of money and at the same time could still retain the power of regulation as long as radio broadcasting operations were regulated under the C.B.C.

There is one matter in connection with the procedure of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the development of television to which I should like to refer. It has not been mentioned before. I believe the radio committee is entitled to an answer. There has been some criticism of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation purchasing its television equipment from the United States when, my information is, it could have obtained the same service, and television equipment that is just as good, from Great Britain. I understand that they could have obtained it just as cheaply. Whether I am right in the information I have I do not know, but I believe the corporation will have to give an answer to that question when the committee is set up.

What they have done is to aggravate, shall I say, our dollar difficulties. They could have conserved some exchange in that way. I shall not say anything more at the moment, but when the minister replies I hope he will give us the absolute assurance that the hands of the committee will be entirely free, and that the cry of sub judice will not come up when we attempt, as it may appear for the moment, to encroach upon the work of the commission which is now working on the matter.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, first may I say I am very happy that the select committee which is to be set up will have power to examine and inquire into the matters and things herein referred to, namely, regulations, revenues, expenditures and development, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon. That is the way a committee should be set up. Any committee of this house set up with power to investigate should also have the power to report.

Mr. McCann: The resolution contains the widest terms of reference that we could give it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. I now come to the matter raised by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure). There is no necessity of pursuing it much further because I am sure that after the arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman Prince Edward Island will indeed receive representation on this committee.

It has been suggested that provision could be made among the opposition parties' representation. Let me point out that on the committee there are 17 Liberals, 5 Progressive Conservatives, 2 C.C.F. members, and 1 Social Credit member. The five Progressive Conservatives can certainly not be divided among ten provinces. The five are from five different provinces. The two C.C.F. members represent two provinces, and the one Social Credit member represents one province. That being so, the only place in which representation can be assured for all ten provinces is on the government side of the house.

Mr. McCann: We have had no protest from the government members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No protest is necessary in that regard, because I feel sure that the minister would agree that, regardless of protest, every province should be represented on a committee that is to deal with so important a matter as radio broadcasting throughout Canada.

There are just two matters to which I should like to make brief reference. The minister pointed out that this committee should be free to examine the activities of the corporation. Indeed, it should not be stifled in any way. It should be able to secure all information necessary regarding finances and expenditures to be made by this corporation. The corporation comes before parliament from time to time and asks for financial assistance. I feel that so far as crown corporations and emanations of the crown are concerned, which appear before parliament and ask for money, they should be subject to the fullest possible examination.

Only the other day an answer was given to me indicating a course of action that I think is contrary to good parliamentary procedure. On March 27 I asked certain questions in regard to another crown corporation, or emanation of the crown, namely, the Canadian National Railways. I asked: How many Canadian National employees were retired in each of the years with pensions up to $25 a month, $30 a month and so forth? Then I asked whether any of the officials received a bonus, retirement payment or any allowance additional to or along with the regular retirement pension. The answer was that the management had always taken the position that it would not be in the interests of the company or of its personnel to make public information pertaining to the salary arrangements or remuneration paid to officers. That was not what I asked for. I asked, what was the retirement allowance additional to any bonus that was given?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member referring to proceedings in a committee which has not yet reported?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to an answer to a question that I received in the house on March 27—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I interrupted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to illustrate my contention that parliament should be furnished with such information. Otherwise parliament is simply in the position of being asked to countenance expenditures, however justifiable or unjustifiable they may be, without having the information upon which to arrive at that decision. I hope that, when this committee is set up, answers such as were given to me on March 27, whereby parliament and I were denied information as to whether retirement bonuses are being granted to officials, will not be given to the members of this committee; for it is a dangerous situation when parliament is asked from time to time to supply money to meet deficits of crown corporations and is not given the right to look into operations such as might be disclosed by a proper answer to a question that is asked, such as the one to which I have made reference.

I come now to the question of television. I do not agree with the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) that television is any longer a novelty. Television has been held back in its development in this country by the policy of the C.B.C. to date, as I see it. Television is receiving consideration in the development of stations to operate it in Montreal and Toronto; but elsewhere in this country nothing is being done in that regard. We in western Canada and British Columbia, and others in the maritime provinces, are asking for television. Certainly if it takes $4 million in money collected from the people of Canada to provide television in only two centres, in the central provinces, then the indications are that if it remains a semi-monopoly of the C.B.C. or the government there will not be that development of television in Canada that we should have.

It is not a novelty today in the United States. Indeed, within the last year the number of privately-owned stations there has increased from 680 to 2,316. Great changes have taken place in technical equipment within the last year and a half, and that answers the objections that were prevalent that it was impossible to provide television except in areas within 50 miles of a station. Today plans are being made in the United States to connect stations across the continent by coaxial cable and microwave repeater stations. I feel that every encouragement should be given to private industry operating alongside the C.B.C. to develop television in Canada, for if private industry is not given the opportunity I doubt whether we shall make the advances under this type of broadcasting which characterize portions of the United States where conditions are much the same as they are here.

I believe the experience of the last two years will support the stand taken by the opposition in the committee that, having regard to the disputes which arise from time to time as between the C.B.C. and private corporations, there should be set up in this country a semi-judicial body with powers similar to those of the board of transport commissioners. There is no reason why the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is a competitor of private stations wherever those private stations operate, should be in the position, in the event of a dispute arising over the interpretation of regulations, to demand that such private stations shall submit their case to the competing publicly-owned corporation.

In other words, the C.B.C. is in the position of competitor, judge and jury on matters affecting itself in its relationship with the private corporations. Instances will be brought to the attention of the committee, when it is set up, to establish, from the experience of the last two years, the necessity for the creation of an independent body to adjudicate in respect of disputes that may arise in connection with jurisdiction, or in connection with regulatory disputes as between the C.B.C. and the private broadcasting companies.

In connection with the committee I would make a suggestion to the minister. It is true that the committee has the opportunity of examining the officials of the corporation called before it. I should like to see the briefs these officials intend to present delivered to members of the committee a day or so before the officials of the corporation appear to give their evidence. This would save a lot of time. I am sure the minister will agree that on many occasions we have sat for as long as two or three hours listening to the reading of a brief which, had we seen it in advance, could have been made immediately the subject of examination in respect of those questions in it in which we were particularly interested. We could ourselves have read the brief more expeditiously.

In other words, a brief is merely a guide; it is a submission of all the information available which, in the opinion of the officials of the C.B.C., deserves to be considered by the committee. Why not submit that? Why not let us see it in advance, and thus place us in a position where we can begin immediately to examine and to do an expeditious job, rather than sit there several days listening to the reading of long screeds which we could read much more carefully and much faster privately.

Originally, and even up to 1938, the understanding was that at no time would the C. B. C. have revenues greater than $500,000 from advertising.

Mr. McCann: Never.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The actual statement of the minister in that regard was that $500,000 was to be the limit on advertising. Today it is almost five times that amount.

Mr. McCann: That was only an expression of opinion by Brockington.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was more than an expression of opinion. It was accepted by the minister and was also of the essence in setting up the extension of the facilities of the C. B. C.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): A policy statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, as the hon. member for Calgary West says, it was a policy statement. But it is no longer expedient to follow it, and today the advertising—and I am speaking from memory—amounts to about $2,400,000 a year.

Having changed the policy in regard to advertising, there is justification for the wish expressed by the majority of those who have been consulted in a Gallup poll, that the time has come to do away with the licence fee. Only the other day the president of the private broadcasters made the statement that in his opinion this would be done away with in 1951. What justification he had for that statement, I do not know; but I do feel that when parliament is in a position of having to vote money from time to time—and this is a national venture—the time has come to remove the licence fee for private radios.

There are many other pressing matters with which I might deal, but they can be dealt with when the committee is set up. Let me conclude where I began: let us make this a national committee of the House of Commons. I am making an appeal to the minister: let us give representation everywhere, to the end that from this committee there will come a report that indeed will be representative of all parts of Canada.

I hope, too, that we shall not hear the argument raised that many questions which should be dealt with by the committee cannot be dealt with because of the fact that a royal commission is sitting. I am sure the minister will make a statement to that effect; otherwise the committee would be strangled, so far as recommendations are concerned, by the fact that a royal commission is sitting. After all, it is for parliament to determine what is to be done. All a royal commission does is to make recommendations, after hearing the evidence, in order to assist the government of the day and, indirectly, parliament, in arriving at a proper conclusion.

Suggestions have been made that the C.B.C. news service is not always objective. I am not able to speak about the musical end or the drama end of the C.B.C., but as far as the news service is concerned I feel that year in and year out it is fair and reasonable in its objectivity. It could be used as an instrument of propaganda, but while objections will necessarily be raised from time to time I think that the news service, assisted as it is by the Canadian Press and British United Press, is indeed a service of which Canada can be proud.

Reference has been made by people living in border cities to the fact that the news received at intervals over the C.B.C. is up to date and objective and they compare it with the news services in the United States. Those who are engaged in broadcasting the news and preparing it deserve commendation where commendation is indeed earned.

I have heard strong objections to the slanting of news by certain commentators but all I ask is that all sides be represented by commentators on the news or political events.

Mr. Low: With a fair distribution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If there is a fair distribution there can be no objection. Every one of us has his own prejudices and is biased on certain matters, and, however consciously we may desire to avoid bias, unconsciously we are affected by it. Everything should be done to assure that in the broadcasting of philosophies all sides should be presented by commentators qualified to discuss the news and comment on events.

This is a committee upon which I have sat during the few years I have been in parliament. It is a committee I look forward to sitting on. A great deal of beneficial evidence is presented to the committee. It is an educative committee and one that can do a worth-while work in developing higher standards of art within our country and an appreciation of the better things of life.

Radio Broadcasting

Mr. Herridge: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. McCann: If this motion is not passed tonight it is unlikely that it will be dealt with before the Easter recess. The work to be undertaken immediately following the recess has been indicated so the setting up of the committee will probably be delayed until some time in May. I have been pressing to have the resolution come before the house for a long time and if the setting up of this committee is delayed until on in May I hope the blame will not be placed on this side of the house.

Motion (Mr. Herridge) agreed to and debate adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 3, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VISIT TO GRANBY, QUE., BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. J. A. Bradette (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I ask your indulgence for a few moments in order that I may bring to the attention of the house what we called the "Marcel Boivin trip."

On Thursday afternoon of last week a party consisting of forty-two members of this house, twenty-one of whom were accompanied by their wives, left Ottawa for a three-day trip to Granby, Quebec, the princess city of the eastern townships. In this group every province of Canada was represented, as well as every political party in the federal field. On arriving at our destination we received a civic reception from the nationally known and dynamic mayor of Granby, Mr. P. H. Boivin, who was accompanied by his charming wife and the members of the municipal council. His Worship remained with us throughout the whole of our stay, and his exuberance, his personality, his wide knowledge of affairs in general, his faith in the future of his city, of his province and of Canada, impressed us very much. He also made us familiar with the great progress already made in that area, as well as its hopes and aspirations for the future, with the inevitable problems that have to be faced and solved.

Numerous and extensive visiting tours were well organized, allowing us to visit several industries, such as the Granby Elastic Web, the Verney corporation, the Miner Rubber Company, the Imperial Tobacco Company, the Granby Co-operative, the Racine Manufacturing Company—just to name a few. Everywhere we were received with courtesy, and we were given the opportunity to make a thorough inspection of these plants in full operation. In the course of conversation it was easy to realize the spirit of co-operation and understanding that exists between labour and management, and at every function both were well represented.

The fine hospitality which is always to the fore in the province of Quebec was manifested by our hosts and by everyone else with whom we came in contact. I am convinced that all those who made this trip feel that they know more about their country than they did before.

We were inspired by seeing in practice the real unity of the two parent races, and this was at once made evident by the fact that the population of Granby is made up of twenty per cent of English-speaking descent and eighty per cent of French-speaking descent. Its citizens speak the two official languages of our country.

I also wish to express appreciation to the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National for the fine service they gave us, which made our trip a most pleasant and comfortable one.

Before resuming my seat there is another pleasant duty that I wish to perform. I know that in doing so I am voicing the sentiments of my colleagues. It is to present to the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin), and to Mrs. Boivin, our most heartfelt thanks and appreciation for the very efficient manner in which this tour was organized. The full success of the visit was undoubtedly due to the great care the hon. member took in its preparation, and to his constant presence with his guests. His activities, which made this journey possible, enabled us to see the extraordinary strides that have been made in commerce and industry in his home city. There we met a number of able businessmen, who have contributed their talents and courage in the building up of a prosperous business centre. We also readily perceived that the progress they have made is not attributable only to the efforts of a relatively small group; a large part of the credit must go to the persevering work of the whole population, which is proud of its municipality and anxious to see it progressing in every department.

It will always be with pleasure and gratitude that we shall remember those most agreeable and instructive days.

REVISION OF CLASSIFICATION OF HOUSE OFFICIALS —CONCURRENCE IN REPORT TABLED MARCH 31

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): As announced on Friday, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move, seconded by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell):

That the report from the civil service commission respecting the revisions in classification of officials of the House of Commons, tabled on 31st March, 1950, be concurred in.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I say just a word, Mr. Speaker? I feel sure that all members of the House of Commons will welcome the opportunity to vote for this motion to give effect to the increases and other changes that are set out in the report made by the civil service commission. They are increases that are well deserved, and in many cases long overdue. I shall not make the mistake of referring specifically to any of these that might merit particular attention, because comparisons are unwise to make. I want to express the hope, however, that it will not be long before there will be before the house another report of this kind dealing with employees not covered by this one or by the last one we had, which was laid on the table of the house on April 29, 1948; it is sessional paper 139a of that date.

I could mention one or two of the offices or branches around the building that do not seem to have been considered by way of increases in either of these last two reports. From the study I have made of the various documents in the case, it seems to me that there are still quite a number of subordinate employees who have not had increases that I feel are coming to them. In other words, most of the increases provided for in the report now before us deal with chiefs or assistant chiefs of various branches, although there are included a few subordinate employees who have had a slight upward adjustment.

I want to express the hope—and I am sure that other members will agree with me—that it will not be long before there will be another report of this kind taking care of the needs of some of the other employees. As these changes are made from time to time the employees who are overlooked get the word that their cases will be covered in the next report; then when the next report comes down and they find that they are still not covered, they wonder how long they are going to have to wait.

I fully recognize, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are dealing in this instance with employees who are permanent and who come under the civil service commission. I fully recognize the fact that this whole business, so far as we have it before us at this time, is beyond the jurisdiction of the officials of the house. It is a civil service matter. When I express the hope that further work will be done on this matter, what I want is that my words and sentiments will be taken note of by the civil service commission, and that they will carry on with the job.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Knowles: So far as I am concerned, what they have done thus far is all to the good. These increases are obviously made with the approval of all members in all sections of the house. But let us not forget those who thus far have been forgotten.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED BY DEFENCE COMMITTEE AFTER MEETINGS AT THE HAGUE

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Having just returned, Mr. Speaker, from the meetings of the various committees under the North Atlantic treaty which were held at The Hague and were concluded on Saturday night, I thought the house would like to have presented to it the communiqué issued by the defence committee after it had been approved by the committee at its meeting Saturday evening. It is as follows:

The defence committee of the North Atlantic treaty organization held its third meeting on April 1, 1950, at Juliana barracks, The Hague, The Netherlands, at 10 a.m.

