THE DOMAIN OF WOMAN

THE FEMININE PHILOSOPHER

The educational system of Ontario is the best in the country, remarked the Optimist enthusiastically.

"As to how?" demanded the Cynic, who was teasing a small fox terrier nearly into convulsions.

"Why, look at the percentage of successful graduates in the various departments: mathematics, metaphysics, chemistry, languages, and—er, all the rest of it."

"Do you judge the value of an educational system, by the number of graduates it turns out, or by the net results as they appear in actual practice?" asked the Philosopher.

"I don't follow you," said the Optimist. "The net results are necessarily those very graduates, I should imagine."

"According to that the raison d'etre of education is merely to enable the young to pass a difficult exam, and not to fit them for the battle of life," retorted the Philosopher dogmatically.

"You are begging the question," said the Optimist, impatiently. "The very fact of their having graduated is the guarantee that they are fitted for the battle of life."

"Not by any means. The value of education depends not upon how much the pupil knows but upon his or her capacity to put that knowledge to a practical use. In other words it is quality, not quantity, that is the real desideratum. For instance, if a boy is going to be a clerk, where is the use of teaching him chemistry, and anatomy, metaphysics, geometry and a hundred and one other things that will be of no use to him?"

"Very impracticable," said the Philosopher. "Besides he would not be very likely to keep up various branches of knowledge that were of no earthly use to him. Now if he were taught the branches that would really benefit him, there would be some sense in it."

"Well, so he is," said the Optimist. "The useful things are taught also."

"That is an admission that some things which are taught are not useful," interjected the Cynic. "Yes," said the Philosopher. "And the useless things are so crammed in and battered down that they crowd out the useful ones."

"You must admit that some knowledge is useful," persisted the Optimist.

"I don't admit it," said the Philosopher. "Only that knowledge is of real value that can be put to practical use."

ously of opinion that the more the brain is formed during youth, the more energy and vitality is taken from the body. The first seven years of life should be free from care and worry, and devoted exclusively to pleasurable pursuits."

"Why only the first seven years?" asked the Cynic. "Why not extend the time to say, twenty one, by that time most people have exhausted the joys of existence and would be ready to commence the education which is supposed to teach them to despise the vain pleasures of the world."

"At that moment the Playgoer came along, and, not looking who he was going to step on the dog's tail—"

"There was an agonized howl, and a yelping fox terrier batted up the steps into the club."

"That's a practical illustration of your theory, Philosopher," said the Cynic calmly. "I've been three months teaching that type to sit on his hind legs. If I had devoted the time to teaching him not to sit on a public highway with his tail stuck out it would have been of more benefit to him this evening."

"And the Cynic got up and strolled away."

TELL THE DRAF—Mr. J. F. Kollok, Druggist, Perth, writes: "A customer of mine having been cured of deafness by the use of Dr. Thomas' Eucalyptic Oil, wrote to Ipswich, telling his friends there of the cure. In consequence I received an order to send half a dozen by express to Wexford, Ireland, this week."

A QUEER LITTLE HEN.

There was once a little hen, A dear little, queer little hen, Her work was to lay about every day, And she did, this good little hen

She'd fly up a tree, and right then, Seated high on a branch, this queer little hen, Her egg she would lay— Her one egg every day, This good little, queer little hen.

'Twas a strange thing to do, I must say, Lay an egg from a tree every day, And what good was the egg— Just tell that, I beg— That fell from the tree in that way?

But some people do things just as queer, I know it, I've seen it, my dear. They have a good thought, But it just comes to naught; From the wrong place they drop it, my dear.

There's a lesson for us and for me From the hen that laid eggs in a tree. If we do a right surface canal, If a good thought we bring, Let's not choose a wrong place, you and me.

THE PLANET MARS.

According to a writer in the London Daily Chronicle, Mars is almost certainly inhabited by beings, possibly very dissimilar, but not some respects resembling ourselves, since, judging from the stupendous amount of work expended on irrigation, they live in perpetual fear of a water famine such as we have heard of even in London. Everything leads to the conviction that the network of canals is artificial. Mars must be many hundreds of millions of years older than the earth, and its surface must have become levelled up in the course of ages. Assuming that the continents upon Mars resemble the flat country of Holland, it is certain that the inhabitants would have to protect their houses by dams similar to those built by the Dutch. They have, therefore, built dams along their coast, while at the same time they have tried to lead the sea water into the interior of the continent by means of waterways and canals. It would not be necessary to dig these water-streets, it would be sufficient to erect dams between which the water might run, as in a canal, hence no very excessive labour would be required, especially when we consider that gravity is three times less on the surface of Mars, and we see only the largest canals, the millions of lesser ones remain invisible.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an Irish boy, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, and all Nervous Complaints, having tested the wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, the recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using the same, by sending by address with name, name this paper, W.A. Nott, 230 Forepaugh Street, Rochester, N.Y.

