It is interesting to look back at the 1972 report—it is the latest one we have—which indicates that in the whole of 1972 only 2,846 loans were made in Canada under this act. When one looks back to the beginning of this act in 1961, he finds that more loans were made in the first year than 11 years later, there being 2,977 loans made the first year. I find it difficult to comprehend why there are so few loans made to the small business community.

If you are involved at all with small businessmen or know something about their operations, it is interesting to listen to their stories about what happens when they go to the bank in an attempt to get a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act. I listened to the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) tell us about the difficulties farmers in his area have in getting loans under the act. The same difficulties exist with small businessmen.

A month or so ago I sent a letter to all the small businessmen in my riding and quoted some of the facts, figures and statistics from the 1972 report. I am now beginning to get some rather interesting replies. It is interesting to note that the banks have not seen fit to change their tactics over the years, and I suggest this has a direct relationship to the small number of loans made under this act in the course of a year. Since the inception of this act the banks have not been able to grant more than 2,977 loans in any one year. They have never granted 3,000 loans in a year. Let me refer to a letter which is typical of the replies I have received from my constituents. This small businessman writes:

> Thank you very much for your letter regarding loans to small businesses. I read it with great interest as just at that time I was asked to guarantee to the bank a loan for purchase of a new truck by an independent trucker who works for our company.
> I phoned the bank manager who claimed that he has never heard of the Small Businesses Loans Act, and anyway he would not be interested in a loan at 8¼ per cent interest rate. After I pointed out to him that this is a federal statute, that the trucker needs $19,000 for the new truck and that he is selling his old truck for $4,000, the manager promised to check with the head office. The reply was that it is true that truckers qualify under Small Businesses Loans Act, but in this particular case the applicant is not eligible for a loan as he owes some money to his father and to another bank.
> I wonder how many businesses exist where young owners do not owe any money, whether it is to purchase furniture or a car. In this particular case the bank would gladly take over the other bank's loan without guarantee, loan $19,000 with our company's guarantee at 11½ per cent, but will not touch a loan with government's guarantee at 8¼ per cent.

Therein lies the difficulty. Other letters and telephone calls which I have received from small businessmen tell the same story. I have one here from a company in Burlington which states—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of the honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

> Bill C-2, an act to amend the Fisheries Development Act—Chapter 4
> Bill C-9, an act to amend the Yukon Act, the Northwest Territories Act and the Canada Elections Act—Chapter 5

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 11, 1974

The House met at 2 p.m.

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO HON. ROBERT L. STANFIELD

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our presence here today is sufficient proof that good intentions are not always sufficient to produce the desired result. It had been the hope of those of us in this party that this House would not be making demands today on the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), thus freeing him for leisurely activities more appropriate to this date. The fact that we are here, however, gives me the opportunity to extend to him our very best wishes and to tell him what we propose in order to mark this occasion.

The hon. gentleman knows that no statistics have emerged today which would be disturbing to him apart of course from his own accelerating annual adjustment over which the government has no control. We also continue to hold out the invitation to recess the sitting at an early hour. Finally, I wish to assure the hon. gentleman that we will understand completely should he decide to refrain from participating in the question period to enjoy a well deserved rest. But whatever his choice, the basic aspect of this message is not negotiable—we wish him a very happy birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing very much I can add to the humour the Prime Minister put into his best wishes, except to say that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has now reached the age where I expect him to join with us in seeking a reduction in the age of eligibility for the old age pension. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition and I have been engaged for a year and a half—

An hon. Member: Engaged?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Lewis: —and that the Leader of the Opposition has been seeking a marriage for the same 18 months. On behalf of my colleagues, I want to wish him the very best on his birthday and whether or not he participates in the question period today or any other day, to wish him many years of active public life with the same sincerity and pleasantness he has shown so far.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I hope we are not here today for the sole purpose of celebrating the birthday of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). However, I believe it is customary and I am very pleased to do so on behalf of our party and wish him a very happy birthday. We hope that since we are here the day will be fruitful for the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am almost overcome. I wish to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the leaders of the other parties who have expressed good wishes to me for the future. I am all the more touched when I realize how deeply sincere these wishes are, Mr. Speaker. I am, of course, pleased that everybody now recognizes why we are here today. The only thing I should like to make very clear is that, of course, the celebrations continue all next week.

Finally, may I say that I realize it would be very difficult for anybody, judging from my physical vigour, the rapidity of my speech in English and my eloquence in French, to believe that I have reached the sixth decade.

An hon. Member: The seventh decade.

Mr. Stanfield: Whether it be the sixth or seventh, I am sure it does not compare at all with the tenth. The only real warning I should give the Prime Minister and his friends, the Leader of the New Democratic Party and my friends in the Social Credit Party of course is that on this anniversary, the achievement of this great age, and with the recognition that the time ahead of me is that much shorter, I have become more hungry for power than ever before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAIN

PAYMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF ADDITIONAL COSTS TO FARMERS RESULTING FROM FAILURE TO DELIVER TO EXPORT POSITIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising from the very serious situation which prevails in the grain industry, as critically outlined by the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Vogel at the National Transportation Conference yesterday. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North:

That the federal government take immediate steps to ensure that the Canadian grain producers will be relieved of all costs and charges caused by contractual default by the Canadian Wheat Board for failure to meet sales commitments, and further, that all abnormal demurrage charges be paid for by the federal treasury since Canada's transportation system has failed to move sufficient quantities of grain to export position.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT SET FIXED DATES FOR ELECTIONS AND HOLIDAYS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43, to ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since nobody knows when elections will be held, that all Canadians are on the alert and that newspapermen are forever announcing elections I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the government consider the possibility of having elections and holidays on set dates so we may know where we stand.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, that motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED FEDERAL FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR WOMEN'S TRISERVICE MONUMENT, WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that without federal support the sum of $20,000 for the construction of the women's triservice monument in Winnipeg cannot be raised. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria:

That the Prime Minister give federal support to the women's triservice veterans association in Winnipeg for the construction of a monument.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

SUGGESTED AID TO HOG PRODUCERS IN EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important matter of pressing necessity.

As eastern producers are now losing $20 to $25 per pig, because of the very high cost of production, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the government study this very ticklish and urgent matter to prevent the producers going bankrupt and to keep them in production in the greater interest of both producers and consumers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion of the hon. member cannot therefore be put.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING NEGOTIATIONS FOR BROADCASTING TIME

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton) moved the first reading of Bill C-278, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. O'Connor: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to clarify discrepancies in the timing of the negotiations which are required under the act to take the place between the parties and broadcasters prior to an election.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT REVIEW OF POLICY DECISIONS OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-279, to amend the Broadcasting Act (review of policy decision of C.R.T.C. by Governor in Council).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give the Governor in Council the scope to review and, where necessary, amend policy decisions made by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. It does not affect the commission's independence, but will restore to the elected representatives of the people, a say in the broadcasting policy decisions of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO CURB INFLATIONARY EXPECTATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. the Prime Minister, and I am sure that on this day of all days I will get a very full and satisfactory answer. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance said that one of the basic causes of rapidly rising housing costs is that Canadians are buying houses to "protect themselves against inflation". In light of this apparently belated discovery by the Minister of Finance who has been previously attributing inflation to international phenomenon and shortage of supply, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has any specific measure in mind to break this inflationary psychology to which the minister referred yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Leader of the Opposition to the statement of the minister. He indicated that this was one cause amongst many. It is reasonably well known that in inflationary times, and nobody denies that inflation is now higher than we would like to see it, people tend to go into commodities or into goods, away from money. The Minister of Finance added that they were choosing housing because of the exemption of capital gains on housing. That is a fair statement of the position of the Minister of Finance. In so far as specific measures are concerned, Mr. Speaker, yes, they are being contemplated by the government and will be announced in the appropriate manner.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now, that we have this disclosure that inflationary expectations are an important factor in the increases in prices that are taking place, at least in some areas of the economy, has the Prime Minister prepared a new approach and has the government really got anything in mind to curb these inflationary expectations or is it just content to let things go on?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, much of our action has been an attempt precisely to kill this inflationary psychology but we cannot hide from the Canadian people the fact that inflation is also largely caused by events beyond the control of the Canadian government and people. To this degree, we can only point out to them signs of an easing of international commodities prices which are becoming evident. Wholesale prices of grain, cattle, hogs, wool and cotton have already turned down, some very significantly. Metal prices will remain at a high level but the prices of such commodities as coffee and sugar have levelled out recently after a sharp rise. We hope that people will notice this, rather than responding to the panic which is encouraged in some quarters.

● (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister would not be old enough to remember, but I am just old enough to remember that this is the way a lot of people talked in the thirties about prosperity being just round the corner. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I gather from what the Prime Minister said to me that it is simply the intention of the government to wait and hope that this situation will straighten out. Since the Prime Minister's explanation of inflation is that too many people are trying to take too much out of the economy, and since he said recently that organized labour is not responsible for this, can he tell the House who is taking too much out of the economy and what he proposes to do about it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the premise of the question to do with prosperity, I refer the Leader of the Opposition to the Wall Street Journal of this week, which says that the economy of Canada expands, outpacing most other nations, and that it is leading the pack.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We certainly agree with the opposition that everything is not perfect in the Canadian economy, but where we do disagree with them is that we think it is not bad to be best in the world.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF TWO-PRICE SYSTEM TO COMMODITIES OTHER THAN OIL AND WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to ask questions about inflationary psychology and how to curb it, because I have never been able to understand what that phrase means and I suspect that those who use it do not understand it either.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Finance certainly does not understand what it means.

Mr. Lewis: It was the Leader of the Opposition who used it, Mr. Speaker. May I address my question to the Minister of Finance. As both he and the Prime Minister have rightly insisted that one of the causes of rising prices in Canada is the international shortage of some basic commodities and the international price increase of those commodities, including commodities produced in Canada in abundance for meeting the needs of Canadians, has the Minister of Finance given consideration to extending the principle and policy of the two-price system beyond oil and wheat, to cover other basic commodities produced in Canada, which should be made available to Canadians at a reasonable price rather than at the exorbitant international price?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the topics which should be before the House at the moment is the psychology of the hon. member for York South and his followers. While we have a two-price system on wheat and, to a certain extent, on petroleum, this two-price system, if carried to great lengths and supported by export controls and other types of mechanisms which would be needed to reinforce it, might well be considered as a new style of protectionism whereby this country would seek to protect its own price and supply structure at the expense of other nations, developing and developed. In terms of international trade, as this nation depends for one quarter of its gross national product on its relationships with other nations, I am not sure that it would be an unqualified advantage to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, setting aside what the Minister of Finance has to say about my psychology, I cannot understand his logic let alone his psychology. My suggestion has nothing to do with controlling in any way prices outside this country. I did not suggest that we should interfere with or control the normal export market, so that there would be no interference at all with what goes out of this country. I ask the Minister of Finance to tell this House and the people of Canada why Canadians should pay more for their commodities merely because other parts of the world are pushing up the price on what they produce.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, let me try to get this on a logical basis. The hon. member and I will then be on the same plane. If we are to have a two-price system on commodities whereby there is a lower domestic price than international price, then basic commodities would inevitably seek the higher international price unless we were to put export controls to ensure that that supply remains here. Export taxes or export control would be a new style of protection for our pricing and supply structure, which would be subject to retaliation by other nations, because it would be as potentially dangerous for Canada as an international trader as tariff barriers or invisible barriers were to protect our employment situation in the thirties.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South for a supplementary.

[Translation]

—I shall then allow the hon. member for Abitibi to put a supplementary, after which I shall give the floor to several other hon. members who wish to put supplementaries.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will try to see if I can word this question so that Your Honour will not object to it as being debate. If there is any validity in what the minister said, will he explain to the House why he does not apply it to oil and wheat? Also, will he explain to the House and the people of Canada why protection for the Canadian consumer and the Canadian economy is something he rejects?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in protecting the consumer and the Canadian economy, but in ways that will not jeopardize the long term trading interests of this country. The reason it was done for oil, of course, is that the price was not set domestically in Canada. It was set internationally by quasi-monopolistic practices in the Persian Gulf and by OPEC nations. Our two-price situation in oil was a defensive mechanism. The hon. member knows that full well.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO INCREASE PRODUCTION OF CONSUMER GOODS TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

At the present time, nearly all the papers published by the government say that the inflation is in part caused by the shortage of consumer goods. Since everything that has been done up till now has not been effective, could he tell the House if he has truly effective action to suggest to increase the production of consumer goods and reduce their cost?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for once the hon. member and myself certainly share the same theories and if he refers to the Speech from the Throne, he will note that probably the most important legislation considered for adoption is the one aimed at ensuring a greater production of goods to fight against long term inflation.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another supplementary to the Prime Minister.

Can he assure the House that the bill suggested in the Speech from the Throne will be introduced soon instead of making it an electoral promise?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we believe that many years will pass before we have to make any more electoral promises.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INFLATION AS EXPRESSED BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AT UNITED NATIONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs addresses the United Nations today giving the Canadian position on inflation, will he be expressing the same defeatist policy of the government enunciated yesterday by the Minister of Finance that inflation is inevitable and this government has neither the wit, will nor capacity to deal with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will certainly be expressing government policy, but fortunately not seeing it through the jaundiced eyes of the hon. member for Peace River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO COMBAT INFLATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact that the economy has been running a 9 per cent rate of inflation consistently for nine months, the highest such consistent rate since 1913, may I ask the minister what steps the government intends to take to break the mood of inflationary expectation in the country? The indications are there will be a series of strikes and a great deal of labour unrest throughout the country this summer.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): By trying to deal with the facts as I see them in a realistic way.

Mr. McGrath: The minister has had the facts before him for some time, now. May I ask him exactly when the Canadian people can expect some relief from this government, based on the facts presently before him and the experience of the last five months?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I dealt with that question as fully as I could under the rules when I replied to the hon. gentleman yesterday.

ACTION TO HELP WORKERS NOT PROTECTED BY UNIONS OR LARGE CORPORATIONS TO FIGHT INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A further supplementary to the minister arising from a very serious situation which has developed. It is based on the fact that average weekly wages have risen by 7.4 per cent while inflation is now running at 10.4 per cent, a difference of three percentage points. Can the minister tell us what immediate plans he has to protect the workers, who seem to get further and further behind?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The action we took last year and this year in increasing the disposable income of wage earners has worked, and in terms of disposable income workmen in this country have improved their standard of living.

Mr. Alexander: I am sure that answer is not acceptable to those who are trying to buy food, clothing and housing. The Steel Company of Canada, Westinghouse and Dofasco now realize that inflation is primarily domestically induced and they have looked after their workers. Can the minister advise us what specific plans he has in mind to help those who are not supported by big unions and big business?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Since the beginning of the current rate of increase in the cost of living, the government has done its best to increase the disposable income of Canadians least able to protect themselves, and will continue to do so.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO TEST CONFIDENCE IN GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO COMBAT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister having in the last two days expressed great confidence in the policy of the government as it affects inflation, I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he is prepared to put those policies to the test in this House by allowing a motion of confidence next week or at the latest a week after.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, and no, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member consults his memory he will appreciate that there were seven or eight such tests in the month just concluded and, of course, there will be something like 10 or 12 such tests before the end of June, compared to very few legislative days. The opposition was entitled to all the opposition days it had in March, but it must surely understand that the government would like to use some days for the purpose of governing. What surprises us on this side is the fear of the opposition with regard to letting the government present its budget, a budget which apparently the opposition is afraid will be good for the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: The government is putting off the presentation of the budget until as far into the future as it can, and since this is by far the most important question in the minds of all Canadians, I challenge the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: There will be four extra days next week.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Inasmuch as the Minister of Finance now has an extra week at his disposal, namely next week—the parliamentary timetable has been advanced by one week—can he tell us when the budget will, in fact, be presented?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I cannot expand on the definitive answer I gave the Leader of the Opposition.

ALLEGATION MEAT PROCESSORS RESPONSIBLE FOR HIGH PRICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Yesterday, the Minister of Agriculture indicated with respect to inflation that the farmer, as far as poultry, pork and beef production are concerned, was not the culprit responsible for the consumer paying high prices, leaving the implication that it is obviously groups such as Canada Packers and the meat processors—the recipients of the generosity of the tax cut allowed by the Minister of Finance and by members of the Conservative party—which are involved, will the minister take this indication that groups like Canada Packers, like Burns and Company, in the area of food processing, are really the thieves, and will he do something about this?

An hon. Member: Talk about logic!

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO INCREASE FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. It arises from a reply given yesterday by the Minister of Finance as reported on page 1335 of Hansard. The minister said:

> The only way of equalizing the forces of supply and demand is by increasing agricultural production and industrial capacity in the country and those are the responses we have made.

In view of the fact that intentions to plant, according to a survey put out by Statistic Canada, shows that in Western Canada the acreage sown to barley, grain and oil seeds is likely to decrease by comparison with what the government has projected, or requested, may I ask the minister what specific policies the government has in mind to increase the supply of food products in Canada?

[Mr. Hees.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As far as I am concerned, those figures do not tell the whole story. We do know that the acreage does not have to be increased very much to increase production substantially in Western Canada. We know that in Western Canada they are going to use 25 per cent more in fertilizer, so those same acres will be correspondingly more productive. If I remember the figures correctly they are not as bad as the hon. member is trying to indicate.

Mr. Murta: A further supplementary to the minister, in view of his failure to answer my first question. Since he is responsible for a beef subsidy which in the process of being applied has virtually ruined the cattle industry, and is responsible for a feed grains policy which is just about as bad for the grains industry in Canada, what specific proposals does the minister have in mind to increase the amount of food available to Canadians?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member I am sure is aware of the measures announced in the Speech from the Throne in the area to provide security as well as incentives to agriculture, which would assure farmers of the necessary guarantees so they would increase production. We are working toward that end and I hope the hon. member will acknowledge our efforts by his actions in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lisgar is rising on a point of order. I see several other hon. members rising on supplementaries. I am quite disposed to spending the entire question period on this subject, if that is what hon. members wish. I hope, however, that there will not be too many points of order. To my mind many of the points raised are much more debate than questions. Questions asked of ministers as to what action is to be taken, and requesting ministers to announce policies, are normally invitations to a minister to make a statement on motions. I do not think they are productive in the sense of questions which ought normally be asked in the question period. The hon. member for Lisgar is at the moment seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Murta: My point of order is that the Minister of Agriculture has had ample time during this session to bring in legislation pertaining to the stability of the industry in Canada. I further charge that the Minister of Agriculture and the government do not have an agricultural policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That obviously has nothing to do with a point of order and I do not think members should rise on alleged points of order to score points of debate.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO AID HOG PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

A few days ago the hon. member for Bellechasse asked the minister if the government intended to help the Canadian hog producers to save them from bankruptcy. He answered that he would take care of the matter today when he met with the representatives of the hog producers' associations. Could he tell us what has been done?

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we received a brief in respect of what should be done about the plight in which the hog industry finds itself at the present time and we are considering it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION DIRECTED TO INCREASING FOOD SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question in respect of the matter of the supply of food which I should like to direct to the President of the Privy Council. At a press conference immediately after the Speech from the Throne was presented the President of the Privy Council indicated that within two weeks legislation would be presented to the House for the specific purpose of encouraging the increase in the supply of food and I wonder whether the minister can now tell us the date on which this legislation will, in fact, be introduced?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, for what has been introduced the hon. member has a ready reference in the order paper. I am not in a position today to indicate precisely the future dates but I can assure my hon. friend that such legislation will be introduced.

An hon. Member: You just don't have any policy.

Mr. Hellyer: I agree, at this stage there is none of which I am aware. In view of the fact that many people in my constituency are having to pay 40 or 50 per cent of their income for rent, and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has no effective policy to improve that situation, and now that we find food prices rising at an alarming rate, will the minister not guarantee to this House—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was going to suggest to the hon. member that he should ask his question, and I think I interrupted him just as he was going to do so.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, perhaps, under the circumstances, rather than directing another supplementary to the government leader in the House, which I am afraid would result in a repetition of the answer he gave me the first time which was totally unsatisfactory to the House and to the Canadian people, I should direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: And you will get the same kind of answer.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact that no effective action has been taken in respect of either housing costs or increasing food prices, and that today small investors who invest their money—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since the hon. member has had the floor for sometime, perhaps he should ask his question now.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I really felt the preamble was necessary to lay the basis for the question. I will put the question directly to the Prime Minister. In view of this unprecedented inflation which is now squeezing the little Canadian, can he tell the House any logical reason, on the basis of morality, why he and members of his government should not be indicted for larceny?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are someone to be talking about morality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You tell us about morality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Impeach Trudeau; down with the czar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF EXCESS PROFITS TAX OR OTHER MEASURE TO CONTROL PROFITEERING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, if I can get his attention I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Let's have a trial.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have order please.

An hon. Member: Impeach the government; we could have a hell of a trial.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has been trying for a few moments to ask his question, and it is very difficult for him to do so with this noise in the House.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to something that is not squeezing big Canadians, namely very high corporate profits. I should like to ask whether he can give the House a commitment that within the next two or three weeks there will be some action to curb excessive profiteering, whether in the form of an excess profits tax, a tax on wealth or something of that nature? Can he give us a general commitment that some action will be taken within the next few weeks in that area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member does not expect me to tell him what will be in the budget. All I am suggesting to the combined opposition parties is that if they have the courage to let us present this budget rather than trying to defeat us on some specious motion before that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was very careful to draft my question in general terms, not asking him to be specific. What I want to know is whether he can give us a commitment that within the next few weeks there will be some measure, in the budget or before that, regarding excessive profiteering in this country. There is no reason he cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I can give a very firm commitment that there will be a budget which will be good for the Canadian people and for the Canadian economy.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Trudeau: I think it is because the opposition suspects this that they do not want to let us present the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Bring it down next week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for York South rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes I am, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Lewis is going to call the election.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has twice referred to a budget which he thinks will be good for Canada, and has made cracks about the combined opposition, or the opposition not wanting to face it because of that reason. What he has to explain to this House and to the people of Canada is why he is deliberately delaying bringing down the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: If he is so sure that the budget will be good for Canada and Canadians in their present difficulties, then it is immoral of him to delay presenting it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Hees: Little David speaketh true.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again doubt very much that this is a point of order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie on a supplementary question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

COMMUNITY PASTURES—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ALLOCATION OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The throne speech makes reference to incentives for the production of livestock, and the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday that the government was moving in that area. However, a look at the main and supplementary estimates would indicate that no amount of money is being allocated for the development of community pastures, even though representations have been made to the minister for several years. Does the minister intend to put some funds into that area which would be very helpful in providing incentives to increase production?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure, without going over the blue book, which vote my hon. friend makes reference to, but certainly there are substantial sums both for the maintenance of community pastures, which have indeed been established over the last two or three years, and for extra ones. There is also a presentation under the PFRA presently in the final stages, which would have the effect of substantially increasing the amount of community pasture, particularly in my hon. friend's province. I would expect that the details in regard to that will be published in a very short time.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a supplementary question for the minister. Do the present amounts as allocated in the blue book represent the entire amount that will be spent, because this seems to be just for general improvement and certainly not for bulldozing, clearing and seeding.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, again I apologize to the hon. member in that I should like to go over the figures with him, but my recollection is that there is an adequate sum for an expanded program this year, but it might not necessarily be under the particular heading to which he refers.

POST OFFICE

WORK STOPPAGE IN MONTREAL—EFFORTS OF MINISTER TO SETTLE GRIEVANCES OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Postmaster General. Can he tell the House what is the latest status of the work stoppage in Montreal by his government mail employees and, furthermore, what action he is taking to prevent a further disruption of that mail service?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we are now having some difficulties at the Montreal Post Office. However, I hope that things will get back to normal within a few hours. I would like to assure the hon. member that I find it most regrettable that a mere handful of employees can thus keep most of their colleagues from doing some good work.

● (1450)

[English]

Mr. Haliburton: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the obvious decline in morale among postal employees across this country during the minister's term of office—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I really think hon. members should try to observe the rules. The hon. member who prefaced a question in this way ought not to be recognized for a supplementary, but I will recognize him and seek the co-operation of hon. members to ensure that questions and supplementary questions do not involve debate, argument and charges which merely invite responses which are not very helpful to all of us in our attempt to recognize as many questioners as possible.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. With great respect may I say that the accusations by the Prime Minister on two distinct occasions today should be equally referred to by Your Honour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova.

Mr. Haliburton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the same point raised by the hon. member for Yukon I feel I owe the House an apology, particularly the opposition. I am afraid I hit a raw nerve when I made those remarks.

Mr. Haliburton: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that it was not my intention to delay getting an answer to my question. I attempted to do it as rapidly as possible in the first instance. I must say there is a growing concern about the decline in morale within the postal service. Perhaps I may be permitted to say there is a growing question across Canada about the morale in the Post Office and about the speed with which letters are being delivered from one end of the country to the other. In view of that, I wonder whether the minister could tell us approximately how long it has been since he sat down at the table face to face with members of all the unions of the post office in order to discuss the problems which are facing that institution.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the hon. member that since my appointment, the collective agreements of all our employees have been negotiated without any strike action, which is an unprecedented feat in the history of the postal service.

I wish also to point out to the hon. gentleman that it is perfectly normal for an organization with some 50,000 employees to experience difficulties occasionally. For this reason I have regular meetings, nearly every week, with representatives of one or the other of the four unions of the department.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO OFFERS TO PURCHASE ROUMANIAN OIL FROM GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

An hon. Member: Tar baby.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It has nothing to do with indecent exposure over the tar sands. I wish to ask him whether or not there have been any offers received for the purchase of the Roumanian oil. Have there been any offers?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, all avenues have been explored for making use of this oil and the government came to the conclusion that it was wiser to use it in its own buildings.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That still does not answer the question. Did the government receive an offer of 15 cents a gallon as reported and is the minister not aware of the fact that this oil is so full of sulphur that it cannot be used for home consumption—

An hon. Member: We will send some over to you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —because it stinks. Might I suggest that it is not in that particular alone that this purchase stinks.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the right hon. member is basing his questions on hearsay. He will never change. I should like, however, to reassure him on the sulphur content. As I have already told the House, this content is 0.15 per cent while the tolerable rate can be as high as 1 per cent. So, the sulphur content of this oil is very low.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the right hon. gentleman on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister kindly give the House the information concerning what offers he received and at what price, not generalities but facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, when crazy offers are made to the government, they are, of course, turned down right away.

FOOD PRICES

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PRICE OF PROCESSED VEGETABLES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY REVIEW BOARD

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the threat by the president of the Food Processors Association that the price of processed vegetables will go up by 20 per cent to 30 per cent by this fall, will the minister see to it that the Food Prices Review Board makes an immediate investigation of the need for such a whopping increase, which will seriously affect the nutrition of millions of Canadians?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I read the same article as the hon. lady and I did not regard it as a threat. In any event I will draw this to the urgent attention of the board.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, will the minister at the same time see to it that the board investigates ways and means of getting these vegetable products to the consumer by some method other than the present profit-hungry food chain?

Mr. Gray: I will also draw this to the attention of the board.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

SHORTAGE OF HELP FOR MILK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which arises from complaints I received from milk producers in my constituency who state that there is a critical need for help in that industry which is not available. Manpower offices are unable to provide qualified and experienced help for these dairymen and persons out of work will not apply for this work. Has the minister any plan for a solution of this problem.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, in our society as yet we do not indenture anybody into any position at all. All we can do is ask them, coax them and beg them. I think also, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member could point out some of the problems to his colleague from St. John's East and point out, that this fact is to some extent why some of the dairy products are going up in price.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris for a supplementary, because I failed to see him a moment ago, after which I will call orders of the day.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PAY DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN SORTERS AND CODERS IN POST OFFICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It relates to the questions asked by the hon. member for South Western Nova and arises from the growing number of strikes in the public service. In view of the fact that the problems in the Post Office Department arise from sagging morale which is directly related to the emphasis on machines rather than men, as indicated by the difference in the pay classification between sorters and coders, would the President of the Treasury Board now review this discriminatory classification so that we might restore good morale to the Post Office Department.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the analysis to which I just listened. It does not happen to correspond with the facts.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact that there is a wage differential in the classification laid down by Treasury Board of about 71 cents between sorters and coders, and the fact that this is like paying a person who drives an automated bus a lower wage than one who drives a manual bus, would the minister look into this very vital and important issue?

Mr. Drury: Unquestionably there is a problem. I am not sure I would agree with the hon. gentleman's perception of it, but we will look into it.

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Bill Kempling: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had just started my remarks on this bill when we were interrupted for the purpose of going to the other place to attend some of their deliberations, and when we returned it was six o'clock. Therefore, I will continue my remarks now. As I recall, I had read a letter from one of my constituents in which he recounted the problems he had when he went to the bank to try to get a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act. I believe I related the fact that I had sent a circular to all the small businesses in my riding acquainting them with the Small Businesses Loans Act and telling them that if they so desired they could get a loan from the banks at 8¼ per cent interest. Of course, when I did that I realized that no bank manager in my riding would be friendly toward me, but I thought that that information would be of assistance to small businesses in my community.

I found, on talking to businessmen, that chartered banks use various tactics to discourage them from borrowing money under the Small Businesses Loans Act. As I read from the letter I had received, one bank manager said he had never heard of the act. I found that some of the chartered banks use other tactics. For instance, in some areas they will assign one of the branches, perhaps in the most remote residential part of an urban area, to handle small business loans. The object, of course, is to make it as difficult as possible for the businessman, to put another obstacle in his way and to make him change the bank with which he deals.

We know that bank managers come back in a hurry and say, "We will lend you money at 11½ per cent or 12 per cent." We also know that some bank managers may be frightened of the risk and will direct the customer to the Industrial Development Bank, where a person will pay 11½ per cent, 12 per cent or 13 per cent. It is usually higher than the going bank rate. We must look into these matters carefully.

In the 1972 bank report, in the column setting out loans under the various banks, we find that the Bank of Montreal—which advertises on television that it helps people—made 433 loans in the whole of Canada under the Small Businesses Loans Act. The Bank of Nova Scotia made 134 loans. It seems that the Royal Bank outdid everybody and made 952 loans. The Toronto-Dominion Bank found it in their heart to make 181 loans. The Mercantile Bank of Canada made one loan, so it must have made a mistake there. The Canadian National Bank made 741 loans. The Provincial Bank of Canada made 41 loans. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce made 358 loans. The Bank of British Columbia made 4 loans. Credit unions made one loan. This is a total of 2,846 loans in all of Canada in 1972 under the Small Businesses Loans Act. I submit that in any city in Canada with a population of 200,000 or more any one bank could have made 2,846 loans.

It is all very well for the government to make loans available at a low interest rate, but the fact is that banks have not been interested in this program. I have asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) many questions in the House and in the committee regarding this matter and I have always received one of his usual cryptic replies, the type to which I think we can almost assign a number—it could be called reply No. 27: I will take the matter up with the chairman of the Canadian Bankers' Association when we have lunch next week.

That is the type of practice that we would like to see stopped. We would like to see the minister and bank managers get together. I appreciate that one of the problems the banks are facing is lack of liquidity: they are short of funds. I am sure that if they have money to lend, they want to lend it at the highest possible rate of interest; and as a businessman I cannot fault them for that because it is the normal course of commerce. But the liquidity situation has not always been as it is today. If we go back to 1971 and 1972 and look at the statistics produced in the report, we see that the highest number of loans ever made under the Small Businesses Loans Act is 2,977, and that was in 1961. Eleven years later, in 1972, the latest report that we have shows the banks only made 2,846 loans. This makes me question the sincerity of the minister and of the banks.

Something should be done for small businesses in this country. I am sure that all hon. members recognize weaknesses in small businesses. Some of them are specialists in everything but financing. I also recognize that they have many problems. But, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, small businesses are the backbone of and provide stability to Canadian commerce. They create over half of Canada's gross national product and employ over half of the working people in Canada. They rarely have lay-offs; they rarely have strikes. They pay their taxes and they pay their employees. They are the ones who keep the country going when other things go wrong.

When you look at the facilities that are available to small businessmen in the conduct of their businesses, you understand that if the government is really going to make a meaningful contribution toward helping small businesses it will have to amend the Bank Act in the near future. One of the problems of small businessmen is acquiring working capital. Small businesses are not labour-intensive and are usually not capital-intensive. But they are working capital-intensive. This is particularly important today in a situation of tight supply of materials. I have discussions with many small businessmen regarding the supply of steel, for instance. We find that the standard angles, channels and shapes are not available in the normal course of events, and in part this is because wholesalers are using the shortage of supply and tight money situation to their own advantage.

The small fabricator finds that if he places a c.o.d. order with a supplier, he gets the material right away; but if he places an order under the normal terms, in most cases the warehouse tells him to call back tomorrow and they just might have something for him. This all relates to the problem of working capital. The small businessman cannot exist unless he has money available, and if the prevailing situation requires him to pay cash for the supplies he needs in order to operate, he is soon in serious trouble.

I am glad the suggestion made yesterday to deal with this bill in committee of the whole, rather than sending it to the standing committee, was adopted. This will ensure getting the legislation into operation sooner than if it went to the finance committee, in view of the backlog of work of that committee. I hope the minister will read the remarks made by members of his own party regarding the difficulties encountered by fishermen, farmers and small businessmen when they apply for bank loans. It is all very well to increase the limit to $50,000, but with the present limit of $25,000 the average loan across Canada is only $9,500. I hope we will see a substantial increase in this respect and that many small businesses will be able to take advantage of the Small Businesses Loans Act provision for new businesses which is not available in the act as it now stands.

With those remarks I shall conclude, Mr. Speaker. I hope we can bring this debate to an end before whatever is going to happen, happens—I think you know what I mean—so that we will be able to pass on to the small business community whatever advantages will accrue to them from this amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a couple of very brief remarks with respect to this bill. Because it is divided in three, part of my remarks will relate to that section of it which deals with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. At the outset I should say that I wonder why the House is taking this tack and exerting its energy and consideration on something so insignificant and of so little value to fishermen as this bill. It just seeks to amend in a very slight way the amount of money that a fisherman may borrow from a bank or other lending institution for the purposes contained in the act. It seeks to extend from $25,000 to $50,000 the limit that a person can borrow. Anyone not familiar with the fishing industry could argue that this is a substantial alteration, but let me make a few comments with regard to the salmon fishery on the west coast for the sake of argument.

Five or six years ago the Minister of Fisheries instituted a licensing limitation program in the salmon industry. With the continual "early morning upon arising" changes that the minister announced respecting that initial program, to the point that very few fishermen knew what it was all about—because the change obviously was the result of a heavy meal before bedtime, which produced a rather nightmarish situation for the government—things have gradually cleared to the point that on the west coast there is a limitation on these licences: only a certain number are issued and no new ones are allowed. This has been the case in the taxi industry, in the forest industry and in every other industry where franchises are involved.

In the case of the fishing industry, the cost of the licence is more than the value of the boat to which it applies. The current selling price for a salmon licence on the west coast ranges from $3,500 and $4,000 per ton of fishing vessel. A very small troller of 36 feet to 38 feet which has a salmon licence can cost a fisherman from $65,000 to $75,000. He pays more for the licence than for the boat: the larger the boat, the greater its tonnage and therefore the higher the price. In that type of atmosphere a $50,000 limit under the provisions of this act is meaningless to the average fisherman. Therefore, it is hardly worth the House taking the time to listen to what the government has to say on the matter.

The other matter I want to mention is broader in application and relates to interest rates. All three of the acts being amended by this bill, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, contain a provision relating to the rate of interest a financial institution or chartered bank may charge on a guaranteed loan. The rate may fluctuate. I do not know the current rate: one can ascertain this by 'phoning the bank. Probably the current rate is in the neighbourhood of 7¼ or 7½ per cent.

Because interest rates are limited, the government guarantees the loan. No matter whether the default is by reason of insolvency or any other reason, the loan is guaranteed absolutely by the government of Canada. Therefore there is no possibility of the bank losing any of the capital involved. Originally, I suppose, the saw-off came in this way; the government said to the banks, "If you will agree to limit the rate of interest you will charge on these loans, we will guarantee the loans unconditionally."

I would argue that we should limit interest rates on moral grounds rather than on financial grounds. What are these moral grounds? The people with whom these acts deal are probably in the most vulnerable position in the business world. Being farmers and fishermen, they are primary producers who are subject to a great deal of economic pressure. They have little control over the price they receive for their produce and no control at all over the price they must pay for materials, commodities and services which are necessary if they are to maintain their farming, business or fishing operations. In short, they are at the mercy of large forces in society and are caught in this squeeze. Somebody else dictates what they will pay for their supplies and somebody else dictates, to a great degree, the price for which they can sell their produce, whether it is the produce of the farm, of the sea or of our fresh waters.

The small businessman is in the same position. He is not so much a producer as a provider of services which involve, for instance, retail distribution and things of that kind. He is at the mercy of the large pressure groups in our economy. My argument is this: because these people cannot exercise much leverage in the economy, it behooves us to pay greater attention to their economic position. Therefore we should limit the interest rates they must pay. Because interest rates are limited, banks, other lending institutions and credit unions—which, although more sympathetic perhaps than chartered banks, are still caught in the cost squeeze for money—are reluctant in some cases to lend. Lending institutions say to themselves, although not in public, "Why should we lend money under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act at 7¼ per cent when we can lend money to the fellow next door at 11 per cent?"—or whatever the going rate is.

If the prime bank rate is 9½ per cent, the most advantageous rate for a borrower would be 1 per cent higher. We are talking about a rate in the 10½ to 11 per cent bracket. The bank says to itself, "Why should we lend money under these acts at 7¼ per cent when we can lend it to somebody else at 10½ per cent? Why should we forgo 3 per cent interest?" Considering the fact that banks were established in the first place to lend other people's money and not to provide any beneficial service except to themselves, one can understand that attitude. Why should they not operate on that basis? The person who suffers from that attitude is the individual fisherman, small businessman and farmer. The acts may guarantee loans and limit interest rates, but the farmer, businessman or fisherman finds it difficult to obtain money.

In a previous session, and again in this session, I brought forward a bill which would establish a different principle and concept with respect to lending under these acts. I submit that if it is public policy, and good public policy—which I submit it is—to limit the interest which lending institutions can charge, then we as the parliamentarians who have imposed that limitation must make sure that lending institutions do not discriminate against those entitled to borrow under these acts.

The bill I introduced contains a provision which ought to be incorporated in the bill before us. That provision is that lending institutions should be required to make available sums of money for lending under these acts which are not less than the average they have lent, say in the last five-year period. It really does not matter what period you use so long as you are consistent. That is to say, they should be required to make money available under these acts to potential borrowers, and they should not be allowed to refuse to lend money on the basis that they are not making a large enough profit on the loan. If an individual entitled to borrow under these acts goes to the bank, applies for a loan and on a logical and reasonable basis is refused a loan, that individual should have the right to appeal the decision of the bank to the Department of Finance or some structure within it. This body would assess the potential of the borrower and either say he was a poor risk and the bank was right, or he was a good risk and the bank was wrong, in which case it would direct the bank to make the loan.

It must always be kept in mind that these loans are underwritten and guaranteed by the people of Canada through the minister of finance and the government of Canada.

Unless we make some kind of effort in this direction we will find that the higher interest rates—and they will go higher—will work to the disadvantage of potential borrowers under these three acts. It will be more attractive for the banks and lending institutions to lend money at the higher going rate than under these acts.

At the moment, a number of banks are engaged in the practice of borrowing money from private individuals by means of term deposits. The banks borrow this money for a term of five or six years at an absolute guaranteed rate of 8½ per cent. There was an ad in yesterday's Ottawa Journal by some trust and loan companies. In letters six to eight inches high they guarantee an interest rate of 9 per cent for term deposits of up to five or six years. If lending institutions are going to commit themselves to carrying an 8½ or 9 per cent liability on money that they borrow for five or six years, they are also going to commit themselves to charging higher interest rates on the money they lend. This will be necessary in order to obtain the money with which to pay the high interest rate.

The longer this situation is permitted to continue, the more we will be looking at a continuation of potentially higher interest rates. The more that happens, the more the general public will suffer with regard to interest rates on loans for housing and other things. However, because this bill is before us we have to relate our concern to it. The more that happens, the more our farmers, fishermen and small businessmen will be disadvantaged. They are now disadvantaged more than any other group in the entrepreneurial field which produces by its own efforts. In spite of the limitation increase from $25,000 to $50,000 for fishermen—regardless of how little value that is with today's costs, the value of fishing boats and the like—they will still be disadvantaged by the banking and lending institutions.

I have not considered the bill in any detail. I will do that at the committee stage. Because of the recommendation of His Excellency which confines the area to be considered in committee, I am not sure whether procedurally we can move amendments. I do not know whether the concepts I have included in a bill now before the House, and which I advanced a moment ago can be fitted into this bill. If it can be done at the committee stage, or possibly at the report stage, I hope to introduce these types of amendment so that the House and the committee will have an opportunity to express a view about the concepts I have advanced. That is supplementing the morality aspect and the recognition this parliament is giving to the needs of farmers, fishermen and small businessmen by the guarantee procedure and saying they will not be disadvantaged because some loan shark thinks it is more profitable to lend money other than under this act. If I can fit those amendments into the committee stage or the report stage, I will certainly do so.

I hope that with that brief introductory comment, members will give some thought to the ideas I have put forward. Hopefully, something of this nature will be written into the legislation to further protect the position of people who borrow under these acts.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak only briefly on this bill. However, often when one intends to speak briefly he gets carried away. Certain aspects of this bill are beneficial. On the whole, it is legislation we can endorse in principle and I hope it will be speedily passed by this House.

I would echo some of the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) with regard to lack of real content in the bill in terms of what it will do for the fishermen of Canada. This legislation was first put into place in 1955 with a lower lending limit to fishermen. That limit was increased, and is to be increased again so that fishermen may obtain a maximum loan of $50,000. I suspect that with the degree of inflation we have experienced in this country, that increase in the ceiling is not as beneficial as the amount was when the legislation was originally conceived, in terms of total buying power.

As the hon. member suggested, the limitation does not take into consideration the changing nature of the fishing industry since 1955. In this day and age, fishermen operating a $50,000 boat are really confined to the inshore fishery. By "inshore" I mean within about 15 miles of the sea coast. On the coast of the part of Canada from which I come, fishermen find it necessary to range 200 to 300 miles in order to make a year's pay in dragging and long-lining operations.

The Department of the Environment enunciated a program for the fisheries that seems to be at cross-purposes, to some extent, with the measures proposed in this bill. The department is attempting to encourage fishermen on the east coast to think in terms of more far-reaching vessels in order to fish off the coasts of Labrador, Greenland, the Flemish cape and in southern waters where there are species of fish available which are not being harvested to the fullest extent. Such a vessel costs from $1 million to $1.5 million.

A fisherman interested in engaging in the fishery that is now the major push of the Department of the Environment would be excluded from participating in it if he were to rely for his financing upon commercial banks lending money under guarantees authorized by this act. If the resources of the fishermen are limited and there are very few who can put up the difference in capital between what they can borrow under this act and what such a vessel costs, then to that extent they are precluded from owning such a vessels in which to fishing.

It is encouraging to see that this government which has been prone to regulating and restricting production and unable to assist farmers, fishermen and small businessmen, that has been so intent upon regulating the fishery to the point where it is very difficult to make a living or to have the diversification necessary, because of restrictions on licences, and so on, is at least thinking in terms of making credit a little easier for the fishermen to obtain.

There may be a substantial gap in the intent of the statute and the result it will produce. One of the members of the party to which I belong spoke yesterday of the success, if you like, of this plan as a means of financing fishermen in the Atlantic region. I would point out that each of the Atlantic provinces has its own loan board which advances money to fishermen at various rates of interest. In Newfoundland the rate of interest is very low. In Nova Scotia it is high in relation to the income a fisherman borrowing money under this proposal could earn.

In Nova Scotia there has been a dramatic increase in the amount of money lent to fishermen under this scheme in the past year compared to the previous year, but even in that province more than twice the amount of money was lent by the Nova Scotia fishermen's loan board to fishermen as was lent by commercial banks under this program. It has been suggested by speakers before me, and I think it is an easy conclusion to draw, that there are good reasons for this situation. One is that the banks are more willing to lend at a much higher rate of interest to other borrowers, or to fishermen borrowing on a straight loan. And, of course, as far as loans by the Nova Scotia fishermen's loan board are concerned, the arrangements are a little more realistic. The repayment term under this legislation is ten years, but a slightly longer term is provided under the Nova Scotia fishermen's loans act. The time during which the debt can be repaid corresponds more or less with the productive life of the fishing vessel.

Under this legislation, though, only fishermen acquiring small boats, or prepared to carry out no more than minimal repairs, are able to borrow funds adequate enough for their purposes. Under the Nova Scotia fishermen's loan act a fisherman is able to borrow whatever money he needs, less 25 per cent. Thus, in the case of a vessel costing $1 million, if a fisherman is able to scrape up $200,000 or $250,000 he can purchase a ship capable of ranging in the offshore areas.

Under this scheme, if he arranged for a loan from the bank repayable in ten years, he would still be looking for a further $950,000. It follows that anyone who is interested in this kind of fishing would find such arrangements prohibitive. To give hon. members some idea of the costs involved in my area, let me say that the cost of a motor alone, of the kind commonly installed on an inshore fish dragger, is about $40,000. This alone would exhaust the amount one might borrow from a bank, even taking the present amendments into account. The provision of salt water cooling facilities in the hull of a vessel would account for $75,000 or more. A boat capable of fishing in a number of fisheries, sufficiently diversified to enable it to operate as a midwater trawler engaging in the herring and groundfish fisheries, would cost between $300,000 and $500,000.

Thinking in these terms, the act is obviously way behind the times. It will not help in any meaningful way fishermen such as I have just mentioned. I suggest it runs at cross-purposes with an objective which the Department of Fisheries' is seeking to achieve, since the act will not help our fishermen to compete with foreign vessels which are fishing in inshore areas and stripping our fisheries of their marine resources.

A striking divergence exists between amounts loaned under the act in various areas. Nova Scotia and British Columbia have fishing fleets which I assume are of approximately the same size. The value of fish landed is approximately the same in Nova Scotia as in British Columbia. Yet British Columbia fishermen had borrowed under this act, up to December, 1973, more than $2 million, while Nova Scotia fishermen had borrowed only $420,000—approximately 15 per cent of the amount of money loaned. Almost 80 per cent has been going to the coast of British Columbia.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question on that aspect?

Mr. Haliburton: By all means.

Mr. Barnett: Is the hon. member aware that figures under the Fisheries Development Act, which is a grants program, show that the proportions of funds received as between Nova Scotia fishermen and British Columbia fishermen are reversed? In point of fact, most of the fishermen in British Columbia are not eligible to receive grants under the Fisheries Development Act. This may explain their resort to borrowing.

Mr. Haliburton: I thank the hon. member for drawing this to my attention. The point I was attempting to make in my timorous way was this: aside from any other legislation, the need to borrow on the east coast under guaranteed loan provisions is surely as great as it is on the west coast, yet for some reason fishermen on the west coast have been taking greater advantage of this act.

Mr. Barnett: British Columbia fishermen have no alternative.

Mr. Haliburton: I would suggest that the alternatives provided for the benefit of fishermen are not as numerous as they might be. It is encouraging that the government should be considering ways of enabling fishermen to finance the upgrading of their equipment and to purchase new equipment. It is, however, discouraging that the minister should have acted in such a penny-pinching way. The object should be to put into fisheries as much money under the provisions of this act as is currently being put into small businesses of other descriptions.

The concept put forward by the hon. member for Skeena would require the banks to lend money to the fishermen. That is an interesting concept. It would have an obvious difficulty in that it would require additional regulation, and it is apparent to everyone that the banks are reluctant to lend money under guaranteed lending schemes with fixed interest rates. Bank managers and the banking institution as a whole are reluctant to make such loans because they know low interest rates limit the amount of profit they can generate.

I suggest to the minister that in considering revisions to this act it would be worth while to consider making money available under its provisions for the purchase or upgrading of equipment used by fish dealers and small fish plant operators. I suppose they can qualify under this legislation, but such provision would seem to fall more readily, for administrative purposes, under the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act.

This bill does contain encouraging aspects and I hope it will be dealt with by the House in the manner suggested by other members of this party.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-14 which is divided into three parts and is designed to promote small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that small businesses like many other business enterprises, are in a most desperate situation. They provide many jobs for Canadians. I think that a high percentage of the labour force is employed by small industries which contribute a great deal to the transportation sector, because they are usually located rather far from large centres and have very high transportation costs.

Federal and provincial governments make fantastic amounts of money in transportation.

In my opinion, small businesses are needed and should exist. Moreover, I am one of those in favour of helping small businesses because they operate in all areas. You should see all the goods manufactured by small enterprises. At present, most small businesses are facing financial problems due to an imbalance in the economy.

As the cost of living increases and the cost of transportation and labour doubles or triples, small industries, like all other industries, have to raise their prices because they have to buy machinery and equipment. They must also double or triple their prices. Therefore, small businesses lack capital. Banks or financial institutions used to advance $25,000 to small industries under the legislation adopted by the government. Those $25,000 are not worth anything now because of the increase in the cost of living. About ten years ago, industries could buy machinery for $5,000 or $6,000, but today the same machinery costs $25,000. What can they do with a $25,000 loan? Because this small loan is granted to some industry by a bank, guaranteed by the government and by a first mortgage, the industry is cornered and can no longer operate, because $25,000 are not enough. Since it is a first mortgage, the industry can not borrow more and is caught by this very system. In the past, the $25,000 loans system for small business was better than nothing. It was convenient then for small businesses, but today it is ridiculous, it is clearly inadequate because if a man wants to buy one single piece of equipment for $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000, he will have to settle for second best. One single piece of equipment can cost that much and we know that an industry needs more than one.

The bill proposes to increase the loans to $50,000. Once again it is better than nothing, but it is inadequate for small businesses would need loans of at least $100,000 because everything is so expensive. What can anyone build with $50,000 when employees are paid $8 or $9 an hour and materials sell for prohibitive prices? Thousands of dollars do not last long. With four or five employees, any building can cost $25,000 to $30,000. What can you do with that? Mr. Speaker, some small businesses will be crippled with loans of only $25,000.

All hon. members and all Canadians know that small businesses are not allowed capital stock. Businesses with capital stock can operate because there is no need in this case to repay interests. We do not have to pay back but 75 per cent of small industries in the province of Quebec are unable to issue any capital atock. So they have to borrow, pay interests, and pay back. This paralyses them.

Mr. Speaker, this type of loan should be increased to at least $100,000 and should be payable over a period of 20 years at an interest rate lower than 3 per cent since the government backs them up and it is for the good of the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, all sorts of measures are introduced, such as the Opportunities for Youth Program and the Local Initiatives Program, millions and millions of dollars are spent to subsidize useless things, and 75 per cent of those amounts are being wasted. Some industries could use them and hire young unemployed students who want to earn money. But no, they are given loans and grants of $1,000, $50,000 and even $100,000, Mr. Speaker, which in 80 per cent of cases are simply being wasted and do not benefit the economy.

This does not create any asset for the economy whereas if those monies were given to small and medium industry to hire those people, show them how to work, make men out of them, small industry would benefit from it and working people or students would be learning something. We would be building something for this country, we could have cheaper products and consequently bring prices down.

If interest rates in small industry were only 3 per cent we would not have today an unprecedented increase in the cost of living, daily increases in all sectors. What I ask for small industry I also ask for farming and all sectors of society because if funds were made available at low interest rates they would produce a lot, and more cheaply. Society would then feel much better and we would enjoy price reductions as well as a lower cost of living instead of incurring price increases.

In connection with inflation, Mr. Speaker, it is easier to have a full purse than pay more at each purchase.

Price increases hurt, but a well-lined purse is nice. We should keep alert and one day set up a system which would enable the citizens to be self-sufficient in a wealthy country.

We are told it cannot be done because there is a shortage of commodities. If there is a shortage of commodities at the present time in various sectors of the economy, strikes and unions are crippling production. This is why there is a lack of goods and the cost of living is increasing. At the present time, unions are going too far and it is the duty of the government to cope with those conditions.

There are no longer any limits, Mr. Speaker. It is quite well to increase wages, to increase this and that. It is quite well to say the boss is making money, but 75 per cent of the bosses earn less, while working 10 to 15 hours a day, than some of their employees. The bosses earn less despite all their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, those small industries are providing the federal, provincial, municipal and school funds. Small firms are overtaxed to the extreme by school boards and municipalities alike.

A large number of municipalities entice small firms with promises. No sooner are they established that they are choked by taxes. A few years later, they are forced into bankruptcy.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, small firms are being exploited—nobody mentions this, so I will tell you myself—by insurance companies. They are forced to mortgage their assets to buy insurance. These insurances choke industrialists and small businessmen alike. The premiums are much too high, Mr. Speaker. Nobody cares to say anything about this. We behave as though this was a trifle, like financing or 10 to 12 per cent interest rates. This seems somewhat sacred. When there is an increase in interest rates, nobody bats an eye. This seems somewhat sacred too. Mr. Speaker, there should be a limit to the exploitation of society.

We know that our ten Canadian financial institutions made more than $15 billion. This year, the increased their assets to more than $15 billion apart from another $15 billion which was concealed in some reserves. So we can say that our financial institutions increased their assets by some $30 billion. No one says a word about that. The NDP particularly does not say anything. They wish to cut the throat of producing corporations that make profits but they have nothing against the financial institutions which are fleecing Canadians and make excessive profits.

So, Mr. Speaker, in order to balance our economy we need certain fair standards because there must be some justice. Everywhere, in every part of society we are exploited to death to such a point, that I could foretell, even if I am not a prophet, that if our present system continues to operate as it does now, terrible disasters are bound to occur within ten years. It will surely break somewhere if we do not act to stop inflation, reduce interest rates and the cost of living to allow Canadian to have a decent living. If we do not act, the present system will not survive a long time. The debts and the deficits we are now accumulating cannot past for ever. Out of 20 years of administration, all governments, whether they were red or blue, did finish two fiscal years with two small surplusses and 18 years with deficits. This year, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) knows it very well, we will have another deficit as usual. And in order to balance the government's budget we have to debalance the budget of taxpayers and then, in order to balance a little the budget of taxpayers we debalance that of the government. This means that our economy is badly organized and directed. This means also that in all sectors of society, we ought to apply remedies, and we have been suggesting some for a long time. And as long as the Minister of Finance does not find anything other than what we have now, things will keep on getting worse. Our economy keeps on tumbling down. Indeed, there is no balance in it.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is like a big company. We are all shareholders in that firm and we have to participate in it through taxes. But we are pressurized by taxes and our company is always in the red. Are there any private firms or financial institutions which would work this way? I do not think so. If we have a company into which we keep on investing money and which never shows any profit and if we keep on showing a deficit, our society is sick and needs some remedies. Mr. Speaker, we have suggested several adjustments: lower interest rates, compensated discounts on prices, on transportation, discounts for farmers, compensated discounts on tractors, on railways. To pay for this, Mr. Speaker, to give these compensated discounts on prices, we would have to collect the money from the profits of large companies and large financial institutions.

When we have an overproduction of $25 or $30 billion, we are certainly able to provide compensated discounts to distribute this overproduction which belongs to everybody. Since Canada belongs to the people to each Canadian should receive his share of the assets that nature and the work of man have produced.

The small business sector needs many reforms. Even with a $50,000 loan to the small industry, we will not be able to save it. It would provide a certain stimulus, it would help the small business, extend its years of operation, but it would not solve the problem. The small business would still be in stagnation just like agriculture is in stagnation.

A few years ago, the hon. Mr. Duplessis had saved agriculture thanks to farm loans and the federal government had also saved agriculture thanks to its farm loans, assistance plans and subsidies of all kinds.

More than ever today, agriculture is in stagnation. Industry faces the same problem. Since big business can automatically finance its operations by issuing shares or social capital, small business has much difficulty in competing against these large corporations. They need the help of politicians because otherwise, they will close down, which will increase the number of unemployed in our country by hundreds of thousands.

If we want the people to work instead of just receiving unemployment insurance or social assistance benefits, if we really want to have them work logically, loyally, to have them build what has to be built throughout the country, to demolish what no longer works, we will modernize Canada.

We need loans at very low interest rates. This government can grant those loans, if it so wishes. Instead of accepting higher interest rates as we can foresee now, it can make them go down. Why does it not guarantee a 3 per cent interest rate for our industries and other sectors of our economy? We would then have a new boom and the economy would be better balanced. There would be more motivated people willing to build more than to demolish, as is the case today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to discussions I have had with certain members of the House, I wonder whether we might return to motions for two minutes so that I might table a document.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

TARIFF PREFERENCES FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES TO BE IMPLEMENTED JULY 1, 1974

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in announcing this afternoon before a special session of the United Nations in New York that Canada will implement the Canadian system of tariff preferences for developing countries on July 1, 1974.

Under the terms of Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table documents setting out the details of the system as developed under the legislation approved by parliament last year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it there are no comments on the announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Accordingly, the House will return to the business that was interrupted a moment ago.

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This act has been of great benefit to the farmers over the years as a source of readily available money. It has been accessible to the farmers through the banking and other lending institutions in every area.

Everyone would agree with the amendment raising the amount of a loan from $25,000 to $50,000: it is just keeping up with inflation and farm input costs. The price of tractors has gone up from $10,000 to as high as $25,000. The same is true of combines. It does not take very long to eat up the present maximum of $25,000. Also, the amendment to the act will allow farmers to borrow for the overhaul of tractors and farm machinery. It will be welcomed by many as the cost of overhauling large tractors is sometimes in excess of $2,000.

Other amendments allow the removal of limits and permit a person to borrow the whole amount on land and use it in the way he sees fit. This might create a problem because if each farmer can borrow up to $50,000 on the purchase of land, a tremendous amount of money will be funnelled into the purchase of land and there will be a heavy drain on the money supply. Since the inception of the act nearly 30 years ago, $3 billion have been lent and in the next 12 months, if the money is made available, $1 billion could be lent. In fact, the $1.1 billion which the government will guarantee to banks could easily be used up before June, 1977, the date mentioned in the bill.

I see a conflict between borrowing under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and under the Farm Credit Corporation Act, and I am pleased that the government has seen fit to bring in this legislation before its other very high priority, football legislation. I would rather have seen amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act brought in first and then the Farm Improvement Loans Act amendments to add to the farmer's credit requirements. I think there will be a heavy drain on this fund for land because at present under the Farm Credit Corporation Act money can be lent only on the appraised value of land, which amounts to about 60 per cent or 65 per cent of its actual market value, and under the Farm Improvement Loans Act money can be lent on 75 per cent of the market value.

Therefore, all these people who are refused loans under the Farm Credit Corporation Act will be heading back to the banks and other lending institutions and demanding loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the purchase of land. This may have the effect of increasing the cost of land, which is rising rapidly as it is, and the result could be disastrous.

One of the shortcomings of the legislation is that one does not know where the money will come from. I cannot see banks or lending institutions advancing money for the purchase of land at 8¼ per cent or, for the other purposes outlined in the act, at 8 per cent. I have spoken to quite a few banks and credit unions in my area. They are not having any trouble lending money for equipment and quite a variety of things to farmers at 10½ per cent or 9½ per cent, which is the prime rate. The government is guaranteeing loans by banks at 8¼ per cent, and banks are lending all the money they can at 9½ per cent and 10½ per cent. Banks and credit unions in Saskatchewan are offering depositors a return of 8½ per cent on their deposits and the government agrees to back loans at 8 per cent. It does not seem possible that banks will make money available at these low interest rates.

In discussions with various chartered bank managers in my area I have found that some of them have been discouraging FILA loans and some have been reserving the money for certain of their customers. Some banks are not even willing to lend money under the FILA. It is easy to see why, since they can make a loan on equipment at a much higher interest rate. Farmers have the equipment in their possession and the banks are not worried about security. So guaranteeing loans at 8¼ per cent is not advantageous to the banks.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggested that this bill would be doing a great favour to the banks, but quite a few of the bank managers to whom I spoke did not see it that way at all. In fact, they thought quite the reverse. One of them suggested that they would probably require $100 million in the next 12 months to make loans which people would request in that short time. The bill suggests that loans be made for cattle purchases. Of course, in Saskatchewan under certain conditions farmers are able to borrow for the purchase of cattle at a 7 per cent interest rate. I do not expect many farmers will borrow money under FILA at 8 per cent if they can get it at 7 per cent.

I agree with the amendment, Mr. Speaker. I can see that it removes some of the problems, but I am afraid the money will not be made available unless at a higher interest rate, which is probably coming anyway.

One reason for the heavy drain on money is the cost of machinery and labour and the shortage of people on the prairies trained in the repair of machinery. If more labour had been available in my area in the past there would not have been such heavy expenditures of capital. In France, for example, there are about three million migrant workers, and in Switzerland one million. If the government is anxious to help farmers and small businessmen they can do it by helping overcome the labour shortage on the farms and small businesses in the west.

[Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley).]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to add just a few remarks to the debate on Bill C-14 which amends the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act primarily to allow for increasing the maximum amount of loans to $50,000 from the present $25,000. Nobody can quarrel with the amendment, but I have been very concerned about government guaranteed loans as they apply in my province. The increase in the maximum amount of the loans to half a million dollars is all very well, but my province is not receiving any benefit from this. I should like to quote from the latest reports. For example, under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act in the period October 1, 1973, to December 31, 1973, Newfoundland received 14 loans amounting to $35,000. So what difference does it make whether the maximum amount is $25,000 or $50,000? Even Prince Edward Island received 40 loans amounting to $89,000. Something is wrong, Mr. Speaker, and I know what it is.

According to the latest report of the Small Businesses Loans Act for the period October, 1973, to December, 1973, Newfoundland received two loans amounting to $50,000; from January, 1973, to December, 1973, there were six loans. There must have been a good bank manager at that time. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, for the same period, Newfoundland did not receive any loans, and from January to December, 1973, there were three loans amounting to $8,788. In 1972, Newfoundland received four loans under the program, amounting to $6,500. The reason is that the agency responsible for carrying out the programs, the chartered banks, did not trust the small man to whom these programs are directed. I have evidence to show that they steer fishermen, farmers and small businessmen away from government loans because of the preferred rate of interest and, instead, guide them toward conventional loans which carry a high rate of interest.

Just recently I gave the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) an example where a fisherman, having taken his loan over three years, started out paying 8 per cent interest. In the half-year adjustment the rate of interest dropped to 6½ per cent, but he was charged 8 per cent for the duration of the loan. I can name 18 or 20 loan programs designed either by the federal government or the provincial governments, or under the auspices of both on a co-ordinated basis, directed toward the farmer, the fisherman, the sawmill operator, storekeeper or small businessman—and all they do is cause confusion.

Just a few days ago we gave first reading to a bill introduced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) to establish a new federal bank. It apparently is going to take over from the Industrial Development Bank. Industrial Development Bank loans are a last resort. If you cannot get anything from the mean bank manager, you go to the Industrial Development Bank. But before you can get a loan there—and you spend two or three years in the effort—they want to take your wife and family and everything else as security. So you give up in frustration.

Under the federal and provincial governments a new corporation was recently formed in Newfoundland, called the Newfoundland and Labrador Development Corporation. It was also designed to grant loans to small businessmen. It has a big staff, a board of directors and offers consultative services and management advice, the same as the Industrial Development Bank and, I am sure, the new bank proposed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. All that happens is that the borrower becomes more frustrated, and in the end he gets a letter saying that he does not qualify for a loan. These programs are there just because it is politically advantageous at some time or other to announce them.

An agricultural capital assistance program was announced recently in Newfoundland, where a prospective farmer can borrow up to $6,000 plus $200 per acre of eligible farm land and money for other purposes. This is another program just to confuse the issue. Under agreement with the federal government and the province of Newfoundland, there is the rural development loans program under which a small businessman may borrow $10,000 interest-free. Under the general development agreements there are many other programs and development incentives, all substantially directed to the small businessman, the farmer and the fisherman; but still most applicants are told that they do not qualify for any loan. I wish the government would consolidate all these programs that are directed toward the one borrower, instead of designing so many different ones. Banks should be made to realize that they have a duty to Canadians.

This is all I have to say on the bill, Mr. Speaker, because many of my colleagues have dwelt on other areas. I counted 18 programs, all with the same purpose but all working against each other to the detriment of the persons they are supposed to help. The government should examine their programs very carefully.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as I learned we are not going home I thought I might as well make a speech. My remarks will be as brief as I can make them. Being the ninth or tenth speaker in this debate it is safe for me to assume that if pertinent points have not been made, they have at least been implied. It is important for those representing smaller communities in which there are farmers, fishermen and businessmen, to take an interest in this bill. There are sizeable numbers of such people in my constituency and therefore I am interested in the sort of federal assistance which is suggested by this bill.

I was in the House when we debated in the fall of 1968 the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and also, I believe, the Small Businesses Loans Act—that troika of bills designed to assist people who do not have resources for self-help and need to rely on government programs. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). I feel that he illustrated very well the basic difficulty with this troika of assistance to small businessmen, farmers and fishermen. He suggested that, sure the legislation is before us, but few people ever get the loans. I think most of us have had the experience of constituents writing and asking about the kinds of services, the kinds of programs which are available to meet their particular needs. You write back and send them a whole portfolio of pamphlets dealing with ARDA, AIDA, PAIT, the IDB, and so on. You search through this great plethora of programs and when you want to find out if they are eligible, too often you find that they are not. You search through this great maze of programs in order to find out if there is one under which they qualify.

In my office we have a volume of pamphlets describing these programs, which we call the "money book". If somebody writes and asks about grants of one kind or another, we thumb through the "money book", fish out the relevant material, the advertising pamphlet promoting the program which best suits the constituent's needs, and send it out. I do not recall one of my constituents ever getting one of these grants, but at least we send out the literature. That is not good enough. If these programs are not to be mere tokenism, a mere pretense for helping the small businessman, farmer or fisherman, they ought to be consolidated as previous speakers have suggested. Further, the government should, like CMHC, make direct loans. This program should be handled as loans are now being handled by provincial corporations and the Farm Credit Corporation, rather than by way of guaranteed bank loans. Direct lending might help many people who need the service, because those who make use of these government programs are people without the kinds of resources which are needed for guarantees: the government acts as their guarantor.

In theory, this program works out nicely except when an individual goes to the bank and tries to take out a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act or the Small Businesses Loans Act; then he is usually deflected away from such a loan by the bank manager. I can understand this. The bank manager explains that the banks have only so much money to lend, and so on. Naturally, the bank prefers to lend at the higher interest rate of 12 per cent for a personal loan than at the guaranteed 8 per cent rate under this legislation. So the bank manager steers the prospective borrower to one of these higher-priced loans and away from the guaranteed loan as described in Bill C-14 because the bank is in the business of making profits.

My party has suggested that some of the funds of financial institutions should be devoted to mortgages at 6 per cent. That proposal was not embraced enthusiastically or affectionately—I think the latter word is preferable—by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). He is not embracing anybody affectionately at the moment but seems to be consulting himself in dark seclusion.

Mr. Howard: He is on the side of the profiteers.

Mr. Rose: As the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) suggests, he is not on the side of the angels but on the side of the profiteers. Let us not kid the public about this program. It does not really matter if you raise the guaranteed ceiling to $50,000 for the period 1974 to 1977, if the banks will not lend money. And we are not speaking only of the banks. Something very interesting came to my attention when the fisheries committee was holding hearings in Vancouver in 1969. I will not name the particular institution. Representatives of a credit union run by fishermen came before us. Do you know what their chief complaint was? This is a credit union which accepts deposits from fishermen, is run for the advantage of fishermen and makes loans to fishermen, presumably in the interest of fishermen. Their chief complaint was that the level of interest they could charge under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act was too small to permit them to pay the kinds of dividends their depositors wanted. This happened with an institution which lends to fishermen. I do not know the situation with regard to the Alberta Treasury or the near-banks, or whatever they are called, in that province; I am sure, nonetheless, that the same thing happens with other financial institutions authorized to make loans under these acts.

We say that if we are to provide this money, why not provide it through a Crown corporation such as CMHC, or lend it directly as is the case with the Farm Credit Corporation? At least there should be a provision in this bill demanding that financial institutions make available some portion of their funds to people who apply for loans under these acts. If we do not do that, what will we have? We will have filled this chamber with hot air for another afternoon and passed another bill—but nobody will really benefit. What is the use of the bill if the banks decide they do not want to lend money under the act?

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe gave us an explicit breakdown of the scale of lending in Newfoundland under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act over past years. If what he said was not a devastating attack on the futility of the nonsense, I do not know what is. Here we are, ready to deal with this bill in committee of the whole this afternoon. We think that if we pass it we will really have done something. But we will really not have done anything. That is what upsets me, because it seems that we are debating irrelevancies. Merely because we have provided guarantees does not mean that the banks will lend.

What happens if a borrower is not eligible for a loan from the banks under ARDA, AIDA, PAIT or any other provincial or federal corporation? We say, "Why do you not visit the friendly bank of last resort, the International Development Bank?" Instead of lending the borrower money at 8 per cent, in all probability it will charge between 10½ and 12 per cent because the risk is greater. Why can we not limit the risk with regard to loans made by the IDB in the same way as we limit risks with regard to ordinary loans made under this program? If we can guarantee loans made under this program by private banks, why cannot we enlarge the idea and extend the same sort of guarantee to the Industrial Development Bank?

Perhaps my last remark reveals my naïveté and lack of familiarity with the workings of the IDB, but the question is pertinent. The banks, of course, prefer to lend at higher interest rates. Even if the interest rate were increased, the banks would prefer to steer borrowers to higher-rate-of-interest personal loans or to revolving credit accounts at 18 per cent. I think it is essential for us to come to grips with this question. If there is a trend in this country and in the country to the south of us, it is the trend of bigness.

[Mr. Rose.]

We see it in many aspects. We see it when we fly in 747s. We see it when large supermarket chains come into a town and put the small grocery stores out of business.

● (1640)

Someone once said, and I cannot confirm whose words they are, that if you nationalized all businesses in this country having over 500 employees, after the nationalization or takeover most people would still be working for small businesses. Therefore, small businesses are a much larger employer in this country than large businesses. If we cannot stimulate small business in this country, we are destroying an opportunity to stimulate employment. I assume that is an objective of the government, although I sometimes wonder about it with unemployment running around 600,000 people, or 6 per cent, for the past year. Whether another government could do anything about that, I do not know. However, it seems that if it were possible to stimulate more small businesses, and if the logic that small businesses are the greatest employers of people in Canada is correct, we would be doing something to assist the unemployment problem.

I am not particularly dazzled by this legislation. I do not think it will do much good. It certainly will not do any harm. I think the agreement we reached to pass this bill by ten o'clock tonight is very good.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to join other hon. members in this debate on Bill C-14. This bill introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) does one basic thing: it raises the maximum of ceiling on the amount of money that chartered banks in this country can loan to small businesses. This includes loans to fishermen and farmers for improvement and possible enlargement of their respective enterprises.

I welcome this piece of legislation because it appears to be one of those rare occasions when this government recognizes the need for assistance and attention to these important segments of our economy. Small business establishments are, without question, the very lifeblood and backbone of our communities, our provinces and indeed our country. I am deeply concerned that so little consideration has been given to such an important group who not only individually but collectively contribute so much to our economy and social well-being. I have tremendous respect for these businessmen and businesswomen. Upon investigation, you will find the best managerial skill, the greatest efficiency and real determination, dedication and initiative in this group. Most of these people established their businesses over the years, not with government assistance or grants but with faith in their communities, faith in themselves, faith in their country—and few dollars.

My main criticism of this bill—and I am certain it is a criticism shared by many other hon. members—is that the ceilings, although increased, are still far too low and unrealistic. They are unrealistic, Mr. Speaker, when you take into account the serious financial difficulties being experienced in these areas and the tremendous increases in the price of production equipment, buildings and machinery. Small businessmen in Ontario, as well as elsewhere in Canada, in part because of present government programs, have been increasingly discouraged from investing, expanding and establishing new enterprises. In many cases, taxation policies have encouraged businessmen to pull up stakes rather than solidify or enlarge their base of operation. Small businesses particularly have been looking to government to provide the help and incentives to not only compete but to grow and thrive. When one examines the bankruptcies and rapidly dwindling numbers employed in these segments of our economy, it becomes apparent that government action has been lacking and is greatly needed now.

If we read the minister's press release on these three loan acts dated Wednesday, November 21, 1973, we note that the Small Businesses Loans Act which came into effect in January, 1961, lent from that time until September, 1973, approximately $283 million. This appears to be a lot of money, and indeed it is. However, upon looking a little closer we find that about the same amount was lent this year as was lent last year, that is, about $15.5 million. Fewer loans were granted. Indeed, quite an insignificant number of the 268 loans made between April and September of 1973 went to the province of Ontario. The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which came into effect December, 1955, has lent from that date to the end of September, 1973, $29.5 million. Since the amount of money lent nearly doubled from $2.5 million to $4 million during the April to September period from 1972 to 1973, it would appear that this program more adequately meets the financial requirements of the fishing industry than it does small businesses.

One begins to wonder just how useful the program is when no loans were granted in five of Canada's ten provinces and total loans granted amount to only 577. The province of Ontario, which has a sizeable inland fishing business involving nearly 2,000 people and some 106 million pounds valued at $13.5 million, was granted only eight loans. In fact, the inland fishing industry experienced a 12 per cent decrease in volume of catch and a 7 per cent decrease in value of stocks taken in 1970 over 1969.

The $50,000 ceiling place on the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act by Bill C-14 is unrealistic by today's standards. Fishermen are a breed of their own. I am certain that my friends in this House representing ridings in the Atlantic and Pacific regions would agree. I have the pleasure of representing some of these fishermen in the Lake Erie area of Port Stanley and Port Burwell. Fishermen are a hardy group. They are hard working and are willing to risk their lives in the everyday pursuit of their duties in order to provide food for Canadians and to secure a very modest income for themselves and their families. They, too, have experienced increased input costs in their industry for boats, diesel engines, buildings, refrigeration and other equipment necessary for continued operation of their business enterprises.

When we study the performance of the Farm Improvement Loans Act we find that significantly more loans were granted and considerably more money was lent. Since its inception in March, 1945, until the end of September, 1973, nearly $3 billion has been lent and a marked increase is noted, from $105.5 million in 1972 to $125 million in 1973 during the April to September periods. However, about the same number of loans were granted during the year 1972-73. The real information that is lacking from all three of these government programs is the total number of applications and inquiries made to the chartered banks and the number refused for various reasons. I would be willing to admit that some of the applications were rejected for good reason, but this information should be available if we are to develop the kinds of programs and policies that will best meet the needs and financial requirements of these industries.

It is a well known fact that people, and in particular young people, are leaving these segments of our economy. Most noticeable are those leaving the fishery and farming areas. I am sure that, along with other reasons, this is the result of the difficulty they encounter in securing the capital necessary to enter or continue these businesses. It is true that to some extent the shortcomings in loan programs have in recent times been remedied by amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act.

I welcome the fact that small businesses are now defined as businesses worth up to $1 million. No doubt the current rate of inflation played its part in the consideration leading to this decision. I am reminded in this connection of a remark of my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), "Thank God for inflation: we shall all be millionaires!" A number of sound recommendations were made in the brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented to the cabinet and to opposition parties. Realising the need for an increase in the ceiling level, the federation recommended a maximum of $50,000 in respect of farm machinery and land, and a total maximum of $100,000. In my opinion, this is certainly in order. Taking into account the fact that a similar situation confronts both the fishing industry and those engaged in small business enterprises, I submit that if Bill C-14 is to have any effective impact, corresponding increases should be made in amounts available under the programs designed to assist small businesses and the fishing industry.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on Bill C-14 for a few minutes toward the close of this debate. I am sure the fact that I introduced a private member's motion on January 22 of last year, shortly after the opening of the session, asking that the ceiling under this legislation be increased from $25,000 to $75,000 in no way influenced the government in reaching its decision. I am pleased to find, however, that the government is only 15 months behind the thinking of the people of Hastings county.

The idea of an omnibus bill is probably a good one. I should like to say two things with regard to the portion which deals with loans for farm improvement. Specific allowance is made, now, for those acquiring new businesses, but I should like to point out that no one can start in the farming business with $50,000. In fact, a man cannot start in southern Ontario with $100,000; he probably needs $150,000.

Second, there is a crying need to revise our conception of the term "farmer". Some provision ought to be made to enable a young man to work at a job which provides cash for his everyday necessities while still operating a farm. Surprisingly enough, despite all the criticism of young people which we hear today, there are still many in my area who are prepared to work at jobs which provide the dollars indispensable for their daily needs while preparing for a future on the farm. They wish to be farmers, and I think the rules ought to be changed to make this possible.