The purpose of the meeting was to consider the work that has been accomplished by the military committee and the military production and supply board since the second meeting of the defence ministers in Paris on December 1, 1949.

The delegates attending the meeting were as follows:

Belgium, Mr. Albert Deveze, Minister of Defence; Canada, Hon. Brooke Claxton, Minister of Defence; Denmark, Mr. Rasmus Hansen, Minister of Defence; France, Mr. Rene Pleven, Minister of Defence; Italy, Mr. Randolfo Pacciardi, Minister of Defence; Luxembourg, Mr. Pierre Dupong, Minister of State; The Netherlands, Mr. W. F. Schokking, Minister of Navy and War; Norway, Mr. Jens Christian Hauge, Minister of Defence; Portugal, Captain Americo Deus Rodrigues Thomaz, Minister of Marine; United Kingdom, Right Hon. E. Shinwell, Minister of Defence; United States, Hon. Louis Johnson, Secretary of Defence.

At the Paris meeting in December the defence committee approved a broad strategic concept which was later adopted by the Atlantic council in January and directed the preparation of plans for the defence of the North Atlantic treaty area.

At its meeting the defence ministers unanimously approved the plan for collective self-defence that was recommended by the chiefs of staff in the military committee earlier in the week.

Within a short space of six months the military planning organization has determined the general strategy of defence of the North Atlantic treaty area, has prepared an estimate of the military situation if any attack be launched against the treaty nations, and has prepared plans for defence against such an aggression should it occur. These plans call for an integrated defence of the entire north Atlantic area as distinguished from individual national defence. Each nation, in accordance with article III of the treaty, will help itself and the others in accordance with its available resources. Thus, for the first time, twelve independent and sovereign nations have achieved, through the democratic process of co-operation, a system for defending themselves and each other.

The defence ministers acknowledged the speed with which the regional planning groups, the standing group and the military committee, achieved the first basis for their plans. At the same time they directed that the plans be kept under continuous review.

They concerned themselves in particular with the role to be played by the military production and supply board which would insure the most efficient employment of the funds which are appropriated in each nation for military production, and they gave specific directives to this board to implement standardization of equipment and to insure a co-ordinated production.

The defence ministers recognized the great importance of adequate financing to carry out the plan and the need for careful balancing of the respective national economies in the light of the present world situation. For this purpose they requested the defence finance and economic committee to survey the financial and economic potentialities available for defence purposes.

Although considerable progress has been made since their last meeting in the attainment of collective security, which is the common goal of the Atlantic treaty nations, the ministers recognize that further sustained effort will be required. They adjourned with the strengthened conviction that the organization being set up would allow the countries to insure their defence both economically and efficiently.

Mr. Louis Johnson, United States Secretary of Defence, served as chairman of the meeting, and he expressed the gratitude of the committee to The Netherlands government for the kind invitation to meet in The Hague and the hospitality provided.

The time and place for the next meeting will be determined as events require.

That concludes the communiqué that was approved. I should like to add that in warmth of welcome, hospitality, and the excellence of the arrangements, the government and people of The Netherlands did everything possible for the success of the meeting. Their attitude also showed that the name of Canada still continues to stand high in the hearts and minds of the people and government of that friendly nation.

I should like to say also, Mr. Speaker, that in this connection there is a report appearing in the press of today under a Canadian Press dateline, referring to an Associated Press story, which reads:

The AP story added:

"The Canadians felt they were not getting enough information on technical advances because of a road-block between the Pentagon in Washington and London."

I want to make it perfectly clear that nothing like this was said by any member of the Canadian delegation at The Hague, and that nothing like this was felt. Our arrangements for securing information, either from the United States or from the United Kingdom, in our minds leave nothing whatever to be desired. We are completely satisfied with them. Any suggestion to the contrary is based on a misunderstanding of the situation.

Finally, I should like to say that these meetings at The Hague presented us with an opportunity to discuss with the representatives of the countries there the offer that we had made to their representatives here on the 16th of March, under which we would train a hundred aircrew and a hundred and fifty army personnel. At The Hague we put before their chiefs of staff memoranda giving details of these proposals, which enabled us to discuss them there; and I have the greatest possible pleasure in telling the house that the reception given to those proposals was very enthusiastic indeed. There is no doubt that with courses that we are giving from June and July on, but mostly starting with the air force toward the end of August and for the army in September, we shall expect to have sufficient applicants, from the various countries desirous of sending officers to train with us, to fill up all the vacancies. It was indicated in the course of our discussion that the plans did give rise to the discussion of rather similar arrangements being developed in other directions; therefore in this we may have started something which may prove to be much larger than the plan itself.

Mr. Pearkes: Will the minister permit one question? First of all, may I congratulate him upon his safe return after a speedy trip across the ocean. My question is: Can the minister say whether Canada has accepted any commitments other than merely the training of the aircrew and army personnel to which he referred?

Mr. Claxton: I thank the hon. member for Nanaimo for his very kind welcome. The situation regarding commitments is as described in the statement I gave on March 17. We have our obligations under the treaty. The only additional obligation is the offer I have made, which is in course of being accepted, for the training of army personnel and aircrew. There are no other specific commitments.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister whether there were any discussions, formal or informal, as to the possibility of a defence pact for the Pacific?

Mr. Claxton: No; none whatever.

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC POLICIES—ECONOMIC COLLABORATION

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Perhaps at this point I might be permitted to ask a question, notice of which I sent to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because it bears on the matter which was the subject of the minister's statement. In the joint communiqué which the minister has just read, it was indicated that a plan of integrated action had been adopted. The question I should like to ask of the government is this: To what extent, if any, have similar definite steps been taken under article

II of the treaty to eliminate conflict in international economic policies and to encourage economic collaboration among the members of the alliance as set forth in the treaty?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had not seen the question before, but in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to whom it should be directed, I may answer as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. I can tell the hon. member and the house that, as he and the house know, Canada has taken a very keen interest in this particular article and contributed a good deal to its acceptance in its present form. Our hope and expectation is that at the next meeting of the North Atlantic council—that is, the council of foreign ministers—this matter will receive consideration. But at the meetings of the defence ministers, as the communiqué I mentioned indicates, economic and financial considerations were taken into account as well as purely military considerations.

Mr. Coldwell: I understand that the financial arrangements referred to military commitments.

Mr. Claxton: So far, yes.

Mr. Coldwell: Nothing has been done under article II?

Mr. Claxton: We hope that will be a further development.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Howe be substituted for that of Mr. Picard on the special committee on railways and shipping.

Motion agreed to.

APPLES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA AND NOVA SCOTIA GROWERS

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, numerous inquiries came to the government from the province of British Columbia, from hon. members from British Columbia and also from Nova Scotia, in respect of the apple growers of these two provinces. I should like to make an announcement, and this is the way I shall do it. I shall read two letters sent out by the Minister of Agriculture to the presidents of the associations concerned in British Columbia and Nova Scotia.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Drew: Does it give the date of the by-election?

Mr. McCubbin: The first letter is as follows:

Mr. A. K. Loyd,
President, British Columbia
Tree Fruits, Ltd.,
Kelowna, B.C.

Dear Mr. Loyd,

I have placed before my colleagues in the cabinet your request for assistance for the apple growers of British Columbia to supplement returns received for their 1949 apple crop. I am pleased to inform you that the government, after a full and thorough investigation into the marketing of the current Canadian apple crop, has approved a contribution of $2 million for the benefit of the growers represented by the British Columbia Tree Fruits Limited.

The very large special grants that have been paid by the government during the war and post-war years to the apple industry of British Columbia and Nova Scotia have been in recognition of the difficulties which the war produced for the apple export trade.

The government has decided, therefore, that, after this grant of $2 million, no further assistance can be provided on account of the special difficulties of the industry in the United Kingdom market.

Your sincerely,
James G. Gardiner

I shall now read the letter to Mr. R. D. Sutton, chairman of the Nova Scotia apple marketing board.

Mr. Graydon: This is where it comes in.

Mr. McCubbin: The letter is as follows:

R. D. Sutton, Esq.,
Chairman,
Nova Scotia Apple Marketing Board.
Kentville, N.S.

Dear Mr. Sutton:

I have placed before my colleagues in the cabinet your request of February 3, 1950, for assistance for the apple growers of Nova Scotia to supplement returns received for their 1949 apple crop. I am pleased to inform you that the government, after a full and thorough investigation into the marketing of the current Canadian apple crop, has approved a contribution of $500,000 for the benefit of the growers represented by the Nova Scotia apple marketing board.

The very large special grants that have been paid by the government during the war and post-war years have been in recognition of the difficulties which the war produced for the apple industry of Nova Scotia with its historical relationship to external markets, particularly that in the United Kingdom. The tree-pulling program has been a parallel measure of government assistance to aid in the adjustment from pre-war to post-war conditions. Both programs have been part of the special measures that have been undertaken to facilitate an orderly adjustment to post-war conditions. The controls on transportation, production, supplies, prices and other things have gradually been brought to an end in accordance with the declared policy of the government. Wartime price and income subsidies have been progressively eliminated. The special assistance that has been provided to the Nova Scotia apple industry has been generous, because the government has been aware of the extent of the adjustment that had to be made to meet the new conditions since the war.

The government has decided, therefore, that, after this grant of $500,000, no further assistance can be provided on account of the special difficulties of the industry in the United Kingdom market.

Yours sincerely,

James G. Gardiner

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth): It was difficult to hear all that the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture said. I did understand him to say, however, there would be no further special assistance to the industry in Nova Scotia. Do I understand that the apple growers of Nova Scotia will still be entitled to assistance under the acts which are already on the statute book, such as the Agricultural Prices Support Act?

Mr. McCubbin: The answer is yes.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if it is intended that this payment of $2 million to the British Columbia apple growers will be handled by making payment to British Columbia Tree Fruits Limited and then allowing them to disburse it to their growers in the ordinary way?

Mr. McCubbin: That is the intention. The money will go to the growers themselves, through their organization.

Mr. Fulton: Through British Columbia Tree Fruits Limited.

Mr. McCubbin: Yes.

Mr. Ferguson: I should like to ask a question in this connection. Since the finest apples in the world are grown in Ontario, and there are two by-elections coming in that province, could you make Ontario a small offer?

Mr. Knowles: They will hand out plenty of applesauce during the by-elections.

Mr. McCubbin: If I thought the Ontario apple producers needed it, they would certainly get it.

Mr. Drew: They certainly would if there were any apple orchards in those two constituencies.

Mr. Herridge: Does the $2 million mentioned as being assistance to the fruit industry of British Columbia also include assistance contemplated in respect to the million boxes of apples donated to Great Britain?

Mr. McCubbin: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask a supplementary question? Will the minister say—

Mr. Howe: This is not the question period.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister say whether he has taken note of the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that apples are not a food?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Isnor: Like the hon. member for Digby-Yarmouth (Mr. Kirk), I was unable to follow as clearly as I would have liked the statement made by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture in respect to assistance for the apple industry. As I recall it, the figure quoted was $500,000 as assistance to the apple growers of the Annapolis valley. Is the parliamentary assistant in a position to indicate the total amount by way of assistance that has been given to the apple growers of that district?

Mr. McCubbin: I speak subject to correction, but during the last number of years the amount paid out has been in the neighbourhood of $18 million.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 84, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.—Mr. Weir.

Bill No. 85, to incorporate Ukrainian National Federation of Canada.—Mr. Maybank.

THE REGULATIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR UNIFORM SYSTEM OF PUBLISHING REGULATIONS AND LAYING THEM BEFORE PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (for the Prime Minister) moved the first reading of Bill No. 89 (from the Senate), to provide for the publication of statutory regulations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

POWER COMMISSION—EXTENSION OF ACT OF 1947-48 TO YUKON TERRITORY

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (for the Minister of Resources and Development) moved the first reading of Bill No. 90 (from the Senate), to amend the Northwest Territories Power Commission Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUTTER

PRICE FOR SALE BY GOVERNMENT IN DOMESTIC MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the government prepared to sell butter to Canadian citizens at the lowest price at which it is prepared to sell butter abroad?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I thank the hon. member for giving notice of his question. The answer is no.

INCOME TAX

CONDITIONS AT PETERBOROUGH OFFICE—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. On Saturday I was in the temporary branch office of the income tax division in Peterborough. I know the minister would like to help in this connection. I found there over fifty people standing in line, waiting to have their income tax returns checked. There were six in the office, but only one man available to check. That one man was doing his best.

Mr. Howe: That is not a question.

Mr. Fraser: My question is this: Will the minister see if he cannot get sufficient staff in that office on Saturdays, when farmers and others come in from the countryside? The office serves an area of eighty or ninety miles around. I would ask the minister to see that these people are properly served.

Mr. Sinnott: Tell them to come on Friday.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I am glad to hear that there is such a rush to pay income tax in the vicinity of Peterborough. I shall bring the matter to the attention of the officials of the department, with a view to giving the most satisfactory service we can with the staff we have available there.

Mr. Fraser: I wish to thank the minister. I believe it is partly because of the advertising that they are coming in early like this; and of course Peterborough is always on time.

THE SENATE

QUESTIONS AS TO PLANS FOR REFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the acting leader of the government. Are the remarks made by the leader of the government in the other place on Friday to be taken to mean that the government is embarking upon a plan for Senate reform to be submitted to the dominion-provincial conference in the fall?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not follow the debates in the other place, and I am not aware of what my hon. friend is talking about.

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

JUDGES

REFERENCE TO REPORT AS TO COMPULSORY RETIREMENT AT SEVENTY-FIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Justice can clarify the matter I shall bring to his attention. It is reported that the government leader in the other place said that from now on members of the superior courts in the provinces may be subject to compulsory retirement at seventy-five.

Mr. Howe: I suggest that this is out of order. It is not within the rules to refer to the debates in the other place.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for Lake Centre not to refer further to the debate in the Senate. He bases his question upon a statement there. He should ask his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will just ask it in this way: From now on are judges to be retired at seventy-five, and are future appointments to be subject to retirement at that age?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I should not be surprised at this question being asked by a lay member of the House of Commons, but I am surprised that a lawyer should ask it.

An hon. Member: Answer.

Mr. Garson: I am sure my hon. friend must know that the reason why judges of provincial courts cannot be called upon to retire at the age of seventy-five is that there is a provision in the British North America Act which prevents it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may be allowed—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to speak on a question of privilege, since the minister went outside the ambit of my question, may I ask whether the British North America Act is to be amended by parliament to make such a provision?

PRIVATE BILLS

PRAIRIE TRANSMISSION LINES LIMITED

The house resumed, from Friday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benidickson for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to incorporate Prairie Transmission Lines Limited, and the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Edmonton East): "That this question be now put".

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last before the house I was congratulating the government of Alberta upon its good fortune in having had such valuable discoveries of oil and natural gas within the boundaries of that province and I was pointing out the increasing use to which these commodities are being put in modern life. Both oil and gas are becoming very popular for household use. There is not a house on the street on which I live in St. John's that does not use oil, and no doubt other hon. members can say the same of their own communities. Within a short time it is likely that oil will completely displace coal as household fuel.