"But why supplement all this with knowledge which is not useful?" demanded the Philosopher. "Is a man or woman any the better for being crammed with intellectual rubbish at the expense of nerves and health?"

"No, I suppose not," replied the Optimist. "But you have not proved that their health does not suffer by so doing."

"Here the Bookworm broke in again; 'Physicians,' said he, 'are unanimous in their opinion that the brain is injured by an over-education of the intellect.'"

"But they are taught the usual canonical branches of knowledge," persisted the Optimist. "Reading, writing, arithmetic, book-keeping, history, etc., etc."

SCOTLAND.

THE PROGRESS OF CATHOLICITY. These decades ago Wislawa was the centre of the black district of Scotland, and from it the great Motherwell, Coatbridge, Glasgow, Newmilns, Overton, and Shilldun, two of which were considered sufficient to serve this large locality, and we read in the directory of the time that the exact Catholic population was 2206 souls. To-day nine priests and six churches, with a seating accommodation for over 4,000, are dotted over the district which was once supplied by a church whose attendance was 200.

At first one priest was considered sufficient to administer to the wants of the mission of Shilldun—now three find the task none too light for them, and the people have one of the finest churches in the archdiocese. Destined in early decorated style, it consists of chancel, nave, side chapels, aisle, sacristy, and confessionals. The nave is 97 ft long and 28 ft wide. The church is fitted up with electric light, being one of the first in the diocese that is so.

BONNIE, BONNIE BANKS OF LOCH LOMOND.

Mr William Black is clearly much interested in the correspondence which has been going on as to the popular ballad, "The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond." In "Wild Eells," his new novel, the heroine has composed a version of the song for her own singing, and confesses that she cannot find among the old books any definite origin of the song.

The story that both words and music were taken down from the singing of a little boy in Edinburgh streets won't answer at all; the little street boys in Edinburgh are not in the habit of singing, "Where in purple hue the Highland hills we view." What is that? Is it Highland, or is it Scotch, or is it—rubbish? It's rubbish!

The questions discussed are, however, problems of old standing. Several attempts have been made to elucidate

BLESSING OF THE GRAPES.

This is a ceremony still prevailing in various parts of France. At Arbois, in the Jura, it takes the name of the "Fête du Bon Dieu." The collection of the finest bunches of grapes in the country, often is taken to the church, escorted by the entire population of the district. After being blessed with much pomp of ceremonial, it goes to make wine, which is to arrive later on for the altar. M. Pasteur never lost an opportunity of being present at this vintage festival.

FRAGILE OTT.—None but those who have become fagged out, know what a depressed miserable feeling it is. All strength is gone, and despondency has taken hold of the sufferers. They feel as though there is nothing to live for. There, however, is a new sort of Farmeole's Vegetable Pills will do wonders in restoring health and strength. Mandrake and Dandelion are two of the articles entering into the composition of Farmeole's Pills.

Periphrastic Manager (of excursion)—We're a little behind time, I know, but I've made it up on the last half of the run. Indignant Excursionist—Make it up? What's the use of talking that way? We'll meet ourselves coming back long before we get there!"

THE FIVE MEN NIGHT CAP. CONCLUSION. Harry ran up to the window, drew back the thick red curtain, and looked forth into the street, where the snow flakes were falling thicker and faster.

There's a policeman talking to a boy, and Harry I suppose he's telling him to "move off."

"I wonder if it is the same little boy as was sitting on the step when we came in an hour ago?" cried Mabel, joining her brother at the window.

"He's been sitting on your door step, sir, all the time that I've been on my boat. If he sits there much longer, he'll be frozen into an icicle. I want to take him off to the Union."

"You have hurt your arm, indeed, my poor little fellow," said Mr. Stanley, looking with pity at the swollen, sprained wrist.

"Yes, sir," said the boy, who had now stopped crying, "and when I had a couple to pay for a halibut, I slipped in the court yard by. But I couldn't care a penny to-day."