I propose to devote the remainder of my remarks, in the limited time available to me, strictly to the small business aspect of the legislation before us. The reasons for the amendment are more valid today than they have ever been. Since 1961, when the legislative machinery was first set up, costs have risen to such an extent that it is not sufficient to substitute a ceiling of $50,000 for $25,000. What piece of construction equipment can a man entering the construction business buy for $25,000? If he is engaged in manufacturing, raw materials alone would cost in the neighbourhood of $50,000. In the wholesale business one can hardly get a decent stock of cigarettes and chocolate bars for less than $50,000. Take transport: with the big highway rigs it costs more than $30,000 for the tractor alone, quite apart from the trailer. So there is very little one can do with $50,000 in the way of starting a small business in Canada these days.

The Industrial Development Bank, which supposedly should be looking after these areas of concern, has not been doing its job. I have spoken at some length on this subject on other occasions. The intention was that it should lend in areas of high risk at a somewhat higher interest rate. Well, they charge the high interest rate but they rarely get into the high risk area. As a result, businessmen have to rely on legislation such as we see before us.

I am pleased it should now be possible to buy land under these provisions. I am interested in finding out how this section will work, because it will really amount to a form of mortgage and with interest rates as they are today I am curious to know what arrangements will be made with the first person who borrows money under these terms. I am pleased that new businesses are now covered. These are changes which are beneficial. The Small Businesses Loans Act was intended to be of help to businessmen. The increase in the loans ceilings and in the size of eligible companies constitutes an advance, but the government has not gone far enough. While we are disposed to pass the bill, I urge the ministers concerned to reconsider these measures in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is close to five o'clock, and since I know we wish to move forward I will resume my seat.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Baldwin: Call it six o'clock, if you like.

An hon. Member: Call it Easter.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Possible opening of mission by Saudi Arabia in Ottawa and Canadian embassy in Iraq; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Pensions—Railway employees—Inquiry as to appointment of commissioner to conduct inquiry.

[English]

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MATERIAL RESULTING FROM FIRST MEETING OF VLA SENIOR MANAGEMENT TEAM MARCH 26-29, 1974

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all material resulting from the first meeting of the VLA senior management team convened by the Director General of the Veterans Land Administration in Ottawa from March 26 to 29 as follows (a) operational plans in the periods before and after the March 31, 1974 deadline for new loan applications (b) further implementation of MBO as the VLA style of management.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there must be something radically wrong here.

This is the second time I have risen to my feet—I think that is the first time it has happened in six years—to speak twice on the same day. At least not everybody has gone home.

I missed one thing when I was talking on the Fisheries Improvement Loans measure. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) reminded me of it. He said I should have asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) whether he would increase the maximum loan ceilings under the Veterans Land Act to $50,000.

● (1700)

The debate today is the result of my notice of motion for the production of papers requesting a copy of all material resulting from the first meeting of the Veterans Land Act senior management team which was convened by the Director General of the Veterans Land Administration in Ottawa from March 26 to March 29, and also the operational plans in the periods before and after the March 31, 1974 deadline for new loan applications, and in respect of further implementation of MBO, whatever that is, as the VLA style of management.

It is very difficult for me to understand why the production of these papers was denied. It is a well-known fact that as a result of a notice of motion introduced by an hon. member of this party the government, even though it was reluctant to recognize the wishes of the majority of veterans, said it was prepared to phase out certain parts of the veterans' charter on the basis of the fact that nine years ago, in 1965, the parliament of Canada agreed that it should be phased out. My only comment in that regard is: so what? I should like to ask members of the House how many amendments to legislation have come about over the years, and how many changes have had to be made because of changing conditions?

I am sure the members of the House of Commons who were here in 1965, and agreed with the decision to establish deadline dates, now realize that this was a wrong decision. Is that not why we are sitting here in the House of Commons as members? We are sitting here to legislate, and to change legislation for the benefit of the people we represent. To use an argument such as the one used by members on the other side of this House is ridiculous and even un-Canadian.

In dealing with this motion for the production of papers, I think it was yesterday I was told by the minister that since the papers for which I asked were confidential documents they should not be produced. I wonder how ridiculous that is, and what was so confidential at the meeting of the Veterans Land Act Administration that we, as members of parliament, should be denied the right to know the operational plans for the period before and after the March 31 deadline for new loan applications, and in respect of further implementation of MBO as the Veterans Land Act style of management?

Now that the government has extended the March 31, 1974, deadline is it not that much more important that veterans know about the operational plans of this administration? That seems only to be commonsense. This debate allows me to place on the record the attitude which has been taken by government members opposite in respect of extending the deadline for one year.

During a TV program last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked about the vast increase in government expenditure, and gave as an excuse the fact that the extension of the VLA deadline had contributed to this increase in government expenditure. Let me refer to the transcript which indicates that the Prime Minister, in response to a question, said that just last week the government was trying to phase out a program for veterans which had been brought in after the second world war, and applicable to the Korean veterans, according to a schedule determined many years ago by parliament, but when the government acted on phasing it out people said it should be prolonged for another year.

The Prime Minister went on to say that another reason was the result of pressure groups supported by the opposition, and he added that by extending the program it would cost several millions of dollars. Another misconception which should be corrected was in relation to a statement made by one of the newsmen that there are 10,000 civil servants in this department. There may be 10,000 civil servants in the entire Department of Veterans Affairs, but there are fewer than 500 administering the Veterans Land Act.

Having regard to the pressure groups referred to by the Prime Minister, this used to be referred to as involvement and participation by the people of Canada. Now these have become pressure groups. When it suited the government to invite Canadians to get involved in government, this was known as involvement and participation, but now these people are "pressure groups supported by the opposition".

Let me take a few moments to answer the questions about the cost of operating the Veterans Land Act administration. The best way I can do that is by reading from questions and answers reported in the Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, Issue No. 4 for April 4, 1974. I said:

—I would like to go on to the estimates. I think I was questioning Mr. McCracken about the budget, and I hear certain figures bandied around. I want to clarify in my own mind and in the mind of the Committee, the Veterans' Land Administration expenditures for the operation of the Veterans' Land Administration Program. Am I correct in assuming that the amount in the estimates is $11,570,423?

Mr. McCracken answered as follows:

Yes, Mr. Chairman. That includes an amount of about $4,400,000 which is a reserve that is set aside every year to meet the conditional grant benefit of the loans that are made to veterans, so that at the end of 10 years, there is an amount available from this reserve in the case of a veteran, for instance, who has a small holding loan.

He has a $1,400 conditional grant of the first $6,000. At the end of 10 years when he has fulfilled the terms of his settlement contract, $1,400 is taken from the reserve and it is applied in effect to his debt. So of the 11 million and some odd dollars, $4.4 million of that is an amount that is set aside and it remains fairly constant... It is set aside each year to build up this reserve so that we can write off the conditional grants at the end of the 10-year period.

I then asked:

So, in other words, the cost of operating a department is not $11 million, it is more like $7 million.

His answer to that was:

The actual operating costs per se are about $7.2 million, yes.

I then asked:

—if the deadline in the Veterans Land Act was not extended, you indicated at the last Committee meeting that the Veterans' Land Administration would remain intact at least until 1977, and you went on to say there would have to be some semblance of a Veterans' Land Administration in the year 2000.

In other words the Veterans' Land Administration would not be phased out even if the deadline had not been extended. Mr. McCracken went on to say:

There would have to be staff somewhere and I conceive it remaining as a unit whether it was in the Department of Veterans Affairs or some other department, where the staff involved would be handling the loan management workload, the agreements of sale, conveyances and this type of thing. The people and the staff in the regions would be there in regard to matters of collections and this type of thing. Loan management workload is the name we normally give to it.

I then asked:

In other words, even if the extension of a year was not imposed or agreed upon or brought in, that staff would still remain and the cost would be the same?

Mr. McCracken replied:

Some staff, yes. I envisage that in about three years' time, we would be down from about 490 now to around the 400 mark.

Let us then correct the misconception that there are 10,000 civil servants operating the Veterans' Land Administration, as there is a staff of less than 500 which will be down to 400 by the end of the year. I then asked Mr. McCracken:

Therefore, from what I can see there would be no great increase in cost to maintain the present staff to take care of the extension of the deadline for a year; there would be no undue, unreasonable cost to the public.

Mr. McCracken said:

Well, I am not going to comment on the question of whether it is undue or otherwise. I can say this: that relating to the amount we have in the estimates for 1974-75, I anticipate an additional requirement of not less than $1 million this year.

In other words, to satisfy what they suggest will be another 10,000 veterans by extending the deadline by one year, this will cost $1 million. So let us correct that misconception. I then asked Mr. McCracken:

For what reason?

Mr. McCracken said:

Increased operating costs.

To confirm that again I asked:

It would be just $1 million?

Mr. McCracken replied:

A minimum of $1 million.

● (1710)

Then the deputy minister said:

Mr. Chairman, may I interject? The estimates were prepared on the assumption that the act, as it then stood, would continue to apply. That is to say that during the fiscal year that has just begun, loans would not be made. Since the act has been amended, As Mr. McCracken said, there is an additional expense involved.

Certainly there is an additional expense involved, but it is only $1 million and not the many millions quoted by the minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and many others who do not know what they are talking about. I then asked this:

Mr. McCracken, in the short time since the legislation was passed, have you had any information from your district authorities indicating that there is an influx of applications?

He said he did not because he did not think there was enough time.

Then I asked him if he was getting a rush because the deadline was approaching, and he said that that would be putting it mildly. I said:

It has been indicated by the department or Veterans' Land Administration that of the 140,000 veterans qualified only between 5 and 10 per cent would seek applications under the act. Up to the March 31, 1974 deadline, has that proven true?

Then Mr. McCracken said:

Mr. Chairman, I think that would be about right. Since October 1968, new establishments have been running around 3,000. I think we hit 4,000 in 1968-69, if my memory serves me correctly, but it has been running around 3,000 to 4,000. This year the number of loans actually approved for veterans who were seeking establishment, exclusive of the backlog we have, would be around 5,500. That would work out to around the 20,000 mark, somewhere in that area.

Just because there was agreement nine years ago in this House of Commons that the deadline would be established does not preclude the possibility that it was the wrong decision to make. Since the nine years have passed the facts are clear, and the chairman of the Veterans' Land Act administration, an honourable and very capable man, has told us what the situation is. We have performed a service for at least a few thousand veterans over the next year who will be able to take advantage of the legislation. Let me say once more that it will not cost the millions of dollars mentioned, but rather $1 million.

The staff will be in existence at least until 1977, so the necessary staff will be available either through the Department of Veterans Affairs or through some other department up until the year 2000. I do not know where the suggested heavy expenditure comes from, because it certainly will not be due to the extension of the deadline. I think it could be shown in respect of a cost-benefit analysis of the value of any government agency that the VLA is as good an example as any of proper government spending.

There are many other areas in which spending could be cut but not in the area of the veterans charter. In order to show the type of amendments my party suggests—and in this I include the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—I should like to refer to a motion I introduced before the committee, which for some reason or other was not acceptable. This amendment stated:

That this Committee recommends the government consider the advisability of introducing legislation to provide:

1. That Section 31 of the Veterans Land Act be repealed;

2. That the mortgage loan ceiling be increased to $30,000 from the present $18,000 to meet realistically today's needs;

3. That the minimum lot requirement be reduced from the present one-half acre less 20 per cent, or 17,424 square feet, to a lot commensurate with CMHC requirements, for those veterans desirous of acquiring building lots in urban areas;

4. That the down payment be equated to 5 per cent of the loan ceiling; and the Chairman be instructed to report this recommendation to the House later this day.

For some reason or other my motion was not considered correct and was turned down. However, the government and everybody here know that these factors I have mentioned are consistent with the extension of the deadline. We will continue to press for this over the next 12 months. I am sure all members on the other side now realize this is the only justifiable and proper thing to do for the veterans.

When we introduce a motion in a new form I hope these amendments will receive approval, and will not be considered out of order under the rules of the House. In the meantime my motion for the production of papers should be answered, and the papers should be produced so that what the veterans administration management team does will be within the knowledge of each member of this House who has veterans in his district, and who represents veterans' organizations, so that those veterans may be helped rather than kept in the dark as they have been for so long.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, this motion for the production of papers put by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) gives us another opportunity to bring new matter to the continuing debate on the veterans' land program.

We had several occasions, Mr. Speaker, to consider the requests, perhaps legitimate requests of certains veterans associations concerning the extention of the implementation period of the program announced in 1942, to provide veterans returning from the front mortgages at easier terms than those offered in 1945.

As was said before, Mr. Speaker, the spirit prevailing at the time was to provide veterans with a mortgage market which was non-exiting from 1945 to 1952 and greatly different from the present market where, as soon as a worker gets a steady job, he can apply to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and benefit from a very advantageous mortgage program well known throughout Canada. This enabled the government to have construction started on no fewer than 260,000 housing units in 1973.

This debate, Mr. Speaker, gives us nonetheless the opportunity to refute some points raised only a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), when speaking of the cost of the amendment he wished to move in committee. Therefore, since he has opened the debate on what happened in that committee, I will also take leave, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the proposed amendment.

The hon. member talked of a cost of $1 million and has quoted at length from the proceedings of the April 4 meeting and he quoted Mr. McCracken as having said that the extention of the program would cost about $1 million only, that is to say what it would cost to keep a staff of 490 and carry on other obligations.

But to be honest, I must say that this sum of $1 million does not include the requested benefits. If the ceiling of mortgage loans were raised from $18,000 to $30,000, it is quite sure, as one can figure out by very simple calculations, that such a program would not be possible with only $1 million.

Besides, one has to consider that as many as 110,000 veterans have a certificate and that they could probably use if it the benefits were increased from $18,000 to $30,000.

Then, after calculations, we must conclude that since 1967 approximately 20,000 veterans took advantage of the government's proposal, of whom 99 per cent are said to have first chosen the settlement or university training programs.

They have repaid what they had already received from the government to accept the offer made to them in 1967. Some 110,000 have done this since 1968 and no fewer than 20,000 have used their certificate to take advantage of the veterans' land program.

Of course, if the ceiling were fixed at $30,000 rather than $18,000, it is most certain that a great number of the remaining 110,000 would come to the Veterans Affairs Department to benefit from this program.

Anybody who will try to convince me that this kind of program would cost no more than $1 million yearly cannot be taken seriously, because he is not good at figures. As to the administration costs, and I am sure the hon. member agrees on this, they would be of about $1 million, according to Mr. McCracken, director of the program. But if the ceiling were to be raised, program costs would greatly exceed $1 million; indeed, a figure of $50 million has been suggested. I am not in a position, Mr. Speaker, to see whether that $50 million is correct, but I trust those who figured it out and consider that it could in fact cost as much as $50 million.

Another point I should like to raise in this debate, Mr. Speaker, is that certain innuendoes were made in this House and elsewhere that about March 12, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said, and I quote:

> ... I have heard reports from some of them that they are finding an extraordinary working-to-rule in some VLA offices with regard to this matter.

He went on:

> I hope those reports are wrong, because I think this House would severely castigate any officials of VLA who in any way dragged their feet in order to have this deadline pass and applications thus disqualified.

And later on, Mr. Speaker, on March 28, similar allegations were made in committee by another hon. member, namely that it was rumoured that the staff was still working to rule in receiving and processing applications. Mr. Speaker, there could not be anything more untrue than such allegations. I am told by the administrator of the program that the 490 persons working in the Veterans' Land Act administration are honest civil servants, honest employees of the department. The great majority, 75 per cent of the employees, are veterans themselves, and about 100 per cent of them are male employees. Mr. Speaker, to give you an example of their dedications to their work, I should quote the words spoken on March 23 by Mr. McCracken, which are published on page 114 of the committee proceedings, and I quote:

[English]

> In a management decision last year, we agreed that in the months of January, February and March of this year there would be no holidays for field staff, district managers, and others so that we would have a full complement of staff available to take care of the anticipated increase in loan applications that we would receive in that period. We anticipated that we would have an increase in the number of veterans who would be coming in for counselling purposes.

[Translation]

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this intention and these steps taken by department officials to ensure that all applications would be considered in time to meet the deadline of March 31, 1974, clearly demonstrate that there had been absolutely no decline in effectiveness of department employees who did not even hesitate to sacrifice their winter holiday to which they were duly entitled to ensure that all veterans' applications would be processed in time.

This is another statement which causes us to question the seriousness of those who came forward with these figures, statements and unfounded information.

The minister was even accused of not having done the utmost to contact all Canadian veterans so that they could take advantage of the benefits made available to them.

Mr. Speaker, in 1967, Mr. McCracken fully explained all the measures that had been taken that year and gave them intensive publicity, mainly in the newspapers, for the sake of the veterans. For instance, in the Canadian Legion bulletin and in all the veterans newspapers. Posters have been displayed in many Canadian legions across the country, in post offices, in public places familiar to the veterans to inform them of the new provisions, the extension date of the applicability of the act which they were granted and the new provisions covering the extension of their benefits. As a consequence, Mr. Speaker, no fewer than 140,000 veterans took advantage of this offer and reimbursed the benefits they had already received to obtain the new publicized ones.

So, how far do we have to go? In Europe, and in France, for example, in early June every year they celebrate the liberation anniversary date, and so will they this year. In early June, they celebrate Europe's liberation by the allied nations.

This year European countries, and especially France, decided that after 30 years it would be proper to commemorate in a special way that 30th anniversary of the liberation of Europe but that in later years that event would be much less important for the good reason that after 30 years it is becoming more and more difficult for veterans to participate in the commemoration of that major event in our history and especially that of Europe.

When one considers that veterans are 58 or 59 on the average, naturally, it is becoming more and more difficult for them to go back to the battle fields and recall the difficult hours they went through 30 years ago.

It is not any easier, Mr. Speaker, for a man of that age to make plans and I say so as a man who discussed this with his former brothers-in-arms. Since I too attend quite regularly the meetings of my local Canadian Legion I am in constant touch with veterans who agree with me and say: Well, listen, after so many years those who wanted to go into farming, those who wanted to settle have already done so, and at our age—58 or 59 on the average—it has become quite difficult to make such plans.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, the government decided to extend the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act for another year. New facts might prompt the government to extend that cutoff date. Those are facts that we are yet to discover. In this debate and others those facts might be brought to surface.

[English]

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, the motion for the production of papers now before the House once again gives us an opportunity to review the legislation to which it pertains. We have heard the mover of the motion suggest the amendments that he would look for, and several of us, speaking previously on the same subject, which seems to be repeating itself so many times in this session, have suggested that the legislation should have been phased out long since and, if necessary, different legislation introduced for our veterans. However, in order that we may make an assessment before voting on this motion it may be well to review the subject. I think it would be relevant to quote the following parts of the preamble to the act:

Whereas many men now serving in the active forces of Canada have recorded their desire to settle on land or engage in farming when hostilities cease, and it is desirable that suitably qualified veterans be encouraged to seek rehabilitation in the agricultural industry;

And whereas part time farming coupled with other employment is an increasingly important aspect of rural and semi-rural life in Canada;

And whereas it is in the public interest as a measure of rehabilitation to assist in acquiring the ownership of farm homes by qualified veterans—

In relation to the purpose of assisting to rehabilitate veterans in civilian life, as hon. members know every veteran has had at least 20 years to make his application, and most have had as long as 30 years. The other two alternative rehabilitation plans were concluded quite some time ago. I think it is clear that the orientation of the Veterans Land Act was directed principally to those veterans interested in agricultural utilization of farm land in rural and semi-rural areas. The financial provisions of the act were founded on this type of settlement, and I think we should not lose sight of those basic factors when we discuss the act.

When we look at some of the facts we see that in the eight fiscal years up to March, 1973, after the lending deadlines and revised loan ceilings were established in 1965, approximately 32,000 veterans were settled under the provisions of the act. In the majority of those eight years the annual number of new establishments has been less than 5,000. In the current fiscal year, however, and more particularly in the last six months, there has been a significant increase in the number of loan applications. It is expected that the number of veterans who will have been settled this year will approximate 5,500—and there are a further 1,400 loan applications on hand awaiting appraisal.

It was in the light of this data on comparative settlement activity and the increased interest which veterans have shown in the current fiscal year—due undoubtedly to recognition by them of the scheduled lending deadline—that I reached the conclusion that an extension of one year, as has been approved by the minister, would be appropriate. In my analysis of the facts it became evident that some well-intentioned veterans would have been deprived of a right, which they had so gallantly earned, if the March, 1974, deadline had been final.

When there is a reasonable doubt, we should not hesitate to decide in favour of the veterans. We must not forget that, some years ago, they did not hesitate when the survival of freedom was in doubt. The extension that has been granted will provide many veterans with an opportunity to take advantage of a program which was designed for them.

The Veterans Land Act was designed neither as a program of urban housing nor as part of a retirement program for persons reaching the end of their productive careers. Its basic purpose was to provide loans for the purchase of agricultural land, to be used on a full or part time farming basis by veterans who were interested in this form of rehabilitation program on their return to civilian life following wartime active service.

It was recognized that many veterans would neither wish nor find it practical to settle under the Veterans Land Act. Two other programs were enacted: university training under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, and re-establishment credits under the War Service Grants Act. The benefits under all three programs were alternative one to the other. Each veteran had the right to choose whichever plan he considered would best serve his needs and desires.

The department's university training program was concluded in the 1950s; and October 31, 1968, was the final date for veterans to use re-establishment credit benefits.

In 1965 parliament established deadlines to phase out VLA lending operations in a reasonable and orderly manner. Almost 30 years have elapsed since the end of World War II, and 20 years in the case of the Korean conflict. In the context of a rehabilitation measure to assist veterans to pick up the thread of civilian life following wartime active service, those genuinely interested in land settlement assistance have had ample time to find properties suitable for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions, by hon. members reading such implications into the motion, that possibly the government's concern for veterans is lessening. Surely nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Paproski: Then what are you talking it out for?

Mr. Herbert: The hon. member wants to know why we are talking it out. With the number of members there are in the House I think the issue could very easily come to a vote to decide the question right now.

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you stop then?

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note, when we discuss whether we are still concerned about veterans, that Bill C-148, passed last March, authorized a 25 per cent increase in war veterans allowances rates and ceilings for single recipients, and a 28 per cent increase for married recipients. In addition, Bill C-202, passed last June, provided an increase of 24 per cent in basic rates under the Pension Act. May I also remind hon. members that the recently tabled estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs for 1974-75 amount to $597 million compared with $480 million in the main estimates for the past year. This indicates clearly that the government's commitment to veterans is not reducing but is growing.

I think the problem is that in spending many days debating the Veterans Land Act we have been using the poor veterans for our political purposes and motives. We have done that instead of coming to grips with the question and recognizing that, possibly at this late date, veterans legislation should be introduced to take care of veterans now reaching retirement age. I feel, because of their service to their country, that there should be programs in which they can participate which will enable them to settle in retirement with benefits somewhat above those available to the average citizen.

This is a debatable point. The consensus of opinion seems to be that a little more should be given to the veteran in view of the service he has performed for his country. I do not oppose that. We are calling for these extensions to an act which should long since have been phased out. The allegation which is made that by calling for the conclusion of the act we shall do something which is against the interests of veterans is hypocritical. We should face the issue. In lieu of inadequate legislation we should introduce legislation that we feel is necessary and which will benefit veterans who are now reaching retirement age.

I feel that the motion before the House, like all similar motions, is the type of probing motion designed to make public confidential departmental papers. These, like all similar confidential papers, will become absolutely valueless once they have been made public or tabled. I cannot imagine it being possible to provide confidential reports, or to receive meaningful reports from departmental officials, if the authors of the reports must word their work in such a fashion as to guard themselves from criticism in the event that at some later date their reports are publicized.

That situation would render the reports completely meaningless and a minister, in that situation, could never be in the position to use and trust the materials provided to him. I will go a little farther. We may find ourselves in this position because if a civil servant does not know for certain if any of his material is likely to be publicized in future, he will find it extremely difficult to put on paper any comments for which he, as an individual, is likely to be publicly criticized later. For that reason I oppose this motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. After the House of Commons—not the government or the minister—had passed the bill extending the Veterans Land Act for another year, we had discussions in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on other changes and improvements which might be made. For example, we pressed strongly for the lifting of the deadline of October 31, 1968, the date by which qualification certificates had to be secured. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) assured us in the committee that this would be considered. Other points have also been raised, which have also been met with the response that they will be considered.

I make the plea, Mr. Speaker, that if other changes in the Veterans Land Act are being considered, we are entitled to have all the information there is about the administration of the Veterans Land Act. That is what the motion before us today is all about. A study has produced certain material. I suggest that Members of Parliament in general, and members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in particular, at this time when matters relating to the Veterans Land Act are still being considered, have a right to that material. As I say, that is what the motion is all about, and I think the House ought to pass it.

The last speaker referred to the act and to the way in which it satisfied him. He says that it was set up to enable veterans to go on the land, and not for the purposes of housing or retirement. I remind him that if he was here on November 9, 1973, he was party to a unanimous decision of the House of Commons that the minister be asked to consider extending the provisions of the Veterans Land Act, even if the main purpose of most of the older veterans now applying for loans under the Veterans Land Act is to meet their housing requirements. After all, the situation affecting veterans today is not what it was 30 years ago.

We think these other changes we are seeking are thoroughly justified.

I said I would be brief, Mr. Speaker, and I shall conclude my remarks. I stand very strongly for the changes in the Veterans Land Act which we have asked for in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I hope the consideration of the minister, still going on, relating to this question will produce favourable results. In the meantime I think we are entitled to all the material available and that is why, in the name of democracy, I ask for an affirmative vote on the motion for the production of papers moved this afternoon by hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall).

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to speak on this important matter. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) described the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) as a motion for the production of papers. This is really not a motion for the production of papers; this is a request for a record of conversations and quiet discussions in which members of the Veterans Land Act administration took part. I have talked to those people and I understand that in any event this demand for material would not have elicited anything significant.

We must realize that an important principle of democracy is involved. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talked about democracy. It is about time we gave some democratic expression to the idea of protecting people who work in the civil service and who engage in such conversations. They advise and talk to the minister, and it is up to the minister to accept or reject recommendations made in this way.

I went to the trouble of discussing the matter of the production of papers with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

On March 15, 1973, the House resumed consideration of a private member's motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the production of certain papers. In the debate that day the House heard of suggested guidelines governing the production of papers. For instance, Guideline No. 10, as approved by the President of the Privy Council, reads:

> Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

● (1750)

No. 14 reads:

> Papers that are private or confidential and not of a public or official character.

No. 15 reads:

> Internal departmental memoranda.

If you read this exemption list you realize the motion should be out of order without even debating it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Were those exemptions approved by this House?

Mr. Railton: I believe they were.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no!

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Railton: I will not make that claim. You should know much better than I. I think it was the proposed list. What was done with it I cannot say, but I think it is very well worked out. I subscribe to the content.

I referred earlier to Section 15—internal departmental memoranda. If you run a department you should certainly have the right to send private notes to and receive the same from a certain section, such as the director of the Veterans Land Act. I do not see any reason why these private slips of paper should be brought out. They deal with the minister and his directors working out a program. Until the program has been decided on, it is no one else's business.

There is plenty of opportunity in the committees to dig out all sorts of official documents. That is done all the time. Nobody can object to that. However, the idea of looking for private memoranda between a minister and people in his department is abhorrent. The word democracy should be used in its proper context.

Although I may feel strongly about that one point, I have nothing but praise for the two members who brought in the original suggestion regarding the extension. The hon. member from Newfoundland and the hon. gentleman from Manitoba are to be congratulated. I think there are 50 veterans in this House. They are all behind these two members in trying to get the best possible deal for veterans.

On the other hand there is something to be said for phasing out the operation. The advice the minister received from the Royal Canadian Legion, and I am sure it was correct, was that they did not think there would be any real reason to continue it. I think there were isolated branches, isolated letters and other representations about which these two members spoke, which made them feel it was not that important.

I took this matter up with the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I agreed with the idea that it was not the time to phase out the Veterans Land Act. I will stick to that.

I have a letter, which I am sure all members have seen, from Senator Hazen Argue. He thought we should continue the program. He suggested it might be changed, or put under different auspices such as the Farm Credit Corporation or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think that is worth considering.

Credit must be given to the old Veterans Land Act. It was really the springboard from which came legislation for the Farm Credit Corporation. This matter was raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I could read some of the good arguments he made about the legislation. He said that prior to that time the legislation for farm credit was so bad, and the Farm Loan Board got into so much trouble that the ideas behind the Veterans Land Act were applied to new legislation for the Farm Credit Corporation. He also pointed out that there was a lesson in the Veterans Land Act on small holding legislation that could be applied to housing legislation.

All those are things of the past. It was a good act, but it must be revised. We have a year to do that. I certainly feel there will be further discussion in committee among members representing all parties. We either have to amend the act, or see that some things we want done are done by some other agency. Sometimes it is good to tear down a building and put up a new one. Sometimes it is worth renovating the old one. That is what this is all about.

I do not think there is any doubt that this parliament will make changes that are proper and that will assist veterans. I feel veterans can change their minds. They may be 55 to 58 years old on the average, but what is the difference? I think things should be left open in some way. There must be modifications. These should be discussed, either as amendments or a new bill. I am sure these will be brought before the House in a few months. We should either have a new bill or amendments, or else extend the cutoff date.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Before calling it six o'clock possibly the House will permit resumption of the committee of the whole. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On Clause 1.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I realise we are in Committee of the Whole and that the matter I wish to raise can only be dealt with when Mr. Speaker is in the chair. However, I thought I should mention it now so that there would at least be time to think it over.

As hon. members are aware, there have been negotiations about whether the House should sit next week. I believe those negotiations have been concluded, and that we are sitting. What I now suggest would not interfere with that decision, and that is why I waited until now to make it. I wonder whether there could not be agreement later tonight for an order of the House that we not sit on Monday, having in mind that it is a government holiday and that it would be a courtesy to our own staff. I say this as one who will be here. I offer the suggestion now, and perhaps before ten o'clock tonight we can settle the matter.

Mr. Bell: I should like to support that suggestion. At least I say we would consider it very seriously and, I hope, favourably, having in mind consideration for the staff.

Mr. Reid: We would not be prepared to say yes at this time. We would, however, be prepared to sit down and discuss the whole matter. As I say, we would not be prepared to make any arrangements of an interim nature at this time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, this is a matter which can only be settled when Mr. Speaker is in the chair. For this to be done someone would have to move that I report progress. Until such time as that is done, I suggest we continue the study of Bill C-14.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I simply add that perhaps there could be some discussions about the matter during the evening.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gillies: To return to the bill, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House have little quarrel with these measures in general. We welcome the bill. We support it. We recognize the need for increases in the size of the loans because of the inflation which is taking place in the country. We welcome these proposals to extend aid to the fishermen, farmers and others, and to broaden the base upon which the relevant acts will operate.

We have certain reservations with regard to the revisions related to land acquisition, but by and large the position of the Conservative party is that this legislation is much needed, and we support it.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this bill. I want to thank the Minister of Finance for being so responsive to all the requests which have been made to him on behalf of the small businessmen, the farmers and the fishermen of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: A number of misleading statements have been made about this bill, so I think I should state for the record that the amount of money lent by the Farm Improvement Loans Board last year was $230.1 million.

The suggestion has been made that the price of farm machinery has gone up by between 100 and 200 per cent. Our inquiries show that this is not the case. We would really not have very much to complain about if the price of everything else had gone up as little as the price of farm machinery expressed in terms of a percentage of the income farmers receive, the extra horsepower provided, and so on.

It seems to me as though some hon. members have their facts and figures mixed up. From the checks the department has made, we know the price of farm machinery has risen. But we also know that greater horsepower and added convenience have made these machines much more efficient. Bearing these factors in mind, the increase in price has not been as great as some people claim.

It was also stated that the farmers of this nation were not going to produce and supply more food, as we had asked them to do. This is not so.

● (2010)

That is why we value this bill so much, why we are asking that it be passed so quickly, and that is why I do not intend to take very much time of the committee. However, I should like to put on record certain figures in respect of agricultural production this year. It was stated earlier that farmers are not going to increase production. Let me make it clear at this time that acreage to be put in cereal grains in this nations this year will be increased by 2.5 million. It is estimated that growers will use 25 per cent more fertilizer than last year. This will mean an estimated total increase in acreage of 4½ per cent, and will result in the greatest cereal crop we have ever had.

I will not hold up the committee any longer but I thought I should put those facts on the record. I could of course take much longer to outline the facts in detail in respect of farm machinery, in order to correct some of the things that have been said.

Mr. McKinley: Following what the Minister of Agriculture has just said in respect of farm machinery, Mr. Chairman, let me point out that as a result of inflation the price of sugar in Canada has increased by 30 per cent in the last month. The minister gave some indication about a year and a half ago that he was prepared to initiate the establishment of a sugar industry in southwestern Ontario. That created quite a furore. What was needed at that time was an agreement, on the part of the government, to guarantee a fair price to the sugar beet producers in order that they could carry on these operations over a sufficient period of time that would warrant the purchase of the necessary equipment.

The price of sugar has now reached a point where such a policy on the part of the government to establish that industry and to guarantee production is no longer necessary, but what we do not know now is whether the situation will remain the same or worsen because of rising inflation, so that farmers are still not in a position to know whether the industry would last in order that they would be warranted in purchasing equipment.

The increase in the limitation in respect of loans under this legislation will help to some degree in the establishment of such a sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario, but after this little resumé by the minister about the benefits of this legislation to farmers, will he now tell us what has happened to his proposed sugar beet industry as a result of the increase in the price of sugar by a full 30 per cent in the last month?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that I did inform the House several weeks ago that a world sugar agreement was the subject of consultation and active consideration, so we are making progress toward the adoption of a real sugar policy for this nation which will benefit the sugar beet industry in Canada.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. McKinley: I thank the minister for the reply, but he has not told us very much about the progress being made toward the establishment of a sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario. Is that project any further off the ground than it was when the minister asked the farmers in that area of Ontario to make a commitment in respect of the number of acres they would be prepared to put into sugar beets?

Mr. Whelan: I would say it is very much further off the ground, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKinley: Just how much further? Can the minister give us any definite indication as to whether there is a plant in the offing, and whether this will be initiated under the auspices of the federal government within the near future?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I made a commitment that we would be on the way to establishing a full-fledged sugar policy, and re-establishing a sugar industry within two years. I made that commitment about a year ago, so I still have a year.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments about this bill. There is no doubt that there is need for the extension of greater credit in the farming community and in the small business community, and this has been caused by inflation, as stated a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Don Valley.

During meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture we discussed this matter with representatives of the Federation of Agriculture, at which time everyone seemed to agree that because of the increase in prices there was a need to increase the limitation in respect of the amount of loans available. It was generally agreed that $15,000 was a ridiculously low figure, and that credit to the extent of at least $25,000 must be made available to farmers to cover production costs as well as the cost of machinery. Hon. members will realize that the price of machinery has been skyrocketing in the past few years, and it is generally understood that the cost will go up another 25 per cent in the next year. This is horrifying to the farmers.

During our discussions about this matter I ventured to state, with tongue in cheek, that as a result of inflation we will soon all be millionaires. This is exactly what will happen within a very few years. None of us will be worth any more or own any more property, but perhaps we will all be millionaires. This puts me in mind of stories about the people in Germany having to push a wheelbarrow full of marcs to the store to purchase a loaf of bread. That is the point we are rapidly moving toward at this present rate of inflation.

Because the land a man might have purchased in the 1930's for $500 would now cost $25,000 many people seem to think that all farmers are rich. Let me point out that the same acre of land produces no more food. Perhaps I should correct that by admitting that greater production is now possible through the use of fertilizers that were not available in the 1930's. We are able to produce a few more bushels of crop per acre, but this increased production is soon gobbled up.

In my experience I have never met a farmer who has purchased his machinery with cash. I was the reeve in a municipality for about six years, I am in my seventeenth year as a member of this House, and I can honestly tell hon. members that I know of not one farmer who has purchased machinery with cash. They have always had to go to the bank first to make arrangements for the money. Perhaps they do not do this because they want to, but it seems that savings are a thing of the past nowadays. I think the younger generation has the right idea; that is, use somebody else's money and live off the fat of the land. This is what causes the inflation. I believe there is a need for this type of loan for those who are left on the farm and who provide the needs of this country and other countries.

The minister has been making some strange noises in the last couple of days. He has been suggesting that if the farmers wish to be treated like everybody else they should pay high interest rates such as 10 per cent or 12 per cent. I am referring to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Whelan: Get your facts straight. I never said that.

Mr. Korchinski: I have all the minister's speeches in front of me. I also have the records of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. When the minister appeared before the committee he suggested that the interest rates should go up because he wants the farmers to be treated equally. Although I am directing my comments to the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance must listen to this also because he may be forced to bring in legislation along this line.

I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he should look very carefully at the situation, and realize that he should not make a speech suggesting that the farmers should have greater profits and a higher return, and then turn around and suggest that these farmers should pay a higher interest rate because they want to be like their city cousins. This is nonsense. If we are to keep costs down we must keep the interest rate at the lowest level. The government should not take the position that this is a high cost economy and that the solution is to do something for the farmers by way of subsidies.

The Minister of Agriculture pours millions of dollars into the dairy industry, for example, because he knows everybody drinks milk. Then because the government assumes everybody eats bread a subsidy is placed on wheat. The idea is to leave the impression that the farmer is being subsidized while the consumer is being helped, If the government wants to help the consumer this can be done by cutting down the cost to the lowest level. The same principle applies to the home builder. The government could help him by cutting down the tax on building materials and so on. The cutting down should begin at the lowest level so that everybody does not get on the gravy train.

Although there has not been too much discussion about the interest rate I suggest to the Minister of Finance that that rate should be maintained at a very stable level. I understand that interest rates, like everything else, are going up, but I think there is a time and place to do something about this so that everybody in the country does not get in on the 10 per cent act as we go along.

I ask the Minister of Finance to be very careful not to listen to the speeches of the Minister of Agriculture as he travels throughout the country suggesting that everyone wants to pay high interest rates. This is nonsense. No one wants to pay high interest rates. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture also knows this. I suggest that the Minister of Finance should attempt to establish a lower level of interest rates. Because of the fact that farm improvement loans carry a low interest rate many bankers do not give farmers the advice they often require.

The banker asks the farmer to come to his bank. The farmer is sucked in, just as people are sucked in who assume that the local grocery store has the cheapest prices. All of a sudden people realize that perhaps the banker across the street can give them a better deal if given a chance. I have advised some of my people not to be taken in by a banker because he is nice. He is a nice guy because he wants their business.

So long as one beats a path to a banker's doorstep one will be taken in and will have to pay the price. So long as you keep on paying the price the banker will smile more broadly because he thinks you know no different. I suggest that farmers should shop around when dealing with banks and bankers. Incidentally I have a brother-in-law who is a banker. I have had many arguments with him.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Many of your best friends are bankers.

Mr. Korchinski: Sure, and I have had arguments on that score. The point I am making is that many bankers will not allow a farmer a farm improvement loan for farm equipment repairs, for example, which I believe are essential to his farming operation. I believe a part that is required for a piece of equipment should qualify for a farm improvement loan. A banker, however, will not tell a farmer this. He will tell the farmer he must obtain a loan at an interest rate of 10 per cent. I suggest that this applies to many things, including fertilizer.

A banker will never tell a farmer that he is entitled, under the provisions of this legislation, to obtain a loan at a reduced rate for these items. I am glad the Minister of Agriculture is here because I believe he has a certain responsibility. He makes so many speeches I wonder how he finds time to be here. I think there is a responsibility on both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance to ensure that the farming community is informed on this subject. Perhaps it is time the minister made one more speech to farmers to tell them that they are entitled to loans for repairs and various other items at a reduced interest rate.

I operate a farm, and when I send in a payment to the bank the banker applies it to the farm improvement loan rather than to my regular loan because that way he receives an additional 3 per cent in interest. Of course I play the game with him. I give him a tongue-lashing. I suggest that if there is to be a campaign in respect of this legislation it should be carried on by the Minister of Finance, because it is his legislation, and I am sure he wants to take full credit for it.

If there is a reduced rate, let the minister go out and sell that to the farmers. Let him tell them where they are entitled to get the reduced rate. Let him tell them of their rights, and what they can put into their banks. Let him send out a few civil servants to instruct farmers on the banking business. Banking has become a tremendous business. What struck me recently was that during the depression years in the farming community, when incomes were low, all the new banks throughout the country were opening up because that was the healthiest time for banks. That is when they flourished. They were making profits, and they were putting up buildings in all the small communities.

All those banks such as Toronto-Dominion, Bank of Commerce, Bank of Montreal, Bank of Nova Scotia—you name them—all have new offices, and these new offices are paid for. When you look at the statistics you find that their profits today are higher than they were ever before. For them to say that they cannot give us a lower interest rate, that they cannot do so with respect to certain sectors of the economy—at a time when we are so concerned about inflation and everybody here badgers the Minister of Finance or badgers the Minister of Agriculture about the cost of living—is ridiculous, because if we did not have to pay such high rates of interest our cost of living would not be so high.

I suggest that this is one area where the government can act very forcefully without injuring anybody. Banks will continue to exist.

Mr. Nystrom: You are a socialist.

Mr. Korchinski: I am not a socialist, I am a realist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: I did not suggest that banks should not be making any profits. Does the hon. member, my friend and my neighbour in Saskatchewan, think for a moment that I would enjoy seeing all businesses closed down? Maybe he would. I like these little communities. They are great places. I myself come from such a little place "numbering 175 hunting dogs." This is the way you describe the size of the population there.

To come back to what I was saying, let me point out that banks would be able to survive even under the difficult conditions and restrictions that the government might impose. I am sure that these are very difficult times for the government. The minister speaks about external problems and external costs. Let me say to him that this is an area in which he can act very forcefully. He can keep the interest rates down. I ask the minister in all seriousness: was it necessary, at a time when we could not sell grain, when many of the farmers were selling out, dropping out of the business, for the banks suddenly to come out with new, flashy buildings, with all this comfort at the expense of the farmers?

Every farmer realized, as he walked past such a building—because he could not go in there to make his payment—that it was his money that was paying for the building. It is not that we begrudge the people who work in these buildings the normal comforts that everybody else has, but the people who constructed these buildings were denying farmers their livelihood in order to have the buildings.

There are times when one is generous, and there are times when not everyone can move as fast as his neighbour or as fast as the Joneses.

I think the Minister of Finance realizes that he can do certain things for certain segments of the economy. Because of the fact that food is so essential, and that everyone is so concerned about inflation, he should be wary of the advice that the Minister of Agriculture is giving him, advice which was contained in his speeches as well as in what he said at meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture when he said that interest rates should go up. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should keep them down.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I just want to put on the record a couple of things to clarify some of the things that the hon. member said. Never have I said that interest rates should be at 12 per cent. We kept farm credit interest rates at 7 per cent for over $400 million in loans last year when all other loans were at a much higher interest rate. The bill that the Minister of Finance is bringing in at present actually cuts the interest rate from what it was the year before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I am sure that the hon. member would want me to correct the implications in his remarks to the House.

Mr. Korchinski: I would accept the fact that the minister did not say 12 per cent. At least we know the rate will not go up to 12 per cent, or above it anyway. This much we know now. At the same time let me point out that he did mention that farmers wanted to be treated the same way as all other segments of the economy are treated, and he did mention the fact that interest rates should be the same as those applied by CMHC.

Mr. Whelan: I did not.

Mr. Korchinski: We have a record of that in the proceedings of the Committee on Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture suggested this in his speeches. I have copies of them stacked up just waiting for me to show them to the minister one day. He suggested—and I will try to paraphrase him—that he does not know how long they can keep the rate at that level. Is he trying to suggest that it was 7 per cent? The former government increased the rate, and the Minister of Agriculture will increase it still more. Can he assure me that the rate will stay at 7 per cent?

Mr. Whicher: No, he will lower it.

Mr. Korchinski: You cannot be sure of anything. I want the Minister of Agriculture to answer me.

Mr. Whelan: We all know that at present the interest rate on farm credit is 8¼ per cent. But we also know that the income of farmers has gone up, especially in the area from which the hon. gentleman comes. At the time when the interest rate was 6 per cent you could not even get rid of your wheat or other cereal grains, vegetable oil seeds, or anything else. The programs we have initiated, and will initiate in the future, will put farmers on the same level as all other people, and farming on the same level as other industries. They will not have to worry about the interest rates they pay once we get our agricultural policy really working.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I can heckle in the middle of these speeches? I did not quite hear the figure given for farm improvement loans. I think the Minister of Agriculture said it was $231 million.

Mr. Whelan: $230.1 million.

Mr. Rose: Could the minister tell us over what period that was?

● (2040)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, for the calendar year 1971, $147.4 million, for the calendar year 1972, $181.1 million and for the calendar year 1973, $230.1 million.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, since I am a bit confused about the recommendation of the Governor General which stated that the limit, from 1974 to 1977, was going to be something like $60 million plus another $10 million, I wonder if the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Agriculture could explain how this figure has been exceeded, as it has according to the figures given by the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. gentleman has to look at the limit on the present act as $1.1 billion for a three year period, so it is within the limits.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I have one further observation. With respect to the figure I got of $31 billion, according to the hon. member for Bruce, as the total amount loaned by the chartered banks, I think it is fair to point out that farm improvement loans amount to less than 1 per cent of the total lending. This indicates support for the position that someone took this afternoon, that it is frequently difficult for a person applying for a small business loan or farm improvement loan to get it from a bank.

This program covers less than 1 per cent of the total borrowing of the country. I am certain that many of the people who are borrowing are farmers, small businessmen and fishermen, and they are not borrowing under this particular plan but under personal note, or some other plan encouraged by the banks which bears a higher rate of interest.

I have one further observation, Mr. Chairman. A number of people in my riding, and certainly in others too, are very interested in the new trout farming industry. In order to get start-up funds or expansion funds, if they apply for fisheries improvement loans they find that they do not qualify because, according to the Fisheries Department, they are farmers, and when they apply under the farm improvement loans scheme they do not qualify because they are fishermen. Has any consideration been given to this new and growing industry?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think there has to be some way that they qualify under one or other, or all three acts. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will bring some details to my attention so that we can look at the problem, which I think is an administrative one.

Mr. Rose: I will be pleased to do that, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the minister for his offer. Unfortunately, we have been through this a number of times, but not with the Department of Finance. As someone observed, these people are neither fish nor fowl and that is their problem.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It might be a bird of a different colour! We will look at it.

Mr. Whelan: Water fowl!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister in listening to this debate that has taken place for several days—

Mr. Whelan: That is too long.

Mr. Peters: It may seem long to the minister but the point I am—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A point of order, Mr. Chairman. Since I have my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, who is in fine form, here tonight, I wonder if the hon. member would specify which minister is interjecting.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am particularly interested in the agricultural aspect of this, so I was not really reflecting on the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Agriculture has been listening to the debate, but it would seem that all he got out of it is the fact that horsepower has increased in farm machinery and that larger equipment is necessary. Surely he has missed the whole point, Mr. Chairman. The reason farmers have to buy bigger farm equipment is because they cannot make a living off the land these days the way they could 20 years ago, and so they have had to expand.

The minister indicated that more fertilizer will be used this year, but he must know that that is not necessarily so. Less than the optimum amount of fertilizer will probably be used because it is so expensive. In order to get satisfactory results in Canada, fertilizer should be applied for a number of years. This has not happened, so the maximum production cannot be achieved.

The minister must be aware that the input to agriculture has been higher than ever before. Every time there is an increase in price he finds himself faced with expenditures beyond those he had anticipated.

A good example of this is the changes that took place in the Ontario dairy industry. As soon as farmers were able to enter the industrial milk market where there was a guaranteed price, they had to buy bulk tanks and a new type of milking machine. They also had to upgrade their buildings. Usually they had to get a loan, which ate up any profit from the expanded operation.

I hope the minister is not as satisfied as he appears to be that there is no problem in the farm machinery industry. I hope he is not satisfied that there is no problem in the fertilizer industry. I hope he is not satisfied that there is no problem in the binder twine industry, the fencing industry, to say nothing of the basic problem that faces all farmers, the cost of land. Whether it is purchased outright, or through ARDA, or rented, it is still expensive. I hope the minister is not satisfied that the inputs have to be left alone and that, if we pass this legislation, a satisfactory solution has been found for agricultural producers.

I have found that farmers are in almost the same category as workers, Mr. Chairman. When the cost of production rises or the worker's cost of living rises, then either his standard has to be reduced or his production has to be reduced. The farmer has to curtail either his production or standard of living, or he has to borrow more money.

I suggest that the problem is not so much one for the Minister of Finance as it is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Fisheries should also be involved, I think, and so should the minister responsible for small businesses. The reason the Minister of Finance is being asked for this kind of legislation, and the reason the government is answering the call of the farmer, the small businessman, and the fisherman to increase the amounts of the loans, is that in order to stay in business these people must modernize; they must put more in to get more out.

As production costs increase we must raise lending ceilings to enable farmers to keep up and extend production. It is the case with almost every commodity, but whereas farmers have increased their production, their returns have decreased. Take the case of grain, a matter with which I am not overly familiar. The western farmer found that the price of his product rose almost overnight from $1.95 to about $6.00; yet the futures market in the last two or three months has dropped $1.50. If the farmer operates in a totally uncontrolled free enterprise market, he must consider carefully any move to increase production because, unless the government guarantees a floor price for his product, he may find that he is overproducing, that his return has decreased, but his expenses have not been reduced in line with his decreased return.

I am sure the minister does not really believe that it is enough to provide extended financing to farmers to enable them to expand their operation. He does not believe, I am sure, that farmers across Canada are using enough fertilizer. I am sure he knows that many farmers growing wheat in western Canada were only able to keep production costs down by using less than the optimum amount of fertilizer. I am also sure he knows that many farmers who grew corn in his area and sold it for reasonable prices were not applying adequate fertilizer.

In addition, I am sure he knows that although one segment of the farm industry has grown, and although it could be claimed that the price per horsepower of machinery has not increased significantly, this does not correct matters.

The government has advocated, in the last five or six years, the acquisition of larger farm units. It has suggested that we need to develop viable agricultural farm units.

[Mr. Peters.]

This has meant that the farmer has had to buy his neighbour's farm. He has bought more land and expanded. Because he has expanded he has had to increase the machinery horsepower at his disposal. Unless the minister pays attention to methods of reducing input costs he will be doing the farmer a disservice. Only in that way can we strike a reasonable balance between the price at the farm gate and the price to the consumer. If we do not lower input costs, which include the cost of borrowing money, we will not have served well the farmers of this country.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I want to make some comments about the Small Businesses Loans Act. First, I suggest it was well worth while to include as lending agencies the Treasury Branches of Alberta. Also it was good to raise lending ceilings, for obvious reasons. It has been my experience, from talking to borrowers and bankers, that the Small Businesses Loans Act has not been used as much as it might have been.

It seems people genuinely interested in getting a small business loan have been talked out of it, and put off, by the bank manager, who obviously is pushing other types of bank loans which carry a higher rate of interest. I wonder if the minister could comment on this. If this practice is to continue, this legislation will be of doubtful benefit. I think the small businesses loans provisions should be used far more than they have been hitherto. Can the minister comment on this? Are these funds really available, or is the banker using a legitimate excuse when he pushes other types of bank loan?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we have just issued a quarterly release having to do with these three programs. During the last quarter of 1973, $8,506,000 odd was lent under the Small Businesses Loans Act, compared with $7,459,000-odd in the same period of the previous year. The volume is still up, and money still appears to be available. The total figure for last year was $30.3 million.

Mr. Hargrave: I do not doubt that the volume of loans has gone up. In view of prevailing business conditions in the last year and a half, if the total had not gone up something would be seriously wrong with the program. I still maintain that the program is not being used to its fullest extent. Perhaps there is something inherently wrong in the approach that is evident when the borrower goes in and talks to the banker. I think more use should be made of the program.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think the program announced by my colleague, and now before the House, the Federal Business Development Bank, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, should diversify and decentralize these services across the land.

We are adding the management counselling service. One of the best pieces of advice I suppose one could give a businessman is that this legislation is available on a decentralized basis. I think the hon. gentleman's comment was relevant.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, I want to add to the comments made earlier by my colleague and, hopefully, hear the minister's response. I congratulate him for improving the Small Businesses Loans Act, an act first brought in by the government headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. My concerns are similar to those of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. Businessmen in my constituency are not aware of the provisions of the act or, if they are aware of them and approach the banks, they are, in the words of my colleague, "put off". The minister suggested that decentralizing the activities of a certain government department will help to correct this condition. I am sure the minister knows, from dealing with businessmen and others, that people in this country are under the impression the federal government is far too centalized, far too big and, once you start dealing with it, far too bureaucratic.

Therefore, they are not at all willing to come to the government looking for assistance, if for no other reason than it runs against the grain of the free enterprise system and those involved in small business in this country.

I wonder if the minister can comment on the situation, which I am sure he will admit exists and on whether, as part of the condition in which the government enters into agreement with the banking institutions across this country, it might be made mandatory for these banking institutions, which have just reported record profits, to advertise and get out and push this act as one of the services they are providing in co-operation with the government of Canada. I wonder whether the minister would comment on that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I agree with the thrust of the hon. member's remarks. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the new federal development corporation will have as part of their mandate within the proposed statute, decentralization of functions of this type of government service. I agree with the hon. member. I think there has been too much centralization.

When I was Attorney General of this country I decentralized the Department of Justice. I opened regional offices across Canada. There is now one in virtually every provincial capital to bring the services of the federal government and parliament closer to the people. I will ask one of the page boys to bring a little pamphlet I have here to the hon. member. We can stock him up with it. It is published by the authority of the Minister of Finance and that other great institution, Information Canada. It is entitled Small Business Loans and is in two languages. Every bank in the country has this on the counter.

Mr. Gillies: At least under the counter.

Mr. Marshall: They hide them in Newfoundland.

Mr. Korchinski: Does it have your picture on it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I knew the cynical member for Mackenzie when he was a bachelor.

Mr. Korchinski: Those were the days!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to assure him that these pamphlets are available in the banks of this country without the minister's picture, and with no signature. I am prepared to send this over.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few general comments. This will allow the minister to relax somewhat because I will not be confronting him with direct questions. Anyway I do not think he would be ready this evening to implement the suggestions I will be making to help farmers and small businessmen in Canada.

I am one of that group who grew up in the small business world. I even have a small farm. It is big in land mass, but small in turnover and profit. I became a politician through the many experiences I gathered going to the bank and convincing my banker that he should make me another loan.

It usually happens in this way. You have an idea. You think it is great. You think it is going to make you rich. You go to your banker and tell him it will cost $15,000 to get you going. Your name is pretty good and your face looks alright, so the banker says he has the authority to loan you $15,000. Three months later you go back to the bank and tell your banker that if he wants his $15,000, you need another $25,000 because that is what you need to make this thing really viable.

The banker phones the regional office in a distant city and gets the approval to loan you another $25,000. Usually a small business makes a profit after the first year. This is contrary to big business. They do not make profits for generations.

In April of the following year, the small businessman invariably goes to the bank to borrow money to pay his income tax. He then wonders where all the profits went. At that time the bank knows the chances of success. The banker then decides whether you should close your doors or whether he should loan you the additional money.

I started quite a few small businesses. A lot of them are still going. In fact, some of them are now big. I ended up with very little for my share. Most of them were pretty sensible and pretty successful. I have analysed some of the programs the government has for helping small businessmen and farmers. I wonder about the reasons for some of these programs, and whether these people would not be better served with other programs that would make more sense.

Earlier this year I listened to the Minister of Agriculture talk about the farm succession legislation. In order to preserve the family farm he wanted to be sure that the poor son taking over the farm did not have to pay income tax on the capital investment. When I listened to the minister I wondered whether the act was designed to preserve the family farm or to expedite the death of the farmer.

The Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Act are wonderful. I want to congratulate the minister for making the Farm Improvement Loans Act more sensible, more in tune with our time, more in tune with inflation, and a little more meaningful. I am certainly in favour of it. It is all we have to work with. However, I wonder whether it would not better serve these people if the act, more ambitiously and in a more meaningful way, provided farmers with a means of getting their product to market.

Farmers do not like big statistics tables. They use practical statistics. I came across a statistic the other day which stated that 20 per cent less boxcars were loaded in Canada in 1973 than in 1972, and that in 1973 the production of alcohol in Canada went up by 15 per cent. That proves only one thing: There were more people loaded in Canada last year than there were boxcars! Did I miss something?

An hon. Member: Five per cent.

Mr. Oberle: Was it 5 per cent? It does not make that much difference. I think we would be better served if our government would provide us with transportation facilities to get our products to market, and storage facilities whereby we could store a year's production of grain.

I learned that in small business you cannot sell from an empty shelf. That is what the marketers have been doing in Canada. When they travel around the world they either sell from an empty shelf or one that is running over. Either they have nothing to sell, or they have to sell at firesale prices to get rid of the production because there is no place to store it.

Instead of all these so-called subsidies, we would be better off if the government provided us with a transportation system. We would also be better served if the government would recognize the need for a proper place for the farmer to sell his product. By that I mean that sooner or later the farmer will have to get paid for what he produces and he will have to get paid a decent price.

Many of my colleagues have touched on statistics regarding other parts of the world. They have pointed out that some people have to pay up to 50 per cent of their disposable income for food, whereas in Canada we pay less than 20 per cent. The time has come when the government must decide whether we should allow the same situation to exist in Canada, or whether we should subsidize the farmer in another way. We hear from the government benches that it is not feasible to implement some kind of wage and price controls in Canada. Well, the farmer in Canada has lived with price controls on his commodities for the past 25 years, yet no one has ever controlled his input cost. I think it is high time we decided either to subsidize the farmer or to allow him to charge for his products what they are really worth.

If we are serious about decentralization and moving away from big and cumbersome urban centres, one way of helping the farmer would be to rid him of the burden of property taxes. After all, people who live in cities are helped to surmount the high cost of urban transport and so on. We could devise various ways of helping to improve the quality of rural life by building community facilities, town halls, roads and so forth. A program of this nature would, in my opinion, be more meaningful than anything the minister has laid before us to date.

Another way of helping farmers would be to make available to them, or to community organizations, or regional districts as they are called in British Columbia, a per capita grant comparable with the grants provincial governments pay in respect of citizens living in municipalities. Farmers and others living in rural areas do not benefit from such assistance, nor do they benefit as a result of proper representation on municipal or regional governments.

If we could find a way of placing the farmer on an equal basis with Canadians who live in towns and cities we would be doing a great deal to preserve the rural way of life with all its importance to our economy. Property taxes are the means by which institutional facilities such as hospitals and schools are paid for. The time to remove this burden from farmers is long overdue, and the federal government could play a definite role in assisting the provinces to take action along these lines. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act is a good act, but its terms are not broad enough—too few people are eligible to participate and, besides, it is not sufficiently regional in character.

Parts of the rural area I represent are in an early stage of development. None of the programs under the minister's jurisdiction are available to those who are just starting out to be farmers—those who derive a major portion of their income from some other source. They are all dreamers. For the time being they are working as lumbermen, or on oil rigs, or in sawmills. But eventually they would like to be full time farmers. An official of the Farm Credit Corporation will, nevertheless, tell such a person that he is not eligible because he is not a farmer. Nor will he ever be, unless we recognize that there is a need for a change in the legislation.

Were it not for the pioneers, the farm community would not be as well developed as it is today. I believe the act should be amended so as to allow such people to share in some of the benefits of these programs. I realise I am digressing at this point, but for the record it must be said that there are many people in Canada desirous of starting a small business, or upgrading their farming activities, who do not have access to these programs because they are not committed on a full time basis.

Mr. Marshall: Strangely enough, Mr. Chairman, there are farming communities in Newfoundland. On second reading I spoke of the benefits of the wonderful loan plans available to farmers, fishermen and those wishing to enter business, or expand their existing businesses. However, I am wondering whether the Minister of Finance can explain why we, in the Province of Newfoundland, cannot get the benefit of such programs and there are many such programs, about 18, I believe, directed to the small businessman, whether he be a farmer, a fisherman, a hotel operator or a storekeeper.

I can only draw attention again to the reports which have been issued in connection with these loan programs. In the period between January and December, 1972, of loans made in the ten provinces amounting in all to $181 million, four only were made in Newfoundland to a value of $6,546. From January to December, 1973, only three loans were made in the Province of Newfoundland to a value of $8,788 out of a total of over $230 million. And I would remind hon. members that there are areas in my province which have great potential for agricultural production, land which can produce almost all the food requirements of the isolated province of Newfoundland.

I have suggested, Mr. Chairman, that the minister carry out an investigation to determine why bank managers, who are responsible to the Canadian public for carrying out this program, are performing that task in such a way as to produce figures of the kind I have drawn to your attention, with far fewer of these loans going to the province of Newfoundland than to any of the other provinces of Canada.

Hon. members may care to look at the latest report of the activities carried out under the Small Businesses Loans Act. In the period from October to December, 1973, only two loans were granted in Newfoundland amounting to $50,000. From January, 1973, to December of the same year, six loans were granted in the amount of $77,000. And back in 1972, five loans were made to the amount of $58,000. Something has to be wrong, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the minister has received representations from other members of the House, beside myself, pointing out that these loans are not being directed to Newfoundlanders in anything like the proportion allocated to other Canadians. I need hardly add I have no wish to deny to other Canadians the advantages they may derive from this, or similar legislation.

The fishing industry is the mainstay of the Newfoundland economy. But even when it comes to loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act we in Newfoundland are at the bottom of the scale when compared with other coastal provinces. In the period from October to December, 1973, only 14 loans were granted in an amount of $35,000, a sum which does not even reach the maximum figure which the amendment to the act seeks to establish. Even the province of Prince Edward Island, in which the agricultural industry is of major importance, secured 40 loans in an amount of nearly $90,000. In that province, in the period from October to December, 1973, there were 40 loans amounting to $89,000, and in 1972 there were 32 loans amounting to $59,000.

I am hoping that the Minister of Finance, even though he does not listen to the appeal we are making, will realize that something is wrong. I suggest again that this is the fault of the agents who are making these loans, and they are in effect the managers of the branches of the chartered banks. They could not care less for Newfoundlanders. Somebody has to give them a slam over the head, or a kick in the behind, to remind them of their responsibility to Canadians. I hope the minister will take my words of advice and direct that this action, so necessary to the people of Canada, is taken.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I'll tell you what we are going to do. I'm going to send Claude Passy here, who is chief of the guaranteed loans administration, down to St. John's on Wednesday to find out what's going on. However, in respect of fisheries the provincial fisheries loan program guarantees loans at 3½ per cent. That is a highly subsidized program and it is pretty hard to compete with that type of subsidization. I realize that fishing is an important industry in Newfoundland, perhaps the main industry as the hon. member has said, and I understand his concern.

In terms of the Small Businesses Loans Act I cannot understand the figure being so low in Newfoundland. I cannot understand there only being two loans in the amount of about $50,000 for that period the hon. member mentioned. Mr. Passy will be going down on Wednesday to find out what's going on there, but I might make a suggestion to the hon. member that we both have a duty to try to publicize this federal program in Newfoundland, and I hope I have his co-operation.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two very brief comments in connection with the amendments to the bill as they relate to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The increase in the ceiling on loans from $25,000 to $50,000 will be particularly welcomed in the west, as well as the fact that there is no restriction in respect to the use of the money as between land and machinery. I know of many instances when farmers would have welcomed the opportunity to borrow up to $50,000 for the purchase of land, but because they have been tied up with the Farm Credit Corporation they were not able to negotiate a further loan from that source. This will be of considerable help.

One thing that has been brought to my attention from time to time, and this was referred to by the hon. member for Mackenzie and others, is the fact that bank managers seem to discourage the borrowing of money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It has been brought to my attention on a number of occasions that when a farmer goes into a bank to borrow money, by the time the manager is through talking to him there are so many obstacles in his way that he borrows the money on the bank's regular plan rather than taking advantage of the lower interest rate available under this act.

As the minister has suggested, it is important that we as members advertise this program, bringing it to the attention of the people concerned. As was suggested by the hon. member for Mackenzie, we should bring the provisions of these acts to the attention of the farmers. Goodness knows, the minister travels from coast to coast and makes I don't know how many speeches a week. As a matter of fact, notes on speeches sent out by the minister's office cross my desk with as much regularity as the daily newspaper from my own constituency.

I would suggest to the minister, when he is speaking around the country, that he point out to the farmers that they can utilize the provisions of these acts. He should go into detail rather than just talk in generalities, as he did in respect of the savings to farmers as a result of changes in the Income Tax Act. He promised to circularize a list of these savings among members, but as yet that has not been done.

I hope that active steps will be taken by the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues to publicize these programs, and perhaps to bring to the attention of the bank managers that it is their responsibility to encourage borrowing by those eligible under these provisions.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I think there are one or two points that should be cleared up, some of which were touched on by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I should first like to know what constitutes a major repair. Will this be open to debate between the borrower and the manager of a bank, or is there to be a certain figure established? Having regard to the $50,000 which an individual can borrow in respect of land and machinery, does this mean that an individual can borrow up to $50,000 to be used entirely for the purchase of land, or can it in turn be used entirely for the purchase of machinery?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer those two questions very quickly. Major repairs will be defined by regulation as over $400 when this bill receives the approval of this House and the other place. In respect to the second question of the hon. member, the $50,000 can be used in any way within the purview of this act. The sub-limits are deleted.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to congratulate the minister for proposing amendments to this act. One thing that appeals to me is that for the first time this will allow businessmen to enter the money market with the expectation of a certain amount of government assistance. One thing loans under this act are to be used for is the acquisition of land necessary to carry on. At first blush it looks as though this measure might enable the Toronto Northmen, for example, to acquire a football playing field and thus frustrate the desires of the minister's colleague in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

There are a couple of anomalies that have struck me. Several days ago Bill C-20 was introduced to set up the Federal Business Development Bank under the aegis of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. According to Clause 4(1) of that bill the objects are as follows:

> The objects of the Corporation are to promote and assist in the establishment and development of business enterprises in Canada by providing, in the manner and to the extent authorized by this Act, financial assistance, management counselling, management training, information and advice and such other services as are ancillary or incidental to any of the foregoing.

● (2130)

Then Subclause (2) states:

> The Corporation in carrying out its objects shall give particular consideration to the needs of small business enterprises.

I must say I began to be curious because there is no discernible link between this bank which is set up to give assistance to business—as the bill says to give particular consideration to the needs of small business—and the bill which we are now being asked to consider which changes in some respects the Small Businesses Loans Act. I would be pleased if, at the conclusion of my remarks, the minister would clear up what would appear to be an anomaly in the government's approach to small business.

There are other programs which apply to small business. There is a multiplicity of such programs. I shall list some of them. The Federal Business Development Bank, which I have just spoken about, is to take over at least two existing programs.

One is the counselling assistance for small enterprise, the acronym for which is CASE. Another is the business management training program now under the manpower department. It will be taken over by the Business Development Bank. In addition to those two programs there are a few others which are not perhaps widely known to the community. One is called GAAP, the general adjustment assistant program. It was set up to help companies to take advantage of tariff cuts during the Kennedy round of negotiations. It has now been expanded to include all companies which wish to improve their competitive international situation, or which are faced in the domestic Canadian market with stiff foreign competition.

Under the government's program to broaden aspects of GAAP it has undertaken in some cases to become a partner in the GAAP assistance projects and to take a considerable amount of risk in the process.

There is another program called the program for export market development. Under that program the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will provide up to half the cost of forming a consortium of small businesses to trade in foreign markets, as well as some of the initial operating costs. It hopes to get the money back through a share of future sales.

I have outlined just a few programs which apply to small business. One of my colleagues said earlier there were something like 18 in all. I suggest through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister of Finance and to his colleagues that despite the fact that he was kind enough to send to my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, an attractive and concisely articulated pamphlet, this is a pamphlet which never sees the light of the day in any branches of the chartered banks which I have visited, and that the small businessman in this country is confused by the multiplicity of programs administered by a variety of departments, ministers, deputy ministers and departmental assistants. What is really needed is a rationalized approach by the establishment of a department of small business under a minister who would administer all the variety of programs which are directed toward the assistance of small business.

When I say "small business" I am talking about medium or smaller enterprises, and it must be remembered that three-fifths of the people of this country, 60 per cent of the working force, work for medium and small business. In the aggregate this is a large sector of the economy. I think the time has long passed when the people who trade in the market and pass as small business should have their relations with the government recognized through the establishment of a separate department. Lord knows how many different departments and ministers they have had to deal with for a long time. I think they deserve a special minister, ministry or department. Our party has pledged that it will set up such a department when we form the government.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the exuberant members across the way, who dined well earlier this evening, are having a chance to get it all out.

Mr. Chairman, the breakdown of loans granted in the various provinces during the period January, 1973, to December, 1973, shows that there is no coherent approach to the manner in which the federal government gives assistance to small business. For example, in the provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland there were during that period 163 loans for a total of $1,605,000. That is for three provinces. That compares with $12,587,290 in the province of Quebec, $6,324,986 in the province of Ontario, and $5,268,859 in the province of British Columbia, the three richest provinces in this country. I suggest that there is no per capita justification for this discrepancy.

I am not suggesting that there are as many small businesses in the Atlantic provinces as in the other three provinces, but I do suggest it appears, as several of my colleagues have pointed out, that perhaps the government has not done as efficient a job as it might in making small businessmen aware of the facilities and services available to them.

It may very well be that the proper approach, as I have suggested, is a department of small business. I urge this as a consideration for the minister. These are all my remarks except that I would like an explanation from the minister concerning the apparent anomaly I mentioned at the beginning, that is, the connection or lack of it between this bill and the business development bank measure which was introduced a couple of days ago.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to respond. The difference in the scope of this bill will become more apparent when the new Federal Development Business Loans Corporation gets underway. It is meant to split off the Industrial Development Bank, as the hon. gentleman knows, from the Bank of Canada. It will be a more active concern than the Small Businesses Loans Act, which has merely a guarantee function for the chartered banks and other financial institutions. The Federal Business Development Corporation will be making larger loans, and loans of longer term. It will be making loans involved with perhaps an equity participation in the interests of the small businessman.

I recognize, as does my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that there must be co-ordination between these loan programs and the information programs for small businessmen. The decentralization under the Federal Business Development Corporation, and the field staff of Industry, Trade and Commerce throughout the country will be co-ordinating these programs under the management counselling service of the department. I think the hon. gentleman's points have a lot of merit, and the Federal Development Corporation will try to meet them.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, would the minister agree that what he has just said goes at least part way toward meeting what I contend, which is that there is a demonstrable need perhaps to put these under one separate department, and perhaps a separate minister?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): One could have a separate department for youth, one for sports, one for small businesses. But I will say this to the hon. member: I agree that the small businessman has a legitimate grievance in this country. He has seen that big government deals with big labour and big business, and he really does not have a segment of the government looking after him. The hon. member mentioned that 60 per cent of employment in this country is supplied by small business, that is, by firms employing around 100 employees. He is quite correct in this—they are the ones that make up 60 per cent of employment in this country.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that in the area of the country I represent government loans, no matter how generous, work against that part of the country. The effect of these loans has tended, over the years, to depopulate that region. You still have to pass the banker's test to be able to qualify under this legislation; and the more generous the loans are, the more generous the government programs are, the easier it is for established persons to take advantage of them to the detriment of the younger fellows trying to get into business. I would like to see the government consider some scheme to induce younger people to take part in those programs.

I think that more stress should be put on character, and a little less stress on collateral. I am thinking of a situation where a young chap could get four or five of his neighbours to sign a statement saying that he is of good character, and this would be all that was required when he approached a bank manager for a loan.

This $50,000 limit is very welcome. I would just like to point out that now farmers are dealing with very large sums of money. One hopper car of flax returns about $35,000 to the producer. There has been some talk about box cars in the House. I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture could tell me whether the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board was expressing government policy when he suggested that farmers buy 4,000 hopper cars out of their proceeds in the Wheat Board.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to respond briefly to the hon. gentleman. I agree with him. A generation ago bankers, both in towns and in the rural parts on the country, used to lend money on the strength of good character rather than on the amount of collateral. I think they are getting a little cozy on the collateral and rely more on how big his barn is, and such things that add up to quantity. When my colleague and friend, the Minister of Agriculture, brings in amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act, the hon. member will find that this is part of the tone of that bill.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, while this bill is intended to take into consideration the inflationary tendencies which have been evident for a little while, it seems to me that it is virtually out of date before it can be implemented. I know this is not new—it has been said before.

There are a couple of other weaknesses in the bill, as I see it, and one of them as has been pointed out by the last speaker from the opposition is the lack of inclination on the part of banks to consider properly the type of individuals who apply. There is the fact that banks are not obligated to accept all applications for farm improvements, fisheries improvement or home improvement loans, and to forward them to the government. The government therefore has no idea how many loans the banks may have declined to make. Therefore the principal behind the loans is not being properly exercised by the banks, and the government does not necessarily know what is going on under the provisions of this act.

In the community in which I live it happens that there was a bank manager who said that under no circumstances would he make home improvement, farm improvement, or any other comparable type of loan because of the difference that existed between interest rates on the free market and interest rates under government guarantee on this type of loan. What policy does the government have in mind so that it will know how many loans are refused, what type of loans are refused, and what banks are refusing to make loans, because perhaps their earning opportunity may be restricted by the ceiling on interest imposed under the act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): One of the advantages of this program is that it does not have a great deal of bureaucracy tying it up. If we are going to get a list of every refused application, the implementation of the provisions under the act would be much slower, and the whole process more cumbersome. I suppose that the best way to know what is going on in terms of refused applications is for members, when they are approached by their constituents regarding refused loans, to inform me of these complaints, and I will make inquiries directly from the bank concerned to find out what the reasons were for the refusal. I am prepared to do that on a continuing basis.

Mr. McCain: This is a statement which needs a great deal of publicity, because I want to emphasize again to the minister that a bank manager in New Brunswick utterly and totally refused to make home improvement or farm improvement loans because he said that the interest discrepancy was such that his little branch could not afford it, and that even the parent bank could not absorb it. He made great excuses, but no loans. Without some reasonable obligation imposed upon the bank, this is not going to work.

Another thing that I would like to point out is that if one were in the feed business for instance, in 1970, one might have been in real business, but a man who is in the feed business today who is not selling $1 million worth of feed is not selling very much. If a man is in the automobile business today and does not have a $1 million turnover, he is probably not doing very much. It seems to me that this particular aspect of small business loans is not realistic in the light of today's normal sales and that $1 million will not make many sales for small businesses.

This bill is pretty restrictive. Unless the next bill which will divorce IDB from its present parent is very effective and includes the business structure from $1 million up, on a much better basis than in the past, there will be a gap here. I implore the minister to try to create some kind of communication between the applicant, the bank, and the department so that there cannot be discrimination by individual bank managers against those who make applications for any of these loans.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think a better way is not to build up bureaucracy but to have the individual member of parliament, when he recieves a complaint from his constituent, bring it to my attention and I will get in touch with the bank concerned. That is what I do, and it is the general policy of all chartered banks to promote these guaranteed loan programs. There may be a manager of a bank who is not implementing that policy and, if so, I would like to know about it. That is our business as members of parliament. I would be glad to hear the specifics in the case mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman - I have a question about the appeal. Is this going to be the only type of appeal that the applicant will have?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not really an appeal, Mr. Chairman. A bank has jurisdiction to make, or not make a loan, but I would like it drawn to my attention if an individual bank manager, in the opinion of a constituent of the hon. member, has not treated him fairly. I would be prepared to look into that for him.

Mr. Towers: I have a further question, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the small business loans. Is this going to allow for the operation of the business, or is it strictly for the purchase of property and machinery?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not for working capital, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Barnett: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but the interpretation was not keeping pace with you and I was waiting to hear you call clause 9. Before I could get to my feet I heard you call clause 10. Under the circumstances I should like consent to deal with clause 9, which has to do with fisheries.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Do hon. members agree to revert to clause 9?

On clause 9.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I realize there was some reference to the proposed amendment to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act in the general discussion under the Farm Loans Act, but I thought the point I should like to raise could be more appropriately dealt with whilst dealing with the specific proposal to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

I have one or two questions which I should like to address to the Minister of Fisheries, but as he is not here I will put them to the Minister of Finance. The question of the applicability of the assured lending program under the act for use by fishermen in re-financing loans that they already have, has been raised before.

Generally speaking, as I understand the operation of this act, the lender, in effect, requires a chattel mortgage on a fishing vessel even though there is an assured loan. I have never been able to understand why a fisherman, who may have had an unfortunate financial transaction, should not be able to take advantage of the assured lending program which this act provides, in order to refinance his boat under more favourable terms which he may be able to secure through a bank or credit union.

If the minister would turn his mind to some earlier discussions on this subject he would recall the concern expressed by the hon. member for Skeena and myself. Long before this act was passed, the fishermen of British Columbia in many cases were almost perpetually in debt to the fish processing and manufacturing companies because of the type of lending agreement which tied them to those companies.

