PEREMPTORY SALE OF SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS

The ENORMOUS stocks of SUTHERLAND & CREAGHAN both at Chatham and Newcastle, thrown on the market regardless of COST or consequences. $75,000.00 worth of new and seasonable merchandise to be sacrificed—no reserve—all must go. Having purchased for spot cash the stock and real estate at Chatham and doubled the capacity of the premises, I have decided to continue the business at Chatham as well as at Newcastle on my own account. My long business experience of 18 years on the Miramichi, and the kindness I have always received. impel me to make greater efforts to please the public-who will find my stores at Chatham and Newcastle first-class warehouses in every respect. Ladies will have no cause to send outside for goods or samples James Hackett, Undertaker The very latest designs can always be found on my counters as soon as B. R. BOUTHILLIER.

The very latest designs can always be found on my counters as soon as they leave the makers hand's. I have just returned from a business visit to the leading centres of trade in the United States and Canada having selected large lots of the latest novelties for spring and summer wear. As competition is a test, I respectfully invite keenest comparison and inspection of these merchandizes—no trouble to show goods or give samples.—Chatham and Newcastle.

Terry smiled slowly.
"You do it for us both, my Jack. Then I am sorry to leave you."
"Mr. Denver, you are fortunate, not only in your large inheritance, but for your exuberant supply of sense."

"He got it for us both. He is my ballast. I will turn into an inflated gasbag, or, worse still, fall in love, if he goes, and just so sure as I fall in love, I will get married. Then, what will the ballast be?"

"A wife," said Terry, and his brown eyes were a trifle moist as he lay his large, shapely hand over Jack's mouth. "Hush, Mr. Nutsford leaves to-day, and he would talk business." "Yes, here is the $2,000. If you need more I will send it to whatever address

"I have, Jack, with you."
"Tut, Terry, I mean with a woman."
"I do not know, I am sure. I sincerely hope so. You know I lack concentration. I like all women too de voutly to center all in one. The effort would be too great. By the way, Jack, that you say never beats. I will first have to learn concentration, will I not?"

"If it ever does come to you, Terry, it will be hard on you. Do you think you could tell a woman you loved her, or would you slowly pick her up in your arms and just appropriate her?"
"Dear old Jack."

'Terry, we have only two hours be fore you start for Peterboro. Will I ever see you again. I have what women call a presentiment that I will never see the old Terry again. You will be no less

The two talked on until the time for parting came. Jack stood holding Terry's hand while he spoke the farewell the story opens with. The train rolled in with a hissing puff. Shortly a whistle sounded that to poor Jack seemed like demon, and the train moved off, taking his only friend:

The trip to Peterboro was uneventful. It was late when the train pulled up at the station. Calling a cabman, Terry asked to be taken to the quietest hotel that he might begin his trip on the morrow, unquestioned. He selected a

> CHAPTER II. HE sun shone into Terry's window and wakened him early. For half an hour

Poor Jack, who will balance him, and—who will balance me. I need ballast too. What little active interest I take in life! This trip is what I have wished for all my days, yet I could not say so. I do not even feel glad. I wonder what it would be like to feel as Jack does, very glad, or very sorry. Well, I can-not know; let it pass. I am medium, and one thing is certain, if I am not capable of feeling joy keenly, neither do I feel sorrow keenly. Compensation there is in all things. My travels begin to-day. Let me see—Lakefield—that will be my resting place to-night. Nine miles—I will walk it, the road they say

Rising, he took from his valise a suit of flannel of darkest hue. This he don-ned, then took the trouble to view himself in the glass. "You have an ugly nose, Terry Den

He took out another suit of the same material, but grey in color, and lay it in a knapsack along with numerous articles for the toilet. Terry was dainty as the ermine. After all arrangements were made he went down to breakfast He ate heartily then sought the clerk. "Which side of the river is Lakefield

"On both sides, yer honor. Evenly "On which side of the river is the st road, then?"
"That depends entirely on the kind of road you want. The railroad runs

Well, I guess it is the wagon road I "A good road it is, then. A footpath runs alongside the entire way, and so does the Otonabee. A lovely river it is, too. You will not find another such in all Canada. The people of Peterboro are proud to live by its waters, and well they might be."