"Not even to buy bread with?" asked Mabel.

"The young sweeper shook his head. Had he not been faint with hunger, as well as cold, he would not have given way, as he had done, to crying."

"No food, and on Christmas day too!" cried the children, who had all had roast beef and plum-pudding.

"What sad Christmas he has had," sighed Mabel. "I am sorry that I was so full of my own pleasure and fun as scarcely to give him even a thought when I passed him as I ran up the doorsteps."

"O grandpapa, a thought has just come into my head!" cried Mabel. "You said that some one might still be found for the tiny red cap. Suppose then we hunt it again on the tree, and so if we can't manage to fill it with little presents for the boy to make him forget the pain in his arm, and have a happy Christmas after all."

The Catholic church in the Philippines has not received the most courteous sort of treatment from the Press of the United States which presumes to represent the opinion of the people.

It is an important mission that the Pope has entrusted to Most Rev. Dr. Chappello, Archbishop of New Orleans, in appointing him Apostolic Delegate to Cuba.

Canada is supporting several well paid immigration commissioners in Ireland; and as far as Mr. Devin is concerned we have had plenty of evidence of his energy, as well as his intelligent methods of "booming the country."

On Wednesday, the 12th, Lieutenant-Governor Mowat, on the advice of the Ontario Cabinet, issued a proclamation proroguing the Legislature, which was merely adjourned on August 24.

Emperor William's pilgrimage to the Holy Land bids fair to assure His Majesty of a reasonable share of the world's attention.

but they are under lock and key now and their sacred points are guarded by latest accounts the elements have conspired against his progress.

The London Pall Mall Gazette draws a picture of the late Madame Carnot, wife of the murdered French President who was a devout Catholic.

The Antigonish Casquet says: We have refrained from any expression of opinion in the matter of the much discussed charge against the Yukon officials, as the subject was one in which party politics were more or less involved.

The London Daily News gives the following account of the religious intolerance of the dominant minority in Derry: "The appointment of Sir Acheson O'Connell, of Derry, a prominent Unionist politician, to an Inspectorship under the Irish Local Government Board as a sequel to the appointment of Mr. Bagwell, D.L., an Irish Unionist stump orator at English by-elections, to a seat on the Board—a body which will largely supervise and control the new District and Local Councils in Ireland—may render it of interest to know that the twenty-six officials in the principal branches of the Irish Local Government Department, seven only are Roman Catholics, and no one can be credited with popular leanings.

Rev. Dr. Amaron, whose name would suggest the Hebrew race, lectured in Montreal last week on French-Canadian "evangelization."

In comparison with New England, which was founded a century later, French Canadians showed a great want of prosperity and thrift.

The spirit of this utterance may well be ignored. What we wish to say in connection with it is that while Mr. Amaron was lauding the sway of the "Puritans and Pilgrims" of New England, the Baptists of the New England states were loudly bewailing the modern conquest of the territory of the Pilgrim Fathers by Roman Catholics.

AN ORGANIZED STAND IS NECESSARY AGAINST THE AGGRESSIVE MISSIONARY WORK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IF THE BAPTISTS WERE SATISFIED TO STAND STILL. THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH WOULD MAKE A NEW FRANCE OF THE NEW ENGLAND STATES.

words, the Roman Catholics were more than all the Protestants by 100,000 in Massachusetts and Rhode Island they comprised about two thirds of the whole number of communicants.

Now in what position is Mr. Amaron and his fellow "evangelizers" in Quebec placed by these facts? If New England is prosperous to-day, its prosperity is certainly due quite as much—more so we should think—to the progress of Catholic majority of the people as to the declining Protestant minority.

To be sure there is danger of the spirit of contention exciting others, who so far as least occupy the position of on-lookers at the row. Mr. T. M. Healy has been making a speech in Ireland to indicate that in a little while the weapons of both contestants may be turned against the Catholic church, and that the "no Popery" cry may then come to have a real significance.

My word went to the mountain... I'll have you again by a rag and a bone... But, ere I give you the plodding word I'll part with them and lift—

Then Dhiarmid too spoke grave and slow... Your death knell's sounding now, No hurrying ball your soul shall call, 'Tis our fear must make you how.

Your grave is deep, and your grave is high... Its walls are soundless stone, And never a soul shall hear your call, Or pity your dying moan.

We groped in darkest gloom, And we heard but the booming flood below... Its sound a message of doom.