Where there is a large supply of natural gas, as there is in Alberta and Saskatchewan and in many portions of the United States, it seems to be more popular than oil, not only for household but for industrial purposes. Gas has supplanted coal for a number of uses. For a while in Alberta it was used to manufacture gasoline and alcohols and many other by-products. In the field of transportation, from the motorboat of the fisherman to the motorcar of the ordinary citizen, to the great locomotives and even the large steamships, oil is now almost generally supplanting coal.

The importance to Canada of these valuable discoveries can hardly be overestimated. Remarkable developments have taken place within such a short time and are bound to bring with them industrial developments of a scope never contemplated by the government of that province a few years ago.

This is a private bill which seeks certain concessions. It looks innocent enough, but the fact is that it has to do with the transmission of both oil and gas to various places outside Alberta. One wonders why this bill has aroused so much opposition. As I see it, the opposition is due to the fact that there is no provision in the bill which would prevent the promoters or the directors of the company from exporting gas or oil to the United States when the needs of provinces of Canada other than Alberta are not satisfied.

I am aware that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has said that he has the assurance of the sponsors that they will undertake to have this line built through Canada. If that is so, why should there not be a provision in the bill to that effect? If that provision had been in the bill there would not have been the opposition there has been to this measure.

It has been asked what this bill will mean to the people of eastern Canada. They want to know if it will mean cheaper gas. People are naturally interested in getting cheaper gasoline for their motorcars, cheaper oil for their homes, cheaper gasoline and kerosene for their fishing schooners and motorboats. If the price is to be determined by the supply, and a lot of oil is brought to the surface in Alberta, it will mean reduced importations from the United States, with the result—this has already happened in the prairie provinces—that the price of gas and oil will be reduced for other users.

Transportation by pipe line is much cheaper than by tank car. Anyone requiring gas or oil for domestic or industrial purposes along the route of the pipe line through which gas or oil is being transported will be able to benefit through the decreased cost of transportation. I understand that it will cost 55 cents a barrel to bring oil from the neighbourhood of Calgary to the head of the lakes by pipe line, whereas it costs $1.68 per barrel to transport it by tank car.

Since the last time we discussed this measure I have been reading Industrial Canada to see what the latest news was on the developments in Alberta. I found that the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association had been holding meetings in different cities in Alberta and had made some important statements about the future of that province and the cities he was visiting. I should like to quote from this magazine, the issue of March, 1950, at page 57, where reference is made to Alberta's oil production. The president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association said:

> In this part of the country, however, we have been abundantly blessed in many different ways. Our manufacturing production is increasing. Medicine Hat, rural and urban, has a gross value in excess of $16 million. The Alberta oil and gas industry has already uncovered natural resources worth at least two and one-half billion dollars, despite the fact that it has so far completed only a minute fraction of the ultimate thorough exploration job. This is quickly resulting in the elimination of the greatest single drain on Canada's United States dollar supply and the achievement by Canada of a long term favourable "balance of trade". This augurs well for the future of our well-endowed province.

Speaking at Edmonton, Mr. Carry, chairman of the Edmonton branch of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, said:

> . . . a new wave of prosperity will flood Edmonton district and the west as a result of industrial stimulation provided by oil discoveries.

Mr. East, the national president, said:

> . . . I will not dwell at length on the Alberta oil situation, other than to say that by and through Alberta's oil production programming, coupled with Alberta's outstanding diversified economy, the future is indeed one of the brightest for any province in the entire dominion.
>
> It is, however, stimulating to all Canadians to pause for a moment to consider the progress made during the last year alone in some of the major enterprises in Edmonton and district. Oil brought more than one hundred new businesses to the city of Edmonton last year, as compared with fifty in 1948. Nine major industrial concerns committed themselves to multi-million dollar construction programs for the year 1950. Four of these projects alone will require investments in capital construction amounting to about $35 million. Furthermore, about three-quarters of the oil wells in Alberta are in the general Edmonton area. In addition, Edmonton is only forty-five miles from the Redwater field, considered to be the greatest oil field discovered anywhere in the world in recent years.

I have quoted these statements by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association to show how important these discoveries are, and how important it is that at the very beginning this development should be conducted along the right lines. According to recent figures, we know that they have discovered in Alberta enough oil and gas to give them a reserve for ninety years. They have seven trillion cubic feet of gas. I should like to point out that that amount of gas is only equal to the annual consumption in the United States. Of course we know that it is only at the beginning so far as Alberta is concerned, but production in Canada is still far behind that of the United States.

I wonder whether anyone has estimated whether it would be better for Canada to export directly from the area around Calgary and Edmonton to the western section of the United States and then carry the gas to Vancouver, and import gas and oil in other areas, or to retain the gas and oil within Canada first and export it from Vancouver to the cities of the western United States. As I understand it, there are four principal steps in getting oil and gas to the consumer. They are—after prospecting—production, refining, transportation and distribution. The other evening I quoted from a book entitled "A National Policy for the Oil Industry." I quote now from page 58:

The struggle over pipe line policy has been going on for several generations. Control of transportation facilities was John D. Rockefeller's key weapon, and the strategic importance of transportation has not declined in the oil industry.

The author goes on to deal with the trouble and confusion into which the oil industry managed to get in the United States because it did not have proper legislation when it began. I believe that the government of the province of Alberta is going to profit by the mistakes made in the United States; but just to show how serious the mistakes might be I should like to point out that it was decided by the Hepburn act of 1906 that pipe lines were common carriers. There was a test of what they could do and what their powers were. The case went to the court and was buried in consideration by the interstate commerce commission. At page 59 the author of the book I have cited said:

After a generation or more of prodding, the interstate commerce commission began its investigation of the petroleum pipe line situation in 1934, and presented its first report in 1940.

That was six years afterwards. The report was not a final order; they reported again in 1944, and that is the last that has been heard of it. It seems to me that it would be a wise course for the country to take the utmost precautions at the beginning of the development to see that legislation governing the transportation of gas and oil is on a sound basis. I believe a Liberal member on this side of the house stated that he was in favour of the bill because the opposition seemed to be in favour of a monopoly. As I understand it, the opposition is not in favour of a monopoly, but favours a policy of safeguarding the interests of the western provinces before gas is exported to the United States. That is a position which everyone can understand, and to which I believe no one in the United States can raise any objection.

The United States have very much larger gas reserves than Canada, and they have oil. The Standard Oil Company of California is one of their largest companies, much larger than all the companies in Canada put together. It is in a position to export oil to the New England states. Therefore the disadvantages which the northwestern states would suffer by reason of not being served first with this pipe line would not be as serious as the disadvantages of the provinces in the western part of Canada if the line does not pass through them.

I agree that gas and oil are commodities which, like water, could be the subject of a monopoly. Not everyone can have a pipe line, although in the United States there are twenty or thirty trunk lines, as well as numerous branch lines. It seems to me that this is the time to insist that the right legislation and the right conditions should be laid down for the transportation of both oil and gas. In connection with another measure of the same sort, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stated that two sessions ago when it was introduced into the house the promise was made that the company would not export oil to the United States before the needs of Canada were satisfied. He stated the other night that it was because of that promise not being kept, because the line is to be built through the United States, that he is opposed to this bill.

In the last session, in moving the second reading of the bill to incorporate the Alberta Natural Gas Company, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) said he noticed for the first time that the powers sought by the company included the right to export gas outside of Canada. It seems to me that no member, not even a minister of the crown, can give assurances as to what a private company may or may not do. That is laid down by law, and I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to what the law is in this respect.

In the first place I should like to say that there is the Pipe Lines Act of 1949, with which most hon. members are familiar. In my reading of that act, it seems to me there is no power to prevent a company from transporting gas or oil across the border to the United States. In fact, it seems to me that act gives it the power to do so.

According to sections 9, 11 and 12, a company wishing to build a transmission line must make application to the board of transport commissioners, bring in its various plans to show where the line is to be constructed, and if other conditions are satisfactory, it is then entitled to a permit to construct the line. That, of course, is not the only procedure through which it has to go. Whilst dealing with this act, I should like to draw attention to the difference in treatment between oil lines and gas lines as found in parts II and III of this act. Those who have oil transmission lines may be declared common carriers under section 39, but there is no such provision covering gas lines.

I am aware that, in addition to those provisions governing the matter, there is also the petroleum and natural gas board of Alberta. If a company makes application to that board and receives favourable consideration, the board will report to the government of the province of Alberta, which government would have the last word. The premier of that province has stated a policy, which I think has been read here before, and which briefly consists in prohibiting any export until the needs of the province of Alberta are satisfied, not only its present needs but its long-term needs. After that, if it is satisfied that a surplus exists over and above those requirements sufficient to justify export under sound conservation practices, the government will approve the export of such surplus, with each application being considered on its own merits and in the light of all the prevailing factors. It will be a condition of each export permit that the Canadian requirements must be given priority. The member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has dealt with that situation, and has pointed out that it may not be considered within the powers of the government of Alberta to say whether or not gas can be exported.

There is on the statute books another act which was brought to our attention by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act. According to that act the governor in council may make regulations or may grant a licence for export, but I understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the one who passes upon that.

I believe I have said sufficient for hon. members to realize that this is a most important subject. The value of this pipe line, not only to the province but to Canada in earning and saving United States dollars, as well as the industries it is going to establish, justifies giving serious consideration to it. I suggest that United States interests will not be jeopardized, and in addition that an examination of the map published in the pamphlet entitled "Natural Gas in Alberta and British Columbia" at pages 10 and 11, would seem to indicate that the chief discoveries in Alberta now centre around Edmonton. The distance a transmission line would have to traverse from there to Vancouver would be shorter than the route through the United States to the cities of Seattle and Portland on the Pacific Coast.

There may be, of course, some reason why it may be more expensive to construct such a line, but I am informed and believe that that route, which has been advocated by so many members on this side of the house, would be preferable to the other route. Other hon. members have argued that the Canadian route will be of special benefit to the cities and towns along its course, and afford those towns opportunities which might otherwise never be given to them. I know that some hon. members are weary of hearing that statement repeated, but is there anything unsound or anything that is not sensible in it? The member for Kamloops has said that if the route does not go through the Kamloops district it is unlikely that gas would be brought up there at any time. Since the advantage of having a gas line to serve these towns is a tremendous one, I believe all hon. members should give serious consideration to the necessity of inserting a provision in this bill to make sure the pipe line does serve that part of the country.

The hon. member for Kamloops also told us of a resolution passed by the British Columbia legislature, to the effect that it would like to see this pipe line go through the province of British Columbia before it goes to the United States. I feel sure the government of the province of Alberta will find it difficult to turn a deaf ear to such a plea. If unity in Canada is to have the meaning it should have, then a request by the government of one province for such a reasonable measure should meet with a favourable response. If the pipe line is built as requested, it will mean a great deal to the unity and solidarity of the nation. I trust, therefore, that other hon. members will feel, as we do, that this line should go through British Columbia first and may afterwards be continued to the United States. Perhaps the quantity of oil and gas in the province of Alberta will prove so extensive when further discoveries are made that it will be feasible to have another line go south to the United States.

Other features in connection with the construction of the transmission line have not been neglected by previous speakers. The employment provided by the construction of the line, and the furnishing of the pipes, will mean a lot to the people of Canada at a time when unemployment is greater than it has been in any year since before the war. The money will go back into the steel mills and to the iron ore mines. Since the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) represents a constituency in which iron ore is found, we trust that industry will receive some benefit.

The other day I noticed an article which spoke of the benefit that would come from the development of the iron ore mines in Quebec. It stated that storage tanks had been built at Seven Islands to contain a million gallons of gasoline. It will be seen, therefore, that all parts of the country benefit from these developments. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Canadian route, which should prove to be popular with all Canadians, and which has been endorsed by the people in the western provinces, will receive the endorsement of hon. members of this house.

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken upon this bill, but I should like to make a few remarks with reference to the question at issue. As the house knows, I am the sponsor of another bill which is similar in nature to this one. More members have spoken upon it than upon this one. There is some possibility of its getting second reading before Easter. While I should desire to make some more extended remarks upon the bill before the house at the present time, it is not convenient at this moment to do so. If the house will agree, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Fulford), that the debate be adjourned.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Maybank moves, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Fulford), that this debate be now adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Green: No. Will you call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of adopting the motion will please say "yea".

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those contrary will say "nay".

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Maybank) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Abbott	Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Anderson	Gauthier (Sudbury)
Applewhaite	Gauthier (Lapointe)
Arsenault	Gauthier (Portneuf)
Ashbourne	George
Bater	Gibson
Belzile	Gingues
Bennett	Goode
Bertrand	Gour (Russell)
Blanchette	Gourd (Chapleau)
Blue	Gregg
Boisvert	Hansell
Boivin	Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Boucher	Harrison
Bourget	Healy
Bradette	Hellyer
Bradley	Helme
Brisson	Henderson
Brown (Essex West)	Henry
Campney	Hetland
Carter	Howe
Cavers	Huffman
Chevrier	Isnor
Clark	James
Claxton	Jeffery
Cleaver	Jutras
Cloutier	Kickham
Corry	Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)
Cote (Matapedia-Matane)	Lafontaine
Cote (Verdun-La Salle)	Laing
Croll	Langlois (Gaspe)
Darroch	Lapointe
Dechene	Larson
Decore	Lefrancois
Dewar	Leger
Dion	Lesage
Douglas	Little
Dumas	Low
Eyre	Macdonald (Edmonton East)
Fair	MacDougall
Fauteux	MacKenzie
Ferrie	MacNaught
Fournier (Hull)	Macnaughton
Fulford	McCann
Garland	McCubbin
Garson

McCulloch	Robinson
McCusker	Rooney
McIvor	Shaw
McLean (Huron-Perth)	Sinnott
McWilliam	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Major	Smith (Moose Mountain)
Masse	Stick
Martin	Stuart (Charlotte)
Matthews	Studer
Maybank	Thomson
Mitchell	Viau
Murray (Oxford)	Ward
Murray (Cariboo)	Warren
Mutch	Weir
Pinard	Welbourn
Pouliot	Whiteside
Power	Whitman
Prudham	Winkler
Richard (Gloucester)	Wood
Riley	Wylie—132.
Robertson

NAYS

Messrs:

Balcer	Hatfield
Blair	Herridge
Brooks	Higgins
Browne (St. John's West)	Hodgson
Bryce	Homuth
Casselman	Jones
Catherwood	Knight
Charlton	Knowles
Coldwell	Macdonnell (Greenwood)
Courtemanche	MacInnis
Coyle	McGregor
Diefenbaker	McLure
Drew	Noseworthy
Ferguson	Pearkes
Fleming	Smith (Calgary West)
Fraser	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Fulton	Tustin
Gillis	White (Hastings-Peterborough)
Graydon	White (Middlesex East)
Green	—40.
Harkness

On motion of Mr. Maybank the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Harris (Danforth): This looks like a private government measure. Had I voted, I would have voted against it, and spoken against it. Inasmuch as I am paired with the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Breithaupt)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The next order of business.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS COMPANY

The house resumed, from Friday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Maybank for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the motion of Mr. MacDougall: "That this question be now put."

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members for having passed the motion, thereby giving me an opportunity to speak on this bill. As hon. members will recall, at four minutes to nine on Friday night I rose in my place to take part in this pipe lines debate. This will be the fourteenth hour of debate on these pipeline bills during this session.

