consent, or consult our wishes, in yielding to the anti-Corn-Law agitation 1 Would the people of England ask our consent, to-morrow, to any fun-damental change in their constitution 1 When the people and Parliament of England beheaded Charles I., and proclaimed the Commonwealth, thid they ask the consent of the Colonists 1 When they drove out James II., and made William III. King, did they consult the Colonists 1 Then it appears use, Colonists, are not the people of Eng-land, nor yet any partion thereof; or, if we are, the people in England seem to think they have a right to make very sweeping changes, without any reference to our opinions, wishes, or interests. Suppose, now, in any great movement of the En-glish people, whether such as might concern their alliances with foreign States, their declaration of hostilities against foreign Powers, their assailment of the fundamental principles, or institutions of government,-suppose we; canadians, in our ca-pacity of the British people, were, either through our Legislature, in form of an armed force, to interfere, to be as good as that of the people of their own body 1 Would they admit our right, so to interfere, or Yorkshure 1 We should, for our part, prefer advancing the claim in a very respect-ful and unthreatening attitude; for we guess John Bull would treat us to more kicks then compli-ment. We are, however, it would appear, a portion of ful and unthreatening attitude ; for we guees John Bull would treat us to more kicks than compliments. We are, however, it would appear, a portion of exercising any right in the modeling, changing, or subversion of the supreme government. This comes so very near to political nonentity, that, but for the honour of the thing, we might be as well without it ; and it places us so very far outside the pale of British clisicaeship, that we feel by no mour a disposed to let strangers hear us boasting of our British alliance, or British privileges. We have not the privilege of whispering a single cyllable prom the songlet of a fundamental change of the British constitution. It is a thing in no way dependent on our voice, or on our choice. rather than admit the truth, that Mr. Hincks' trip was, so far as its financial objects were concerned, an utter and absolute failure. But there are limits -and, besides, no amount of correction can ever be expected to "mend the morals" of such an in-corrigible. Let the Gazette, then, "hold his hand," and we promise to satisfy him that Mr. Hiacks' mission was not entirely a failure-that, although he could make nothing of the Lombard Street Bankers, he carried his point at the Horse The dispute between the Emperor of Morocco and the French seems to increase in violence. The French Consul at Mogadore has been treated harshly and ignominously, and a French frigate has been sent to his relief. There is now every probability of this affair ending in the bombard-ment of Tanzier.