Oh deep our grave by a hidden wave, And far from friends and home, Where never a soul as long years roll To breathe a prayer would come.

Our life strength ebbed away, And, when sweet visions crossed the brain, Of homes we'd see no more, We heard the drip of the weeping rock, And the rumbling torrent's roar.

At last a light flashed full and bright, 'Twas sweet as breaking day; And full in the glow, stood Dhiarmid Roe, And mocked us where we lay.

"No, Regan Bueo, are the bounds at bay, Brought up and trapped at last? You've had your fun of many a run, But your hunting days are past.

"I'll send ye back to Galway Town, Where wives and children wait; The time goes by, and the end is nigh, Speak now or speak too late."

"Oh never again by heath and glen, (O, D pay thee Dhiarmid Roe) Wore a whiskey still on every hill, On the outlaw's track we'll go."

"The day that I killed Regan Bueo, And brought his beasting low, A just I'll brew of the mountain dew, To treat you ere ye go."

"Ho bound our eyes, and he led us on; And when we looked again, We saw the prize we had hunted long, The daring outlaw's den.

"But think of home, in Galway Town, And think of child and wife; Then make me a solemn promise here, Your word shall buy your life."

"For, never again the mountain men, Your stealthy steps must fear; The brag and glen for the mountain men, The slope for the mountain deer."

"No more the still you'll hunt and spill, No more the moorlands range; Your word will keep you know how deep, The outlaw's red rove, 'Tis our fear must make you how."

Oh, how and true that mountain dew, Old heart and brain it thrills— I see as I saw in days gone by, The wind-swept Connought Hills.

RHYME OF THE STILL-HUNTERS.

AN EARL CONNAUGHT BALAD.

It was the Gauger Regan Bueo That pointed me to the hawk, One sunny day, by Galway Bay, And sat on an empty cask.

A Gauger old and stern, was he, Grim foe to fresh potteen, Had sought the still, or valley and hill Full steady his scout, I woen.

He lit his pipe, and he puffed a puff, He spat in the salty dew; He stood on the blue black Connought Hills, Then dropped his head and sighed.

"Now, Regan Bueo, what aight dost see On the lonesome Connought Hills? I see on Kylemore's swelling slopes The smoke of whiskey stills."

I feel the peat spring to my feet, I scent the gorse clad waste; I long again for the brag and glen Where mountain rivers raced.

Full dim my sight that once was light, My bones are stiff and sore; But the Connought Hills are calling now And it's off I'd be once more.

Oh off again with the mountain men, I know them one and all; Jack Joyce, that kept round Knockanis, And Toig, at Balmagill.

And Maolmorra Lynch, of Dalystown; But the keenest rogue drew breath Was Dhiarmid Roe, of Ballinacree, Sly fox and game to death.

'Twas many a day we went his way, Full sure to find his lair In the Boughs Hills, where smoked his stills, On the bounds of County Clare.

And many a night, a wotul sight, My men and I slunk home, While down from the shadowy mountain cliffs His mocking voice would come:—

"No, Regan Bueo, you're far to see My peatly mountain dew; I'll send you a pint, with never a stint, First run, and tested true."

"But haste you now from the mountain tracks, Go home to Galway Town, And say when there, that I beat you fair, For all your name's renown."

We wandered there when fields were fair, And the gorse a flame of gold, We sought again for the outlaw's den, When winter winds blew cold.

One day, at last, we followed fast; The trail was straight and true, Close the chase, till cliffs' dark face Concealed him from our view.

High and low for a hiding place We searched, and not in vain; We found a rift in the granite cliff, The door of Dhiarmid's den.

Oh child that cave as a churchyard vault; Our hearts had need be bold; Black its mouth, but the womb within Was blacker a hundred fold.

High and steep were the stony walls, The roof was lost to view; With shufle and jar like thunder far Our footsteps echoed thro'.

Spoke Jack Ryan, of Banaha Town, Who feared not man or ghost:— "I hear a tread on the road ahead," And he followed the footsteps fast.

On thro' the midnight murk he went, With never a thought or care; I heard a sound like the lashing surf, And called to him "Beware!"

"Ware a trap, or an open cleft— My warning came too late! A stumble, a cry that chilled our hearts; And then we knew his fate.

Thud and thud, on the rocky shelves, We heard his body go, And plunge at last in the raving flood, A thousand feet below.

Then flashed a light, and the cave was bright, We glimpsed each dripping ledge, The mighty chasm blocked our way, Full close we viewed its edge.