Since we are now opening up this act I should like to ask the minister whether this matter has been under consideration, and if the regulations will be changed to give more flexibility to this program, so that fishermen who wish to get out of an unfavourable agreement through refinancing, can do so under this program.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the legislation, of course, is to facilitate and encourage by direct financing and private lending, term loans for fisheries improvement. That is the way the guarantee functions under the bill. Refinancing of existing debts or working capital are not eligible under this bill, or the farm improvement loans bill or small business loans bill. I will look at it and get in touch with the hon. member privately, but certainly it is not covered under this program.

Mr. McCain: I would like to ask the minister if he has any influence with the banks so that working capital loans could be considered as separate and apart, and would not be influenced by an improvement loan under this act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this bill does not provide any accommodation for working capital.

Mr. McCain: If the bank, having made the improvement loan, reconsiders the working capital loan which it may have made to the operator and is inclined to downgrade the amount it is prepared to lend to a businessman or fisherman for operating purposes after having made the improvement loan, is this still the case?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman, that is a separate loan. There is no way we could exercise leverage over the bank in that case.

Mr. McCain: Do the best you can.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You bring the incident to my attention and I will.

Mr. Barnett: The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte raised the question on which I thought the minister was confusing working capital and capital for construction of boats. I am not suggesting that we enter into a situation where it should include working capital. I agree with the minister on that point, but a few moments ago the minister said that this parallels the Small Businesses Loans Act and Farm Improvement Loans Act. If I recall correctly, the Farm Improvement Loans Act was the first of the three to be enacted. Perhaps the people in the department naturally may have felt it desirable and simpler to create a parallel piece of legislation as it applied to fishermen.

I may be wrong, but I do not know of any situation in the farm industry which parallels the situation I have tried to outline in the fishing industry. I have heard farmers say they are owned by the bank, but I have not heard farmers suggest that they are owned, for example, by Canada Packers. As far as I know, Canada Packers is in business on the prairies. That firm, so far as I know, has never been in the habit of financing the capital requirements of beef growers. I may be wrong. In British Columbia there is an organization parochially known as B.C. Packers. I mention these two firms, not to single them out, but to point out that there has been in existence a different basic practice in the industry. To say arbitrarily that the Farm Improvement Loans Act—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must inform the committee that we must work in accordance with the rules. Either I should see the clock at ten o'clock, or not see it. Does the House consent to continue?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Barnett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I thought I heard you call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Barnett: Am I to assume that you were going to rise and report progress?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if that assumption is correct let me say that I have some further questions I wish to address to the minister on the subject of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, and I would be quite prepared to do so if the House were to continue sitting in committee.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the House might be willing to accommodate the hon. member for a few minutes because, unless I mistake the mood of the House, there is a general feeling that we might dispose of this matter tonight.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree that we not see the clock and that we revert to clause 9?

On clause 9.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to sitting for a little while but I do not want to impose on other hon. members. I have two or three questions to address to the minister. I hope, if I sit down while waiting for the minister to reply, that the committee will not disband.

I was making a point with regard to refinancing. The minister said that the bill, as drafted, and the act as operated, were designed to finance new vessel construction through direct lending, and vessel improvement. This raises questions which have arisen in connection with the Fisheries Development Act. That act, as the minister is aware, provides under certain circumstances grants in aid for accomplishing the same purposes as are provided for under this legislation.

The Minister of Fisheries, when discussing the Fisheries Development Act and when dealing with estimates in committee, where this subject matter has also come up, has repeated a number of times that the Fisheries Development Act, so far as it applies to fishing vessels, is designed not to assist fishermen but to assist the shipbuilding industry. He has advanced the argument that if it were not for the grants in aid which apply to small fishing vessels under the program he operates, fishermen on the Atlantic coast would go outside Canada to have their vessels constructed.

I would like to ask the minister whether the operation of this act is designed to assist the fishermen or to assist the boat building and repair industry.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The fishermen.

Mr. Barnett: I am anxious to get the distinction between the two programs. If the minister looks at the report on the money spent under the Fisheries Development Act he will see that the bulk is spent on the Atlantic coast, even though one member from Nova Scotia pointed out this afternoon in committee that the weight of the spending appears to be on the Pacific coast. Under this program are fishermen free if they wish to have their boats built or improved in a non-Canadian yard?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I hesitate to comment on that at this stage, Mr. Chairman, because really it is not within the purview of this particular piece of legislation. The purpose of this legislation is to help the fishermen. I can undertake to discuss this with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and give the hon. member a fully reply, but I am not able to do that tonight.

Mr. Barnett: I will not press the minister for a detailed answer to this question tonight. I realize there may be some responsibilities in this area that are under the Department of National Revenue. However, I would appreciate if the minister or one of his colleagues would undertake to provide me with an outline of how this operates.

I have another question. Is there a rule against the importation of fishing vessels into Canada? I am trying to get a picture of just how this operates in relation to the two programs. What substance is there in the suggestion that, if we did not have a subsidy program, the fishermen would go abroad to get their fishing vessels, whereas with an assured lending program, with a rate of lending somewhat below what might otherwise be available, this is purely a program for the fishermen?

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will give the hon. member that undertaking.

Mr. Barnett: I have one other question I wish to address to the minister.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We are quite willing to be reasonable, to show some progress and try to get some things done around here. However, we do not want to go so long that we lose our two men who have been waiting for the late show. That should be understood.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, one matter that is often raised, not only with regard to this but other programs also, is the unwillingness at times of lenders to approve loans because they can lend money more profitably elsewhere than under the assured lending program because it is restricted as to the interest level. I have had something on that reported to me, and I say this with some regret because I am one of the advocates of having credit unions included in the insured lenders under this program.

I understand that credit unions representing a large number of fishermen have not deemed it advisable to do much lending under this program. In these circumstances I should like to ask the minister whether any consideration is being given to introducing some form of direct lending in cases where official lenders are not ready to make sufficient funds available?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will draw that suggestion to the attention of my colleague, but any such direct lending program would be a matter for the Minister of Fisheries to consider.

Mr. Barnett: Will fishermen be considered eligible for this kind of loan under the proposals for reforming the Industrial Development Bank?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I ask about the business for Monday, without any comment?

Mr. MacEachen: On Monday we shall call item No. 20, the bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan, to be followed by the bill in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The government House leader having announced the business for Monday, does that mean that our discussions earlier this evening about the possibility of not sitting on Monday came to naught?

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. MacEachen: Before I answer that question directly I should mention that before we begin on Monday with the Canada Pension Plan bill we shall deal with the third reading of the loans guarantee measure.

I would reply to the hon. member's question by saying this: I think his idea, in essence, is a splendid one. I should like to extend it and suggest that maybe the House would agree to rise until next Thursday. That would be an improvement on the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is not agreement.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—POSSIBLE OPENING OF MISSION BY SAUDI ARABIA IN OTTAWA AND CANADIAN EMBASSY IN IRAQ

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the question which I asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) on March 12, and his regrettably inadequate and illusive reply, demonstrate all too clearly and painfully the present government's deplorable disregard of the Arab world over many, many years.

At the moment, in what might be called a deathbed repentance, but which I, with my usual charity, will dub an oilfield repentance, there seems to be some slight indication that there is now a tendency in the government to recognize that there is such a part of the international community as the Arab world. Noting that the United Nations General Assembly some time ago added Arabic to the list of official languages at the premier international body, this is a realistic recognition of the fact that some 130 million people in this world speak that language.

But in its dealing with the Arab world, especially the Middle East areas and the oil producing states, the government has shown an appalling coolness and lack of goodwill to people with whom there is no reason for Canadians to be on any terms other than friendship. At the moment, for instance, the only Arab countries receiving CIDA aid are those which have French as their second language. There is apparently no thought of programs for such countries as Jordan.

In this particular aspect the government has stumbled with more than usual clumsiness. After the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) went through a depressing charade of misinformation regarding Canada's status vis-à-vis the Arab oil embargo, there was an obviously hurried and harried decision to seek closer contacts, diplomatic and commercial, with that very important oil producing country, Saudi Arabia. There was even a move to establish contact with the Emirate States on the gulf. I will not reflect upon the decision to have our ambassador in Tehran at this stage.

I happen to know, through many years of contact and appraisal, that Ambassador George is one of our very best diplomats abroad, but a little thought might have decreed that the designation of an ambassador credited to Iran, which is not an Arab state, might not have been the most astute or felicitous move.

But the major blunder, oversight, slight or affront is the government's obvious panicky decision to open a mission in Saudi Arabia before establishing one in Iraq. Of course we should be in Saudi, should have been there long ago, but we need not have affronted the Iraquis in the process. Iraq has had a well staffed mission with two prestigious ambassadors in Ottawa over a period of many months, but the government has refused to open a mission in Bagdad.

With my colleagues, the hon. members for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) and Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), I spent 10 days in Iraq and saw at first hand the opportunity for close and more meaningful commercial, cultural and social contacts between our two countries. I saw, too, the representatives of other nations "beating us to the punch" in making meaningful arrangements with Iraq.

I think it most unfortunate, highly irregular and totally unwise to denigrate Iraq by placing in a lower category the opening of a Canadian embassy in Bagdad, after that in Jiddah. Our position is doubly embarrassing when, as I am informed, Saudi Arabia has no early intention of opening a mission in Canada or accrediting its Washington ambassador to Ottawa. We are thus out of alignment in an important sense with both countries.

This reveals not only a low priority for the Arab Middle East, a lack of appreciation of the area to Canada, but also a diplomatic blunder which puts the minister in charge of our foreign policy in the same inept and insensitive category of most of his colleagues, leading us from mistaken judgment to worse in the domestic field.

● (2220)

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising the question of Canada's representation abroad and, in particular, our policy in this respect toward the Middle East.

The government has carried out a policy of expanding Canada's activities abroad in as orderly a manner as is consistent with this country's rapidly evolving and growing interests in the international community. Quite naturally this program of continuing expansion requires increased human and financial resources; expenditures must be controlled and the program necessarily must be phased over a period of time.

In general, we have tried to program openings on a three-year forward planning basis, reconciling competing demands of all the departments of government active overseas. This planning process is under constant review, in order to account for rapidly changing situations. While we attempt to keep the system as responsive to changing requirements as possible, it is obvious, given the restraints I have mentioned, that we cannot always satisfy every requirement immediately.

Hard decisions must be taken and unfortunately these sometimes involve sacrifices we would otherwise prefer not to make. For many years Canada had four diplomatic missions in the Middle East; Beirut, Tel Aviv, Cairo and Tehran. These posts responded to our interests at the time which were, with the exception of UNEF, much less important than they are today or can be expected to be in the future. Consistent with the evolution of the region and Canada's interests in it, the government has attempted to organize its relations with the area to take new realities into account. Thus in recent years we have opened missions in Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco, and recently announced the opening of one in Saudi Arabia. In addition we have taken steps to establish formal diplomatic relations with all other countries in the region; this is now virtually complete.

Recent events have dramatically underscored the importance of the countries of the region for the international community, including Canada. The energy crisis has given added impetus to our planned expansion of representation in the area. The government has, I believe, acted quickly in this regard.

Priorities were in some cases reordered, and our decision to open an embassy in Saudi Arabia was announced in December. No one would deny Saudi Arabia's pivotal role in international affairs, particularly in energy matters, and thus the urgent necessity for Canada to be represented in the Saudi Arabian capital. I can confirm that a Canadian representative is now in Jeddah and that the Department of External Affairs is actively pursuing the necessary administrative arrangements to complete the opening of a fully-staffed embassy by this fall. Similarly, we are giving active consideration to the matter of opening an embassy in Baghdad, Iraq in the near future. We attach considerable importance to our relations with that country, as we know the Government of Iraq does with Canada. Iraq has had an embassy in Canada for more than a year.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

PENSIONS—RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO CONDUCT INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak tonight on the subject of railway pensions, specifically the government's inertia in resolving the Canadian National Railways' pension problem. In this context I also intend to make mention of Bill C-139, to amend the Pension Benefit Standards Act. This is a private member's bill designed to pave the way for employees of CNR to get the same pension benefits as members of the public service.

[Mr. Turner (London East).]

Since the back to work bill of last summer which ordered striking railwaymen back to work, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has repeatedly assured parliament that the government is studying the plight of the railway pensioners and that the situation is, to quote the minister in an April 1 answer to a question of mine, "under consideration". For almost eight months now the situation has been under review. Only recently the Minister of Labour assured this House that he would be making significant moves in the direction of appointing a commission to go into all aspects of railway pensions.

When does the minister plan to fulfil these commitments? The pension problem is one that will not go away. It must be dealt with immediately. The minister's appointment to Dr. John Deutsch to examine and report on certain aspects of the pension plan is not the way to go about finding a solution to the problem. What is needed in this situation is a committee to look into all, not just some, aspects of the Canadian National pension plan.

It seems to me that any committee or commission would arrive at several conclusions, and should make at least a few of the following recommendations.

First, that all participants in the CN pension plan be entitled to equal benefits, and to this end support should be given for extension of the 2 per cent formula, retroactive to the first day of service, as an objective of future collective bargaining.

Second, that CN pension survivor benefits be equivalent to the public service plan.

Third, that the principle of the cost of living index escalation in CN pensions be on the same basis as pensions payable by the federal government generally, and that this escalation be extended to retired railway pensioners in the same way as it has been extended to other federal pensioners.

Fourth, that the widows of all CN pensioners be entitled to survivor benefits, and that immediate action be taken to provide survivor benefits to widows of members of the 1935 plan.

Fifth, that a full evaluation at regular intervals of the benefits, structure and financing of the CN pension fund be made by an independent commissioner. Such evaluation should pertain as well to the situation facing retired railway pensioners. It would determine the moneys available for the financing of its benefit recommendations and suggest positive measures, where necessary, to keep the fund on a sound footing.

It is time the minister gave a committee of the House the opportunity to make such recommendations, all of which would drastically improve the situation of the CNR pensioners. Or will the government do anything to improve the situation? One has to wonder in view of Bill C-139, a bill which, in fairness to my friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), is one of noble intention.

That bill, which would give the same pension benefits to CNR employees as those received by public service employees has, as is the case with most private members' bills, little chance of passing into law. This is unfortunate because amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act would result in a distinct improvement in CNR pensions. The amendment would remove the CNR from the scope of the act. Such a move, without adding substantially to CNR's annual deficit, would improve its pension plan by providing pensions for its existing and retired employees on a basis similar to that applicable to the public service.

So much for the content of the bill, but the interesting thing about it is the manner in which it has been presented, for here we have one off those rare birds, a government backbencher, introducing a private member's bill with the apparent backing of his entire party. To me this is rather peculiar. After all when a government wants certain legislation passed in parliament, is it not the usual practice for the appropriate minister to introduce it? Is it not true that the government has a much better chance to pass legislation when it is presented in that manner and not via a private member's bill? Is it not true that private members' bills have a notoriously low record of success?

The conclusion one draws from this sham relating to Bill C-139 is obvious. The government does not really want to improve the lot of CN pensioners and, in an effort to cover up this fact and save face, the hon. member for St. Boniface has been delegated to introduce a private member's bill which, however admirable, has little chance of passing. It is indeed unfortunate that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has chosen to confront the entire problem of CNR pensions in this manner. What is needed is sincerity and a fulfilment of those commitments which were made to CNR pensioners. If the best the government can do is this private member's bill, then by all means let us pass it, but I think the Minister of Labour can and should do more immediately.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as has been explained recently in this House and elsewhere, the matter of railway pensions is one under close review by the government of Canada. It is a complex problem, cutting across departmental responsibilities and, since the last round of labour negotiations in the industry, involving a collective bargaining relationship.

As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has said in response to questions in the House on previous occasions, he has had under serious consideration the appointment of an inquiry commission with broad terms of reference to examine both the costs and benefit structure of railway pension plans. However, he did state that he was of the view that the parties, that is, the railways and the various bargaining groups of railway unions, should perhaps be afforded an opportunity to look at the matter of pensions themselves prior to making a final determination as to whether or not he should recommend the appointment of an industrial inquiry commission into the matter.

As you are no doubt aware, Judge Hall, in his arbitration award, reserved final decision on several matters that were in dispute. The most important of these, of course, is the question of job security based on the principle of attrition.

I am sure that members of the House will appreciate that most of the railways and the unions involved are, and will continue to be, very deeply involved in meetings concerning the various studies that have to be made in respect of a job security plan, because they must be in a position to report back to Judge Hall by the end of June, at which time they will have to report to Judge Hall on whether or not they have been able to negotiate an agreement on their own.

From the above one can see that officials of the railways and the unions are heavily involved in continuous meetings with the parties for further discussions on the matter of pensions.

As the minister said on March 11, he has some further information that he is checking into for accuracy, but all of the facts and information have been made available and assessed in depth, and I am sure that the minister will be only too pleased to make a further announcement on this extremely important matter.

The government attaches great importance to the question of pensions in the railway industry. That is precisely why a good deal of thought and consideration is being given to it, not only in the Department of Labour but in other concerned departments such as the Department of Transport and the department of insurance. However, as important as the problem is, it should not be allowed to obscure a number of improvements which have been made recently.

As the Minister of Labour has stated, the railway pension plan following the last bargaining round has now become among the best in Canada. In some aspects it surpasses the pension plan of the Public Service of Canada. Successive plans have helped to do away with many of the anomalies and inequities that are virtually inevitable in any scheme the size of the railways plan. Everyone is aware, of course, of the tremendous efforts made when the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport and Communications dealt with the question of the CN pension fund in September, 1970. Improvements were made both during and after the time that the committee hearings were held.

Some problems, of course, still exist. The concern of many long service railway workers that the improved 2 per cent formula should have been applied for since prior to 1956, is an example. However, we are confident that, with the help of experienced and responsible railway union leadership, as well as with co-operation from the companies, problem areas can be resolved to the benefit of railway workers.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO HON. LUCIEN LAMOUREUX ON TENURE IN OFFICE AS SPEAKER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would not want this occasion to pass as I understand that today constitutes a record in terms of your length of service as Speaker in this House of Commons. I do not rise simply because of the length of your service but because I do not believe members of this House would want the occasion to pass without reference to it and an opportunity to pay tribute to you.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate you for your services as Speaker of the House, notably for your impartiality and your achievement regarding the maintenance of order and a sense of equity in the House of Commons—

[English]

It has been my privilege to serve under you in this House, although for not a long period of time. Indeed, I suffer the disadvantage that you are the only Speaker under whom I have served in the House. But even so, I feel that I can speak with great confidence and with the full support of members on all sides of the House in expressing gratitude to you for the service you have rendered as Speaker. In saying this, of course, I am not suggesting your service is about to terminate or anything of that sort. I simply want on this occasion to pay my humble respects to you and to express my personal gratitude and, I am sure, the gratitude of all members of the House for your impartiality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join, on behalf of all my colleagues, with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in the greetings that are being extended to Your Honour today. A couple of weeks ago many thousands of people in the United States and Canada were quite excited over the saga of Hank Aaron. They were counting his home runs. The day was reached when he was only one short of Babe Ruth's record, then came the day when he equalled that record, and then the day when he passed it.

When we were meeting on Thursday of last week I was conscious of the fact that we were in the midst of our own saga, that Your Honour was only one day short, and that on Friday you would equal the record of the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux of being in the chair for eight years, two months and 25 days. Today your record is eight years, two months and 28 days. May I point out, also, that unlike the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, you were also Deputy Speaker for a period of time, which makes a total of ten years and eleven months that you have been in the chair. My hon. friend across the way suggests Your Honour has two more years to go. I do not know why the member stops at two years; I believe when we have a good Speaker we should keep him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Without giving the House all the statistics that I enjoyed looking up in preparation for this moment, I should like to draw attention to the contrast between the period between 1922 and 1930 when Mr. Speaker Lemieux set the record and the period during which Your Honour has surpassed it. That other period was one of excitement and drama. During those years there was Beauharnois and the Customs scandal. There were minority governments. In fact, although the Liberals were in power most of the time, they never had a majority by themselves. They were kept going by Progressives and Liberal-Progressives. There was also that interesting occasion when the government fell because a member forgot he was paired and voted when he had not intended to do so!

● (1410)

In my view, the most important thing that happened in that period was when Mr. Woodsworth and a few of his colleagues got the first old age pension bill out of a minority government. This demonstrates what a small party can do, and we are still doing it.

The other point I would like to make is that although Mr. Lemieux was in the chair for eight years, two months and 25 days, during that period of time the House was in session only three years, four months and seven days. This is an indication of how times have changed, for while you have been in the chair, during the past eight years and nearly three months, the House has been in session seven years, eight months and four days, and I suspect that no one knows it better than yourself.

In addition to noting these statistics, I join the Leader of the Opposition in a tribute of praise to Your Honour. Unlike the Leader of the Opposition, I could make comparisons. You are the eighth Speaker under whom I have served in this House. There have been some good ones, but in terms of impartiality, fairness and a sense of humour that enables you to carry this House through, so far as I am concerned, and I think I speak for all members of the House, you are tops.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we are extremely pleased to join both previous speakers in offering all the tributes and congratulations that you so richly deserve. As usual, you have requested that these comments be short. So, I shall stop here and simply repeat that we congratulate you and hope to see you there a long time still.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker—I beg your pardon.

Mr. Sharp: Please continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognized the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have never previously turned down a recommendation on the part of the government that I should speak. I shall not depart from that, now that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has given me his entire support.

I raised this matter a few days ago at the members' prayer meeting. I pointed out that Your Honour had been Speaker longer than anyone else. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says that he has seen eight Speakers in his time. I have seen nine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the same eight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When it comes to statistics, I have them off the record. The hon. member has them on the record before him.

I want to say a word which, at the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, will add to what he said. We have had many experiences over the years. However, one that I shall always recall, without making any identification, is of a Mr. Speaker who during a frighteningly caustic debate rose in his chair and said, "Order. As long as I sit in this chair there is going to be a minimum of decorum in this House". Today and in recent years we have had a maximum of decorum, and I join those who have spoken of your wisdom, wit and of the fact that above all, regardless of difficulties that necessarily follow in the office that you hold, you have been an ornament to the position of Speaker of the House of Commons.

The speakership is not a dangerous position to hold today. It was originally when those chosen at Westminster had to be dragged to the chair. I never found, in my period of office, that anybody had to be dragged in in order to be honoured as the first commoner of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate to the way in which we conduct the affairs of this House that the first tribute should come from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the last from the spokesman for the government. I hope that the opposition in its tributes has recognized, as I have, the fairness and dignity with which you have conducted the proceedings of the House of Commons. You have treated us all as equals, whether we happen to be in a slight majority or slight minority.

May I say to you, Sir, that it is a singular accomplishment to have been Speaker of the House of Commons for longer than anyone else. Not only have you served with length of service; you have served as Speaker of this House with a charm, distinction and fairness that no other Speaker has exceeded regardless of the time he occupied the chair. So, Mr. Speaker, we all want you to continue as Speaker as long as you feel able to serve. I share the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that when we have a good Speaker, we want to keep him as long as possible. Whether this comes about as a result of delay in election, or for another reason, really does not matter. We should like to have you there for as long as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to hon. members that this subject has taken so much time. I will try to exercise the same discretion that I seek of hon. members when they rise on motions under Standing Order 43.

[Translation]

I would simply like to thank the hon. members who have had the kindness to express such generous feelings about me. I have no delusions, for I know perfectly well that these tributes are not directed to my humble person but to the position that I have the honour of occupying as Speaker of this House.

[English]

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said a moment ago that he had served under a Speaker for a certain number of years. I was rather shocked by that expression. I always thought it was the Speaker who served under a House. I have always felt that way and, I might say, at times it has been my impression that sitting under one House or another, or under certain members, has been a rather heavy burden to carry. What has made it easier for the Speaker has been the wonderful co-operation hon. members have extended to him at all times. Obviously, the Speaker is at the mercy of hon. members.

We all believe in the institution of parliament and believe, I am sure, that central to that concept is the speakership. The speakership cannot continue and parliament therefore cannot operate effectively without the support of all hon. members. I have received that support at all times. I am thankful and grateful to hon. members for that generosity, for their tolerance and understanding, and I extend my thanks to them at this time.

I was tempted to rise a few times while hon. members were delivering some very interesting speeches to remind them that long standing tradition prevents hon. members from either criticizing or commending the Chair. I might say that it is easier to apply the first stricture rather than the second. That is why I resisted the temptation and did not interrupt hon. members.

[Translation]

In any case, I thank my hon. colleagues not only for their kind and generous words, indeed too generous, and I pledge as I have done on my first election to the Chair to continue to do my best to serve this House, to serve hon. members and this parliamentary institution in spite of all its intellectual weaknesses, all its human failings which are the lot of each of us, but also most sincerely, with the enthusiasm that hon. members deserve.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PILOTS STRIKE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the continuing work stoppage involving the federation of St. Lawrence River pilots which is having very serious repercussions on Canada's international trade as well as adversely effecting major ports on the St. Lawrence, such as Quebec, Trois-Rivières and Montreal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That the Minister of Transport immediately make a report on motions regarding the steps this government has underway to resolve the dispute, and also to arrange an immediate meeting between himself, his deputy minister and the administrator of Canadian Marine Transportation Administration, with the parties concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

Question No. 108—Mr. Andre:

For each year 1971, 1972 and 1973 (a) how many applications for research grants were received by the Medical Research Council (b) how many research grants were awarded by the Council (c) what was the average amount awarded per researcher by the Council?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) Applications for research grants received by the Medical Research Council: 1971-72, 1,612; 1972-73, 1,531; 1973-74, 1,513; (b) Research grants awarded by the Medical Research Council: 1971-72, 1,072 with respect to applications during the year, plus 419 grants for 1971-72 approved in preceding years; 1972-73, 963 with respect to applications received during the year, plus 420 grants for 1972-73 approved in preceding years; 1973-74. 1,088 with respect to applications received during the year, plus 325 grants for 1973-74 approved in preceding years. (c) Average amount awarded per researcher: 1971-72, $16,900; 1972-73, $18,070; 1973-74, $19,576.

Order Paper Questions

IMMIGRANTS IN RECEIPT OF SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 129—Mr. Mather:

What is the percentage of (a) recent immigrants (1972-1973) (b) longer-established Canadians (1965-1968) who are on some form of welfare?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In granting social assistance, the provinces do not maintain separate records of Canadian citizens and immigrants. The only criterion upon which assistance is granted is that of need. Consequently, there are no records of the number of immigrants receiving welfare benefits.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 132—Mr. Gleave:

1. How many pounds of butter were imported into Canada during the calendar year 1973?

2. From what countries was the butter imported?

3. What amounts were imported from each country?

4. What price was paid for the imported butter?

5. What was the duty paid on the butter?

6. What agency of government was responsible for importing the butter?

7. At what price was the butter sold on the Canadian market?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada, the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian Dairy Commission as follows: 1. Imports of butter into Canada during the year 1973 amounted to 62,635,400 pounds.

2, 3 and 4. A breakdown of these imports by country of consignment for the 1973 calendar year is shown below:

2. Country	3. Quantity (pounds)	4. Value ($)	$ per pound Unit Price
Ireland	11,524,200	6,204,000	.53
Australia	21,134,900	10,611,000	.50
New Zealand	25,588,900	12,217,000	.47
Argentina	56,000	22,000	.39
United States	4,331,400	2,391,000	.55
	62,635,400	31,445,000	.50

5. Tariff item 1800-1 of the Customs Tariff stipulates the rate of duty on butter as: 8 cents per pound, British Preferential Tariff; 12 cents per pound, Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff; 14 cents per pound, General Tariff. Under the New Zealand Trade Agreement, duty on butter from that country is five cents per pound. In accordance with Article 1 of the Australian Trade Agreement, butter from Australia is also admissible at five cents per pound because of the treatment extended to importation of butter from New Zealand.

6. The Canadian Dairy Commission.

7. At the Canadian Dairy Commission support price of 71 cents per pound.

CHEESE IMPORTS

Question No. 133—Mr. Gleave:

1. How many pounds of cheese in total were imported into Canada during the year 1973?

2. From what countries was the cheese imported?

3. What amount was imported from each country?

4. What price was paid for the imported products?

5. What was the rate of duty paid on the imported cheese?

6. Which agency was responsible for importing the cheese or was it imported by private companies?

7. At what price was the imported cheese sold on the Canadian market?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada, the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian Dairy Commission as follows: 1. Imports of cheese into Canada during 1973 amounted to 43,194,900 pounds.

2, 3 and 4. This cheese was imported from the following countries of consignment for the 1973 calendar year at the unit price shown on the table following:

2. Country	3. Quantity (pounds)	4. Value ($)	$ per pound Unit Price
United Kingdom	1,084,700	608,000	.46
Ireland	12,700	9,000	.70
Austria	2,041,800	1,036,000	.50
Belgium-Luxembourg	34,300	24,000	.69
Denmark	7,387,400	5,231,000	.70
Finland	2,444,100	1,049,000	.42
France	3,564,300	3,461,000	.97
West Germany	1,439,400	890,000	.61
Greece	124,400	94,000	.75
Italy	3,084,900	3,445,000	1.11
Netherlands	9,729,700	4,271,000	.43
Norway	1,219,600	742,000	.60
Portugal	336,500	334,000	.99
Sweden	461,200	257,000	.55
Switzerland	4,894,100	4,674,000	.95
Hungary	37,500	21,000	.56
Poland	415,600	115,000	.27
Roumania	272,600	190,000	.69
Japan	900	1,000	1.11
Australia	72,800	49,000	.67
Argentina	754,200	468,000	.62
Total	43,194,900	30,890,000	.70

5. Tariff item 1700-1 of the Customs Tariff stipulates the rate of duty on cheese as: 3 cents per pound, British Preferential Tariff; 3½ cents per pound, Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff; 7 cents per pound, General Tariff. Tariff item 1700-2 provides that Cheddar cheese be dutiable at three cents per pound under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Under the New Zealand Trade Agreement, duty on cheese from that country is one cent per pound. In accordance with Article 1 of the Australian Trade Agreement, Cheddar cheese from Australia is also admissible at one cent per pound because of the treatment extended to importations of Cheddar cheese from New Zealand.

6. All cheese was imported by private firms.

7. No prices on imported cheese varieties are published.

MEDICAL CARE FOR INDIANS IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 235—Mr. Godin:

1. Since Quebec Indians are eligible for medical care and hospital services provided by the Health Insurance Plan to the Province of Quebec, how is the federal contribution collected by the Province?

2. Under the agreement, what amounts were paid by the government each year 1970, 1971 and 1972?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Canada shares the costs of medical and hospital services provided to residents of Quebec and other provinces, including Indians and other native people. Federal contributions in respect of those costs are made under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and under the Medical Care Act. The payments are determined as follows: (a) Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act: Quebec has chosen to opt out of this federal program, with the result that the federal contribution to the Quebec Hospital Insurance Program is made through tax abatement calculated by the Department of Finance and not under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. (b) Medical Care Act: In any year that a province participates under the Medical Care Act it receives a contribution based upon the total costs of all participating provinces and territories providing medically required services to Canadian residents. The total federal contribution is equal to 50 per cent of this total cost and is distributed among the provinces in proportion to their insured populations. Approximately 90 per cent of the contribution is made, based on estimates, in equal monthly installments during the fiscal year. The remainder is paid in the following year when the actual audited costs of all the provinces are known.

2. Payments made or payable by the federal government to Quebec under the Hospital Insurance Program, are as follows: (a) 1970, Actual, $304,219,215. 1971, Estimated*, $343,694,522. 1972, Estimated* $384,359,031.

*For the years 1971 and 1972, only estimated contributions are available at this time. The 1971 contributions will be finalized shortly; as far as the 1972 contributions are concerned, the final contributions will not be known before March or April of 1975.

(b) Payments to Quebec under the Medical Care Act: 1970*, $22,552,600. 1971, $155,069,064. 1972, $172,069,531.

*Quebec commenced participation Nov. 1, 1970.

Order Paper Questions

COST OF PROGRAM TO ENCOURAGE IDENTIFICATION OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 346—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What was the total cost of all advertising of the program to encourage identification of illegal immigrants?

2. What was (a) the estimated number (b) the estimated dollar value of man-hours of work devoted to all aspects of that program by (i) public servants (ii) other persons, apart from those persons involved exclusively in advertising programs?

3. (a) How many new employees were hired, on a permanent or temporary basis, to give effect to this program (b) what is the estimated total cost of their employment?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. $1,277,603.

2. From a staff or personnel standpoint, the Status Adjustment Program was operated essentially within the existing resources of the Immigration Division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Since almost every member of the staff in Canada would have at one time or another become involved in some aspect of the program, it is impossible to provide even a rough estimate of the number of man-hours devoted to the program by permanent staff or the dollar value attached to those man-hours. During the course of the program, however, the Immigration Division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration did find it necessary to engage outside assistance, primarily in the interpreter and translator fields, and this involved approximately 890 man-hours at an expenditure of approximately $3,600.

3. While no new employees were hired on a permanent basis as a result of this program, the Immigration Division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration did engage 22 casual workers primarily clerks and stenographers at an approximate cost of $32,200.

PAYMENT OF TRAVELLING EXPENSES INCURRED BY SPOUSES OF SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 393—Mr. Knight:

1. When Ministers, Deputy Ministers or senior public servants travel on official business, and are accompanied by their spouses, who pays the travelling expenses of the spouse, including (a) transportation, whether commercial airliner, Armed Forces or Department of Transport (b) hotel (c) food (d) incidentals?

2. If the government pays all or part of the travelling expenses of the spouse, is there a benefit recorded in the T4 slip of the official involved, obliging him to pay taxes on the amount in question?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The department or agency concerned pays the travelling expenses incurred only when the spouse: accompanies an official representative of Canada on invitation by a foreign government for reasons of protocol, or provides representational support during official visits to Canada by dignitaries from abroad, or assists in the conduct of a government sponsored conference, e.g. performs host or hostess responsibilities. When such travel is authorized, transportation, overnight accommodation and food costs are reimbursed. Incidental expenses are seldom claimed.

2. Because payment is reimbursement of additional travel expenses incurred by the official in the performance of a service to the government, the amount is not taxable and T4 slips are not issued.

PROJECTS APPROVED BY GOVERNMENT UNDER FLIP IN HAMILTON CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 395—Mr. Alexander:

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 402—Mr. Holmes:

Have there been recent cutbacks in medical research and, if so (a) is the government seeking appropriate advice from the medical scientific community (b) is the government responding to advice from the Medical Research Council concerning funding allocations (c) will the government review its proposed funding to MRC as it will cause considerable hardship to Canadian biomedical research efforts, Canadian medical schools and to the general health of Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Medical Research Council has received increases each year in the funds available to it for the support of biomedical research: (a) The government receives advice concerning medical research through well-established mechanisms which involve input from the medical scientific community. (b) The recommendations of the Medical Research Council are taken into account in arriving at decisions regarding the funding of medical research. (c) The funding of the Medical Research Council is subject to an annual review in which all relevant factors are considered.

Question No. 357—Mr. Rowland:

1. How many persons have been deported under Section 28(1) of the 1967 Immigration Act, as amended November 6, 1972 by Privy Council Order 1972-2502 which denies landing to persons seeking admission as immigrants who are not in possession of an appropriate visa?

2. (a) From which countries did such persons originate (b) how many deportees came from each such country?

3. How many of the persons deported stated that they were seeking entrance as visitors?

Return tabled.

REUNIFICATION OF MAINLAND CHINESE PEOPLE WITH FAMILIES IN CANADA

Question No. 423—Mr. Schumacher:

1. (a) What agreement was signed by Canada with China regarding reunification of mainland Chinese people with families in Canada (b) on what date and by whom was this agreement signed (c) what are the terms of reference of the agreement?

2. How many mainland Chinese have (a) already taken advantage of the program (b) applications pending under the program (c) made preliminary enquiries regarding the program?

3. By city and province (a) where are these people now located in Canada (b) where are those whose applications are pending planning to locate on entering Canada?

4. What investigations are being made to ensure (a) work opportunities (b) financial solvency (c) medical suitability (d) social independence and adaptibility of such people?

5. What is the total projected number of such immigrants by (a) sex (b) age for each year 1973 to 1980?

6. Is the program to be effective on an unending basis?

7. What investigations are made of families in Canada seeking to reunify with relatives from mainland China?

8. What criteria are used for establishing bona fide family relationships both in China and in Canada?

Return tabled.

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order related to my question No. 319 appearing at page 79 of today's order paper as follows:

1. In the Canadian Public Service, excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies, how many women hold positions with salaries above $15,000 annually?

2. What is the total number of persons of deputy minister rank in the Public Service, excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies and, of these, how many are of the female sex?

3. Excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies, what is the total number of Public Servants and, of these how many are (a) male (b) female?

Mr. Speaker, this question has been on the order paper for the last six months. They are very simple questions. The government appears to be neglecting to answer them, perhaps because they do not really care about the status of women in this country.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: We had the answer to that question as of the end of the last session, but unfortunately there was no opportunity for us to table it. The fact that the hon. member put the question down again, revising the date to March 1, meant we had to conduct the inquiry all over again. I should like to point out to him that a thorough search of almost every file is required at a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of approximately $5 for every file. This can be multiplied by a factor of approximately 300,000 public servants.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I would be satisfied to get the results as of the last session, if the parliamentary secretary does have those figures ready to produce.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; three times the parliamentary secretary has stated that the government had answers to questions ready at the end of the last session. I point out to the House that the government had an opportunity on the last day of the previous session, before we began anew, to table them, and they were asked by the opposition to do so.

FINANCE

REASON FOR INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—POSSIBLE ADVANCE OF BUDGET DATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Finance would expect me to ask him a question about the striking increase in the rate of interest charged by the Bank of Canada. Would the minister tell the House in a few words the reason behind this striking increase in the cost of credit? Is it the view of the governor of the Bank of Canada and of the government that there ought to be higher mortgage rates and that the cost of operating small business, for example, should be higher?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the governor of the bank, in raising the bank rate, is reflecting two major causes. The first is the sharply rising bond yields and interests rates in the United States and on the Eurodollar market, which has been the dominant factor pushing up interest rates in Canadian financial markets in recent weeks. I suppose that this world wide increase in interest rates reflects the mounting evidence of the strength of global inflationary forces. A contributing factor in the Eurodollar market has been the number of oil importing countries that have been borrowing in order to finance their deficits to meet the new bills from the oil exporting countries, and whose balance of payments deficits have occurred as a result of the rise in world oil prices.

Turning to the domestic front, the second reason is that Canadian financial markets have continued to be exposed to strong credit demand which has been generated by an exceptionally buoyant domestic economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Looking forward, Mr. Speaker, the market undoubtedly sees a rapidly growing demand for funds to finance continued business expansion in Canada and a demand for government funds.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I must say, in view of the level of our dollar, that it is difficult to see the external pressures so far as the second reason given by the Minister of Finance is concerned. Could the minister indicate precisely what policy, with regard to the growth in the money supply, is associated with this increase of one per cent, which is the sixth such increase in the bank rate during the past year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman looks, as I have, at the figures for the first quarter of 1974, he will see that the banking figures indicate continuing rate of growth in short-term credit outstanding and in the total monetary aggregates. Indeed, in the last three or four weeks there has been a requirement for chartered bank loans of over $900 million. The governor of the bank indicated to me over the weekend that monetary policy will continue to accommodate the rapid expansion in the economy, but that he is concerned about the increase in the monetary aggregates—in other words, the money supply.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of this, as I say, quite substantial increase of one per cent, an unusual increase in the bank rate to take place at one step, and inasmuch as this move must be in line with some general approach by this government, is the minister still saying that the country should have to wait another month before we learn what are the government's intentions with regard to its general policy, and particularly with regard to its fiscal policy? In view of this striking initiative taken by the governor of the Bank of Canada, does the minister still say that we should wait another month to see his budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the budget was delayed until we were able to reconcile the division of the benefits and the burdens of the increase in oil revenues and oil prices across the country. The government is, of course, in general accord with the monetary thrust reflected by the action of the governor of the Bank of Canada, although the setting of the rate is his responsibility and the amount of the rate is, of course, his prerogative. As to the date of the budget, this will be announced in definitive terms in short order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will see the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, then the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and will continue with supplementaries from the hon. members for Don Valley, Middlesex and others. I believe the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has a supplementary and so has the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and then the Chair will see the hon. member for Don Valley.

ADVICE OF MINISTER TO BANK OF CANADA AND CHARTERED BANKS ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my questions are in the same area and are addressed to the Minister of Finance. I should like to know whether or not the Minister of Finance instructed or advised the Bank of Canada to raise their interest rate. I also want to know whether or not he has contacted the chartered banks asking them not to increase their interest rates to Canadians?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, the monetary policy in the first instance is the responsibility of the governor of the Bank of Canada. Under the statute, the Minister of Finance and the government have to be in general accord with the monetary thrust set by the bank, but the details leading to the decision regarding the bank rate remain his responsibility.

In response to the second part of the question, no, I have not been in touch with the chartered banks since the rise in the bank rate was announced. Indeed, two of the chartered banks raised their prime rate this morning.

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO PROTECT PEOPLE FROM EFFECTS OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the increase in the bank rate will not have much effect on corporations because they generate their own capital but will have some effect on consumers, farmers, small businessmen and home builders, is the Minister of Finance contemplating any immediate legislation to protect these ordinary Canadian citizens?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to read the announcements of the two banks which raised their prime rate this morning, but I hope they will continue the policy I urged them to follow a year or so ago, namely that there should be, in effect, a dual tier interest system whereby a preferential rate will be given to small businessmen, small accounts, fishermen, farmers and those regions of the country less favourably disposed in the growth of the economy.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE SUBSIDIZING OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether or not he can assure us that mortgage rates will not be going up and that he will make appropriate changes to set aside some funds at 6 per cent, along with tax changes, to make sure that developers and so on do not take advantage of such a policy, if he is to pursue one?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me not to speculate on interest rates, whether short-term or long-term. In answer to the precise ambit of his question, perhaps he would be good enough to recall the answer I gave to his colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, in which I suggested to him that any subsidization of the interest rate in a tight market would be reflected in higher housing prices.

POSSIBILITY OF LOANS TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Finance.

In reply to a question recently put to him by my colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse concerning the Bank of Canada, the minister said that this bank has not granted any loans to the government in the last ten years. Now, if the Bank of Canada does not grant loans to the government, nor to the chartered banks, even though it has increased its interest rate by 1 per cent, can the minister tell us to whom in fact the Bank of Canada grants loans at a rate of interest 1 per cent higher than it was before?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member states that the Bank of Canada interest rate somewhat sets the rates of interest asked by the banks. As for government loans, I believe he is referring to the provincial governments. If that is the case, there is always the danger of sharing the responsibilities with regard to the debts incurred by the provinces. That is a very complicated matter, Mr. Speaker; it would lend itself better to a public debate or a private one with the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

As the Bank of Canada can grant loans to the provinces only for periods not exceeding six months, and as the provinces cannot take advantage of this because the period is not long enough to reimburse them, I would like to know to whom the Bank of Canada is now lending money at its present interest rate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in principle, in terms of the chartered banks' reserves.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MONETARY POLICY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that there seems to be perhaps some misunderstanding concerning precisely what the government is trying to do with its monetary and fiscal policy, could the minister explain the rationale for increasing the money supply and therefore accommodating business on the one hand, and increasing interest rates therefore discouraging investment. At the present time what precisely is the government trying to do?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the monetary policy set by the bank has as its rationale or reason to increase the money supply at a rate sufficient to accommodate reasonable expansion of the economy but no more.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Minister of Finance. In the circumstances what is the rationale for increasing the domestic rate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the bank rate had not risen in the view of the governor then the monetary aggregates would have expanded too rapidly.

RATES OF INTEREST TO BE CHARGED UNDER SMALL BUSINESS, FISHERIES AND FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that obviously high inflation is making it difficult for small businessmen and farmers, who are an important grassroots segment of our economy, can the minister make a commitment to this House concerning what rates of interest will be charged over the coming year under the small business, fisheries and farm improvement acts, and how much more money will be made available under these programs?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under statute there is a relationship between the rate of interest charged under those guaranteed programs and the prime rate or bank rate—I suppose in statutory terms the rate the government has to pay for money under the treasury bills. I cannot give the hon. gentleman that commitment, but I can refer him to the figures I recited in the debate last Thursday when this House was considering those loans and also to the releases issued by the Department of Finance last Thursday as well, indicating what the rate of borrowing was under these three programs for the last quarter of 1973.

Mr. Frank: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, I would ask him whether he will make every effort to hold the line on those interest rates for the next several months.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes I shall, Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind one other factor which I think is relevant, namely that the rates under those guaranteed programs should be sufficiently attractive to give beneficial results to the fishermen, small businessmen and farmers, and yet be realistic enough to attract the banks under these programs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West will be recognized for a supplementary, after which the Chair will see the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

ALLEGED CONFLICT BETWEEN INCOME TAX CONCESSIONS TO MANUFACTURERS AND EFFECT OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES ON CERTAIN AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, not to diminish the interest in the minister this afternoon, but while he is explaining some of the reasons behind this move, would he direct his attention to explaining to this House the apparent paradox of the government moving in areas favourable in respect of income tax to the manufacturing and processing industries and now increasing interest rates which will apparently affect certain areas of this country and small business in particular?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would be good enough to take into consideration the combined effect of the manufacturing incentive he cited and the policies of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, he will see the combined effect is to render more competitive industries in the Atlantic provinces and western Canada. Indeed, those rates now, combined with the incentives the province wants to undertake, have made possible a potential petrochemical industry in Alberta.

INCREASE IN CORPORATE PROFITS AND DECREASE IN LABOUR'S SHARE OF NATIONAL INCOME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I, too, would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that corporate profits after tax in the past three years have jumped 5.3 points to 12 per cent of national income, while labour's share of national income in the same period has declined 5 points to 70 per cent. If this is so, is it part of the government's anti-inflationary program to allow labour's share of national income to drop 6 per cent in three years while corporate after-tax profits have jumped 79 per cent in the same period?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. gentleman figures to show that over a decade the reverse is true, but I want to say to him that corporate profits in 1973 in this country amounted to $14.5 billion and that in 1974 the intention of reinvesting by business in this country is $18.5 billion; in other words, $4 billion more is being reinvested in this country than business achieved by profits in 1973 and that will mean a larger industrial base, more jobs and more income for the working man and woman in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe for a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

COMPARISON OF PROFIT POSITION OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN CORPORATIONS—SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF TAX CONCESSIONS TO CANADIAN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question again is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would mention that if the minister checks the Bank of Canada figures for the period to which he refers he will find he is quite incorrect. With corporate after-tax profits now running at 12 per cent of total Canadian income compared to 6.6 per cent for corporations in the U.S.A., does the minister still believe it is necessary to continue his liberal tax concessions to Canadian corporations bearing in mind such Canadian corporations now earn more after tax than American companies earn before tax in relation to national incomes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is an accident either that the Canadian economy is in a stronger economic cycle than the American economy. I put the question to him: What does he want; Canadian jobs or American jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

FLUID MILK—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDY TO AID LOW INCOME GROUP

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, whom we are pleased to welcome back from the other place. In view of the fact that during the past 12 months Canadian consumers have had to absorb an increase of 18.6 per cent in the cost of food, and in view of a further announcement of an increase in the price of milk in Ontario and certain other parts of Canada, will the minister consider increasing the subsidy to the producers of milk so that medium and low income people will not have to pay the additional cost the minister feels the producers need?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I make clear that the only thing I was doing in the other place was protecting the interests of members in this place. To answer the hon. member's question, the agreements we signed with the producers contained an escape clause which permits them, if they can show their input profit-cost ratio has gone up, to apply for an increase in the price of milk. Also, as I am sure the hon. member is aware, the government, through parliament, has passed laws which benefit those on low incomes, those on pensions, the disabled, the veterans and those on family allowances.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a supplementary and then the hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister if he will answer my first question: will the minister consider helping to keep down the cost to consumers by increasing the milk subsidy to producers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have just increased the milk subsidy to those producers to whom we have responsibility, namely, industrial milk producers. The ones about whom the hon. member is talking are under provincial jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FLUID MILK—POSSIBLE STEPS TO AVOID INCREASES IN PRODUCTION COSTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister, by way of a supplementary question, what steps the government is prepared to take to keep milk production costs down, especially in the light of the statement of the president of the Borden milk company that we can expect another increase in the price of milk within three months?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would take note of the items to which the president of the Borden milk company referred, he would realize that the reference was to extra cost for plastics, paper containers, etc. that are used in the industry. The Department of Agriculture does not have very much to do with that.

SOCIAL SECURITY

IMPACT OF INCREASED MILK PRICES ON FAMILIES ON CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that there have been two or three increases in the price of milk since the subsidy program was announced last August, may I ask the minister whether he has satisfied himself regarding the impact of these increases in the price of milk on lower income families in this country, and especially on those families that depend on benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all the hon. member knows that such increases are decided by provincial marketing boards. They are the ones who make the decision in this respect. Second, I have indeed looked at this matter and I can confirm to the hon. member that all price increases are making it more difficult for all families. So far as the Canada Assistance Plan is concerned, we are ready to share with the provinces whatever increases in contributions they are willing to make to families on welfare. We have encouraged the provinces to do so and several provinces have taken advantage of this encouragement of the federal government. So we are taking our responsibilities in this regard very well.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary, and then we should try to limit supplementaries to some extent as we get closer to the end of the question period. After the hon. member for St. John's East, I will see the hon. member for Portneuf.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAM TO PROVIDE SCHOOL CHILDREN WITH MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): By way of a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether, in line with his responsibility as Minister of National Health and Welfare, he is prepared to enter into a program with the provinces, in compliance with the recommendation made to this House by the Food Prices Committee last session, to make milk available through a school program to ensure that children of Canadians on low incomes will not suffer from diet deficiencies as a consequence of inflation.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This matter was discussed before the parliamentary committee and various views were expressed on the subject at that time.

SPORTS

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE IN FOOTBALL LEAGUE AND NOT HOCKEY

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In a letter to a person in charge of an amateur hockey league, he once stated that the federal government had no jurisdiction over the organization and administration of any sport in particular.

Does the fact that millionaires have invested their money in professional football explain his decision to interfere in football through Bill C-22?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the minister say what were his reasons for not intervening for young amateur hockey players at grips with the monopoly enjoyed by the Ontario Amateur Hockey Association?

Mr. Lalonde: Contrary to what the hon. member is insinuating, I discussed the matter on various occasions with those in charge of the Amateur Hockey Association.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED LIMITATION ON RIGHT OF CANADIAN CONSUMER COUNCIL TO INFORM PUBLIC—REASON FOR FAILURE TO RE-APPOINT MR. BUCHWALD

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and of course in the absence of the Prime Minister, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he say why the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, when he finally revived the Canadian Consumer Council, limited its right to tell the Canadian public what it found, and will the Acting Prime Minister say whether it was disagreement about this secrecy or about some other matter which led the government not to invite the former chairman, Mr. Harold Buchwald, to accept re-appointment?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member's information, his premises are altogether wrong. The council just appointed will have a more important budget than the preceding one. I would be able to make public all its researches and all its members will be able to make all the public statements they want, except to divulge the council's proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East rises on a point of order. I will see the hon. member for Rocky Mountain on a supplementary following that.

Mr. McGrath: Since this House met last Thursday for the question period, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs issued a major statement outside the House. I think the record should note the fact that, having made that statement, the minister was not prepared to come to the House today and answer questions from members.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will see the hon. member for Rocky Mountain on a supplementary, to be followed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[Later:]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary who questions my premise. I ask him if it is the policy of the government that the new Consumer Council will have the right, as a council, to make public its findings, and will he also advise, in answer to my original question, whether it was disagreement about this matter of secrecy or disagreement about some other matter that caused the government not to invite the former chairman to accept re-appointment?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that all members of that council will be able to express their views in public on departmental programs and policies, as well as on other matters of concern to consumers, provided reference is not made to confidential documents of the department. They will be able to make any declaration and publish any research they will be doing as members of the council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain rises on a point of order.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I am sure the parliamentary secretary acted inadvertently when he answered a question which I did not ask. I did not ask what they should do in their individual capacity as council members but in their capacity as members of the council as a whole.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister is going to meet the members of this new council within a few days, in early May. I want to assure him that they will have full discretion to co-operate and express their opinions on all matters likely to interest consumers and that they will enjoy every freedom except of course to refer to the department's confidential documents.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO VISIT CANADIAN CONTINGENT OF UNITED NATIONS MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with our Canadian force in the Middle East. I should like to ask him, to begin with, whether or not any agreements or arrangements have been entered into with the United Nations or with the commander of that force so that he is in a way subject to the views or ideas of the government of Canada, supplying, as this country does, so large a share of the force in that area.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada is participating in the UNEF on the request of the Secretary General. Of course, while our troops are there, they are under the command of the United Nations commander. However, as the hon. gentleman knows, they are not doing patrolling or any of this kind of work; they are doing the much more difficult and demanding work of providing the logistics component as they did in the previous force.

● (1500)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked the question was that I was informed this morning that the commanding officer will not permit a visit to Canadian troops there, even by the Minister of National Defence. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister to protest this because in the past, Privy Councillors have been permitted to visit Canadian troops in the United Nations forces.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I doubt the premise of this question but I shall make inquiries. I know I would have no difficulty in visiting troops upon request, and I am sure none of my colleagues would have any difficulty either.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to place myself on as high a level as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but this morning a request was made by my office for a visit on my part to Canadian forces, not in areas in Egypt but in Israel, and the reply was that under no circumstances would anyone from Canada be allowed to visit the forces. Indeed, it was added that this included the Minister of National Defence. As the minister apparently agrees that there should be no such denial, will he immediately get in touch with the forces, because I should like to visit those who serve my country, as in the past I have had that privilege.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for all members of the House when I say that I would not want the right hon. gentleman to put himself in a position of danger, and I am sure this can be the only consideration that prevails. If he would like to visit the troops I will see what I can do, but I certainly would not encourage him to go where there is a lot of shooting. We really would like to have him back.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that the reason the minister does not go?

TRANSPORT

STEPS TO OBTAIN RETURN OF BOXCARS FROM UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PER DIEM RATE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In the continuing saga of the shortage of railway cars, and in the light of information given recently that the shortage of railway cars has detained the movement of lumber causing an increase in the price of housing and other buildings, not mentioning other materials, can the minister tell the House what steps he is taking now to assure return to Canada of Canadian railway cars that are kept in the United States as warehouses thus denying Canada use of them? Can the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to get them back?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last week I met with the railways and the shippers association in order to see if there were things we could do that we were not doing in order to increase the number of freight cars in Canada. One of the things that was suggested was that we get in touch with the American government to see if they could exercise pressure on the railways to have those cars sent back to Canada. We are going to do this through the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. Rather than relying on the diplomacy or the lack of it, whichever it may be, on the part of the Department of External Affairs, does the minister think that it might be more appropriate to raise the per diem rate charged to American railroads so that they do not have the gift of Canadian boxcars for $7 a day, to use them as warehouses? Would that not be a more direct way?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is another way but the problem is to know what the impact would be on prices in Canadian markets abroad, if you have an idea of this. We would lose customers because of the new price to be paid by customers, there is no doubt about that.

HOUSING

NEWFOUNDLAND—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION PROGRAM TO RURAL AREAS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in charge of housing. In view of the fact citizens living in substandard homes are finding it difficult to bring them up to standard because of the cost involved, and in view of the increase in the cost of building materials, can the minister indicate what progress is being made in extending the residential rehabilitation program to include those citizens living in rural areas, in light of the policy announced recently?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations with some of the provinces, and with the particular province that the hon. member has in mind. Discussions are going on at the official level as to the application of a rural housing program for Newfoundland.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question. Can the minister give a definite date as to when the program can be announced which would be directed to those people who are suffering today?

Mr. Basford: No, I could not, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the recent inflationary trend and labour unrest in Canada, I understand that the minister may have had some problems to solve in a minor situation that existed in Vancouver and has now spread to other centres with the firefighters who are tying up Department of Transport airports, has the minister anything to report this morning to the House on the situation as it stands? What we can expect in the next few days?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there were negotiations late last week between the Treasury Board and representatives of the alliance. I know that tomorrow the firefighters will be called upon to vote on the proposal or the solution that has been reached by both parties. I hope that the firefighters are going to accept this proposal.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House when the proposal will be put to the B.C. firefighters and whether the proposal recognizes regional disparities and regional differences?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is a proposal which is a compromise, and it has been negotiated between the alliance and the Treasury Board. I think it is not proper to reveal the terms before the membership has had an opportunity to consider them.

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—POSSIBLE PROPOSAL CONCERNING REGIONAL PAY RATES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. At the Public Service Alliance negotiations with the Treasury Board regarding the airport firemen's dispute was there a firm offer of regional rates presented to the bargaining committee and if not, why not?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a proposal was made on the part of the negotiating team and has been submitted to the workers who are going to vote on it. After that, you will know exactly what it is.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are some four minutes before the end of the question period, and perhaps it might be a good idea to have supplementaries for four minutes, and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. When did the serious bargaining begin? Was it when Toronto and Montreal firemen went on the sympathy strike or does the west have to be shut down completely before government get off their backsides?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we are very lucky that we do not have a general strike in Canada if that is the kind of question in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—REASON FOR ALLEGED DILATORY ACTIONS BY TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the required two months notice to bargain was given on January 31 this year by the Public Service Alliance, the bargaining agent for the airport firemen and others, and in view of the fact that firefighters did not receive word of the pay offer being made until yesterday, April 14, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House and the nation why the Treasury Board has been so dilatory in its negotiation procedures with economic consequences of such serious implications for a good many Canadians?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman wants to read this morning's papers he will see that the firefighters are not complaining at all about the Treasury Board or the government. They are very satisfied. The problem is elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich for a further supplementary and then the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respect your call not to get into debate, but the firefighters have been complaining. Since they are designated personnel within the meaning of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and hence perform an essential service to the Canadian public, why has the Treasury Board been so indifferent to the public in that it did not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is clearly debate. The hon. member for Vancouver South on a supplementary.

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—CONTINGENCY PLANS OF GOVERNMENT IF NO SETTLEMENT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In the unhappy event that this strike is not settled tomorrow as a result of offers being put to these gentlemen, has the government made any contingency plans to put substitute firemen in the airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the importance of the question, but I am sure the hon. member knows it is hypothetical.

AIRPORTS

MOUNT HOPE—DATE OF DECISION ON EXPANSION

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Is he now ready to announce the final decision concerning the proposed development by the government of the Hamilton civic airport situated in Mount Hope?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth for enabling me to speak a bit in French.

As my colleague knows, a study on the Hamilton and Windsor airports is now under way at the request of the parties concerned. As soon as the conclusions of that study are known, I will be in a position to tell the member when a final decision will effectively be taken.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

When the decision is announced, will it be that of the minister himself or the implementation of recommendations made as a result of the study undertaken by the government?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I believe, Mr. Speaker, it will be a government decision, since the airport is under the Department of Transport.

ENERGY

PROPOSAL TO INVITE BRITISH COMMITTEE TO STUDY CANADIAN NUCLEAR REACTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

In view of the renewed interest of the U.K. government in Canadian nuclear reactor technology, and in view of the imminence of the decision to be taken by the U.K. Labour government with reference to the choice of a thermal reactor for that particular country, would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources consider sending an invitation to the members of the subcommittee of the select committee on science and technology studying nuclear reactor technology, so that they can come to Canada and see our technology and be impressed thereby?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, some steps have already been taken toward extending an invitation to the British select committee. We would, of course, welcome the British select committee if they want to come here. We would expect and feel we could be assured of the co-operation of the government of Ontario, so that the committee could have them visit the Pickering plant, the world's largest and most successful nuclear station.

PUBLISHING

INTENTION OF HOUGHTON-MIFFLIN TO EXPAND INTO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. It is my understanding that the Canadian Book Publishers Council has made representations to the Secretary of State respecting the announced intention of Houghton-Mifflin Incorporated to expand its publishing operations into Canada, and that the Canadian Book Publishers Council has raised some objections to this intended move. Has the minister received these representations and does he intend to take any action on them?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yes, we have received them, but there has been no decision on any action.

Mr. Rowland: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In line with the minister's statement to the Canadian Book Publishers Council in January that it was his intention to adopt policies which would ensure that a substantial portion of the Canadian book publishing industry remains in Canadian hands, can he indicate to the House what he considers to be a substantial portion and whether this move by Houghton-Mifflin will affect this definition?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, that tends to be a little subjective and difficult to answer directly. The thrust of my remarks in that speech was to emphasize that the support we are giving to the Canadian publishing industry, which is support for Canadian-owned publishers, is the one measure we have devised to ensure that ownership remains in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and then call orders of the day.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE STRIKE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of reports that air traffic controllers may strike on April 17, what specific action is the minister taking to prevent this from happening?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a vote is taking place right now among the air controllers on proposals made by treasury board. I think the results of the vote will be known on the seventeenth. Only after that will we know exactly what kind of decision the controllers are going to take.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton West might be permitted to ask one supplementary question, after which we should call orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it is a somewhat related question, in that we are dealing with strikes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness to other hon. members who also perhaps have related questions, I do not think the hon. member should ask his question. If the hon. member had wished to ask a supplementary, I would have recognized him. The hon. member for Central Nova indicated that he has an honest supplementary question. He will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I heard you use the word "honest" in connection with the hon. member's supplementary. I think, as we are dealing with strikes in a particular area, questions related to the whole area of strikes would be in order. I hope that on this day, when we have extended such great praise to the Speaker, with which I certainly go along, that you will allow me to ask a question with regard to what is happening to our postal service, which affects the consumer.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are getting into difficulty. The hon. member sees what difficulty we get into when members take advantage of the Chair's anxiety to co-operate with hon. members by trying to squeeze in one or two quick supplementaries after the question period has expired. Hon. members will appreciate that the question period expired at 14 minutes after three o'clock. I really think that at this point we should not have either supplementary or related questions if we cannot agree. The parliamentary secretary rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If the hon. member is allowed to ask a supplementary question on strikes, I should be allowed to ask a question. I understand your difficulty, Mr. Speaker, but I have been getting up ever since the question period started. I accept the fact that others have been recognized before me and I do not quarrel with that. Let me say this however. I have a very important question, as a member from Montreal Island, that has to do with strikes. But I am not going to ask my question—

Mr. Alexander: Why not?

Mr. Prud'homme: Because I have not been recognized yet. But, if Your Honour recognizes the hon. member on a supplementary question that has to do with strikes then, surely, in all fairness—and I know we have all celebrated your great fairness, Sir, and I rejoice in that—you should give me the chance also to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General on a very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think fairness and wisdom dictate that at this point I should call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this bill has been extensively covered in this House both on second reading and in committee, but I make no apology for speaking on it again today because an event arose today which has to do with the bank rate. I referred to it during the oral question period. This points out in a very clear way the sort of band-aid program the government has in mind, if it has any in mind, to deal with inflation.

We have gone from one step to another on a purely ad hoc basis.

The minister now says, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) finally agrees, that inflation and its inflation psychology is the most serious economic problem facing Canada today. The government reminds me of a doctor who, having been asked to correct a bleeding aorta or another major organ in a man's system which causes blood to come to the surface in large amounts, simply applies a band-aid. When the blood comes out further, he puts on another band-aid. He will either run out of body on which to put band-aids or he will run out of band-aids.

Instead of carrying out the deep surgery that is required on the present economic crisis in this country, the government simply throws up its hands and in excuse says, "Look at all the inflation in other countries of the world." Quoting the Wall Street Journal the other day, the Prime Minister boasted that Canada's economy was much better than any other.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Have you read the article? You ought to read the whole thing.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That reminds me—and I have used this simile before—of the chap who said, "My, isn't that a great telephone pole you have sticking in your eye." The reason he has difficulty establishing any relationship between himself and anybody else is that he has two fence-posts in his own eyes, yet the man with the telephone pole is supposedly worse off.

It is no comfort to Canadian businessmen, farmers and fishermen who are supposedly to benefit under the act and these amendments that inflation keeps galloping and galloping. It is almost like a terminal cancer growing without control by the government. The minister cannot assert that he is imposing any controls on the growth of inflation on Canada today: the facts are dead against him on that point.

We will see just what is the effect of this change. I want to relate it particularly to this act. I first want to establish something in the mind of the minister, if I can get his attention for a moment. I want to make this point in deadly seriousness for the minister, his advisers and speechwriters. When a question is asked from this side, as I asked this afternoon, that is not to indicate that it is admitted policy or asserted to be policy from our position. The minister has more than once totally misrepresented questions directed to him by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and he may have done the same with some of mine.

I want to say this. If in asking a question we refer to an existing set of facts, or ask the minister to explain government action in light of something else, that does not mean there is inevitably criticism of the first part or necessarily of the second part. We are asking the minister to explain, as I did this afternoon. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not the question. It is the preamble.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There was no preamble.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not talking about this afternoon's question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is no question about other preambles either. We have witnessed a beautiful job of taking things out of context, particularly during the question period when one is attempting to elicit information. However, let us look at this in today's context in relation to the bill before us. The minister and the government have the corporate tax cuts as a measure to stimulate employment in Canada and especially to counteract DISC. That was the primary purpose. Certain tax cuts were advocated and put into place for corporations engaged in manufacturing and processing. That is point number one.

Point number two is that the principal beneficiaries are located in central Canada, primarily in Ontario. It is a fact that qualifying manufacturing industries are concentrated in Ontario. The proportion of economic activity tied to manufacturing and processing is highest in Ontario, and to a somewhat lesser degree in Quebec, certainly along the St. Lawrence region and in the city of Montreal, more than in other regions of Canada. According to the minister's survey, these corporations have benefited considerably from this legislation. We will take that as fact number two.

I then come to fact number three. This is where I want the minister to explain the apparent paradox in government policy. On the other hand we have a fiscal measure which is designed to benefit a limited part of the Canadian economy. It is not even across the board or across the country because the effects are not even in all parts of the country. Even in my province of Alberta, where there is a good deal of manufacturing and a wide corporate structure, much of it is related to the oil industry. The oil and natural gas industries are specifically excluded from the minister's fiscal benefits for corporations; therefore Alberta does not benefit from that tax cut to the same extent as may do other provinces.

Let us look at the impact on small business. Even though it may be engaged in manufacturing and processing, it will be much affected by the new bank rate and the new prime interest rate. Let us look primarily at the kinds of small business in those parts of the country where the proportion of the economy of small business of a non-manufacturing and non-processing character, plus farming and fishing, will be hit by this move today. There are certain factors which, taken in isolation, would justify an increase in the bank rate. As a theoretical exercise it would be perfectly fine. But what is the result when one looks at the whole picture?

This afternoon I invited the minister to give us the benefit of the government's views as to the effect of its latest monetary measure. What effect is this increase in the bank rate and the consequent increase in the prime rate likely to produce? Will it be to slow down business activity, and where and to what degree? I put it to the minister that it will, and that the people who will be hit first and hardest are those struggling in the more disadvantaged areas of Canada. In reply to a question this afternoon, the minister indicated that the effect of DREE, the placing of expansion loans in the less economically advanced areas, would be to smooth out some of the rough edges. But with all due respect to the hon. gentleman, he is feeding us a lot of tripe because DREE does not operate that way. DREE itself requires close examination in respect of its economic impact as well as its political impact. In many areas, the only justification I could find for a number of DREE loans is the political IOU's which will be left.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is cynical.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am being practical. One has to judge by results. The minister said something about DREE and the Alberta incentives program. Well, the Alberta program was born out of frustration with this government's oil policy. Another factor was the inflexibility of the corporate income tax structure. The Alberta government has undertaken to establish a corporate tax structure with incentives in order to develop more industry. This was not the result of any positive action by the government opposite. And when we consider the program will not be effective until 1977, I cannot understand how the minister could relate it to the increase in the bank rate just announced, and that is what I was talking about.

The minister spoke about the establishment of a petrochemical industry in Alberta. When cabinet ministers make statements like that, we realize how divorced they are from the situation in Alberta. I dare say that outside the area of Sarnia, Ontario, the constituency represented by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) and the one represented by my hon. friend from Pembina (Mr. Hollands), have as high a concentration of petrochemical plants as any region in Canada, if not higher. And there are more going in. This will lead to the establishment of a petrochemical industry, the minister says. Mr. Speaker, all we can hope from the present government is that it does not act in such a way as to hinder the proper development of the petrochemical industry.

A number of hon. members taking part in this debate have spoken about the inadequacy of the ceilings on these loans. I would point out that the loans are not coming from government funds. For example, loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act are made by the chartered banks and so are loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Now the treasury branch of Alberta has been brought in. If I might be allowed to reminisce for a few moments, it occurs to me that somebody by the name of William Aberhart must be turning in his grave.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He must be smiling.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I remember that in the years between 1935 and 1940 there was no deadlier enemy of William Aberhart than the Canadian banking system. I recall the criminal libel trials about the bankers' toadies. Now the Alberta treasury branch, established under the aegis of the government he then led, has achieved almost the status of a bank. As time goes on, strange things happen. The only reason for this piecemeal recognition of the Alberta treasury branch and other quasi-banks is that the federal government did not have the backbone to insist that all instituttions which carry on a banking function are caught by the legislation dealing with deposit insurance.

The sooner a government at the federal level recognizes that we should deal with banking and credit in this country on the basis of totality, the better. As things are, the chartered banks and a few other institutions are the only institutions qualified to lend under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Yet the chartered banks hold only 37 per cent of the deposits in the country. All the other deposit-receiving institutions carry on banking functions to a greater or lesser degree. The government refuses to recognize this fact by introducing appropriate banking legislation to deal with all institutions which engage in the business of banking. There are many shortcomings in the banking system, but that is a subject for another debate.

I come back to the point I was making. I hope the minister will intervene at this stage of the bill and turn his attention to the paradox which has resulted from the monetary action taken by the Bank of Canada and approved by the government as it affects fiscal measures in other areas. Perhaps he can explain this paradox. If he can, so much the better. I am not trying to make him look like a chump who has failed to do his homework.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when the bill was being considered on second reading we were debating it, as we were on other occasions when these acts were sought to be amended, on a rather narrow base, namely, the specific application of, say, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to fishermen or the application of the Farm Improvement Loans Act to farmers, as the case may be. I think it was demanded of us that we do this because of the very nature of the bills presented. It is difficult to get into a far ranging discussion of banking, banking institutions and interest rates and their effect on the economy, but I think the provisions of the bill are sufficiently broad to permit us to ask ourselves what it is we are trying to do.

I got the impression from the answers the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) gave the House today to various questions about the decision of the Bank of Canada to raise the interest rate, the government's policy, and so on, that he was saying he really was not able to deal with the situation, that he was unable to cope, that there was no mechanism by which he could do anything, or very little, to correct the situation. The minister spoke about Eurodollars, other countries seeking to go in for deficit financing as a result of oil prices having gone up, about the way all of these factors throughout the world have injured poor Canada, and that the poor Minister of Finance was helpless in face of these pressures from outside.

On the other hand, I got the impression that the minister was not really interested in trying to do anything about the situation, that he was content to maintain in Canada an arrangement whereby basic decisions concerning fiscal policy are made by the private chartered banks and lending institutions, not by the Bank of Canada even though the Bank of Canada has some authority in law to establish interest rates.

I have listened to advice given me at different times, from the time when Donald Fleming was minister of finance in this House, and he and other ministers of finance gave us the same kind of responses we are now getting when we ask questions about banking and interest rates. The theory usually advanced is that the economy is moving at too fast a pace; therefore it needs to have its pace slowed down. The mechanism for slowing it down is to increase interest rates. The Bank of Canada does this by declaring that the pre-discount rate will be at a certain figure. This is a signal to the private chartered banks and other lending institutions, on a kind of rub-off basis, to raise their interest rates on the theory, so we are told, that if it costs more to borrow money, then those who are contemplating borrowing, either for consumer or business expansion purposes, will think twice. These people will say to themselves, "The interest rate has gone up one-half of one per cent and therefore it will cost me too much money to do what I plan to do and I will not borrow money". The theory is that the economy will then slow down a bit instead of moving ahead at an accelerated rate.

It seems to me that the Bank of Canada has engaged in this practice dating from the historic tight money days of the Liberals in 1955 when Walter Harris was minister of finance.

Mr. Barnett: That was 1956.

Mr. Howard: My colleague from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) tells me that was in 1956. But from reading about and watching events at the federal level before I entered the federal scene myself, any attempts by the Department of Finance, or the minister of finance, or the government, or the Bank of Canada, to slow down the economy by raising interest rates were defeated at every turn by the chartered banks themselves.

This was because, as a companion piece to the Bank of Canada raising the interest rate in order to slow down a heated economy, the chartered banks would embark upon an advertising program to promote the borrowing of money at the higher interest rate, and they succeeded in getting people to do so. So whatever value there was, in the theoretical sense, in slowing down the economy by raising interest rates, it was negated by the very group they were trying to regulate.

Let me give the House a personal example of what I mean. Recently I walked into the Bank of Montreal just across Wellington Street—though you can walk into any branch of the Bank of Montreal and get the same experience—and saw pretty girls running around with big blue buttons on which is written, "Talk to me". Well, Mr. Speaker, I am just like a lot of others; when I see a pretty girl wearing a button with that inscription, all sorts of visions flash through my mind and I want to talk to her. I asked her, "What do you want me to talk to you about?" She replied, "A ski loan. We will lend you the money to buy skis, to buy ski boots or to pay for your ski lodge fees". I told her I did not ski, so she said, "Then we will lend you money for a car, a house, a fur coat, anything at all". The motive was to promote the lending of money and at a higher interest rate, thus defeating the government's attempts to try to slow down the rate of lending.

There has been a steadily increasing per capita debt in this nation that has been escalating at fantastic rates in recent years and at a steadily increasing rate of interest. An increase in the interest rate of one-quarter or one-half of one per cent has deterred no one, and neither will this one per cent increase in face of the promotional and advertising campaigns embarked upon by the banks to defeat the very intention of the Bank of Canada and the government of Canada.

The result of all this—and this is something that seriously affects small businessmen, farmers and fishermen whom we are discussing in this bill—is that a printing mechanism, a mimeographed system of increasing the money supply, is set up.

Mr. Blenkarn: You'd better believe it.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend in the Conservative Party says I had better believe it, and I do believe it. It has been in existence for at least 20 years to my knowledge, and it was something that was not debated at all during the historic period from 1958 to 1962. The latest figures on the increase in the money supply that I have end in September of last year, though the latest figures go to the end of the quarter ending in December of last year. However, the increase in the money supply over the past year has been something between $6 billion and $7 billion.

Common sense tells us that if the printing presses are running off more $20 and $10 bills than can possibly be absorbed by the rate of production, those bills already in existence are going to lose value. The more money in existence, the less the purchasing power of each and every dollar. I am sure hon. members recall a situation that occurred in Hong Kong some years ago where people were depicted walking down the street with a wheelbarrow piled high with money in order to buy a packet of cigarettes. Apparently the same situation existed in Germany when they tried to deal with the question of loss of purchasing power by printing more money. This resulted only in destroying that which they were attempting to correct. This is the situation we have in this country. We simply cannot afford this kind of luxury.

I would refer to the responses of the Minister of Finance to questions asked today. I submit that the question period does not give the fluidity necessary for a full examination of this question because it places the minister, as I have said on other occasions, or any minister in the position of having the last word in respect of any question and, therefore, in the position of being able to say whatever he likes, to not say what he does not want to say, or to fob off a question or in response to a question to make some declaration he wishes to get across. That is what the minister did today. He did not attempt to deal with the very serious situation facing us if we permit this type of fiscal activity to continue. The minister said he was concerned about the money supply and would permit it to increase only to the appropriate level, not too much but just enough, with no indication of how much is too much.

The minister had no idea on this point because it is the banks which decide what the money supply will be. That decision is made on the basis of how much money they can lend at the stroke of a pen, or push off on people who are willing to borrow. It does not matter what the interest rate is, because the bank does not lose. If the bank has to pay out, in some cases, 8½ per cent for term deposits, it gets it back again on the money it lends, plus another 2 per cent or 3 per cent in order to have a profit and to set aside some additional money to lend and increase the fires of inflation even more.

With regard particularly to this bill and the extent it covers the situation we have before us, we do not have anything before us at this time to try to handle the total mess we are in financially. We do not have before us any amendments to the Bank Act for consideration, which might permit us to deal with the major question. We have before us a bill which relates to fishermen, farmers and small businessmen. I do not intend to repeat the speech I made the other day, except to say that it is our responsibility to establish a fixed interest rate if through this bill it is our intention to guarantee loans. The banks and the lending institutions cannot lose in this situation, and we owe it to the people who borrow under this legislation to say to them that they shall be able to do so at a fixed rate of interest.