I said on Friday night that I was in favour of an all-Canadian route. I also said that I thought Canadians were capable of manufacturing the materials for such a pipe line. I think all hon. members would like to see an all-Canadian route. At the same time I believe we are interested, in the debate, in looking at both sides of the picture. I believe Canadians as a whole would like to see their own country helped as much as possible, and I am sure those people residing in British Columbia would like to have this all-important pipe line run through their province, so that industrial and heating facilities may be more readily obtainable.

On Friday last I held in my hand a pamphlet distributed by the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, mapping a route from Edmonton through to Jasper, through the Yellowhead Pass to Kamloops, with feeder lines to Vernon, Kelowna, Penticton and the great smelter plant at Trail. Then the main line continued on to Hope, Abbotsford and the great city of Vancouver, thence on down the west coast to Bellingham, Everett, Seattle and Portland.

This pamphlet, distributed by the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, indicates that this is the only company which claims it has constantly sponsored an all-Canadian route to take gas to the Pacific coast. The pamphlet stresses the shortage of United States dollars —a condition which does exist—and that every effort should be made to obtain that route.

The construction of an all-Canadian pipe line will require a large expenditure, and it necessarily follows that the more of the line built in Canada, the more will be spent in this country for its construction. When the gas is sold at the United States border, south of Vancouver, it will command more United States dollars for gas delivered than if the line were built directly south, out of Canada, through a shorter Canadian pipe line.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) stated that this pipe line company have said they have already had Ford, Bacon and Davis, engineers, complete a preliminary survey and design, at this point, for an oil pipe line from Edmonton to Vancouver. Then they propose to follow exactly the same route; and that detailed data and information are now being completed.

It is the hope of all of us that we may see the completion of an all-Canadian route. I believe that at the present time the Steel Company of Canada located at Hamilton, Ontario, is capable of rolling sixteen-inch and eighteen-inch pipe, which is not sufficient in diameter to take care of natural gas. I am informed that, for a line of this type to be successful, at least a thirty-inch pipe is required. There is no doubt that the engineering facilities available here in Canada are sufficient to design such a plant capable of rolling steel here in our own country. I am also informed however that the cost of installing this type of machinery would be about $5 million.

The Westcoast Transmission Company Limited had a bill sponsored in the house some considerable time ago. It was during the dying days of parliament prior to the election of June 27, 1949. An act was passed by parliament on April 30 of that year approving this company's application.

As the pamphlet distributed by the Westcoast Transmission Company outlined a Canadian route, it made everything look rosy to anyone reading it. One may look through this pamphlet from cover to cover but one will not find the signature of the president or of any of the directors. I suggest therefore that a pamphlet of this type is nothing but a pure propaganda scheme. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is a capable lawyer. I ask him, if he received a pamphlet of this kind, which bore no signature, whether he would accept it as bona fide.

Reference to the statutes of 1949, chapter 36, page 61, shows that a charter was issued to the Trans-Northern Pipe Line Company. Section 6 states:

> The company, subject to the provisions of any general legislation relating to pipe lines for the transportation of oil or any liquid product or by-product thereof which is enacted by parliament, may
>
> (a) within or outside Canada construct, purchase, lease, or otherwise acquire, and hold, develop, operate, maintain, control, lease, mortgage, create liens upon, sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of and turn to account any and all pipe lines, for the transportation of oil including pumping stations, terminals, storage tanks or reservoirs and all works relative thereto for use in connection with the said pipe lines; and own, lease, sell, operate and maintain aircraft and aerodromes for the purpose of its undertaking, together with the facilities required for the operation of such aircraft and aerodromes; and own, lease, operate and maintain interstation telephone, teletype and telegraph communication systems and, subject to The Radio Act, 1938, and any other statute relating to radio, own, lease, operate and maintain interstation radio communication facilities.

The only company which has applied to construct pipe lines all within Canada is Western Pipe Lines. If hon. members will turn to the 1949 statutes, chapter 38, they will find that under section 6 this company has a charter to build only within Canada.

Then, if we turn to chapter 37 of the 1949 statutes, we find that section 6 deals with the charter given to the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited. This section deals with power to construct and to operate pipe lines, paragraph (a) giving permission to build, as follows:

> (a) within the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia or outside Canada—

And I suggest the words "or outside Canada" should be plain enough for anyone—> —construct, purchase, lease, or otherwise acquire, and hold, develop, operate, maintain,—

And so on. May I state clearly again that this company's charter is to build a pipe line either within or outside Canada.

So much time has been taken in debate to show that this company will build in Canada, and that it is the only one that wishes to do so, that I would like the house to know just who these people are. I am taking the words of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) who, when he spoke about the Westcoast Transmission Company on November 15, 1949, as reported at page 1811 of Hansard, attempted to show that this company has an all-Canadian charter and is serving Canada's interests first.

This is what the hon. member said, in part:

> It has been estimated that it will probably cost $170 million to build the pipe line no matter which company builds it. The money will be raised in Canada and the United States. . . Someone has said something about forty minutes, and I hope it was not a member from British Columbia. I will take my stand right now and vote on the matter as a British Columbia member. Just to show who these people are who are in the Westcoast Transmission Company, may I give you the names of some of the companies in the group. There is the Pacific Petroleums Limited, Calgary, which is a subsidiary. The Peace River Natural Gas Company Limited; Sunray Oil Corporation of Tulsa and Los Angeles—I wish some of my friends would check on these companies. There is the Pacific Western Oil Corporation of Los Angeles and the Tidewater Associated Oil Company of San Francisco. All of these companies have several hundred million dollars behind them. They are the companies through which the Westcoast Transmission Company will finance the undertaking.

As I said before, after their charter was granted, this company made application to build a pipe-line route through the United States. Their application was filed on May 10, 1949. So all the talk of this company wanting to build an all-Canadian route is utter nonsense when section 6 of chapter 37, page 68, of the statutes of 1949, gives this company the right to build within or without Canada. That should be very clear to all hon. members of the house.

There are several routes which this company has applied for through Canada but which have all been withdrawn. At the moment it seems to me that they are in favour of commencing at Edmonton, going south along the Canadian Pacific railroad to Calgary, then on to Macleod, then west to Pincher Creek and Coleman and through the Crowsnest Pass to Fernie, B.C., leaving Canada at Kingsgate to a terminus at Sandpoint, Idaho, with a branch to Trail, B.C. This application was filed on May 11, 1949, but no action whatsoever has been taken and it has remained dormant since that date. However, it is still on file with the board of transport commissioners and no steps have been taken by the Westcoast Transmission Company to withdraw their application.

The Yellowhead pass route would commence at Edmonton, continue west along the Canadian National main line through Yellowhead pass to Tete Jaune Cache, then southward to Kamloops, Princeton and Vancouver, with a branch line from Tete Jaune Cache to Dawson Creek and a short branch line from Abbotsford near Vancouver to Huntingdon on the United States border. This application was filed on October 13, 1949, and was set down for hearing on November 23, 1949. It was then adjourned at the request of the applicant to February 21, 1950, and again adjourned at the request of the applicant to a date to be set later by the Alberta conservation board to grant a permit to export.

All that parliament is being asked to do is to give these companies now applying for a charter the same opportunity and the same privilege as was given to the Westcoast Transmission Company. We on this side of the house do not believe in monopolies and, therefor, would like to see some competition. In view of the facts that I have stated, will any one suggest that the Sunray Oil Corporation of Tulsa and Los Angeles or the Pacific Western Oil Corporation of Los Angeles or the Tidewater Associated Oil Company of San Francisco are interested in developing Canada first? The answer is, "Certainly not". If the Westcoast Transmission Company are sincere they will make application immediately to withdraw their application to build outside Canada and state clearly that they will follow an all-Canadian route.

I am bringing down a bill entitled, "An act to amend an act to incorporate Westcoast Transmission Company Limited," which reads:

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Paragraph (a) of section six of an act to amend an act to incorporate Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, chapter thirty-seven of the statutes of 1949 (first session) is amended by striking out the words, "or outside Canada," in the second line of the paragraph.

Tomorrow I am bringing down another bill dealing with all companies that might apply for charters and providing that they shall state specifically that an all-Canadian route shall be followed.

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, just in order to set the record straight and to satisfy my hon. friends to my left, I want to say that I am not speaking on behalf, or under threat, of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Neither am I speaking on behalf of any of the pipe line companies involved in these particular bills. I think we all realize that the time has come to make some decision on this issue. I think it is a fact well recognized that we have wasted considerable time of this house, and I say "wasted" because I mean just that. I know many hon. members will take exception to that word.

Certain hon. gentlemen have led this filibuster. My good friend, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), has taken a very prominent part and I must say he has done an able job. When I see examples of his urbane manner and persuasive ways in presenting his viewpoint I begin to feel very sorry for the many jurymen who must have been led up and down various garden paths during his long and distinguished career at the bar.

My good friend, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), has also co-operated. While the hon. member probably lacks the great subtlety in the law possessed by the hon. member for Calgary West, he certainly has made up for that lack in the power of his invective. He has done a wonderful job.

Then my good friend, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), has been quite prominent in this. I know he has been doing his job in this regard with his customary sincerity. At the same time it struck me that he felt he was leading a second crusade to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the Saracens. The other night I heard him calling on the shades of senators of the past and present to come and speak in defence of the great people of British Columbia. He also mentioned the gentleman whom I have had the honour to succeed, Mr. A. W. Neill. There is a gentleman who would have made a great contribution to the Senate, but it seems to me that Independents do not often reach that chamber. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra suggested that if Mr. Neill had been here he would have undertaken to defend British Columbia.

You, Mr. Speaker, were here when my great predecessor was a member of this house and I am sure you will recall that among his many qualities was a great native sagacity and shrewdness. He was a hard man to whom to sell a bill of goods and I never heard of him buying any part of the Brooklyn bridge. I am sure that before he would have accepted this gold brick he would have taken a few borings and would have had an assay made so that he would have a pretty good idea whether he should or should not support the bill.

I do not think any of us take second place to anyone else in favouring or desiring an all-Canadian route, but I do not think this house or the committee of the whole is the place to discuss that matter. I am certain some of the hon. members who have spoken do not realize what a highly technical matter this is. There are 60 members of the committee on railways, telegraph lines and shipping and I am sure that many of them are competent to deal with this matter. I am convinced that all those 60 members of that committee will take a close interest in this bill.

I am amazed that the opponents of this bill have appeared so anxious to keep it out of that committee. They seem to me to want to enjoy their own ignorance because I am certain that most of those who have spoken know probably just a little less about pipe lines than I do.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Impossible.

Mr. Gibson: I am sure the hon. member for Calgary West would make a great contribution to that committee. He is not a member of the committee but I imagine when the time comes he will have the Whip have his name replace that of some other member of his party as a member of that committee.

I wonder what has been accomplished by this discussion. It has not all been bad and I would not be unfair enough to say that it has. I think the government has been made conscious of the magnitude of this problem and how interested the people of Canada are in it. I think we have assured ourselves that when the bill goes to the committee it will receive thorough study. It is quite conceivable that as a result of this discussion we have delayed the provision of cheap gas to the Pacific coast by quite a number of months and we may have given the impression to the people of Canada that parliament is being used more or less as a tool to maintain a monopoly for the one company that already has received a charter from this house.

I feel that any further discussion of this matter is a sheer waste of time. Drawing on my biblical training, and by way of paraphrase, may I say that this house probably will not hold him guiltless who taketh our time in vain. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) will probably subscribe to that.

The Westcoast Transmission Company has a charter now. Sometimes I have been annoyed by the tactics they have used. It seems to me that they have played the old shell game on us and have probably taken us for suckers. That is a good Canadian expression and I think it fits. They made a rather feeble and nebulous promise of an all-Canadian route when they came here in the first instance. We saw fit to pass their bill in good faith. In compliance with their promise they applied for an all-Canadian route before the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada on May 10. They are a pretty shrewd and sharp bunch, and it seems to me that they have had some good legal advice. On May 11 they applied for an alternative route for export to the United States. I admire their political skill and vast experience.

I realize that most newspaper reporters do not bother running down to the board of transport commissioners to see what's cooking. They heard that an all-Canadian route had been applied for on May 10, and the Westcoast Transmission Company thought that by shoving the other application through on May 11 nobody would notice it. As a matter of fact, they succeeded very well. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) has followed this matter with great interest, but when the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) mentioned to the house some four months later than the company had filed an alternative application the hon. member for Calgary West had never even heard of it. He denied it, and I am sure he did so in good faith, because he was not aware of it.

It seems to me it was a shrewd move. It certainly appears to me that the Westcoast Transmission people were not acting in good faith. As to their application for a pipe line permit down through Kingsgate, the Westcoast Transmission people have been wise enough not to embarrass their supporters in the house by asking for a hearing. They are just letting it lie dormant. On the other hand, they withdrew their application for their original plan to build a line from the Athabasca down through Tete Jaune Cache into Vancouver, and they have now replaced it with an application to build a pipe line through the Yellowhead pass about which we have had so much discussion here. On checking with the board of transport commissioners I find they have applied to have that application adjourned sine die. I am not a lawyer, but the expression "sine die" always strikes me as one of those terms of legal gobbledygook that could mean some enchanted evening, when it is springtime in the rockies, or something like that.

A good many of the people connected with the Westcoast Transmission Company are personal friends of mine, but I resented very much the fact that at the beginning of this session they sent us a brochure which had the words on it, "revised, January, 1950". In it they showed a beautiful pipe line route marked all in red through the Yellowhead pass and down to Vancouver. They made sure they did not show that they had made application to go through Kingsgate into the United States. I do not think that people who are asking for these things should try to take advantage of simple-minded members of the House of Commons to that extent.

I have been sorry to hear some of the things that have been said during the course of this debate. In one instance two very prominent and highly regarded people of the province of British Columbia were quoted as being parties to a vicious steal. I think that was a rather unfortunate remark, and I would not like to think that it was made in any derogatory sense. Probably the member was carried away by the enthusiasm of the moment. One of the opponents of this bill has said it, but I certainly would not like to think that the remarks concerning those two gentlemen—and I will not compound the libel by naming them—were supported by other opponents of the bill such as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) because I think it would be unfair to suggest that was so.

Some mention has been made in the house of the fact that the legislature of British Columbia passed a resolution supporting an all-Canadian pipe line. It was very good of the legislature of that province to give us gratuitous advice. I think they are expressing the views of most people in the province and certainly of the British Columbia members of parliament. For them to pass a resolution supporting an all-Canadian route is something like my presenting a motion to the house that we are opposed to sin. I think every hon. member would be willing to support me on such a resolution, even some of those who might be interested in trying it.

An editorial in the Vancouver Sun has been quoted extensively. That newspaper has been undertaking to chide some of the Liberal members who have supported the passage of this particular pipe line bill. It seems to me that the editorial department and the news department sometimes get a little mixed up about the direction in which they are going. There is in the press gallery a very able correspondent of the Vancouver Sun, Mr. Dillon O'Leary, and his views do not seem to coincide entirely with those of the editorial department of the Vancouver Sun. I was particularly interested in one article written on the filibustering debate we had in the house and which appeared in that paper on November 5. Mr. O'Leary starts out by saying:

> Mock piety, tear-jerking pleas and lewd humour were part of the weird act in the Commons Friday night during the filibuster in the now famous gas pipe line battle.

