horror to me. At least! The long, straight road made a curve to the right. Not a sharp curve, but enough to bring me to closer quarters with my unlit lantern. In a moment as I pressed upon the handles and followed the sweep of the road he was upon me. In a moment the shadow had given place to the substance-with a long, panting, smothered groan a huge wolf was by my side.

Such a malevolent excavation was not calculated to attract the curious. It was generally avoided, but at the close of the hundred years' war, the English soldiers, being obliged to leave France suddenly, are reported to have concealed in the treasures acquired during the war. In spite of this and the peasants from fear of Satan continued to avoid it.

M. Martel did not explore entirely for the sake of finding the English treasures, but rather to study subterranean hydrography and to find the source of the water which has now made the descent several times. The earliest was in July, 1889. He was accompanied by a relative, M. Gaspullin, and two assistants, M. Martel descended by rope ladder of 180 steps, which was attached to a rock overhanging the gully. Vividly he describes his first impression.

After being joined by his companions he discovered that what he believed to be the abyss was only a platform of stone, giving access to another abyss, in which, at a depth of 294 feet from the surface, there was a passage with sides, which met in an arch from 90 to 120 feet above their heads. They came to four little lakes, formed by the broadening of the river.

They saw vaults glittering with stalactites; strange bas-reliefs, carved by nature in carbonate of lime-baskets of flowers, fountains, arabesques, statues in white and rose crystal. For richness of architectural decoration they had never seen anything like this. The magnesian light made them seem to be the heart of a pure diamond. The water reflected all above like a perfect mirror.

Then came difficulties. The river ran down a succession of great steps. The walls became so narrow that the boat had to be lowered, and then a stiletto hung down so that the travelers had to lie on their backs to pass beneath it.

At length they reached a cathedral-like opening, which, with two lakes, one higher than the other provided the most extraordinary vision they had seen. At the end of six hours of exploration they were able to return to their starting point without accident. They had gone a distance of two miles under the earth's surface.

On a second trip M. Martel took a new explorer. His previous success had probably made him over bold, and the party suffered from the effects of the subterranean water. They looked like the men we see in dreams. My bicycle swept on, but I could no longer control it. Everything went before me before my eyes, my limbs refused to move any longer-I felt that I was falling-falling into strong arms-Scribner's Magazine.

A Subterranean Wonderland that is Found in France. A RIVER THAT IS UNDER THE EARTH'S SURFACE AND IN WHICH THE WATER IS ENTERED BY DESCENDING A WELL - THE LATEST TO BE POPULARIZED EXPLORATION.

After a series of perilous but fascinating explorations the enormous and wonderful system of caverns known as the Grotte de Padirac is to be made accessible to tourists. This subterranean wonderland is situated in a region called the Causse de Garmat, in the Department of the Lot in France. It is not far from a famous place of pilgrimage-Rocamadour.

A company has acquired rights over the well by which entrance is obtained to the cavern and the subterranean river which forms one of the strangest natural curiosities in the world. It is intended to build stairways, to make paths and to launch gondolas on the river.

This enterprise may inaugurate a new form of amusement for those who are fond of traveling and have plenty of time and money to spend. All parts of the earth's surface which are now easily accessible to pleasure-seekers yearns for Central Africa. All the mountains, too, have been ascended. There is, therefore, but one region of the earth left to be explored and that is the interior. When a subterranean region so strange and beautiful as the Grotte de Padirac is available the amusement of sports must be very different.

The work of cavern exploring in France has been carried on with much skill and courage for several years by a small band of men of science, but they are professional. It is now time to popularize the pursuit. When you look for the Grotte de Padirac you come upon an immense gaping black hole in a level field. It is all the more startling because it does not fill your eyes. The opening is 105 feet in diameter and 300 feet in circumference and is 100 feet deep. The passage leads that

The Boys' "Run Backs." A NEAT LITTLE STORY WHICH CARRIES ITS OWN MESSAGE.