I think a rate of 6 per cent, while an arbitrary figure, is sufficient. This should be written into the legislation. We should also write into the legislation a provision that a lending institution shall not deny an application for a loan except for good and valid reasons concerning the viability of the person seeking to borrow. It should not be denied on the basis that the interest rate is not high enough and that the lending institution therefore will not earn sufficient profit. Farmers, fishermen and small businessmen particularly are groups which deserve more than any other group in society because they have no leverage. Certainly after the decisions which were made over the weekend, and the discussions in the House today, I am sure there will be support from all corners of the House for the following suggestion. It seems to me we should write into this bill a fixed interest rate and should also write into it a provision that a lending institution cannot deny a loan except on a good and valid business basis.

In order to do this, I think it would be necessary to revert to committee of the whole. The clauses in which I think this could be done are Nos. 2, 7 and 9. If we move forward in this respect, it might be necessary to make companion amendments to other clauses when we reach that stage. In order that we might fix the interest rate to help farmers, fishermen and small businessmen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That Bill C-14, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to a committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 2, 7 and 9.

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, naturally I did not know an amendment would be moved at this stage by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I find myself in the position of talking about it without having had too much opportunity to find out what it is all about. However, I gather from the remarks of the hon. member that principally he would like to establish a fixed rate of interest. I would be hard pressed to find myself in disagreement with that feature of his amendment. My colleagues say, "Go the whole way". All right; we will go along with the amendment in respect of a fixed interest rate.

Mr. Speaker, I have a few points which might lead to improvement of this bill. Principally, the bill sets out four areas in which it would amend existing legislation. First, it would raise the limit of eligibility for loans under the legislation for firms which write from $500,000 worth of business annually up to $1 million worth of business. Second, it would increase the total amount of money that could be outstanding in the name of any borrower at any one time from $25,000 to $50,000. Third, it would make new businesses eligible to borrow money, which is secured by the government. Fourth, it would provide that business improvement loans include the purchase of land in respect of the establishment of a business.

The hon. member for Skeena spoke about the financial mess we are in. He is right; we are in a financial mess. Questions were asked during the question period about the decision of the Bank of Canada to raise the interest rate. If I might boil down the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the answer was that it seemed advisable to do so. But I believe there is a very good reason the Bank of Canada found it desirable to raise the interest rate. It raised the interest rate in order to restrict borrowing. I think one simple reason the Bank of Canada found it necessary to take this step is that in recent weeks there has been an unparallelled rush on the money supply by borrowers.

Within the last couple of weeks there were loans to one or more chartered bank from the Bank of Canada amounting to $60 million which normally would have been repaid within a few days, but within a few days that loan was increased to $65 million and ultimately to over $70 million. This is because there was pressure on the chartered banks by borrowers because the money supply was drying up.

In the month of March, lending by chartered banks rose by double the amount that was lent in January and February. Obviously, the reason for this, when you get right down to root causes, is inflation. People are borrowing money to pay off their existing obligations, and they are not saving any money. In my view they are very wise not to save any money, because in the situation in which we live today the man who saves is a fool; he is going to be defrauded of his savings if he leaves them in the bank for only six months. The evidence is there. Statistics Canada has issued another of its doleful reports telling us that clothing is up, food is up, transportation is up, and every single commodity that is a necessary requisite of a reasonable standard of living is going up. As one financial writer put it, the prices of those commodities are reaching escape velocity. It is that reason that has caused the money supply to become short. People put relentless pressure on the banks for loans. And now we have the additional monetary check—the increase in the interest rates.

Against that background we are being asked to consider a bill to help small businesses, to help farmers and to help fishermen. I should like to confine myself to the section of the bill which amends the Small Businesses Loans Act. I have several criticisms of the manner in which that act has been administered in the past and will go on being administered in the future unless there is a change in the attitude of the government and of the minister responsible.

When we assess the value of the act we must first of all determine the extent of its availability to people who require loans. I think it is particularly germane to mention here, as did my colleagues a few days ago, the performance of chartered banks in the field. I will take as an example the year 1972, when we find that the Bank of Montreal made a grand total of 433 loans under this act; the Bank of Nova Scotia made 134; the Royal Bank, 952; the Toronto-Dominion Bank, 181; the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 358; the Canadian National Bank, 741; others, including credit unions and near-banks, 47—for a grand total of 2,846 loans.

This scarcely demonstrates an overeagerness on the part of chartered banks to participate in this program. This House has heard from more than one member about the lack of enthusiasm demonstrated by banks to lend money under the provisions of this act and how they will steer a businessman, if they can, into more expensive avenues of borrowing. Without proof of that, it is hard to make accusations, but on the evidence that we have it would seem to me, and I think to any reasonable person, that banks are less than enthusiastic about low interest loans.

We have seen that in 1972 the total number of loans was 2,846. In 1973 it was scarcely better; there was a grand total of 3,076. Between the years 1961 and 1973, the first 12 years of experience after the act was made law in 1961, the average total amount lent during those years was $24,286,000. In 1973, the grand total was $31.6 million—once again a very tiny increase over such a long period of time and one which reflects the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the financial establishments to take part in any program which lends money to people at less than the prime or top interest rate.

I think there is a demonstrable need here to make the provisions of this act more available to those who need loans, and this government should take two approaches. The first is a public relations approach and the second is an in-house approach, so to speak. I think the Minister of Finance should consult the heads of chartered banks and make very plain to them the desirability of encouraging the establishment of new, medium and small businesses and the encouragement and development of existing businesses. This is more likely to be brought about under the provisions of an act such as this one than it is when these entrepreneurs are forced to borrow at higher interest rates.

The second thing the minister and his department should do is to make certain that every Canadian is aware of the existence of these provisions. I think there is scarcely a member of the House who will not at least go part way with me when I say that whatever utopian philosophy each of us may espouse for our children and our grandchildren for the year 2050 or whatever, we are faced by the inescapable fact that today we live in a society which, for want of a better term, I will call a free enterprise economy. It is propelled by private industry and private business, and most of that propulsion comes not from big business but from medium and small business which, I will point out for the second time in this debate, employs more than 60 per cent of all the people who work in this country. They work for medium and small businesses which employ 100 or less employees.

I suggest that if this country is to move at all, if the economy is to grow and businesses are to expand and create the jobs necessary, then it is that segment of the economy that needs encouragement more than any other at this stage. We have now some 500,000 people unemployed in this country every year. As we know, many thousands more enter the job market and there are no jobs for them. We have been living with this unhappy situation ever since 1969. The hon. member for Skeena spoke about the famous tight money days of the 1950s. I remind him that the latest and most disastrous of all the dangerous economic games that the government can play was embarked upon, not back in the 1950s but in 1969 when the government chose wilfully to go against the advice of all the economists that it paid to advise it on its so-called war against inflation. It chose to ignore advice that if it followed the course it intended to, not only would inflation not be halted but harmful high unemployment would follow.

Of course, the Economic Council of Canada, which was the source of that information, was right. The government chose to go ahead and do what its own in-house people told it to do and the country was plunged into the situation in which we find ourselves today. I suggest that if we are going to get out of that mess, as the hon. member for Skeena calls it, we will only do so by encouraging the entrepreneurs, who provide employment by means of small business, to expand; and they can only expand if they have a ready source of money.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should make all Canadians aware of the fact that money is available not only for existing businesses but for new businesses, because we have to broaden the base. That is a very comprehensive provision in this bill. For the first time, a new business can get off the ground in part by borrowing money guaranteed by the federal government. But that is only if businesses know it is available, and a great many do not know that the present act is there. The responsibility for remedying that lack lies with the Department of Finance. I urge a full-scale public relations campaign to make sure that everybody in this country knows about the act. Every Canadian corresponds with his government at one time or another, and certainly the government is in communication with every manufacturer in this country with relation to income tax, health and welfare schemes and the like. There is no reason why in one of these many mailings full and complete information on this act should not be included.

The segment of the economy which is called medium and small business is important enough now, employing as it does nearly two-thirds of the work force, that it should not have to depend on the good graces of half a dozen different departments and 18 separate laws or programs to deal with its federal government. There are many programs beside this one of which medium and small business could avail itself, but they are not under the one umbrella. I would suggest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), if he thought the country's business was important enough to be here instead of flying off down south—

An hon. Member: That's a cheap shot.

Mr. Reilly: It is nothing of the kind. If it were a cheap shot, it would be only fair play. It is long past the time this segment of the economy ought to have had its own department, its own minister and all these programs under one umbrella.

Mr. Speaker, I think the limit of $50,000 on loans is too low. If I were moving an amendment I would suggest to the minister that the limit be raised to at least $100,000. There is no reason why it should not be. Again, it is the monster of inflation. To a firm that does perhaps three-quarters of a million dollars' worth of business in the course of a year, $50,000 is, to paraphrase a former minister of the Liberal government, nothing more than a drop in the bucket when inflation is making everything ruinously costly. To new businesses and those who wish to expand, $50,000 is not a very significant amount of money.

The cost of industrial land is rising steadily. This act provides, for the first time, that land may be included under the heading of a business improvement loan. Industrial land in metropolitan Toronto now costs almost $100,000 an acre. The time is rapidly approaching when rental accommodation will cost as much as $2 per square foot, according to real estate agents in that city. When you figure rental you have to take the land component as one-third of the cost and that will be up by 50 per cent by the middle of this summer. With land going for $100,000 per acre, I suggest the top limit of $50,000 on this type of loan is not high enough.

The pressure is on for all kinds of money from different sources. Statistics Canada reported a little while ago that a survey of selected lending institutions in this country showed that they had on their books $13.8 billion outstanding to Canadian borrowers at the end of February. Chartered banks general loans went up $370 million in one week alone, the week ending April 3, to a total outstanding on their books of $31.01 billion. In a market like that, I suggest there is an even more palpable need for the medium and small businessman to have a readily available source of money, with a reasonable limit, at a reasonable rate of interest.

The minister said the other day that the volume under this act of the money loaned and the number of loans was increasing steadily and that this showed the good faith of the government and of the banks. The evidence is not, on its face, apparent to me. In 1961, the year in which the act came into effect, there were 2,977 loans, and in 1973 there were 3,076 loans. That is an increase of 99 loans over 13 years. That is really not much of an increase in volume, particularly in an economy which we are told, every time we dare talk about inflation on this side of the House, is booming. I do not believe that is evidence that anybody is terribly enthusiastic about this program or that the government has been pushing it. If anybody bears the responsibility for making this program not only available but known, it is the government which sponsors it.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I do not have any difficulty in supporting the principles of the bill, but I am in favour of increasing the limit on borrowing to $100,000 rather than cutting it off at $50,000. As I said, I believe this government should attempt to make those who need the money and would borrow it aware of the fact that it is there. Also, I think there ought to be a fixed rate of interest. I agree with the hon. member for Skeena on that, and I think it ought to be lower than 8½ per cent or 8¼ per cent.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I believe the small businessman deserves a better deal. I received partial agreement on this from the minister when, as reported at page 1395 of Hansard for April 11, he said:

I agree that the small businessman has a legitimate grievance in this country. He has seen that big government deals with big labour and big business and he really does not have a segment of the government looking after him.

I just repeat the minister's remarks to him and suggest that the government buttress as strongly as they can the need for a special department to encourage the establishment of new, medium and small industry and to help existing businesses expand, thus helping to create the vast number of jobs that are needed if this country is ever to get out of what the hon. member for Skeena calls, picturesquely but accurately, this financial mess.

● (1620)

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Blais: Say you like it, and sit down.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I think if our function here were simply to tell people we like things and then sit down, we would all be in Barbados today instead of working in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Cheap shot.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at these comments about "cheap shot", with the Minister of Transport sitting here. I suspect that the cost of an aircraft to go down there and to come back would be far from cheap.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Under the rules, the hon. member should speak to the subject before us. I ask him to kindly do so.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to reply to some of the "cheap shot" comments coming from across the way.

The legislation which is now at third reading stage really tidies up three existing acts, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Yet it will be a mistake to assume that it is nothing more than tidying-up legislation. Some very useful amendments have been brought in and the legislation has been improved in a very real way. With regard to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), it is my impression, as a freshman member, that the amendment may well be beyond the competence of the House to deal with at this stage. I await with interest the ruling which will be made on the point.

It is clear that some real improvements have been made to the bill now before us. I think we all applaud and approve the increase in the ceiling of loans guaranteed under the three categories dealt with in the bill. Certainly I, coming from the sort of constituency I represent, approve and welcome the proposal to extend farm improvement loans to major repairs and overhauls. That will be significant and important to people who make a contribution by engaging in agriculture in western Alberta. I am sure, as my colleague from Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) mentioned a few moments ago, that the amendment respecting small businesses under which new businesses will be eligible for loans is a very real improvement. This provision will be of considerable advantage in certain areas of the country like my own where great difficulty heretofore was encountered by people who wanted to launch small businesses.

I think the broader definition of what a small business entails will also be helpful. This is a very much more realistic definition than the one contained in the previous act. Naturally, I welcome the evidence that the minister has been taking the advice of my colleagues from Alberta and has included the treasury branches in the list of institutions which are covered by this legislation.

The point which has been made before, and which can be emphasized, is that the increase in the ceiling from $25,000 to $50,000 is, in effect, an indexing operation given the rate of inflation today. The ceiling has not been doubled, in real terms, under this legislation because our rate of inflation is now reaching the two-figure rate. Because of the lack of interest of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in containing it, it shows every sign of staying that way. It appears we shall have two-figure inflation for some time to come. Instead of doubling the limits on loans which people may need to take out to pay for services, the minister in this legislation in effect has introduced the concept of indexing to enable people to keep up with increased costs they must pay if they are to continue in the fishing operation, the small business or on the farm.

When this legislation has been in effect for some time it will be interesting to review it to see if it is working and if it is helping younger farmers to get into the business of farming. As my colleague, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned the other night, there is a clear need in this country for reform under which we can extend loans and assistance to young people on the basis of character, not simply on the basis of collateral.

I think all of us who come from agricultural areas are aware of the very serious problem posed for the future of agriculture by the fact that the average age of farmers in this country is just over 50 years. I can remember not so long ago sitting in the living-room of a constituent of mine in Green Court, Alberta. In that room were 14 people actively engaged in farming, of whom only one was under the age of 40. That is the kind of situation we face across this country. One reason is, of course, that it is most difficult for young farmers without large collateral, without wealthy fathers standing behind them, to get started in agriculture.

I think one of the faults of legislation such as this has been that there has not been much interest shown in becoming involved in investments which might contain an element of risk. The provincial government of Alberta has been acting much more imaginatively in this field and has been prepared to back certain risk ventures in agriculture involving younger farmers as well as others. I think that will be the only way in which we can overcome this situation, because the consistently high and increasing average age of those who would take advantage of this legislation in Canada entails a situation which contains within it the seeds of self-destruction of the agricultural industry. I hope that after this legislation passes into law we shall have an opportunity of seeing if the changes included in it have encouraged younger people to enter agriculture. Personally, I confess to pessimism on this point; I doubt if we will see that kind of change.

I think most of us hope we can soon pass this legislation into law. It is worth noting that we are here today, and that this legislation has a chance of being discussed and passed into law, only because the House decided to sit this week and not to take a holiday. We are doing our best to get this legislation, which will be of benefit to the farmer, the small businessman and the fisherman, through the House. I think, too, that this bill will be passed more quickly than might have been the case because the House showed the good sense to accept the recommendation of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and consider it in committee of the whole rather than in the standing committee which is already burdened with other responsibilities.

I trust, sir, that the amendment introduced by the NDP will not unduly delay the passage of this legislation through the House after adequate debate. I want to make this point: when the minister was replying to questions the other day and to comments from members on this side, he suggested that the amendments—I think I quote his words correctly—are the result of "a major review of the effectiveness of the programs". I have not had the opportunity to look at the agricultural legislation which was introduced today. I think we will have to see, now that that legislation, or some of it, has finally been introduced, whether there is any relationship between that major review and the effectiveness of programs that cater to small businessmen, farmers and fishermen in this country. It is clear, on the basis of evidence before us, that if there is to be any really major review of the effectiveness of these programs, there will need to be a much more comprehensive range of changes than we see in Bill C-14.

I know that the federal business development bank legislation will be before the House before too long. I know the minister suggested in debate the other day that the relationship between the legislation now before us and the legislation to shear away a portion of the present Industrial Development Bank will be very clear when that matter is before us. The minister perpetually lives in hope. I suppose he now expects us to do the same in relation to the effectiveness and thoroughness of any review that is undertaken of the effect upon people who have to live with this legislation, those whose lives and futures are affected by whatever review he has undertaken.

On the basis of the amendments incorporated in Bill C-14, it is evident there is no major, co-ordinated plan to help the farmers, fishermen and small businessmen of Canada. The point was made before that small and medium businesses in Canada account for 60 per cent of the employment in this country. Despite that fact, they are virtually orphans in terms of policy. As my colleague the hon. member for Ottawa West pointed out a few moments ago, if we are serious about helping small businessmen in particular, we should draw together the various programs, create new programs and bring them together under one heading so that in fact they will have the same degree of attention that this and other governments have given to larger enterprises.

All members who have been active in their constituencies know that one of the most frequent requests is to help some poor businessman sort out the maze of government programs that may be available to him when he seeks to establish or expand. There is no effective help to members of parliament or to small businessmen in this field. At the very least, the government should be considering a program that would pull together in a cohesive fashion all programs that affect small businesses and small businessmen in Canada. It is important to remember that the small operator, the small businessman or woman, is the chief business victim of the current rate of inflation. Corporations have various means of defence; they can pass on the effects of inflation or obtain compensation in other ways. In nine cases out of ten, the small business operator cannot do that.

Small business operators are the victims of excessive government regulation. They spend literally hours each week filling out forms and reports. This makes their lives much more difficult. I draw to the attention of the House that they are hurt in two ways by this requirement. First, they are hurt because it takes time to fill out forms and provide information for the government. Second, they are hurt disproportionately because they cannot afford experts to find the loopholes, the ways around various regulations which affect them, to find out how particular pieces of government legislation might influence or affect their future. They are not simply the victims of inflation, which is evident, but also the victims of a growing and active government. If we have to resign ourselves to this growth in government we must give conscience to the category of business people, the 60 per cent of employers in Canada, who suffer most particularly from the effects of a large and growing state.

I do not have the figures at hand; as a private member I do not have the competence to gather them. However, given the fact that 60 per cent of the employment in Canada comes from smaller operators, it would be interesting to compare the level of government assistance to this group as against the level of government assistance to the 40 per cent employers represented by the large businesses and corporations of this country. Any such assessment to see whether small operators are being prejudiced should take into account the much greater capacity of large and established corporations, particularly the subsidiaries of multinational corporations, to make use of programs and expertise which exist in order to find their way around regulations which might restrain smaller operators, or to find their way through loopholes that inevitably exist in law.

There is one particular matter which concerns me substantially. When the minister spoke the other night he said he was not prepared to take measures insofar as the effect on small businessmen is concerned to ensure that this loan program is working. He made a simply incredible reply to the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). The hon. member made the point that there is a very real danger of banks refusing to recommend loans under this program to small businessmen, farmers or fishermen who might become borrowers from the bank at higher rates of interest. The minister was full of indignation, but not full of help: he suggested that the obvious recourse for people so affected would be to tell their member of parliament. The minister is nodding his head in agreement. That is the extent of his policy. That is the extent of his commitment to ensure that this program is not abused by bankers across the country. In light of that answer, it is well to ask ourselves what other legislation is monitored so weakly in Canada that ministers wait for complaints to come from individual members of parliament to see if the program is working. Not very many.

Most members of parliament do what they can to keep in touch with their constituents, particularly those who might have problems with government agencies. Even the hardest working private member of parliament would have a very slight chance of learning of every instance of businessmen encountering this kind of treatment from their banks. For one thing, some businessmen just will not go to their member of parliament, regardless of his party, with information about their private dealings with their banks. This is a very serious weakness in the program that was drawn to the attention of the minister by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte. The minister did not give a serious reply. I hope he will reconsider simply relying on the chance that members of parliament will have these matters brought to their attention so they can transmit them to the minister for some kind of corrective action.

One reason I am particularly concerned about the bill before us is that legislation to effect the capacity of farmers, fishermen and small businessmen to obtain loans has special force on a number of Canadians who reside outside our cities. Of course, there are a number of small business operators, men and women, who make their contribution to the growth of the Canadian economy within the cities of Canada. However, it is obvious that this type of provision for loans to farmers and fishermen principally affects the economic vitality of the smaller communities of Canada. Perhaps it needs restating that when assistance is given to a farmer or fisherman to help mount an effective operation, that assistance in effect helps to generate economic activity in the whole of the region where the individual lives.

While there are small business operations aplenty in the cities of Canada, the fact remains that small business is the only business which comes to our smaller communities. This is in part because of an outdated attitude toward the location of industry, an attitude which is equally at fault whether held by members of the government or senior officials of the public service or when held by large companies.

It is a fact of life that when large or medium sized concerns are considering location options, they settle time after time for the large cities. By and large, it is only small businesses which go to the rural areas. Therefore, legislation of the kind before us is particularly important to Canadians who live outside the major cities. I have spoken in this House on other occasions about my feeling that government legislation is weighted, inadvertently perhaps, against the rural areas—that by placing artificial obstacles in the path it decreases the capacity of those areas to grow.

This government, in particular, appears to believe devoutly in the future which its statistics project, that is, a future in which by far the majority of Canadians will be living in a few of our largest urban centres. The fact that the government believes its own statistics means that unconsciously it follows policies in line with such a prediction. I believe such a future is not inevitable for us, but as long as the government accepts this projection as inevitable rural Canada is in danger. Unconscious discrimination against rural Canada has been evident in a number of the measures brought forward since I first came to this House. For example, the new housing legislation was designed to help larger areas; it did not help smaller areas very much.

The sympathies of the government are evident from the attitude taken toward rail abandonment. They are evident also, in the determination shown by ministers to locate penal and other institutions only in the large centres and to ignore the possibility of extending institutional support facilities to some of the smaller places in Canada. They are evident in such small things as failure to inform rural communities of deadlines and guidelines governing LIP applications, assuming that people who live in these communities can learn about such things by reading the metropolitan newspapers or listening to news broadcasts by metropolitan stations. I do not suggest there is any kind of conspiracy against smaller communities. As I say, it derives from the assumption that the future lies inevitably with the metropolitan areas, while failing to acknowledge any capacity to develop a Canadian identity along different lines by encouraging men and women to start business operations in parts of Canada outside the major centres.

We see evidence of the same approach in the legislation before us. It would be impossible to argue that any particular clause in Bill C-14 is directly prejudicial to rural Canada. Nevertheless, the measure fails to recognize that rural areas rely to a far greater extent than urban areas upon small business enterprises. It fails to recognize that time and time again, in the circumstances of today, small business is the only business which locates in these smaller places, giving them an opportunity to contribute to a balanced Canadian identity and a balanced economy.

The concern which should be foremost in the minister's mind during the few weeks in which he is able to hang on to office should be to devise a system which would encourage people to establish businesses in small communities and invest in small enterprises which, at this point, are the only enterprises ready to set themselves up outside the major cities.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take part only briefly in the proceedings on third reading of Bill C-14. It is not my intention to cover all the points which previous speakers have raised. One of the principal changes in the legislation we are considering involves the increase in the limit for guaranteed loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act from $25,000 to $50,000. This is certainly an improvement. It is an umpleasant fact that as a result of inflation over the past few years, not very much can be done with the present maximum of $25,000. Even the proposed new maximum is not very satisfactory under present inflationary conditions. One speaker this afternoon thought the maximum amount should be increased to $100,000 and I would certainly endorse such a suggestion.

One important feature has been omitted from the legislation. It has to do with the fixing of the interest rate. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Howard) would have the effect of sending the bill back to committee of the whole for further study with a view to incorporating into the legislation a change in that respect. One of the most beneficial moves would be to amend the legislation so as to ensure that these loans would be available at a maximum interest rate of 6 per cent. The cost of borrowed capital is one of the heaviest charges which must be borne by any small business. It seems to me that to fix the maximum interest rate at 6 per cent would be a major factor in helping small business ventures to establish themselves or to upgrade their operations. After all, this is the over-all objective of the legislation.

I know of many small business ventures whose owners have worked year after year for almost no reward, principally because of the burden imposed by a high rate of interest on their capital loans. Many proved unsuccessful, and one of the main reasons was the excessively high interest rate charged on loan capital. The same situation is encountered in the farming and fishing industries. In my view, protection against inflationary interest rates ought to be incorporated in this legislation and I urge the House to take action accordingly. I intend to support the amendment and I trust it will be accepted by the minister. In closing, generally I would say this legislation is an improvement over the legislation now on the statute books. It is my intention to support it, and I hope it will be the will of the House to strengthen it along the lines of the amendment.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, earlier I had not intended to speak on this bill, but I am prompted to do so in view of the inordinate increase in the re-discount rate announced over the weekend by the Bank of Canada. This change in the bank rate clearly indicates new government policy. It clearly indicates that the government has unveiled its contingency plan to deal with inflation, and the contingency plan is the same plan used with gusto in 1968, 1969 and 1970 in the famous war on inflation. This is the contingency plan which attacks the business community with a meat-axe, increasing interest rates across the board, raising them higher and higher to tighten money supply, without regard for who is hurt.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was asked today what would likely be the interest rate charged fishermen, small businessmen and farmers, he said it would have to be an interest rate high enough to attract money. Clearly the Minister of Finance has unveiled his contingency plan, the plan we have asked about for over a year. This contingency plan is Liberal tight money—Turner tight money, if you like. It is the kind of plan we are likely to see when the Minister of Finance produces his budget a month from now or maybe longer. This is why I rise today, Mr. Speaker. The problem that small businessmen, fishermen and farmers face when money gets tight is that they are cut right off because they do not have enough influence with the banks to swing a loan. You can have all the guaranteed plans that you want, but they will not get a loan.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) suggested 6 per cent loans for these people. The minister himself indicated today that interest rates will have to be high enough to attract funds. What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? It means, for the small businessman who is trying to become established, a loan under the terms of the act at 9 per cent, 10 per cent or 11 per cent. When members of the New Democratic Party talk about 6 per cent mortgage loans for housing and for small businessmen, fishermen and farmers, they are talking through their hats, because the government does not care about these people. They will let interest rates rise in order to tighten the money supply, because that is their method of controlling inflation. They tried it before, and with some success. They put a lot of people out of work but the inflation rate was lessened. I suggest this is a pretty serious meat-axe method, but it looks as though this is the contingency plan with which the country is faced.

This bill is, in a sense, an indexing bill. I am going to speak today mainly about the Small Businesses Loans Act. The original act provided for a $25,000 maximum loan for small business: this is being increased 100 per cent, to $50,000. In 1961 a dollar would probably have bought twice as much as today's dollar, so all the government has done is increase the limit of the loan. The existing act fixes gross revenues at $500,000; this bill fixes them at $1 million, double the previous amount. In other words, it is doubling legislation, indexing legislation. The bill is trying to make small businessmen, small fishermen and small farmers think they are getting something when they are not really getting anything at all.

Under the Small Businesses Loans Act there were some 2,800 loans made in 1972 in all of Canada. The minister says with pride that over 3,000 loans were made in 1973 in all of Canada, roughly 600 of which were in the province of Ontario. With the number of branch banks, savings offices and credit unions in Canada today, this amounts to much less than one loan per office. The government has not promoted this legislation at all but has placed it on the shelf. It says it is doing something for small businessmen, farmers and fishermen, but the truth of the matter is it has no intention of doing anything. The government will never tell anybody about the legislation and the government will make sure the banks never tell anybody either.

The fact that only some 2,800 loans were made in 1972 is a pretty good indication that the act has not been used to help small businessmen. No real effort has been made by the government to help small business. The provisions of the act are purely cosmetic. The government will say on the election brochures which it will be issuing in a week or so that it has done something to assist small businessmen, and their speakers will stand on platforms and say what great guys they are. But let the people read today's Hansard and learn there was less than one loan per bank.

Mr. Marshall: Only two in Newfoundland.

Mr. Blenkarn: Two in Newfoundland, my colleague from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) says. That is the kind of help small businessmen get from this government.

If we are going to have a tight money policy in the country, which is clearly the contingency plan of this government to fight inflation, then the provisions of this bill must be changed or the Minister of Finance must issue a new statement of policy that will allocate credit. This business of tightening up the money supply so that all the little guys get hurt is no way to manage an economy. If there is too much credit buying in this country and we must cut down on the amount, then surely to goodness it is the obligation of the government to crack down on speculative real estate, to cut down on some of its own waste and expenditure, and to make sure that the small businessmen, fishermen and farmers have sufficient cash to get along with, which means that the government must introduce an allocation system. This is what the minister should be proposing today.

I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte)—National Revenue—Report that certain Quebec oil companies did not pay federal income tax last year; the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn)—Consumer Affairs—Advertisements for sale of houses in Toronto area—Contracts whereby builder can change price and mortgage terms.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business, as listed in the order paper, namely notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE ADEQUATE SERVICE BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND MAINLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation implementing its constitutional responsibility, guarantee and obligation to ensure continuous and uninterrupted transportation service for persons, goods and vehicles to and from Newfoundland and the mainland of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that my notice of motion is so important that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) felt it necessary he appear here in person. Perhaps it is because he does not think his parliamentary secretary can give me the proper reply.

Mr. Speaker, my private member's notice of motion is similar to one introduced last week by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter). Under the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada a guarantee was given to the province as follows:

Canada will maintain, in accordance with traffic, offering a freight and passenger steamship service between North Sydney and Port-aux-Basques which, on completion of a motor highway between Corner Brook and Port-aux-Basques, will include suitable provision for the carriage of motor vehicles.

For the purpose of railway rate regulation, the island of Newfoundland will be included in the maritime region of Canada, and through traffic moving between North Sydney and Port-aux-Basques will be treated as all-rail traffic. All legislation of the Parliament of Canada providing the special rates on traffic moving within, into, or out of, the maritime region will, as far as appropriate, be made applicable to the islands of Newfoundland.

These terms were signed 25 years ago, and in those 25 years the progress made has been insignificant because we are not much farther ahead today than we were a quarter of a century ago.

Because of a lack of projected planning concerning transportation needs, we have had a series of emergency situations which arise each year due to the lack of foresight.

I am sure that when the member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) replies, he will list all the great things the Ministry of Transport has done over the years. He will mention the new ferry that is being built at a cost of many millions of dollars. He will talk about the transportation studies, but he will not convince me that the progress over the 25 years since confederation has resulted in anything but an inefficient transportation policy, that even his minister admits has prevailed over the years.

The government is still blind to the fact that the economic development of Newfoundland will never be achieved unless transportation is treated in a manner which recognizes the geographic isolation of the island. This focuses attention on the need for improvement in port facilities, the lack of which presently deters the industrial expansion which could take place because of the richness of the province's natural resources.

Newfoundland Ferry Service

The western part of the province which I represent possesses unlimited natural harbour potential at Corner Brook, which is the hub for transportation of goods and services to the great northern peninsula and Labrador, and is in a direct communication link with Montreal from which the bulk of goods are shipped. It has been a most frustrating experience to get the government to allocate enough funds to provide reasonable harbour facilities.

In 1969, after many years of begging and cajoling, the government finally provided improved port facilities, but to emphasize the lack of planning, by the time it was completed, because of the steady build up of traffic it could not meet the needs for which it was designed. Now, finally, the government has agreed, after more begging, to increase shed space, and reluctantly has included some $200,000 to make a start on additional storage space. Hopefully in future years, as the need requires, another $800,000 may be provided.

The western part of my province has a development potential which should be looked at with the highest priority.

Consistent with the development of the port of Corner Brook is the need to look seriously at the continual expansion of that whole area, along with the adjacent Curling waterfront, where private initiative has supported the development of the fishery. This, tied together with the infrastructure support for the vast pulp and paper industry, warrants a determined consideration by the Ministry of Transport to coordinate with the province a transportation base which is vital to development of that part of the province. In addition the establishment of a linerboard mill just 50 miles from Corner Brook emphasizes the need to treat with the highest priority the further development of Port Harmon to ensure the success of access in and out of the Stephenville mill.

The government should be looking right now, in its reorganization of Atlantic ferry and coastal services, at the need for direct service from Port-aux-Basques and North Sydney to the Bonne Bay area to develop further the tourist potential of the Gros Morne National Park. Even with the additional ferry boats that the parliamentary secretary will tell us about, the service will not be able to cope with the influx of tourists who, hopefully, will be taking advantage of the unique beauty of this party of Canada.

On October 12 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), together with the President of the CNR, announced with great fanfare this reorganization and its major objectives of coordination, improvement and expansion of the present ferry and coastal services to meet expected increased traffic demands in the years ahead, as well as the immediate unprecedented influx of traffic which the present system is attempting to handle.

None can quarrel with the words used by these three knowledgeable gentlemen. In the news release the Minister of Transport said:

> The creation of the new CN ferry and coastal operation is coupled with the Ministry of Transport plans for the purchase of new vessels and the construction of new terminals and passenger/cargo handling facilities. The fact that ferry and coastal services will continue to be a vital component of the transportation network has been amply demonstrated by the tremendous increase in demand upon the services in recent years.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Then we had this statement by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion:

> ... In addition to initiatives required to take care of the immediate needs, there was an obvious necessity for an overall programmed expansion of the services to meet the needs of regional growth in industry, commerce and tourism.

I can only wish this new organization well, but hope that the studies promised will be produced, and that when the recommendations are produced to provide the facilities we will not hear more tales of woe explaining that there will be deferment because of lack of funds.

● (1710)

One of the studies in which I am sincerely interested is the one on the Newfoundland-Labrador service, a service vital to the well-being of the inhabitants of that land mass. The meaningless contribution made by the federal government to that part of Canada justifies the use of the well-worn phrase "second class citizen treatment" when applied to northern Newfoundland and Labrador.

Apart from the complete lack of communication between northern Newfoundland and Labrador, other than the existence of a dirt road, the lack of development input to this part of Canada is nothing short of disgraceful. Certainly the northern vision does not include northern Newfoundland and Labrador, and this lack of vision is apparent in the CBC's aim to provide television and radio communication to only 98 per cent of the country. The CNT facilities still leave much to be desired in view of the fact that it is impossible on most days to communicate by telephone with citizens in the north, people who pay exorbitant rates to hear nothing.

Perhaps it is time for a change in the ministers who are responsible for that part of Canada, and I wonder if the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) might not consider taking over this responsibility.

Priority should be given to some meaningful exploration of the possibility of linking that part of the country with the national park area by continuing the construction of a decent highway to meet the proposed Labrador-Quebec highway. Also, consideration should be given to the proposed development of the lower Churchill to bring power to Labrador and Newfoundland. The Ministry of Transport should consider very seriously the establishment of a ferry service to cover the 10 to 11 miles between these two land masses. This should include other departments concerned, and should be undertaken in consultation with the province. The other ministers responsible would be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mrs. Sauvé).

But the main point of my motion is to put on record the failure of the government to comply in a meaningful way with the Terms of Union Statement No. XIV indicating that after the date of union the CNR would be entrusted with the responsibility of operating the Newfoundland railway and coastal steamship services and that it would be their responsibility to ensure that the services furnished were commensurate with traffic requirements. This they have not done in accordance with their commitment. What is most important, they are breaking faith with this commitment by abandoning the rail passenger service against the wishes of the majority of Newfoundlanders.

On a couple of occasions the minister has hinted that some reconsideration will be given to reviewing that decision regarding the rail passenger service. Certainly I hope that the study of transportation in Newfoundland will be expanded to a review of the need to fulfill the national dream which would provide a rail service from coast to coast. This service should not be from Vancouver to Halifax only, but should include all of Canada and thus cover the area from Vancouver to St. John's, Newfoundland.

I am sure that the minister, who has shown evidence of sincerity, agrees with me that the transportation policy leaves much to be desired—and here I am being kind. I hope that he will heed my remarks, and I am sure that his very capable parliamentary secretary will be able to give me the answers to the questions which I have put, and that a proper transportation service between the province of Newfoundland and mainland Canada can be assured.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to let it be known to you and to the House that Newfoundland will not be left aside. Newfoundlanders will receive consideration, as does any other part of the country, with regard to their transportation problems. That is under study at present.

What I would like to point out to the hon. member for Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is that the government will not try to minimize in any way the fact that the disruption of the ferry service between Newfoundland and the mainland creates a serious problem. This we recognize. But I would like to say to the hon. member that it appears from his motion that what he wants is to take away the right to strike from the employees of the ferry service.

Is he really serious when he says that he wants to take that right away from them so soon after we have given them that privilege? This motion involves many more people. It involves dockers and those working on the wharves. If that is what the hon. member wants, let us hear from his leader, and let him inform the public that his party wants to take away the right to strike from the employees.

Is it also the policy of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to take away that right from employees of the ferry service? If it is, then he also should go on the record and say plainly and clearly to people in Newfoundland that both he, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, and other members from Newfoundland—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is deliberately trying to mislead the House. He is pointing his finger at me and calling out my constituency. He is saying that we are trying to prevent people from striking. In my motion last Monday I made no reference whatever to the right of people to strike, nor did I suggest in my speech, or in my motion, nor indeed does the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member would not ask the Chair to ask the hon. member for St. Boniface to withdraw his remarks. What has taken place is a debate, and this is the purpose of this assembly. I know the hon. member will want to contribute to the debate later this afternoon, and he will have the opportunity then to rebut the comments of the hon. member who is speaking.

Unless the hon. member can prove to the Chair that his honour, his rights or privileges as a member of parliament have been affected, I think we should allow the parliamentary secretary to complete his remarks.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): So far I have not mentioned the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter), but now I will name him with the others if he feels the same way as does the hon. member for St. George's-St. Barbe concerning the taking away of the right to strike from the ferry employees for the purpose as he says, of having a better ferry service, and I will not withdraw the previous remarks I have made.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish the hon. member for St. Boniface would use the correct nomenclature of my constituency which is Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will do so, Mr. Speaker. If it is their policy, and if it is also the policy of the Official Opposition to take away the right to strike from employees, they should place it on the record of this House, and also say it to the people in Newfoundland, so that we will know that they do not speak with two tongues, one in their constituencies and one in the House.

It is about time that people heard what the Official Opposition says both inside and outside the House, as well as individual members in their constituencies.

What does the hon. member want to do? Does he want to take away the right to strike of the employees? And if they strike, does he want them placed in jail? If that is the way they want it, again they should say that that is the policy of the Conservative Party and go on the record as saying it, and not put it in the broad terms of the motion before us. May I say further, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the policy of this government to take away the right to strike from the employees.

● (1720)

The government would certainly not entertain the idea of doing what the hon. member is suggesting, and that is to interfere with the right of the workers to strike, a right which was accorded to them as part of the free collective bargaining process.

The federal government recognizes the desirability of maintaining regular service between Newfoundland and the mainland, and would like to prevent problems involving the railway system spilling over to the ferry system merely because both are operated by the Canadian National Railways. As a first step the East Coast Marine and Ferry Service was recently set up as a separate entity within the Canadian National organization to handle ferry matters. This new body has now begun negotiations with the various unions representing employees in the ferry system, with a view to finding some mutually acceptable means of limiting strikes against the ferry services.

In the fall of 1972 a team of Canadian National and Department of Transport officials began examining the original structure of the east coast ferry service to Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, and considering alternatives. Among those considered were: creating a separate entity for the ferry service that would report to the Canadian National Vice President responsible for the Atlantic region; creating a separate Canadian National subsidiary with its own board of directors; creating a Crown corporation, or incorporating the ferry service in the public service.

On October 12, 1973, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and Mr. McMillan of the Canadian National announced the creation of a new east coast ferry management structure, based at Moncton, New Brunswick, with operating units in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, and responsible for all ferry and coastal services operated by Canadian National for the Department of Transport.

A significant feature of this reorganization was the creation of a directing committee for the new administration, composed of senior transport officials and Canadian National officials. The major objectives of the new administration were co-ordination, improvement and expansion of the present ferry and coastal services to meet the expected increases in traffic demands.

It should be noted that under all of the alternatives employees would either have, by law, the right to strike or be able to choose the right to strike as a means of dispute settlement. Is this what we want? Does the motion mean that we should take this away from them?

Even if the various ferry services could be declared essential, I cannot see much point in trying to bring in legislation which would prohibit strikes. There is absolutely no way of ensuring that employees under certain conditions might not find it necessary or desirable to initiate a work stoppage. We should remember that in the last strike situation affecting the ferries the government succeeded in obtaining the agreement of the union leaders that ferry services would be maintained, but their own men rejected the call of the leaders and the guarantee evaporated.

It has been suggested again and again that rather than have a shutdown of ferry service the armed forces should be called in to keep the services running. This has been suggested many times. This seems to me to be a counsel of despair, but fortunately it could never be considered as a viable alternative. For one thing, by law only qualified seamen can operate a passenger vessel, and the appropriate skills and qualifications are not easily found in the armed forces. Furthermore, the law also requires that ships be manned by officers holding certain certificates, and these are not available in the military. Most of all, however, the government would not be easily disposed to using the military as strike breakers, when the right to strike was itself given by parliament.

I would like to repeat that the Minister of Transport has said on many occasions—including some in this chamber—that if the members want to abolish the right to strike they will have to do so on their own, since the government has no intention of taking such action. I said before, and I should like to repeat, that if the hon. members from Newfoundland and their leader have that policy in their party, they ought to say so and not come in the back door.

I cannot resist at this point drawing the hon. member's attention to the evidence of how seriously the government is trying to live up to its commitments under the terms of union. Detailed planning is already under way for the design and construction of new ferries in Canadian shipyards, and in the interim the government has spent considerable amounts of money on chartering vessels to make sure that all traffic offering can be handled in accordance with the terms of union.

The traffic growth to Newfoundland jumped from an average of 5 per cent a year until 1971 to 14 per cent in 1972, and it has required considerable effort and money to keep up with this sort of growth. I am most pleased to say there is that kind of growth in the area. I am following it much closer than the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) may think, Mr. Speaker. I think I am quite aware of what is taking place in his province.

Today on the Newfoundland run we have eight vessels regularly employed. They are the William Carson, Leif Eriksson, Ambrose Shea, Frederick Carter, John Hamilton Gray, Stena Carrier, Stena Seatrade and the Princess of Tasmania. In addition, to clear up the backlog resulting from the 1973 strike, the Stena Trailer and the Jarl Transporter were taken on short term charter.

The replacement of the Lucy Maud Montgomery on this service by the larger chartered vessel the Princess of Tasmania, combined with additional weekend sailings, has helped to provide an increased capacity to handle the growth in highway traffic. In order to eliminate the railcar backlog experienced in the last two years, a railcar carrier the Stena Seatrade has been chartered for two years as of last fall, and tenders have been called for a Canadian built vessel of this type with expected delivery late in 1973.

Mr. Marshall: Too late! You should have done it ten years ago.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member says it should have been done ten years ago. Maybe so! The fact remains that it is being done. It takes time, but it is coming and you will get exactly what you are asking for. At least you know it is coming, but the opposition never mentions that these things are taking place and neither do they mention the cost of them. I think it should be repeated many times that this government has taken the initiative to have the ferries built which will benefit Newfoundland very greatly. In the Diefenbaker years they never even thought of Newfoundland, and that is obvious if we want to study the record as suggested by the hon. member for St. John's West.

Detailed studies are continuing on new passenger ferries and the related ports requirements. The final design stage should be reached this year.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can see no reason why the government should favour the motion moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe to take away the right of workers to strike which has been given to them in the past. It is certainly their right, and I for one would not want to support any such action.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in this debate because, as the House recalls, we had a similar debate on Monday afternoon last in connection with a private member's notice of motion which I placed on the order paper, concerning the ferry service.

But having listened to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) I cannot help but rise to make a few comments in connection with some of the things he said. The hon. member has the uncanny ability to twist words and to make black white.

No one on this side of the House, including the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), has suggested that workers should not have the right to strike. The hon. member's motion suggests, as my motion of last Monday suggested, that the 500,000 people living on the island part of Newfoundland-Labrador have the right of access to the Canadian mainland and the right to expect goods passengers and motor cars to travel to the mainland without interruption.

Perhaps if Canadian National had been more generous, more considerate, more willing to listen to reason the strikes which took place in the ferry service would not have taken place. The strike which took place last year, which isolated the island part of the province by removing the ferry service, and which imposed hardships on those travelling between the island and the mainland, can be blamed on the attitude of Canadian National and that of the Canadian government generally.

When the hon. member replied to my motion on Monday it was apparent that he was reading a speech which had been written for him, probably by some upper Canadian oriented bureaucrat. Obviously he had taken a correspondence course in cost accounting, because he included in the speech figures to do with the cost of transporting goods per ton from the mainland of Canada to the island part of the province of Newfoundland. My hon. friend's speech writer did not take into account that every ton of freight brought to our province, or brought to Atlantic Canada generally, which is manufactured in Upper Canada, in the golden triangle, is contributing greatly to the economy of the latter area. Certainly the cost of the subsidy is not a negative factor, as the parliamentary secretary would have the people of Canada and this House believe.

We recognize that substantial subsidies are being paid by the government in connection with the ferry service. That, however, is not the argument. The hon. member tried to twist the argument around completely, and to misinterpret the meaning of the motion I moved on Monday, and that which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe brought forward today.

We recognize that the ferry service is costly. We recognize, too, that keeping rail freight and passenger service in operation in other parts of Canada costs the Canadian taxpayer a lot of money. The cost of building and maintaining the trans Canada highway was, and is tremendous. That cost is borne by the Canadian taxpayer. We say that, according to the terms of union, we are entitled to travel from the island part of the province to the mainland of Canada without paying a toll or tariff.

How would the hon. member feel if he had to pay a toll charge every time he left his province and drove to Ontario or Saskatchewan? How would manufacturers in his province feel if a tariff were levied on goods manufactured in Manitoba and exported to other provinces, or on goods being brought into Manitoba? That, in effect, is what is happening in Newfoundland.

I contend, and my colleagues agree, that the 90 miles of water separating the island part of Newfoundland from the mainland should be treated, for purposes of rate structures, exactly as if they were 90 miles of trans Canada highway. The same argument could be advanced for the island province of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). A person living in Ontario can cross the bridge to Quebec without paying a tool or tariff.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it clear that I was not talking against the transportation system as such. My remarks were directed against the motion presented by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and against the idea of taking away the right to strike of employees. That is a different matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member has had a chance to make his speech. I think he should allow the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) to express his own opinion.

Mr. Carter: I am sure, now that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is in the chamber, that he will be pleased to know that the hon. member for St. Boniface has levied accusations at him, too, with regard to the right to strike. The right to strike of Canadian National employees working on the ferry service is being questioned by that party. The hon. member may wish to deal with this.

I will not take up any more of the time of the House. I hope that this motion, unlike the one brought forward on Monday last, will come to a vote. May I leave one word with hon. members: we are not being extravagant in our demands. We know what it costs to keep the ferry service working. We are only asking as an island province, and I include P.E.I. in my remarks, that we be treated like any other part of Canada, and that the people living on these islands not be penalized merely because they live on an island.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I agree.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is silent on how the employees concerned would go about improving their pay and working conditions. It therefore seems reasonable and fair for the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) to assume that the mover of the motion intends to remove the right to strike of those employees engaged in the ferry service between the mainland and the island.

Mr. Carter: That is wrong.

Mr. Caccia: That is a logical conclusion, because the mover of the motion was silent about this. It would certainly facilitate this debate if he had the courage to say that he is against giving the right to strike to these particular employees. Then we would know exactly what is the purpose of the motion. If my assumption is correct—

Mr. Marshall: It is your assumption.

Mr. Caccia: —the hon. member would remove the right to strike in order that this service could be maintained on a continuous year-round basis, and thereby fulfil the needs and requirements of the people who live on the island.

Apparently the hon. member wishes to remove the right to strike. Let me point out that legislation prohibiting strikes does not necessarily lead to the elimination of strikes and other patterns of labour unrest. Sometimes it leads to exactly the contrary result, labour unrest. In this case that might undermine even more the continuity of service about which the hon. member is so concerned. Obviously his way would be the wrong way to go about this.

If you want to make sure that this service is available and not interrupted, you should make sure that the kind of agreement which is signed will satisfy the hopes and aspirations of the men. Certainly you cannot maintain service by introducing legislation to prohibit strikes because your purpose will not be accomplished.

We know that this House in 1967 gave workers in the public service the right to strike. This right became part of their free collective bargaining process. Obviously in view of that decision of Parliament this government does not wish to interfere with the rights of any segment of the public service. If you want to remove the rights of the ferry workers you could also say, "Why not do it for the air traffic controllers, or the firemen in Vancouver, or for other sectors?" If that is your position, you might as well have the courage to say, "Abolish the right to strike of public employees, period".

Perhaps in a moment of ecstacy at their meeting in Ottawa in February the Progressive Conservatives forgot to pass that resolution. They reconfirmed the leadership with a vote of six hundred and some odd delegates. According to the papers that was only a quarter of the enrolled delegates.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member should stick to the motion. He does not know what he is talking about. This is stupid and ridiculous. Probably the only time the hon. member has seen a boat was at a sportsmen show. He should either be put straight or the motion should be put to a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member had an opportunity to make his speech. Unless he has a valid point of order we will return to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: It is true that even my best friends could not claim I am an expert on ferry boats, although we do have ferry boats in Toronto which connect the islands with the mainland. They are a fascinating feature of our style of life on Lake Ontario. That is one point.

I will now deal with a major point raised by the hon. member in the motion he has put forward, namely, the question of the guarantee and obligation to ensure continuous and uninterrupted transportation service. Continuous and uninterrupted can only be interpreted to mean one thing. How else can that be achieved except by removing the right to strike? The hon. member may not like my interpretation, but he chose to be silent on how he would accomplish this. Therefore it is perfectly legitimate for the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) and others to interpret it in that way.

It is a well known fact that groups in society who do not have a right to strike fall back badly in their economic conditions. A typical example is the hospital workers. Look at the desperate economic conditions in which they have to work and support their families. The hon. member in his motion is suggesting that those engaged in ferry boat service should work under the same conditions as those who do not enjoy the right to strike. Without the right to strike how can they improve their economic lot?

Is that the kind of policy the Conservatives want to put to the Canadian people? Is that the kind of progress they would like to see? If that is the case they can have it because it is regression, not progression.

History is full of ideas of this kind. It is a well known fact that when people are well paid and their pay is comparable with other sectors of society, they do not withdraw their services. No one in this House could deny that. For example, have members ever heard of chairmen of boards, or presidents of large corporations going on strike? Have members of the Conservative party ever heard of people in the higher brackets of the corporate world going on strike? Obviously not. Why not? One need only look at the financial section of last Thursday's Globe and Mail which listed individuals earning between $200,000 and $300,000 a year. This list gives the incomes of these persons and the companies for which they work.

Because some people in our society can command such an income does that mean the chairman of the board of General Motors is worth 60 times the amount earned by a man engaged in ferry boat service? Certainly not. It is because we do not believe in that kind of assumption that we believe in protecting the right to strike for those in society who have been able to achieve it.

I can see from the expression on the face of the mover of this motion that he does not understand the implication of what he has moved. Probably that is his problem. Anyone who reads this motion will understand that continuous and uninterrupted service means removing the right to strike from the people involved. How can it mean anything less than that?

The mover had better understand the consequences of his motion. The onus was on him to clarify it in his speech. He did not do that. He only talked about the right under the constitution to maintain this service. The onus is on members opposite to demonstrate that this right can be protected without removing the right to strike. Obviously that cannot be done.

In 1967 the parliament of this nation introduced, as a permanent feature for the federal employees of this country, the right to strike. Those involved in this ferry service are federal employees. Therefore, any motion to secure continuous and uninterrupted service from employees engaged in this kind of activity must of necessity remove their right to strike. Whether members opposite like it or not, that is the consequence of this motion. It is as clear as the light of day.

An hon. Member: That is your opinion.

Mr. Caccia: Of course, that is my opinion. Any member of this chamber is entitled to express his opinion. That is not unusual. Perhaps we will hear a better opinion from members opposite. However, up until this time we have heard the opinion of two speakers and they were of no particular consequence to this motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: I can see from the interjections that members opposite do not like that. Obviously I am touching a raw nerve. They do not like to see it brought to the surface that underneath all their declarations of policy they do not support the idea of the right to strike in the public service. That is the essence of this motion.

Mr. McGrath: Get some more notes from Joe Guay.

Mr. Caccia: I do not need more notes from the parliamentary secretary. He has been very helpful in providing me with notes.

● (1750)

The opposition cannot be criticized for lack of consistency. Two members from Newfoundland have put forward motions which are clearly consistent in economic terms. Last week the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter), I believe, was advocating a reduction in rates applicable to freight and passenger cars using the ferry service to Newfoundland.

Mr. Marshall: What cars?

Mr. Caccia: Read the motion. It is motion No. 4.

Mr. Marshall: What passenger cars? You took them away.

Mr. Caccia: Today the hon. member for Humber-St. George's- St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) advocated a system whereby people engaged in those services would not be able to strike as are others under federal jurisdiction. This is one way to economize, expressed by the hon. member who spoke today, in order to achieve the objectives of the hon. member who spoke a week or so ago in favour of reducing freight rates. Obviously if you refuse the right to strike, wages and salaries will not be as high and costs will be reduced correspondingly—unless of course, the workers affected choose to take part in illegal strikes, a situation which usually leads to chaos. That is the essence of the motion as far as I can judge.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a shameful and shocking thing that when an hon. member from Newfoundland makes an appeal based on the constitutional rights of his province for an improved transportation service he should be greeted by the subtle and slimy sinuosity of those who suggest he is calling for strike breaking legislation. There have been many appeals from my province, and from Newfoundland, for better transportation, but this is the first time there has been such lack of concern as to preclude even an expression of sympathy for the people down there.

The motion is properly phrased for it is in almost exactly the terms as those signed by Prince Edward Island. Let the hon. member sneer at that. We are dealing here with a constitutional right, one which it is my hon. friend's job to defend. I am appalled that supporters of the government on the backbenches are in such a state that they cannot deal with transportation without getting into strike breaking. When we want to talk about the transport system we shall do so. We shall make our plans known. We support the legalized trade unions of this country. In this we do not take a backseat to anybody.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I say it is shameful if they can give no other message to the people of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland than to tell them we cannot cure our transportation ills or improve our situation without strike breaking. The minister is right. Transportation is in a mess, and hon. members opposite have been talking to him for so long that their thinking is equally messy.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) can interpret anything said by members on this side as indicating that opposition speakers have put forward anti-labour views. The speeches made from this side simply draw attention to the difficulty which arises from the motion before us.

Everyone agrees there is a constitutional obligation here. No one denies that Newfoundland has as much right as any other part of Canada to enjoy satisfactory communication with the rest of the country. No one denies there is a need for adequate transportation. But it must also be recognized that a solution cannot be reached simply by passing legislation along the lines suggested. The solution has to be an acceptable one, one which will rule out possible interruptions of the service in the future. We cannot force upon those who are operating the ships from the island to the mainland a solution which would mean removing from them the right to the process of free collective bargaining. However, there is no doubt that within the present framework a solution has to be found.

We on this side are objecting to the misleading information given by speakers on the other side of the House—implications that the government has been doing nothing about this problem. That is absolute balderdash.

Newfoundland Ferry Service

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we see sitting over there in his improper seat the master of the Great Plains Navigational Institute, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), who has absolutely no knowledge of any water. The only water he sees is piped in from I don't know what direction.

An hon. Member: The Saskatchewan River.

Mr. Blais: Undoubtedly from another province. And undoubtedly Alberta depends more on Saskatchewan than Saskatchewan depends on Alberta.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock, and although I had some salient points to raise I suggest we might all go for dinner.

An hon. Member: Continue, by all means.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Blais: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already taken his seat. He cannot speak twice.

Mr. Blais: I have not.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) rising to speak?

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I see that it is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my mind, it is not yet six o'clock, unless the hon. member has the consent of the House. In the opinion of the Chair, there are still 45 seconds to go before six o'clock.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised by the attitude of the Tory opposition in the House today. Their behaviour shows clearly that a rest would have been beneficial to them because they undoubtedly are on edge.

Someone who does not understand the motion before us now is either stupid or unwilling to understand. Moreover, once again the French text renders disservice to hon. members because it translates "to ensure continuous and uninterrupted transportation service" by "service permanent". It is not at all the correct translation, Mr. Speaker, and that must be pointed out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being six o'clock and the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Blais.]

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Howard.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, when I called it five o'clock I was talking about the government's axe blade approach to credit. I said that if we had to have some curtailment of the money supply in Canada, some reduction in the amount of money available within the banking system because of an over-heated economy, then it was imperative for the government to introduce controls that properly allocated the amount of money available for business. I suggested that if the government really did want to restrict credit, to stop speculation and inflation, then perhaps it might intervene in the speculative activities taking place in the real estate market as well as in the commodities market.

However, one thing that the government must not do is interfere with the amount of money available to small business, to people who produce goods, farm products and fisheries products, because to do so would destroy small business. The loan provisions that are the essence of Bill C-14 would be rendered useless if the government did what it did in 1968, 1969 and 1970, which is to suck up the money supply and to say: "Okay, we are going to cut down inflation and make everybody poor".

This is at the root of the contingency program that this government is proposing to lay before the people of Canada. This is its way to curb inflation. If the government uses monetary controls, yes, eventually they will work. But they will throw 900,000 people out of work, and destroy the business community. They will make it tough for farmers to sell their products and for the fishermen to sell theirs. They will put businessmen out on their ass. But the government has done this before and it is what it intends to do today. That is the reason for the increase in the re-discount rate. This is the government's contingency plan to halt inflation, the plan it has been talking about for the past year and a half.

The government must come to this House and admit that we should have monetary controls, that we cannot continue to print $678 million worth of Bank of Canada notes which are put into circulation because they cannot borrow this sum on the market. I suggest the government must recognize the fact that if we are to tighten the money supply, the money supply must be allocated. Thus those areas in our economy which would die if the money supply were cut off in the traditional Liberal sense would at least have enough life blood to carry on, to grow and build. It is small business, small farmers and fishermen, the businesses run by little people, that make a free Canada possible. A free Canada is only possible if each of us individually has the ability to make it on our own. We can only do this if cash is available to us from a bank.

As far as the Small Businesses Loans Act is concerned, the legislation has unfortunately been a total failure since it was passed. There were only 2,800 loans made under the act in 1972, simply because its provisions are not advertised. What happens, Mr. Speaker, when a guy goes into a bank and asks for one of these loans? The banker says to him, "Where is your wife's signature, where is your life insurance?" If a man wants a government guaranteed loan he is shown the door and told he does not qualify for one. If a man asks for a government guaranteed loan he winds up outside the door of the bank.

In my constituency of Mississauga I know only one person who has ever received a small businessman's loan, and there are swarms of small businessmen in my community. The reason they do not get these loans is simply that the banking system is not forced to give them a loan under the act. The banking system tells them that if they have not got good enough credit for an ordinary commercial loan or for a consumer loan at 12, 13 or 15 per cent, then they have not got good enough credit for a small business loan. There is no requirement upon the banking system to allocate a portion of the amount available for loans to small business.

The only people who obtain small business loans guaranteed to some extent by the government are those who have pull, who have drag, or who have the knowledge to tell a banker he had better give it to them or they will call their member of parliament. If a person has to say to his banker that he will call his member of parliament he might or might not obtain the loan. The probability is that the banker will find something wrong with this person's credit because, under the terms of the act, it is only those persons ordinarily commercially qualified who may obtain a loan in the first place.

A bank may take the position that because the government guarantees only 90 per cent of the loan it must pick up the balance of 10 per cent—that if the bank stands to lose one penny on a dollar loan it will refuse to loan the money. Banks can think of a thousand reasons for not making loans at 8¼ per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent, when they themselves can get 14 per cent and 15 per cent.

So, what happens? Nothing happens. The problem with this legislation is that there is no requirement on the banking system to lend any money. Each chartered bank could sit back and take the position that it will not lend money under the Small Businesses Loans Act with only 90 per cent guaranteed by the government. There is no allocation provision in this legislation. There is no provision which requires any chartered bank to lend any amount of money whatsoever to the small businessman, the fisherman or the farmer.

However, banks do make some cosmetic loans. The Canadian Bank of Commerce in 1972 made less than 600 loans. This is the second largest bank in the country. It will undertake some cosmetic loans, but the gross amount in 1972 in respect of small business amounted to only $28 million, while the total amount of money involved in bank loans was over $40 billion. When we talk about an amount of $28 million in that context it is obvious that it is only cosmetic loans that are involved.

This is a cosmetic act. It is cosmetic because the government intends to go on the election platform in 1974 saying what great value this is to the small businessman, the fisherman and the farmer. The truth of the matter is that the government does not give a damn about the fisherman, the farmer or the small businessman, because it is unprepared to demand that the banking system in fact lend a reasonable amount of funds to the man who is trying to succeed on his own.

This attitude on the part of the government should be explained by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), but we do not receive such an explanation. When the small businessman goes to the bank he must pledge his wife, his life insurance policies, his children, his house and the family silverware in order to obtain a loan. He will obtain a loan only if he qualifies, and it really does not matter whether or not this act exists because he either accepts the loan on the bank's terms or does not obtain a loan at all.

If we are to control inflation in this country we must control the amount of credit available. We must control the expansion of our money supply, and in controlling that expansion of the money supply we can do two things. We can either accept the axe-blade approach of this and past Liberal governments, which is to tighten up the money supply and say "The devil take the hindmost", or we could have a selective allocation of money in certain areas of the economy to make the economy grow and work. We can either have the axe-blade approach, which sees that the speculator receives all he can and, as a result, the small businessman is out on the street, or we can have a government concerned about the development of the economy, a government that is prepared to see that the small businessman receives his share and that the speculator gets cut off.

This is the difference between the attitude of this party and that of the government opposite. The government does not want to worry about selective controls, or about the fine art of tuning the economy to make sure that credit supply is available to those who have a more rightful call upon it. The government seems to take the position that those who can afford to pay for the money will receive it, that the speculator will get all he wants in commodities, real estate or whatever, but the man who is trying to build a small business will be cut off because the Minister of Finance says that unless the interest rate is high enough the banks will not lend to the small man.

Well, how high does the interest rate really have to be? Does it have to be 10 per cent or 12 per cent? Do we in this nation always have to be controlled by the New York rates? Do we in Canada always have to determine our interest rates having regard to the foreign exchange control rates? Do we have to worry about the fact that General Motors can borrow its money in the Canadian money market and pay dividends in the United States with Canadian money? Is this the kind of Canada we want, or are we prepared to have an independent Canada, with independent control of our credit?

I say we must have an independent Canada, a Canada prepared to have control of its own credit. If the small businessman requires a loan he should be able to obtain it at a reasonable rate of interest. He should not be pirated or pushed around because of a money shortage, or because Ford of Canada, General Motors, a steel company or some other large corporation has better credit and can take the dollar and do what it wants with it. That is the approach the government takes.

In its contingency plan the government takes the attitude that if the rates are increased enough, and if the money supply is made tight enough, the money supply will be reduced. That is true. The effect of this attitude is an axe-blade approach to chop down the money supply without regard to who is hurt. I say that is exactly what will happen to the small businessmen, the fishermen and the farmers. It is what happened to them in 1969, 1970 and 1971 under the policies of this government. What we need today is a statement from the Minister of Finance to the effect that he intends to control inflation in such a manner that those who produce in Canada will have enough credit to work with, that those who create supplies will have enough money to work with and so that those who farm, fish and are involved in small business will have enough money to work with but that those who speculate in commodities, real estate and so on will be out of luck. So far this has not been the attitude the minister and this government are prepared to express. The small businessman, the farmer and the fisherman cannot conceivably trust this government because what they are looking at is a re-enactment of the 1969 and 1970 tight money situation.

That was their attitude when they said: 6 per cent of the people are out of work, so what, we are going to control inflation. All right, perhaps there it is necessary to have some monetary controls to control inflation, but they do not need to use monetary controls as if it were a meat axe. You do not have to chop willy nilly. You can deal with the money supply on a proper allocation of that supply to those parts of the community that are entitled to the use of credit in a society. Until we have a federal administration that is prepared to make sure that the allocation of money supply is socially acceptable and is prepared to tune the economy of this country, I for one as a member of this House will have no faith in this government. I say to you that small business has no faith in this government, that fishermen have no faith in this government, that farmers have no faith in this government, and indeed the people of Canada have no faith in the government. If the government had any guts, it would let us have an opportunity to vote no confidence and thus find out who has faith in it because, I suggest to you, that an election today would throw them out where they belong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to add a few words, after having listened carefully to the comments of the previous speaker about the bill before the House tonight, especially as concerns the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at once what I thought of the comments of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) who spoke before me and who, for all practical purposes, put the blame for the increase of the interest rates on the government. I agree with him that the government is to blame for letting the Bank of Canada increase its interest rate. However, I should like to refer to the administration of the right hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, for 1958 to 1960. In 1960, I was a small businessman. Like all other small businessmen, I had to borrow from the bank. At a given moment, my credit was good for $5,000 or $6,000 in a bank. The next day, the Progressive Conservative government of that day wanted to slow down at all costs the impetus of Canadian businessmen by reducing their bank credit. In 1959 and 1960, all businessmen saw their bank credit reduced in order to curb inflation. For them, it was the tightness of the money they put in the bank. I think that the present government, with the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), whom I like very much by the way since he is a charming man, must listen to those who have decided that we should not have tight money, but that we should force those who need money to borrow at a higher interest rate, which is the same thing. When the Progressive Conservative party is in power, it promotes tight money in order to stop inflation and prevent businessmen from obtaining credit to be able to increase production.

Since I was a manufacturer at that time, I had to reduce my administration and the number of my employees by 50 per cent, because I no longer had the capital to wait for receivable accounts, and to make the business work. I therefore had to reduce my expansion and I waited for the Progressive Conservative government of that time to decide to relax bank credit to some extent.

I believe that neither the Progressive Conservatives of that time nor the present government have the solution to the difficulties of the small businessman.

The bill before us this evening enables those who want to buy cattle to borrow $50,000 instead of $25,000. In two or three weeks, they are going to pay the bank an interest rate of 11½, 12 per cent. At present, as western beef producers know, it is possible, as I read the other day in the beef producer's bulletin, a gross price of 4½ per cent. The more the beef producer gets into debt, at 12½ per cent, the sooner he will go bankrupt, and the more he will be inclined to give up breeding. Perhaps at a certain time, such a bill might have been good, when the bank lent money at 4¾, 5, 5¼ per cent, but now, it is a worthless jumble, it is useless. How will those who want to borrow money at 12½ per cent, when their operations bring in only 4¾ make profits? How will they live?

I think that the government increases the interest rate on loans in order to slow down Canadian home builders, to slow down manufacturers and other people who are confident in the future, to check the inflation which increases by 1, 1½ per cent a month.

As far as I am concerned, I do not believe this at all. At present, the only thing which prevents more businessmen from expanding is a lack of material. It is due to the fact that the government, under the tax system, considers the manufacturer's inventory as a net profit and then he has to pay taxes on this inventory. If he is taxable at 25 per cent, he pays 25 per cent more than he should on his inventory.

Therefore, he does not keep any inventory. If you want to buy gyproc, metal or any other building material, they make a back order and say: We do not have it, we will deliver it to you within two, three, four or five months. Why? Because the government decides to impose a tax on manufacturers' inventories. If a manufacturer's income is taxable at 24 or 25 per cent, he must then pay 25 per cent of tax on his inventory. Therefore, he does not want any inventory. First he sells his product and then sends his invoices. There is nothing in his books, there is nothing for sale, there is no more inventory.

That is what the government says: We must stop inflation. On the contrary, when the manufacturer's inventories are not released, it results in a product shortage. Then, there is no more bargaining and people say: I'll buy it. There is no more cash discount and people buy the product whenever they need it. That is what is happening at present.

Through this bill, the government tolerates the increase in interest rates, and manages to get people who need money to borrow it even if it is more expensive. This will involve a rise in the cost of living. I wonder what the Minister of Finance is thinking about when he says: By increasing interest rates, we are stopping inflation.

I will recall that in 1968, the interest rate was 6 per cent and it has now gone up to 12 per cent. Of course the 6 per cent increase in the interest rate will be felt by anyone who needs food, machinery or other products. How could we control inflation? I suggest that this is a wrong reasoning, and I do not believe in it at all. With such an increase in interest rates, the rich are getting even richer, because they are lending money, and the poor are getting poorer because they borrow money at any rate. They need it and they make loans at 12, 13 or 14 per cent. They even borrow from finance companies at a rate of 28 per cent. They just don't care, they borrow money at the price at the going rates, they get poorer and the rich get richer. That is not the way we are going to stop inflation. We merely move money around; there is nothing to be done that way.

Mr. Speaker, I think the bill we are discussing has not been well thought out if one considers the timing of it, and I do not think it will do any good. This bill is useless and it is not introduced at the right moment because with current interest rates nobody will be able to benefit from it. I think those who pretend to make money with such interest rates will not be able to realize any benefit.

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I thought I would place some remarks on the record because I am primarily interested in the small business man although I come from a major industrial city, the city of Hamilton.

Mr. Whicher: I thought it was STELCO.

Mr. Alexander: I hear my friend across the way is not going to run any more. He has made a fantastic contribution, so he thinks, to the process. He mentioned one of our major industries. Without the steel company this nation fails; without the steel company we would not have the type of community involvement that exists. I understand they are giving money not only for loans to students but to enhance the community and such things as that. So, when you mention the steel company, speak with a great deal of respect.

To get back to my point, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the matters in Bill C-14 relating to Farm Improvement Loans and Fisheries Improvement Loans. Many of my colleagues on this side of the House have taken positions of some merit and have struck home in terms of the needs of members of their communities.

I my humble estimation, Mr. Speaker, the small businessman is of some significance in our country. Unquestionably he is a major taxpayer, he is an employer, he is a community leader; yet keeping in mind that those facts cannot be disputed, he is continually ignored. This is a problem which all of us face and realize. He is not only ignored but is continually frustrated by such things as an inefficient post office, an unworkable unemployment insurance scheme and the higher premiums for it recently announced by the responsible minister. He is also concerned about the high job vacancy rate in this country whilst he is begging for help for his own manpower problems. He is concerned and frustrated because of the voluminous legislation with which he has to contend, and he does not know what is going on. I am talking about the small businessman now.

It is all right for the big corporations—they have their high priced accountants, and auditors, and lawyers and lobbyists.

An hon. Member: And lawyers!

Mr. Alexander: I said lawyers, and I am a member of that honourable profession myself. Big business is able to look after itself, but the small businessman sees all this legislation coming out daily, weekly, monthly.

First of all he does not understand it, and secondly cannot implement it. He is very concerned when he submits briefs or brings statements before the House or a member of parliament, particularly those who are temporarily in government, that they may end up in the wastepaper basket.

Another thing that bothers me is that the small businessman does not know what is the political ideology of the government.

An hon. Member: All things to all people.

Mr. Alexander: I hear my friend, the socialist say, "All things to all people", and I think he is right. I think that is what the government is attempting to do and it is bothering the small businessman. I think the policy of my friends on the left is to be all things to all people; what they want to do is look after people from conception to ressurection. This is NDP philosophy, whereas that of the Liberals is to look after people from the womb to the tomb. Ours is that much better—from birth to death.

I repeat that the small businessman is concerned that the government is attempting to look after people from conception to resurrection, which is the principle ascribed to my friends to the left.

Our small businessmen and women work long hours and are totally involved in building a business, building an inventory, attempting to play a viable role in their communities and, indeed, in all of Canada. In this respect the small businessman is the strength of this nation. He is concerned when he finds that there is money for OFY, for LIP, and untold millions for the permanent community work programs, whatever they are. Yet there does not seem to be anything for him. He is the backbone of our economic strength, paying both federal and provincial salestax, municipal tax, gasoline tax, cigarette tax, UIC tax, and he is involved with the Workmen's Compensation Board. He is taxed to death to help others, but who is helping him? When I think of all those taxes, the amount that he receives, only $28 million allotted under the Small Businesses Loans Act in 1972, is chicken feed compared with the financial contribution he has made to our economic development.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the small businessman is not given further consideration by government, and if our economic system is not one that provides opportunity for him, then we will see free competitive enterprise disappear.

We must solve these problems, Mr. Speaker, and determine the measures that should be adopted in order to facilitate the supply of capital funds from Canadian sources to allow expanding industries to retain control. We must determine what measures should be recommended to enable and encourage our own financial institutions and banks to supply more freely this needed capital. Finally, we must decide how new and expanded industries can be channelled to reduce regional disparity.

Surely these problems are infinitely more important than worrying about the World Football League getting into Canada. The government of Canada should concentrate on offering the Canadian people a policy which places Canada in the forefront of the nations of the world in developing a progressive, elastic program for our economic growth, based less on the emotionalism of a narrow nationalism and more on sound economic thinking.

Here the government has introduced some ad hoc amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act. It had introduced amendments to the act since 1961. I tried to get the annual report for 1973, but apparently it is not out yet. Let me refer to page 5 of the 1972 report, the language of which I assume is not far different from that which we will find in the 1973 report. It says:

> The Small Businesses Loans Act came into force in 1961 for an initial period of approximately three years and was subsequently amended from time to time to provide additional lending periods and widen its scope of operations.
> The purpose of the legislation is to facilitate the availability of term credit to small businesses for a wide range of capital improvements. To this end, the Act authorizes the Minister of Finance to guarantee against loss term loans made to small businesses by chartered banks and other lenders designated by the Minister. Borrowers are required to provide a certain portion of the cost of the capital improvement from their own resources.

That last statement is worthy of notice. Most people who wish to avail themselves of the provisions of this act do not realize that they need a certain amount of capital in order to become involved. Unless they have some money of their own, or some collateral, the chartered bank or lending institution will say, "My doors are closed to you."

The purpose of this act is to enable people to become involved in the wholesale or retail trade, service business, construction, transportation or communications industries. Until now you could borrow a maximum of $25,000 if you had a gross income of some $500,000. The ceiling is now being raised to $50,000 for those with gross incomes of just under $1 million. I understand that the minister is in a position to guarantee some $250 million for purposes of the Small Businesses Loans Act for the next three years.

There is certainly a need for this increase in view of inflation. If you are a farmer and you want to buy a tractor you must spend a lot, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows. If you want to get into the service industry, or open a restaurant, $25,000 is not much good; that ceiling went through the window a long time ago.

Let me now refer to clause 6(1) of the bill. This amendment would extend the meaning of "bank" to include Alberta Treasury branches, thereby making those branches eligible lenders under the Small Businesses Loans Act. Without question that amendment is good, because chartered banks and other lending institutions need competition and they will get it under this provision.

Let me also refer to clause 6(2). This amendment, which adds the underlined words in the bill, would make new businesses eligible for business improvement loans. That disturbs me, Mr. Speaker. It talks of new business. What new business in the wholesale or retail trade, in the service business, construction, transportation or communications could you start with $50,000? I don't know. It is obvious that you need to have some portion of the starting capital before you borrow. Say that the total requirement is for $80,000. This means that you need $30,000 in the kitty before you can apply for the other $50,000.

I note clause 6(5) would extend the meaning of "small business enterprise" to include any business enterprise with an estimated gross revenue of up to $1 million. At present the limit is $500,000. Frankly, in these days of inflation I do not know how you could start any of the types of business I mentioned with the small amount of capital provided for here. However, as speaker after speaker has said, this is a step in the right direction and we must go along with it. At the same time we must register some of our concerns.

Let me point out that this bill provides nothing for market research for the small businessman. It says nothing about technical studies being available to him, or about the feasibility of such studies. These matters are significant to small businessmen. They are vitally important. I suggest that the banks ought to provide this service for nothing. After all they have on hand about $40 billion in one form or another, and we only loaned about $28 million under this program in 1972. You would think that the banking community would show a community instinct which could enhance the well being of the small businessman who, in turn, could enhance the banks' business.

The banks will not co-operate under this program, as member after member has said. The bill does not compel a lender to lend. There is no compulsion on lending institutions, chartered banks, or what have you. That is really upsetting. As many members have said, when you go to a bank manager for a loan he says, "You cannot get it because you are a bad risk." He will not lend you money under the Small Businesses Loans Act, but suggests that you borrow other money at 18 per cent or, failing that, that you go to the Industrial Development Bank. And you know what they will tell you. There is no way you will get money from them. That is why I say we are going through a charade.

A good friend of mine by the name of David Bernstein of Montreal is concerned about the attitude of the banks. He has written this about the banks and lending institutions:

> There exists at present a large number of financial institutions known as 'near banks', such as trust companies, savings and loan associations and syndicates operating regionally who should be authorized to enter into the banking field within their regions, but subject to monetary and fiscal policies dictated by the Federal authority. This would serve a secondary object of compelling the chartered banks to abandon their traditional policies, and oblige them to compete with these so-called regional financial institutions for investments in Canadian industries. This in turn might require the law to restrict the current practice of the chartered banks in establishing additional branches at will and not to defeat the proposed changes only to force these small financial institutions out of business.