Mr. O'Leary is a competent observer, and that appears to be the impression which he, as the man on the job here, gained from some of the debates we have had on this issue. He goes on to say in the article:

> Only company holding incorporation for piping Alberta gas to the Pacific coast is Westcoast Transmission Company. Parliamentary sponsors of its incorporation last session, Senator J. W. de B. Farris (Lib., Vancouver) and Mr. Cruickshank have backed moves this session to block incorporation of any other gas pipe line.

To me it is almost humorous to observe the line-up of speakers in this debate. An honourable and distinguished senator is allied with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). Then there is the leader of the opposition, the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell), the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). If I have overlooked anybody, all he has to do is to call out his name. It is very interesting. Then we have the resolution of the British Columbia legislature and the comments of the Vancouver Sun, and I understand there are also representations from a number of Liberal organizations in Vancouver Centre. They are all in there together. Pipe-line bills certainly make very strange bedfellows. I know that you will appreciate why I am a little hesitant about getting into bed with that particular crew.

I wonder what we can do with the bill if we give it second reading today. I should like to plead with my hon. friends on this side of the house that we can proceed from here. I do not think any particular harm has been done so far. It seems to me that if the bill is given second reading and is sent to a committee we could very well ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) —and I am sure he would be glad to grant our request—to give us some information on the policy of the Canadian government as to pipe lines. To be fair to him, it seems to me that he has tried several times to provide us with information of that kind, but in almost every instance there has been an attempt to distort his words or to draw from them conclusions that were not fair. I certainly do not have to apologize for anything the Minister of Trade and Commerce has done. But when it is suggested that he is a party to some nefarious scheme to sell out British Columbia for the benefit of Ontario, I hardly think that is fair. The minister's record since he has been in public life is not one that would indicate it is possible for him to stoop so low; I believe everyone in the house recognizes that.

The building of a pipe line to the Pacific coast is a difficult problem. I know the member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) was stranded on the coast for eight days when, at my invitation, he came there last January. The engineering difficulties connected with the problem of running the pipe line carrying 750 pounds of gas through the Fraser valley must scare him a little. As I have said, I am not an engineer, but I do appreciate the difficulties that are involved. I should like to see these pipe-line experts appear before a committee of the house, and tell us how they can build that pipe line down the Fraser valley to make sure it works every day. We do not want it to be like our railroads that are sometimes out of operation for ten, twenty or thirty days.

As hon. members will probably recall, when this pipe-line proposition was first mooted in Canada I was of the opinion that the Canadian National Railways were passing up a tremendous opportunity that might prove profitable. When I hear Mr. Gordon, the president of the railroad, suggesting that it have a new capital structure, I wish he would present some new ideas about the transportation of gas or oil. I would hope that the government has not entirely abandoned the idea that it might be possible for the Canadian National Railways to get into this business.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would plead wih my friends of the Conservative party, and the C.C.F. party, to allow this bill to go to committee in order that we can get some information on it. So far as I am concerned, I can assure you that if I am satisfied a Canadian route is feasible, both economically and from an engineering standpoint, when this bill comes back for third reading if there is any way I can assist in ensuring the pipe line will be built in Canada, I shall support those hon. members requesting that route, and not the pipe-line company that wishes to go through the United States.

(Translation):

Mr. Henri Courtemanche (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, since a very important principle is involved, it should surprise no one to see Quebec members rise and speak, after many others, against the bill respecting the Alberta Natural Gas Company.

Mr. Speaker, may I say at once that I am amazed, even shocked, at the attitude shown by certain Liberal members since we began discussing this private bill concerning the Alberta Natural Gas Company. Of course, some may ascribe my surprise to inexperience. This, indeed, is only my second session and I still have a lot to learn. One thing, however, that is very well known to me, even if I lack the long experience of most of my colleagues, is the feeling of my constituents and, may I add without boasting, the feeling of most of the people in my province.

The people of Labelle county and of the surrounding constituencies find it strange that members of parliament are always tempted to surrender to commissions and bureaucratic bodies their authority and prerogatives, as well as the rights and duties of their office. The bill concerning the Alberta Natural Gas Company is a good, or rather a deplorable example, of a state of affairs about which the people are complaining bitterly.

It is our duty as members to examine this bill. This means we should have some knowledge, some information about this matter. It is not sufficient to vote for or against the bill, once the title has been read. We must know what is involved. Liberal members are willing to approve the measure immediately, without even taking into account its implications. When we censure this attitude, they say: "If anything goes wrong, the board of transport commissioners will deal with it". Indeed, the board will look after it. Having become nothing but rubber stamps, the members vote blindly. When it is time to decide, to judge, to take a definite line of action, the move is made by bureaucrats, commissioners, or someone else. The board of transport commissioners is not to blame in any way. But the principle involved is very important.

The Alberta Natural Gas Company has applied for a charter to build pipe lines. According to the law, members of the house can grant or, if they see fit, deny the charter. We, the Conservative members of the opposition, naturally ask, and it is nothing more than our duty to inquire, what route these pipe lines will follow. No answer has been given. Can we, the representatives of the people, grant the charter notwithstanding, saying, with the Liberals, that if anything goes wrong, the board of transport commissioners will see to it? No, there are cases where, under the law, it is up to the board of transport commissioners to assume its responsibilities. In this instance, however, the members of this house must acquit themselves of their obligations. We find it strange, I repeat, that they fail to do so.

If ten or fifteen years hence we should find out that these pipe lines follow such a route that they do not favour Canadian interests, or that they even are contrary to them, who will be held responsible? The board of transport commissioners? What use would that be since the members of this board are not elected by the people? The members of parliament themselves would be held to blame, and rightly so, since we would have neglected, when the moment came, to carry out our duties as representatives of the people.

Even government supporters are sometimes heard to complain that the members of this house are too often ignored when the time comes to make an important decision or to acquaint the people with an order in council or other such orders.

In October, 1949, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was the first to be surprised on reading in certain newspapers about the statement he intended to make in the House of Commons. That statement dealt with the setting-up of controls on imports of certain goods such as pig iron, iron ingots, billets, bars, rod, et cetera. Members of the house were not informed of this order yet the news was already published in the press and known to the general public. Busy with their parliamentary duties, the members were the last to be informed. I have a great deal of admiration for newspapermen and I was highly amused to see that they had scooped the members of the House of Commons. Besides, in this particular case, the incident was not of major importance. However, it enabled us to realize once more that a very dangerous tendency exists. No longer do members of parliament, the elected representatives of the people, administer public affairs; bureaucrats, high officials and some not so high, who, nevertheless have been given impressive powers, now crack the whip.

We know that a good many Liberals do not like that procedure; they do not want to be informed of tax increases or reductions through the medium of the radio or the press. Here is a wonderful opportunity for them to prove that they are sincere by refusing to entrust their responsibilities to the board of transport commissioners or to the government of Alberta. By acting otherwise, they let most dangerous precedents pile up, and some day we may awake to find out that a board of some kind has simply decided to abolish parliament. That may seem fantastic, but the representatives of the people are surrendering their authority to civil servants at such a rate that we can very well expect the worst.

I was also rather surprised to see the Liberal members attach only minor importance to the conservation of our natural resources. In opposing the bill concerning the Alberta Natural Gas Company, we seek only to protect our natural resources. Given a free hand, the company would be in a position to deal with the oil and gas resources of Alberta in its own interest, which may be detrimental to the interests of the country as a whole, and according to its own whims which may be prejudicial to the whole population.

We have no right to authorize a company to use our natural resources as it sees fit. We should first know exactly about the company's intentions, its plans and projects, and then prescribe conditions based on the most elementary caution. Because we ask questions, because we want to know, for instance, what route the Alberta Natural Gas Company's pipe lines will follow, we are taxed with shameful intentions.

We should do everything in our power to favour the development of our natural resources in the interest of our people at large. Such development should be carried out systematically. Oil resources, as has been shown elsewhere, are not inexhaustible. Should we, therefore, let this company export large quantities of oil to the United States and then find, in a few years, that Canada's reserves of that precious fuel are exhausted? Hon. members know that the province of Quebec has abundant natural resources. We realize, however, that they cannot last forever and that unrestricted development could well entail serious disasters, economic and otherwise.

Take, for instance, the case of the paper industry. In our province, we have vast forests. Some people would doubtless be tempted to process all this timber into newsprint as fast as possible so as to make all the money they can! To do so would be illogical. We must think of the future. A forest can be denuded in a few weeks, but it takes years and years to reforest land. That is why in our province we make sure that forest development is carried out systematically and carefully; we also see to it that reforestation goes hand in hand with deforestation. That is but elementary foresight. No generation has the right to strip land of all its natural resources in a manner that would leave future generations in want.

What goes for forests also applies to oil. Previous speakers have told us how valuable, how useful petroleum and natural gas are to us Canadians; they have mentioned all the benefits we can derive from these assets. "Black gold" it is sometimes called, and rightly so.

Besides, the oil industry is a relatively recent one, not only in Canada but throughout the world. It might be pointed out that it began less than a hundred years ago. On August 27, 1859, Edwin Drake was digging an artesian well in his garden—a rather commonplace occupation—when suddenly oil spurted out from the bowels of the earth. This incident occurred at Titusville, Pennsylvania, in the United States. Good old Drake, a common bartender, died a colonel and, what is more important, a multimillionaire. The rest is history: there was a rush of oil prospectors. Men had found the "black gold Eldorado".

Oil has revolutionized industrial processes. One need not be a prophet to state that still further changes and industrial revolutions will be caused by oil. In December, 1938, the late President Roosevelt stated:

> Oil has become the sinews of war.

Nineteen years earlier Clémenceau had cabled Wilson the following message:

> Each drop of oil is worth a drop of blood. We have been carried to victory by a flood of oil.

Beyond any doubt, oil has played a vital role in the last two world wars. Supremacy in this field meant supremacy on land, on sea and in the air. In Napoleon's time, an army marched on its stomach. While this remains true, it also marches on oil.

We have here the annual report submitted by Imperial Oil Limited for 1944; it was published in Sarnia, Ontario, on April 14, 1945.

The following significant passages deal with the accomplishments for which oil has been responsible:

> The year under review has been yet another period during which the resourcefulness, courage and wealth of the United Nations have been put to the test in preserving individual liberty and a democratic way of life. While peace-loving nations accumulated material and took the offensive on the main theatres of operations, oil has been called upon to play an increasingly important part in every phase of the war effort, on the battle front as well as on the production front. Briefly, there has been an enormous demand for crude petroleum and its products, vast movements of oil and allied products over long distances, adaptation of these products to new uses and a development of new products with a view to fulfilling special requirements of navies, air forces or land armies, war industries and other essential uses.
>
> In spite of difficulties, it can be said that in Canada once again, in 1944, no convoy was delayed, no movement of troops was hindered, no flying field was closed and no production of munitions, food or other essential products was curtailed on account of a shortage of oil supplies.

These few sentences show us the importance of oil in wartime. I am not one of those who believe that Canada should engage in gigantic preparations in case we should have a third world war. I am not one of those who believe that the major part of the revenue of the federal government should go towards the purchase of munitions. I do think however that if we really treasure our security and our independence, we must not let the development of our oil resources take place in a haphazard way. In peacetime as in wartime oil plays a vital part, but in wartime it can be essential to victory.

We are therefore clearly against the irrational use of our natural resources, and the irrational export of the products of our resources. We use the word "irrational" since this bill gives no guarantee that the use and export of our resources will be on a rational basis. It is our duty, as members of this house, to oppose the passing of a bill which provides no such guarantee. For reasons already mentioned, we cannot devolve upon the board of transport commissioners or the Alberta government responsibilities incumbent upon us.

Should we grant its application, the Alberta Natural Gas Company would have wide powers, extraordinary powers. The Pipe Lines Act of April 30, 1949, clearly defines such powers. We would allow the company, among other things, to——enter into and upon any crown land without previous licence therefor, or into or upon the land of any person, lying in the intended route of its line, and make surveys, examinations or other necessary arrangements on such land for fixing the site of the line, and set out and ascertain such parts of the land as are necessary and proper for the line;

But we members of this house who are going to allow this company to construct pipe lines, do not even know what route is going to be used or what crown lands those lines will enter upon without previous licence. Nor do we know upon what lands belonging to individuals, to taxpayers, will the same liberty be taken.

Under the terms of the act the company may also: . . . purchase, take and hold of and from any person any land or other property necessary . . . . . or dispose of any of its land or property that for any reason has become unnecessary for the purpose of the line.

Here again we cannot, as the people's representatives, give them a free hand without knowing beforehand at least the route of the pipe lines.

The act passed on April 30, 1949, provides many other extensive powers including the following:

. . . construct, lay, carry or place its line across, upon or under the land of any person on the located line of the company pipe line.

They will not tell us where the line will go, but still they want us to agree to everything they ask for.

The act continues:

Join its line with the pipe line of any other person at any point on its route.

Always a route about which we know nothing at all.

Construct, erect and maintain all necessary and convenient roads, buildings, stations, depots, wharves, docks and other structures, and construct, purchase and acquire machinery and other apparatus necessary for the construction, maintenance and operations of its line.

Construct, maintain and operate branch lines, and for that purpose exercise all the powers, privileges and authority necessary therefor, in as full and ample a manner as for a company pipe line.

Those are rather sweeping powers which we are being asked to grant without being able to get beforehand the information we ask for.

Let us read the act further, especially the different paragraphs of the important section 7:

. . . from time to time alter, repair or discontinue the works or any of them, mentioned in this section, and substitute others in their stead;

Transport oil or gas by company pipe-line and regulate the time and manner in which oil or gas shall be transported, and the tolls to be charged therefor; and

Do all other acts necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of its line.

Indeed, we should not grant all of these powers and privileges before knowing the truth about this venture, the route to be followed by the proposed pipe line or pipe lines, whether the oil and gas to be carried in this or these pipe lines will remain in Canada or enter the United States and what percentage will remain in this country and what percentage, if any, will be exported to the United States.

Charity begins at home. We need oil and gas here in Canada, especially in the western provinces. Our people should be the first to benefit from our oil and gas resources. If there is a surplus, let us export it; it would be to our mutual advantage. On the other hand, it would be perfectly ridiculous to hinder the development, progress and prosperity of a section of our country by depriving it of oil and gas in order to export those products to the United States.

The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray) said something like this:

Some people fear our southern neighbours as if they were ready to jump on us.

Let us be serious please! We admire our southern neighbours; we have great friendship ties that unite us and we are proud of the undefended border between our two countries. We do a great deal of trade with the United States. The friendly relations between our two nations are an inspiring example for the rest of the world. Washington, however, has never asked Ottawa to deny itself completely, to forget its immediate or remote interests and to sacrifice itself in any way on behalf of the United States. Neither has Canada ever demanded that Washington set aside its own interests to think only of Canada's.

The Hyde Park agreement of 1941 does not state that Canada must deny herself completely to consider only the United States. Let us see, for instance, how, in 1942, the United States Secretary of State outlined what we should aim at in taking steps to ensure economic co-operation; he said something to this effect:

. . . co-operate in working out a common program in which all other countries sharing the same ideas would be invited to take part in order to increase, by means of the international and internal steps deemed necessary, production, employment as well as the exchange and consumption of goods, those being the material bases of the freedom and welfare of all peoples.