The little lamplighter came zig-zagging down Burnt Avenue. The gas jets popped into flame, first on one side of the street and then on the other, as he pursued his god-like mission.

"How do you like your job?" I asked, as he trudged along with his ladder over his shoulder and his torch in his hand, a Prometheus in embryo.

"They always give me the meanest job to the little fellows," he answered. "How can one job be worse than another, when the lamps are all of the same height and equally far apart?" I inquired.

"Oh, but they give us all the 'run backs,'" he replied. "And what in the world is a 'run back'?" "Why," said the boy, "they are little, short side streets down which we have to go and run back, with nothing to do on the return trip."

"Little man," said I, "don't commence to kick about having all the hard jobs and 'run backs' before you are out of your knickerbockers. The longer you live the more 'runbacks' you will have. There is not a job in the whole wide world which isn't full of them."

"Why, there's the Mayor, now. He don't have any." "Don't be!" I replied. "I reckon by the time he gets through with all his work and the office seekers, and creeps off to bed, he thinks the whole job is a 'run back.'"

"Well, his bow about a preacher?" he inquired. "Let that pass my boy," I answered. "I would rather see a preacher than a man who has to go and run back, with nothing to do on the return trip."

"You call them 'run backs.' It is all the same. All along the pathway of life there are toll gates, where the travelers have to pay a fraction of their time, their strength, their money, their very life, for the privilege of continuing on their journey."

"These who travel over one road and never see the toll gates on the other, and the mean ones are forever fretting and stewing because they have to pay so much more than anyone else. It is had enough to hear an old man moaning over the drawbacks of his life, but it is intolerable to hear it from a little boy. If you want to make every one despise you just keep repeating this homily over and over again."

"If you want everybody to love and honor you-yes, if you want to achieve success-take your 'run backs' without a murmur. When the good God gives us our medicine there is always a little bitter with the sweet, and we must not always be making wry faces over it."

Feed the Nerves. Upon pure, rich blood and you need not fear nervous prostration. Nerves are weak when they are improperly and insufficiently nourished. Pure blood is their proper food, and pure blood is always to be had in the form of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. It also builds up the whole system.

Wheeler Tried for His Life.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES IN FULL—CHAINS OF EVIDENCE CONTINUED—BLOOD-SPOTS AND OTHER CONTINUING PROOF OF GUILTY.

The trial of Peter Wheeler, charged with the murder of Annie Kempton, began Friday morning at 10 o'clock, before Mr. Justice Townshend, H. R. G. C. Wickvick was appointed for the crown, and Ruggles and Robertson of Kentville for the prisoner. W. B. Wallace, of Halifax, was appointed by the court official stenographer.

A jury was selected without much difficulty, only a few on the panel being challenged. The jury selected are: David North, Charles Easton, Charles McGregor, Mansfield Nichols, James Brown, Robert Hamilton, Charles Newcom, William Handwick, J. C. Healy, George Webster, John Donaldson and William Mortimer.

The court room was filled with people, many not being able to obtain admittance. Mr. Wickvick opened the case for the crown, he commenced on the evidence adduced at the preliminary examination and indicated that some new and damaging evidence would be given by certain witnesses against the prisoner.

The first witness called was Dr. Rice, who testified to the finding of the body of Annie Kempton and the tracks on the snow. His direct examination was not completed, the court took recess at one o'clock. Nothing specially new was added to the evidence.

The prisoner manifested a great deal of attention as Mr. Wickvick referred to the new evidence to be produced. Subsequently, as the evidence of Dr. Rice was given, he seemed quite unconcerned.

He forcibly cautioned the jury as to their adhering to the rules in criminal cases. He stated that he proposed to call a witness this evening. Recess was then taken for an hour.

After recess Mr. Rice was again put on the stand. He described the weather on the morning the murder was discovered, and the position of the body when he saw it with his wife went to the Kempton house.

Dr. Lovett examined, said he was the coroner for this county. He testified to the location of the body when he was called to the Kempton house by the police.