He asks the questions, "Are there any financial institutions in Canada that can fill this vacuum? and goes on to say:

> It is my considered opinion that we now have financial institutions capable of fulfilling this need enabling Canadian business to obtain Canadian capital for the fuller growth of business in our country. Our chartered banks should be given the power by law, and encouraged to play a more active role in serving the legitimate needs of Canadian business, and the latter freed from the necessity of seeking such assistance outside of Canada, either from alien financial institutions, or by surrending control to alien corporations acquiring a majority interest in their shares or minority interest in a conglomerate merger.

● (2050)

> The Canadian Government has had for its purpose to penalize or to prevent foreign take-overs of Canadian corporations, however they have done relatively nothing in inducing Canadian capital investment in Canadian enterprise.

He refers to the takeover bill as Bill C-132.

> Bill C-132 has for its main object to permit the Canadian Government to prevent foreign take-overs of Canadian corporations where it is to the detriment of the Canadian economy, however it does not provide for any means in which a Canadian enterprise can obtain the necessary capital in Canada.

That is a significant statement by a very learned person. As a lawyer he probably has deals with smaller businessmen all the time. He is very concerned about the plight with which they are faced.

Has this act really been a tremendous success? I do not think so. Page 9 of the Small Business Loans Act Annual Report 1972 gives the loans by provinces and types of businesses for the calendar year 1972. Let us look at the province of Ontario, the province of opportunity, the province that sets the path of leadership, with all due respect, for most of the other provinces. How many loans did the banks, chartered institutions and other lending institutions make? I will read the figures for 1972. This is not for a month. I am talking for a whole year. In Ontario in the wholesale trade there were 23 loans. In the retail trade there were 153; in construction, 74; manufacturing, 89; service businesses, 236; transportation, 16 and communications, 5. Is that really a big deal? Does that show this act is attractive to small businessmen?

Perhaps we have a good act, but the criteria which are set down by regulation are really a detriment. That is why we have these insignificant figures in terms of how many loans are involved. It is hard to imagine that Ontario had only 596 loans. Let us look at the other provinces.

Mr. McGrath: Don't look at Newfoundland.

Mr. Alexander: I cannot help but get to that one. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) says not to look at Newfoundland. However, I will start with the Atlantic provinces. These figures are for the year 1972. In Newfoundland there were five loans.

Mr. McGrath: Shame!

Mr. Alexander: Do members want to hear what happened in the Yukon? There was one loan. In the Northwest Territories there were two loans.

I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) behind the curtain. I am glad he is here. I am not trying to make a partisan speech. I am just trying to show how ineffective this act is in terms of small businessmen. What about Prince Edward Island? There were 31 loans.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): We're right up there.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) seems happy with his 31. Surely he is not satisfied with that. He cannot be satisfied with 31 loans from his province. If that is his aim, I say shame. If that is so, he will not be back.

In Nova Scotia there were 37 loans. What kind of nonsense is this? These are areas which are continually crying about the need to remove their disparities. In New Brunswick there were 45 loans. The provinces that need the loans are not getting them. Why? Who can answer that?

In Quebec there were 1,091 loans. Ontario got about half that, 596; Saskatchewan, 174; Manitoba, 133; Alberta, 275 and British Columbia, 456 for a sum total for the whole dominion of Canada of 2,846 loans totalling $28¼ million. Isn't that absolutely ridiculous?

Mr. Howard: Were there any in the Yukon?

Mr. Alexander: Yes, one in the Yukon. The minister stands with pride. When we get to the banks, they are just as bad as this government in terms of their treatment. The figures have been given before, but I will put them on the record again: Bank of Montreal, 433; Bank of Nova Scotia, 134; Royal Bank of Canada, 952; Toronto Dominion Bank, 181; Mercantile Bank of Canada, 1; Canadian National Bank, 741; Provincial Bank of Canada, 41; my bank—the one I get my loans from, and I have them—Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 358; Bank of British Columbia, 4, and Credit Unions, 1. That is not a very good record.

We got a statement from the minister. He stated on November 21, 1973—and that is one of the last statements I saw—that the mortgage rate in the period under review, April 1, 1973 to September 30, 1973, was 6½ per cent. What is it now? 8¼ per cent.

Some members of this House, particularly those to my left, want the interest rate reduced to 6 per cent. No bank in the Dominion of Canada, or no near bank, would lend money at 6 per cent. You cannot get it at 8½ per cent now. That is what it was on April 1. Some members want to bring it down to 6 per cent. We certainly could not support any move with that as a basis of a motion. I am not the official spokesman, but it makes sense to forget about the socialists. They do not know what is going on around here anyway. All I can say about them is they are in control, without responsibility, and without principle. I think that is a fitting description of my socialist friends. I am not going to take much more time.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Alexander: I think I have registered my concern. It was a legitimate concern. I did not try to be partisan or anything like that. We have an act, but without any moral suasion in terms of these banks how is it going to work? I wish somebody could answer my question. Why should a bank under the guaranteed provision in this bill lend money at 8½ per cent when it can lend money out at twice that amount?

Do we not have some responsibility here? I do not like to see government moving in and telling somebody what to do. That is the problem with this government, and we do not operate that way. However, there must be some way whereby moral suasion or persuasion can be used on a continual basis in order to have these institutions accept their community responsabilities.

My hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) refers to arm twisting. That's all right, too. I think the Minister of Finance does hold periodic meetings. Perhaps they are to no avail. They look to the minister, and he's got that charm and everything; he's a good looking boy, and they give him the old fast foot, and before you know it he's out, they're out, and the Canadian people are getting shafted again.

God knows, the small businessman is the backbone of this country. We must create a climate of positive direction in which funds can be made available to him so that he can further his business interests, so that in turn the government can get the taxes it requires to pay for services the Canadian people are not calling for.

An hon. Member: Like old age pensions?

Mr. Alexander: Only by helping to develop strong Canadian-owned business can we ensure innovation, new knowledge and technology which can be exported around the world. This is not a condemnation of foreign investment. Rather, it is a condemnation of the present government for failing to develop policies to strengthen Canadian business.

We welcome the bill unquestionably. It is motherhood. When someone is given an opportunity to get more money we certainly cannot say it is wrong. But I wish I could send it down to defeat, because when there is no compulsion, no obligation on the part of the banks, the legislation, in my view, is nothing but a facade—it is just a wasted exercise.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend the debate unduly on Bill C-14, but I think it is my duty to rise as the spokesman of the people or organizations directly affected by this bill which actually amends three acts already in force.

I will deal first with the part of the bill amending the act applicable to farmers with regard to loans and the increased loans which may be granted and guaranteed by the Minister of Finance. This legislation, in the past, has certainly helped farmers particularly when interest rates were not usurious as they are today.

This reminds me of the time when I attended school and was taught catechism. We were told about the sin of avarice and that lending money at usurious rates was a capital sin. In my opinion, this is still true in 1974. It has become a vice and such high interest rates have become a genuine national sin. Everybody complains about it in the House and outside. And yet nobody takes the bull by the horns to correct this situation and checks those dreadful and skyrocketing interest rates which are directly responsible for inflation.

We are in a vicious circle and within a system which compels us to pay them whether we like it or not. That is why, last year, the farmers had to borrow $20 million a month, as stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the needs exist and that farmers resort to what they feel are the best credit sources for them, which ensures them a profit and survival.

But, Mr. Speaker, all this is not costing the governement anything. It only guarantees the loans granted by the banks to the farmers. We should pay tribute to the farmers, because they have been very honest so far. In fact, losses have been so small that they are not worth mentioning. They amount only to one fifth of 1 per cent. It is a lesser risk than the normal risk people take in any sphere of our economy. The farmers know exactly what they are doing when they sign a commitment. They are aware of the responsibilities they are assuming. They are even ready to bleed themselves white to honour their commitments.

It is not enough to let them run into debt by allowing them to borrow. We must also let them hope that some day they will succeed in financing themselves, thus avoiding a very burdensome item in the field of expenses, that of interest. There is a reason for the high rate of interest. Just today I moved under Standing Order 43 a motion which seemed to please the entire House, but because of parliamentary procedure even when 263 are in favour of a motion, if one wakes up earlier than expected and says: "No" we cannot even tell who said it. The word "no" has been heard and therefore the Chair has to say: "The motion cannot be put."

Now, Mr. Speaker, even if the Crediters are sometimes accused of making senseless proposals, we note that after a while, and this a strange thing, the government did carry out a few which eventually make sense.

Mr. Speaker, if the government were to agree to this proposal,—I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will take good note of it,—to the effect that the public sector be financed differently from what it is today, it would disappear from the loans market and would cease to be the main competitor of private enterprise on the money market. That would help lower the interest rates, which would in turn allow private enterprise to survive and hope to compete on the world market, all this could be achieved through the Bank of Canada, which, after all, is our own institution.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I put a question on the Order Paper, which reads as follows: Did the government borrow from the Bank of Canada during the past ten years? . . . The reply was "No", and a few details were provided: Under Section 18(I) of the Bank of Canada Act "The Bank may . . . (i) make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the government of Canada." Well, in six months, one cannot go very far.

So, obviously, the government does not wish to be indebted to the Bank of Canada for a mere six months. It is therefore suggested that this legislation be amended by Parliament in order to allow the Bank of Canada to lend money for much longer periods at interest rates which would cover administrative charges. It seems to me that this would be sound administration.

Again, this will come about. But here we have a poorly timed engine which needs a tune-up. The engine turns and firing does take place, but when it does, the piston has already travelled a little too far, and the combustion chamber has become too large. So, the revolution is delayed, since compression is inadequate.

Well, when it comes to legislating in Parliament, this is what happens. We are not tuned-up, and our action is delayed. When damage has been done, we then decide to act.

This is the reason why I suggest again today to the government and to the minister of Finance that they consider very seriously the very concrete proposals that we are making so as to make the Canadian economy competitive on the international market, to enable us Canadians to be really ourselves throughout the world.

If nothing is done, I am afraid that we shall soon find ourselves in a rather difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of existing legislation we find that farmers have left and are still leaving the farm, because they are not assured of an income enabling them to make a living, to make some profits that will at least leave them something in the end.

Some time ago, I had started to explain to the House, before running out of time, the problem of the dairy industry. Why has there been so many auctions? In the March 27 issue of La Terre de chez nous, 16 auctions were announced for the sale of large dairy herds of 40, 50, 75, 100 heads of cattle. Those are people quitting the dairy industry.

I have here a resolution concerning only, the Quebec district, and I quote:

Extract from the minutes of the annual general convention of the industrial milk producers union of the Quebec region, held . . . on March 12, 1974.

This resolution says that this year in that region alone, 652 producers have given up dairy production.

I have also here a letter from the president of the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers, dated March 26, 1974. He is not just anybody, but a responsible person, Mr. Speaker. He describes a situation that concerns him and also comments on the report of the Food Prices Review Board. I will only quote the following paragraph:

"There surely exist serious reasons to worry about the incomes of a large number of producers in this sector . . .

—the dairy industry sector,

. . . about today's prospects of this industry and its ability to provide Canadian consumers with an adequate supply of dairy products at reasonable prices."

The level of milk producers' incomes has been maintained too low much too long and the process of recovery is much too slow coming about.

As I stated earlier, our engine needs a tune-up.

This country is faced today with the escalating sales of dairy herds and a constant reduction in dairy production.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this is a suggestion which we must be concerned about and which deserves being pondered. I concede that, on March 31, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced a new policy for the current year.

Improvements were made but they are insufficient. One can refer to figures worked out by experienced people in that field, who figured to the nearest cent what it costs to produce 100 pounds of milk. An analysis is made of the cost of grain, which is $2.22, that of hay, $1.98, that of milk transportation, 38 cents and that of mineral salt which is of 8 cents and we come to a total of $10.15 for 100 pounds of milk. But now, since April 1, the average price received by the producers of industrial milk is $8.50. Therefore there is a marked loss and even if we allowed them to borrow ten times more than they can borrow now, from banks or from caisses populaires, the whole amount being guaranteed by the Department of Finance, that would not settle their problem except for a short time.

But they will merely tie up future production and if the future is not better, they will have to do as others have done, get out of business.

The same thing can be said of pork production. For the last few months, our pork producers have been producing at loss and one is distressed to notice that they are losing great amounts of money. I know that the Minister of Agriculture and his public servants are now considering the problem but there is one thing I am sure of, I am sure that the minister is not getting enough co-operation from his colleagues, especially those from the Treasury Board. That gentleman cannot perform miracles and if he is not given the credits needed for planning policies that will enable producers to stay in business and to overcome that difficult period, they will go bankrupt like other people, and bankruptcies may be more numerous than we think.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with another part of this legislation, namely the legislation amending the Small Businesses Loans Act. Since I came to this House, I have often heard my colleague, the hon. member for Compton, (Mr. Latulippe), speak on that subject. In fact he knows what he is talking about, being an industrialist himself who has started at the bottom rung of the ladder. He has often asked that the $25,000 loan provided for in the act be considerably raised to allow small businesses to expand and get established in areas where there are no labour intensive industry. On that subject, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) made a much more eloquent plea than I could make myself, when he stated the following in the House on July 11, 1973:

Canada's smaller and medium sized enterprises and entrepreneurs form a key part of our Canadian economy. They employ an estimated five million people, almost 60 per cent of our entire labour force. Two-thirds of Canadians work for businesses employing fifteen persons or less. Most of these businesses are owned and managed by Canadians and provide a means of developing greater Canadian participation in our country's growth. Small enterprises are often the most efficient way of producing goods and services to meet Canada's particular needs.

I endorse that statement.

The small business unit has a flexibility to meet the local production and distribution requirements of Canada's various regions.

In addition to their significant economic role, small businesses make an important contribution to the development of Canada's social fabric. They foster the development of self-reliance, enterprise and are closely identified with community life.

How true that is!

A well balanced economy should, therefore, consist of healthy small businesses as well as larger units where scale of output is necessary to be internationally competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I could not agree more with the minister. Words are not enough, we must act. The Minister of Finance might say: That is what we are trying to do by increasing the guaranteed amount from $25,000 to $50,000. That will do some good, but could it be too late? Because of the current inflation, will the amount of $50,000 really be worth $50,000 or could it not rather be considered as $25,000 twenty years ago? That is the question we must ask ourselves and that needs to be answered.

During 20 odd years, members of all parties have very frequently—and sincerely, I hope—about industrial decentralization. We had to decentralize industry and all parties included this in their program. I think that nobody had enough faith in this policy to follow it efficiently and intensively. If we want to work to improve the social climate of our country, which is getting worse everyday, I think that one of the most effective measures that we could take immediately would be to decentralize industry by bringing it to the rural centres, where there is an increasing number of qualified people who are able to meet the needs of the industries who will accept to settle in these centres. This would allow our young people to build family houses in unpolluted areas where there is space. This would allow them to have a normal family life because they would be able to settle in areas where the lack of air and space is not a problem yet. In this way, we should be solving a very difficult problem, that of space for those married couples who still wish to have children.

When I visit the big cities, it disappoints me to see multiple unit buildings and, when I visit either relatives or friends, it makes me sad to see that in these two, three, four or five apartment buildings, space has been provided for the refrigerator, the range, and all types of electrical appliances, but there is no room for human beings. There is one bedroom and another small room for a baby. When the latter arrives, it is realized that there is no more space. Steps must be taken accordingly, and God knows how many are advertised on TV, over the radio and in newspapers!

Mr. Speaker, I still believe in the divine institution which the family is. We must try not to limit its possibilities to big business whims, but to accommodate incomes of families to their needs so that they may fulfil their task and remain themselves in this modern social world. Such an institution must remain the basis of our society, as otherwise, like other countries which have overlooked this, we will witness chaos which does not profit anyone.

That is why we must increase those small businesses loans, but for heaven sake's let us put an end to all the red tape that discourages those who want to use them. They have to overcome so many obstacles that they are disgusted right from the start and they give up after a few tries. There are qualified men who can operate a business or an industry, who have that natural ability but and all they can do is to sit back and say: It is no use trying; they make it so difficult and there are so many problems of all kinds that we are discouraged at the very beginning.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Finance who is responsible for this legislation to encourage the banks to grant loans to those small businesses. We are not asking them for a gift, but a loan. I am convinced that the higher the interest rates, the more profits they make. To my mind, the Minister of Finance has a very heavy responsibility and he must intervene if need be, by introducing legislation so that an end might be put to those usurious interest rates. There is nothing to keep Canada from taking the first step. Some will say to me: Dear God, it is easy to talk about it, but we depend on the international market! Perhaps, but if only we were true to ourselves in Canada, we could at least try it out, try to be masters in our own country, and stop acting like sheep. For once we would show initiative, without jeopardizing anything, and do something concrete.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, since my time has almost expired, I should have liked to speak a bit more of the provisions of the act concerning fishermen. I know that this bill was introduced in the same spirit for the fishermen, and we know how difficult their work is, and the hardships they encounter every day.

I trust my remarks will at least spur on those who are responsible financially. I can assure the Minister of Finance of this: he need not hesitate if he wants to go ahead and, as I said a while ago, if he wants to grab the bull by the horns, I shall help him and grab its hoofs.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is a worthwhile opportunity to join in the third reading debate on Bill C-14. I say this because the bill deals with the farmer, the small businessman and the fisherman in this country. I believe it is wise that we in parliament first take a look at the record of what the government has done for the farmer and the small businessman in the 10 years it, and its predecessor, have been in office. I refer to the share of net national income enjoyed by the farmers and small businessmen. The short answer is that the farmer and the small businessman have not had it so good since the last year of Conservative rule in Canada.

I think it is pertinent to recall that in 1963 total business income of an unincorporated nature was 10.3 per cent of the national income, and that under Liberal government rule that share has declined every year to the present level of 7.5 per cent of the national income.

● (2130)

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps more companies are being incorporated.

Mr. Stevens: I can assure the minister that small businessmen are not being incorporated as a result of any encouragement given by the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I wonder how the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) would explain the lot of the farm operator. In 1963 the farm operator had 4.5 per cent of the national income in this country. Last year he had 3.4 per cent, and that was one of his better years under the Liberal government reign. As was mentioned during the question period earlier today, the lot of all in Canada, particularly the lot of the bigger corporations, has not been so poor under the Liberals. I think it bears reiterating that corporate profits after taxes in the last quarter of 1973 have soared to 12 per cent of the nation's national income from 6.7% three years earlier, while the share of labour has fallen from 75 per cent to 70 per cent. Not only is this government fond of big government but it is fond of big business, judging from how it has treated certain of the larger corporations in the country.

I gave some background because I believe it is important that we get into perspective the true nature of the Trudeau government in Canada. This bill is tokenism; it is a gesture; it is something that the Liberals can hang a press release around when they have to answer on what they propose to do for the farmer, the fishermen or the small businessman in Canada. For example, I followed the remarks of the Minister of Finance when this bill came up for second reading in the House and I found it interesting that he pointed out that the Small Businesses Loans Act came into effect in early 1961, and then, presumably in a moment of great pride, he said:

> Since inception, including the last full year of operation, $290 million have been made available to small businesses under the provisions of this legislation. Lending reached a peak of $30 million in the year ended December 31, 1973.

I would have thought that the minister would have been ashamed to put such figures on the record as justification for this act. Imagine talking about a peak year in which $30 million were given in loans to small businesses! Last week Canadian chartered bank assets went up $550 million alone. That is the type of financing in the country at present, yet we have a Minister of Finance who feels it is a credible showing that in an entire year small businessmen received loans under the relevant legislation totalling $30 million.

Again, as we know, part of this bill is to increase the aggregate amount that chartered banks may lend under the act to $250 million, and the aggregate amount that other lending institutions may lend to $100 million. That is the government's answer to the small businessman in Canada.

There is another bill on the order paper. I refer to Bill C-10, an act to amend the Export Development Act. Surely it shows the true colours of the present government when we consider that it is proposing to increase the share capital alone of the Export Development Corporation from $125 million to $400 million. It is proposing to increase the capital of the Export Development Corporation by almost the total amount that it is willing to guarantee in chartered bank loans to small businesses.

That is only the beginning. It also proposes, if this parliament should be so foolish as to allow the bill to pass, to permit the Export Development Corporation to borrow up to ten times the authorized capital, that is $4 billion. It proposes that the present lending limit in one category be increased from $1.5 billion to $4.25 billion. Under another heading it proposes that that corporation should have the right to lend not $450 million—the present level—but $850 million. I mention this because here is a corporation that has been dealing with the favoured few corporations that the government likes so much.

Here the average loans are in the neighbourhood of $20 million to $30 million. The loans are granted to countries lucky enough to get this benefit while those Corporations in Canada, which in practice are mainly over 50 per cent foreign controlled, in turn get the benefit of the financing which has been at a rate slightly over 7 per cent per annum. What a strange situation! Here we have a government proposing to extend the limits of the Export Development Corporation so that it may facilitate financing for foreigners of over $5 billion, at interest rates in the neighbourhood of 7 per cent, and we are told on the other hand that it is a worthy amendment which would allow small businesses in Canada to borrow up to $250 million, not from the government but from chartered banks at 8 per cent plus.

We are told that the small business rates will be pegged to the long term bond rates in Canada which, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, beginning on April 1 would justify a rate of 8 per cent. So not only is the government proposing extremely high limits for one sector of the economy, the big business community, compared with the limits that it is proposing for the small business sector, but it is also proposing to continue a rate differential so that small businesses in Canada will have to pay 1 per cent above the going bond rate in Canada,—now 8 per cent whereas those who are lucky enough to get the Export Development Corporation financing do so at roughly the rate the government borrows, namely, 7 per cent.

I mentioned that figure of 8 per cent because, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, the going rate beginning April 1 will be 8 per cent for loans to small businessmen, farmers or fishermen. But I would emphasize that in the last few weeks the bond levels in Canada have shot up most dramatically. For example, in the two weeks ending April 10, the yield on long term government bonds on average has jumped .35 per cent. I would suggest that when the new rate is pegged, as this formula will cause it to be pegged for small businessmen, farmers and fishermen, it could well be that the average lending rate for small businessmen, farmers and fishermen will be 9.5 per cent, or higher, under this legislation in Canada.

● (2140)

As we know, Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment before us in which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has proposed that the bill be sent back to committee for the purpose of studying clauses Nos. 2, 7 and 9. It is my understanding that the hon. member hoped that some interest ceiling might be written into the bill to guarantee that the farmer, the fisherman and the small businessman will not have to pay rates of interest of 8 per cent or 9 per cent, or whatever rate the present formula will dictate.

One can sympathize with the hon. member's intention, but I feel that he is missing the point. There is little purpose in this government, or any other, setting a rate that is below the going rate, and expecting the chartered banks to abide by it. Obviously the government must accept the basic problem and decide what course to take. If it wishes to utilize chartered bank assets it knows there are ample assets to utilize.

I have pointed out that our money system went up $550 million in the last week alone, but perhaps it is more relevant to point out that in 1963 total Canadian bank assets, net of any foreign assets, were $17.8 billion, and in 1973 they had reached $55.1 billion. In that short period bank assets in this country have more than tripled. There can be no question, therefore, that there are ample loanable funds available if the banks can be induced to lend them to small businesses.

I suggest that the government knows, as certainly the business community knows, it is only gesturing to say that any chartered bank should be expected to loan any sizeable amount of its loanable funds at below the going rate, yet that apparently is what the government expects in this legislation.

I would suggest that if the government wishes to see lower rates for businesses, the farmer or the fisherman, it must accept one of two alternatives. It must subsidize the lending institutions to ensure the lower rates, or it must take the Export Development Corporation route and loan the funds to the smaller businessman through some corporation, or directly from the government itself.

Those are the alternatives, Mr. Speaker. It is not fair for the government to pretend that this is legislation that is readily available and may be used by small businessmen, as is suggested so often by members of the government when they are asked what they are doing to help small businesses in this country.

I have attempted to show the virtual misrepresentation that the government has placed before this House concerning the bill and the legislation we are now considering.

There will be a day of reckoning, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important that members of this House not become implicated in a government charade without pointing out the facts for the people of Canada to decide. The facts are, Mr. Speaker, that we have a government that literally has not dealt with inflation in a prudent manner, that has decided to take a laissez faire attitude with respect to inflation. It is a government that to date has had the support of a certain caucus in this parliament that oddly enough has felt that a more determined stand to contain and control inflation would somehow not benefit the labouring man in this country. Mr. Speaker, nobody in Canada has been hurt more than the average wage earner through the incompetence of the present government.

There is no other way for this government and this Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to explain why labour income in this country has fallen by 6 per cent in the last three years as a share of national income, while corporate profits, after taxes, have jumped by 79 per cent. This is the hard reality of the government's lack of policy concerning inflation in Canada: the favoured few in the eye of the Trudeau government have benefitted from inflation whereas others, especially the unorganized in our labour force, have been hurt severely by rampant inflation.

I would suggest that not only has the labouring man been hurt but the smaller businessman has been hurt as well, and the gesturing, the press releases, and the statements of good intentions which have come from the government are not enough to restore the imbalance that has taken place as a result of the cruellest tax of all, namely inflation.

When we are touching this, Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to the fact that the bond market in Canada has sold off dramatically in recent weeks. It is common knowledge, for example, that the Bank of Canada had to enter the Canadian bond market to support it, and that it now owns over half a billion dollars of Canadian securities that it did not intend to buy a few weeks ago, and that one of the reasons for this is the over-spending of the government. The day of reckoning is coming, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You guys are not going to be standing on the mountain!

Mr. Stevens: The day is coming when the government will have to make its peace with the money markets of Canada if it intends to continue to fund its heavy spending programs in the manner it has been funding them over the past few years. Until last year it was able to do much of its funding through the sale of Canada savings bonds, but not last year. Consequently the government's cash position has deteriorated by approximately $1.2 billion in the past year, so it now has considerable financing to raise in the coming months.

● (2150)

The Bank of Canada has decided to raise the bank rate, but not only for the little reasons given by the Minister of Finance. It has acknowledged that the Canadian bond market has to adjust to substantially higher interest rates, to allow the government to finance the spending program it is determined to put before the House and to finance with debt issues. These are the facts. The unfortunate victims of this lack of government planning and of the government's poor approach to economics are those whom this legislation is purported to assist, the farmers, fishermen and small businessmen.

I know nobody likes to interrupt a vacation, but I strongly urge that it is time for the man who calls himself Prime Minister of this country, and who feels that he should have the confidence of the House, to return to this House and see if in fact he has the confidence of the House and of the people of Canada.

Mr. Alexander: Where is he?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Cheap shots.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the third reading stage of the small loans bill. The concept underlying this bill has been around since 1944. In this bill the government has not really brought forward any new approach. I suggest that an approach different from that first contemplated in 1944 is necessary. Legislation such as this was first enacted, as I say, in 1944, and has been updated over the years.

This bill will increase the ceilings for lending, in line with the inflation we are living with in our economy. I agree with the main thrust of the bill, but I think there are forces in our economy which are working grievously against the operation of small businesses, among which I would include unincorporated farms and fishing. This bill will do little to alleviate the disadvantages from which those businesses suffer. It will only act as a palliative and will not solve the real problem.

The real problem of a small businessman is the accumulation of the capital which is necessary if he is to function properly within the economy.

This bill will make it possible for him to acquire more capital. The state will guarantee the funds he may borrow from the bank, in order that he may compete and remain viable in the economy. The accumulation of capital with which to pay off these loans is becoming increasingly difficult because of our tax structure. As inflation expands, the tax bite put on an individual through the income tax increases the government's take.

The government's share of the income of the individual who is in business for himself expands steadily. Thus he finds it increasingly difficult to make ends meet. Furthermore, people find it difficult to accumulate the capital which is necessary to own a farm or small business. This bill will not help the underlying weakness in our economic system, which puts little emphasis on the accumulation of savings, savings which are necessary if someone is to own a farm or small business.

People accumulate capital for various reasons. For instance, they may want to pass the money on as a legacy to their children and those who come after them.

Some, who through good fortune in this world have acquired wealth, want to pass it on to their families. This attitude, while important some years ago, no longer seems to be quite so prevalent. Of course for people of modest means there is little point in accumulating capital for their children, who are usually as well off or better off than their parents were. As well, the provincial estate tax takes large portions of estates, so that the incentive to pass on capital in the small business community is seriously diminished.

Sometimes part of a business or farm must be sold to meet the estate tax. In addition, the capital gains tax brought in by the present government will seriously limit one's ability to pass capital on to one's family. Actually, the capital gains tax and the estate tax represent severe deterrents to the accumulation of capital. As assets must be sold to pay the capital gains and estate taxes, one can see that we are really taxing inflated gains. To a large extent the capital gains tax contains a large element of inflation. This bill does nothing to help in that regard. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, before we call it ten o'clock may I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) if it is intended to carry on debating this bill tomorrow and, hopefully, to conclude it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think we are having such a stimulating debate on this bill that we ought to continue it tomorrow and, if the House should so decide, dispose of this legislation one way or another. We could then get on with the Canada Pension Plan amendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And after that?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL REVENUE—REPORT THAT CERTAIN QUEBEC OIL COMPANIES DID NOT PAY FEDERAL INCOME TAX LAST YEAR

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Last week, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to ask a question. In my opinion, this question was extremely important and deserved an answer which, although incomplete, might have shed some light on the situation.

Adjournment Debate

If there is a area of universal concern to Canadian taxpayers, it is certainly that of income taxes, since every individual with an income must turn over part of it to the internal revenue department for the administration of his country. People with fixed inomes are perfectly aware of what they are paying in income tax. They are equally aware of their neighbours' contributions.

However, in the case of corporations and especially multinational corporations, it is very difficult to find out whether they are really paying their share to the country in which they operate. It is extremely important because those companies do not pay their fair share of taxes and the small wage earner will have to make up the difference needed for a sound administration of the country. A few weeks ago the Quebec government learned that seven oil companies had not paid income tax.

Mr. Speaker, owing to the price escalation of oil products which in certain cases have increased by 50 per cent, we wonder how a company can avoid income tax. Since the same companies are found throughout Canada and must file income tax returns with the federal government, it is therefore extremely important to compare their tax contributions to the Quebec and federal governments.

I ask to the Minister of National Revenue whether there have been meetings, negotiations, inquiries and controls made in that connection. It is an important and even urgent question since it is high time that we should know exactly what are the facts in order to plug utterly unacceptable loopholes. Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to exhort people to stay calm, to pay their taxes quietly, but the fact remains that the report stating that seven oil companies have paid no taxes in the province of Quebec is a cause for misgivings in the average citizen's mind.

It can be asked therefore why there are so many complaints which sometimes get to the point of revolt. I think that these things must be clarified. We must know if the same situation is prevailing at the federal level. That is the purpose of my question. Without divulging secrets, can the Minister of National Revenue say if these companies are in the same situation with regard to federal income tax?

The public has a right to know and, obviously, as their representatives, it is our duty to throw some light on this situation. If the system is maintained, we might eventually have a dreadful future.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask simply if some of these companies have neglected to pay federal income tax and secondly if there have been, or will be, meetings with officials of the Department of Revenue of the province of Quebec, so as to compare tax returns of these companies with those submitted to the federal Department of National Revenue.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury), I would like to remind the hon. member that Revenue Canada, Taxation, is not free to disclose income tax information in respect of identified taxpayers. Therefore, I cannot state whether a particular corporation or a particular group of named corporations did or did not pay federal income tax for any given taxation year. However, it can be seen from the latest statistics for the 1970 taxation year that approximately 145 corporations which can broadly be classified as oil companies paid federal income tax, and some 640 did not.

Statistics issued by Statistics Canada in a publication Corporations Statistics shows that for the 1971 year oil companies paid federal income tax in the amount of approximately $150 million.

There are a number of reasons why an oil company may not pay federal income tax in any particular year. A corporation may have a loss for a year, or the profit for the year may be offset by losses carried forward from previous years. An important factor in arriving at the amount of taxable income of an oil company is the deduction that is allowed for exploration and development expenses. Most of the major oil producing companies in Canada have incurred very heavy expenditures in exploring for oil and developing new wells. Under the Income Tax Act such costs are deductible in a taxation year to the extent the company has income, and any such costs not deductible because of the income limit may be carried forward and claimed as a deduction in a subsequent year when the company has profits. The total amount of exploration and development expenses claimed by all oil companies in the 1971 taxation year was approximately $820,000,000.

It must be recognized that a company engaged in producing oil is subject not only to federal and provincial income taxes but is also required to pay royalties to the government of the province in which the oil is produced. The amount of such royalties paid is a business expense of the company, and is therefore deductible in arriving at taxable income for federal income tax purposes.

There is no evidence to suggest that the oil companies in Canada are not reporting their taxable incomes properly in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—ADVERTISEMENTS FOR SALE OF HOUSES IN TORONTO AREA—CONTRACTS WHEREBY BUILDER CAN CHANGE PRICE AND MORTGAGE TERMS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, on March 5 last I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) a question concerning the activity of certain building corporations advertising houses for sale. I related to the minister the problem which arose when some persons went to buy a home and were advised on the site, by the agent of the builder, that the homes were really not for sale—that they could put in a reservation but the reservation would provide that their deposit would be returned without interest if the builder-developer felt the price was not sufficient. Moreover, the terms of payment, price, closing date and the rest could be altered unilaterally by the builder.

As a result of my question the activity of a number of builders in Toronto advertising in the Toronto Star and the Toronto Globe and Mail were severely curtailed, and the Urban Development Institute disciplined the builders involved by advising them that such advertising was improper.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the effect of my question in bringing this matter to the attention of the House was probably to remedy the problem as far as advertising is concerned. However, it clearly did not go to the root of the matter, since this problem is one which arises because of the fact that inflation is taking place in Canada at a totally unrealistic rate.

In Mississauga, for instance, the cost of housing is rising at the rate of $50 a day at the very least, seven days a week. In these circumstances one cannot really blame a builder-developer if he says to a prospective purchaser, "I, as developer, am entitled to the inflation which takes place between the time you order the house and the time the house is delivered." I might add that this period is sometimes as long as eight months.

One cannot really blame a builder and accuse him of gouging when he says, "I want at least the inflation which takes place during the time I am responsible for the property." After all, with building costs of all kinds going up by between 2 per cent and 5 per cent a month there is no way in which a builder or a developer can be sure what his costs will be half a year from now.

Earlier last fall the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said he would freeze the price of milk for one year, and he applied a five cents a quart subsidy. That was four to five months ago. The price is now going up another nickel a quart on top of the nickel a quart of last fall. This is what is happening in our economy. We have runaway inflation. We have a government that does not give a darn about runaway inflation.

This runaway inflation is most spectacularly shown in the price of housing in the metropolitan areas. Time and time again it has been related in the House how the price of housing in the greater Toronto area has escalated by 40 per cent in the past year. This may be the result of speculation. It may be because the banking system is financing this speculation. Certainly it is because there is an acute shortage of serviced land. It is certainly due to the fact that all we have from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) are demonstration programs.

We do not have an attack on the quantum of serviced land. We do not have a concerted attack to increase the supply of housing. We have innovative programs. We have Habitat 2000. But we have nothing that will correct the problem of a young couple who need a house.

Housing is a basic commodity. Bricks and mortar are basic commodities. We need to put shelter over our people. Society today demands warm, comfortable, decent housing, yet the government slaps an 11 per cent sales tax on this very commodity and refuses to remove it. The government has collected over $1 billion from this tax in the last five years, but uses none of this money to increase the supply of land which will make housing cheaper. The provision of housing is probably the main concern of most people in urban society. The escalation in the price of this one commodity alone is evidenced by this business of reservations that are still being sold.

I do not blame the builder-developer for this since the government says, in effect, "Look after yourself." As far as we are concerned, says the government, housing is an international problem, and so is inflation. I ask: when in Canada was the cost of housing an international problem? Our houses are built with Canadian materials, on Canadian land, with Canadian labour. What international matter is involved? Yet the government continues to allow prices to escalate. It continues to allow the financing of this speculation to escalate, and cares little about the ordinary guy who wants a house for his family and kids.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would be hard to compete with the hon. member whose demagogy and hypocrisy are equalled only by his self-complacency when he tells us that his action in the House has solved the problem of misleading advertising in Toronto. I can assure him that seldom has a member of parliament been so far from the truth.

If misleading advertising has been decreasing in the Toronto area, it is precisely because the research and investigation branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs proceeds vigorously against any industry, in the field of construction or any other field, which resorts to misleading advertising. And in the field that he has referred to, I can tell him indeed that the department suing certain home builders actually led to some convictions in the Toronto area and had a salutary and exemplary effect on all other industries. If he can be consoled in thinking that he is the one who produced such an effect, good for him, but I want to say to him that as far as we are concerned and as far as the Toronto metro area is concerned, it is not this kind of self-indulgence that will impress people.

In the matter of land speculation, I have been astounded when the hon. member said that he did not blame those who speculate on land. Personally, I think it is despicable and that on the contrary speculators should be condemned for a basically immoral act, because it is speculating on something where no capital gains is derived from our own investment.

Therefore, I find it unfair to want to stigmatize an evil without blaming the responsible persons, because in this area it is evident that the speculation psychological pressures are assuredly something that has no economic basis.

Therefore, the way the hon. member puts all the blame on the government without admitting the abusive craving for profit making of those who have land or offer public services nor the primary responsibility of governments and of the Ontario Conservative government in particular, I suggest, is a wrong and inaccurate way of reporting the facts.

As to the fight against inflation I suggest that any reasonable person will admit that the present government provided much assistance to citizens, through the various subsidies they granted. The hon. member referred to the dairy production. I might in turn mention subsidies on the price of bread, subsidies granted under the welfare program, the old age security pensions, the family allowance plan and the escalation of pensions. Those are all programs that the government put forward, precisely to enable the people who live on fixed incomes to fight with some success against the problem of the rising cost of living.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF WARNING TO STUDENTS CONCERNING DRUG OFFENCES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the incarceration for the past month of four Canadian students in an Iranian jail, as well as the large numbers of requests received by Canadian Embassies around the world for help on drug charges. I, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan):

That this House instruct the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to issue a directive to all high schools, colleges and universities in Canada outlining the dangers and possible penalties that tourists face when arrested on drug charges in a foreign country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No!

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF LAY-OFFS AT GENERAL INSTRUMENTS PLANT, SYDNEY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the drastic lay-off of employees at the General Instruments Corporation plant at Sydney, wherein the work force has been reduced from approximately 1,000 employees to the vicinity of 400 employees in the past few weeks.

In view of the fact that it appears close to impossible to secure from the corporation their intentions as far as their future operations at Sydney are concerned, the fact that certain pieces of equipment have been removed from the plant and the hardship that is being caused as a result of this mass lay-off, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) immediately cause an investigation to be carried out to lend whatever assistance is possible to assist those employees affected by the lay-offs, ascertain as a result of the investigation what the future holds for this plant and also if those who have been laid off will be rehired. And, the minister's report back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is also proposed to the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No!

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON DISCONTINUANCE OF TAX CONCESSIONS TO CORPORATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. The words of the motion speak for themselves so I shall not indulge in any preamble. I move:

That this House deems, since spokesmen for the official opposition have questioned the continuing of the government's tax concessions to corporations, that the requirements of subsection (3) of section 125.1 of the Income Tax Act regarding a motion supported by 60 members have been met, and that it is therefore in order for the House, within 15 days, to debate a motion calling for the discontinuance of the corporate tax deductions granted by last session's Bill C-192.

The motion is seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure about the hon. member's seconder. In any event, I will inquire if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No!

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the unacceptable delays in the payments of unemployment insurance benefits. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House instruct the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in charge of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to table as soon as possible the new Unemployment Insurance Act, as announced in the Throne Speech, or the candies speech.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REFERENCE OF CANADIAN CONSUMER COUNCIL REPORT ON REGULATORY BOARDS AND AGENCIES TO STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, notice of the following motion was given to the government House leader well in advance, and he has had time to consider it. I would therefore move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the report on the Consumer Interest in Regulatory Boards and Agencies by the Canadian Consumer Council, released on April 15th, by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East, and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO GRANT ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration and falling within the responsibilities of the government under the heading of supply, as admitted by the President of the Privy Council, namely, the refusal of the government to grant an allotted day within the provisions of Standing Order 58.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has given the Chair the required notice under the provisions of Standing Order 26. This has given the Chair an opportunity to reflect on the important point raised by the hon. member. In passing, may I thank the hon. member for the background documents submitted by instalments to the Chair, which have been found both interesting and intellectually stimulating.

As all hon. members know, Standing Order 58 is the governing order in relation to the matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River and deals, generally speaking, with the businesses of supply and ways and means. Under that Standing Order, at the commencement of each session, there is designated by motion a continuing order of the day. The parliamentary timetable for the consideration of business under Standing Order 56 is divided into three distinct periods. One of these periods terminates not later than December 10, and during that time five sitting days shall be allotted to the business of supply. The second period of the timetable expires not later than March 26 of each year, and during that time a further seven days is allotted. This brings us to the third distinct period, which ends not later than June 30. In each of the periods, and more particularly for the purposes of the current problem, two days may, at the option of members in opposition, be declared to be non-confidence days.

The question the Chair has to determine is whether or not, during the period commencing March 27 and expiring on June 30, that the hon. member refers to as "the refusal of the government to grant an allotted day" is the foundation for an adjournment debate under Standing Order 26. The requirements of Standing Order 26 are well known to all hon. members. Section 5 of the Standing Order states that in determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration Mr. Speaker "shall have regard to the extent to which it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the government or could come within the scope of ministerial action—"

Precedents extending over a long period of time indicate that these words always have been interpreted as referring to a sudden emergency requiring immediate ministerial intervention. The Standing Order has never been interpreted as applying to the operation of other Standing Orders. In this particular instance, the hon. member's proposed motion seeks precisely to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing the operation of Standing Order 58, a situation which in my view is not contemplated by subsection (5) of Standing Order 26.

In the circumstances, I am afraid I cannot agree with the contention of the hon. member for Peace River that an adjournment debate under the provisions of Standing Order 26 can be invoked to debate the application or the interpretation of another Standing Order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It concerns the question I asked the parliamentary secretary yesterday when he was reading the answers to the questions on the order paper. The parliamentary secretary was misleading the House when he stated it would cost the government $1.5 million to answer Question No. 319 standing in my name on the order paper. If the parliamentary secretary has proof of this accounting, I would like him to present it to the House so that the rest of the members can have a look at it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It concerns a very dangerous practice that seems to be creeping into our proceedings. In the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) yesterday, a very important study which had been commissioned by the Canadian Consumer Council was released by the minister's office. The study deals with the consumer interest in regulatory boards and agencies. It has been in the minister's hands since June. We understand the minister has every right to have this document as long as it is necessary for him to understand it. We further understand it takes the minister a little longer than most to be able to absorb what is in these documents.

My point of order is that this document more properly should have been placed before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 41. I raise this point to get the guidance of Your Honour, because if parliament is sitting and if ministers are allowed to circumvent the rules in this way, I see no purpose in parliament being in session in the first instance. This very important document should be officially laid on the table of the House under Standing Order 41. I say the minister is in contempt of this House by circumventing the rules and releasing this study outside the House yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) requires a ruling of the Chair. He has raised a point of order. There being no further debate, I wonder whether it would be helpful for the Chair to make a ruling.

This standing order clearly provides a way for ministers of the Crown to table documents. It was introduced several years ago in order to make it easier for members of the ministry to table documents without points of order and without debate. I am not sure the standing order can be interpreted as imposing an obligation on ministers to table documents in the House under Standing Order 41. That may be so, although I do not think I could interpret the standing order as it now stands in that way.

It may well be that the standing order was designed and devised to make it possible for ministers to table their documents, and to encourage them to table them in the House rather than publish them outside the House. My impression is this general rule has been followed for some time. I have not observed, nor have I sought to observe or study, whether there has been a departure from that rule. I will perhaps look at the matter in this light. However, my ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member will have to be that I cannot interpret the standing order as imposing an obligation on the minister to table the document or to publicize the document under the terms of Standing Order 41.

Mr. Stevens: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Before I took my seat in the chamber I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposed a motion of which, perhaps inadvertantly, he suggested I was the seconder. Possibly he intended to mention the name of the hon. member for York South, not York-Simcoe, because I had never seen the motion before.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that point of order—

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that it was a question of privilege, not a point of order, though the hon. member did make a point which was more in the nature of a point of order than a question of privilege. Anyway, he is on the record now as divorcing himself from the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise, then, on a point of order. I do not accept the accusation of having made a mistake. I deliberately named the hon. member for York-Simcoe because I took him at his word—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is where you made your mistake.

Mr. Stevens: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not follow my words yesterday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I certainly did. Read Hansard.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN PRIME RATE BY BANK OF CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the move over the weekend by the Bank of Canada to increase the bank rate has been interpreted by managers of money as being a signal to tighten the screws on credit, and has already led to increases charged by the chartered banks and so on down the line, and since it is clearly leading to a substantial change in the monetary thrust, I should like to ask the minister whether it is a firm indicator that the bank, and in association with the bank the government of this country, are again resorting to the discredited approach of drastic tightening and slowdown to deal with inflation—in other words, whether we are back again to the discredited policy of 1969 and 1970?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Without accepting the preamble advanced by the hon. gentleman, the answer is, no.

Mr. Stanfield: Since this move by the bank will clearly lead to a general increase in credit costs, in particular to higher mortgage rates and higher operating costs for small businesses, costs which are in themselves inflationary since they make for higher prices, I should like to ask the minister whether it is the government's intention that this should happen, or, if not, what the government proposes to do.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government takes the view that an undue increase in the money supply, which would have occurred had interest rates remained as they were, would have been more inflationary than the results of the allegation set forth in the hon. gentleman's preamble. As a matter of fact, the government might well receive an endorsement from the speeches by the hon. gentleman's colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley.

REASON FOR INCREASE IN PRIME RATE BY BANK OF CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it would not be nearer the truth to say that the Bank of Canada felt it necessary to take this drastic action to increase the bank rate, with resulting severe increases in the cost of goods for Canadians across the board, because of the lack of any other policy on the part of the government to deal with the inflationary expectations of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, that would not be nearer the truth.

TRANSPORT

GROUNDING OF TANKER IN ST. LAWRENCE—MEASURES TAKEN TO DEAL WITH OIL SPILL

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent report about the grounding of an Imperial Oil tanker in the St. Lawrence waterway with a resulting serious oil spill in that waterway, I would ask the minister whether he would inform the House of the extent of the oil spill and the measures being used to contain it.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this spill occurred in American waters, not Canadian waters, but as the water comes down, of course, the spill constitutes a danger. We have taken immediate and appropriate measures. The ship has been boomed so that the oil does not flow into Canadian waters. I hope that the Americans, with our help, can handle this spill.

GROUNDING OF TANKER IN ST. LAWRENCE—ASSURANCE OF USE OF QUALIFIED PILOTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give the House the reasons for the grounding of the tanker in this waterway, as it was obviously off course, and did it have a properly qualified pilot on board?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is part of the normal inquiry that the Americans are supposed to hold, because in this case they are responsible for this section.

Mr. Harding: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the inherent dangers involved in ships using the St. Lawrence River without fully qualified pilots, I would ask the minister what steps are being taken to ensure that all ships in this area be required to utilize only those pilots fully qualified.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is no obligation under the law at the moment to have pilots in this section. It may be the shipowners and pilots association will decide to change their minds, and perhaps the department can discuss it with the Americans. Up to now, however, there has been no obligation to have pilots aboard in this section of the river.

MONTREAL POSTAL WORKERS STRIKE—STRIKE BY MONTREAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS AT SETTLEMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

On television last night, the minister looked rather annoyed at the goons who have been intimidating the Montreal postal workers. Is he in a position to tell this House where the negotiations stand with the Montreal postal workers union, negotiations meant to insure an early settlement of the dispute?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest news, a great many workers have returned to work in Montreal. There has been enough mail handling to enable postmen to deliver the mail at the beginning of the afternoon. Incidentally, the postmen are very anxious to do their work. I trust this good example will be followed by all Montreal employees and I hope the situation will be cleared up very soon.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Postmaster General.

Can the minister assure the House that the employees who have gone back to work are adequately protected against the hired muscle boys who are now intimidating these people?

Mr. Ouellet: As much as possible, Mr. Speaker, security measures are being taken so as to enable all our employees wishing to work to fulfill their task according to the clauses of the collective agreement which stipulates that no strike must take place before the expiration of the agreement, that is by the end of December this year.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): I would like to put a supplementary question to the Postmaster General.

In view of the very real technological changes and therefore the difficulties that postal workers are having in Montreal, is the minister prepared to postpone the deadline of the postal code operation in order to negotiate with union representatives concerning all the consequences that this new system may have on employees and guarantee job security?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's comments indicate that he does not know what he is talking about.

● (1430)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I will recognize the hon. member—

[Translation]

I recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

[English]

I notice that the hon. member for Mackenzie has been trying for sometime today as he was yersterday to ask a question and I will recognize him in due course.

[Translation]

For the time being, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has the floor.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I wish once again to ask the Postmaster General a question.

Although I may be willing to submit to the hon. member's arrogance, unionized workers in Montreal will not.

Would the hon. member kindly reply to my very precise question and advise the unionized employees of the Post Office whether he intends to grant them job security and postpone the deadline for the introduction of the postal code operation in order to facilitate the present round of bargaining? Is the hon. minister willing to reply to this question, instead of giving new evidence of his well-demonstrated arrogance?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, union leaders have not asked for any postponement. They only asked that the classifications of a number of employees be reconsidered. The statements made are nonequivocal in this respect. Nobody opposes automation in the Post Office Department or the mechanization of our work. While the hon. member is asking us to postpone the mechanization process, this is not even what is being asked by the very employees concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary, to be followed by the hon. member for Broadview and then the hon. member for Calgary North.

FINANCE

MEASURES TO OFFSET EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the most recent figures indicate an upward trend in unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, and in view of the fact that the latest survey shows that high interest rates are operating counterproductive to the government's regional development policies, I would ask what steps the minister proposes to take to offset the effect of these high interest rates on regional development, especially in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the fiscal policies of the government include the initiatives proposed and fulfilled by my colleague the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion, and the Atlantic province region is one of the prime beneficiaries of those policies.

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday when the minister was trying to explain the policies the government has followed he suggested that one reason for the rise in the interest rate in Canada was related to the international situation, yet consistently he has said in this House that the government's policy in respect of the exchange rate is to let it float freely. I would ask the minister today whether there has been a pronounced change in the government's policy in respect of the exchange rate, and what it is?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: That's absolutely ridiculous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT PURCHASERS OF HOMES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the predicted increase in mortgage interest rates of one per cent, making a $40,000 mortgage at 11¼ per cent interest cost an additional $8,205, thereby increasing the monthly mortgage payments by $27.45 a month for a period of 25 years, what immediate steps will the minister take to protect the purchasers of homes against these unconscionable increases?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman uses the word "predicted" in his preamble he converts the question into a hypothetical one which I feel should better be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Broadview on a last supplementary question, and then the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance assure the people who will be purchasing homes under the social housing policies of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the present rates will be frozen and that no increases will take place?

An hon. Member: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance but I can assure the hon. gentleman and the people that the thrust of the policy of my colleague will continue to achieve the results it is achieving—

An hon. Member: Yes, high prices and more inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: And fewer houses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —including the fact that the first quarter results show housing starts are again at a record level.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly record prices.

POSSIBILITY HIGHER MORTGAGE RATES CAUSED BY INCREASE IN BANK RATE DESIGNED TO CURB DEMAND FOR HOUSES—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDIZED MORTGAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question in relation to the bank rate. In view of the fact that the bank rate increase will be reflected in higher mortgage rates for those who wish to own homes, is the bank rate increase intended by the minister and his government to curb the consumer demand for housing and thus alleviate the demand side of the housing crisis?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this one further supplementary question? In view of the fact that bank rate increases will, of course, make first mortgage rates climb to 12 per cent and second mortgage rates to as high as 16 per cent, thus making it even more difficult for the average Canadian to own a home, does the minister, when talking this over with his colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing, intend to increase the subsidized mortgage program to compensate for those who have been forced to drop out of the commercial mortgage market due to prohibitively high interest rates?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is founded on a hypothesis he has created for himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FREEZING OF RENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should then like to direct this question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for housing. In light of the high interest rates of 12 per cent on first mortgages and as high as 16 per cent on second mortgages, about which the Minister of Finance does not seem to care, does he have any program to freeze rents at present levels, which are, of course, eroding the incomes of not only old age pensioners but all those on fixed incomes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the hypothesis of the hon. member's question, I must say that programs under the National Housing Act are aimed directly at those people the hon. member's question mentions, to provide them with housing.

An hon. Member: They are aimed, but they are not hitting the target.

Mr. Basford: I would mention specifically the program referred to by the hon. member, namely the assisted Home Ownership Program which is a subsidized assistance program.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN BANK INTEREST RATES ON DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the fact that the Bank of Canada has increased its interest rate by one per cent have an effect on the date the minister will bring down his budget, or is this in line with government policy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: No what?

Mr. Korchinski: Does that mean it will have no effect on the date he will bring down his budget, or no this is not in line with government policy?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult to separate the wheat from the chaff in this question.

An hon. Member: You don't even know the difference.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker, the action by the Governor of the Bank of Canada will not affect the date of the budget.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

PROPOSAL TO REVIVE COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY ON CERTAIN OPPOSITION DAYS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. In light of the refusal of the government to make available an allotted day for the opposition before the budget, which will result in 13 allotted days being concentrated within the period of 22 sitting days, a clear violation of the spirit of the rules and a breach of the undertaking by the Prime Minister, will the government House leader consult with his colleagues in respect of reviving the Committee of Supply for five of the opposition days, permitting the opposition to choose the department's estimates to be debated in the Committee of Supply, in order that the people of Canada will have the chance, through their elected representatives, to say what they think about the number one issue in this country today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the implicit assumption in the hon. member's question that the government can survive a budget and will be able to continue into the normal supply period. I have always had a hankering for the Committee of Supply, and I certainly would consider some method by which that objective could be achieved in the Committee of Supply or with Mr. Speaker in the Chair, so that members could deal with the estimates. I certainly would consider that.

Mr. Baldwin: I thank the hon. gentleman for what he is saying, which is of course in accordance with what the procedure committee proposed in its first report last session. Will the government House leader then consider adopting this suggestion within the next ten days so that we will not have to wait until a period after the budget when we will have all these days concentrated together, which will not be good parliamentary practice?

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not think I can commit myself to the timing of any allotted day, but I certainly will keep in mind the general advice that the hon. member has given.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince George on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Bellechasse.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO GRANT OPPOSITION DAY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): You said George, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I recognized the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Since the present week gives the government five days which the government did not expect to have for its legislative program, could the Acting Prime Minister give one good reason why the government will not allow an opposition day to be held this week in this found time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the utmost confidence in the leader of the House who has done such an excellent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Let's put it to a vote.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse.

HOUSING

DATE OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Since several municipalities in Quebec cannot fully benefit from Bill C-133 because no overall agreement has been concluded by Ottawa and Quebec, will the minister tell the House whether such an agreement is about to be signed and, if not, what prevents the conclusion of this agreement?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has not been signed simply because it is still being negotiated between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I remember distinctly that the minister declared at the beginning of the session that negotiations were getting to an end. May I ask once more whether we can hope that an agreement will be reached and signed in the near future so that an encouraging answer may be given to municipalities?

[English]

Mr. Basford: I, along with the hon. member, would certainly hope so.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN BANK RATE ON REGIONAL DISPARITIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMPENSATE

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Prime Minister.

Considering that the problems of investment financing resulting from a higher bank rate are likely to be most easily overcome by the established industrial base of central Canada, which has more extensive capital reserves to draw upon, does the minister anticipate any worsening of regional disparities as the result of the expensive credit policies of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howie: Has the minister consulted with his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, as to whether additional regional stimulative measures will be required in order to compensate for the increased financing difficulties faced by firms considering plant establishment or expansion in areas of regional disparity?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. gentleman that if such difficulties do arise there would be such consultations and such action.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR AMOUNT OF EXPORTS AND NAMES OF UNITED STATES CORPORATIONS USING DISC

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of a report made public in the United States yesterday that more than a quarter of U.S. exports to Canada were funnelled through the DISC program, and that this includes most if not all companies which take part in the auto pact, and in view of the government's declaration in April, 1972, that DISC subsidized exports are a violation of the auto pact, what steps is the government taking and has the minister been in contact with American government officials with regard to this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the Minister of Finance introduced his special concessions for Canadian manufacturers was to offset actions of this kind. I think the success of this program has shown that, in fact, we have done extremely well.

Mr. Nystrom: I am not interested in a speech on behalf of CMA, Mr. Speaker, I am interested in knowing what this government is doing, especially in view of the fact that reports yesterday indicated that U.S. automobile companies may have saved some $400 million in taxes because of DISC. I want to know whether or not the Acting Prime Minister knows what companies are taking advantage of DISC and how much of their exports have been channelled through the DISC program. Could he give some definitive answers?

Mr. Sharp: I cannot give a positive answer. We do not know which companies are taking advantage of DISC, but it was in response to measures like this that the government of Canada introduced the measures that are now on the books and that have enabled us to do so well in competition with the U.S.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a further supplementary, after which I will see the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact that the minister is saying he does not know what companies are taking advantage of DISC or what is happening, will the minister undertake to contact U.S. officials to find out which companies are taking advantage of DISC and to what extent? Will he make that undertaking to the House?

Mr. Sharp: I do not personally know which companies are taking advantage of DISC but the hon. gentleman will recall that the government has a surveillance program which enables it to watch the situation. We cannot, of course, reveal the tax position of any particular Canadian or particular corporations.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS BY WHEAT BOARD—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inform the House what his position is as Minister of Transport, in view of the fact the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board stated that the government will purchase 4,000 hopper cars, the Canadian Wheat Board offered to buy 4,000 hoppers cars under certain conditions, and the CPR and CNR said that the supply of railway cars is not the problem?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand the wording of the question, but I would like to know exactly what the hon. member wishes to know. I think the Minister of Justice announced that we were going to buy 4,000 hopper cars.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that they have to ask for submissions to find somebody who would build them.

Mr. Woolliams: 1980.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If the hon. member knows the answer, let him put it in Hansard, but I think he is wrong. The answer is: as soon as they can be built. We were told by the Wheat Board that they intended to do the same. As to what date, it would be preferable to ask the Minister of Justice himself.

Mr. Towers: I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Does the Canadian Wheat Board have jurisdiction to purchase hopper cars without the approval of the grain producers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is an even more appropriate question for the Minister of Justice.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF OIL POLICY DECISION ON DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarkable statement by the Minister of Finance yesterday in the House that the budget was being delayed because of the uncertainties in the economy surrounding oil price increases, and in view of the further fact that on January 22 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources presented on behalf of the government a very specific forecast to the First Ministers Conference on Energy indicating the impact of the oil situation on the consumer price index, could the Minister of Finance today tell us either the date of the budget or the real reason why the government does not want to present it to the House immediately?

● (1450)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's preamble just does not hang together.

Mr. Wagner: You are going to hang.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I said yesterday that one of the reasons for delaying the budget was to ascertain the results of the first ministers' conference in dividing the benefits and burdens of the $5 million potential revenue and $5 million potential burden in sharing the oil price situation in Canada. That having been done, that situation is being satisfied; that is what I put to the House yesterday.

PARTICIPATION BY DEPARTMENT IN PREPARATIONS FOR CONFERENCE ON ENERGY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In spite of the fact that is not what the minister said yesterday, I wonder if I could ask if he or members of his department had any hand in the paper presented by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the first ministers' conference in January?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without revealing the total ingredients and participation in government policy, I can say that the Department of Finance was involved in any statement of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in the preparation leading up to the Prime Minister's participation in the meeting of first ministers.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask if and when the governor of the Bank of Canada will have a budget to present to the House?

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKES BY ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PILOTS AND AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS—POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS ON REGIONAL PAY DIFFERENTIAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the hon. gentleman tell us briefly how negotiations are proceeding with regard to the difficulties in the St. Lawrence River with the pilots and at the same time can he indicate whether the problems with the firefighters are completely resolved?

An hon. Member: And how about the postmen?

An hon. Member: How about the controllers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): And the whole report on labour relations in Canada! Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows I am not the one who negotiates for all these groups. As far as the pilots are concerned, I met with them for two hours this morning and we tried to find a solution. We hope we are on the right track, but I am not sure it would be accepted the way it was presented. As far as the firefighters are concerned, this is a problem between the alliance and the firefighters. I am still hopeful that the firefighters are going to follow the advice of their union.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be brief with my supplementary. In view of the fact that Treasury Board pay policies, which appear to be regional pay as far as the west is concerned and national pay in the east, appear to be root causes in both these situations as well as others, does the minister intend to make representations to the President of the Treasury Board to take a fresh approach in this whole matter?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think if you look at the two problems you will see they are different because the airport firefighters in British Columbia want to compare themselves with the Vancouver firefighters, and the St. Lawrence pilots want to compare themselves with the British Columbia pilots, so it is not exactly the same thing.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO FUTURE INTEREST RATES ON MORTGAGES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID PURCHASERS OF HOMES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, supplementary to one asked by the hon. member for Calgary North to which he replied that the government did not accept the hypothesis on mortgage rates. Could the minister indicate what interest rates home owners who are presently contemplating building homes in Canada could anticipate, and what relief the minister has in mind for middle income people who presently cannot afford housing and are not eligible for housing programs?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the interest rate would depend upon the agency from which the prospective home owner intended to borrow. My answer to the hon. member for Calgary North referred to assisted home ownership programs which start interest rates at 9 per cent and effectively subsidizes them, given certain income conditions, down to 6 per cent.

I expect a very good answer in any event. Did the union first ask that a policy be established for the retirement of older employees to increase job security and if it did, can the minister say whether he is in favour of such a policy?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the union has made such a request.

Will the minister investigate this offence and deal with it forthwith?

SPORTS

ABANDONMENT OF STUDY OF SUPPLY OF RECREATIONAL FACILITIES—ADVICE TO STUDENTS—POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact students hired in March to work on the National Sports and Recreational Facilities Supply and Demand Study were informed on April 1 that this project would not be continued because federal funds were not forthcoming, and in view of one student reporting that he was advised by his regional co-ordinator not to contact his member of parliament as this would not assist passage of this project through Treasury Board and might put undue pressure on the minister and also not to advise the press, would the minister tell the House if this advice was given generally to the students affected and was the minister aware of it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the House what alternative employment or compensation may be offered to the close to 100 young people affected by being deprived of summer job opportunities by this change of government policy?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there have been various possibilities in terms of employment in the economy generally and there is also the federal program for student employment this summer.

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN COST OF FARM LOANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that farm credit loans recently were allowed to rise from 7 per cent to 8¼ per cent, further increasing the cost of farm inputs and in turn higher consumer costs and now the prime bank rate has been allowed to rise to 8½ per cent, can the minister assure the House that the cost of farm credit loans will not further increase?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before any interest rate is changed on Farm Credit Corporations loans it will be duly considered, that is for sure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lincoln and also the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster whom I meant to recognize a moment ago.

FLOODS

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO LOWER LEVELS OF LAKES ONTARIO AND ERIE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Kenneth J. Higson (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that Mr. Cohen and Mr. Herter, co-chairmen of the International Joint Commission are of the opinion that the commission itself does not have the power to initiate studies relating to measures which might be undertaken to reduce the dangerously high water levels of lakes Ontario and Erie, but must on the other hand rely on the initiatives of the governments of Canada and the United States. Can the minister advise the House what measures are being taken or contemplated by the government to assure that the water levels are reduced to the maximum extent possible?

● (1500)

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, references have been made from time to time to the International Joint Commission jointly by Canada and the United States. I know that numerous studies have been carried out, and the International Joint Commission have advised that little can be done to affect the levels substantially. Further studies are under way.

Mr. Higson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have almost reached the end of the question period. The hon. member for Lincoln may ask a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, who also has a supplementary, after which we will call orders of the day.

Mr. Higson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What has been the government's response to the request from the International Joint Commission's lake level board with regard to studying the feasibility of better controlling and possibly increasing the flow of water from the Great Lakes down through the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have committed additional staff and moneys to carrying out these investigations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, before I recognize the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster I should recognize the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa.

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON WATER LEVELS AROUND MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Can the minister tell the House whether an agreement has recently been signed concerning the control of rising waters in the Montreal area?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I did not hear the first part of the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, may I put my question again to the minister?

Can he tell the House whether an agreement has recently been signed with the province of Quebec with regard to the control of rising waters in the Montreal area?

[English]

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, but there are discussions going on with the province of Quebec in this connection.

HARBOURS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—REQUEST BY CITY FOR MEETING OF SENIOR OFFICIALS TO ASSESS DEVELOPMENT OF PORT

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It concerns the Atlantic area. Now that the minister's departmental officials have made an assessment of the multimillion dollar fire damage to the port of Saint John, will the minister accede to the request of the city of Saint John for a top-level meeting, hopefully attended by the minister himself, to assess the entire port development as it affects the future of that city?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to meet with the mayor of the city of Saint John. I know the situation there is serious. I presume that they will get in touch with Mr. Taylor, the head of the National Harbours Board. Up to now Mr. Taylor has not given any report to me. As soon as I get one I will let the hon. member know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich on a supplementary and then call orders of the day.

LABOUR DISPUTES—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT EXPEDITE CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I hoped again today to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I like to think that he is presiding over one or other of the bargaining sessions which, hopefully, are going on at this time. In his absence, may I ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Central Nova. I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the present rash of labour disputes and strikes has caused the government to urge Treasury Board to act more expeditiously in its contract bargaining, particularly in areas where employees are providing essential services such as airport firefighters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague the Minister of Transport, I do not think that this is the essence of the problem. The problem relates to the fact that the members of the union have not followed the lead of their leaders.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed from Monday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Howard.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, just before ten o'clock last night I had been pointing out that it is difficult for the small businessman to accumulate capital. Capital accumulated in a farm or business has often been used for purposes of a retirement pension for the owner and his wife. The advent of the basic old age pension, the Canada Pension Plan and the provision for increasing the size of these pensions in accordance with the increase in the cost of living has made the accumulation of an annuity for use after the normal retirement age of 65 almost superfluous. Certainly it is less important. No amount of saving which the normal person is able to do can match what the government has offered by indexing the cost of living as it applies to the basic old age pension and the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore, the accumulation of capital to be used as retirement income is much less important now than it was even four or five years ago. Indeed, one could enter one's retirement years in a shroud, so to speak, and still be assured of a fairly reasonable living because of state help.

What I am saying is that we are entering a new era in which there are new attitudes toward accumulation of capital. People think differently about savings. This, of course, has a great deal to do with the legislation before us. Today, five of the major banks set their prime lending rate at 10.5 per cent following the move of the central bank. They did this to stimulate savings because at present inflation rates one can borrow money virtually at zero cost: the rate of inflation is greater than the rate of interest. One would be foolish not to borrow money under such circumstances.

In today's Globe and Mail appears an article by a member of the C.D. Howe Research Institute. The author points out that our savings will supply insufficient capital for our needs in the 1970s and 1980s. That fact will affect the workings of this legislation. Will our financial institutions have enough funds to make this bill effective? Furthermore, the article points out that a high proportion of people in the 20 to 35-year age group save relatively little of their income. This proportion will remain high for the next decade. The author makes one assumption which I feel is not likely to be fulfilled. He assumes that with rising personal incomes people will save more. The evidence does not bear him out because as the state, by paying the Canada pension and the basic old age pension, will look after people in their retirement years, it seems evident that savings will not be that important.

This bill will not do much to help the small businessman in the short term. The sharp increase in the Bank of Canada lending rate has come about in response to the increase in the number of bank loans. The banks evidently were running out of money to lend. It is difficult to say who was getting these loans. It appears that some of this money was used for purposes of liquidity. Apparently it has not been lent to those whom this legislation is supposed to help.

That brings me to this point: business has not been able to expand in the last few years and now we are paying the penalty by seeing shortage of supply and lack of capacity for the production of goods. The minister suggested shortly after introducing the bill that losses in connection with farm improvement loans have been remarkably low, amounting to about one-fifth of one per cent of the face value of loans. That may be so. The significant fact is that we are facing a real shortage of supply of agricultural products, which indicates that the loan program has been administered too rigidly.

One of the prime causes of inflation is the steadily expanding tendency of governments to spend more and more of the gross national product. The increase in the bank rate of interest is designed to cut down consumer demand and is a modest effort to moderate the increase in the money supply. That brings me to this point: this bill will not be effective unless money can be directed, through the medium of small loans, to farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. A good deal of it will be lent by the banks. To keep costs down, the government should reduce the increase in its rate of spending.

Most government spending is inflationary because it consists of transfer payments which are spent immediately. Savings could be redirected through such institutions as the Industrial Development Bank which could be told to take greater risks with small loans so that small businessmen have access to capital. The administration of these loans acts could take greater risks in order to aid small businessmen, farmers and fishermen. I have some serious doubts whether raising the ceiling on these loans will be as beneficial as it should be unless certain directions are taken in lending money to individuals, farmers in particular. Unfortunately, governments federal and provincial become so involved in lending money to the agricultural industry that not much private money is left for investing. In other words, we look to this type of legislation for much of our total investment in farming.

As far as farming is concerned, we are in general agreement that the family farm is one of the best units for agricultural production and for the fabric of our rural countryside. When one considers that in the Soviet Union the state is considering extending farm units so there will be emerging many larger farms, we might ponder the philosophy of enlarging farm units even more. I reject the point of view that we need abnormally large farm units. However, we must recognize that in this country, and particularly in the farmlands of western Canada, very large acreages are being farmed as units with a minimum number of families involved. Much of the reason for these large-sized units has been the availability of government-financed loans obtained by individuals who would not have been able to expand had they had to depend on private money. In other words, governments both federal and provincial have made possible larger units than the private lending institutions would have allowed.

In this bill which extends the loan limits we have the elements of an undesirable feature, and this will be used by owners of large farms to acquire even larger units. If these loans could be earmarked for individuals with smaller operations, it would help them become more self-sufficient and more viable. At the same time, it would ensure that large-scale operators would have to acquire their money from private lending institutions for any expansion they wish to undertake. This is preferable to the suggestion that farm sizes should be limited by legislation.

Farm improvement loans might well have the social function of preserving small farms and assisting new and young farmers to become established. They might well have to assume more risks than those in which the lending institutions are currently involved. Farm population has dropped from almost 40 per cent at the beginning of World War II to 7 or 8 per cent at the present time. Many people consider this abnormally low. With the worsening energy shortage it is evident that more individuals will have to become involved in food production. Indeed, a great deal of food has always been produced by units which were considered by the so-called agricultural experts to be inefficient.

We have to realize that the term "viable unit" has many different aspects and means many different things within an individual's life. I think the banks which are involved in the loan operation under this legislation could take more risks and give small and new operators more risk capital. The aspect of the bill which raises the limits will not let the operator become more viable or the new operator become established unless direction is given to lending institutions that these people should have a preferred position.

Turning to small business, this is an area in which I am very interested. I sincerely believe that small business provides a very strong pivot in our economy. It provides a built-in flexibility that large corporations cannot match. While it may not always be efficient, enough of it is efficient to make it an extremely valuable component of our society. In addition to the lending aspect or liability of small business, the most important thing for small business is that government leaves them alone. They are deluged with inspectors and advisers who create work and are an unnecessary expense for government. This is a much greater problem for small businesses than that of raising money. In fact, if governments could limit their demands on the management of small business it would go a long way toward making small business more viable. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this bill.

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I again rise to speak on Bill C-14 because of great personal concern and obligation to many of my constituents, namely, small businessmen and their allied suppliers. When I spoke during the second reading debate on this bill last Wednesday I had the impression there would be an opportunity to move an amendment. Because we receive limited warning as to when a bill will be brought before the House I expected to have that opportunity when the bill was at the standing committee stage. However, immediately following second reading the House went into committee of the whole which, according to my limited knowledge of parliamentary procedure, did not allow for amendments.

The content of the amendment I would have moved would have counteracted what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said was not in the bill when answering a question put to him by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) in committee of the whole. I quote from page 1396 of Hansard:

> I have a further question, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the small business loans. Is this going to allow for the operation of the business, or is it strictly for the purchase of property and machinery?

The minister replied:

> It is not for working capital, Mr. Chairman.

Having experienced first-hand the need for such working capital in my own business in the early stages of its existence, I feel very strongly that the minister, along with the amendments that were included in the bill, should have given very serious consideration to a provision for working capital. Perhaps it is quite easy for the Department of Finance to overlook the importance of and the necessity for working capital. The minister and his department are so accustomed to being big spenders that they cannot comprehend the plight of small business owners. They obviously do not appreciate the fact that the only way many small business owners can survive is to take out only enough money after meeting employee payroll and operating expenses to provide the bare essentials for their families.

The absence of working capital is not nearly as evident in the two segments of the bill dealing into the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. These two areas are not involved in having accounts receivable to contend with to the same extent as the small businessman. As I have stated before, the most crucial area that has contributed to the bankruptcy of small businesses has been the lack of working capital. The business is launched, in many cases, with very little surplus cash in the bank. In many cases, if the owner could trade the overabundance of enthusiasm he must have possessed in order to have had the nerve to start the enterprise in the first place, for some working capital he would not have too many financial problems as he progressed. However, this is not the case, as the minister indicated. The bank demands sufficient collateral before lending small business any money. This in essence proves, even if the loan is granted, just how necessary it was in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, the necessity for freer working capital has always seemed so evident that I cannot help but wonder why it has not exercised a more important influence in the structuring of this bill and similar bills over the years since the introduction of the act. The most obvious reason working capital is not considered is that receivables have not nearly the collateral value of physical structures, equipment or real estate. However, take away receivables and most business would not need to exist. So they are, Mr. Speaker, an important cog in the cycle of success. But for banks to use this excuse to support their negative approach to small business loans only supports my further argument that banks should have some degree of obligation to make loans supported by applications which obviously if approved would help the advancement of Canadian products and also create more employment.

We have ambitious young people and, yes, some not so young who, given financial encouragement beyond the normal guidelines laid down for lending money, would continue to create the ideas necessary to keep alive the free enterprise system which has been so significant in our first century of Canadian progress. I have many constituents who are interested in starting a business or looking for ways to continue one already in progress. But by the time they have checked the sources of capital and the red tape involved, they are either discouraged from pursuing their dream of a business of their own or ready to throw up their hands in frustration at being able to continue the one they already have.

Mr. Speaker, we spend a lot of time debating how to encourage more Canadian investment. One obvious way would be to encourage the banks to show some compassion to our small business community, thus discouraging them from having eventually to sell out to foreign investors in order to keep from ultimate bankruptcy. But the only way

[Mr. Frank.]

I can see banks ever doing this is to make it obligatory for them to loan to at least a percentage of applicants. The minister in committee of the whole stated as follows:

I suppose the best way to know what is going on in terms of refused applications is for members, when they are approached by their constituents regarding refused loans, to inform me of these complaints and I will make inquiries directly from the bank concerned to find out what the reasons were for the refusal. I am prepared to do that on a continuing basis.

To me, Mr. Speaker, that sounds like a very diplomatic way of passing the buck, and as far as I am concerned the taxpayer sees far too much evidence of buck-passing now. There must be guidelines laid down so that the banks and their potential customers know what could take place. I do not blame the banks for not wanting to be any more involved than is necessary, and past lending statistics will bear this out. The fact is that from the date the Small Businesses Loans Act came into effect in January, 1961, until September, 1973, approximately $283 million was lent for all of Canada. This is about $23 million per year on average. But something is wrong when we find the loans total for small business was no more in 1973 than in 1972, being about $15 million per year. And now Mr. Speaker, with the recent turn of events of the central bank's interest rate increasing, we will probably see less activity than before. Not only will we see growth restriction, but small business owners already in a bind for working capital will find increased costs in maintaining inventory and receivables because of an interest rate of probably 12 per cent.

Many businesses in the past have had to resort to short-term loans of 12 per cent, or even much higher, from private sources but now they will be faced with 12 per cent from even the banks, and heaven knows how high from private sources. I am afraid this could be the so-called straw that broke the camel's back. Mr. Speaker, many very credible businesses have already exhausted their credit supply. There have been many legitimate reasons for this increase in the cost of doing business. If they are retailers, an increase in the price of the merchandise they sell means more inventory cost. If they are small manufacturers, the increased cost of maintaining inventory also applies. In both cases their cost of maintaining higher receivables will increase.

No one denies business today is strong, and all types of small business is no exception; but with runaway inflation so evident in every phase of our economy, many small businesses could be unknowingly accelerating themselves right into bankruptcy. Unhappily, the government has proven itself bankrupt of any solutions which might slow down this inflation. The inflation we see all around us is not totally induced from outside, as this government would have the Canadian people believe. Better than half of the now well over 10 per cent total inflation rate could be slowed down by a responsible government. It is obvious that we cannot expect any new ideas for fighting inflation from this government, but for the sake of Canada's future let us hope we shall not have to wait too long before the Canadian people have the opportunity to change the government.