Nothing more. It is not contemplated that we should do without essential products in order to export them to the United States, nor, for that matter, is it inferred that the United States will make every necessary sacrifice in order to send to Canada goods that are in short supply. Complete and frank co-operation between Ottawa and Washington, by all means, but never, however, to the disadvantage of either Ottawa or Washington. Otherwise, the end to be achieved would no longer exist.

Let us suppose, for instance, that only enough oil was found in Alberta to supply the people of the neighbouring provinces. Now these provinces need oil badly and this product can ensure their prosperity. Under what principle or precedent can we ask the citizens of Alberta, of British Columbia or of any other province to do without oil or gas in order that we may export it to our neighbours to the south? Let me repeat that charity begins at home, as the saying goes. This principle applies both in personal relations and international relations. Besides, the United States have never asked us to deny ourselves oil and gas to provide them with these products. Let us not ascribe to them intentions they do not have.

If a similar bill were to be introduced in Washington, there is no doubt that, first and foremost, it would be designed to protect United States interests. The representatives of the American people would not allow oil to be exported to Canada unless they were assured that the United States had enough for their own needs. Nobody in Ottawa could be shocked by such an attitude. It would be judged to be quite normal and reasonable. However, Liberal members—not all, but a few—would have us believe that it would be different if representatives of the Canadian people were to do the same.

The member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) seemed quite put out because we of the Conservative opposition were not of one mind with him. He waxes indignant—and these are his very words—because, as it were:

The suggestion has been made that we who support these bills . . .

That is, the Liberal members.

. . . are in some way traitors to Canada or to our respective provinces.

[Mr. Courtemanche.]

The member for Skeena may be annoyed but he knows very well that he is duty bound, as a member of this house, to proceed with caution and foresight whenever a bill is considered. The member who casts a vote for any bill without due consideration is not being faithful to his mandate; he betrays it. In supporting a measure such as the Alberta Natural Gas Company bill, the implications and consequences of which he is totally unaware, he is apt, voluntarily or not, to betray the interests of his province, of his country. One may betray by doing certain things; one may also betray by omitting to do certain things. By neglecting to examine thoroughly the purposes of the Alberta Natural Gas Company we would, in effect, betray our mandate, our electors and our country.

If, indeed, there is nothing to fear, if everything is in the best interest of the country, why not then provide the information we request in good faith?

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) moved second reading of the bill. It is of him therefore that we asked: "What route will the pipe line follow?" That surely is a fair question and we would be remiss in our duty as members of this house if we did not ask it. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre replied: I do not know.

How can we grant extraordinary powers to a company, if we do not even know what route its pipe line will follow, to whom the company will sell the oil, whether it will serve Canadian or American customers first or whether it will take no interest in either of them. We are completely in the dark in that connection. The more we progress, the more we discuss the matter, the more we realize that it would be beyond our power to authorize the Alberta Natural Gas Company to go ahead with projects of which we know nothing. Would the company work against the interests of the nation or those of a particular province? We like to think that such are not its intentions. However, for the very reason that we do not know what it plans to do, we can assume all sorts of hypotheses, some good, some bad, and think the best as well as the worst.

The members of the house should be in a position to tell the Alberta Natural Gas Company what route its pipe line must follow in the nation's interest; however, not only are we prevented from correcting or altering the plans of the company but we do not even know what route it will follow.

We are told that the board of transport commissioners will deal with this. It will probably attend to the matter from the technical standpoint, from a specific angle, but its attitude will not be that of a member of the house, a representative of the people. I am loath to see members of parliament always surrendering their rights, powers, prerogatives and responsibilities to others.

There is also the government of Alberta, we are told. They will see to that. They will take steps to protect the interests of the province of Alberta. That is quite normal and is to be expected. But will they make sure that the interests of British Columbia are also protected? We know, of course, that they will not. We are well aware that it is here, in this house and nowhere else, that the general interest, the interests of the country at large will best be protected.

Finally, the Department of Trade and Commerce has been mentioned. By the Department of Trade and Commerce, do they mean the high officials, the powerful bureaucrats? If these are the people referred to, our answer is no, a thousand and ten thousand times no. At the beginning of my remarks, I voiced the opinion of the party with respect to federal bureaucracy and its activities. That applies to the bureaucrats of the Department of Trade and Commerce as well as to those of all other departments. Even if such were the case, our answer would still be no. We have listened to the speeches and statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and they were hardly reassuring.

For instance the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) has already asked him if we may conclude from a statement which may be found at page 792 of Hansard whether no export permit would be granted for oil if the suggested pipe line were not entirely within Canada. The answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was so vague that the member for Fraser Valley had this to say:

> I take it that the minister is not going to answer my question?

The Minister of Trade and Commerce had a word for those who oppose the export, or at least the unrestricted export, of Canadian oil to the United States. He called them "petty Canadians". We do want to be those "petty Canadians" who look first to their own country's interests and have no wish to favour foreigners over our own taxpayers. We do not mind being those "petty Canadians" who are heedful of the unfortunate consequences of a blank cheque—for that is what is being requested of us—given to the company which intends building this pipe line.

We want to be "petty Canadians" who consider, above all, the present and future of their own country and secondly, secondly only, the interests of others, of our neighbours. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, charity begins at home!

Therefore, whatever may be the intention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, we will not let him decide alone, or with his advisers or bureaucrats, what the route of the Alberta Natural Gas Company pipe line should be. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is a busy man. He must have other matters to attend to. The members will want to settle among themselves a problem which concerns them in the first place. Besides, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is sufficiently powerful; he does not need any more privileges or prerogatives. We know he is used to government by order in council. We of the Conservative opposition do not like it at all. We believe in the sovereignty of parliament and we shall express our belief on all occasions, in this matter of the Alberta Natural Gas Company and in any other.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is a very busy man, which is quite understandable, is sometimes absent-minded. Need I, for example, recall that on December 6 last, the minister clearly denied that Canada had shipped uranium to Soviet Russia? Two days later, on December 8, he admitted in the Commons—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he is out of order.

Mr. Fleming: Go on, go on.

Mr. Courtemanche: I shall not press the point, Mr. Speaker. I resume my remarks on the matter before the house.

We have no right to use those resources rashly. I repeat that we would betray our people should we permit the development of those resources in such a way as to favour and enrich foreigners to the detriment of our fellow citizens.

We often deplore the mass exodus of our young people to the United States. If we give a free hand to this company to build its pipe line wherever it wishes, even in the United States, we will encourage the emigration of our young people.

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Courtemanche: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am too conscious of my responsibility to approve of such a measure. Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne), I move the adjournment of the debate.

(Text):

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Courtemanche) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Balcer	Harkness
Blair	Hatfield
Brooks	Herridge
Browne (St. John's West)	Higgins
Bryce	Hodgson
Casselman	Jones
Catherwood	Knight
Charlton	Knowles
Coldwell	Macdonnell (Greenwood)
Courtemanche	MacInnis
Coyle	McGregor
Diefenbaker	McLure
Drew	Noseworthy
Ferguson	Pearkes
Fleming	Smith (Calgary West)
Fraser	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Fulton	Tustin
Gillis	White (Hastings-Peterborough)
Graydon	White (Middlesex East)
Green	—39.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson	Darroch
Applewhaite	Dechene
Arsenault	Decore
Ashbourne	Dewar
Bater	Dion
Belzile	Douglas
Benidickson	Dumas
Bennett	Eyre
Bertrand	Fair
Blanchette	Fauteux
Blue	Ferrie
Boisvert	Fulford
Boivin	Garland
Boucher	Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Bourget	Gauthier (Sudbury)
Bradette	Gauthier (Lapointe)
Bradley	Gauthier (Portneuf)
Brisson	George
Brown (Essex West)	Gibson
Campney	Gingues
Carter	Goode
Cavers	Gour (Russell)
Chevrier	Gourd (Chapleau)
Clark	Gregg
Claxton	Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Cleaver	Harrison
Cloutier	Healy
Corry	Hellyer
Cote (Matapedia-Matane)	Helme
Cote (Verdun-La Salle)	Henderson
Croll	Hetland
Howe	Major
Huffman	Masse
Isnor	Matthews
James	Maybank
Jeffery	Murray (Oxford)
Jutras	Murray (Cariboo)
Kickham	Mutch
Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)	Pinard
Lafontaine	Prudham
Laing	Richard (Gloucester)
Langlois (Gaspe)	Riley
Lapointe	Robertson
Larson	Robinson
Lefrancois	Rooney
Leger	Shaw
Lesage	Sinnott
Little	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Low	Stick
Macdonald (Edmonton East)	Stuart (Charlotte)
MacDougall	Thomas
MacKenzie	Thomson
MacLean (Cape Breton North and Victoria)	Viau
MacNaught	Ward
Macnaughton	Warren
McCann	Weir
McCubbin	Welbourn
McCulloch	Whiteside
McCusker	Whitman
McIvor	Winkler
McLean (Huron-Perth)	Wood
McWilliam	Wylie—124.

Mr. Mitchell: I was paired with the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

OLD AGE SECURITY

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet) presented the first report of the joint committee on old age security and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Graydon: Since it does not abolish the means test, I am calling "on division".

Motion agreed to on division.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS COMPANY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Maybank for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the motion of Mr. MacDougall: "That this question be now put."

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In rising to speak again in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I make no apology because I believe I am representing the views of the majority of the people of the province from which I come and, without question, the views of the majority of the people in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I think that is evidenced by the fact that the legislature of British Columbia has unanimously adopted a resolution in support of an all-Canadian route for a pipe line through British Columbia. In addition to that, I have received, as have many other members from British Columbia, a large number of resolutions from boards of trade and other service organizations, and also resolutions from trade union organizations, representatives of the various trade union congresses in British Columbia, and other public service organizations. Without any doubt whatever, I think that what we who are speaking in opposition to this bill as now presented to the house have to say are the words that thousands of people in British Columbia would have to say if they had the opportunity to be here to give voice to their opinions.

Before proceeding with my somewhat brief remarks this evening I want to say again that I make no apology for speaking in this debate. Like other hon. members who have spoken, we know nothing of the personnel behind these companies. We know nothing about the companies as such; that is, their personnel, their structure and so on. Personally, I know nothing of the eminent counsel who are supposed to be interested in these bills, according to the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) this afternoon. All we are doing here is giving voice to a principle. That principle is that we believe that whoever receives a charter, or whatever companies receive charters to build pipe lines, should first give this house their assurance that Canadian requirements and Canadian communities will be served before any such pipe line enters the United States.

The members from British Columbia, representing all parties from British Columbia, who have spoken in this debate against these bills as presented at the present time, appreciate the assistance they have received from members of other provinces. We appreciate the assistance we have received from the Ontario members who have been big enough to take an all-Canadian approach to this, to us, important question. We appreciate the attitude of the French-speaking members who have spoken in this debate. I think that was an excellent gesture on their part. We appreciate the support of members from Alberta; not only do we appreciate the support of the members of the Progressive Conservative party but we also last session appreciated the support received from one member of the Social Credit party, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Wylie), who definitely expressed the opinion that he was not willing to support these bills until he was informed where the pipe lines would go.

This afternoon I listened with considerable interest to the somewhat constitutional and technical speech made by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott). In fact, while I was listening with great interest I was wondering who the hon. gentleman's research director is, because I should like to know. He no doubt had gone to a great deal of trouble in securing the material and he presented it well.

Mr. Sinnott: He is yours truly.

Mr. Herridge: I want to compliment the hon. member on his knowledge of constitutional procedure and of the technical aspects of the question that have baffled other long-time members of this house. In addition to that, I was greatly interested in the bills containing amendments that he proposes to introduce into this house tomorrow, I understand. We shall all be interested in his contribution to this important question at that time.

Before proceeding with my remarks with respect to our main argument in this connection, I want to deal briefly with a few comments made by members who have spoken in support of these bills. This afternoon the hon. member for Comox-Alberni made a well-reasoned and understanding speech. Before proceeding I want to say that I fully appreciate the point of view of hon. members who oppose, shall I say, the action of some of the members on this side of the house in continuing this debate, and who suggest that we should allow the bills to pass second reading and go to committee. I understand their stand. I give them credit for their sincerity. But I should like them to understand also that their action is an evidence of political immaturity, because members who have served in this house or in other legislatures realize that once a bill passes second reading, is adopted in principle and goes to committee, you are quickly on the skids so far as rendering any effective opposition is concerned. Hence we are continuing this debate in the hope that the sponsors of the bill will pledge to this house that any pipe line built as a result of a charter from this house will pass through British Columbia first.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned the fact that this was a highly technical question for members in a house such as this to discuss. When he advances that argument, I ask him how then were members of this house in days gone by qualified to pass upon the highly technical question as to the location of the railroads. That is exactly what members of this house did. All we ask is the incorporation, in this bill and in the general pipe lines bill, of some provision that will make it possible for this house to do exactly what is done with respect to railroad charters; that is, for the general route of the pipe line to be designated in the bill. We would be satisfied if that designation was simply that it would serve Canadian interests first.

The hon. member asked: "What has this debate accomplished?" I would say that this debate on the part of a relatively small number of members of this house has aroused public opinion in British Columbia to the importance of this question, and has caused the public to be informed of the seriousness of this question. The debate in this house has caused the legislature of British Columbia to pass, by unanimous vote, a resolution endorsing the principle of an all-Canadian route. That is the principle on which we base our argument. I want to see my constituency served, as do other hon. members from British Columbia. That is the main thesis that we expound in this debate.

Then again, the trade unions and all the organizations in British Columbia that are now interested have had this matter brought to their attention as a result of this debate. The hon. gentleman said that if it were proved to him that the route was physically possible through British Columbia he would readily agree. I am going to have something to say about that a little later in my remarks in reply to a statement made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), who I notice is listening with some interest. But briefly I would say that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni knows that the same physical conditions that face the construction of a line through British Columbia face the construction of a line through Washington, Idaho and Oregon. The conditions with respect to construction are exactly the same, namely, mountainous country, with a possibility of slides and other dangers.

Before proceeding further I want to say that I was amazed the last evening that the debate was continued to hear the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) suggest he thought the government had a perfect right to bring in closure in this debate. At the time he made his remarks I said, "The reason we are continuing the debate is the experience in the Fort William area." But apparently that remark did not reach Hansard. The hon. member for Fort William knows that his constituents have been too late; that they could not have the pipe line continued to Fort William and Port Arthur to meet their needs. The city councils of Fort William and Port Arthur, supported by the members of the legislature for that area, supported by organizations in that area, made strong protests against the deviation of the pipe line into the United States before reaching Fort William or Port Arthur; and they came to Ottawa. The mayors of those cities and the members of the legislature for that area came to Ottawa and presented the people's wishes to the cabinet, but without effect. It was too late for anything to be done. Would the hon. member for Fort William, in suggesting that this government would be justified in applying closure, not say that his suggestion would result in the people of British Columbia experiencing the same result? We are not having any of it.

Mr. McIvor: May I be permitted to make a correction?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. McIvor: When I came down here I found that if the pipe line had to go to Fort William it would cost $11 million more, and the upkeep of the line to Fort William would be $500,000 a year extra. We had the guarantee that the oil would go to Sarnia, and Canada would be served first, the thing that we stand for.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's explanation I would say that he has considered first United States profits, dividends and interest before the people of Fort William and Port Arthur.

On a previous occasion when this bill was under discussion we listened to one of the most interesting speeches that have been made.