Heavy and deep, in sullen sweep, We heard the flood below; But over its din a voice broke in— The challenge of Dhiarmid Roe:—

"Ho Regan Bueo, on your bounden knee Pray God to save your soul; Your grave is a thousand feet below And never a bell to toll.

"Your grave is a thousand feet below, Your children wait at home, And your wife shall cry as the days go by, For a husband never to come.

"But think of home, in Galway Town, And think of child and wife; Then make me a solemn promise here, Your word shall buy your life."

"For, never again the mountain men, Your stealthy steps must fear; The brag and glen for the mountain men, The slope for the mountain deer."

"No more the still you'll hunt and spill, No more the moorlands range; Your word will keep you know how deep, The outlaw's red rove, 'Tis our fear must make you how."

Oh, how and true that mountain dew, Old heart and brain it thrills— I see as I saw in days gone by, The wind-swept Connought Hills.

I feel the peat beneath my feet, I smell the heathery waste, I long again for the brag and glen, Where shouting torrents raced.

Then stout his challenge I answered back, And spoke as man to man:—

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER.

As the evening shadows were falling, on the 11th of November 1837, a traveller, who had been riding along the banks of the Somme, in search of a safe crossing, wearily turned his horse toward the main road.

He soon reached the outlying houses in the suburbs of a large city. Dismounting he knocked loudly with the hilt of his sword on door of the nearest house.

In answer, a voice from within called out "enter" and at the same time the latch was raised.

The master of the establishment started nervously at the sight of a Roman soldier, his surprise was immediately detected by the stranger and he, too, retreated somewhat.

"Enter, enter," repeated the master, stepping out as far as the threshold, "No matter who you may be, when seated by my hearth you shall be considered as an ever welcome guest."

The soldier thanked his kind host and, having dried his garments, gladly joined his friends at their evening meal.

"Stranger," said Ambrosio, "will you now tell us what we have the honor to entertain?" "My home," answered the soldier, "is very far away, perhaps you may have heard of a place called Pannonia?"

At early dawn, the soldier took leave of his friends, having first partaken of the simple breakfast which, even at so early an hour, his hospitable host prepared for him.

The morning was gray and gloomy and snow was falling heavily in large flakes. In such weather it took but a very short time before the beighted traveller was completely lost in the deep forest.

"Whoever you are, speak," said the soldier, "and tell me what you want of me." "I am hungry," said the poor frail creature.

"I have," said the soldier, "a loaf of bread and a bit of cheese. Here, take and eat," answered the soldier taking down his knapsack.

"What more?" asked the soldier. "I am cold," was the chattering answer. The traveller saw the poverty of the unfortunate wretch and glancing at his watch for the clock.

"I have," said the soldier, "a pair of gloves and a pair of shoes. Here, take and wear them." "I am thirsty," said the wretched creature.

"I have," said the soldier, "a glass of wine and a bit of meat. Here, take and eat." "I am weary," said the wretched creature.

"I have," said the soldier, "a bed and a blanket. Here, take and rest." "I am cold," said the wretched creature.

"I have," said the soldier, "a fire and a hearth. Here, take and warm yourself." "I am hungry," said the wretched creature.

only in religion and theology, but in morals. The Protestant Church, has not the machinery for dealing with the vices of the world in these times.

"Instead of putting our shoulder to the wheel and fighting against the awful spread of social vice and drunkenness and Sabbath breaking we are squabbling among ourselves and spending our energies on denominational differences.

There are seventeen sects of Methodists and thirteen sects of Baptists, and almost as many distinct varieties in each other religious group.

One of the most gratifying things which a Catholic traveller can see witness in most parts of Canada, is the mutual love and affection, which have recently sprung into existence.

The Kaiser's War On Labor. Emperor William has announced that a bill is in preparation providing that persons inciting others to strike shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor.

The laws against intimidators of workmen are already the most stringent in character, prescribing punishment from three months to two years' imprisonment and the Emperor's new proposals have incited such hostility as to make it certain that there will be grave disturbances both in the Reichstag and throughout the country, if their enactment is forced.

The Souvenir Range WITH AERATED OVEN Is an Unrivalled Cooker. THE stove that is not a good cooker counts for little, whatever good points it may possess. The construction of the aerated oven, found only in the Souvenir, is such that these stoves cannot do anything else but cook well. The principle involved in creating a good cooker is developed to the highest degree in the aerated oven.