As was stated earlier by my colleague from Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) 60 per cent of the labour force in Canada is supported by small or medium-sized business. That statement in itself should be encouragement to take another hard look at just how little these amendments will actually do for small business. Mr. Speaker, couple that statement with the fact that even though actual farmers represent only 5 per cent of Canadians, when you include all segments of our economy allied to agriculture the figure is raised to 70 per cent. This government is looking over or, perhaps I should be saying, overlooking a lot of people who I am afraid have been taking too much for granted.

However, Mr. Speaker, I realize it is too late at this stage to do any more than remind the architects of this bill, whoever they may be, of some of its shortcomings. The real changes will have to wait until the citizens of Canada have the opportunity to vote out of office this government which seems determined to stay in power even though their incompetence is becoming more and more evident week by week.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of participating in the debate on Bill C-14. Although in past years I had the opportunity of serving on the Standing Committee on Fisheries, changes in the electoral boundaries removed from my riding practically all the area in which fishing was an important matter of concern. The result is that at the present time I am inclined to leave discussion of the fisheries aspect to my hon. friends whose constituents are more concerned with that industry.

Nevertheless, in case there should be some misunderstanding, I want to state emphatically that I still have a strong interest in the fishing industry. When we remember the part the Fraser River system plays in maintaining these resources, it is understandable that such an interest should continue. However, it is my desire today to comment on the provisions of the bill which relate to agriculture, an industry of major proportions and consequence in my riding. I should like to deal, too, with the aspects of the bill which affect small businesses of which there are a great many in Fraser Valley East.

When I spoke on the budget last year, I stated that small business in Canada generates more employment, real growth, tax revenue, and bears more of the cost burden of government than does so-called big business. Small businesses are the backbone of the Canadian business community. For as my colleague from Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) pointed out the other day, they create over 50 per cent of the nation's gross national product and pay close to 50 per cent of the taxes collected by the government, while employing more than 50 per cent—I think the suggestion has even been 60 per cent—of the people working in Canada.

Canada, as was the case with most developed countries, had as its dominant form of enterprise before World War II, small business. I do not mean that there were no large corporations before that, but I do mean that the bulk of all manufacturing and trade was in the hands of family business and regional organizations. In 1951 the dominion bureau of statistics showed that 90 per cent of all retail stores, service establishments, wholesalers and manufacturers had less than 15 employees and accounted for over 30 per cent of the gross national expenditure.

Moving to the present day, Mr. Speaker, much of the output of our farms and factories is distributed to consumers through wholesale and independent retail stores. Many people who have studied economics have pointed out that the destruction of the small merchant carries with it a number of unfortunate and undesirable consequences, such as a depression in real estate values of business properties, a decline in tax revenues to municipalities, a complete displacement of normal credit arrangements within the community, and increased unemployment.

As well I should like to quote a former minister of the Crown, the Hon. E. Davie Fulton. Speaking in the House on May 30, 1960, as reported at page 4341 of Hansard, he said:

> —the best and soundest economy is that economy which is based upon the maximum participation of the greatest possible number of independent operators in that economy, and that it is an unsound economy which relies for its operations either on the employment of everybody by the government or the employment of everybody by some giant corporation or corporations. Our objective, therefore, and our philosophy in this field is to bring the maximum reconciliation in the way of the protection of small businessmen, on the one hand, and the interests of the community, of the consumers and of society generally, on the other.

That is still the philosophy of this party when it comes to small business. This bill shows the government is taking a step in the right direction, however, in raising the gross revenue allowable portion from $500,000 to $1 million and the amount of the loan from $25,000 to $50,000. As I say, this is a step, but I am sure the government has come to grips with the real problem. Small business in Canada is fighting for its very survival.

Part of the problem is that all businesses are valued either by the federal government from the point of view of assessing capital gains, or by provincial governments for estate tax purposes, either on the basis of seven times the profits or the net assets value, whichever is higher. Both levels of government assess the small business as though it were a pile of cash in the bank or on the desk from which each can take its shares, and possibly more than its share. It is wrong, I feel, to look on small business in this manner. It is not a pile of cash on the table; it is a vital, dynamic enterprise and should be treated as such. We must ensure that conditions remain favourable for small business to grow and thrive. This can be done through stimulative and expansionary tax regulations.

There have been many instances in which the taxes have been so onerous and the available funds so scant that small businesses have had to be sold in order to satisfy the tax collector. Because of this, those who have been the proud owners of businesses that have been in the family for generations are forced to sell out and compete on an inadequate labour market. It is my position, and the position of this party, that provision should be made for Canadian citizens to invest in the equity of Canadian-owned small business. We believe that the credit, which will be 50 per cent of qualified investments to a maximum of $5,000 each year, should either be offset against the person's income tax or rebated directly to him. This means that a Canadian who invests, for example, $1,000 in a qualified business or company will receive a credit of $500 against his income.

Another matter of great concern to the small businessman is the proliferation of duties imposed upon him by government, for which there is no compensation. The records dealing with unemployment insurance, taxes, workmen's compensation and statistical data of various kinds require hours of additional work per week and, of course, these many additional hours of work must of necessity be compensated for in higher prices for the goods and services provided. This is a matter that is constantly being raised by constituents engaged in small businesses who cannot see any adequate justification for many of the records they are required to maintain. As an aside, one constituent discussed with me the seemingly ridiculous demand made upon him by an income tax official who, in spite of the fact that his income tax forms had been filed and the auditors had been out to check his books and records and had confirmed their accuracy, warned him against destroying the files as he must store them indefinitely in case they wished to audit them again at some time in the future.

There are a multitude of demands and restrictions which, taken individually, are seemingly insignificant but which when accumulated make the small businessman wonder whether it is worth the trouble to remain in business. The small businessman provides a personalized service to the community in the conduct of his business as well as in his participation in community projects and activities. On the other hand, the large supermarket complex tends to be impersonal and perhaps aloof from community activities. In many instances the small business is found in areas where the population is of lower density than large urban communities, but here as well the small businessman provides a service that is worth preserving. The small businesses of our nation are operated by individuals who are not expecting to become giants in business or multimillionaires, but who desire to provide for themselves and their families a decent and respectable standard of living while contributing to the social, cultural and economic life of the community.

The small businessman is faced with another serious problem today, and that is how to cope with the results of the inflationary spiral in the matter of help. Many have stated their inability to obtain help even in areas of high unemployment. The rejoinder to that may well be that if a business cannot afford to hire help at the going rate, the owner had better shut up shop. But the question is, what is going to happen if thousands more do close up shop and go on to the labour market? Not only will we have the unemployment picture aggravated; we will have a great many intensely independent, public spirited individuals who are disillusioned and bitter over the fact that government action, or inaction, has forced them to close their doors.

In the Speech from the Throne the government promised counselling services as well as financial assistance for small business, but I am not convinced that the measures proposed will solve the problems faced by small businessmen. This will require much more adequate and far reaching measures. However, this bill may assist them in meeting for the moment the crisis of inflation, taxation, and a completely unnecessary and burdensome maze of red tape so far as their efforts to be responsible and worthy members of society are concerned.

I shall now proceed to another subject, although I would have liked to continue on the matter of small businesses. Let me refer to the bill as it relates to the agricultural industry. Canadians in this category are seemingly a vanishing breed. As pointed out in the National Farmers' Union submission to the government of Canada on March 14, 1973, the census statistics of 1971 indicate that Canada suffered a net loss in the number of farms of 64,394 from the census figures of 1966. This was considerably higher than the previous five-year period of 1961 to 1966 when the number of farms decreased by something over 50,000. In fact, it is about a 28 per cent increase.

These figures must be saying something to us; they must be telling us that in spite of the shortage of jobs on the labour market, thousands of Canadians are finding it impossible to overcome the obstacles in the path of continuing to maintain and operate a farm. Cost of land and equipment is such that ever-increasing amounts of capital are required and the returns are not sufficient to justify the risk of expansion at the current cost of money obtained on the open market. The provisions of Bill C-14 as they relate to agriculture are welcome, but in light of present developments it is questionable if even the expanded credit facilities proposed will meet the needs of today. As has been pointed out in this debate, it is questionable if even $100,000 is sufficient to establish a viable working agricultural unit.

The point has been raised that legislation providing for increased credit will be of little value if lending agencies can find a more lucrative investment in other areas requiring capital. I think sufficient illustrations have been given us during this debate to indicate that this is not a hypothetical situation, and it is possible that a very careful monitoring program will be required to ensure that what has been done theoretically by law will in fact become a practical program as far as the farming community is concerned.

I would just say in conclusion that while welcoming the amendments which are before us today, and without questioning the fact that they will assist these various areas of our economy to a degree, they fall far short of meeting the needs in the areas of fisheries, small business and agriculture today.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue with the views so well expressed by the previous speaker, recognizing that in relation to the scope of this bill it is a shame a debate has to be undertaken by this House at all, since it provides the small business community and the small farming and fishing communities with so little. Indeed, considering the time devoted to this bill, it might well be said that never have so many words been said to accomplish so little for so few. Yet it is justifiable that the House deal with this bill in view of the significance of the issue. The significance of small business and the farming and fishing communities to the well-being of Canada as we have known it and would like to know it in the future cannot be overestimated. It is fundamental to the character of the Canada we have known and prized that the individual should have an opportunity of entering into a business supporting himself and providing work for others.

The fact is that Canada needs leadership to preserve that tradition, and the present government, particularly with NDP support, is veering away from it. Canada is on its way to becoming a corporate and collective state in which the vast majority of people make their living in the employ either of big corporations or of big governments. One of the things this debate on the small business, farm and fisheries loans bill indicates to me and to the country is that we must try to recover the opportunity Canadians have traditionally enjoyed of entering enterprises on their own, of supporting the family farm and those participating in the important fisheries industry.

I think it is significant, when we look at statistics on income received by Canadians over the past 12 years, to note that the percentage of the national income enjoyed by small businesses has fallen from 10.4 per cent to 7.5 per cent, while at the same time the income for corporations has increased from 13.8 per cent to 16.3 per cent, with the income of governments increasing even more. At this time, governments in Canada at the three levels combined represent almost 40 per cent of our gross national product. Between governments and corporations well over half the income of this country is being monopolized. Therefore, I think we ought to be asking the government which has introduced this bill why more has not been done, and why it does not propose that Canada take a giant leap forward in assisting people to go into business and stay in business or to undertake family farming.

We certainly welcome the fact the government proposes that legislation in respect of small businesses loans should be changed so that loans will become available to businesses grossing $1 million a year and loans increased to $50,000. But when we realize that since 1961, when the small business loans system was introduced by the previous Progressive Conservative government, in all that time only $290 million in loans has been provided, the highest record for a year being one in which $30 million was made available to small businessmen, we see how triflingly little this small business loans administration means to the small business people of Canada.

I think it is evident to anyone who looks at the spending record of the government that this is almost nothing at all when compared with what the government puts into LIP, OFY and all the other alphabet soup organizations which have been funded with hundreds of millions of dollars. We then begin to see how this bill is in fact nothing more than economic tokenism and I would hope that the House is generally apprised of the benefits these amendments will provide to small businesses and how little they will actually achieve.

I think more benefit would accrue to small businesses if the government would consider some of the measures which I will now suggest. The first is an increase in information services provided by the government to small businessmen seeking financing of this kind. The fact is that all too few men are aware of what is available and all too few find themselves able to make the most of the opportunity that is provided. What we need is the government financing and undertaking an information and public relations program in order that small businessmen and other people willing to go into business will be aware of the financing available to them. Very frequently they have to come to members of parliament or to other public officers and ask for the basic information which should have been made known to them and which too often is almost hidden from them. So I hope the minister will consider this kind of information program as a basic way of helping the small business community to make the most of the financial opportunity that the act provides.

The second thing for which I would hope is that we might add to the incentive program so that greater assistance might be made available to people wanting to undertake the risks of private enterprise. The kind of incentive that could be made available is analogous to the kind of incentive that has been given to the big corporations, incentive that has been given through the various tax write-offs that are now part of our economy. If these are justified for big corporations, surely something comparable should be available to small businessmen, not necessarily in the manufacturing or the processing industries but those which play a vital part in the economy through the various small service companies they provide. I would hope that much more in the way of tax incentives could be made available to these people.

In my own municipality, the borough of Scarborough, part of metro Toronto, the industrial register indicates somewhat in excess of 1,800 different companies and firms doing business. One is impressed in looking through that register to see that the vast majority of those businesses employ fewer than 25 people. Basically, our municipality is comprised of very small companies and one-man firms. These people are providing the majority of the jobs available in that community but they are having the greatest difficulty staying in business. They need tax incentives, they need financial assistance and all too little of it is being provided by the government under the present legislation.

A third recommendation that I would make to the government is simply to get off the backs of the ordinary small businessmen and give them an opportunity to do their daily work without having to spend so much time working for the government. One of the complaints made most frequently to me by the small businessmen in the community I represent concerns the time they have to devote to answering questionnaires, filling out forms and tabulating statistics, all at no charge to the government but at their own cost. This work often is done by the businessman himself or by his wife at night, on weekends or in the little spare time they have available to provide the government with information which the government may or may not use.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: Recently I received from one constituent a copy of a form that had been sent to him by Statistics Canada. He complained that this was a typical example of the civil servants creating work for themselves. He says that no small businessman can answer questions of this kind with any kind of accuracy; he simply does not have the staff or equipment to provide the precise, detailed information that the government demands of him. So one thing we would say is, "Get off the back of the small businessman and give him time to do his work. If you want to make work for the civil service, at least do not require the small businessman to help you do it."

Fourth, one of the things that the government could do most effectively in assisting the small businessman is to help the labour market become available to him again. One of the most common complaints of people striving to keep open a small factory, a store or some other enterprise is the difficulty of getting help at a time when unemployment insurance payments are increasing, when the premiums being levied upon these employers are being increased. At this time these employers find they simply cannot fill the job vancancies that they have. In one community, for example, some companies have sold out in the last 12 months to large corporations simply because of their discouragement at having suffered through being unable to hire employees who would help carry on this kind of enterprise and be self-supporting.

So I would say that surely the government cannot be content with the kind of tokenism that it has put before parliament. Surely it is not deceiving anyone but itself when it says that this is a fulfilment of the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne. If we are going to take the giant leap forward that this part of the economic community requires, we certainly need much more than the government has put before us. I hope that, not only for economic reasons but much more for social reasons, we in parliament will find the opportunity to take that leap forward.

Important as the small business community is economically, it is of even greater significance socially. We should recognize that the real value of the small business is the opportunity it gives the individual man or woman to fulfil himself or herself in a private and free enterprise that he or she is able to undertake, maintain and shape. Surely the day has not gone by when that is an opportunity before every Canadian willing to make the effort. Surely the day has not come when this parliament and this country will supinely accept the corporatism and collectivism now represented by this government and its New Democrat allies.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only a few words on bill C-14 which is designed to help farmers, small businessmen and fishermen obtain new credits which means that they will be allowed to get into further debts at prohibitive interest rates. Everyone knows that the current interest rate for small business amounts to 12 and even 12.5 per cent. For instance, if a small businessman borrowed, say, $10,000 over ten years at 12 per cent this means that in 10 years he will have to reimburse $22,000 in capital and interest.

Yesterday, my colleagues from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) have amply elaborated on the help we intend to extend to the farmers and even small businesmen. I think that the best way to truly help them would be to exempt them from taxes as is being done for major companies. The small businessmen should be helped in exactly the same way and they would not think of closing their doors as they do today. The farmers would not think of leaving their land or of selling their livestock because it is no longer a paying proposition. Allowing them to get into more debts only postpones bankruptcy.

Some day the present government or another one will have to consider other solutions than collective indebtness for farmers and small businessmen and this is why the Social Crediters have been suggesting for a long time that we resort to the Bank of Canada. Some people are beginning to admit—

An hon. Member: Here we go again!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I hear an hon. member saying: Here we go again! He will see that some day. People have already laughed at our request in the area of pension and social welfare benefits. Today they say: Here we go again! Something will have to be done also in this area as we cannot keep on in this direction. This is why we say: Let us be the master of our credit through the Bank of Canada and then we will be able to help efficiently entrepreneurs, small businessmen, farmers, fishermen and the whole population. Mr. Speaker, that is all I had to say on this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a quesiton of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I regret I was not able to catch Your Honour's eye at the moment immediately following the reporting of the result of the vote by the Clerk and Your Honour's declaration with regard to the amendment. The question of privilege I wish to raise is this: there may appear on Votes and Proceedings, as a result of the vote which has just been taken, an indication alongside the names of some hon. members that they voted in a manner contrary to their wishes and ideas, and if Your Honour does find I have a prima facie case of privilege I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That the votes cast by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, the hon. member for Hamilton West—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The hon. member knows that by long-standing practice it is completely wrong to reflect on a vote, and the hon. member is doing this when he calls into question the votes cast by other hon. members.

Mr. Alexander: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I must take issue with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who has shown irresponsibility—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Speaking personally and for your information, Mr. Speaker, I can say this: anything which that hon. member moves, I will vote against.

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rose on what he called a question of privilege. I suggested to him that there is no privilege and that it is irregular in every respect to raise the matter in this way. The hon. member knows very well, I am sure, that he did not propose an amendment as he attempted to do a moment ago. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege simply because my name was mentioned by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I think his problem in this regard is simply his inability to read my remarks, or perhaps to understand what he read.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Skeena rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Howard: Or a point of order, Mr. Speaker, whichever way it is classified. I just want to point out the insincerity and two-facedness of the Conservative Party which have just shown themselves.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I refer the hon. member to Standing Order 35, which I am sure he as well as every other hon. member knows. Standing Order 35 provides that no member may reflect upon any vote of the House, etc.

The question has been put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELIGIOUS SECTS, EARNINGS FORMULA, BASIC EXEMPTIONS, ETC.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-19, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19 is the second important bill amending the Canada Pension Plan introduced by the government in the House within a year that is since, in co-operation with the provinces, it undertook a reform of the social security system in Canada. The first bill was passed by Parliament during the last session. Among other things, it provided pension increases from 8 to 20 per cent to some 500,000 contributors to the plan, it guaranteed full rise of present and future allowances on the basis of the future increases in the cost of living and finally it set the ceiling of acceptable earnings under the plan for the years 1974 and 1975.

Provided it meets with the approval of Parliament, the bill in question today would implement the commitments made through the first series of agreements on the Canada Pension Plan reached in Ottawa with the provinces in October 1973. Similarly, this bill would also implement the second series of federal-provincial agreements arrived at two months ago at the Edmonton conference. The main points of the bill to be studied today could be summarized thus:

1. It would provide for complete equality of status of all contributors and beneficiaries under the Canada Pension Plan, whether male or female;

2. It would do away with the means test and the criterion according to which the eligibility of a contributor to a pension is determined; this means that persons of 65 and more would be entitled to a retirement pension regardless of what money they might earn at a later date;

3. It sets out a formula for the calculation of maximum eligible earnings under the plan, that is the year's maximum pensionable earnings, so that levels of benefits and cash receipts may reflect increased salary rates as witnessed in the past decade. Under that formula once an adequate basis for the calculation of levels of benefits and cash receipts is brought up-to-date it will then be possible to align that basis on the average salaries and wages of workers in Canadian industry;

4. It would amend the present formula used to determine the annual basic exemption under the plan; that formula would have the advantage of giving greater access to Canadians on lower incomes who could then fully participate in the Canada Pension Plan;

5. It would reintroduce for approval by Parliament the provisions set out in Bill C-190 which would exclude from the plan certain categories of people who would wish not to participate on the grounds of their religious beliefs; the provisions dealing with the reimbursement of legal expenses would be softened, and certain other steps would be taken with respect to the financial administration of the plan and the negotiation of international agreements. Although they received very favourable support from Parliament those proposals could not be passed before the end of the last session.

[Mr. Speaker.]

6. Finally, it incorporates many technical amendments to correct a few minor mistakes and certain ambiguities or anomalies which can be found in the present text and which the department responsible for the implementation of the plan noted lately. In principle the technical amendments would not affect most contributors and recipients but it would be a different case altogether for those who are directly concerned, and those corrections would benefit almost all those people.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will obviously have noted, when I pointed out earlier that the passage of Bill C-19 would respect the commitments made under the first and second series of agreements concluded with the provinces, that I deliberately avoided using the word "final" in speaking of these series of agreements.

In my opinion, the Canada Pension Plan revision is far from being definitely completed. Among the other priorities that we have yet to settle and that we are considering in this regard, and I am thinking among other things about the provisions that have to be brought in to ensure coverage under the plan for housewives, about suggestions advocating preretirement, about the need for having clear-cut levels of disability and survival benefits, and last but non least about this other question being raised concerning invalids, orphans, widows and widowers, that is to what extent would the needs of these persons be best met through social insurance programs, such as the Canada Pension Plan, rather than through income supplement plans?

As to the participation of the homemakers, I had the opportunity of discussing the matter with my provincial counterparts during our last meeting in February, at Edmonton. I should rightfully say that we have all acknowledged the complexity of the problems caused by the various proposals concerning the participation of homemakers. So we thought it would be unwise to try to draw hasty conclusions before being able to carry through the overall examination of every aspect of the problem.

Nevertheless, we agreed upon the advantages of certain alternatives, among which voluntary contributions and pension credit sharing would surely deserve a thorough review in 1974.

We shared the view that it would certainly be desirable that a public debate be held on this matter and all related aspects. Finally, we decided to refer it to the advisory committee on the Canada Pension Plan as well as the advisory committee on the status of women for consideration and additional comments.

I would say in addition that I think it is most important to put this matter before the House and for this purpose, I filed a few days ago before the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs a document intitled "Housewives and the Canada Pension Plan".

In this regard, I read with the highest interest in last Tuesday's Hansard the debate about the private bill put forward by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) and in particular the suggestion of the hon. members for Waterloo-Cambridge and Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) that the old age security plan might well prove to be a more efficient mechanism than the Canada Pension Plan as regards housewive's contribution.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do hope that these measures will be subjected to more discussion, both within and without Parliament, and that these debates will bring about valuable solutions. At the same time, research will continue on the studies I mentioned and I have every reason to believe that they will be successfully completed within the time limits we have set to achieve the review of the social security system in Canada. Though it may be too early to foretell the results of these studies as well as other studies that will be carried out in this area, they might call for the introduction of a third bill that would provide for further amendments to the Canada Pension Plan.

With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I would now deal with the provisions of Bill C-19 that in my opinion are the most important.

● (1650)

[English]

The most noteworthy changes proposed by the bill, in terms of principle, are the provisions for the equal treatment of male and female contributors and beneficiaries, and I take particular pleasure in being able to include them in this bill. The equal treatment of Canadian men and women is, of course, a principle to which this government is firmly committed, and is being reflected in further legislation to be considered during the current session of parliament.

The discussion paper I recently tabled in the House Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs states:

> This is a time of reappraisal concerning the position of women in society and in the home. Certain traditional assumptions and values are being questioned and changed. This relates both to the increasing participation of women in the economic work force of the nation, and to changing attitudes concerning the position of women within the fundamental unit of Canadian society—the family.

Bill C-19 provides striking and tangible evidence of the rate and degree to which traditional assumptions and attitudes on the role of women in Canadian society have changed. The end of the transitional phase of the Canada Pension Plan still lies about two years off in the future. Yet, before the plan is fully mature, we are already concluding that we should remove the basic distinctions between males and females which were built into the plan with a broad measure of public support only a few short years ago.

What exactly are the distinctions that are to be abolished by Bill C-19? The Canada Pension Plan now provides that upon the death of a male contributor, a surviving widow is automatically eligible for a pension that is equal to 60 per cent of her husband's actual or imputed retirement pension if she is 65 or older. If the surviving widow is between 45 and 65 years of age, or is below the age of 45 and is disabled or has dependent children, she is eligible for a pension that is equal to 37½ per cent of her husband's actual or imputed retirement pension plus a flat rate component which now amounts to $33.76 a month. Lesser amounts are paid to widows who are between 35 and 45 years of age and are not disabled or do not have dependent children.

In addition, when a male contributor dies or becomes disabled, his children automatically become eligible for a benefit that, at present, amounts to $33.76 per month for each child subject to some variation for those in families having more than four children. On the other hand, when a female contributor dies or becomes disabled, her surviving widower is eligible for a widower's pension only if he is disabled and was dependent upon his wife, and the children become eligible for a benefit only if they were "wholly or substantially" maintained by their mother. These differences, it should be noted, have existed notwithstanding the fact that the contribution rate to the plan is the same for male and female contributors.

The bill proposes the complete removal of these distinctions. The effect of this change, if and when enacted, will be that surviving spouses and children of deceased or disabled female contributors will, in future, qualify for the same benefits and under the same conditions as those that now apply in respect of the surviving spouses and children of male contributors. The current provision which limits the payment of one benefit for each child will be maintained and it will be paid upon the death or disability of the first spouse.

I would also like to draw the attention of hon. members to an important clause in the bill that proposes retroactive eligibility, but not retroactive payment, for the surviving spouses and children of female contributors who died or became disabled prior to proclamation of this bill. In other words, the bill proposes that after proclamation, widowers and the children of female contributors who died or became disabled prior to proclamation will from that point in time on become eligible to receive benefits as though the Canada Pension Plan had always accorded equal treatment to male and female contributors and beneficiaries. This particular proposal of the bill will, it is estimated, benefit about 30,000 individuals.

I would like to take this opportunity to remind those who may be affected by this retroactive feature that benefits under the Canada Pension Plan are only payable upon application. I would suggest, therefore, that potential beneficiaries of female contributors who died or became disabled prior to proclamation of the bill should consult a Canada Pension Plan district office about their eligibility for a benefit as soon after the bill comes into force as possible. I would also propose to draw this to the attention of those who may be affected by this measure by means of inserts in the appropriate federal cheques issued to individuals by the government.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Communications—Cablevision—Request for early approval of applications to improve reception in Manitoba; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Health—Incidence of silicosis among uranium workers—Action by Minister of Labour; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Commemoration—Inquiry as to possibility of events to honour Mackenzie King, Arthur Meighen and J. S. Woodsworth.

The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, again before the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) launches into his oratorical flight I should like to point out, on a point of order, that because of an experience that I had last evening during the private members' hour, and the discrepancy that exists between the various clocks, I would like to have some indication from the Chair as to which is the clock which will be observed this evening. I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the two clocks on the lateral walls outnumber the clock on the far wall, and I suggest that the clocks on the lateral wall are more indicative of the proper time, although I understand that your practice is to watch the clock on the far wall.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867

MEASURE TO ABOLISH THE SENATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-118, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (abolition of the Senate), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member worries about the clocks. Surely we can deal with this bill in five or ten minutes.

Mr. Blais: You have been at it for 20 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might say that when it worked out that the House was to sit this week, instead of taking the recess that had been planned, some hon. members wondered whether we would accomplish anything. Well, here is our chance. What better week's work than to abolish the Senate between now and six o'clock!

Mr. Yewchuk: What about abolishing the NDP?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the hon. member on the other side said a moment ago, this is not the first time that I have proposed this measure. Indeed, I have been at it for a good many years. The more I think about it, the more I observe the operations of the other place, the more I consider the meaning of democracy, the more ludicrous I find it that we still have, as part of our law making parliament, a group of 102 men and women who are not elected, who are not responsible to anyone, yet who have the same lawmaking authority that is accorded to those who are elected by the people of Canada.

I can understand that more than 100 years ago, when the constitution of this country was being drawn, it made sense not to trust democracy completely. It made sense, especially with the House of Lords in Britain and such as examples, that there might be a group of detached senior citizens who could take a second look at what the elected people might do. Frankly, sir, I do not think there is a case for that at all any longer. Either we believe in democracy or we do not. Either we believe in the laws of the land being made by persons elected by the people of the country, or we do not, and if we do believe in representative democracy I submit that we should not have, as part of parliament, a non-elected body.

Therefore I propose once again my bill that calls for the abolition of the Senate. Anyone who takes the trouble to look at the bill, which in this session is number C-118, will see that it is a rather lengthy one. That is because the abolition of the Senate calls for a number of consequential changes in the British North America Act. But even after one has studied those consequential changes one will see that all the bill does is to abolish the Senate itself.

Despite what is said about me sometimes in the other place—and the things that are said make interesting reading—I want to say that, in my view, there are some very fine persons in the Senate of Canada. A number of them, in my view, are very conscientious in the work that they endeavour to do.

As one who is around this building a good deal of the time, I can say that there are times, especially over weekends, when conscientious Senators around these halls outnumber members of the House from all parties. But that is not the issue. It does not matter how fine and upstanding the members of the other place might be. It does not matter how much attention they give to the job that is assigned to them. What is wrong in principle is that non-elected persons have the authority of law makers.

I know too that it is sometimes argued that they do great work in committees. In particular it is argued that some of the special committees that are appointed to study problems such as poverty, pensions, land use or matters related to science policy, do good work. That is perfectly true. But it does not justify maintaining 102 individuals on salary, and maintaining an institution at a total cost of something over $7 million a year, so that 15 or 20 of them can do good work on committees. If there are jobs that we want done, jobs of research, jobs of inquiry, it is perfectly possible to set up committees or commissions specifically assigned to do those jobs. I suggest that we can do all of this at much less than the cost of maintaining the Senate.

However, entirely apart from the question of cost, I feel very strongly that any such job that they do does not give Their Honours the right to share equally with us the powers of law making. It is contended sometimes these days—in fact it is contended by some of the more thoughtful members of the other place—that they really do not exercise their veto power; the most they now exercise is a suspensive veto. For example, in the most recent case was the wiretapping legislation.

Senators tried to amend the bill that we had passed in this House, but when in this House we stood our ground, all they did was to have a lengthy debate about it, and in the end they agreed to pass it. I say with respect that I thought that some of them over there stated the case very correctly when they said that they had done their job by entering a suspensive veto, and that it was not their moral right to go all the way and turn down what had been assed in this House. Although I said that with respect, I have to say that it is also an argument against the other place. Why keep an institution that really has no power? It has it constitutionally, but in terms of practice Their Honours have come to realize that they would be unwise to exercise that constitutional power. So in effect, Mr. Speaker, we are maintaining a nullity. I think therefore that we should come up to date and recognize democracy as the basic principle of a parliamentary institution and have in it only persons who are elected by the people of Canada.

Some argue on occasion that the points I have been making call not for the ultimate solution, namely the abolition of the Senate, but rather for reform. Mr. King was a great one for it. The only reform he ever made was to turn a Conservative Senate into a Liberal Senate. Somewhat later Conservative prime ministers tried to reform it the other way, but they did not last long enough.

But to be serious, Mr. Speaker, the most significant reform that some people advocate is to put it on an elective basis. I think we have enough strains and stresses in government in this country already. We have the conflict between the executive and the House of Commons, between government and opposition, and so on. We have the confrontation or the negotiating that has to go on, if you will, between the federal government and the various provincial governments.

I suggest that if we had a second House of this parliament that was elected as we are, and had the same amount of authority as we have, we would slow down the machinery of legislation and the machinery of government to a disturbing extent.

Without taking the time to go into it, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I have thought about the various reforms that might be made, but to me they do not make sense. The argument that the Senate is needed to protect minorities does not grab me. I do not know how we in Manitoba, as a small province, find our minority position protected by the fact that we have six members in the other House. I suggest the place where minorities are best protected is here in this House of Commons where we are responsible to the people who elected us, and finally in the courts. All told, I can see no place for the Senate.

I now come back to my earlier remarks and I plead very strongly that what I am saying is not personal with regard to those who are in the other place at the present time. If I said that my observation of their performance leads me to believe it should be abolished, that is because I sense the futility of what they are doing. Over there they sometimes think I am hard on them. They have my sympathy. Their job is so useless. As I say, that does not take away from the sterling qualities of many who are over there. But when it is all added up, I feel there is no real place for the Senate in our parliamentary setup.

A former colleague in my party, and one who was a colleague when we were both engaged in the work of the Canadian Labour Congress, is now over there. I like to read to him or in his presence a memorandum that he wrote some time ago on the Senate. In it he said very clearly that the Senate is the most undemocratic institution in the world. He said it could go on a thousand times vetoing what has been done in the House of Commons, and he clearly took a stand for its abolition. That, of course, was before he became a member of the other place. I still agree with him, even if he does not!

I thought I had read everything that has been written on the Senate but I learned this afternoon that the Minister of Finance once wrote a thesis on the abolition of the Senate. I asked him to send me a copy of it so that I could include his gems of wisdom the next time I spoke on this issue. I would say that those who speak of this subject approach it not with any feelings against those who are there but on the principle that parliament ought to be a democratic institution, and there ought not to be in it a place where members are responsible to no one. I emphasize that, Mr. Speaker. They are appointed, of course, by the Governor General, but it is really by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who names them. Once a member is appointed he is not even responsible to the Prime Minister and is certainly not responsible to the people of Canada. This does not make sense at all, and that is why I say, Mr. Speaker, that the only sensible thing to do with the Senate is to abolish it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), I wish to mention to him that he might not have noticed the clock at this time because 20 minutes on either of those clocks on either side of the House might not be 20 minutes!

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I trust the discrepancy will be rectified in a very short time in order to make the good life more pleasant in these holy surroundings.

I hasten at the outset to express to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) my deepest respect and appreciation for his persistence in this particular matter. I feel that most of the arguments he advances are reasoned and have withstood the test of time. As far as his logic is concerned I would hope that perhaps some of the suggestions he makes would be accepted.

However, last year when I spoke on this topic I indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, that I hoped it was not the beginning of a long tradition, as long as that of the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre who had been speaking on this matter for a number of years. I promised that that would be the only time I would speak on the subject, but I find myself again speaking on it and perhaps establishing such a tradition. I might indicate, if this is the way fate should direct, that I will endeavour to reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre any time he presents this particular bill.

I would also agree with the hon. member when he states that members of the Senate are intelligent gentlemen and gentlewomen—all of them are—and that he finds in that particular chamber a number of very competent individuals. I am sure that those individuals will not regard his attempts to abolish that honourable House as an indication of his disrespect toward them. However, I take it they would strenuously disagree with the main argument reiterated by the hon. member, that the existence of the Senate as a non-elective body is repugnant to our democratic system.

I might point out to the hon. member that the Queen is part of our government, the Governor General is part of our government—not the government, but the whole parliamentary and constitutional system of Canada. Surely no one can argue that the Governor General, or indeed the Lieutenant Governor of each province is an elected individual, chosen by the people of Canada. They are all appointed.

I might also point out to the hon. gentleman that this institution, a most venerable one which has withstood 600 or 700 years of time, has been established through long tradition and evolution, and indeed is based upon the British parliamentary system. Within that particular system there is a recognition of the work of the House of Lords, which House is very similar to ours, ours having been framed upon the tenets of that House and the traditions established by it.

I had occasion recently to be in England, Mr. Speaker, and spoke to the Lord Chancellor who is the president of that particular upper House. I also had occasion to speak to some of the members of the House of Lords in England, and I suggest to the hon. member that, quite contrary to beliefs that might be held in Canada relating to that House, it is indeed a vital place. It is a place of considerable activity notwithstanding the fact that its powers are limited to a suspensive veto, the same as tradition is establishing that the Senate of Canada be limited to in its powers.

I suggest, further, that the House of Lords considers the Senate of Canada as a model with respect to some of the practices we follow. For example, only life peers are appointed to the House of Lords now. The number of hereditary peers is shrinking. We do the same in our Senate. Senators are appointed until they reach 75. I might suggest that the obligatory retirement age be reduced. Once a Senator reaches the age of 70 perhaps he should be forced to retire from the other place.

As I said in my speech last year, I think the other place was established in Canada to protect the interests of the regions. It provides for regional representation. At present the Senate is not as active as it has been; on the other hand, it is not as active as it will be. Within a short period it may be necessary for us to have an upper house which is more representative than at present. We are, as you know, dealing with the question of redistribution. The effect of the commissioner's report has been suspended. We are studying, in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, various methods by which we can secure adequate representation for the various areas of Canada. I suggest that a considerable problem faces Canada in this regard at this time.

If we want adequate representation from sea to sea, it must be able to offer protection and justice to all areas of Canada. Mr. Speaker, the small regions of the country, such as Prince Edward Island, must always be represented in the Senate.

I also believe that some amendments must be introduced. As I said last year, the condition that a citizen must have $4,000 to be appointed to the Senate is, in my opinion, absolutely outmoded. Nothing justifies the fact that someone should be deprived of the honour of sitting in the Senate because he does not have $4,000 in his bank account or any other assets of $4,000. This brings me to the second point. I believe that there are too many senior citizens in the other place.

[English]

I suggest that some of the most effective members of this House are senior citizens. Indeed, the member sponsoring this bill has been proud to say he is a senior citizen. Age has nothing to do with one's effectiveness in the legislative process. Speaking as an idealist I hope that younger people will be appointed to the Senate in future. Let those who are between 20 and 40 years old, the age group of the majority of the population, inspire the other place with their contribution.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre well knows, there is a great proportion of younger members serving in this House. I am sure he would not say that the contribution of younger members—perhaps with the exception of yours truly who wants to see this bill defeated—is not substantial and has not brought profit for this House. The same could be said for the other place. We could follow tradition, but appoint younger members.

I suggest that the Upper House, composed of a greater number of younger members, might be empowered only to suspend consideration of certain bills or to request the House of Commons to reconsider certain measures. I do not think it is true to say that the House of sober second thought was meant to be occupied only by older people. I am sure, and I think the House will agree, that younger people can reflect on certain issues and give guidance and direction.

I disagree with the hon. member's contention that minorities are not receiving protection. I am not speaking of regional minorities so much as of ethnic minorities. On the other hand, as I said in my speech last year, there are minorities in Canada which are not sufficiently concentrated in any given area and which do not sufficiently influence our legislative input. They give no input with regard to the legislative process. I suggest that the Senate is one place in which such minorities can be provided with opportunities for input. It is desirable to see the various segments of society represented in Parliament.

Before we reach the stage which is evident in England, where the Trade Union Congress is effectively running the Labour government, where the organized labour movement is standing on the step of power, we should provide for members of organized labour to sit in the Canadian Senate. Let them have some say in the legislative process so that we may defuse any potentially dangerous situation which might develop in future. Also, I see nothing wrong with naming some civil servants to the Senate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you will probably have noted that a number of public servants have considerable powers or have had important responsibilities since the beginning of their career as public servants. I do not see why we could not appoint to the Senate certain public servants who would contribute to the Parliament.

[English]

I attended a seminar at which an interesting lecture was given by Dame Evelyn Sharp, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Housing and Local Government, in the U.K. She has been contributing actively to the House of Lords, and politicians in that place say that her contribution has been most helpful.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre may not have been helped by a member of the other place, as few supporters of his party have been appointed to the other place. I, on the other hand, have been helped considerably by members of the Senate in matters affecting my responsibilities in this House. Those particular individuals had at one time participated in the deliberations of this House, and they offered valuable guidance to a new member. It is no secret that Liberal members of the Senate participate in our caucus deliberations. We find their contribution most helpful—

Mr. Stanfield: Don't blame them.

Mr. Blais: I am not blaming them. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) suggests that perhaps I was trying to blame them for something. I was not. I could name people who have been most helpful to me, to other members of the House and, indeed, to the government. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, there is a dearth of elected members on this side representing a certain province in this country. But some Senators are most cognizant of the social and economic conditions in that particular province. I have no hesitation in approaching them when I want information that is not otherwise readily available. A whole range of services is rendered by members of that House. I am not going to hide the fact we have benefited from members of that House who have been active in that House and active in political organizations. I do not hide that fact. If anyone finds objection with that he would find objection with the whole political process. Indeed, we need to have elections and we need to have political organization.

● (1730)

Surely if one can acquit himself of those responsibilities and also acquit himself of legislative responsibilities imposed by a House of parliament, I can see no conflict there, or anything with which one can take issue. Perhaps I am a bit conservative with regard to that particular issue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A bit.

Mr. Blais: I feel there are numerous amendments that should be presented. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we have been mouthing the question of the necessity of amending the Senate for years. I suggest, however, that we can change our practices now without the necessity of substantial amendments.

As I pointed out to the hon. member last year, we still need to get this particular bill through the Senate. I also pointed out that the suicidal instincts in that particular place are not common. I am sure they are not rampant. They would not attempt to do away with themselves with one fell swoop of the pen.

In view of that particular reality I suggest we should be putting pressure on the government, whether this or some future one, to change its attitude with regard to staffing the other place. We ought not to waste our time, and I say this most respectfully, in the tilting of windmills. We should be using those methods available to us in order to effect those changes that are essential and that ought to be effected.

I do not want to use all my arguments. I will have to use other arguments next year. I attempted today to complement the arguments I made last year. In case the hon. member has forgotten, last year I stressed the question of ethnic representation to a considerable extent. This year I could stress the fact that we need more young people in the Senate. I am not trying to find myself a spot. I have no interest in sitting in the Senate. In any event I do not think I am eligible at this stage.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Blais: I understand the Senator for Northern Ontario, who was appointed by the Tories, is still sitting.

I suggested that we abolish the monetary requirement. I agree with that wholeheartedly. It would not take much to get that through the Senate. If the hon. member would present such a bill, I would immediately agree with it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question before his time runs out. I believe he still has half a minute.

Mr. Blais: I have no objection, Mr. Speaker. I am finished in any event.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I did not want to interrupt the hon. member. He referred to the fact that one province of this country, and it is no secret that he was referring to Alberta, has no Liberals in this House of Commons. He then turned around and boasted of the fact there are Liberals in the other place. My question is this: does the hon. member think it is fair that, if the people of Alberta do not want any Liberals in parliament, the Liberals can get in through the back door?

Mr. Blais: That sounds very reasonable, if one follows the hon. member's argument to the fullest extent. I suggest to the hon. member that the Senate does not exercise the power which this House exercises. I agree that constitutionally, save and except for money bills, it has equal or parallel power. However, and I am sure the hon. member will agree with this as well, in practice the other place does not exercise that power. As a matter of fact, the power Senators exercised with regard to the wiretap bill was indeed an aberration from their past practice. There is no doubt in the mind of anyone in this House, except perhaps that of the hon. member, that in the future the Senate will not employ those powers that are afforded to it under the constitution.

In my view there is no difficulty in the fact there may be some Senators from the province of Alberta who sit in the Liberal caucus and are perhaps able to indicate, in the absence of other members, what feelings might be in that province. They may be able to render service in that manner. That does not mean there is any member in this House from Alberta who sits in this particular party. Nor do they have a legislative influence in this particular House.

If I call a Senator's constituent in the province of Alberta in order to seek advice relating to a particular matter which is before this House—and I understand we are going to be studying a bill affecting oil and the administration of an oil policy—I cannot see how that could be detrimental to my particular function. Whether that person is in Alberta or sitting in the Senate, I fail to see the difference.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the last exchange it went through my mind that one of the glories of the other place is that there is no time limit on speeches.

I indicated to the venerable and honourable member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) two years ago that I might support him in 23 years time. Now, at the age of 54, I think I will need to have another 21 years before I jump to the support of such a suggestion.

Mr. Stanfield: Sober second thought.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. After two years of thinking it over, I am still reluctant to agree with him. The hon. member and I agree on many important things, but I think our disagreement today indicates the basic difference between a doctrinaire and a pragmatic reformer. A doctrinaire looks at an institution in society. If he does not find it working perfectly or extremely well, he says scrap it. The pragmatic reformer, the base and core of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, looks at an institution in society, either political or economic, and says the criterion is performance; therefore we come forward with suggestions to improve it.

It strikes me as an exercise in fatalism to say there is not sufficient ingenuity in the Canadian political province to develop in the Senate a place that is workable, valuable, and contributes importantly to our political process.

As the hon. member mentioned, this whole question of bicameralism is an old story. Most political organizations have decided on bicameral legislatures. There have been a variety of suggestions for change. Down through history some have become unicameral and have gone back to bicameralism.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I think the hon. member mentioned some of the functions which have been performed by another type of element in our political structure. The primacy, of course goes to the elected one accepting representative responsibility. That is fundamental. However, there are many parts of the governmental structure, and these were alluded to by the hon. member who preceded me, which are not of that kind. In the whole process the Senate fits in as something between that at the apex and that which is at the foundation, that is the ground and the elected House.

I believe that instead of tossing out the Senate we should ask for some good will and some wisdom in the appointment of the members thereof, and put that illustrious body to more work. I have often thought there are far too many legislative schemes launched in this House. Much could be done over there. When you are faced with a bill of 117 pages, and an agenda such as is usually before us in this portion of the parliamentary year, the situation surely calls for more spadework to be done over there.

I, too, join the hon. member in praising some of the excellent work which has been done by the Senate committees. I believe the Senate foreign affairs study on the Caribbean Commonwealth is one of the finest examinations ever conducted in an important area of Canadian foreign policy. I go back to the old question which Sir George Foster raised long before I was born, before even the hon. member was born—God help us, it is a long time ago. But he said: "End it or mend it." I am not so bereft of hope as to believe there is no possibility of mending it. I am not suggesting it is only a matter of a few judicious and thoughtful appointments from this place to the other place, although the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is here. But, of course, it is a matter of personnel.

One amusing remark was made by the speaker who moved this motion, though he did not look upon the subject as being a humorous one. He said he felt sympathy for Senators. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have looked at those Senators all my life and I have never felt they were objects of sympathy. Envy, perhaps, but not sympathy. At the tender age of 54 I would not go along with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) in suggesting that there be some changes in the age limits, both upward and downward. A man of 30 is not really an oldtimer, and you can get in there when you are 30. As to the $4,000, naturally, as an impecunious professor I am not in favour of scrapping that. But, on a more serious note, the need is to look more realistically and more carefully at the structure and basis of representation.

More consideration ought to be given to the provinces as units, and a structural limitation might be placed upon the untrammelled choice open to Prime Ministers, far too many of whom have looked upon it as an exercise in the most sophisticated patronage. It is not the institution, it is the way in which the institution has been caused to function. Because I wish to hear from some of my hon. friends I shall say only, by way of conclusion that I believe the hon. member is a little too reckless, a little too lacking in faith when he decides no one has sufficient ingenuity to make that part of parliament work. Even if his party is bereft of hope, the rest of us surely believe we could do a good job if given a chance.

It could be made a fine and noble second chamber, perhaps not equal to the Senate of Rome or to the Senate of the United States, but it could still be an effective institution and a functional adornment of our structure.

Mr. Blais: Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member referred to the power of prime ministers to make appointments. Would he be ready to accept the British practice which permits a defeated leader, or prime minister going out of office, to make a number of appointments to the upper house?

Mr. Macquarrie: I have not had a chance to consult with my leader here but I think we would agree to that. We are generous people.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are enough Liberals over there already.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened to debates on this subject for many years before I sat in this chamber. I did so from the gallery to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed just a few minutes ago. It is interesting that I should be here now to take part in such a debate myself, because having heard the hon. member express his views on other occasions, and since I am honoured by having him as a neighbour, an occasional chauffeur and an occasional adviser, and I dare say, as a friend in the parliamentary sense—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't forget the snow shoveling you do for me!

Mr. Baker: Yes. Believe it or not we even have a half interest in the same snowblower.

Anyway I did not think I would be discussing this particular topic with my hon. friend and speaking against the principle which the bill before us seeks to advance. I am concerned because what we are witnessing today is the spectacle of one institution of parliament, namely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, attempting to destroy another institution of parliament, and I do not think this is a very healthy situation.

If we are disposed to talk about the legislative process it should not be to tear down an institution but to enrich its processes. The hon. member himself indicated that the Senate has performed a number of very useful functions.

I find myself agreeing with most of what the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) said. To that extent I find myself in strange company, but I suppose one does find oneself in strange company from time to time. When we deal with parliamentary institutions we ought to look to the improvement and enrichment of those institutions. We must seek to bring to bear upon the legislative process an expression of the interests which go to make up this country.

One of the things that moved the Fathers of Confederation to agree upon the establishment of a Senate was that provision in some way for representation on a regional basis was probably a prerequisite to confederation in 1867. I think they were wise in reaching that decision; they were wise to recognize that the particular constitutional make up which was required would not be secure if members of both bodies were elected. So they determined that the various regions of that day would be represented by an appointed house.

As the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) has said, if the public mind has altered with respect to the Senate it is not because of the institution itself but possibly because of the way in which its members have been appointed, that is to say, places in the Senate have been regarded as a reward in many cases for qualities other than excellence in fields which are important to our country.

I think prime ministers should remember that it is not only publishers of newspapers, not only lawyers, not only industrialists, not only loyal party workers who have made this country great. There are a lot of unsung heroes in the cultural endeavours of our people, in science, and in the professions. And perhaps those who have contributed in an occupational or professional sense to the development of Canada have not been rewarded; instead, rewards have gone to others who, in the eyes of many people, seem less deserving. It is as a result of this that the institution has perhaps fallen in the esteem of the public, prompting the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to move that the institution be abolished.

I think the hon. member for Hillsborough has made a very good point. He followed along the argument made by the hon. member for Nipissing that we ought not to tear down or destroy an institution that is a place of very sober second thought on how we improve our legislative process. It is still a very real thing in Canada to protect, in terms of representation and as an expression in the legislative sense of varying viewpoints, particularly the minorities in this country. Indeed, we live in a democracy, but sometimes the democratic process does not work to protect minorities. This is one way in which this institution, responsibly used in regard to the appointments made to it, can protect minority interests.

I am certain that the most important reason that has been advanced during this debate for the maintenance of the Senate, and certainly for its enhancement, is the matter raised by the hon. member for Nipissing, namely, the very troubling and vexing problem of redistribution, and the fact that in our time there are diminishing populations in certain areas and growing populations in others. Through the Senate an attempt can be made to maintain some sort of balance. So, under those circumstances I do not think that we ought to tamper with something as traditional to our constitution and to our country as the Queen, and as the office of the Governor General. In fact such attempts should be withstood and avoided.

Perhaps we should look at the other side of the coin and see how we can enrich an office mentioned by the hon. member for Nipissing, the office of the Governor General. I suppose in modern political parlance, in the practical sense the Governor General of this country has no real power. As a result of what I might call—this is not an apt description—very impressive and responsible appointments made to that office by the Queen, upon the recommendation of her Privy Councillors in Canada, all the incumbents of that office have grown in affection and regard in the minds of the public of Canada. I do not think there is anyone in this chamber who would say that merely because that office is an appointed office it has become useless, and that nothing is served by it.

I look upon the Senate not as a resting place for retired politicians but as a proper reward, and necessarily so, for real service to one's country. It is a place where the unsung heroes of Canada— the scientist who has made a contribution, the parliamentarian who has made a contribution, members of the agricultural community and others, and indeed members in legislative fields other than the federal field—can find an opportunity to continue their service, and in an area where, perhaps because of the nature of the political process, they could not venture to perform this kind of service.

But for the service of many Senators, both before and during their appointments, our country would not be as rich and as full in terms of the quality of its legislative assemblies as it is today. I do not believe that that opportunity has passed us by. I do not believe that the time has come when we ought to say that it is not possible for us to enrich the body politic by the proper use of a chamber of sober second thought, indeed perhaps by a new kind of approach to the legislative process that really has not been tried.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said something to the effect that if we believe in democracy then we ought not to support a body that, by its nature, is appointed. If we speak in those terms we must relate them to the Canadian situation. There was a great lesson to be learned from the work of the Fathers of Confederation. We must not forget that there are perhaps people and areas in this country that would not be represented but for the existence of the Senate.

I hope that in considering this bill the House will move to enrich the nation and this institution of parliament. I urge upon those who, from time to time have authority to make Senate appointments, to make those appointments carefully so that they are representative of all the major groups in the country, of all the political affiliations in this country, and thus uphold democratic principles. I hope that out of this process will arise a vital, strong second chamber that will take a new place in our Canadian democracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Mr. Baker.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELIGIOUS SECTS, EARNINGS FORMULA, BASIC EXEMPTIONS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-19, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was interrupted at five o'clock I had given some information concerning one of the major clauses of this particular bill, that is the clause which eliminates discrimination on the basis of sex under the Canada Pension Plan as it stands at the present time.

Before moving to another major area of the bill I should like to elaborate briefly on the statement I made at the beginning of my remarks this afternoon in respect of survivors' benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. We are at the moment reviewing the structure and level of these benefits and as I agreed with my provincial colleagues in Edmonton, "it is necessary to examine the most appropriate approach to the provision of survivor benefits, whether under the two pension plans, or under a new and general economic support program," the two pension plans being the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan.

We are, for example, asking ourselves about the role that a flat rate component should play in Canada Pension Plan survivor benefits in the future, and whether there is any merit in considering its transfer from the Canada Pension Plan to a new and general economic support program. These studies have not been completed, and so the government's position on these questions has not yet been formed. I should like to assure the House that when the eventual position of the government is formed, and if it requires legislative action by the House, it will be advanced in terms that preserve the principle of equality now being built into the plan, that is equality between the two sexes.

Another major series of amendments incorporated in Bill C-19 seek to eliminate the provisions dealing with the employment test and the retirement criteria under which eligibility is determined.

Indeed, under the present provisions of the act only those contributors between the ages of 65 and 70 who have retired from their regular employment may claim full value of pension under the Canada Pension Plan. In other words, the pensioner under 70 who, although retired from his regular employment continues to receive earnings exceeding $95 a month automatically gets a reduced pension by 50 per cent of his employment income falling between $95 and $155 and by the full amount of earnings exceeding $155. Those limitations would be repealed under the bill now before us so that if it is passed by this House any contributor 65 or over would be sure to get the full value of his pension, regardless of the employment income he could otherwise receive.

According to my estimates those amendments would immediately result in increased pension levels for about 5,000 recipients now retired and add to the anticipated number of recipients under the Canada Pension Plan for 1975 roughly 30,000 contributors who would then be entitled to the retirement pension. Of course, those between the ages of 65 and 70 would still be free not to claim their retirement pension and continue to pay contributions into the fund and so accumulate further pension credits. A number of contributors will certainly find that option more advantageous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the provision governing maximum pensionable earnings, that is; the ceiling as to pensionable earnings under this plan.

My colleagues in the House are certainly aware that maximum pensionable earnings considerably affect the very structure of benefit levels as well as the inflow of money into the Canada Pension Plan fund.

At the federal-provincial conference which was held last October, it was agreed by all welfare ministers that the ceiling as to earnings under the Canada Pension Plan should be in line with the present ceiling under the Quebec Pension Plan, and then increased by 12½ per cent annually, until it reached the average earning level for the Canadian worker in the industrial sector.

The first stage was reached when, during last session, Parliament passed a bill which provided for maximum pensionable earnings of $6,600 and $7,400 for 1974 and 1975 respectively. Some provisions of Bill C-19 aim at confirming other clauses of the agreement with projections on the future.

[English]

I think it is fair to say that Bill C-19, together with the bill passed in the last session, go a long way toward establishing fair and equitable treatment for the nation's retired, disabled, widows, widowers and orphans. Maximum initial retirement pensions under the plan now stand at $101.41 a month. If the bill is passed, initial maximum CPP retirement pensions should reach a level of about $250 a month by 1980, and $350 by 1985. This represents an increase of close to 250 per cent in about ten years' time.

Mr. Schumacher: Because of inflation.

Mr. Lalonde: May I say to the hon. member who just spoke that this has nothing to do with inflation. Whatever inflation will take place it will be over and above the amounts mentioned here. The amounts I am going to mention strictly apply to the increase in the yearly maximum pensionable earnings, and also the increase that is likely to take place in the average industrial composite in this country coming from Statistics Canada. Those figures have nothing to do with inflation. Whatever rate of inflation may take place over the next ten years, the plan has been indexed last year by an amendment passed in the House which includes automatic indexing to take into account cost of living increases.

Maximum CPP disability pensions now stand at $125.95 a month. Passage of the bill should raise these pensions to about $225 a month by 1980, and $315 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of close to 170 per cent in 10 years' time.

Maximum CPP widow and widower pensions for beneficiaries under the age of 65 now stand at $79.86 a month. Passage of the bill should raise these pensions to about $135 a month by 1980, and $185 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of over 130 per cent in ten years' time.

Maximum CPP widow and widower pensions for beneficiaries at 65 years of age and over now stand at $73.75 a month. Passage of this bill should raise these pensions to about $145 a month by 1980 and $210 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of over 180 per cent in 10 years time.

As to basic orphan and disabled contributor child benefits, this bill proposes that in the future they should also be paid in respect of the children of female contributors who have died or have become disabled.

I should mention again that all of these increased benefit rates, once they go into pay, would of course be fully escalated thereafter according to increases in the cost of living. It should also be noted that in 1985 we are likely to have three times the 500,000 CPP beneficiaries that we now have.

Before anyone jumps to the conclusion that benefit increases will only apply to those who have earnings at or near the proposed earning ceilings, I would like to state that this will not be the case. In addition, I would like to demonstrate how the updating of the earnings formula that is now in the plan will operate to pass on improvements proposed in Bill C-19 to contributors at lower income levels. The updating formula very simply provides that all contributor earnings are updated according to movements in the yearly maximum pensionable earnings, and so sharp increases in the YMPE produce a sharp updating of past earnings at all levels.

Perhaps I could illustrate this feature by tracing the effect of the bill on a contributor whose earnings never reach the ceilings that would have prevailed had the original CPP legislation not been changed. For this purpose I will relate the bill to a contributor who had earnings of $4,000 in 1966, experiences a steady increase in his earnings to $5,000 a year by 1974, and to $7,000 in 1985 when he retires at the age of 65.

Had the initial plan not been changed this contributor would have received a retirement pension of $162 a month. If the bill is passed this contributor will receive a retirement pension of $223 a month, which is equal to about 40 per cent of his final year's earnings. If an OAS pension for the contributor and his spouse is added to this amount, total CPP/OAS payments for this family will be just about equal to the final year's earnings of the contributor. I might add that the bill also has the effect of slightly reducing the contributions that this contributor will have to make to receive his increased CPP retirement pension. Similar examples can be developed for the effect of the bill on other CPP benefits for lower income contributors.

I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the House also to the fact that the figures I mentioned before are completely independent of whatever payments our retired people are going to receive over the next ten years in terms of old age security payments, so that whatever happens with the OAS it is going to be over and above the various figures I have mentioned here.

These increases, with CPP benefits that I have just cited, in my view are quite substantial but still they do not tell the full story of the achievement that has been realized in our social security reforms.

During the last year other parts of our social security system have been modernized, and when these improvements are combined with Bill C-19 they produce results of almost dramatic proportions.

Consider, for example, the income situation of a couple at retirement in a single wage earner family. A little over a year ago the maximum CPP/OAS income of this couple was about $245 a month; today it is $320 a month. In 1980 it may be in excess of $525 per month, and in 1985 it should be in the order of $700 a month. I might remind hon. members that $700 a month is reasonably close to the average wage of today's industrial worker.

I invite hon. members also to reflect upon the situation of the widow under 65 years of age with four children under the age of 18. A little over a year ago her CPP survivor benefit and family allowance payments would have amounted to about $200 a month; today they are about $295 a month; in 1980, they should be over $400 a month; and in 1985, they could be in the order of $550 a month. This government, I believe, is justified in taking pride in this record of achievement.

A moment ago, I was illustrating the advantages offered by this bill, which could be turned into account by contributors in lower income brackets, but there is more. Other particular provisions will enable people who have a very low income to benefit as well from these advantages.

As my distinguished colleagues in this House certainly know, the Canada Pension Plan provides an exemption on contributory earnings, the year's basic exemption whose level determines the level of earnings a person must be able to prove to be eligible to the Canada Pension Plan. This exemption now amounts to 12 per cent of the ceiling of eligible earnings. According to this formula, in the event of a sudden increase in the ceiling of earnings, a good many contributors in lower income brackets would temporarily be left aside and, consequently, they could not benefit from some advantages offered in this bill.

Thus, in order to prevent such a possibility, we propose to amend the rate on which the year's basic exemption is now calculated by dropping this rate to 10 per cent of maximum eligible earnings. This measure would provide a better opportunity for persons with a low income to take full part in the Canada Pension Plan.

Moreover the bill proposes the repeal of a particular provision which now applies to the self-employed. According to this provision, this person must be able to prove earnings exceeding by one and one third the year's basic exemption specified for other contributors. It is thus proposed to cancel this requirement so that employees and self-employed can be dealt with on an equal footing as far as the basic annual exemption is concerned. This measure, Mr. Speaker, would certainly be welcomed by a certain group of self-employed whose seasonal work sometimes depends on fluctuations in earnings which can reduce their income to a marginal level.

In particular, we are thinking of the farmers and fishermen who would like, even in adverse circumstances, not to stop their contributions to the Canada Pension Plan.

[English]

The next group of proposals I would like to discuss are those which parliament considered in its debate on Bill C-190 last session, and which are all included in Bill C-19. The most noteworthy of these is the proposal to allow individual members of religious groups to exempt themselves from the operation of the Canada Pension Plan in the case of religious organizations which existed before 1966, which have established tenets opposing the acceptance of benefits from any private or public insurance, and which have the established practice of providing for the support of their dependent members.

As I recall, Mr. Speaker, some hon. members had reservations about this proposal, but it is also my impression that the basic principle behind it engaged the sympathy of the large majority of members of the House. I might say that the government still firmly believes in the universal application of programs such as the Canada Pension Plan but, on balance, considers that the exemption should be made because it is in keeping with the strong traditions of freedom and tolerance that exist in this country.

Another significant clause that is included in this package is a proposal to allow the retroactive application of international agreements concluded by Canada with respect to the Canada Pension Plan. The immediate objective of this change is to enable those Canadians who were employed by the United States at Goose Bay to participate in the plan with effect from July 1, 1972, in accordance with the Canada/United States agreement respecting the transfer of the Goose Bay base to Canadian jurisdiction.

Other significant clauses in this category of proposals include provisions to liberalize features dealing with the payment of legal expenses in appeal proceedings, and to give the Auditor General explicit authority to conduct an annual audit of the Canada Pension Plan account and investment fund.

The remaining proposals in the bill, which are quite numerous, can be labelled as miscellaneous, technical and administrative amendments. I thought I would take the opportunity presented by this bill to carry out some housecleaning in what is a very complex act. Hon. members will find that these proposals, for the most part, rectify inequities, anomalies, errors and ambiguities that have been uncovered over a period of time.

In recent months a number of newspaper articles have appeared drawing attention to the difficulties and situations sometimes created when the department adjusts interim CPP benefit payments. As most hon. members are aware, the law requires us to begin paying CPP benefits when eligibility for them is established, even though the final determination of earnings may not have been settled. I do not think that anyone would suggest that we should do otherwise.

It can take around two years to make a final determination of official earnings, since this involves the filing and processing of income tax returns. Clearly it would be ridiculous to expect a person to wait that long before receiving his regular benefit cheques. Nevertheless, this does mean that benefits often have to be adjusted when final earnings figures become available.

In many instances we find that we have underpaid an individual, but this is no problem because the individual concerned will receive a pleasant surprise when the extra payment arrives in the mail.

As might be expected, we find that in some instances overpayments have occurred and the law requires us to recover them. To provide some relief in such situations, the bill contains a provision that would enable the minister to write off such debts in cases where the debt is uncollectable, where the cost of collection would be in excess of the amount to be recovered, or where the minister is satisfied that recovery action would create undue hardship for the individual. This amendment is proposed to enable us to be as fair and humane in the administration of the plan as we can possibly be.

We also find that in some instances the overpayments are more apparent than real, because the department's record of the contributor's earnings is in error. At the present time, employee corrections in records of earnings must be made within a four-year period. The bill proposes relaxation of this time limit, and in this way it will provide further assurance for contributors and their dependents that they will receive all of the CPP benefits that have been earned. The bill also proposes repeal of the current prohibition that prevents persons who do not have their social insurance number from receiving Canada Pension Plan benefits.

I wish to mention other important technical and administrative proposals contained in the bill. They include:

1. A series of proposals to improve the plan's appeal system. These include an extension of appeal rights to representatives of contributors and beneficiaries; more generous provision for the payment of legal expenses; and provision for the appointment of a vice-chairman of the Pension Appeals Board.

2. A proposal to allow the payment of disabled contributor child benefits for natural and legally adopted children acquired by pensioners after the onset of disability.

3. A proposal to permit payment of Canada Pension Plan benefits to common-law spouses on a more realistic basis.

4. A proposal to relieve self-employed persons from remitting Canada Pension Plan contributions on an instalment basis if they are not required to remit income tax payments on that basis. This list does not exhaust all of the technical and good housekeeping proposals that are in the bill, but it covers the more significant ones. I think it would be preferable if the remaining ones were discussed during the detailed consideration of the bill in the standing committee to which the bill will be referred. As a matter of fact I may have a few additional technical amendments to introduce at that stage as a result of representations received from the provinces after they have had an opportunity to review the bill in detail.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I consider that Bill C-19 is an imaginative and responsible approach to bringing the Canada Pension Plan into harmony with contemporary values and attitudes in Canadian society. I consider that the bill will bring the plan into line with the economic facts of Canadian life now, and in the future. Furthermore, if the bill is passed into law, it will allow the Canada Pension Plan to play a vital role in the new charter the government is writing for this country's aged, disabled, widows, widowers, orphans, and those in need. I hope that the bill will attract the overwhelming support of Canadians inside and outside of Parliament.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I begin by giving the minister a hint that this measure will pass. It is in no danger of being rejected. It is safer by far than a budget, infinitely safer than an opposition day, and perhaps a little safer than the football bill.

The minister closed his speech with what I thought was a flight of imagination when he described the bill as imaginative and responsible. I do not find much in it that is imaginative. Actually, there is little in this amendment or this massive statute that is highly imaginative. This is one of the most difficult and complicated piece of legislation to which my attention has ever been drawn. That does not surprise me, as I was here when this statute and its predecessors went in and out of drydock, so to speak, two or three times before being accepted.

The statute still needs a good deal of refining; it is still a very awkward piece of legislation. It is difficult for laymen who try to understand its provisions to understand where they fit in under the statute. The minister has done well and wisely in seizing this opportunity to make such corrections and ameliorations of anomalies as he has done. There is still much preening and pruning ahead, and it is important that this be done with this massive, comprehensive piece of legislation.

The minister began where we should all begin. He referred to the full equality of treatment for male and female beneficiaries. Although he pointed out how quickly the discrimination was removed, we should all admit and confess that a charge could be levied against us because the discrimination was there in the first place. I agree with what I took to be the minister's appraisal of our social development in this country. I agree that, in recent years, we have been more aware of the nonsense which society has asked us to condone for far too long. I believe that those in our society who have given leadership in this particular field are to be commended. I am certain that this is just one of many pieces of legislation in which we will find a delayed recognition of the equality of the sexes.

Before I sit down, and I will not make a long speech despite the excitement about the Senate this afternoon, I will point out as best I may to the minister that this measure still has a long way to go before it gives both sexes full equality. Of course, in the technical sense, what is said is correct.

The second point I bring up is the situation facing that group between 65 and 70 years of age with regard to the long standing, demeaning means test. I referred to this subject more than once in the last session. I have asked, previously, why in the world should the old chap over 90 work as much as he likes and not have his means diminished, whereas the younger man who happens to be 69 and works suffers because he earns money. This is intolerable in a contributory pension system and is a terrible disincentive to productivity, activity and employment. So, we certainly salute that which we called for one year ago and are delighted to see the provision included in the bill.

I welcome too, as I think any sensible Canadian would, the improved formula for allowing those Canadians at the lower income level to draw benefits from this important piece of legislation. There is a large group which wanted to be involved in the plan, but for which involvement was prohibited because of the levels of income provided for in the statute.

The minister spoke this evening about that portion of last session's Bill C-190 which has to do with an exemption for certain religious groups. Last year, speaking for our party, I expressed the view that this was a right, just, proper, and fitting attitude to take.

At that time I referred to some of the groups mentioned. I expressed respect, and indeed envy at the way in which the groups to which reference was made in the legislation were able in our contemporary society to carry on the old way, with the cherished traditions of our general society a few generations ago. They care for their own aged and their own infirm. They have the ability to look after their own loved ones without turning to the cold, institutionalized care for the aged and senior citizens. People who are able to do this stand tall in society. They are able to put into practical and tangible terms the familial ties of affection and love. That is to be commended.

Another thing I mentioned was with particular reference to the Mennonite community. I said I knew of no group which showed greater charity, concern and interest for the problems of other people all across the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Where there is drought, famine and what have you, there is a representative of the Mennonite community there. Since I spoke last year I happened to have been in that wonderful country of Bangladesh which has such difficult problems to cope with, many of a natural kind. Certainly one of the foremost groups were representatives of the Mennonite Central Committee, fine young Canadians making a most excellent, practical and useful contribution toward the upgrading of agriculture in that country where production from the soil is so important. The views I held a year ago were strengthened by what I saw just a month or two ago.

I think that this is well in place, although there are injustices which my colleagues dealt with last session. Where such relief has been made and such recognition has been extended, I express thanks and extend support and approval.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

The minister touched upon and I will not dilate upon the technical amendments, many of which are important and I assume, being an optimist, all of which are helpful.

I am happy we have written in here, as was in Bill C-190, the official function of the Auditor General. He will have plenty to do. There is no doubt about that. The CPP bureaucracy is touching more and more people, and more problems are arising. My own personal contact with Mr. Trudeau and those who are operating the plan has generally been helpful and I appreciate it. However, because of the complexity of the legislation, there are many, many Canadians who are suffering, being misunderstood, being denied and so on.

One of the last references the minister made was to the question of overpayments. There seems to be a measure of relief coming in there. I have always been appalled by any government department which will overpay a citizen and then have the nerve to turn its clutches upon that citizen and say, "We are collecting from you". It has thousands of computers and hundreds of accountants. God help the poor little guy getting a pension or unemployment insurance. It is not his fault that the government makes a mistake. Far from it. With its vast bureaucracy it should not make a mistake, and then draw it out of him month after month after month.

I am sure there is not a member in this House who has not received letters from constituents who have been overpaid. Who overpaid them? It is like the railway mess. Who made it? These people are told that $20 will be deducted from them for the next 10 years, next 40 years or what have you. The poor soul is probably living on something several notches below the poverty line as it is. I say the state has no right to drag out of its citizens mistakes which its own apparatus makes. Far better to correct its own technology than to inflict the cause of its own inefficiency upon the rank and file citizens of this country.

I am happy some effort has been made to make it easier for self-employed persons to enter the plan. For many years it has been an important area of concern. We know that it is relatively easy for the fellow on payroll. He has an accountant or cashier to deduct the exact contribution from him, and so on. However, that very important person who carries on his own business is not a bookkeeper and does not have a bookkeeper. His earnings fluctuate from season to season. He is probably more in need of the cushion which the contributory pension supplies than the man who is on a more permanent basis. For this move I am appreciative. I will support it.

I would like to get back to a question which the minister indicated he and his provincial colleagues have looked at and will look at. That is the question of the place of the housewife, if that is not too old fashioned a word to use—the mother, the head of the home, if that is not too extreme a word to use. I am told it will be difficult, but we have to find equality for the housewife, the housemother, the person who, heaven knows, is importantly employed in our society.

Mr. Cafik: Housespouse.

Mr. Macquarrie: Housespouse, perhaps that is a good expression. It would be hard for a man with a lisp, but we might be able to take it off.

We have to find security for the person who takes on the important role of being the great maintainer of the family unit, which is still basic to our society despite all its changes and apparent changes. It is still the fundamental fabric of the kind of society in which we believe. I believe it is not beyond our ingenuity nor does it exceed our capacity to be able to give to the housewife equality of status.

Suggestions were made in the statement released by the minister. There is an excellent statement by S. June Menzies, the vice-chairman of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. I think it is very important for these and many other suggestions to be studied as quickly as possible. We do not want someone standing here in 10 years' time telling the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself that since it only took 10 years, we should feel proud. We cannot wait 10 years. The group is large, the injustice is vast.

I used to be told that marriage is a partnership. It should not be difficult to extend the concept of partnership to the basic home unit. Someone said that perhaps the best way to do this would be to have the husband pay the wife and pay her premiums. Some might suggest that this is an employer-employee relationship. It just might be a bit dicey, but the partnership I think is a beginning. This must be done quickly. The minister must use his powers of persuasion to convince his provincial counterparts that, as long as this important group is left out, the Canada Pension Plan is a most inadequate umbrella in the realm of provision for our future.

Indeed, I wonder about the whole program. We amend it frequently. Whoever succeeds the minister now sitting opposite us will no doubt introduce further amendments. Suggestions come out of dominion-provincial meetings from time to time. I wonder whether, with all our tailoring, tinkering and re-aligning, we should not be moving toward something more comprehensive. It seems to me we are moving now toward something like a negative income tax or a guaranteed annual income, though I do not think we are admitting it. When I look at the OAS and the CPP, and think of the great need which exists, of the constant tendency to change, the built-in tendency toward complexity, I wonder whether a more serious overview is required than the one to which the minister alluded.

The minister ended as he sometimes does, with an expression of a bursting sense of pride in what had been done. I think a more modest posture would better befit the bill. It is, of course, an improvement, and my hon. colleagues, because we are a highly organized party, will be dealing with various of its aspects. I noticed with some surprise that the minister quickly contradicted the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) when my hon. friend suggested that inflation was behind the introduction of this measure. Mr. Speaker, because we have indexed payments under this plan there is no way we can sit back and say inflation is out of the picture. That is myopia of the worst kind.

The trouble is that the basic amount is insufficient. The $100 for OAS was insufficient before the act was brought into force. I pointed out that in terms of purchasing power recipients were back to 1945. The basic amount is insufficient, and so much per cent of insufficiency does not bring sufficiency, and it certainly does not bring affluence. We are dealing with this matter today because, unfortunately, the government is not able to deal with inflation. Thus, every piece of legislation which can be brought in is being used and, naturally, because some degree of amelioration is afforded, we support these efforts.

However, we do not support the idea that the entire subject is removed from the grievous, groaning and growing problem of inflation in the country. I know it is not. My hon. friends know it is not. And those Canadians, one in four, who live below the poverty line know it is not. The many Canadians who are eking out an existence on OAS or CPP know it is not. So these changes have to be made. It is not because of a technical consideration or the result of an outburst of generosity. It is because too many Canadians are having a hard time.

Mr. Speaker, I have made many mistakes in this House and, I suppose, in life, but one thing I try to avoid is making long speeches. They may never seem as short to others as they appear to me. But if, as a result of this bill some measure of relief is to be brought to thousands of Canadians, there is no disposition on this side to prolong discussion, although it must be noted we are dealing here with a highly complex document and a good deal of questioning will be necessary.

We shall try to restrain our eagerness to get at the football for a few hours because we would not wish to be accused of too hastily passing a measure comprising 46 pages and 57 clauses. It will be taken seriously by the group to which I belong. It will be considered co-operatively, and we expect to see the measure enacted shortly. After that we shall be making suggestions to the minister as to further ways in which he may be able to lighten the burden which has fallen on so many in Canada who are finding the going very tough at the present time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) in assuring the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) that he should have no difficulty with this bill. We shall be making some comments and suggestions, but it is a bill which we hope will be dealt with expeditiously on second reading, in committee, and at the final stage.

I had the privilege in 1964 and 1965 of being a member of the standing committee which dealt with the original Canada Pension Plan. I do not see many around the House tonight who were members of that committee. However, sitting with us then was a very able and effective private member who has lost that status now he has become a cabinet minister. I refer to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford).

Serving on that committee, one of the things I enjoyed, in addition to the good work I felt the committee did, was the opportunity of getting to know the members of the interdepartmental task force who had put the plan together and who were listening and paying attention to our discussions. I think they did excellent work, and as I have studied the bill now before us, and as I have listened to the minister tonight, I have felt that whatever task force has succeeded that original one has also done good work.

I understand the concern of the hon. member for Hillsborough when he looks at an amending bill 46 pages long, containing 57 clauses, and says, in his desperation, that it is a complicated piece of legislation. It is true that if you try to read the clauses one by one, and if you wonder where they fit into the original act, it can be a bit confusing; but in the main I wish the Unemployment Insurance Act were as simple as the Canada Pension Plan, and I wish the Income Tax Act were also as simple. There are many sections to the act and many clauses in this amending bill, but in the main I think the Canada Pension Plan is a pretty straight forward piece of legislation.

I think I can say, with the modesty that we all have in this place, that I had something to do in 1964 and 1965 with persuading the Hon. Judy LaMarsh to encourage her colleagues to keep that session going until we got the Canada Pension Plan through. I was a supporter of it then, and I still am. Perhaps what I am doing is establishing my credentials, so that after I have said a few things that will be quite favourable I can offer some suggestions as to the further steps we should take.