Mr. McIvor: Just another correction.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIvor: There is not a man on that side of the house who is more alert to look after Canadian interests than the member for Fort William, and I include Port Arthur as well.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to a most interesting speech that was made on this question by the hon. member for Skeena. I give him credit for making a very well reasoned and interesting speech. The only regret I have is that such talent, such ability and such agility, so far as argument is concerned, were not used on this side of the house.

I want to bring to the attention of the house one other fact that hon. members from other provinces will notice, namely, that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni opposed this so-called filibuster, and was able to do so because in the splendid isolation of Vancouver island his constituents know there is no possibility of receiving gas from Alberta wells under present conditions. Therefore his constituents are not directly affected. I may say that the hon. member for Skeena, who represents that great haddock-kipper economy, is also isolated from the main stream of British Columbia development, and his constituents at this time are not directly affected. Therefore he can justifiably express some opposition to this filibuster. But I want to deal briefly with some of his comments. On page 898 of Hansard I find that the hon. member for Skeena made this comment:

> I think all hon. members will admit that these speeches have been more notable for their vague generalities and their hysterics than they have been for their facts or logical arguments.
>
> There is evidence now that this hysterical, illogical and incorrect thinking is spreading beyond this chamber to other parts of the country. I refer particularly to parts of British Columbia.

There is no doubt about that, Mr. Speaker. The interest in this subject is widespread in British Columbia. That is quite correct. The people of British Columbia are becoming increasingly concerned; but would he say that that is illogical, hysterical or incorrect? Would he say that the legislature of British Columbia was illogical, was hysterical, was incorrect in continuing to protect the interests of the people of British Columbia? Would he say that the various Liberal associations in Vancouver that have sent resolutions to their members here urging them to support and fight for an all-Canadian route are illogical, are hysterical, are incorrect? Would he say that the provincial members of British Columbia, in adopting the same attitude and supporting the point of view of members on this side of the house who have spoken in this debate, are illogical, are hysterical, are incorrect? Does he charge the great mass of the people of British Columbia with being illogical, hysterical and incorrect? I think not.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not an organized filibuster; it is not an organized debate. It is a spontaneous, democratic expression against the possibility of Canadians not benefiting from Canadian natural resources.

The hon. member goes on to say at page 899 of Hansard:

> Those who object to the granting of the charter, that is, to the birth of this company, have only one real argument. It amounts to this: Do not bring this company into the world; it might not do what we think is right. It would be just as logical to pass a law against having children, because they might not be amenable to the line of reasoning of my hon. friend.

First of all I must congratulate the hon. member on the lesson he has given the house in political obstetrics, but I must assure him of this, that his procedure would result in the birth of a deaf, dumb and blind political child. We on this side of the house believe in some form of prenatal care when it comes to births of this type.

At page 900 the hon. member goes on to say:

> Every hon. member and every individual in this country favours an all-Canadian route if such a route is economically feasible and possible. Of that fact, of course, there can be no question. These resolutions which have been passed— and I would include the resolution of the British Columbia legislature—would have been far more effective if they had included those words "provided the same is economically feasible and possible." We all favour an all-Canadian route under those circumstances.

I am surprised the hon. member has not read the literature on this subject, and that he would suggest that the legislature of British Columbia would adopt unanimously a resolution urging an all-Canadian route, if that legislature were not convinced of the fact that it is physically possible.

Mr. Goode: Did I understand the hon. member to say that the British Columbia legislature passed this unanimously?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Goode: Are you quite sure you are right?

Mr. Herridge: I am quite sure I am right. And to prove I am right I will read a letter I received from a member of the British Columbia legislature.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member should read in this house a letter he received from a member of a legislature. I do not think it is good practice.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling; but I am sure hon. members will accept my word that this letter informs me that the Speaker declared the resolution adopted unanimously.

Mr. Green: So do Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Herridge: I am very glad the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) asked me that, because when he does it would seem that he is interested in what I have to say.

Mr. Goode: For this one time.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to go on now to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite). As a matter of fact I am giving the hon. member for Skeena undue advertising. This is what the hon. member said, as quoted at page 902 of Hansard:

> I wonder if it is fair to mention little places like Keremeos in a debate of this kind. Nothing could be crueler than to dangle before small communities the hope of cheap gas and cheap fuel and then find out that the population is not sufficiently large to justify the expense of the construction of the distribution works involved.

Alberta Natural Gas Company

In reply to that I would say simply this, that the hon. member who mentioned it did mention that Keremeos would directly benefit. The contention was that whether gas served that community directly or not, Keremeos would benefit from the over-all industrial development of the interior of British Columbia. But I would say this, that nothing could be crueler than to dangle before the eyes of the Canadian people large placards promising a new social order. Could anything be crueler than to placard this country with promises for markets for farm products, and then have the farmers find that they are unable to sell their agricultural products? Could anything be crueler than to placard this country with the slogan "Full Employment for All", and then find that we have nearly 400,000 Canadians out of work during this last winter? Could anything be crueler than to advertise the abolition of the means test for the old age pension and then, when it is suggested that it be abolished, have it abolished as the result of building up a system whereby the pensioner pays practically every cent of the pension?

The slight interruption I received from the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has caused me to fail to mention a publication that deals with feasibility of the route. This publication is issued by the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, and it gives some of the facts about the building of a pipe line through British Columbia. This is in answer to the argument of the hon. member for Skeena that all would be in favour of a route through British Columbia, if it was physically practical and possible. In that connection let me read from this booklet:

> The entire length of the line has been inspected most minutely by the firm of Ford, Bacon and Davis, Inc., of New York, one of the largest oil and gas pipe line engineering firms in the world. Their report, which will be filed with the conservation board, shows the route of the line to be completely practical and economical in all respects.

I see my time is slipping away, so I shall now turn to the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray), whom I respect very much, and who appears to me to be, shall I say, a Jeffersonian liberal. He seemed to be very much concerned about the development of monopolies, and things of that kind, in Canada. At pages 910 and 911 of Hansard he deals at length with his first objection to monopolies, and, in part, says this:

> I think of another monopoly which found its origin in Calgary many years ago, a monopoly in connection with a basic commodity which is vital and necessary to every home owner or other person who has a stake in the country, particularly farmers and industrialists. I refer to the manufacture of Portland cement.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Then he goes on to deal with the monopoly in cement, and concludes by saying this:

> We are still paying the penalty for that. If you will look over the figures you will find that last year we imported four million sacks of cement from foreign countries. The local organization which has such complete control from coast to coast was not able to supply the cement.

That is because of the monopoly that existed. Well, I can assure the hon. member in the first place that he is entirely under a misconception if he thinks the oil industry, as it is developed in the United States, is not a monopoly. If he wishes to pay considerable attention to monopolies in this country, then I recommend that he deal with the question of the flour combine report, the matches combine and the glass combine, which have grown up and which have developed in this country under the auspices of a Liberal government.

In that connection I should like to read briefly from the congressional report of March 20, 1950, page 3673. At this point the record deals with a debate being carried on in connection with the natural gas bill in the United States. Various senators are dealing with the monopolistic characteristics of the oil and gas industry in that country. In that connection this is what Senator Gillette has to say:

> After all, we are dealing here with an industry that is characterized both by its inner structure and by its very nature as a monopoly. Let me cite here a statement made by the senator from Nebraska (Mr. Wherry), the able minority leader, which I found in an excellent report, No. 25, Eighty-first Congress, first session, entitled "Oil Supply and Distribution Problems".
>
> This was published as a final report of the Special Committee to Study Problems of American Small Business, under the capable chairmanship of the senator from Nebraska. On page 13, we find this clear and forthright declaration:
>
> "Monopoly as generally understood means control of a product both as to quantity allowed to reach the market and price. If you control the quantity you automatically control the price. Hence, the petroleum industry can be set down as definitely a monopoly."
>
> There is no need to cite chapter and verse on the character of this industry. It is enough to note that it is increasingly dominated by a few giant corporations which own and control one of the most vital natural resources modern man has ever discovered.
>
> For example, 33 of the largest oil companies hold in lease or in fee 62·5 per cent of all acreage containing natural-gas reserves. Over half of these reserves are owned by the largest 14 companies.

There is definite proof that this industry is largely monopolistic. Then, the hon. member for Cariboo is reported at page 911 of Hansard as follows:

> Future shipments of lumber to that country depend upon the existence of good will.

Well, we are all for the existence of good will. But we must remember this, that hard-headed businessmen buy their lumber on the basis of value and price. If we have the commodity and if we give the value, and if we can sell it at a price they want, they will buy it.

I have several other illustrations, but my time is passing and I must now come to my concluding argument. My people are very much interested in this question because our section of the country, the interior of British Columbia, has been very much overlooked by this government. We have had some experience in this, as other members from British Columbia know. We recall the Oregon treaty, which gave permanent navigation rights from the headwaters of the Columbia to the sea, in return for giving to the United States that section of the states which now lies between the Columbia and the Pacific ocean—a great treaty right which was considered of great value. Possibly conditions have changed. But this government allowed the United States government to build a huge dam at Grand Coulee, and there is no record of this government having made any protest whatever. If this government had been protecting the rights of the people of the interior of British Columbia some protest would have been made and without question compensation would have been granted, either to maintain steamer services in that area or to provide the necessary roads to the international boundary.

This government has failed to bring under the transport board the inland lake services in British Columbia and as a result the residents along those lakes have for many years suffered a declining and inferior service. In addition to that certain branches of this government have failed completely to advertise the interior of British Columbia. They advertise the centres where the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National hotels are located, but I challenge anyone to find any reference to the interior of British Columbia in the literature put out by the dominion tourist bureau. This Switzerland of Canada is completely overlooked. Therefore are not our people justified in expressing indignation over these bills?

In comparison I would refer the house to the action taken by the state governments in the United States at a time when we in this house are fighting so that British Columbia interests may have the opportunity of using Canadian natural resources. The governments of Oregon, Washington and Idaho are keeping their people informed of the possibilities disclosed by surveys that have been made to indicate the requirements of gas for industrial and domestic uses. Committees are being organized and everybody is being aroused to the industrial possibilities of gas to be brought in from Canada. I should like to read a press dispatch from Olympia, Washington, as follows:

> Governor Langlie today predicted importation of a large and steady supply of natural gas into Washington from Canada within the next two or three years.
>
> He made his prediction as he met with executive committee members of his new state-wide industrial development committee.
>
> The governor disclosed the state public service commission has been in touch for several months with proposals for bringing in the gas. This week, he said, the commission adopted rules covering the importation to assure consumers fair and reasonable rates.
>
> Commission chairman Owen Clarke said he is sending personnel into Alberta for on-the-spot investigation into plans for piping gas into this state.

While our federal and provincial governments have taken little action in the matter the different governments in the United States have appointed committees to interest the people in the distribution of gas and petroleum. The people I represent realize the importance of this gas and its use for power and domestic purposes. I could quote a number of important arguments to support my contention and that advanced by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) who also represent constituencies in the interior of British Columbia, a vast empire of undeveloped natural resources.

We are going to continue to fight for the right of those people to be given an opportunity to use this Canadian natural resource. I suggest that the sponsor of this bill, whom I see smiling over there, should change the bill so that it will provide for an all-Canadian route. Then we will be ready to support it. This debate has indicated the urgent necessity of a dominion statute to cover public utilities such as pipe lines. This is becoming such a gigantic development that the present federal and provincial legislation is not sufficient to protect the interests of the Canadian people.

We in this group believe that the final solution to the pipe-line problem is public ownership. I give credit to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) for mentioning this afternoon that the Canadian government is losing a great opportunity by not taking over the operation of these pipe lines in order to balance the losses in other divisions of transportation. I think there are many hon. members who, regardless of party affiliation, agree that that is a legitimate proposal.

Alberta Natural Gas Company

In conclusion I wish to say that this group stands for public ownership. Not finding that possible under the policies adopted by this government, we certainly stand for Canadian interests. I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that according to the rules it is not in order to move the adjournment of the debate after a previous motion to adjourn the debate and before there have been some intermediate proceedings.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, before you rule I should like to draw your attention to—

An hon. Member: He has ruled.

An hon. Member: Out of order.

Mr. Ferguson: Learn something about parliamentary rules yourself. You have sat there since the session opened and said nothing. You do not know a thing about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ferguson: We have heard enough from you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I intend to hear what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has to say.

Mr. Knowles: It is quite correct that in addition to standing order 48, which provides for the motion to adjourn the debate, there is also standing order 30, to which Your Honour has alluded, which provides that between one motion to adjourn and another there must be an intermediate proceeding.

Mr. Speaker: I will not ask the hon. member to continue because I recall that the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage) moved this afternoon that the report of a committee should be concurred in by the house and in my opinion that was an intermediate proceeding and I declare the motion moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) to be in order.

Mr. Knowles: I can save my argument for a later time.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Herridge) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Balcer
Blair
Brooks
Browne (St. John's West)
Bryce
Catherwood
Charlton
Coldwell
Coyle
Diefenbaker
Drew
Ferguson
Fleming
Fraser
Fulton
Gillis
Graydon
Green
Harkness
Hatfield
Herridge
Higgins
Hodgson
Homuth
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Macdonnell (Greenwood)
MacInnis
McGregor
McLure
Noseworthy
Pearkes
Smith (Calgary West)
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Tustin
White (Hastings-Peterborough)
White (Middlesex East)
—38.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Bater
Benidickson
Bennett
Bertrand
Blanchette
Boisvert
Boivin
Bonnier
Boucher
Bourget
Bradette
Bradley
Brisson
Bruneau
Campney
Carroll
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Chevrier
Cleaver
Cloutier
Cote (Matapedia-Matane)
Cote (Verdun-La Salle)
Croll
Decore
Denis
Dion
Douglas
Dumas
Fair
Fauteux
Ferrie
Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Fulford
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Lapointe)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gauthier (Sudbury)
George
Gibson
Gingues
Goode
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Hansell
Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer
Helme
Henderson
Hetland
Howe
Isnor
James Jeffery
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)
Lafontaine
Laing
Lapointe
Larson
Leduc
Lefrancois
Leger
Lesage
Low
Macdonald (Edmonton East)
MacDougall
MacKenzie
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch
McCusker
McIvor
McLean (Huron-Perth)
McWilliam
Major
Masse
Matthews
Maybank
Monette
Murray (Oxford)
Murray (Cariboo)
Mutch
Pinard
Prudham
Ratelle
Richard (Gloucester)
Riley
Robertson
Robinson
Rooney
Sinnott
Smith (Moose Mountain)
Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Studer
Thomson
Valois
Viau
Ward
Warren
Weir
Welbourn
Whiteside
Whitman
Winkler
Wood
Wylie—121.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening intently to the debate on this pipe-line bill for several days. As the debate has continued, I have become more interested, but I promise you I shall not detain the house too long.

As I understand it, this pipe-line bill would grant a charter to a company to transmit both gas and oil. I look upon this bill in the same way as if it were a bill dealing with a charter for a railway right of way. This company will be a carrier of goods and service.

Mr. Gibson: From what is the member quoting?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hodgson: I am quoting from the same thing as the hon. member quoted from when he spoke about an hour ago.

The debate has revolved around the route to be taken by this pipe line. I believe that either the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) or the sponsor of the bill should make a statement about the route of the line. Surely someone must know where it is going. Up to date, this is the greatest natural resource that has ever been discovered, and it means a great deal to Canada's industrial development.