Terry sent for his knapsack, slung it over his shoulder, paid his expenses, then started north by way of George "Follow George street," had been the directions; "after the turn be-yond there, it is the Smithtown road." The turn was passed; Terry was on the country road. On he went. He strode with increasing buoyancy to the lapping music of the Otonabee. Now between him and the water rose tier after tier of sweet-smelling pine boards, to the left neat houses and carefully kept gardens, backed by the noted Smithtown hill with its crown of sombre river, almost covered with logs. A small boy paused to look into Terry's kindly eyes; everyone liked to do that, and Terry asked the name of the mills.

"Why! don't you know?" with wide-eyed wonder. "Why! this is Blythe Terry thanked him, and dropped a a quarter into the little hand. Twentyfive cents of the $2,000 had been spent, and one mile of the two hundred travelled. The river ran close to the road. The board walk was narrower. Soon it dwindled into the width of two boards. For a short distance the two boards went, then one passed over a muddy place, after that the footpath.

What a charming companion the river made! Almost as versatile as Jack. It sobbed, it laughed, it gurgled, and pat ted the shore lovingly. Now a slight ted the shore lovingly. Now a slight rapid, then another dam that irritated the water into anger, expressed by a sullen roar. Terry now found himself in the country. On past Nassau.

Nothing of moment happened. He was walking faster than he thought, and earlier than he expected he saw nestling over in the valley, the little village of Lakefield. At the next concession he turned on to the road that led to the village, and was soon ushered into the best room of the best hotel the place boasted. Lazy Terry! He undressed and tum-bled into bed, and fell asleep to travel the nine miles over and over again in

He wakened in an hour, stiff and sore, dressed carefully, then paced slowly up and down the cool broad verandah, enjoying the quiet of the country. So the day passed. Before going to bed he took from his pocket a writing pad, and

"DEAR JACE: I am nine miles north, twen-ty-five cents out, and in Lakefield. Address me here. Yours as ever, TERRY DENVER." This he sealed and addressed to Jack,

This he sealed and addressed to Jack, then went to be.

At breakfast hext morning there was a stranger at the table.

"Mr. Denver, this is Mr. Martin, ranger for a lumber firm. He is going north by Buckhorn. If you are out on pleasure you could do worse than take in Buckhorn. It is a wild locality. He will ride, and starts in ten minutes."

"Can you get me a horse in that time, and some one to bring it back; I may wish to continue north. "I can supply you myself, but it will cost you—well, say ten dollars."
"All right; I am ready when you are

Mr. Martin. I have only to post a letter. If letters come for me, send them on to Buckhorn."

In ten minutes three horses were The hostler was going to bring them back. The horses were in excel-lent trim, and so were the riders. Away they went, out over the bridge, up the hill, then turned north. For some time they kept up a rattling pace; then all drew rein and brought up three abreast. "Yes, I am from Montreal." "I think I will enjoy the trip."

"He thinks me stupid, Perhaps I am. Can it be that I bore people with my lack of words as much as if I talked them to death. I would feel silly, though, to talk as dear old Jack does, even if I could. I like to listen." The conversation proving languid they rode on. They struck rock after an hour and a half, so Terry suggested a slower gait, for the benefit of the

We will soon be there," said Martin, and the road taking an abrupt turn they came into Buckhorn.
"There is only one public house in the place, but this the nearest house, is always open to strangers. We will not cross the water just now."

They vaulted from the saddle and gave orders to have the horses cared for. An elevation of rock formed the foundation of the house where the two sought hospitality. Ere they reached the door a woman appeared in it, completely filling it with her two hundred gaily into the waves and spray, sped a Isabella, fetch the chairs. Now, Martin, have a pipe." From her pocket she drew pipe and tobacco. The two cut, rolled, smelled and filled, then lit. Terry looked on, and the nose he had called ugly twiched ominously. Never before had he seen the pipe used by woman. Yet why not, when so many men use it.

"Don't you smoke, stranger?

was brought. Terry had never seen their equal. Buckhorn boasts of its berries. Terry thoroughly enjoyed the fruit in defiance of the fumes of rank tobacco. His thoughts flitted between Jack and the small talk of this smoking woman. A sentence now held his traveling thoughts. The woman had said, "He never came back; his canoe was found tied up in Deer Bay."

"Who never came back?"