I congratulate the minister on the organization of his speech tonight. I thought the way in which he gave us, one by one, the changes that are being made, and then went back and expanded upon some of the more complicated ones, was an excellent way to present the matter to the House. He talked, first of all, of the decision to establish complete equality between male and female contributors to the Canada Pension Plan, and I welcome that most warmly. I deliberately quote the extact words that he used. He said that this amending bill "establishes equality between male and female contributors." This will lead me a little later on to say something about the government's failure to go all the way in establishing equality between male and female Canadians.

At any rate we welcome the changes that are being made in this respect, even if it turns out that the only way that a woman contributor to the Canada Pension Plan achieves equality with a man contributor is either by dying or becoming disabled. There is no equality in terms of the position as between men and women—husband and wife, breadwinner and housewife. There is equality at the point of death or at the point of becoming disabled. Well, that is progress, but let us not take off into paeans of praise as though we have completely solved the problem of equality between the sexes. Even so, Mr. Speaker, we welcome that provision in Bill C-19.

Secondly, the minister dealt with the removal of the employment test that now applies to recipients of the Canada Pension Plan retirement benefit who are between the ages of 65 and 69. This, too, is something that we welcome. Some of us approved of that test ten years ago. I think it is a mark of the way in which society has changed that what seemed acceptable ten years ago is no longer acceptable.

I was glad that the minister made it clear that there is still a voluntary situation between the ages of 65 and 69. A contributor to the Canada Pension Plan is free to retire any time after the age of 65 and to draw his retirement benefit and earn other money without that affecting the amount of his retirement benefit. He is also free not to take his benefit at that age but to continue working and contributing to the Canada Pension Plan so that later on his retirement benefit is higher. But I think the minister, at any rate by implication, did make it clear that he is not free to do both. A person between the ages of 65 and 69 is not free to take his retirement benefit and continue to work and hope that he can continue to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan; he has to make a choice one way or the other. I am not arguing that such a person should be able to do this, but I hope that the literature that the minister's department will distribute will be very clear on this point.

There is a terrible temptation facing people at that age to collect all the benefits that are coming to them. But bearing in mind that the YMPE is going up each year, and that certain persons might be able to earn a reasonable amount of income during the period when they are between 65 and 69, the advantage of continuing to work and to contribute to the plan, especially in the next little while when the YMPE is going up by rather substantial amounts, might be very great.

Each person will, of course, have to make his own decision; but I hope that the minister will see to it that the information put out is pretty clear. As he said, it can be supplied in a number of ways. Certainly people in receipt of old age security but not yet in receipt of the Canada Pension Plan benefits ought to be provided with the information.

I have the feeling that the material sent out to people who have applied for the old age security pension encourages them a little too strongly to apply for everything there is. The literature encourages them to apply for the guaranteed income supplement whether or not they are entitled to it. It encourages them to apply for the Canada Pension Plan. I simply make the plea that the material that is put out, especially under the new regime, be a little more clear as to the advantages or disadvantages of going one way or the other.

The minister then went on to tell us about the formula for raising the YMPE, the year's maximum pensionable earnings. We welcome very warmly the provisions that have been made in this regard. We were glad last year to approve of the $6,600 level for 1974 and the $7,400 level for 1975, and I think that the formula that has been worked out for succeeding years is a good one.

We welcome also the adjustments that are being made to the YBE, the year's basic exemption. I think the idea of putting it at 10 per cent rather than 12½ per cent, especially with the increase in the YMPE, is a good one, particularly for the reason indicated by the minister, namely that this benefits self-employed persons.

The minister then went on to speak of a number of miscellaneous or housekeeping changes that are being made. I found all of them to be good. I am glad the international agreements will be put into effect on a retroactive basis, and I hope that some of the negotiations that are in process with regard to agreements with certain other countries can be expedited. I hope this provision regarding retroactivity will also apply to them as well.

Like the hon. member for Hillsborough, I welcome the more humane approach toward overpayments which are the mistake of the administration. I warmly welcome the removal of the four year rule, the rule that required a contributor to check on his records and to make sure that they are up to date, with the restriction that if four years have gone by nothing could be done about any error. I hope there might be some retroactivity with respect to this as well. I know of individual cases where persons are not getting the full benefit to which they feel entitled because there is a dispute over the contributions made on behalf of those persons more than four years ago, and because of the present four year rule nothing can be done about this. As I say, I hope that will be corrected. I welcome the reintroduction of the provision about the payment of legal expenses for persons who are forced by the government side to take a case a step further.

With regard to the provisions for exemption for those who have really established religious scruples, I think we went through this last year and established our position. We had almost got it through; I see no reason that there should be any change and I hope we will not have to kick this around too long this year.

I believe, I can conclude this part of what I want to say by reaffirming my view that the 1973-74 task force, which has done its job, has done as well as the original task force and the changes that are being made in this piece of legislation are good and welcome.

Having said that I should like to comment on some of the issues raised by this bill. First of all I come back to the question of alleged equality between males and females. As the minister said, what this bill establishes is equality between male and female contributors. In other words, just as at present when a male contributor dies he leaves certain survivor benefits to his spouse and children, the legislation now being brought in will confer that same right on the female when she dies, but this is not really the ultimate objective of women's liberation, to get to the point that when a female dies she gets equality with a man.

It seems to me that the basic problem here is that our society, being what it is, has more women not in the work force than there are men not in the work force. There are more housewomen than there are housemen. I know we have a lot of trouble about these terms these days, but I think what I have in mind is clear. There are more female house persons than there are male house persons, and the hon. member who was married only two or three weeks ago, whose interjection is understandable, has not got this all sorted out yet. I extend to him my congratulations in the knowledge that he will learn.

The problem of women, especially those who are not in the work force as defined and yet who work in the home, is that they still, to too large an extent, draw their rights from their men rather than on their own basis. This was the concept in society one hundred or fifty years ago and it has not died yet. I do not ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare in this one bill to solve the whole problem in the concept of marriage, and the whole situation and everything that is involved, but I call upon him—perhaps I should put it in other terms by saying I welcome the fact that he realizes there is a problem and is still studying and thinking about it. His paper which he tabled in the committee the other day is evidence of that, and I noted with interest his comment this afternoon when he said he had listened to the debate the other day on the motion of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), and noted in particular the suggestion that perhaps a wider use of old age security might be a means of solving the problem in respect of establishing pension equality for men and women.

I see real problems in these schemes for dividing the contributions as between the husband and the housewife. I see real problems in respect of splitting the entitlement that has been earned. That may solve the problem when there is a marriage breakup, but does it really solve the problem of providing pensions for women in their own right in a modern society?

In another context I frequently get into the issue of widows' pensions being 50 per cent, as they are under the Public Service Superannuation Act and under many private pension plans, or even 60 per cent as they are under the pension plan for MPs, but I would simply ask how we ever got into the situation in which a pension is earned by a man or wife as partners, but if the wife dies the husband's pension is 100 per cent for life, whereas if the husband dies his widow's pension is 50 per cent or 60 per cent for life? Where is the equality in that situation? Under the veterans' pensions we have the same kind of situation, the details of which I need not go into, but the concept of 100 or even 300 or 400 years ago, that women's rights stem from their menfold, is still with us, and one of the places where it is very prominent is in this pension area.

I see the problems in respect of permitting housewives to contribute to the plan. If you just do it on the bald basis of letting those who can contribute, of course you provide a bonanza for those who have got money, and you do not do anything for the less wealthy. If you split the contributions for entitlement you create certain problems. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) has the answer in state salaries for housewives, and let them pay as employed persons. She is not as far out as some people may think. After all, if society has reached the point where it accepts the equality of men and women, let us go all the way.

I must not spend all my time on that phase of the matter, but I wanted to deflate the minister a little with respect to the applause he got from the Liberal benches when he said that we have established absolute equality as between male and female contributors. He is right, that is what he has done, but it is only between male and female contributors. If you are not a contributor you are not in the picture at all, and I say to the minister that he has a long way to go.

I have already complimented the minister on his good work, and I have complimented his task force. I see only two of them within the sound of my voice. At any rate I know this has been worked on by many people, but I think they can keep working on this problem and come up with something. The hon. member for Hillsborough and I expect to be around here for another 10 or 20 years, but we do not want to wait that long for this problem to be solved.

I now move to another aspect of this matter. I have said that I welcome very warmly the removal of the employment test between the ages of 65 and 69, but the minister need not throw away that employment test, for it was a pretty good one. The thing to do with it now is to apply it between ages 60 and 65. Is that not the next step we should be taking, namely, lowering the pension age under both the Old Age Security Act, and the Canada Pension Plan to age 60 on a voluntary basis? The way you do it on a voluntary basis is by providing that pensions are paid between age 60 and 65 only to those persons who are out of the work force. When I say "out of the work force" I mean either that they got out or were never in it. I add that latter qualification to make sure we are covering the wives at home who never were in the work force.

I think that the minister and his department already have an excellent piece of machinery for this purpose. They are already set up to apply the test of being out of the work force. As I say, I am glad that test is being taken away with respect to those between 65 and 69, but I say: move it over and apply it to those between age 60 and 64, and this will be a real step forward.

I know that the minister is looking at me and saying that every time I speak on pensions I raise the question of pensions at 60. He says to himself: I have tried to tell that fellow that there are other problems in society, and other areas where we have to do things. He knows I agree with him, but I submit that just as I was given that kind of reply when I was trying to get the age brought down from 70 to 65, and eventually we won, we will win this one too. The minister might say: why not bring it down to 48 or 45, or whatever his age is, but we will settle for getting it down to 60 on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Why not 23?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The new bridegroom over here wants it down to 23.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I've been aging rapidly since I got married.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The change being made with regard to reducing the age for a free pension from 70 to 65 is good, but it does highlight the need to accept the proposition that the pensionable age should be lowered to 60 under both of these major pieces of legislation. I know that there is support for this proposal in all the parties here, and there is just as strong support for it on the government side as there is on this side. I call upon those members over there to make that known to their minister even more strongly than they have been doing.

I was quite interested in what the minister had to say about the new YMPE and the new YBE. This leads to technicalities that I will not go into. I do not want to make it sound any more complicated to the hon. member for Hillsborough than he already thought it was. But I like the way the minister moved from merely telling us about the changes in YMPE and YBE to the new rates that will develop in a few years' time. He gave some figures which sound pretty good compared with the pension benefits that are being paid today. I want to come back to that in a moment.

I also liked what the minister said when he drew attention to the fact that in some cases this would provide people, if they combined their CPP and their OAS—and even had two OAS payments if it was a man and his wife—with an income equal to about 100 per cent of what they were earning at the time they retired. I say to the minister: bravo, I am delighted that he said it. The notion that somehow or other a pension should be less than what people get when they are working is like the notion about a widow's pension being only 50 or 60 per cent of the husband's pension. It has been around for a long while, but that does not make it right.

What is wrong with the idea that those who have done the work of society for 30 or 40 years should retire, not on a reduced standard of living but on the standard of living that they have helped to make possible? I welcome very strongly the minister's suggestion, even if he put it forward somewhat timidly, that perhaps it is all right to have pensions that in their total amount equal 100 per cent of what a person was earning when he was working. We have come a long way in this parliament of Canada since the day when we had a pension of $20 a month at the age of 70 for those who had nothing else, but we still have a long way to go.

Even if the hon. member for Hillsborough thought that the minister was not as imaginative as he claimed to be, there is at least some imagination here when the minister talks about pension rates that will some day—soon! I hope—enable people to retire and not have to take a reduction in their standard of living. That will be a civilized approach to the problem of retirement, and may we get to it very soon!

I said I was going to come back to the figures the minister quoted for 1980 and 1985. He gave two or three sets of figures, one to do with retirement benefits, one to do with disability benefits, one to do with widows, and so on. Let me say I understood the figures and I recognize that they flow from the new YMPE levels. But the point I wish to make is that the minister was not saying that people who are today drawing CPP benefits will be getting those amounts in 1980 and 1985. What he was saying was that people who retire in 1980 or 1985 and start at that time will get those benefits at those levels. I see that the minister is nodding his head indicating that I am interpreting him correctly. I am concerned about the people who are drawing today's rates. What will be their position in 1980 or 1985?

The minister will probably say to me: did I not remind you about the escalation that takes place which is based on the actual increase in the cost of living? Well, I guess the minister can make my speech for the next five minutes or so—he surely knows what is coming. It still puzzles me that the government should come up with a Canada Pension Plan which is so excellent in its escalation up to the point of retirement. The minister spelled it out tonight. One's pension at the point of retirement is not based on the number of dollars one was making at the age of 18, 25 or 30; it is adjusted by the rise in the wage level, in other words, the rise in the standard of living. That carries through CPP right up to the point of retirement, but come the point of retirement and the poor retired person has to fall back on an index based on the cost of living increase, not on the wage increase.

If we accept the civilized proposition that people at retirement should continue to enjoy the standard of living they have helped to build, I submit that the escalation after retirement, like the escalation of the formula before retirement, should be geared not to the cost of living but to the standard of living.

There are two or three ways in which this can be done. One is to gear it to the wage index; another is to gear it to the gross national product. But to go on for ever leaving it geared to the cost of living index, I submit, is a form of discrimination against those previously retired, and this applies to those who are retired today and it will apply in 1980 to those who will retire in 1978 or 1979.

So I call on the minister to take this part of the whole matter back to the task force, back to his department, and see if they cannot come up with a post retirement escalation formula that is as good as the pre retirement formula. This is not the first time I have proposed this. I argued this at length when we were in the special committee back in 1964 and 1965. In those days we had to settle for a post retirement escalation of only 2 per cent a year. Thank heavens we went beyond that. We now have it on the cost of living and we have it on the actual amount. But, as I have often pointed out, that is not satisfactory because it is always behind. The index one gets in January is based on the increase in August, September and October as compared with the three months previous thereto. It is always behind the price increases that pensioners are having to pay, and, as the hon. member for Hillsborough says, it is an escalation of a base which, to begin with, was too low.

So I say that the last word has not been said in this legislation, regarding escalation. It was good to get it beyond 2 per cent. It is not good enough, however, to leave it where it is. I plead again that the government and the department have in their legislation, in the way they escalate prior to retirement, a basis that they could use advantageously after the time of retirement. So I urge, Mr. Speaker, that escalation after retirement be geared not just to the cost of living but that it be geared to the wage index or the gross national product, so that our people who are members of the Canadian family will be able to enjoy the standard of living that they helped to build, after they retire.

I am coming near the end of what I want to say but I should like to put in another plug about old age security. The minister had a bit to say about the flat rate component and other benefits. I understand the thinking there, but is it not a fact that as time goes on the old age security in more and more cases becomes a flat rate component in the pensioner's total benefit? Just as a disabled person gets a flat rate plus a certain percentage so the average retired person will have an old age security flat rate payment and the Canada Pension payment on top.

I want to make again the argument that we move more in the direction of equality and fairness if we keep on raising what I now call the flat rate component, in other words, keep on raising old age security. I noticed that when the minister gave his figures about what pensions would be in the future he included old age security. He left the door open for larger amounts. You just do not assume that old age security will stay at $100. I can tell him it had better not stay there.

Mr. Lalonde: It is not there now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says it is not there now. True, it has gone up now to $110.09 per month but the difficulty is just that bit of lethargy that the minister revealed right there. It has not stayed at $100, it has gone up and he does not have to do anything! It could go up every three months, but not by the kind of amount that is necessary to put our retired people in the position where they are enjoying a standard of living that they helped get. I think substantial increases are still called for in the basic amount of the old age pension. It is a method to follow so far as wives are concerned, but it is also a method to follow so far as fairness across the board is concerned.

When the minister made it clear that he was making a rather full speech tonight I had thought that he would deal with some of the newspaper editorial attacks that have been made recently on the Canada Pension Plan. I was looking forward to that. After it was all over I decided I was just as glad that he did not pay any attention to them. Maybe I should do the same, but I will take a moment or two to say that most of those attacks on programs like the Canada Pension Plan, old age security or transfer payments, come from persons or editorial writers or interests that just do not like the concept of equality.

I know it is true that as pensions go up they play their part in inflation and they play their part in rising costs, so that $110.09 per month is not worth as much as $100 a month was six months ago. But to the extent that we put more payments that are based on equality in the hands or pockets of our people, we build a more just, a more human and a more decent society.

It is in the area of family allowances where we have universal payments, it is in the area of our people aged 65 and over where we have universal old age security, that we come closest in my view to establishing social justice. I think this can be pursued still further by a substantial increase in the basic old age pension, say up to $200 a month this year, and by further improvements that are still in prospect with respect to the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying two things that may sound opposite but are both true. I am excited, I am proud of what I have seen accomplished in the parliament of Canada in the last several decades in the pension field. I well remember what it was when I came here—$20 a month at age 70 with a means test and no family allowance. We have come a long way. It is good; it is exciting; Canada can be proud of what we have done. But we still have a long way to go. I urge that this parliament get on with the job.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you very much for this opportunity to join in the debate. We have had a very eloquent and clear exposition by the minister who went into the broad aspects and details, and this is a grand bill. We had the short and excellent presentation of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and this final, shall we say, almost peroration by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think the minister will be glad to have had his agenda looked after by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the next two to five years.

We all have to have something to say, even though it might be trite when following the previous speakers. I should like to remind the House that this bill is really an act to amend the Canada Pension Plan, and it continues the government's policy to bring in legislation which aims to improve the lot of the old people and which will really equalize benefits in our society. It now includes women generally but, as has been said by other speakers, we hope it will eventually include the non-paid housewife or, in some cases, the non-paid house spouse.

The bill includes the provisions of Bill C-190 which died prematurely when parliament rose last summer, but which was an acceptable interim development in the evolution of the Canada Pension Plan. The bill also provides more changes of a technical nature. These have been well discussed and are evidence of needed change, and they will prevent inconveniences or even unfairness to the pensioner.

Before dealing with explicit changes I should like to remind the House that the government believes in federal-provincial conferences—in other words, communication. These are becoming more frequent and more successful. It is really a "must" in order fully to integrate regions with the central parliament. In fact it is to be hoped that in time the misunderstanding and hostility of areas, provinces or regions, either among themselves or directed toward the federal government, will greatly lessen as communication becomes more effective. I say that without being partisan.

Be that as it may, the Edmonton meeting of February 19 and 20 this year was most satisfactory. The health and welfare ministers wished to continue to emphasize the review of social security which had been begun in the previous year. They all agreed that we should assist the poor and disadvantaged, including the unemployed and the underpaid. They reaffirmed their agreed-on principle to help people provide for their retirement, for sickness, accident and unemployment. Of course, they included income support, where required. Because a guaranteed annual income or an omnibus program to replace all existing programs did not appear desirable at once, and there are many reasons for this, they delegated their officials to continue discussing this matter; but they themselves proceeded to the practical questions of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

One of the priority issues was equal treatment of male and female contributors, and the other concerned how a housewife or spouse remaining at home could contribute to these plans. The present bill has actually been based on the amendments which this meeting at Edmonton thought necessary. So, we already have, as it were, a national consensus on its provisions.

Some worry was expressed today about our ability to pay for these plans. Speaking on the bill previously before the House, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), whom I respect, was worried in case the Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan would tend to reduce the need for savings. Such a suggestion is not really correct. I think it has been demonstrated that there was greater saving per capita from income in the last year or so than at any other time in our history.

Some members are also worried in case this bill will add to inflationary pressures. I think inflation is with us, and must be faced and accepted. We should realize that Canada cannot take a stance alone. The only stance that we would take should be one that recognizes that Canada is in one of the best positions among the countries of the world, can afford such plans, and should undertake them. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in what he said about equality. There is no equality when some people can hardly get along on what they have while others have immense wealth. I think there must be some kind of income redistribution, and the Canada Pension Plan helps in this.

To make members happier let me refer them to a recent edition of the Wall Street Journal. We should all read it. It forecasts that Canada's future, despite inflation, will probably be that of leader of all developed countries. We are almost in that position now. We will be there 30 years from now. I believe that we can well afford any plan we can bring in to equalize incomes, particularly of the aged, and to make more equal the status of women in our society.

The status of women generally, their acceptance in the labour force, and the need for equality of treatment for women in the matter of pensions and legal rights: are things that have all received a great deal of public attention. Separated or divorced women, and children of failed marriages all require new provisions in our system of justice. This bill, in so far as it is now possible for us to move in this direction, faces up to these problems. It is axiomatic that we, as a parliament, will have to update constantly our legislation as society continues to evolve.

As we become aware of new attitudes to the position of women in society and in the home, we must adjust our pension schemes accordingly. We now question any different treatment of women as contributors to and beneficiaries of the Canada Pension Plan. In addition, we wonder why housewives at home cannot participate. The first concern is being looked after in this legislation, Bill C-19, the second issue will continue to be studied, because implementing it is difficult and complex. These things must be discussed by the public at large as well as by governments.

Originally, the Canada Pension plan was conceived as being part of the income maintenance system and as involving both public and private sectors. Early on most people thought that the old Age Security Plan would look after retired people, as it applied to wage earners and non wage earners alike. Also, it was thought that private and company pension plans would look after the needs of many Canadians. A great many in the population could afford private retirement plans. However, the Canada Pension Plan was oriented toward the lower income groups and was administered by the government, which tried to allocate properly the cost both to employers and employees.

One good feature of the plan was its compulsory nature. The year's basic exemption provision excused payments by any one receiving under $700 a year. When the minister introduced the bill he reminded the House that the same treatment of male and female contributors was the result of the Edmonton meeting. The bill will provide a survivor's pension to widowers, just as it now does for widows.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, but how much?

Mr. Railton: Well, we want the same treatment, don't we? Children's benefits will be the same basis, no matter whether the deceased parent was male or female.

Another formula will become law. The yearly maximum pensionable earnings formula was fixed for 1974 and 1975 in Bill C-224, which was passed last year and became effective last January 1. For 1974, that amount was to be $6,600, and for 1975 it is to be $7,400. These two years are regarded as a transitional period. Under this bill, however, the YMPE will be increased by 12½ per cent each year until it catches up to the earnings of the average Canadian worker, as represented by the industrial composite of weekly wages and salaries published by Statistics Canada. After the catching up is complete, the YMPE will be kept parallel with those average earnings.

Another point which was mentioned several times, and which cannot be repeated too often, is that people in the 65 to 69 year age bracket have their pensions reduced or eliminated if they continue to earn more than the YMPE. When this bill becomes law, people 65 or older may draw full benefits under the Canada Pension Plan whether they continue to earn or not. I think that is correct. This provision was questioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I think I have covered most of the technical points I wanted to discuss. The point that certain religious groups want to withdraw from the Canada Pension Plan should be mentioned. I well remember the discussion in the standing committee that this clause engendered.

Finally, the legal expenses of an individual who was working for the United States government at Goose Bay will be paid to allow him to update his contribution. Those expenses will be paid to allow such people to participate in the plan, as from July 1, 1972. This had been agreed to after an agreement was made between Canada and the United States when the military base was transferred.

I think I have covered most of the points I wanted to mention. Most other points were well covered by previous speakers. I will not take any more of the time of the House, as others wish to speak.

An hon. Member: What about the Mennonites and Hutterites?

An hon. Member: He mentioned them.

Mr. Railton: It was not the Hutterites I was speaking of; it was the Mennonites. Hutterites will be in the news later.

● (2150)

This bill will provide improvements in administration, relaxing of means tests and making it easier for self employed low income people to gain assistance in retirement. It will also take cognizance of equal status of women and their legal rights.

It is my hope that this bill will be accorded rapid passage and can be made law in the very near future.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on October 30, 1973, I had the opportunity of speaking in the debate on the bill introduced at that time. I believe it was Bill C-224. Therefore this evening I am appreciative of the fact that I have an opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-19 in order to express some views with regard to this very important measure.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), pointed out, this is a very difficult and complex bill. It is extensive and complicated. There is a great deal of detailed work in connection with it.

It is difficult enough to try and plough through the provisions of the bill. It is also very difficult to analyse the contribution which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) made when he introduced this measure today. He introduced a great many features that possibly have precluded our study thus far. In addition, he placed a great deal of statistical data before us. I am sure hon. members will agree it will be absolutely impossible to assess it all and put it in proper perspective in the short time that has elapsed since the minister presented the measure.

The preamble to the Canada Pension Plan Booklet (1970) by the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), states:

> The Canada Pension plan, inaugurated in 1966, is a contributory social security program designed to provide a basic level of protection against the contingencies of retirement, disability and death.

There has been a considerable degree of discussion, even thus far in the debate, regarding the various levels of income and the inequality of income as far as Canadians are concerned. It is tragic that in a society like ours, with our vast resources, there are still many people living below the poverty line while others are living on a much higher level. We can apply the same terminology that is used in international affairs when talking about the have and have-not nations. We can talk about the have and have-not people of this country. Anything that is done in an endeavour to remove the great disparities that exist, especially any attempt to bring the income of every Canadian up to a suitable level, should certainly receive the support of every member of this House.

I referred to the statement of the former Minister of National Health and Welfare. I suggest that was a noble resolve, a noble step at the time of its—inception. I am sure that every member of parliament at that time, including myself, realized that it was not to be considered in any way as the total and complete answer to the needs of Canadians at that time, much less in the future.

It was understandable that, besides the inadequacies and injustices obvious at that time, there would be others that might only be discernible as the plan got under way. Because of that fact, it is not surprising that we are again being called upon to consider additional proposals designed to make the plan more responsive to the needs of society today.

This may not be the most auspicious time to consider the confrontation presently taking place between the "work ethic" advocate versus the "welfare" apostle, but suffice it to say this bill is predicated on the principle that an individual desires and is required to engage in constructive and remunerative employment to provide for his or her own needs and the needs of those who are dependent upon him or her, as the case may be. The great preponderance of Canadians have enough pride and character to pay their own way if opportunity is given them and government keep their hands from getting too deep in the taxpayer's pocket.

One of the most obvious problems at the present time is that through mismanagement on the part of the government, and its evident inability to control inflationary pressures, even the hardest working and most conscientious citizens of this nation are penalized, and the more thrifty they are, the more they are gouged by the tax collector. In many respects this government is undermining and discouraging the will of Canadians to work and save by implementing unfair and iniquitous tax policies.

Mr. Turner (London East): Get to the bill.

Mr. Patterson: I will get to the bill, but perhaps some preamble is worthwhile in view of the fact that the government is taking so much credit for many things that have taken place perhaps in spite of the government. In other areas that are detrimental to the nation, we are facing problems that are a direct result of the mismanagement of this government.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Patterson: I will be glad to continue my remarks tomorrow. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Patterson.]

COMMUNICATIONS—CABLEVISION—REQUEST FOR EARLY APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS TO IMPROVE RECEPTION IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) is in the House this evening. On March 28 I asked the minister a question respecting an application before the CRTC which would allow for the moving of antennae presently being used for cablevision reception in the Winnipeg area, replacing them in an area in southeastern Manitoba, and then utilizing microwave signals.

● (2200)

I should like to point out that this application was made on behalf of various Winnipeg cablevision companies as far back as June, 1973. Recently the Chairman of the CRTC has been making pronouncements regarding Canadian content on CBC programs. I should like to tell the minister that there are a number of areas in Manitoba, not in remote regions but within 60 or 70 miles of Winnipeg, which at present are getting only a minimum of CBC coverage, and no alternate coverage whatever.

The CBC sat on this application of June, 1973, and did not hear it until February 7, 1974, some eight months later. To add to the delay the commission then deferred its decision until May 14. I want to impress upon the minister that if we are to have the benefit of an alternate service in parts of Manitoba other than the Winnipeg area, a microwave system must be approved.

In his reply to me on March 28 the minister said the CRTC was doing its best and that the government did not make decisions for the commission. Yet the CRTC is an agent of government and has a responsibility to the public to express its views, whether for or against an application.

Letters of intent have been issued to the CRTC by people in the Pine Falls area asking that cable television be extended in that area. But according to the workings of the CRTC, the commission must first advertise that it is willing to receive applications. However, it refuses to do this. So the people in Pine Falls are deprived even of an opportunity to present an application for cable television, and to see their application either accepted or rejected. Surely the least the people of the area can expect is that they will be heard. I quote from a letter written by a constituent in that area:

> I have made a start on a brief to present at the May 14 hearings but am not going to do any more work on it until such time as I know definitely I shall be allowed to present it. Operating in its usual fashion, the CRTC has not yet seen fit to acknowledge our request which was mailed on March 22.

All we are asking is, first, that an application having been made we can expect a decision after eight months. Second, we are asking that Canadians be heard. We question the position of the commission that applications cannot be received until advertisements have been published to that effect. The CRTC is an arm of the Department of Communications. Applications should be heard and decided, for or against, on their own merits and not be deferred, or left unheard, because the commission has some bureaucratic reason for declining to take action. It is incumbent on the minister to demand of the CRTC that it at least give the Canadian people their democratic rights—that it should hear applications and then decide whether or not to approve them.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to say that I do not agree with the hon. member that the CRTC is an arm of the Department of Communications. It is a quasi judicial body, and that creates an entirely different situation, as I am sure he will agree. The delays the hon. member has been pointing out are real. I think his facts are correct. I should like to inform him, though, that they are not of a bureaucratic nature.

The delay in holding the Manitoba hearing in Winnipeg arose primarily from the position taken by the government of Manitoba, which had publicly advised all broadcasters and cable television licencees in Manitoba that its department of communications was working on a telecommunications position paper for Manitoba. This announcement was made publicly on November 15, 1972, and the position paper was tentatively scheduled for completion by midsummer, 1973. Since the federal agencies are generally, rightly or wrongly, criticized for not consulting with the provinces or for not taking into account the wishes and needs of the provinces, the CRTC thought it wise to wait for this document, which although it had been announced would be completed by the summer of 1973 has not yet been completed.

So this is the reason for the delay. The CRTC could not delay any further. I do not know whether the Manitoba white paper was the great design that the provincial government wanted to put out, and that it will be out by May 14. I do not have the faintest notion, and I suspect the CRTC has not either. Surely the CRTC itself would provide the hon. member with the decision to which he is alluding after the May 14 Winnipeg public hearing. It is not only one or two isolated decisions that are at stake here but the whole planning and development of telecommunications and a cable system for the province of Manitoba.

Here are the facts. I understand the concerns of the hon. member and I share them. I can assure him the CRTC shares them also, and that after the May hearing the procrastination will come to an end and a decision will be taken.

HEALTH—INCIDENCE OF SILICOSIS AMONG URANIUM WORKERS—ACTION BY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, over a week ago I raised the issue of health safety in the uranium mines at Elliot Lake in northern Ontario. For the benefit of those members of the House who are not aware of the background of this particular mining operation a quick sketch is essential.

Uranium mining and milling came into being in Elliot Lake in 1955. The ore is contained in a base, 70 per cent of which is free silica as compared with 4 per cent to 8 per cent in the Sudbury camp. It was readily recognized that mining the Elliot Lake ore body presented a very significant potential risk, but it was believed that the existing mining technology was adequate to cope with this problem. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, whatever second thoughts there were quickly evaporated in the face of the enormous and dazzling contracts secured by the federal government from the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission through its own agency, the Eldorado Mining and Refining Company, contracts worth a total value of $1.5 billion.

Unfortunately, specific delivery dates were set down and deliveries were required to be completed by 1963. Also, under risk of cancellation, these deliveries were to commence on specific dates. What followed was an accelerated exploitation of the ore body in order for the mining companies to honour their commitments. This involved high wages, with particularly high bonus incentives, round the clock mining, short cuts, and always at their backs the threat of contract cancellation.

In this highly charged atmosphere of big profit, dust control and other measures of health safety assumed roles of secondary importance. Inevitably, as always in a community solely dependent upon the mining industry, the bust occurred in the 1960s when the options for contract renewal by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission were not taken up after 1959. Then in the late sixties, and particularly between 1970 and the end of 1972, a pattern began to emerge. Dust effects—the various X-ray stages leading to silicosis—began appearing in miners with little or no previous mining experience before Elliot Lake. The present situation at Elliot Lake is that some 10 per cent of the work force have pulmonary disabilities ranging up to 40 per cent.

As far back as 1972 the United Steelworkers of America, which represents the miners in Elliot Lake, was in contact with the then Minister of Labour, Mr. Martin O'Connell, requesting his intervention on behalf of the miners' health and safety in the uranium mines. Indeed, in a letter to Mr. Paul Falkowski of USWA District 6, Mr. O'Connell admitted that the uranium mines of Canada are subject to federal jurisdiction. In the same letter the minister stated that employment safety and health in the uranium mines are subject to the provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act, administered by the Atomic Energy Control Board.

Because of the persistence of the steelworkers union, the Ontario department of natural resources carried out an environment quality survey in the uranium mines at Elliot Lake. The workers involved have been seriously critical of several aspects of this survey. One such criticism is that the instruments used were not modern enough to be capable of producing accurate and satisfactory results.

In addition, criticism has been raised to the effect that normal operating conditions were altered deliberately to such a degree as to produce absolutely false results. Furthermore, any activities which are responsible for increasing or producing dust concentration in the mine ceased a number of hours before the "so-called" environmental survey started and samples of the mine air were collected. Crushers were shut down and normally dusty areas were washed down prior to the investigation of the mine environment.

This survey ended up as a whitewash for Mr. Stephen B. Roman, owner of Denison Mines and Rio Algoma. It was because of this obvious "dodge the ball" game being played by the provincial Tory government with its corporate friends in the mining sector that the United Steelworkers of America once again approached the federal government.

Uranium mines of Canada are within the federal jurisdiction. Furthermore, I hold here a document numbered P.C. 1972-431, dated March 7, 1972 entitled "Regulations Respecting the Use, Handling and Storage of Dangerous Substances and Radiation Emitting Devices in Federal Works, Undertakings and Businesses". In Clause 2 entitled "Interpretation", "Minister" means the Minister of Labour, and "Division Chief" means the Chief, Accident Prevention Division, Accident Prevention and Compensation Branch, Department of Labour, Ottawa.

In addition, Clause 10 states specifically, and I quote in part:

Subject to Section 11, every employer shall ensure that the concentration of any dangerous substance that may be carried by the air in any area where an employee is working

(a) does not exceed the threshold limit value recommended by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists in its pamphlet "Threshold Limit Values for Air Borne Contaminants 1971" as amended from to time, or

(b) conforms with any standard that follows good industrial safety practice, and is acceptable to the division chief.

Clause 13 amplifies this, and I quote in part again:

Where the atomosphere of any area in which an employee is working is subject to contamination by a dangerous substance, the employer shall ensure that the atmosphere is sampled and tested as frequently as

(a) may be necessary to ensure that the level of contamination does not at any time exceed the safe limits prescribed by Section 10, 11 and 12, or

(b) is directed in writing by the regional safety officer.

When I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to assume his responsibilities to the uranium miners of Elliot Lake, he said:

It is not within my jurisdiction... the jurisdiction falls under the Atomic Energy Control Board and certain activities are undertaken by the Radiation Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

My colleague, the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly), raised the issue with the Atomic Energy Control Board when that board appeared before the House's Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. What was the outcome? The Atomic Energy Control Board neatly passed the buck to the provincial government. The Elliot Lake miners in trying to avoid the "dodge the ball game" of the Ontario Tory government, have come face to face with the federal Liberal government's game of passing the buck.

The use of uranium as a source of energy is becoming more widespread and its mining will become more extensive. It is absolutely imperative, in view of the urgent and grave nature of the health risk, that the government ensure that the proper testing is done to determine and establish safe working conditions for the uranium miners of Elliot Lake and Canada. I hope that the minister, or his parliamentary secretary, will not stand up here tonight and tell me again that this is not within his jurisdiction. The responsibility is being passed from hand to hand, and no adequate action is being taken. The federal Minister of Labour is ultimately and morally responsible for what is happening to those workers in the uranium mines.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

The problems have been identified and pointed out by the workers themselves, the United Stellworkers of America and the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario. I, as a member of this House, am asking that the minister step in on behalf of those workers and make damn sure that their health is protected. If that involves stepping on the toes of the Atomic Energy Control Board, or Stephen P. Roman, then I suggest the minister get his walking shoes on right now. Thank you, companeros.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the uranium mining industry and Part IV of the Canada Labour Code (Safety of Employees) falls under the following headings: First, the general responsibility for occupational health and safety in the uranium industry. The application of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code (Safety of Employees) is by virtue of Section 80 "subject to any other act of the Parliament of Canada and any regulations thereunder—". The Atomic Energy Control Act therefore takes precedence over Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and regulations thereunder.

The second heading is the role and responsibility of the Atomic Energy Control Board. Under the Atomic Energy Control Act, the Atomic Energy Control Board is generally responsible for all matters pertaining to the occupational health and safety of employees of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and Eldorado Nuclear Limited, including the uranium mines in Saskatchewan and Ontario.

Third, the role of the Canada Department of Labour respecting uranium mining. The Department of Labour has no statutory responsibility for occupational health and safety related to the mining or processing of uranium. It has nevertheless expressed its general interest in the subject to the chairman of the Atomic Energy Control Board and offered any assistance it could provide. These matters continue to be handled by the board in accordance with its regular policies and procedures.

Fourth, delegation of responsibility to provincial governments. The Atomic Energy Control Board has delegated responsibility in the operational safety and health fields to the two provinces by arrangement. It is understood that the board does not routinely receive reports concerning occupational safety and accident prevention inspections and surveys from the provincial agencies.

With regard to Ontario, under the delegated authority inspections are performed by the Ontario ministry of natural resources for any mine which is subject to the Ontario mining act. The Ontario ministry of health carries out inspections upon request of the Ontario ministry of natural resources. There does not appear to be any established program of regular monitoring of health conditions in the uranium mine.

With regard to Saskatchewan, the mines inspection branch of the Saskatchewan department of labour—formerly under the mineral resources department—has carried out regular annual inspections of the Beaver Lodge mine. The Saskatchewan department of health formerly performed annual inspection, but this is not known to have been done for at least the past five years.

By agreement with the respective department of labour of Ontario and Saskatchewan, regular periodic inspections are conducted of boilers and pressure vessels. Inspections of electrical and gas installations are similarly conducted by the appropriate provincial agencies.

COMMEMORATION—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF EVENTS TO HONOUR MACKENZIE KING, ARTHUR MEIGHEN AND J. S. WOODSWORTH

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on more than one occasion in this chamber and in other assemblies of people I have deplored our nation's seeming reluctance to pay adequate tribute and give sufficient praise to the men and women of an earlier date who contributed so mightily and worthily to Canada's greatness.

I have felt this lack in our timidity about commemorating the birth dates of our founding fathers. We are also most timid and neglectful when it comes to commemorative stamps. It took us more than a century to place the likenesses of former prime ministers on the paper currency of the realm.

I thought the coincidence of three distinguished Canadian political leaders sharing the same year of birth, 1874, sufficiently significant to raise the matter in the oral question period. I refer to the Rignt Hon. Arthur Meighen, Reverend James Shaver Woodsworth and the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King in that order to indicate one thing, their order of birth in the year 1874, one century ago.

Mr. Meighen, born in Anderson, Ontario, on June 16, 1874, was a brilliant scholar, able lawyer, successful businessman and an outstanding expert on Shakespeare. But he was superb as a parliamentarian. It is doubtful that this historic chamber or its physical predecessor ever heard a greater debater. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1908. He went on to serve in major ministeries in the Borden government, and in 1920 became prime minister at 46, the youngest in the nation's history.

Brilliant though his career was, he was singularly unfortunate in his efforts to lead his party to electoral victories. His great skills were not of themselves sufficient for the times and the circumstances. His biographer, Roger Graham, refers to Meighen's delusion that in politics the weight of evidence and the force of argument determine the issue.

In Mr. Woodsworth Canadian public life had a major contributor to the social consciousness reflected in parliamentary action and debate. A dedicated champion of the underdog, this great visionary saw some of his visions become reality as the lot of rank and file Canadians was gradually bettered through a developing awareness that the institution of government should help most those who most needed help. While in this House from 1921 to 1942 he was always with a minor party, if with a party at all. But no one would designate as minor his impact upon the House and his contribution to the improvement of the life and standards of the Canadian people.

Mr. King, under whose prime ministership I lived part of my youth, was also a social reformer but more notably a political performer. Like Macdonald and Laurier, he knew the positive and dynamic value of compromise, and his ability in winning elections has made his name a leading one in the roster of successful political leaders. A matchless sense of timing, a capacity for patience, a keen ability for judging men—these were but some of the ingredients of his mastery of the political arts.

Three men so different, yet men of rare distinction, men who would be deserving of special note in any free parliament. These three—Meighen, Woodsworth, and King—are uniquely ours. Canada's parliament and Canada's people should find a fitting way to honour this illustrious trio in this, the centennial of their birth.

● (2220)

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes the outstanding contribution to Canadian life made by these three gentlemen, the late Mackenzie King, the late Arthur Meighen and the late J. S. Woodsworth. At the present time, however, no official commemorative events are planned.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF FARM YOUTH EXCHANGE GRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgency arising from the fact that for a number of years the department of the Secretary of State provided grants to the National Farmers Union so that farm youth could participate in an exchange program with farm youth in other parts of Canada. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has cancelled the farm youth exchange grants this year, therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House urges the Secretary of State to reinstitute the farm youth exchange program under the auspices of the National Farmers Union.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR MINIMUM GUARANTEED INCOME—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of very pressing nature.

As automation is replacing a great number of workers nowadays, as this country's labour force is in a quandary and has to contend with insecurity of the future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this government take immediate measures to establish the guaranteed minimum income.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

CF-104 AIRCRAFT BASED AT CFB COLD LAKE

Question No. 5—Mr. Rowland:

1. How many CF-104 aircraft are based at CFB Cold Lake?

2. Of these aircraft (a) how many are in (i) single configuration (ii) dual configuration (b) how many have been assigned exclusively to a training role (c) how many have been assigned to air defence command (i) as primary duty (ii) a secondary function?

3. Of the aircraft referred to in Part 2(c)(a) how many have now been refitted with weapons suitable for an interceptor role, how many are slated for such conversion, what is the cost per aircraft for such conversion (b) how many have an all weather capability?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are 20 CF-104 aircraft based at CFB Cold Lake.

2. (a) (i) Ten are single cockpit configuration. (ii) Ten are of dual cockpit configuration. (b) All 20 aircraft are assigned to the training role. (c) None are yet assigned to Air Defence Command as a primary or secondary function. They are however used for NORAD air defence target missions.

3. (a) None of the aircraft have so far been refitted with weapons suitable for an air interceptor role. However, ten aircraft are scheduled to be equipped with 20 mm cannon and a lead computing gunsight during fiscal year 1974/75.

The cost of the refitting program is estimated to be $128,-700 per aircraft including prototyping, spares, maintenance equipment and personnel. (b) All CF-104 aircraft have an all-weather flying capability, and, with the modifications noted in 3(a), ten will have an improved capability in the interceptor role.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCE OF QUEBEC RELATING TO FOREST ACCESS ROADS

Question No. 14—Mr. Fortin:

Is there an agreement between the government and the Government of the Province of Quebec relating to forest access roads and, if so (a) what is the date of the agreement (b) what amount was contributed by the government for each project since January 1, 1968 (c) what is the location of each project?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): (a) No specific agreement relating to forest access roads has been signed. However, such projects have been approved under the following agreements:—Canada-Quebec Agreement on Special Areas, 1970-1975—Canada-Quebec Agreement on Rural Development (ARDA), 1971-75.—Agreement Covering the Implementation of a Comprehensive Rural Development Plan for the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé and Îles-de-la-Madeleine Area, 1968-1976. (b) and (c) Projects undertaken since 1968 and expenditures incurred are as follows:

Localities	Federal Participation $
Port Cartier	2,300,000
Saguenay	197,000
Roberval	199,000
La Sarre	42,000
Matagami	8,000
Kipawa	338,000
Mejiscane	227,000
Manouane Indian Reserve	453,000
Rapid Lake Indian Reserve	56,000
Obedjewan Indian Reserve	331,520
Kipawa Indian Reserve	24,000
Marsoui (Gaspé)	900,00

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 250—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Department of Justice on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal year 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. 1972-73, $1,683; 1973-74 to date, $715.

2. Not applicable (departmental facilities). Amounts as above.

[Mr. Richardson.]

3. The Department of Justice has no information division. The amounts expended were for press releases and copies of speeches.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—ADVERTISING CONTRACTS

Question No. 302—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names and addresses of all advertising agencies used by the Department of Public Works since the present Minister assumed his portfolio?

2. (a) What are the amounts of all advertising contracts given such agencies during this period of time, what are the dates such contracts were awarded and in each case, were tenders or competitive presentations of any kind requested and, if not, who authorized in each case the expenditure of public funds without such tenders or competitive presentations (b) in each case, what was the general subject matter of the advertising contract?

3. What are the names and addresses of all advertising agencies used by the Department of Public Works during the term of the Minister's immediate predecessor and if any of these agencies has not been used since then, for what reason and on whose decision were changes made?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): The answer to this question is nil, as the Department of Public Works does not have an advertising program.

PUBLIC SERVICE—INFORMATION RELATING TO NUMBER OF FEMALE AND MALE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 319—Mr. Paproski:

1. In the Canadian Public Service, excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies, how many women hold positions with salaries above $15,000 annually?

2. What is the total number of persons of deputy minister rank in the Public Service, excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies and, of these, how many are of the female sex?

3. Excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies, what is the total number of Public Servants and, of these, how many are (a) male (b) female?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. One thousand twenty-nine.

2. There are 60 persons classified at the deputy minister level in the Public Service, excluding Crown corporations, boards and agencies not defined as a department in the Financial Administration Act. This total includes one female.

3. The total number of Public Servants as of June 30, 1973 was 296,826 and of these (a) 205,184 were male, and (b) 91,642 were female. (These totals include casual, term, seasonal, and continuous employees.)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Question No. 360—Mr. Alexander:

By province and territory for each Unemployment Insurance Commission office or any other office issuing or forwarding benefit cheques and for each fiscal year 1971-72 and 1972-73 (a) what was the total amount of overpayment (b) what was the total amount recovered (c) what amount has been written off as uncollectable?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As some district offices serve more than one province, overpayment data is maintained on a regional basis only. Compilation by province would entail substantial difficulty and additional expense.

PEI DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 420—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What is the total expenditure to date by (a) the government (b) the Government of Prince Edward Island for program under the Prince Edward Island Development Plan?

2. What have been the principal areas for which such expenditure was allotted?

3. On what date is the plan to be completed and what amounts will each government spend from the present time to that date?

4. What is the estimated number of new full-time jobs created under the Development Plan?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. To November 30, 1973 federal contributions have amounted to $52,612,358 and loans provided amounted to $10,413,000. The province's contributions have been consistent with the cost-sharing arrangements as provided under the Comprehensive Development Plan Agreement. However the specific expenditures as of any date can only be obtained by an examination of the financial records of the province and this information is not immediately available through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

2. The principal areas of expenditures were resource adjustment and development in integrated land management, agriculture, tourism, forestry and fisheries; social development in education, vocational training, housing, urban development and community services; resource supporting and commercial services for transportation, industrial waste disposal, manufacturing, processing and market development; implementation through plan management, staff training and development, public involvement and evaluation.

3. The agreement terminates March 31, 1984. Under the first phase, a period covering five to seven years, the federal commitment is $88,437,000 in contributions and $36,563,000 in loan funds. The provincial commitment is $117,963,000 for that phase. Subject to further joint federal-provincial negotiations Canada may contribute an additional $100,000,000 and the province an additional $380,000,000 during the period from the end of the first phase of the Plan to March 31, 1984.

4. A measure is not available to indicate precisely how many new full-time jobs have been created under the Plan. Plan activities during the first years were concentrated on transportation, education, housing and government. The primary aim of these activities is the provision of the supportive social investment necessary for the job creating initiatives to be undertaken in the second phase. Expenditures to date have, however, been an important element in employment growth since 1968. Statistics Canada reports that 1973 employment in Prince Edward Island averaged 39,000 compared with 34,000 in 1968. The 24 per cent growth in employment since 1968 compares with a 10 per cent growth from 1961-68.

DREE—ASSISTANCE TO FRUIT FARMERS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 432—Mr. Howie:

To what extent and over how many years will DREE assist fruit farmers in New Brunswick and what is the current status of this contemplated program?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Until now, DREE has been assisting fruit farmers in New Brunswick indirectly, through both the ARDA Agreement and the RDIA program. Under the ARDA Agreement, and Applied Research and Development (Crops) Sub-program provided the New Brunswick fruit farmers, through the provincial Department of Agriculture and Rural Development at 50-50 cost-sharing, assistance in research, planning and information dissemination. Some research and planning was carried out specifically on the apple industry. A second ARDA program, called Agricultural Resource Conservation and Development Program can assist New Brunswick fruit farmers, through the provincial Department of Agriculture and Rural Development at 50-50 cost-sharing in carrying out a variety of work under the following: Farm Development, Small Farm Improvement, Sub-Surface Drainage, Erosion Control and Stream Bank Protection Sub-programs. Under the RDIA program, DREE can assist in the cold storage, packaging and processing end of the industry; through incentive grants.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICE, FREDERICTON, N.B.

Question No. 449—Mr. Howie:

1. On what date is commencement of construction of a post office on the north side of the river at Fredericton, New Brunswick scheduled?

2. Until a new post office is constructed, what steps are contemplated to meet the space needs created by the existing facilities?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Post Office as follows: 1. Commencement of construction of a proposed postal building on the north side of the river at Fredericton, New Brunswick, is scheduled for early 1975.

2. The original Queen Street Post Office space is to be utilized in conjunction with the Fredericton Main Post Office at Waggoners Lane as processing and letter carrier space.

Order Paper Questions

NEW TERRITORIAL ADMINISTRATION BUILDING, WHITEHORSE

Question No. 480—Mr. Firth:

Have the plans for a new territorial administration building in Whitehorse been approved and, if so (a) on what date is construction (i) due to start (ii) due for completion (b) do the plans include offices for Territorial Councillors and, if so, how many (c) what is the scheduled date for full occupation of the offices?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Yes. (a) (i) Spring of 1974; (ii) Fall of 1976. (b) Plans include three large offices for councillors and room for seven visiting councillors in open landscape area. (c) Summer of 1976.

FOOD ADVERTISING

Question No. 489—Mr. Dick:

Has the government considered making it a requirement that all food chains and other retailers of food, and all manufacturers of foodstuffs who do advertising on radio, television, in newspapers or by means of door to door circulars, place words in a prominent position on any printed matter, or include in their advertising something to the effect that "this advertising is adding to the cost of the goods sold"?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No. The Government has not considered making this proposal a requirement in advertising messages. It is not axiomatic that advertising always makes a net addition to the unit cost of goods sold. Before consideration could be given to such a requirement, further evidence would have to be developed indicating that such a notation would be of substantial benefit to the consumer.

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—FIELD OPERATIONS SERVICE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 497—Mr. McKenzie:

1. In the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74, how much money was contracted to each of the five regions of Canada by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

2. What was this in per capita terms for each region?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1 and 2.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—COST OF ADVERTISING VACANCIES FILLED FROM WITHIN SERVICE

Question No. 537—Mr. Stollery:

What was the cost to the Public Service of advertising vacancies for 1971, 1972 and 1973 that were in fact filled from within the Public Service?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The advertising cost which represents the cost of issuing posters for interdepartmental competitions for which the Public Service Commission is directly responsible is: 1971-72, $20,595.14; 1972-73, $30,307.12; 1973-74, $11,328.68 (accounts paid to date).

COST OF PRODUCING CANADA POST OFFICE CALENDARS

Question No. 546—Mr. Harding:

1. What was the cost of producing and mailing the 1974 Canada Post Office calendars?

2. How many calendars were produced and mailed?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. $113,392.

2. Five hundred thousand distributed on request through postal outlets.

CBC BROCHURE "THE NATIONAL DREAM"

Question No. 557—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

1. How many copies of the brochure "The National Dream" produced by CBC-TV Network Promotion Toronto were printed?

2. What was the extent of distribution?

3. What was the total cost of producing and printing the brochure and distributing same?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Thirty-five thousand, six hundred and ninety-five copies were printed. The total included 10,600 copies for the Royal Trust Company and Abitibi Provincial Paper for their own distribution.

2. The brochure was distributed to newspapers and radio and television stations across Canada, as well as to universities, high schools, elementary schools, Members of the House of Commons and Members of the Senate, Members of Provincial Legislatures, railroad associations and clubs, community leaders, business executives and to individuals who requested copies.

3. Twelve thousand and twenty-three dollars. This figure represents the net cost after payment to the CBC by the Royal Trust Company and Abitibi Provincial Paper for their connection with the brochure.

ROLE OF CANADA WITHIN THE INTERNATIONAL STANDARDS ORGANIZATION

Question No. 599—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the role of Canada within the International Standards Organization?

2. Does Canada participate in the work of technical committees of the Organization and, if so (a) in how many (b) how many members (c) what was the total cost per year since 1970?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Standards Council of Canada represents Canada as the Canadian member of the International Organization for Standardization (ISO). The Council ensures effective Canadian participation in the activities of ISO in accordance with the Standards Council of Canada Act. The role of Canada as one of the 56 full members (there are also 14 correspondent members) throughout the world is the development of international standards with a view to facilitating international exchanges of goods and services and to developing cooperation in the sphere of intellectual, scientific, technological and economic activity.

2. Canada participates in the work of technical committees of the ISO. (a) Canada has "P" membership status (participating with voting privileges) on 84 technical committees and "O" membership status (observer and non-voting) on 27 technical committees. It should be noted that membership is by country and not by individuals, delegates to attend meetings being recommended by the responsible Canadian Advisory Committee (CAC) to the Canadian National Committee on the International Organization for Standardization (CNC/ISO) for approval. (b) A total of 175 delegates attended 118 technical committee, sub-committee or working group meetings during the calendar year 1973. (c) The Standards Council of Canada cost per year since 1970 was:

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

RELATIONSHIP OF INFLATION TO LABOUR UNREST—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister who might feel a little lonely over there if I do not direct some attention to him. I presume the Acting Prime Minister to be the government House leader. Since the threatened shutdown of air, ship and postal services is only the tip of the iceberg of labour unrest that is growing in response to the injustices resulting from runaway inflation in this country, is the government now prepared to treat this inflation as a deepening national emergency and take some immediate action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the question posed by the Leader of the Opposition, the government is aware of the labour problems to which he has referred. At the present time each of them is the subject of detailed examination and action. It is not expected that the nature of these labour problems requires the kind of fundamental action that the Leader of the Opposition would put in place.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to have any monopoly on the right way for the government to act. Is the government going to continue to tell the working people of this country that there is no relief in sight?

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Stanfield: Come on is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What plans does the government have in this inflationary atmosphere to maintain essential services and some semblance of order in the country as more and more groups are apparently deciding that since the government will not do anything to protect them from inflation, they have to try to protect themselves?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should not get overly excited or panicky about the extent of the labour problems which are confronting us at the present time. We propose to deal with them and are dealing with them under the regular procedures provided by the collective bargaining system of this country. If I may reply to the broader question posed by the Leader of the Opposition, it is a matter of fact that, despite the inflationary pressures in this country, the year to year changes in the standard of living of Canadians have shown substantial improvement over the past several years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I had hoped the leader of the House, coming from where he does, would have been a little less insensitive than some of his colleagues toward the problems faced by the working people today. But now that the Minister of Finance has admitted that inflationary expectations have a good deal to do with the upward pressure on housing prices, does the government realize that these expectations are also causing havoc to the regular collective bargaining procedures to which the leader of the House referred, and that these inflationary expectations are endangering the economic stability of the country? Will the hon. gentleman assure the House that some action will be taken, quite apart from any action with respect to the collective bargaining procedure? Will he assure the House that the government intends to do something to dampen and control the inflationary expectations of the country?

Mr. MacEachen: I think that in the light of the atmosphere the Leader of the Opposition is attempting to create surrounding some of these labour problems, it should be pointed out that only one of the disputes in question has direct relevance to the wage factor. This should be borne in mind by the hon. gentleman when he is drawing these far-fetched conclusions. As the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have already indicated to the House, other measures are under consideration by the government in addition to the very significant measures which have already been implemented, and these will be announced either at budget time or when other occasions are open.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT EXCESS PROFITS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the chartered banks will make an additional $100 million as a result of increasing their interest rates from 9 per cent in March to 11 per cent in April, will the minister instruct the financial institutions to roll back the new rates, more especially the mortgage interest rates, or will he impose an excess profits tax to prevent the gouging of the public? What steps does he intend to take?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): These financial institutions are the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and the question should properly be addressed to him.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, this question, too, is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that only 5,500 units were constructed under the AHOP program last year at an expense of $105 million, which works out to an average mortgage of $21,000, will the minister instruct the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to allocate more money to this program so that more units can be built?

● (1420)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, CMHC's budget is over $1 billion for this calendar year, 1974. We are allocating as many resources as we can to the assisted home ownership and other associated housing programs. I made it clear in my speech in the House a couple of weeks ago that we were reviewing the levels of lending and the income levels under the assisted home ownership program, and this review is underway.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Broadview for a second supplementary, and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL WARRANTY SCHEME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): In view of the fact that the Ontario government intends to pass legislation covering warranties on materials and construction of new houses to protect purchasers, is it the intention of the minister to pass similar legislation respecting homes constructed under the National Housing Act and financed by CMHC, and if not, why not?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member is referring to quotations appearing in this morning's newspaper from the Ontario minister which were not entirely correct. I have called a meeting of federal and provincial housing and consumer groups to work out a national warranty scheme. On Tuesday there was a meeting held by a task force or sub-committee of that group to continue this work. Some of the provinces were represented. I hope all of them will attend the next meeting to be held on May 8. There is a substantial degree of agreement between the plan of the builders and the one that the federal government has proposed, and I would hope that by working co-operatively with builders, consumer groups and the provinces we will soon be able to establish in this country a national home warranty scheme applicable to the purchase of new homes.

NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT AGREEMENTS—COUNTER PROPOSALS FROM QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Can he tell the House whether he received recently from the Quebec government a counter proposal with regard to the negotiation of a global agreement on Bill C-133 concerning housing? If so, is he willing to accept it or will another proposal be made by Ottawa, and when?

[Mr. Gilbert.]

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have received from the minister, in reply to my submitting the standard form neighbourhood improvement agreement to the province of Quebec, modifications to that agreement which are currently under study by myself and my government.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PILOTS STRIKE—EFFECT OF INFLATION ON EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has been involved in the resolution of the problems of the pilots on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and whether he intends to admit the fact, inflation having gone up at a rate of about 10 per cent, that they are entitled to a justifiable increase, or does he intend to prolong things until such time as the whole economy of this country suffers?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be aware that under the legislation this area is the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Transport.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been dealing with this problem. The difficulty we are facing is that the pilots are now getting $28,000 a year; we are offering $34,000 and they want $39,000. So, I am not sure that it is a question of inflation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the government House leader and is supplementary to the question of the Leader of the Opposition. In the midst of record high inflation, record high interest rates and strikes that threaten to paralyse the country, may I ask the government House leader when we can expect the leader of the government back in the House?

An hon. Member: He does not know.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary, following which I will see the hon. member for Dauphin.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON INTEREST RATE CHARGED BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Yesterday the minister said that he did not agree with the hypothesis that interest rates on first mortgages were at a level of 11 and 12 per cent, and on second mortgages at 15 and 16 per cent. Today, he sidestepped the question. I should like to ask the minister, since CMHC comes under his jurisdiction, whether he will at least freeze the interest rates charged by that organization so that average people can afford to buy homes and to pay rents that are now on the increase?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the interest rates charged by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under its different forms of lending are set out in the statutes, and we are endeavouring constantly to keep them as low as possible.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North, but hon. members will appreciate that we are still on the first question. I will see the hon. member for Dauphin immediately after the supplementary.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I know I am not permitted to ask a question of law—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi rises on a point of order.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East put a question to the House leader regarding a matter that is on the minds of every member and every Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is not so.

Mr. Grafftey: I have been given a mandate by the electorate of my riding to ask this question. This week we are faced with record inflation and strikes across the nation. Has the House leader—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member rises on a point of order he should indicate what the point is in order that the Chair might have an opportunity to rule as to whether there is a point of order.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I will then ask my question of the House leader. In view of the circumstances outlined by the hon. member when can we expect the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the rest of the ministers of this government to be in the House to answer questions?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That might be considered a supplementary question but hardly a point of order. For the moment the hon. member for Calgary North has the floor.

Mr. Baldwin: Where is the Governor General?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the last two questions but I should like to now put this question to the minister. He has talked about the interest rates being set by statute. I should like him now to point out to me and to the country the section of the act under which the interest rates are set for CMHC. He moves about like a yo-yo from time to time, as does the Minister of Finance, and he knows it, but he is not telling this House the facts.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Yo-yo!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's unparliamentary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen opposite certainly do not want any information.

An hon. Member: They are afraid of it.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

An hon. Member: It is difficult to get it with you around.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the rate CMHC pays to the Department of Finance for its money is set at the first of each quarter, and I think the hon. member for Calgary North knows what the first of each quarter is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: It is re-loaned by CMHC to the public, the provinces and non-profit housing corporations under various sections of the act which carry differing interest rates, some of them set in accordance with an amendment the hon. member himself moved and to which I was happy to accede on behalf of the government. I am surprised that he is so unaware of his own amendments that he cannot remember them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT ADVISE MORTGAGE LENDERS NOT TO INCREASE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Yesterday the Minister of Finance stated that the possibility of 12 per cent interest being charged on first mortgages was a hypothesis but the rates yesterday were quoted as high as 11.5 per cent in an unstable market. Is the government considering advising mortgage lenders to hold the line at 12 per cent on first mortgages so that yesterday's hypothesis does not become today's reality?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a question that might properly be addressed to the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Basford: I might add, however, that the particular rate to which the hon. member is referring was apparently quoted by a company that had no money to lend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—LEGALITY OF AWARD OF PRICE INCREASE TO GULF—JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the decision announced in yesterday's Globe and Mail that an arbitration tribunal by Gulf Canada and Trans Canada Pipelines has awarded a rate increase to Gulf for the field price of natural gas which is to go from 27 cents per thousand cubic feet to 60 cents per thousand cubic feet beginning November 1, 1974, and to 73 cents per thousand cubic feet beginning November 1, 1975, and in view of the fact that this proposed increase if implemented could raise the cost to the domestic user in eastern Canada by as much as $70 per year with a $300 million cost to Ontario, I would ask the minister what right has this tribunal, in effect, to rule on price increases for natural gas which should be the prerogative of the National Energy Board—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish the hon. member would ask the question. It seems to me the preamble is a bit long. I am not sure whether he has reached the point of asking the question, but I would hope he would do so at this point.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister what right has this tribunal, in effect, to rule on price increases for natural gas which should be the prerogative of the National Energy Board and is the government planning to take steps to ensure that, in this case and in the future, its power to regulate natural gas prices in interprovincial trade is not eroded.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would have to concede that there has been a great deal of doubt expressed about the constitutionality of the Alberta law under which the tribunal was purporting to act. However, rather than take legal action in respect of the tribunal I have written the Alberta Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, indeed in advance of this particular decision, suggesting that among the present and other questions that might be the subject of consultation should be the appropriate level of gas prices in Canada. I would hope I would receive an early and favourable reply from the Alberta government in that regard.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a brief supplementary, following which I hope I will be able to recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question again to the minister. In view of the fact that Gulf Oil had a profit of about $102 million in 1973, which was 58 per cent higher than 1972, and in view of the fact that the agreement between Gulf Canada and Trans Canada Pipelines will increase revenues to Gulf Canada by more than $52 million a year with the field price of natural gas at 60 cents per thousand cubic feet—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. I wish to seek the co-operation of hon. members asking questions at this time. This is a speech rather than a question. The hon. member should ask the question as quickly as possible.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a rather complicated issue.

An hon. Member: And you don't understand it.

Mr. Harding: I felt we should have the background for it. How can this company and the government justify a 122 per cent increase in field gas prices to Canadian consumers this coming November with a further sharp price increase a year later?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows the issue is between the public sector, federal and provincial, and the private sector in the case of the companies. There is, of course, an important question of the level at which the provincial royalties should be set to make certain these funds come to public use. I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member that there should also be some consideration of federal revenue concerns in relation to the windfall gains to the company involved in this particular case.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE OPPOSITION TO AUTOMATION—ASSURANCE TO EMPLOYEES IN NEGOTIATIONS ON TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General following a question asked by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. In light of the spreading strikes across the country, contrary to what the minister indicated and in light of the fear expressed by the workers in respect of job and wage security and their concern that the minister will not negotiate technological changes, could the minister now reaffirm what he said in the House yesterday that nobody opposes automation in the Post Office Department or the mechanization of the work.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat what I said yesterday, that it is not the mechanization of postal operations to which unions object but the classification of employees working on those machines and the union leaders want some explanations on the matter. To that effect, I have given the assurance that the manpower committee whose establishment was provided in the collective agreement will give priority to the consideration of coders. I hope that a meeting of that manpower committee will be held during the next hours.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary I want to say now that the minister has flip-flopped because yesterday he indicated that nobody was opposed to automation, and yet he went before the cameras outside and said the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe did have a point. Let me ask the minister this. He said he had given some assurances. Were these assurances given by a written promise that negotiations would be held on technological change?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have not altered outside the House the statements which I made here. In my opinion, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe needs help to defend himself and specify his points—apparently, there is no simultaneous interpretation, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that this is an extremely important matter involving mail not going across the country and involving family allowance cheques and cheques of senior citizens, I hope the translation can be given in order that we can hear the minister's answer. I think it is extremely important.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could reply in English and say to the hon. member that the main question at issue is the classification of coders. We have had discussions with the national executive—

Mr. Alexander: You are not answering my question. Answer the question.

Mr. Ouellet: I am repeating what I said in French, Mr. Speaker. The way to deal with this question is through the manpower committee as set forth in the collective agreement and I would hope in the coming hours there will be a meeting of this manpower committee in order to deal with this question.

Mr. Alexander: I have one last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands who also has a supplementary.

MEETINGS OF MANPOWER COMMITTEE ON AUTOMATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, is the minister now telling us that the automation committee which I believe was set up in 1973 is just meeting now for the first time. Had it not met before this, because this is a question of concern to the postal workers, in order to deal with the issue of automation.

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): There have been some meetings. Some of these meetings have not produced what both parties expected the committee could produce. However, we have given an assurance that the deputy minister and myself will take an active part in this up to a conclusion.

Mr. Alexander: In writing?

Mr. Ouellet: In writing, yes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR DISTRIBUTION OF OLD AGE PENSION AND FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES IN EVENT OF POSTAL STRIKE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the postal tie-ups can the minister tell us what contingency plans the government has to ensure the distribution of family allowance cheques which normally would be mailed by the end of this week and also old age pensions cheques.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are studying this matter very attentively. We are now having consultations with the Postmaster General while hoping, on the other hand, that postal services will be resumed in time; if not, however, we will take the steps required to have it resumed.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGED DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION OF PACIFIC REGION CHAIRMAN—NOTICE OF TERMINATION OF CONTRACT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the senior minister from British Columbia, the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the Minister of Urban Affairs has demanded the resignation of the Pacific region chairman of the National Harbours Board and in view of the fact that the Minister of Transport stated he does not know the reason for the resignation demand, can the minister advise the House what action is being taken in this matter.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Close consultation with the Minister of Urban Affairs and the Minister of Transport.

● (1440)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Since the hon. senior minister from British Columbia apparently arranged the appointment of the chairman, can the minister advise whether the chairman has been given the necessary six months notice of termination of his contract?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I should make a simple correction. The member of the board in question was appointed by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I seek the co-operation of hon. members. We are not moving very quickly. I will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver South for a supplementary, and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who also has a supplementary.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I will shift the question to the hon. Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the House whether the chairman was given the necessary six months notice of the termination of his contract on April 15 as is required if his contract is to be terminated in October?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we did not give notice to anybody in British Columbia.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for St. John's East and is directed to the acting House leader. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the President of the Treasury Board, the four senior economic ministers of this government—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Hees: —are absent from parliament, may I ask if this is the government's idea of how to run this country and look after its economic problems? If so, this is nothing less than a national disgrace!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Give us a report from Trudeau.

An hon. Member: How is he making out on the beach?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the Minister of Finance has been in the House all week. He is absent today but he will be back tomorrow and the remainder of the week, having put through an important measure earlier in the week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is absent on official business, leading a trade mission—

An hon. Member: To Hawaii!

Mr. MacEachen: —first of all to London and later to the Middle East. The President of the Treasury Board is in Vancouver today holding informal meetings with the firefighters—

[Mr. Fraser.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —about which the Leader of the Opposition was so concerned.

An hon. Member: And the Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: Where is the Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: Let's hear it!

An hon. Member: Tell us about the Prime Minister, where is he?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to finish the answer. I think the answer is improving.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The punch line is, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister is returning to Ottawa and will be back among his friends in the House tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys but the hon. member for Skeena rises on a point of order. I will hear him and return to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the point of order I want to make, in case a wrong impression is left with the government House leader, is that it is my view the country would be better off if the Prime Minister stayed in the Barbados.

Mr. Stanbury: Where is David?

Mr. Chrétien: Where are David and Tommy?

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys has the floor and should be given an opportunity to ask his question or questions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS AT GENERAL INSTRUMENTS PLANT, SYDNEY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID EMPLOYEES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased that my colleague and dear friend from Cape Breton is in the official capacity which he enjoys today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: It gives me an excellent opportunity to pose a very good question to him. In light of the fact that the harbingers of doom from General Instruments Corporation arrived in Sydney last night and announced the closure of their plant there, and in light of the fact that 600 employees have already been laid off and another 400 are going to be laid off, could the minister advise what the government is planning to do to assist these people with regard to future employment, particularly in view of the fact that the Premier of Nova Scotia was able to delay this announced closure until after April 2.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Very good question!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the phased closure—

An hon. Member: Phased!

Mr. MacEachen: —that is to take place at General Instruments Corporation. As my hon. friend has stated, I understand that information to that effect was conveyed to the local people and the union last night in Sydney. I have been in touch with my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration this morning and have discussed this problem with him in the expectation that he will be able to put in place all the available instruments to assist the people so affected. I assure my hon. friend that I am deeply concerned about the matter and I thank him for drawing it to the attention of the government.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I drew it to the attention of the government over the past number of weeks and they have not acted, and yesterday I introduced a motion under Standing Order 43 which was opposed by Liberal members and which probably would have helped the workers at General Instruments Corporation if passed, I do not think I need the minister's thanks!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE SUBSIDIZATION OF CONSUMER GROUPS APPEARING BEFORE REGULATORY BODIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House whether he intends to implement the recommendation put forward by the Canadian Consumer Council that his department should subsidize consumers or groups of consumers who wish to appear before regulating bodies, in order to avoid that industrial interests be the only ones allowed to appear before these bodies?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all these recommendations are now under review. Those recommendations relating to taxation are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Finance, but we have already granted special subsidies to the Canadian Consumer Association to enable them to develop a special program to secure representation of consumers before public regulatory bodies.

AIR TRANSPORT

THREATENED STRIKE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that air traffic controllers are threatening to strike as early as Friday and such a strike would effectively close down every major airport in the country, will the Acting Prime Minister give this House assurance that the Treasury Board is doing its utmost to reach an equitable solution to the wage dispute?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that the Treasury Board is doing its utmost to reach a settlement. I had discussions with the President of the Treasury Board this morning and their meetings will be held this afternoon with the objective of resolving the dispute.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport who is being besieged these days by land, sea and air. In view of the closing down of Halifax International Airport and others which indicate that the trouble with the firefighters is spreading, may I ask the minister what immediate action is being taken to avoid prolongation of this problem apart from sending the head of the Treasury Board to Vancouver which could have a counter-productive effect?

Mr. MacEachen: You can't win in this business. When you are away you get hell, when you are here—

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have negotiated, and I think this is the proper way of doing it, with the alliance which is the certified bargaining agent for the firefighters. We reached an agreement and now the alliance is getting in touch with all its members in order to ratify or not ratify the understanding. This is true for Halifax and Vancouver. All that is done now, unfortunately, is illegal and it should not be supported by those who think the law should be respected in this country.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance may I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As the building, development and real estate industries anticipate that the government is going to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials in the budget, can the minister confirm this?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has made his position very clear a number of times on this.

Mr. Alexander: What is it?

YOUTH

REASON FOR CANCELLATION OF FARM YOUTH EXCHANGE GRANTS PROGRAM

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct my question to the Secretary of State. He was here a few minutes ago. Perhaps I could direct it to the parliamentary secretary, or to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Secretary of State cancelled the farm youth program which was under the auspices of the National Farmers Union, and as Canadian farm youth have far too few opportunities to travel, may I ask the minister why this worthwhile program was cancelled?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information but I will draw the question to the minister's attention and get him to reply.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT WHICH PERMITS LONGER SENTENCES FOR YOUNG OFFENDERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Regina vs Burnshine, in which the majority of the court held that a person under the age of 22 from British Columbia could be subject to longer sentences under Section 150 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act than he would be in other provinces where sentences are authorized only by the Criminal Code, is the Solicitor General considering an amendment to the Prisons and Reformatories Act to clear up what may be a denial of equality before the law for younger persons in British Columbia, and, in the broader sense, to provide a more realistic conception of equality before the law, as guaranteed in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the law is presently under review. We hope to have a bill before this House. I might say that the proposed amendments are the subject of discussions with the provinces.

[Mr. Marshall.]

EXAMINATION OF BILL C-22 BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE IN CONNECTION WITH GUARANTEES UNDER BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In dealing with the Canadian Bill of Rights, and I address this question to the Solicitor General in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether the Minister of Justice has yet performed his statutory duty under Section 3 of the Bill of Rights by examining Bill C-22, an act respecting Canadian professional football, to ascertain whether any of the provisions thereof are inconsistent with the purposes and provisions of the Bill of Rights, particularly those guaranteeing equality before the law and freedom from discrimination on account of national origin?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the bill with respect to professional football has been drafted by the Department of Justice, under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF EGGS FROM UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF BILL C-4

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I appreciate the fact the minister is away on business rather than a holiday, and I commend him for that. In the absence of the hon. gentleman may I direct my question to the government House leader. Due to the very serious threat to the Canadian egg industry by the increased momentum of egg imports from United States, resulting from the severe and recent drop in their prices, and also keeping in mind the promise of the Minister of Agriculture made in response to a similar question which I asked in this House on April 5, has the leader of the House not been encouraged by the Minister of Agriculture to give this matter serious consideration and to bring forward Bill C-4 immediately? If so, how soon can we expect it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to remember all the bills we deal with. The hon. member referred to the amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has also been very anxious to have this bill brought forward. I will attempt to bring it forward just as soon as possible, in the hope of getting quick passage.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CONTROL CONSUMER CREDIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the senior economic minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the average household debt including mortgages in Canada is about $3,000, and in view of the fact that consumer credit is not regulated by the Bank Act or the Small Loans Act, and consumer credit is increasing, I would ask the minister whether he intends to introduce in this session legislation to regulate the activities of these usurious types of near banks.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to present to Parliament and to the public a policy paper setting out proposals for the revision of the Small Loans Act and the Interest Act within the next month or so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville will be recognized, and then I will see the hon. member for Fraser Valley East.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that he will also be bringing in regulations to control financial institutions, or will this just be another policy paper?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I think these proposals will be quite wide ranging. I will welcome the hon. member's comments when he sees them.

FLOODS

POTENTIAL FLOODING IN SOUTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PREVENTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. In view of concern expressed on the news media and in view of a statement issued by the Minister of Lands, Forest and Water Resources of British Columbia to the effect that a potential for floods later this year now exists in southern British Columbia, may I ask if the minister's department is co-operating with the British Columbia government in laying out strategy to meet any such eventuality?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, our engineers are working closely with the provincial authorities in B.C.

Mr. Patterson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister been asked to participate in the activities of the emergency policy committee established to meet any emergency which may arise?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not at the ministerial level, but our engineers on the west coast always work closely with their provincial counterparts.

LEAD POISONING—INQUIRY AS TO INSPECTION OF CANADA METAL AND TORONTO REFINERS LIMITED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of the Environnment and Minister of Fisheries.

Could he tell the House if his department has sent inspectors to inquire about hazards of lead poisoning at Canada Metal Company Limited and Toronto Refiners and Smelters Limited, which some time ago obtained an injunction against the CBC to prevent them from broadcasting a report allegedly proving this allegation?

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REVIEW BOARD REPORT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister in a position to indicate if a determination has been made by the review committee looking into the Fundy Tidal Power Programming Board report? What are the conclusions of that committee and will that information in that report be made available to the public?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the final recommendation of the review board has not been received. We look forward to an early response from the provincial representatives in this regard. It is anticipated that, the final decision having been taken, the board will recommend further studies. We are seeking to arrive at an agreement for further studies for this purpose. I hope we can have this information at an early date so that we can proceed with the next stage of the examination in question.