I shall now read from the "Imperial Oil Review":

> Alberta's Leduc field has made oil history in Canada. In less than three years it has grown from a single discovery well located in a district noted for wheat farming to more than 320 wells with a daily production of 26,000 barrels of crude.

Mr. Gibson: Try the telephone directory.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hodgson:

> It covers 22,000 acres containing estimated proven reserves of 242 million barrels of oil.
>
> Now, in a motion picture, the story of the transformation of the Leduc district has been recorded on film. It is a story of success after years of costly searching and heart-breaking disappointment.
>
> "A mile below the wheat" is a 16 millimetre colour film with music and voice describing how the discovery of oil affected the community and small Alberta town after which the now famous oil field was named.

Mr. Warren: From what is the member reading?

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member never said or read anything in his life, so he should keep quiet.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hodgson: This is only a short paragraph I am reading. If you will let me have a moment, we will get over it that much quicker and then probably have another vote.

Mr. Warren: This is supposed to be a speech.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes. The paragraph reads as follows:

> As oilmen today continue their work of probing the depths for new wells, farming goes on much the same as if there were no other crop being harvested. But there are profound changes because of the Leduc oil—changes that affect all of Canada. There is a new prosperity in the Leduc area; there are increased revenues for Alberta; Canada is saving precious U.S. dollars that formerly had to be spent on imported oil.
>
> In the war years—and after—we were dependent on foreign oil for roughly 90 per cent of our supplies. Now since the advent of Leduc, which set off a chain of other important discoveries, prairie production exceeds western refining capacity. With continued effort and reasonable success, it is not too much to hope the men who search for oil will make Canada self-sufficient in petroleum in years to come.

Mr. Warren: Do some more reading.

Mr. Hodgson: It seems feasible to me, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Warren: Make a speech, without reading.

Mr. Hodgson: —that it should be an all-Canadian route rather than through the United States. We, as members of a Canadian parliament, should be thinking in terms of what is best for Canada over a long period rather than just about selling one of our greatest natural resources for a few paltry dollars.

An hon. Member: United States dollars.

Mr. Hodgson: It is my firm conviction that in the transmission and export of gas from this Canada of ours the Canadian consumers should be the first to be served. By building through Canada to Vancouver, that objective will be achieved. An all-Canadian line means that many additional communities in Alberta and in British Columbia will be served with natural gas. It means that the major section of the transmission system would be under Canadian control. It means that this Canada of ours would reap the benefit of the expenditure of large amounts of United States capital in the construction of the major portion of the pipe line within our own borders. It means that all questions of pipe line rates, safety regulations and in fact all other controls would be under the supervision of Canadian authorities.

An hon. Member: Take this glass of water.

An hon. Member: What a stall!

Mr. Knowles: What was in it?

Mr. Hodgson: It is hard to say. I took a chance. He is an hon. member and a colleague of mine, and I do not think he would give me anything bad.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hodgson: I will take a chance on it for once.

It has been said that other charters have been granted. That is true. They have probably been granted without a route being incorporated in the bill. I think that was a mistake. Because this parliament once made a mistake is no reason why we should make a mistake twice; two wrongs never made a right.

Mr. Warren: Make a speech.

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), in speaking the other day, left the impression, in my humble opinion, that this house should be willing to pass this bill or any other bill so long as it was left in the hands of the minister, the transport committee, board or other commission, so long as he was a Liberal or they were Liberals. Seeing that he is such a fine gentleman and was willing to entrust the pipe line charter to the hands of any committee that smacked of Liberalism, I would refer him to the nineteenth verse of the third chapter of Genesis which reads as follows:

> In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground.

That scene was in the garden of Eden and that was a long time ago.

Mr. Gauthier (Sudbury): That was not in Fort William.

Mr. Hodgson: There was no electricity at that time, and no gas or oil; and the chances are that there were no matches either. I want to tell every hon. member in this house that if we do not develop our country and develop these natural resources that have been handed down to us, we shall still be hewers of wood and drawers of water. We are here to do as good a job as we can for the benefit of Canada. If we do not do that, we are lax in our duty as members of parliament.

Somebody else in this debate said that if this pipe line bill did not pass, there would be no competition; and if it did pass, it would give competition so far as pipe lines are concerned. As a result of learning what I can about the matter, I understand that only one pipe line will be built anyway and that one pipe line will carry the whole production of that area at the present time. As a free enterpriser I believe that the life of trade is in competition and not in monopoly. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), speaking on monopoly, as reported at page 900 of Hansard, had this to say. I will read what he said at that time.

Mr. Warren: Read it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: Was it a good drink?

Mr. Hodgson: He said:

> I do not think it has even been denied that the refusal to incorporate any more pipe-line companies in the west would have the effect of establishing a monopoly for the one company which already has its charter. That is not a monopoly compelling that company to build through British Columbia. As the bill has been passed and as the bill stands today, there is no restriction whatever, legally, upon the company, forbidding it to build anywhere in the world it likes, provided that it can get the necessary permits.
>
> We are asked to defeat this bill. On what ground? On somebody's vague suggestion as to the intentions of this company and the intentions of the existing company, as to whose intentions there is and can be no definite proof until each company restricts its applications before the board of transport commissioners to one route and one route only. I have said this would result in the establishment of a monopoly. I repeat that this is not a monopoly which compels the existing company to build an all-Canadian route. It is not a monopoly which compels the existing company to build any route. It is a monopoly upon which, if they choose, they can just sit on their exclusive charter and do nothing, and Alberta can whistle for markets and British Columbia whistle for gas indefinitely.
>
> It has been suggested that we must eventually land up with a monopoly for practical reasons; that only one pipe line is feasible. That may or may not be true, but in any event it is only partly true.

Mr. Warren: We cannot hear you when you are reading. Make a speech.

Mr. Hodgson: I continue:

> In the first place, why establish the monopoly in the negotiation stage? Why should we guarantee any chosen instrument freedom from all fair competition by any other at any time? We are told that we are going to find ourselves with a monopoly as the result of a sort of accident.

I do not think it is any accident, Mr. Speaker, because there has been a great deal of debate on this question and surely they cannot all be wrong.

An hon. Member: Most of them are.

Mr. Hodgson: Two routes have been mentioned. Of course they have to get over the mountains, and the Yellowhead pass is one route that has been mentioned. Some of the previous speakers would have you believe that they were just going to go around the borderline or around the hill or around the fence or something of the sort and back into Canada.

An hon. Member: Follow the government.

Mr. Hodgson: Follow the government; just go over the borderline and back again. I do not know whether many hon. members have seen a map of this proposed route, but I happen to have one.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Hodgson: I do not know that it would do you any good if I did table it; you are too ignorant to look at it. You would not believe it if you did look at it.

Mr. Gibson: You would not know where you were going if you saw it.

Mr. Hodgson: This Canadian route has to go through the Yellowhead pass—

An hon. Member: One thousand miles.

Mr. Hodgson: —down through British Columbia, and it will serve the communities in that province on its way south.

Mr. Sinnott: Where is the Yellowhead pass?

Mr. Ferguson: You would not know.

Mr. Hodgson: I have a map of that, too.

Mr. Sinnott: What part of British Columbia?

Mr. Hodgson: The southern route goes through the Crowsnest pass and down into the United States.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is reading his speech.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, there are none so blind as those who will not see.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand at the present time the hon. member is not reading his speech; he is reading a map. I have never been asked to rule on that question before, but I must rule on another question, namely, that there must not be so many interruptions. I must insist that the hon. member who has the floor be allowed to proceed without interruptions.

Mr. Hodgson: As I said before, this proposed route does not go over the border a mile; it goes over the border 130 miles and down to Spokane. Then it goes west somewhere between 300 and 400 miles, and before it comes to where it crosses that state there is a branch that goes south again to Pendleton another 120 miles. When it goes south and west and then south again it goes down to Portland, Oregon, a distance of over 350 miles from the Canadian border. This pipe line is going to develop the whole northwest corner of the United States. It goes clean across the state of Washington before it ever starts north toward Vancouver. After it goes west, when it turns north it has to go another 140 miles to get to Vancouver. Therefore this proposed route will develop at least 350 square miles of the United States before any gas gets back into Canadian territory.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): It is a thousand miles long in Canada, though.

Mr. Hodgson: Well, I would like to see it 3,000 miles long in Canada.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): It goes along the 49th parallel.

Mr. Ferguson: A thousand miles in Canada is the limit of your ambition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I must remind hon. members that they must not interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Hodgson: I have very little idea of the amount of gas that may be produced in Alberta, but I do know that if some hon. members would only stop to think they would get some information into their heads. I was talking to a couple of local members and they had not even read the bill. Yet they thump their desks and make a lot of noise in here.

This pipe line will develop the United States. What I am fearful of is that this part of the United States will develop so fast when they find out that they are going to get gas that it will be to the detriment of British Columbia and Alberta. When the pipe line is under construction houses will convert their heating systems to use gas, industries will be developed all along this pipe line with the use of gas. I am fearful that very little gas will ever get back into Canada to be used in Vancouver or in any part of British Columbia. You will get only what is left after the other fellow is through with it.

I do not want to deprive the United States people of anything, but I do want to see Canadians get the benefit of this utility first. I have many friends in the United States; I have business associates there. Hardly a month goes by that I do not do business with some United States firm or some individual in that country. But every time a citizen of the United States gets a concession he never relinquishes it. I know that in my own business back in 1922 United States lumber wholesalers said to us: "We are going to buy your lumber at 2 per cent, 30 days." Previous to that time they used to pay cash and never more than 30 days. They said: "We are going to buy your lumber at 2 per cent, 30 days." We accepted, yes. We accepted it like the fellow on the street who walks up to another man and puts a gun to his ribs and says: "Give me your watch." The United States was the only market we had at that time, other than the Canadian market. It was the only place to which we were exporting. These people still hang on to that concession. They have hung on to it through good times and bad. They have never relinquished their hold on that set-up in the lumber business. Even during the war they still hung on to it. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who is a lumberman, knows that what I am saying is true.

Mr. Gibson: We like that business.

Mr. Hodgson: It is a good business, but we would rather have it cash, 30 days, and not 2 per cent, 30 days. When you consider that 2 per cent, it amounts to 12 per cent per annum, which is not a bad profit in itself. It is no fault of the people of the United States. That is their way of doing business. They would not think any the less of us if we protected ourselves first. It is possible for us to protect ourselves in any business, and they will not think any the less of us. They will still do business with us, I am sure, if Canada takes care of developing her own natural resources for the benefit of Canadians first. No citizen of the United States will think any worse of us if we do that. They would still have a friendly feeling toward us. They will be glad to take what is left over after our needs have been supplied rather than have Canadians take what is left over.

Just recently the Canadian National Railways sold their mineral rights in a lot of property in the western provinces. I think they should have held on to them for this very same reason. There is going to be natural gas and oil produced or found in that area, and a pipe line will be needed to transport it. It will certainly be transported by pipe line when it is discovered in large enough quantities to warrant such a line.

I think it was a mistake. I am not so enamoured of private enterprise that I cannot see the need for national undertakings at times. Probably that may sound a little bit socialistic, but it would be to the benefit of Canada. The Canadian National Railways are operated in that way. The Ontario hydro is handled in that way. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) spoke about Polymer. He said that was his enterprise, and that he was proud of it. He should be proud of it. He is proud of it, and rightly so. If we have to grant charters, if we have to give away natural resources, to get somebody to put up a few dollars to build a pipe line, then I think the government of Canada should build a pipe line itself. It is a national enterprise. It is something that is ot going to just one province. Eventually it will go through the United States. I would be satisfied if the government had gone so far as to say that it would build this pipe line and have it owned by Canadians, for Canadians, and for our future generations.

Anyone who looks through the list of bills which have been passed in earlier sessions of parliament, particularly in the one last spring, will see bill after bill introduced by private members in which they have asked for things which would be all-Canadian. They have wanted this thing or that thing to be Canadian, and their wishes have taken different forms. I have no doubt many of the things for which they have asked would have been beneficial.

However, I would ask those same members, the members who signed those bills, who sponsored them and followed them through the house, to think commercially for Canada for a few moments. Let them make up their minds how they will vote on this question. Let them decide whether they want something that is all-Canadian, or something that is tied to the United States or to some other country.

I believe all hon. members will agree that, from the standpoint of defence, we can appreciate our hook-up with the United States. We appreciate, too, our commercial position in relation to that country. At the same time, as Canadians we must look first to the development of our natural resources, for Canadians.

In his speech the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) said, as reported at page 901 of Hansard:

> What about the consumer? Have we no responsibility for the consumer? I assume every hon. member will agree that the final cost to the consumer must depend very largely upon the cost of the capital works involved. And this brings me to a reiteration of a statement that I have made before, that we all favour the principle of an all-Canadian route. Why on earth would we not? But not if such a route is going to have the result of materially adding to the costs of home owners and the costs of production for ever to those who want to use gas as fuel or as power.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing to be said, and that is this, that there will not be any Canadian consumers in British Columbia if this route goes down to the south. If it goes through the Yellowhead pass and the interior of British Columbia it will serve the Canadian consumer in British Columbia and other parts of western Canada.

Then, so far as price is concerned, I do not think there is any member who can tell what the cost of this route will be. Even if it did cost a few dollars more, taking for granted that the Yellowhead route might be more expensive—and I doubt if it would—but even if it did cost a little more, the Canadian consumer would reap the benefit. Even if it cost one or two cents more per month to heat his home, is it not better for him to have that service and to save perhaps $100 in a season, the difference between heating by coal and by gas? It is much better to pay a few cents a month more than to have to heat his house with wood or coal.

Like many other members, I am the father of a family, and I look to the future of Canada and to the younger generation coming along. I say to hon. members that I am most anxious to do my part to build a better Canada for all young Canadians so that they may find employment, so that this country may be developed, and so that future Canadians will be able to look back, in the years to come, and realize that those of us who are here today have builded better than we knew.

Many new members have come to the House of Commons in the last election. They seem to have learned fast. Among them are some bright gentlemen, and I have been pleased to meet them and to accept them as my colleagues. But they have developed into the greatest desk thumpers we have ever seen in the House of Commons in the last five years. That trait has developed quickly, and they seem to hang on to it. Hon. members will recall the way they went after me when I began my remarks. Of course, I did not mind, because one must be prepared for that in the House of Commons. If that is what they think they are here for, and if they are pleased about it, then I shall be pleased too. But let me say this one word to them: Do not forget that, no matter what happened in Canada before, you are the heirs of the past; you are the trustees of the future. Think that over before voting on this question.

We are approaching the Easter recess, and the debate on this matter has been lengthy. Perhaps there will be more of it. However, I think it would be well if all hon. members had the opportunity to go back home and talk this over with their constituents before attempting to decide the issue here. It is not going to take much more time to wait until after the Easter recess for the vote.

Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Catherwood), I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: When a similar motion was made earlier this evening I raised the question as to whether it was in order to move in succession two motions to adjourn the debate, without an intermediate proceeding. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose to discuss the matter. Then I decided that since there had been an intermediate proceeding the point of order did not arise.

At this time, however, I should be glad to hear any hon. member on the question as to whether a motion to adjourn the debate can follow a similar motion, without an intermediate proceeding.