"Oh! a young fellow what came this way with Martin on his last trip. Guess it must have been four years back. He took our boat and went for a ride down pines. The piles of lumber now gave place to mills, beyond again spread the couldn't be found nowhere. Queer, ain't it, he was the first of four young men who disappeared just so, down that way. Outside the rapids beyond, there isn't a spot to be feared in them waters.

"Supper's ready. They followed the waddling woman to the house, everything was clean. Even Terry was satisfied to eat of that repast of fresh bass, fresh berries, fresh bread and butter. They were too hun-gry to talk, but the old woman talked for the three. When satisfaction set in Terry left the table and went out to the chairs on the stoop, as Mrs. Jones called the broad verandah. He was joined shortly by Martin, Mrs. Jones and a tall lanky Indian.

"Nosey wants to sell his canoe. He says he will let it go cheap, and teach the buyer how to paddle. He is going down to the Rice Lake reserve, and don't want to take his boat.' "How much does he want for it? I have made up my mind to go down to this land of disappearance you call Deer Bay, just to see what enchanted ground looks like. Of course I will want a boat of my own; we both might vanish." Twenty-five dollars he asks, but don't you give it. The Indians always ask a backdown price." "I will take it if it suits me. Where "Above the bridge. Nosey, you go up and shoot the rapids; we will wait below for you. This gentleman will give you twenty dollars if your boat suits him." Nosey grinned, and with that stealthy, slinking step peculiar to the breed hurried off up the river. Mrs. Jones called for her sun-bonnet, put it on, smoothed back her hair under its copious brim, tied the strings under her double chin, and set off in the direction of the sound of roaring water in the distance. In a few minutes they came to what Terry thought a wall of ivy of some kind. Martin stepped forward, parted the vines, and revealed a flight of rude steps of stone aridotypes for the stone or identity of some kind. rude steps of stone, evidently of nature's make. Past these steps stretched out an arm of solid rock, against which the water dashed in wildest fury. Maddened at its puny strength it turned with a swirl, smoothed itself into an oily, treacherous composure, and ran noise-lessly over the fall, at the extreme of the mighty barrier that had so easily stayed and turned the strength of a river. At the foot of the fall the water broke into a saucy laugh, and tossed coquetishly, flecks of spray at the bar-rier it could not move. Terry watched the water with interest, and a smile moved the calm, noble face. What a moved the calm, noble face. What a man he was. One made to win the love of woman, but without an effort; men strove to emulate him. Women first loved him, then hated, then loved again, and when unable to win naught but friendship, found that friendship from such as Terry Denver was worth

In half an hour everything was ready. The elegant craft was pushed from the ore, bearing Terry to scenes revealed to few. The afternoon sun beat down the system is an open question; but that with unusual warmth, and after a mile or two of slow, slumberous floating he change in the blood is well attested on all deer drinking at the water's edge. A squirrel frisked and chattered above them, and high over all an oriole swaved with the branches, singing gaily. The deer lifted their heads and in mild-eyed wonder watched the boat float by. The squirrel sat motionless with erected tail and saucy eyes still for once. And Terry floated on out of sight to the liltng music of the oriole's song. He had stretched himself at full length in the anoe, pillowed his head on the stern so hat with little exertion he could see right and left. The boat would turn and then Terry was going head first, turn again and feet would go first, swing half way around and then he went sideways; but all ways were alike to him as he lay half asleep in the yellow canoe. His eyes closed, and sleep kept them so. Mrs. Jones would have ejaculated, "Enchanted." Terry, why do you sleep? See, a current has set in shoreward, will passed under a mass of vines that hung as if backed by rocks. He had entered a cave of considerable size. He sat up and without a moment's hesitation down went the hands to the bottom of his pockets. Terry was at last conscious of interest in something. He was a boy again—a boy in a cave, perhaps a rob er's. There was nothing fancy like in this cavern. Solid rock and screened by vines. At the back the roof lowered to the height of six feet, and the sides narrowed to about four feet. The cave continued back Terry knew not how far. Seizing his paddle he guided his boat to the dark opening at the back and peered in. Nothing could be seen. He lit his lantern, placed it on the box conta his food, and began paddling cautiously He looked at his watch-it was six

He put out his light and away in the distance a faint glimmer of light shone steadily. He dipped his paddle now with strokes strong and regular. In ten minutes he floated out in the blazing light of day to meet welcome of a most peculiar sort. Almost instantaneously with his appearance a full voice said: "By Father Ambrose, if here is not nother victim for Ishmael."