FINANCE

LOAN TO IRAN—SUGGESTION CANADA NOT NEGOTIATE FURTHER SUCH LOANS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, who, in answer to another question, mentioned that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was in the Middle East. Can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that, included in the minister's negotiations in the Middle East, there will be no loans similar to the $132.5 million loan that is advertised in today's paper to Iran, bearing in mind that Iran's export revenue from oil alone will push its revenue up to $18 billion for this year, with $300 million of it coming from Canada alone in the form of export revenue?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's representations.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister could also take note of my suggestion. I hope the government is proposing future legislation for small businessmen in this country, to ensure that small businessmen who only got $30 million in total loans last year will do better.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation. Orders of the day.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE OF FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT TO DEAL WITH DIRECTLY OR THROUGH UNION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to take advantage of this time but I know the Minister of Transport would want me to make this very serious point. It came to my attention during the debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no objection to recognizing the hon. member but we have gone beyond the question period. This might be done with the consent of the House. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order. I apologize to the hon. member. I thought he was asking a question.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it is a point of order which I am sure the Minister of Transport would want me to raise because earlier this week he said the firefighters would find a solution on Tuesday. He said there would be a vote, and a decision made by the firefighters as to whether they would accept the agreement offered by the Treasury Board. Today the minister said that at this point all activities in connection with this strike are illegal. In the same statement, he said that the President of the Treasury Board is in Vancouver talking with the firefighters. Therefore it is obvious that the activities of the President of the Treasury Board are also illegal.

● (1500)

I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether a decision has now been made to deal directly with the B.C. firefighters, or to continue to bargain with them through their union, the Public Service Alliance?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much whether this could be a point of order. I am sure the hon. member would find it difficult to raise that point under any standing order. If the point of order were construed as a question, the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to settle this matter. Is the minister going to reply to the hon. member's question?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is only one point to which I can reply, and that is the first point. It is true that when the first offer was made and communicated to the firefighters, the Alliance thought they could receive a reply right away. However, they had to receive that through the mail. The President of the Treasury Board has been asked by the firefighters to have a loose discussion with them, but we are not going to go over the head of the Alliance.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the minister missed the point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that is not a point of order. Rather, it is an exchange between the minister and the hon. member which might be pursued after the question period. I have to recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre who has a question of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In answer to repeated requests for an answer to question 319 on the order paper, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) stated yesterday that to answer such a question could involve a cost of $1.5 million. The parliamentary secretary arrived at this figure claiming that the task would involve a search of 300,000 files at a cost of $5 per file.

I have learned that one major department had the answer prepared for it, and it had been forwarded to the minister in March. The task took approximately one week and definitely did not involve a search of all personnel files.

Personnel computer printouts are available which contain personnel positions, and the salary can be easily deducted by most personnel officers familiar with civil service positions and the respective salary levels.

The parliamentary secretary cannot mislead the House. When he arrives I would like to ask him either to resign or refute that statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say that when the parliamentary secretary returns to the House he will undoubtedly want to deal with the matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is based upon the assumption that members of this House, individually and collectively, have a right to expect that the laws which we have enacted will be reasonably administered, according to the letter and the spirit, by the government and by administrative agencies which are responsible to parliament.

I have in my hand a publication which just came to me through the mail. It was issued by Unemployment Insurance Canada, Pacific Region, and is dated April 1974. On the second page of this document, in reference to the right of a claimant to receive benefits, it says that the obligations and rights—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. He claims to have a question of privilege. The hon. member claims his parliamentary privileges are affected in one way or another. I am not sure the hon. member is referring to a matter which happened within the last hour or so. If not, according to the rules he should have given the required notice. The hon. member cannot rise in the middle of a debate and propose that a matter be given priority over other business simply because he considers it to be a question of privilege. The hon. member should state as quickly as possible his question of privilege, and satisfy the Chair that this is a matter which just came to his attention, and about which he could not have given the notice required by the standing order.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, the document which I have came into my hand within the last hour. On that premise, I am raising it at the earliest possible moment. My question of privilege revolves around the fact that this document states a benefit may be denied if an employee was discharged for not conforming to company policy. I submit that is an affront to this House in as much as in any reasonable understanding I have of the law we enacted it is not the right of a company to determine whether a Canadian is eligible for unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELIGIOUS SECTS, EARNINGS FORMULA, BASIC EXEMPTIONS, ETC.

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-19, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, last evening I had the opportunity of commencing my intervention in this debate. The introduction was somewhat extended because of certain interjections from across the way. It was not my intention to be so controversial. Nevertheless, I will heed the interjection attributed to the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) and get to the bill.

We are discussing today a bill that will remove some of the inequities and inadequacies of the Canada Pension Plan. To the extent this objective is being attained, we welcome the bill.

The detailed notes on the bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan, attached to the news release announcing the introduction of Bill C-19 on April 5, 1974, state as one of its main provisions the equal treatment of male and female contributors and beneficiaries. I quote:

> The bill amends the present provisions of the Canada Pension Plan so the surviving spouses and children of a deceased or disabled female contributor will qualify for benefits under the same conditions as surviving spouses and children of a male contributor.

As the technique to achieve this change involves only the deletion of all references to "widowers" and the substitution of "survivor's pensions", it seems incomprehensible that this provision was not incorporated in the initial legislation. Perhaps the public demand was a contributing factor in the decision to make this essential and logical change.

● (1510)

The Royal Commission on the Status of Women was appointed in 1967, and its terms of reference were:

> To inquire into and report upon the status of women in Canada and to recommend what steps might be taken by the federal government to ensure for women equal opportunities with men in all aspects of Canadian society.

With respect to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan, two amendments were proposed by the commission. The first recommended an extension to the husband and children of a female contributor of the provisions presently applicable to the wife and children of a male contributor. In this connection I should like to refer to a document presented to the recent annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative party. On page 3 of that document, in section 19, the following appears:

> The Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women refers to the fact there are sex differences within the terms of reference of the Canada Pension Plan and recommends that they be removed. Although contributions are equal, regardless of sex or marital status, there are differences in the benefits derived from this source by the dependent or survivor. In this day of shared responsibilities the loss of the income of the female would create as great a hardship as would the loss of the income of the male. Survivor's benefits should be provided for both male and female contributors on a like basis.

The second proposed amendment recommended by the commission was that provision be made for the participation in these plans of the spouse remaining at home. On October 30, 1973, I believed I was voicing the views of many hon. members, some of whom had already so expressed themselves, when I stated, as reported on page 7373 of Hansard of that day:

> There is a general oversight in the Canada Pension Plan as it relates to housewives. I know I am not the first member to bring this matter to the attention of the House; others who have preceded me have done so. But I think it is a matter of real concern which should be taken under advisement and dealt with favourably.
> It would probably be more correct to say that the Canada Pension Plan does not relate to housewives, and this is why I say it is an oversight. I feel, and I am sure many in my party feel, that the government should devise some mechanism whereby housewives could contribute to the Canada Pension plan and benefit upon retirement or upon reaching retirement age. Of course, there is some question whether a housewife ever retires. In the event of the death of a husband, a housewife could then receive a more adequate income.

This has to do with the possibility of bringing housewives—other terms are used for them now in connection with this particular matter—within the scope of the plan. I should like again to refer to the background paper from which I have previously quoted:

The assumption that the female is always the spouse who remains at home to tend the "home fires" is not currently valid. Therefore, since the spouse who works at home does in fact contribute to the family support by providing goods and services which are invaluable to the family unit, Progressive Conservatives believe this person should share in the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan just as does the partner who is actually registered as being gainfully employed. Amendments will be made to the Canada Pension Plan to give effect to this policy.

I should like to refer in this connection also to the presentation made by the National Farmers Union in 1973 with reference to the position of farm wives. It deals with the same subject but looks at it from the point of view of the lady of the house in the agricultural industry. I will quote one brief section as follows:

Many farm women work as partners with their husbands in performing the duties of farming. The decision whether or not the farming unit wishes to pay an additional annual premium to provide a farm wife with future Canada Pension Plan benefits should be made optional. We request that the necessary amendments to the Canada Pension Plan be effected.

Now I should like to refer to the statement made by the minister in his discussion paper "Housewives and the Canada Pension Plan". I appreciated the view taken by the minister when he stated:

The housewife who remains at home is just as much a producer of goods and services as the paid worker, and in our view she should also have the opportunity to provide for a more financially secure future. Canada has given some of its workers an opportunity to do this through the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans. To neglect to do the same for some three and one half million other workers in the home is to ignore the essential nature of their work.

In my speech of last October 30, from which I quoted a few minutes ago, I stressed this important aspect. We certainly appreciate the fact that in acting on all these recommendations the government has seen fit to move forward. I believe the minister is sincerely convinced that this is a valid position to take. We appreciate what has been done.

I should also like to read the statement which appears at the bottom of page 2 of the document "Housewives and the Canada Pension Plan", to which I have referred. The minister stated:

For all these reasons, provision must be made for the participation of housewives in the Canada or the Quebec Pension Plan. A comprehensive study will be required to determined the best way of achieving this. Two approaches seem to have considerable merit:

(i) crediting to the spouse remaining at home a portion of the contributions of the employed spouse and those contributions made by the employer on the employed spouse's behalf, and

(ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker.

Each of these proposals has to be weighed to determine its relative advantages or disadvantages, but on the face of it it appears, as the minister says, that both have considerable merit. We on this side of the House are pleased to see the government prepared to adopt the measures we have been advocating, either in this bill or in future legislation. Whatever the pressures, and from whatever their source, this is another step in the direction of making this contributory and portable plan better able to meet the needs of Canadians today.

[Mr. Patterson.]

Another amending provision is that which provides for an escalation in the yearly maximum pensionable earnings by 12¼ per cent each year until they catch up to the industrial composite. The decision to make this amendment applicable for the years after 1975 perpetuates, in my view, a somewhat unjust situation. With inflation increasing at the rate of approximately 10 per cent per year, it seems to me that providing for at least full escalation at this time would be to the benefit of the workers of the country. The maximum benefits are meagre enough, without delaying the opportunity of contributing a higher premium to ensure more adequate benefits. The levels are $6,600 in 1974 and $7,400 in 1975, as outlined in Bill C-224 passed last session. I stated then, and I state again now, that those levels are not high enough for 1974 and 1975.

The proposed amendment which would reduce the qualifying level for contributions in any given year from 12 per cent to 10 per cent of the year's maximum pensionable earnings—it would, for 1975, reduce it from $800, as presently established, to $700—is very desirable, as is the intent to delete the present special requirement under which self-employed persons must earn at least 1⅓ of the year's basic earnings to qualify as contributors in any year.

It seems to me we must make an attempt to permit every working Canadian to participate in this plan regardless of income. To the extent that these changes will provide greater opportunity for people at lower income levels to participate in the Canada Pension Plan, and in particular increased numbers of fishermen, farmers and other self-employed persons, we commend the minister for his efforts.

The Canada Pension Plan is a contributory plan, and as such I have never felt the government had any right to penalize individuals for whatever they earn after they have retired from regular employment. I agree with those who feel we should encourage people to retire at the usual retirement age. However, life is difficult enough for people of that age without our complicating things more for them by imposing an extra hardship on them when they try to earn a little extra money to help make ends meet.

I am, therefore, pleased to see the proposal in this bill to drop the earnings test for those aged 65 and over. When I spoke on this subject in October I stated I would favour the complete elimination of the earnings test for pensioners aged 65 and over. I made references at that time to a number of letters I had received from pensioners in very difficult straits who were being penalized for earning more than $960 a year. I am sure these people are pleased to see the government has now come round to the point of making this very desirable change.

The last point I would like to make is one that has been made by members from this party on many occasions, and that is that the government should lower the age of retirement for guaranteed income supplement, old age security and Canada Pension Plan purposes to age 60, beginning with an immediate reduction to age 64 and with a yearly reduction thereafter to age 60. As I have said, this suggestion has been made many times previously, but we just want to remind the minister once again in the hope that he will give very close study and attention to this area. If he does I am sure he will receive the appreciation of a great many citizens of this country.

In conclusion, I commend the minister for the action that he has taken in this bill and assure him that he has my support for these measures. I urge him, however, to continue to heed the many requests from this side of the House, and from the people of Canada, regarding those other matters that will make the Canada Pension Plan more effective and responsive to the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak in this debate. I listened with interest during the question period when the House leader for the government party explained the absence of four senior economics ministers. When he came to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), he said that he had gotten a bill through the House this week so consequently had the day off. I presume that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is looking forward to a well deserved day off as soon as we get this bill through the House. There may, of course, be some other bill that he has in mind, and he may be looking to get two days off at once. If so, he can go down to Florida and watch the Dolphins in their spring training. In any case, I am glad the minister is here today and I hope he enjoys whatever time off the House leader gives him on completion of this bill.

The minister has brought forth a very complicated bill. On first reading it I was more perplexed than I was enlightened. One thing I noticed missing was the cost. I do not want to make this any part of the thrust of my speech, but when one buys things in this world one should know what they cost. I am willing to buy this bill, and I am pleased to buy it, but I should like to know what it costs as well. In all of the publicity I have seen and read—and believe me, Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of it in connection with this bill—I have seen no sign of increased contributions on the part of anyone.

There is a story going around the Hill, probably apocryphal, that when the minister introduced the increased family allowances he was asked by a reporter how much it would cost, and he replied that nobody had stopped to work it out.

I can hardly believe that that was the case, but in any event I did come across the cost of this Canada Pension Plan increase in an article by John G. Doherty of the Financial Times. In talking of pension costs he said that the costs assume a 4 per cent rate of inflation. He went on to say:

> The employer's contributions will have to be increased in three different ways. First of all, the company must raise its contributions to cover pension benefits currently being earned by its existing employees.
> Secondly, the employer must face the fact that his previous contributions for pension rights earned in the past by his current workers made no allowance for escalating benefits. Refunding for this will cost about $16 million.
> The employer must also refund another $5 million to cover the cost of increased benefits to existing pensioners.
> All together, the refunding will raise payroll costs by an additional 7.5 per cent a year if the refunding is amortized over 16 years. Thus, the total annual increase in payroll cost will rise by 11.8 per cent considering an assumed rise of only 4 per cent in the cost of living.

I put that on the record simply to balance things off, and to indicate to the people of Canada that they will not get anything for nothing in this world. The government may like to pretend that this money is coming out of its pockets, that it is simply being generous, but in truth it comes out of the recipients' pockets sooner or later. I think this should be part of an open government policy, and I would have increased my admiration for the minister and his staff had he seen fit to do this when he put out all the other publicity kits that heralded this bill.

I should now like to talk about the pensions of servicemen. Servicemen in the armed forces are required to pay into the Canadian Forces Superannuation Fund, from which they draw their pension. They also pay into the Canada Pension Plan which has been integrated with Canadian forces superannuation. I might say that this has created just about as much discussion and unhappiness in the forces as that other integration we sometimes hear about. In any case, the two pensions are now integrated. They are not, however, stacked.

When a serviceman draws his Canada Pension Plan benefit, if he does eventually qualify for it, his CFSA cheque is reduced by part of the amount of the CPP benefit. This is not generally known, and it does create a great deal of unhappiness among servicemen who are unable to see why part of their pension deduction goes to the Canada Pension Plan which is of little or no benefit to them.

Many servicemen suspect that the CFSA fund is very large and perhaps is being used to give body to the CPP fund. In any case, they see no reason or advantage in paying into the fund, from which they will not receive the same material benefit as other contributors. Government employees of all kinds have always wanted open disclosure of the state of their pension funds, but this disclosure seems extremely difficult to get.

Mr. Geoff Johnson pointed this out in an article the other day on disability pensions awarded under the Canada Pension Plan. He said:

> Suppose, as a former contributor to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account who is not yet 65, you are now receiving military superannuation.
> And suppose that you become entitled to a disability pension under the Canadian or Quebec Pension Plans.

● (1530)

> If you are entitled to a disability pension your annuity under the provisions of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act will be reduced accordingly.

Later in the article it was stated:

> The reduction takes effect from the date you received the disability pension—and the National Defence Headquarters suggests you let them know right away to "avoid an over-payment of your annuity which would have to be recovered."
> What kind of help is this to a disabled person?

Why give him the disability pension in the first place?

Why create all that bookkeeping to achieve precisely nothing?

Those are the kind of difficulties bureaucrats get themselves into when they attempt to look after every possible contingency.

I respectfully suggest that there are several anomalies in Bill C-19 which may cause just as much trouble indeed as exists under the act.

I will not bother you with all the details of the case I have before me, but a constituent of mine who wrote me found that when he was on superannuation, having been employed by HMC Dockyard and retired, and he eventually came to get the Canada Pension Plan they immediately started deducting $18.49 a month from his superannuation pension. It is extremely difficult for these people to understand this bureaucratic jungle talk that goes on in letters of explanation sent back to them. I would only ask you to bear in mind that this is just one sentence from a letter which was supposed to solve this man's predicament. The letter states:

When the Canada Pension Plan came into effect on January 1, 1966, it was decided that in order to avoid increasing the pension deductions of persons required to contribute under the Public Service Superannuation Act, the amount which a public servant would be required to contribute to the Superannuation Account would be reduced by the amount required under the Canada Pension Plan.

That is all one sentence, and if anybody has the heart to go on to the second sentence I would be glad to show them the letter afterwards. The recipient did not understand anything about it, nor did I, and of course we had to ask for further clarification.

I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, to which I assume this bill will be referred, but I should hope that committee will approach it in the same fashion as another committee approached the election expenses bill, that is, in a non-partisan way. Many hon. members of that committee contributed a lot in the way of amendments to the bill, of which over 50 were accepted. In fact it was a learning experience for members of that committee.

Let me look specifically at Bill C-19. I think one of the most startling things to read is found on page 1 in the recommendation of His Excellency The Governor General which states that one of the aims of this bill is:

—to provide, in the manner prescribed for equality of status for males and females under the Act—

I will have quite a bit to say about that a little bit later.

On page 4, in Clause 7, we find reference to the election of a contributor in respect of self-employed earnings, and if you read further you see that there is reference to contributions of individuals who are members of a religious sect. They can elect not to make contributions, and this is on a once in a lifetime basis. I see no reference to a minimum age at which they will be allowed to excuse themselves, and I hope that the committee will see fit to change this by an amendment designating a specific minimum age because anyone who excuses himself under that election may decide years later he wants to come back in and will be forbidden to do so by the provisions of this bill as it now stands.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

This is a very complex bill, so much so that I am sure the parliamentary secretary when he speaks later will want to clarify it.

On page 8 in Clause 10 we find reference to the amount of the maximum pensionable earnings. I can only say that I am very much in agreement with this, but I should like to speak about this matter as it relates to disability pensions referred to on page 12. In the proposed new Section 18 it does not clearly preclude an integrated act such as the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. If an individual is receiving a disability pension from the forces, and these two acts are integrated, I am curious to know whether the disability pension referred to in this bill is a service disability pension or a Canada Pension Plan disability pension. I think that should be clearly defined before this becomes the law of the land.

We note reference at page 25 to the effect that a surviving spouse under age 65 gets 37½ per cent plus, and over 65 gets 60 per cent of the pension contributed to on the death of his or her spouse. I suggest that anyone who thinks it only costs a husband of a household 40 per cent of his financial budget to run that household has no appreciation of what it costs. I think a housewife would need more than 60 per cent of her husband's pension in order to survive as a widow, and I suggest that 75 per cent would be a much more reasonable figure.

At page 33 there seems to be a clear contradiction in the explanatory notes in that part which reads:

The repeal of section 69 would remove the restriction in the amount of retirement pension that may be received by persons between 65 and 70 years of age while they are in receipt of employment earnings.

I suggest that one becomes confused when one reads at page 33, Clause 35, which starts out by saying "Sections 68 and 69 . . . are repealed." Down at the bottom of the page we get figures and a statement to the effect that a person's pension will be reduced by 50 cents for each dollar which his employment earnings, for the months in the effective period in 1974 after the pension has become payable, but before the individual reaches 70 years of age, exceed that proportion of 12 times $95 that the number of months is of 12. I read this over several times, and eventually came to the conclusion that the government, when it talks in this bill about the effective period in 1974, is really referring to the ineffective period. That is the impression I got, that the effective period in 1974 is that period before this bill becomes an act and before the new amendment becomes law. Certainly that should be referred to as the ineffective period to clear up some of the obvious confusion.

Let me conclude these remarks by referring to page 22 again. I would express my unhappiness about the fact that this bill pretends that women are to get fair treatment under the Canada Pension Plan. The explanatory notes on the righthand page of this bill appear to have been written by a public relations officer rather than the minister, with his fine legal mind. We get a great buildup when we read these explanatory notes at page 22, particularly that statement which reads as follows:

This amendment would provide for equality of status for males and females under the Act.

That is rubbish and irony of the worst sort. The irony is, of course, that the bill provides for money to be paid to the man. How wrong can you be when you pretend to treat females equally. You are giving them the big break in that you are paying money to a man who outlives them. That is ridiculous. I could quote from several press clippings to indicate that the press has been mislead about this clause of the bill. We find in the Toronto Star this heading, "Women to get same benefits as men". Then if we read Clause 25 we find this stated:

(d) a survivor's pension shall be paid to the surviving spouse, as determined pursuant to section 63—

If a woman dies, and if she was the head of the household at the time of death, the surviving spouse with dependent children will get some of the benefits that she has earned. Apparently that is the only concession made to women in this whole bill.

● (1540)

I would like to point out that in clause 25(2)(d)(ii) we have three paragraphs, (A), (B) and (C). This is totally confusing. It says that if the surviving spouse has reached 65 years of age:

(A) had at the time of the death of the contributor reached 35 years of age,
(B) was at the time of the death of the contributor a surviving spouse with dependent children, or
(C) is disabled;

My question is does the "or" at the end of paragraph (B) mean that one must have (A) plus (B) on the one hand, or (C) on the other, or does one have the choice of (A), (B) or (C). Surely the minister's writers could have come up with something which would not lead to such confusion.

It confused the Toronto Star which in a headline states, "Women to get same benefits as men". Then the Montreal Star in an article said:

The second—

Referring to changes.

—designed to remove sex discrimination, will turn widows' pensions into survivors' pensions. That means that a husband whose wife has contributed to the plan at her job can collect benefits if she dies.

Mr. Speaker, what would give a fair deal to women would be if the housewife were allowed to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. This may have been what the minister hoped to receive credit for, while clearly avoiding giving this concession. I agree with the press release which came out today by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women which states, on page two, that they seek recognition of marriage as an economic unit as well as a social partnership. They recommend that during marriage 50 per cent of Canada Pension Plan contributions made by either husband or wife should be credited toward the pension buildup of the other spouse, whether or not the other spouse is in the paid labour market.

To me that would seem to represent justice. I believe this should be incorporated in legislation at the earliest possible time. This childishness of wondering whether to call a wife a house-spouse or house person, or contributor or survivor, possibly is a way to bring about discussion while the minister tries to get out of assuming responsibility. After slamming the minister for coming up with these words, if I may I should like to suggest that we could call the wife "counsel in the house" because counsel are well paid.

Believe me, wives are worth a lot more than this bill gives them. They have a right to be considered as full-fledged Canadian citizens. This legislation does not give that to them. The legislation does give them the knowledge that if they should die their husbands may be able to receive some monetary reward for having been married to them. I think this bill is an insult to womanhood.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude. I intend to vote for the bill. I hope the changes I have recommended will be accepted during the committee stage. I hope the minister gets this bill through fairly early and enjoys his day off.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate on a bill which is good and sound because, in essence, it endeavours to keep pace with changes in our society and the values held by Canadians. I was a little amused by the remarks made today at a certain point by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson), who seemed to claim fatherhood for the measures contained in this bill. I was amused, because we all remember what happened last summer in respect of the measure contained in this bill which would allow individual members of religious sects to be excluded from the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan in certain cases.

At that time another member of the same party took great exception to the measure. I refer to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Until I receive notice to the contrary I assume that both the hon. member for Fraser Valley East and the hon. member for Crowfoot belong to the same party.

I find it difficult to understand how one member can claim fatherhood for the measures in this bill while another member of the same party was opposed to them at the time they came before us last. Be that as it may, the Canada Pension Plan came under unwarranted criticism last December by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

In a letter to the Toronto Star the Canadian Federation of Independent Business mounted an attack on the CPP stating, among other things, that in less than ten years there will be no money in the fund to provide benefits for all those Canadians working at that time. This is not so. The report that was tabled in this House by the chief actuary of the Department of Insurance in 1973 paints quite a different picture in respect of the Canada Pension Plan fund over the next decade. It indicates that if the present Canada Pension Plan contributions rates are maintained, the size of the Canada Pension Plan, far from disappearing as stated by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, will in fact increase from $6.6 billion to $20.3 billion by 1984.

Also the cost of the substantial Canada Pension Plan benefit improvements that were recently introduced by the government, and which came into effect on January 1 this year will be matched by increased revenues and contributions.

Finally, I find it worthwhile noting in connection with this fund, which is perhaps the envy of any other pension plan in the world for its help and substantial content, that approximately up to 70 per cent of Canada Pension Plan benefits and administrative costs for the next decade are expected to be financed by the interest revenues accruing to the Canada Pension Plan fund. I have here figures that apply to the year 1974. The revenue from contributions is $1,074,000,000. The revenue from interest is $479 million, and the expenditures, the combined cost of benefits and administrative expenses, amounted to $437 million. This demonstrates the fact that revenue from interest at this point in time at least is greater than the cost of benefits and administrative expenses. I would say that represents pretty good management.

There are in this bill a number of very fine amendments which reflect a sense of fairness and social justice which the plan continually wishes to pursue. In addition to the examples that were given last night by the minister and other speakers, I should like to add a few which are worth putting on the record.

● (1550)

For instance the act provides now that when recipients of disability pensions reach age 65, payments of their disability pensions cease and they start receiving retirement pensions. It was originally intended that this change would occur the month after the beneficiary reached age 65, but through a quirk in the wording of the act the change is presently delayed by one month. One of the amendments proposed in this bill would remove this anomaly.

Similarly, there is a one month lag under existing law for the commencement of payment of widows or survivor's pension to a woman upon her reaching age 65. An amendment in the bill will correct this flaw. The same applies in the case of disability pension when that pension comes to a conclusion and the retirement pension takes over.

Another example is that the act now provides that wages earned by a contributor before his death, but paid after his death, cannot be taken into account for purposes of the Canada Pension Plan. An amendment is put forward to delete certain words in a section of the act which will remove this anomaly, taking effect as of January 1, 1975.

Another example is that the act now provides that the earnings of a self-employed person in the year of his death must be prorated whereas those of an employee are not. That means that if a self-employed contributor dies in the month of January, he could only be credited with one-twelfth of his actual earnings in January. The amendment removes this distinction and treats the self-employed person on the same basis as the employee contributor. This action will take place on January 1, 1975.

Another change deals with a contributor who holds two jobs simultaneously and who may expect to be assigned to two different year basic exemptions and may not have contributed on his total eligible earnings. The act allows such a person to elect to contribute on any such extra earnings. The amendments contained in the bill would clarify the wording of the section and extend the time limit for such election, and allow for an election by a representative of an incapacitated or deceased contributor.

It is a good step that the bill provides, in the case of a self-employed person who is not required to remit income tax by instalments, that he not be required to remit the contribution to the Canada Pension Plan on an instalment basis.

There is another anomaly in the present act which prevents contributors from securing maximum disability pensions, although this is a minor loss in income. Nevertheless the contributor is required by the act to make contributions for a month in which he is not allowed to make a contribution. One of the amendments contained in the bill will remove this anomaly and pave the way for the payment of a maximum disability pension.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, relates to the fact that under the present legislation a survivor benefit which becomes payable in the month of January cannot be escalated in accordance with the cost of living index of the previous year. However, a survivor's benefit which becomes payable in December can be so escaled. In order to correct this anomalous situation in which the earlier pension is higher than the pension starting a month later, an amendment is proposed. It will apply the escalation factor to the pension payable in the month of January.

Another worth-while measure relates to a provision in the act that the required application for any Canada Pension Plan benefit can be made on behalf of an incapacitated contributor. In order to carry this principle to its ultimate conclusion, there are amendments in this bill that will allow appeals to be made on behalf of an incapacitated person at any three of the appeal levels.

Another example worth mentioning relates to the fact that at the present time the act allows for the denial of Canada Pension Plan benefits to persons who do not have a social insurance number. Among other things the bill proposes to remove this kind of penalty, and both ministers who are responsible for SINs will be authorized, along lines similar to those in the legislation governing old age security, to assign social insurance numbers to contributors and beneficiaries. We hope this particular amendment will be of some comfort, though perhaps limited, to the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) who has been struggling with a problem of one of his constituents regarding a social insurance number.

Like all those who have spoken before me, I support the changes contained in this bill and hope that there will be more to come in order to keep pace with the changing thinking in our society, with the changing expectations and attitudes toward work and retirement of Canadians.

Those who have spoken before me have already made the point about the desirability of changing the Canada Pension Plan in future so as to permit volunteer contributions by people who are not employed or self-employed but who do perform a valuable function in society without following a regular work pattern.

In the mail today we received a press release from the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. I should like to read a passage relating to the Canada Pension Plan which appears on page 2:

> Recognition of marriage as an economic unit as well as a social partnership is a thrust of the proposal that during marriage 50 per cent of Canada Pension Plan contributions made by either husband or wife should be credited toward the pension build-up of the other spouse, whether or not the other spouse is in the paid labour market.

There is already an awareness in the country that makes it quite clear that a change of this nature would not only be well received but would also reflect both a fact of life in our country and a desire that has been expressed in so many quarters.

● (1600)

Another change which will be most desirable in future is one affecting recipients of workmen's compensation benefits and pensions. These are paid usually to injured workmen or to women who, because of injury, must leave the labour force, sometimes for months or years. Consequently they cannot contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. It would be most desirable if we could treat workmen's Compensation payments as earnings, for purposes of contributing to the Canada Pension Plan. Such measure would be well received and would meet the aspirations and wishes of people, as expressed over the years.

May I suggest another measure which might be brought forward in future. It could be before this House in one year or so. It has to do with reducing the five-year period of contributions which is necessary before one can qualify for a disability pension. Some people who have been involved in accidents or who suffer from progressive diseases but who, nevertheless, have contributed for a few years, find that they have not contributed long enough to the Canada Pension Plan to qualify for a disability pension.

Instead of forcing them to turn to local or provincial welfare, under the Canada Assistance Plan it would be helpful if we could give them access to some form of disability pension, even if that pension is not as large as it would be for those who have met the five-year contribution criterion. At least they would receive the pension. This would help them. Definitely the fund is in such a healthy state that reducing the five-year contribution period to some lesser period would not affect seriously the level of moneys which have been built up in it over the years.

As I have said previously when answering criticisms, the fund is in an extremely healthy condition. If I understand actuarial studies correctly, it will be possible to support expenditures and administrative expenses with revenue from interest up until 1976. Between 1976 and 1984 revenue from interest alone will be high enough to subsidize 50 per cent, if not more, of expenses. So, the fund is in an extremely healthy condition.

Another desirable measure is suggested in the report issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare entitled, "Canada Pension Plan 1973". Page 9 deals in part with international agreements and reads:

> On a wider scale, an exploratory three-day meeting was held in July, 1972 with officials of the United States Government to discuss problems related to the introduction of a general reciprocal agreement on social security. A similar meeting was held in September with United Kingdom officials for the same general purpose. In addition, the Government of Italy has expressed interest in negotiating a reciprocal agreement on social security. A meeting was held with Italian officials about a year ago and a further meeting is scheduled for the end of May to be attended by interested officials from both countries. In all three cases, National Revenue was involved from the point of view of coverage and contributions.

There is definitely great potential for international agreements with other countries which will permit the payment of Canada Pension Plan benefits to immigrants. Such agreements will take into account total payments of various kinds made to various plans by the immigrant before arriving or settling in Canada. I urge the government to consider such measure. I am sure that such agreements will come about.

Looking to the future, I support the position taken last night eloquently by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He pleaded for a reduction in retirement age. We made great progress when we reduced the age of retirement from 70 to 65. Perhaps the time is ripe for us to give Canadians further options, that is, permit them to retire at an age of their choice. Of course their income from the Canada Pension Plan would be commensurate with their years of contribution and the age of retirement.

Instead of stressing the reduction of retirement age to age 60 it would make better sense, I suggest, if the government gave consideration to a system under which retirement might take place at any age. Of course, the earlier the retirement age, the smaller would be the payment. As I said, the fund is doing well, and will continue to do well for a number of years. It might do even better if we could determine the degree to which Canadians might wish to make larger contributions to the fund.

That brings me to my final point. Under the Canada Pension Plan there is an advisory committee. It is a good institution. It produces good ideas and gives the government an indication how the plan is functioning, what are its weaknesses, how it can be improved and what changes should be introduced from time to time. I see great merit in that institution.

I suggest that the government should consider seriously extending the system of consultation carried on through such advisory committees. It should do this on a broader basis, and consult Canadians regularly. For instance, the government could determine what Canadians think of the plan and how much they would be willing to pay into the fund, to achieve those very things which have been proposed in this debate, among which is earlier retirement.

Methods similar to those used at present could be used. For instance, when people get their monthly Old Age Security or Family Allowance cheques, they often find in the envelope excellent printed material which deals with nutrition or other messages the government wishes to communicate. By similar means the people could be asked at regular intervals what they think the Canada Pension Plan should offer in addition to what it is offering, and how much more they are willing to pay to achieve certain goals. Questionnaires might be sent to recipients of Old Age Security and Family Allowances.

I appreciate that the sample obtained would be very small and far from perfect. Nevertheless, it would be a way of assessing those in receipt of a substantial social security measure as to their views about the Canada Pension Plan, to consult them, and put to them the cost of improvements, as well as asking whether they would support the idea of greater contributions than are made at present. By so doing the government and politicians would be in a better position to guage the will of Canadians as to what the future of the Canada Pension Plan ought to be.

We could determine whether there is the support we seem to sense, but for which we do not have any tangible proof, with regard to retirement earlier than age 65. It would also determine whether there is a willingness on the part of Canadians to make more substantial contributions to the fund which would in turn permit the fund to pay more substantial pensions and make them available at an earlier age.

The Canada Pension Plan is a very fascinating scheme of social security which reinforces the democratic structure of this country. It certainly reinforces the federal-provincial fibre of this nation. As members know, excess moneys in the fund are invested in provincial securities with a term of maturity of 20 years.

Since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan I understand that substantial funds have been invested in this way. In 1972-73 these excess moneys amounted to $971 million, which were invested in securities of the provinces and Crown agencies. From the inception of the plan up until March 31 of last year the total investment amounted to no less than $5½ billion, no small sum. It is definitely a source of capital that comes in very handy for the provinces for their own public works and other measures that serve the needs of Canadians in each province of this country.

Apart from the aspect of strengthening the fibre of confederation, there is a potential element in the Canada Pension Plan which is promising and exciting. If we could look beyond the scope of the advisory committee and consult Canadians from coast to coast as to their willingness to continue to respond at the present or lower levels, or hopefully at higher levels in order to make available retirement or disability pensions at a greater rate than at present, that would reflect their willingness and readiness to make these contributions available. By doing it in that way we could truly put into effect a fine concept of democracy, something which I suppose was in the minds of those who originally designed this very fine plan.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-19 to amend the Canada Pension Plan. During the debate on Bill C-224 we indicated our support for that particular amendment. On this occasion we have also indicated our support for some restriction of the debate so that this bill can have quick passage.

During the last debate we encouraged the minister to take action in many areas where we felt there was discrimination and hardships. At that time I made a personal appeal to the minister to outline in more detail his philosophy regarding the Canada Pension Plan and, in particular, its relationship to the orange paper on social security.

It is true the minister has acted on many of the recommendations we suggested in the last session, but I find it particularly disturbing that he has not responded to the more important and fundamental issue of providing the details that I believe must be available to ensure the intelligent public debate that he purports to be necessary for developing a total security strategy.

[Mr. Caccia.]

Following the federal-provincial conference on February 19 and 20 of this year there were numerous communiques and press releases which indicated a consensus on many of the issues we proposed in the past, including the very important issue of equality. However, it was readily apparent from the releases that the federal government had not addressed itself to the principle of equal rights for women.

They also announced that this major issue relating to women, particularly in those areas of family farms or small businesses, or indeed at home as housewives, should be studied further and referred to the Canada Pension Plan advisory committee and to the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. I would refer to this as a typical example of the shuffle-the-problem type of game.

Earlier this year June Menzies, the vice-chairman of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, presented a discussion paper entitled The Canada Pension Plan and Women. Actually it was presented in January of this year. Surely we are not to believe that the Canada Pension Plan advisory committee has been sitting by idly ignoring these issues and not reporting directly to the minister.

The problem that bothers me most, and I feel it is a real insult to the intelligence of this House, is that in his opening remarks yesterday the minister made reference to the discussion paper on housewives and the Canada Pension Plan, which was presented to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on April 4. I plan to make some detailed reference to that later.

To summarize, the government and the minister presented to this House the orange paper on social security, of which the Canada Pension Plan is a very vital component. We are presented with ad hoc amendments which I admit add substantially to the existing legislation. However, we have not had access to detailed information from the department, and we have not had the positive statements required of the minister in the proper forum to discuss in detail the total social security program, particularly as it relates to the Canada Pension Plan. Rather, we have been confronted by a smokescreen, first in the presentation of an inadequately detailed orange paper and now with an ill-prepared paper discussing housewives and the Canada Pension Plan. As I already indicated I will be making some comments about that particular discussion paper a little later.

At the outset I referred to several matters which my party supported in the past and which are now included in this bill. They correct some of the vast injustices of the program. As has been done by other members, I wish to congratulate the minister for bringing in these changes. The main purpose of this bill is to ensure that benefits are paid to survivors of female contributors on an equal basis with survivors of male contributors. We have long recognized this discriminatory feature against female contributors, and have repeatedly requested these changes over the last few years. It is also important to note the provinces have requested similar changes in the past, notably at the most recent federal-provincial conference. In effect the amounts of the benefits paid on application will depend on the same age, health and dependent children qualifications as now apply to widows.

The repeal of the disincentive to work between ages of 65 and 70 has long been recommended by many organizations, including the Advisory Committee of the Canada Pension Plan.

The statistics related to low income indicate that when the head of the household is between the ages of 65 to 69, the incidence of low income is 26.7 per cent; when he is 70 years of age or older, 29.1 per cent. The low income incidence among unattached individuals in the same age categories is of 50 per cent and 65.5 per cent.

With such a high incidence of low incomes among the aged, and with the difficulties our senior citizens have experienced in living with rampant inflation and a spiralling cost of living, I find it difficult to comprehend why this disincentive was originally introduced into the plan.

The completion of adjusting the years maximum pensionable earnings is an additional feature of the bill, along with a new formula for determining the year's basic exemption. Again these proposals are in keeping with the recommendations of the federal-provincial conference. I must add, however, that this is a further example of inadequate information being disseminated to the public. I have been contacted by several small businesses and labour groups who do not comprehend the impact these proposed changes will have on their businesses, many of them marginal in operation, or on the take home pay of those working in such businesses. Surely the minister can supply such data so that the individuals concerned may fully understand the impact of the changes.

The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) made reference to Bill C-190 when he spoke a few moments ago. May I simply say I was personally pleased to see the amendments proposed in Bill C-190 during the last session included in the present bill. The presentation made by the Old Order of Amish and Mennonites to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Services was for me a moving experience. Their belief that their own religious community, not the government or any outside insurance plan, should carry the responsibilities for the welfare and support of its members is a refreshing testimony to the community spirit. Their contribution to the surrounding community, their fellow man, and to the international community is an example all Canadians could seek to emulate.

Several technical changes have been introduced. They include provisions to improve the appeal system, provisions for self-employed to remit CPP contributions on an instalment basis, changes more in keeping with present divorce laws, provision for payment of disabled contributors, child benefits for natural or legally adopted children acquired by pensioners after the onset of disability, provision for the write-off of certain debts, relaxation of the four year limit on employee corrections to records of earnings, and the repeal of the prohibition which prevents persons who do not have a social insurance number from receiving CPP benefits.

A major problem which has not been adequately covered is one related to the delay in processing applications made not only on retirement but in particular by those applying for permanent disability pensions. In addition, since the program is convenient for many employees, consideration should be given to allowing them to invest money towards their retirement above the present legal limits, if they so desire.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the fundamental issue I raised in the House on October 30, 1973, and referred to in my opening comments today. What role does the CPP play in the entire social security strategy? The Annual Report on Health and Welfare for 1972-73, referring to the Canada Pension Plan implies we are dealing with a social insurance plan:

> The Canada Pension Plan was established by act of Parliament which received Royal Assent on April 3, 1965, and was proclaimed in force on May 5 of the same year. The plan is designed to be entirely self-supporting; all benefits and administrative costs are financed from contributions of employees, employers and self-employed persons, together with the interest earned from the investment of funds.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt the impression conveyed to the Canadian public is that this is a social insurance program. It must be re-emphasized that the Canada Pension Plan was introduced as a contributory social insurance program for members of the Canadian labour force, with three basic objectives:

1. To guarantee an income-related pension to every member of the labour force.

2. To provide basic social insurance to each labour force member and dependents in the event of death or total disability.

3. To provide a source of capital to the provinces.

We have established a program which is complex and poorly understood by the Canadian people. The government and the minister have convinced the majority of Canadians that the Canada Pension Plan is a pure social insurance program when in reality it contains many non-earnings-related benefits, giving it many features consistent with a welfare program.

We have a government which talks of a social security strategy, which makes ad hoc amendments to existing legislation, which distracts us with working papers, but which refuses to define the role of the CPP within the context of an over-all income security policy.

Let me give an illustration from my speech last year. When the guaranteed income supplement payments began in 1967, the year in which the Canada Pension Plan commenced, the Guaranteed Income Supplement was initially intended as a temporary program to be phased out when the CPP matured in 1967.

● (1630)

In the 1970 white paper on income security the government proposed to establish the guaranteed income supplement as a permanent program, to continue universal old age security payments, and to amend the Canada Pension Plan. The proposed CPP amendments were to eliminate two problems as defined by the white paper: first, gaps remaining in the income security system, particularly for widows and disabled people; secondly, CPP contributions and benefits had not kept pace with the growth in average Canadian wages. The suggested changes in the CPP amendments were to increase substantially widows and disability benefits, and to increase retirement benefits through selective increases in the earnings ceilings. These changes obviously emphasized the welfare aspects of the plan.

By design we have a government that discusses the development of a social insurance strategy in which the CPP has received top priority. The government has given the impression that this is a form of pure social insurance and refuses to define, or what is more likely cannot define, the role of the Canada Pension Plan in our fragmented social security system. In effect we have a plan which has features of social insurance, therefore not requiring internal subsidies. In addition, we have a plan which has welfare features, including subsidies paid by the taxpayers, similar to other income support programs. And, what is most tragic, these subsidies in many instances are paid to those with the least need rather than to that large segment living in or near poverty.

At the outset I indicated that I wanted to spend some time discussing what I feel to be a most important document, and that is the discussion paper on housewives and the Canada Pension Plan which was introduced to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on April 4, 1974. I have some comments I wish to make about this, but to comment properly, Mr. Speaker, and with complete understanding, I should like to quote from the discussion paper and then make some observations following that.

The introduction to this paper on housewives and the Canada Pension Plan is as follows:

> This is a time of reappraisal concerning the position of women in society and in the home. Certain traditional assumptions and values are being questioned and changed. This relates both to the increasing participation of women in the economic work force of the nation, and to changing attitudes concerning the position of women within the fundamental unit of Canadian society—the family.
> This basic reappraisal bears upon the Canada Pension Plan in two main respects: (1) certain provisions within the plan accord different treatment to male and female contributors and beneficiaries, and this has been questioned; (2) views have been expressed that housewives who remain at home, and do not draw salaries as members of the working force, should be enabled to participate in the Canada Pension Plan.
> Action is now underway with respect to the first issue. The government of Canada, with the full agreement of all provincial governments, is placing legislation before the 1974 session of parliament to establish full equality of treatment for male and female contributors and beneficiaries.
> The second issue was discussed by the federal and provincial welfare ministers at a meeting in Edmonton in February, 1974, as a part of their review of the social security system. All governments recognized that there were complex difficulties associated with the implementation of this objective. The ministers agreed, however, that the various possible approaches to meeting this objective should be given serious study. The issues involved need to be examined not only by governments, but by the public at large. This paper has been prepared, therefore, in the hope that it will provoke wider public discussion of the issues, and that from this discussion the best answers may emerge.
> It should be noted that while this paper speaks of the "housewife", since it is most frequently the woman who remains at home to look after the interests of the family unit, the same principles, of course, apply also in cases when men remain at home for this purpose. However, the term "housewife" was used in preference to the more general but less appealing term "housespouse".

This is the issue as defined in this paper:

> The central features of the issue, the considerations involved, and the practical range of options for the future were set forth clearly by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. In the words of the Commission:
>
> "With rare exceptions, the woman who stays at home depends on her husband for money. While she may receive a family allowance cheque, the money is spent on the cost of keeping a child and cannot be regarded as payment for its care. Unfortunately we have no over-all solution for the financial dependency of housewives. But there is one area in which steps could be taken to give them some financial independence at least in their later years. Housewives should be entitled to pensions in their own right under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.
> "The housewife who remains at home is just as much a producer of goods and services as the paid worker, and in our view she should also have the opportunity to provide for a more financially secure future. Canada has given some of its workers an opportunity to do this through the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans. To neglect to do the same for some three and one-half million other workers in the home is to ignore the essential nature of their work.
> "The Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans do not entirely ignore housewives since they provide for a pension for a widow of a contributor. In other words, these plans recognize that a widow should benefit from her husband's contributions.
> "This is in keeping with the concept of marriage as a partnership. But in recognizing only the rights of a widow to a pension on the basis of her husband's contributions, the plans go only part way. For example, in the case of a marriage breakdown, the former wife loses all claim to a widow's pension. This can cause hardship when the breakdown occurs late in life and the wife has had insufficient time to build up a reasonable pension through her own paid work. A second wife may reap the benefits of the contributions made by the husband during his first marriage.
> "Even if a divorced or separated woman enters paid employment, the pension she earns may be adversely affected by the years she spent in the home as a housewife. Pensions are related to earnings and her earnings prior to, during and after marriage are averaged over the number of years she could have been employed, and this includes the time that she remained in the home. While some provision is made for reducing the number of years to be averaged, there will be cases in which a divorced or separated woman will be unable to work a sufficient number of years to make up for a non-earning period as a housewife.
> "For all of these reasons provision must be made for the participation of housewives in the Canada or the Quebec Pension Plan. A comprehensive study will be required to determine the best way of achieving this . . . However, two approaches seem to us to have considerable merit . . .
> "(i) crediting to the spouse remaining at home a portion of the contributions of the employed spouse and those contributions made by the employer on the employed spouse's behalf, and
> (ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker."

This document in many ways, I feel, is a perfect camouflage of the government's inability to ensure women's full participation as contributors to, and recipients of benefits from, the CPP. As I indicated earlier, as with the orange paper we have been presented with little information to promote intelligent debate.

Under the present plan, which I indicated earlier was subsidized by the government in many instances, will the minister be prepared to subsidize a rich 64 year old housewife who can contribute to the Canada Pension Plan rather than utilize that subsidy to assist the poor 64 year old housewife who cannot contribute to the Canada Pension Plan? Would he subsidize a 64 year old housewife under the CPP and ignore one who is 84 years of age?

There is no intelligent way of discussing this document or this paper without presenting dollar amounts involved per person. When we are being asked to make a choice, on a personal basis or otherwise, in respect of any financial matter or, in this instance, when government spending is involved, we must ask for two important sets of figures: first the dollars you will pay and, secondly, the dollars you will get back. Let me turn as an example to the bottom of page 4, and I should like to quote from this page which deals with mandatory alternatives. It states:

> This approach would certainly give recognition to work in the home as regular employment, and would provide a measure of financial independence to the housewife. However, it seems unlikely that most Canadians would find this to be a satisfactory alternative. It is necessary to ask how many Canadian families would consider it acceptable for the government to intervene in this way in the financial arrangements made between husband and wife? Also, how many families would consider it acceptable to be required to make additional Pension Plan contributions from the same level of family income?

I would simply suggest in respect of such a question that Canadians cannot make an honest appraisal, in order to give an honest answer to that kind of question, without a knowledge as to the dollars in and dollars out to which I referred previously.

The crux of the issue in this document relates to the second point on page 2. I quoted this before but I want to come back to it. It states:

> "(ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker."

The housewife very frequently wants to be included under the Canada Pension Plan at the same contribution rates and with the same benefit rate as any other Canadian, whether it be her husband, a career woman or someone else. I suggest that this working paper makes no attempt to address itself to this problem but simply waffles by summarizing five points at page 10, proposing these as an answer to the problem in respect of equal rights as between men and women. Let me quote this, Mr. Speaker:

> The most important considerations, however, are issues involving basic social equity, and the future operation of the Canada Pension Plan, and private insurance and pension plans. These issues may be summarized as follows:
> 1. If housewives are allowed to participate in the Canada Pension Plan on a voluntary basis, this option would tend to favour wives in families having the willingness and financial ability to participate. Wives in lower income families would have an extremely limited capacity to take advantage of such an opportunity.
> 2. Can the needs of wives at home be considered separate and apart from those of other individuals who undergo long periods of no earnings because of unemployment, ill health, extended education, and other reasons?
> 3. If housewives with earnings are permitted to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan on a voluntary basis, should any provision for voluntary participation be extended to housewives with part-time earnings, and other part-time and low income workers?
> 4. If an opportunity were extended to some or all wage earners to supplement their Canada Pension Plan coverage on a voluntary basis, a situation would be created whereby wage earners could transfer their coverage under private pension plans to the Canada Pension Plan. The differences in funding arrangements between the Canada Pension Plan and private plans would provide a substantial incentive for many to make such transfers. If this were done on a large scale, it could seriously undermine the position of private pension plans.
> 5. Actuarial reports which the government has tabled in Parliament from time to time indicate that the financial provisions of the Canada Pension Plan will have to be reviewed at some future date. If such a future review should lead to an increase in contribution rates, would volunteer participants be allowed to reduce or withdraw their participation? If this were permitted, the increased costs of the pensions credits, accumulated by the volunteer participants would be passed on to the participants who are required to contribute to the Plan on a compulsory basis. The equity of such an arrangement could be the subject of serious criticism if the bulk of volunteer participants came from higher income families, and if large numbers of compulsory participants were comprised of low wage earners. These consequences could be avoided if volunteer participants, once allowed to participate, were required to maintain their participation; or, if allowed to reduce or withdraw their participation, were required to accept a reduction in the value of their accumulated pension credits. Such alternatives, however, would likely be considered as acts of bad faith on the part of the government.

As I suggested previously, if the minister is truly interested in resolving this critical issue of equal rights for men and women involved with the Canada Pension Plan, he could help by presenting simple dollar examples and illustrations for various individuals or people involved.

Referring again to page 8 of this paper let me quote from paragraph (b) which states:

> The family could be allowed to assign a dollar value to work in the home (perhaps within some prescribed limits), which would be over and above to wages earned by the husband, and contributions could be made in the name of the housewife based on this amount. This would permit the housewife to build up her own pension credits without any decrease in the family unit's basic protection. However, it would also mean that the family would have to pay additional contributions to the Plan out of the same level of income.

I should like to emphasize again that this is another example of why the Canadian family could not make a valued judgment of such a statement without a dollar presentation, or a proper analysis in respect of a particular family. I strongly urge the minister to present such figures to the House, or to the standing committee, so that an appropriate analysis can be made.

I am deeply concerned about a basic point that has not been discussed in this particular working paper to which I have been referring. If we consider the pensions payable to retired married couples and those payable to a retired person living alone, whether he be single, divorced, a widow or a widower, using as an example old age security, we find that a couple will get exactly twice the amount a single person receives; and if we look at the guaranteed income supplement we find that a couple receives almost twice the amount a single person receives. The minister stated to the House and to the standing committee that the general pattern around the world in respect of government pensions would indicate that a couple receives almost twice the pension received by a single person. That being so, surely a couple should receive under the Canada Pension Plan an amount exactly double that received by a single person?

If this logic is good, then surely splitting the Canada Pension Plan credits, as one of the alternatives suggested, would be at odds with the existing plan and would be of no value? Therefore, only by bringing in housewives with the same contribution rates and the same benefit rates as workers will we achieve this particular end.

The hon. member from British Columbia who spoke earlier referred to the policy paper on women presented to our national convention, and I agree with the two statements he made. If the minister is sincere in implementing this important principle of equality as between men and women by removing the injustices and discrimination against women, surely he will present a detailed dollar analysis of the various proposals, illustrating individual examples.

Only in this way can we have a proper analysis and appropriate decisions with regard to the plan and regain the confidence of the people of Canada. If the minister in searching for a solution, and wishing to gain the support of the House in these areas I have talked about, would present this particular material to the standing committee, or to the House, and consider the facts I have raised, I think this would go a long way toward improving the program and giving equal rights to men and women across Canada.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak during this debate on the second reading of Bill C-19 to amend the Canada Pension Plan. This is the second major bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan that the government has introduced since it began, a year ago, a review with the provinces of Canada's social security system. The first bill was passed by Parliament last session.

The bill we are debating will fulfil the commitment respecting the first round of agreements with regard to the Canada Pension Plan reached with the provinces in October last year, and will give effect to the second round of agreements that were concluded with the provinces just two months ago in Edmonton. It is important to summarize the main features of the bill. It proposes full equality of treatment for male and female contributors and beneficiaries under the Canada Pension Plan.

It proposes repeal of the earnings and retirement tests under this plan so that contributors aged 65 and over can draw all Canada Pension Plan retirement benefits they have earned without regard to subsequent earnings. It proposes a new formula for determining the year's maximum pensionable earnings, which is the earnings ceiling for the plan, so that future benefits and revenue will reflect the advances in the Canadian wage level that have been occurring during the last decade.

The new formula also provides that once the base for calculating new benefits and determining fund revenues is brought up to date it will keep pace with further increases in the average earnings of Canadian industrial workers. Bill C-19 proposes modification in the current formula for determining the basic exemption for the plan so that Canadians at low income levels will have a greater opportunity to participate more fully in the Canada Pension Plan.

The bill re-introduces the provisions that were placed before Parliament last session in Bill C-190 regarding the exemption of persons from the plan on grounds of religious conviction. I notice the hon. member who spoke so long on that particular aspect just appeared and now appears to be disappearing. Then there is the liberalization of the provisions dealing with payment of legal expenses, the measures concerning financial administration of the plan, as well as the negotiation of international agreements. These proposals enjoyed wide support in Parliament but could not be enacted before the end of the last session.

[Mr. Holmes.]

This bill contains a large number of technical amendments that rectify minor errors, inequities and anomalies the department has uncovered in the administration of the plan. Generally speaking these technical proposals do not affect a large number of contributors and beneficiaries but are important to those directly affected. In almost all instances they operate to their advantage.

The review of the Canada Pension Plan has not been completed. Priority subjects are still outstanding. These include the coverage of housewives, early retirement provisions under the plan, the structure and level of the Canada Pension Plan disability and survivor benefits, and the degree to which the needs of the disabled, orphans, widows and widowers should be met by a social insurance program such as the Canada Pension Plan, and the extent to which these needs should be met by income supplementation programs.

Everyone recognizes there are very complex problems raised by the various proposals that have been received concerning the participation of housewives. It is felt that it would be unwise to come to a hasty conclusion before these problems can be thoroughly studied. Various possibilities, such as voluntary contribution and the splitting of pension credits, should be carefully examined during the ensuing years.

It is also desirable to have substantial public discussion of the issues involved. This matter has been referred to the Canada Pension Plan advisory committee and to the advisory Council on the Status of Women for their consideration. In order to have a discussion of the issue within Parliament, the minister has tabled before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs a paper entitled "Housewives and the Canada Pension Plan". These initiatives of the minister should provoke public discussion of the issue both inside and outside Parliament. This will assist in determining what are the best answers.

At the same time work will continue on the other studies mentioned, and it is expected that this will be finished within the target period for completing the review of Canada's social security system. The result of these and other studies cannot of course be predicted, but it may well be they will call for the introduction of a further bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

Let us examine more closely the major provisions of Bill C-19. The most noteworthy changes proposed by the bill in terms of principle are the provisions for the equal treatment of male and female contributors and beneficiaries. We can take pleasure in seeing them in the bill. The equal treatment of Canadian men and women is a principle to which this government is firmly committed, and is being reflected in further legislation to be considered during the current session of Parliament. The discussion paper recently tabled in the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs states:

> This is a time of reappraisal concerning the position of women in society and in the home. Certain traditional assumptions and values are being questioned and changed. This relates both to the increasing participation of women in the economic work force of the nation, and to changing attitudes concerning the position of women within the fundamental unit of Canadian society—the family.

It is most interesting in this regard to introduce here the thoughts of my own wife, that there comes a time in the family unit when a man is so occupied, as we are here in Ottawa, that the woman realizes there is a part she can usefully play in life, and that she should look for a means by which she can be an equal contributor to the productivity of the nation.

● (1700)

Bill C-19 provides striking and tangible evidence of the rate and degree to which traditional assumptions and attitudes on the role of women in Canadian society have changed. The end of the traditional phase of the Canada Pension Plan lies about two years in the future, yet before the plan is fully mature we are already concluding that we should remove the basic distinctions between males and females which were built into the plan with a broad measure of public support a few short years ago.

Distinctions to be abolished by Bill C-19 include the provision in the Canada Pension Plan that upon the death of the male contributor the surviving widow is automatically eligible for a pension equal to 60 per cent of her husband's actual or imputed retirement pension if she is 65 or older. If the surviving widow is between 45 and 65 years of age, or below age 45 and is disabled or has dependent children, she is eligible for a pension equal to 37½ per cent of her husband's actual or imputed retirement pension, plus a flat rate component which now amounts to some $33.76 a month. Lesser amounts are paid to widows between 35 and 45 years of age, and not disabled, or who do not have dependent children.

In addition, when a male contributor dies or becomes disabled, his children automatically become eligible for a benefit that at present amounts to $33.76 per month for each child, or some variation for families with more than four children. On the other hand, when a female contributor dies or becomes disabled, her surviving widower is eligible for a widower's pension only when he is disabled and dependent upon his wife, and the children become eligible for benefit only if they were wholly or substantially maintained by their mother. These differences, it should be noted, have existed notwithstanding the fact that the contribution rate to the plan is the same for male and female contributors.

Bill C-19 proposes the complete removal of these distinctions. The effect of this change, if and when enacted, will be that surviving spouses and children of deceased or disabled female contributors will, in future, qualify for the same benefits, and under the same conditions as those that now apply in respect of the surviving spouses and children of male contributors. The current provision which limits the payment of one benefit for each child will be maintained, and it will be paid upon the death or disability of the first spouse.

An important clause in the bill proposes retroactive eligibility, but not retroactive payment, for the surviving spouses and children of female contributors who died or became disabled prior to proclamation of this bill. In other words, the bill proposes that after proclamation widowers and the children of female contributors who died, or became disabled prior to proclamation, will from that point in time become eligible to receive benefits as though the Canada Pension Plan had always accorded equal treatment to male and female contributors and beneficiaries. This particular proposal of the bill will, it is estimated, benefit about 30,000 individuals.

Those who may be affected by this retroactive feature should note that benefits under the Canada Pension Plan are only payable upon application. Potential beneficiaries of female contributors who died or became disabled prior to proclamation of the bill should consult a CPP district office about their eligibility for a benefit as soon as possible after the bill comes into force.

Another important group of provisions in Bill C-19 deal with the repeal of the earnings and retirement tests. The Canada Pension Plan at present provides that retirement pensions can only be paid to contributors between the ages of 65 and 70 if they have retired from regular employment. Furthermore, if a pensioner, after retirement and under the age of 70, draws wages in excess of $95 a month, the act now requires that his CPP pension be reduced by 50 per cent of his wages between $95 and $155 a month, and by the full amount of his employment earnings in excess of $155 a month.

Bill C-19 proposes the removal of all these restrictions, and so, if and when the bill becomes law, all contributors who are 65 years of age or older will be able to draw all of the retirement pension they have earned whether or not they continue to work and receive wages. It is estimated that these changes will provide an immediate increase for about 5,000 current CPP retirement pensioners, and will result in the payment of perhaps 30,000 additional retirement pensions in 1975.

The removal of the earnings and retirement tests from the Canada Pension Plan could prove to be one of the more costly reforms. It could, over the next 10 to 15 years, turn out to be more costly even than providing full escalation of CPP benefits in accordance with increases in the cost of living. Much will depend upon the number of contributors who will decide to work beyond age 65 and to apply for CPP retirement pensions when they reach age 65.

Virtually half of the contributors who applied for CPP retirement pensions during 1973 were 66 years of age or older, and the proportion of applicants who were 67 years or older was slightly in excess of 30 per cent of all applicants for 1973 CPP retirement pensions. This is interesting in the face of the frequently expressed assumption that most Canadians will shortly be wanting to retire by age 60 or even less. The experience with the Canada Pension Plan indicates that notwithstanding the criticisms of some that retirement at age 65 is an outdated concept, we are still a considerable distance from having universal observance of the age 65 retirement practice. Consequently if contributors who hitherto have been delaying their applications for CPP retirement pensions now decide, in overwhelming proportions, to apply for retirement pensions as soon as they reach age 65, it could have a substantial financial impact on the plan.

Of course persons between 65 and 70 still have the option of not taking their retirement pension, but continuing to contribute to the fund to build up their eventual benefit. A proportion of contributors may conclude that it is in their interest to do this.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn to the provisions of the bill that deal with the YMPE, or earnings ceiling of the plan. The earnings ceiling, as members are aware, plays a critical role in shaping the revenue and benefit structure of the Canada Pension Plan.

At the October meeting of federal-provincial welfare ministers it was agreed that the CPP earnings ceiling should be brought into line with the one applying to the Quebec Pension Plan, and should then be increased by 12½ per cent a year until it caught up to the average earnings of Canadian industrial workers and, once this was achieved, the ceiling should be kept in line with the earnings of the average Canadian industrial workers. The first steps toward carrying out this agreement were taken when parliament, last session, passed the bill to establish the plan's YMPE at $6,000 for 1974 and at $7,400 for 1975. Bill C-19 contains the proposals for carrying out the other elements of this agreement.

Bill C-19, and the bill passed in the last session, go a long way toward establishing fair and equitable treatment for the nation's retired, disabled, widows, widowers and orphans.

Maximum initial retirement pensions under the plan now stand at $101.41 a month. If the bill is passed, initial maximum CPP retirement pensions should reach a level of about $250 a month by 1980, and $350 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of close to 250 per cent in about ten years' time.

Maximum CPP disability pensions now stand at $125.95 a month. Passage of the bill should raise these pensions to about $225 a month by 1980, and $315 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of close to 170 per cent in ten years' time.

Maximum CPP widow and widower pensions for beneficiaries under the age of 65 now stand at $79.86 a month. Passage of the bill should raise these pensions to about $135 a month by 1980, and $185 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of over 130 per cent in ten years' time.

Maximum CPP widow and widower pensions for beneficiaries 65 years of age and older now stand at $73.75 a month. Passage of the bill should raise these pensions to about $145 a month by 1980, and to $210 a month by 1985. This represents an increase of over 180 per cent in the next ten years.

Basic orphans and disabled contributor child benefits now stand at $33.76 a month. These should rise to about $45 a month by 1980 and $55 a month by 1985.

The increase in child benefits is not provided by this bill, but was accomplished by the bill that Parliament passed last session. This bill does, however, propose that in future they should also be paid in respect of the children of female contributors who die or become disabled. All of these increased benefit rates would be fully escalated thereafter according to increases in the cost of living. It should also be noted that in 1985 we are likely to have three times the 500,000 CPP beneficiaries that we now have.

[Mr. Herbert.]

The updating of the earnings formula that is now in the plan provides that all contributor earnings are updated according to movements in the YMPE; so, sharp increases in the YMPE produce a sharp updating of past earnings at all levels.

These increases in CPP benefits are quite substantial. Still, they do not tell the full story of achievement that has been realized in our social security reforms. During the last year other parts of our social security system have been modernized and, when these improvements are combined with Bill C-19, they produce results of almost dramatic proportions.

For example the income situation of a couple at retirement in a single wage earner family should be considered. A little over a year ago the maximum CPP/OAS income of this couple was about $245 a month; today it is $320 a month. In 1980 it may be in excess of $525 a month; and in 1985 it should be in the order of $700 a month. Seven hundred dollars a month is reasonably close to the average wage of today's industrial worker.

Members might reflect upon the situation of the widow under 65 years of age, with four children under the age of 18. A little over a year ago her CPP survivor benefit and family allowance payments would have amounted to about $200 a month; today they are about $295 a month. In 1980 they should be over $400 a month; and in 1985 they could be in the order of $550 a month. The government is justified in taking considerable pride in this record of achievements.

The Canada Pension Plan has an earnings exemption, called the year's basic exemption, which sets the minimum annual earnings an individual must have in order to contribute to the plan. This exemption is now set at 12 per cent of the earnings ceiling. The possibility therefore arises that if the earnings ceiling is increased quickly, substantial numbers of contributors at the bottom end of the income scale could lose the continuity of their CPP coverage, and so lose some of the advantages of this bill. To prevent this from happening the bill proposes that the basic exemption formula be altered from 12 to 10 per cent of the earnings ceiling. This change, therefore, will provide greater opportunities for people at the lower income levels to participate more fully in the Canada Pension Plan.

The bill also proposes deletion of a special provision that has applied to self-employed persons, namely, the requirement that they must earn at least one and one third of the year's basic exemption to qualify as contributors under the plan. It is proposed that this distinction be removed so that employees and self-employed persons will be on the same footing for exemption purposes. This measure should assist a number of self-employed Canadians in seasonal activities like farming and fishing, where fluctuating conditions sometimes reduce incomes to marginal levels, in maintaining the continuity of their CPP coverage.

There are numerous proposals in the bill which can be labelled as miscellaneous, technical and administrative amendments. The minister has taken the opportunity presented by the bill to carry out some house cleaning in what is a very complex act. These proposals, which for the most part rectify inequities, anomalies, errors, and ambiguities that have been uncovered over a period of time, should be incorporated as a tidying up procedure.

I should like to draw the House's attention to the fact that CPP benefit payments, and the costs associated with administering the plan, are not paid from tax revenues, but come out of the earnings of the Canada Pension Plan investment fund and contributions. Bill C-19 proposes no change in this aspect of the plan. There is every likelihood that the new CPP benefit levels will, in the coming years, obviate the need for some payments to be made from the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Canada Assistance Plan, and a wide range of other programs that are financed out of general tax revenues. Bill C-19 proposes no change in existing CPP contribution rates.

Some of the costs of the new benefit levels will come out of the substantial amounts of additional contribution revenues that will be generated by the new earnings ceilings for 1974 and 1975 that were established last year and by the new earnings ceiling formula that is contained in this bill. This revenue source will probably produce additional contribution revenues of over $100 million in 1974, $200 million in 1975, $300 million in 1977, and higher amounts, naturally, in subsequent years. The rest will come from the revenue producing features that are now in the plan.

Since the operation of the Canada Pension Plan began, all benefit payments and administrative expenses of the plan have been paid out of interest earned by the Canada Pension Plan investment fund. Contributions, in effect, have all been invested in the purchase of substantial amounts of provincial securities.

This situation should continue to prevail throughout 1974, as it is estimated that interest credited to the plan during 1974 will be in the range of $475 to $500 million, while benefit payments and administrative expenses will amount to around $470 million.

The amendments that were made to the plan last year, and the ones now being proposed, therefore have substantial implications for the financial structure of the plan toward the end of the century. Consequently the revenue-producing features of the plan will have to be reviewed much sooner than would otherwise be the case.

If the bill is passed it is anticipated that the balance in the Canada Pension Plan account will continue to grow over the next 15 years. This time frame could, of course, change if additional amendments to the plan are made at the end of the social security review. In any event, there should be ample time to carry out an orderly review of the plan's financial structure and to develop a well-planned approach to maintaining the plan on a sound and responsible financial course.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I consider that Bill C-19 is an imaginative and responsible approach to bringing the Canada Pension Plan into harmony with contemporary values and attitudes in Canadian society. I consider that the bill will bring the plan into line with the economic facts of Canadian life now and in the future. Furthermore, if the bill is passed into law it will allow the Canada Pension Plan to play a vital role in the new charter the government is writing for this country's aged, disabled, widows, widowers, orphans and those in need. I hope that the bill will attract the overwhelming support of Canadians inside and outside parliament.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-19. At first blush, after reading the newspaper reports, I thought the act would give equal rights to male and female contributors. In fact the news release put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare, dated April 5, states:

> Mr. Lalonde stated that a major purpose of the Bill, as indicated in the Throne Speech, is to establish equal treatment for male and female contributors and beneficiaries. This is in accordance with the agreement reached by the federal and provincial Ministers of Welfare at their meeting in Edmonton last February.

From reading the provisions of this bill it does not in fact give equal treatment. The news release is pure and simple window dressing.

When he spoke earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) went into detail on the provisions in the bill. He established beyond a doubt that there is not equality as far as male and female contributors are concerned. The bill does, however, give a survivor pension to widowers. This provision has been needed for a long time. There are many instances where a husband has been disabled and unable to work and the wife has been the breadwinner. There has been no provision for survivor benefits for the husband if she should pass on.

I welcome the removal of the earnings test for people between the ages of 65 and 70. I recall many instances in the practice of law where farmers, in particular, retired at age 65 and applied for Canada Pension Plan benefits. They either had wheat on hand, or would be receiving wheat board payments sometime in the future. They received the Canada Pension Plan benefits. When filing their income tax returns the following year they had to include grain sales and wheat board payments as part of their income. The result was they received letters shortly after filing their returns, stating they had been overpaid and asking for a refund of their Canada Pension Plan benefits. Basically this change is welcome.

There are other instances of people who retire at 65, people who had not earned that much during their lifetime. Their assets are such that they are not able to make ends meet. Even utilizing their Canada Pension Plan benefits they have to supplement their income. They find that, as a result of working to supplement their income, they lose part of their Canada Pension Plan benefits. This change in the act will do away with that inequity and I welcome it.

I also welcome the change in clause 8 which provides, and I quote:

> —that income earned by a contributor but not actually received before his death be included as part of that contributor's contributory salary and wages.

Anyone involved in the handling of estates would have found this to be an inequity. It has created problems. Fortunately the government has seen fit, possibly because of representations, to make the necessary change in this act.

I also welcome the changes with regard to clauses applying to self-employed persons. The former requirement was that they had to earn at least one and one third of the year's basic exemption to qualify as a contributor. The changes will enable a person who is self employed to contribute without complying with this provision.

The minister's news release of April 5 stated:

> These changes will provide greater opportunity for people at lower income levels to participate in the Canada Pension Plan. In particular, increased numbers of farmers, fishermen and other self-employed persons will be enabled to improve their protection under the Plan.

I am interested in the reference to farmers. On March 19 of last year I submitted the following motion to this House:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Pension Plan Act so as to allow farmers the option to make Canada Pension Plan contributions regardless of their net income.

● (1730)

There was a reason for submitting that motion for the consideration of the House. Farmers are in a difficult situation when it comes to their income. Their income is cyclical in nature. They are faced with the variations of price on the international market, with drought, with losses due to grasshopper infestation. Consequently their income fluctuates from year to year.

A farmer might have no taxable income for three years and then, for two years, he might have a substantial amount of income. During the three years in which he had little or no taxable income he is not able to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. In the two years in which he does receive a substantial amount of income he is able to contribute the maximum. He is, of course, able to average his income over a five year period and as a result he becomes taxable each year.

By becoming taxable each year he pays taxes based on the rates for each taxation year, but there is no provision for him to make CPP contributions. In other words while, in effect, his income has been taxable for those five years he can only make contributions for, say, two years. The result is that when he comes to collect payments on retirement the amount he is entitled to receive is reduced, despite the fact that during the over-all period he has possibly received substantially more income than a person earning wages over the same period.

I suggested, when I spoke on my motion, that these facts should be taken into consideration, and that the government should consider changes in the act allowing a farmer the option of making contributions to the plan regardless of his net income. The answer I received was to the effect that the plan was not actuarially sound. This came as a surprise to me. I had always assumed that the plan would be actuarially sound, in other words that it would pay its way.

I was told subsequently that, at the rate at which benefits were being paid out, the plan would go into the red some time in the 80's. Later I was advised that, as a result of the increase in the benefits payable last year, the plan would go into the red some time in the late 70's. It seems to me that if we do not examine the whole concept of this scheme we shall create a situation in which our children, and their children, will be paying for the benefits we ourselves will be receiving. I believe the plan must be actuarilly sound, and I suggest to the minister that he take a hard look at it and give thought to arranging it in such a way that it will pay for itself without becoming a burden on our children.

There are one or two further comments I should like to make. At times there is undue delay in paying benefits—to widows, in particular. I have found that the regional offices are very efficient. I refer particularly to the office in Regina. When I was practising law I know that after a widow had gone there to complete the necessary documentation, the representatives of the administration locally would have the documents ready in a matter of a week or ten days. Naturally, having made an application and having been told the documentation was complete, the widow expected she would be receiving benefits within, say, a month or six weeks. This was the exception rather than the rule.

When I inquired about the delays the answer I received was that they arose in Ottawa—the red tape was there. I have known cases where a widow had to wait for as long as six months before receiving payments under the plan. And not only were payments delayed. In many instances, when the husband died later than the month of June, widows would receive five or six months of benefit payments in the following year, say, in January. Under the Income Tax Act these back payments are counted as income in the year in which they are received. Mr. Speaker, I have seen situations in which widows have paid income tax on as many as 18 months of benefits.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): If that money had been paid to them prior to the end of the year, or if there was some provision in the Income Tax Act whereby benefits so received could have been considered as income in the previous year, no tax would have been payable at all. These are instances where the widows concerned had very little in the way of estates. I said it was a shame. As a matter of fact when I was practising law I wrote several letters to the Minister of National Revenue in this regard.

Mr. Alexander: All ignored, I suppose.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Yes, as a matter of fact they were all ignored.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): I believe there are several other hon. members who would like to take part in this debate so I shall not proceed further with my comments. I am happy with the bill as far as it goes, but there are many changes which could be considered. I hope my comments about payments which come in after the end of the year will be taken into consideration by the minister, and by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury), and that changes will be made accordingly.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my comments on Bill C-190 I should like to echo the words of the hon. member who has just preceded me. Basically I am satisfied with the amendments, but I think that some matters which ought to have been included have been omitted, and that the government has not gone far enough in certain respects.

Basically I agree with the argument in favour of equality as between male and female contributors. The situation of the female contributor has been improved by placing her on the same basis as far as dependents are concerned. I think we shall probably be called upon to review the whole subject to arrive at a fair and equitable formula which will enable housewives to participate in this plan. I appreciate the difficulties. I have read the minister's paper with interest, and I hope he will be able to produce a sensible solution.

I have never been able to understand the section in the present act which, in effect, instituted a means test at the age of 65. It did not make sense to me that if you contributed to a plan which was the same as any other insurance plan, and which paid a universal benefit, your pension would be reduced by the amount of your outside earnings. So I am glad that the minister has seen fit to abolish what was, in effect, a means test at the age of 65.

The changes in the formula for the year's maximum pensionable earnings ceiling, which will result in a change in the formula for benefits will, I know, be accepted cheerfully by all contributors to the plan. It is probably long past the time when this plan should have been modernized and adapted to make it more compatible with the present day cost of living.

However, I should just like to reaffirm what other hon. members who have spoken before me said, that we are rapidly reaching the stage where we must be very careful in all this tinkering with, and adjusting of, the CPP. I feel we are rapidly getting to the point where we might get into the same kind of mess the Unemployment Insurance Act is in. That was a good act until the government decided to monkey around and to make out of it a trough for catching votes in 1971 by broadening its provisions. This made the plan no longer actuarially sound. I hope this will be a lesson to the minister, and that before we go on to make any more generous amendments to the act we will make sure that the present fund, and the payments to be made, will be sufficient to take care of the increased benefits that are being provided.

Having said that, and having complimented the minister for bringing in these amendments to the act, I am a little disappointed that certain other amendments have not been made. The Canada Pension Plan is basically a good plan; I do not think anyone would question that. I think it is part of our social planning. Individuals have been able to incorporate the plan into their own private arrangements, which I think is probably the only way a good many Canadians have been able to develop any kind of retirement pension for themselves.

As I say, it is a good plan, and I think most are happy with it, but there is one class of contributor that is, I think, discriminated against. I do not know whether it is because of the wording of the act or because of the way the act is being interpreted, but the chief complaints I get about the CPP come from those who have to retire from work before the age of 65. On applying for the pension, in many cases they are refused because they do not come within the definition of "disability" under the act. I think this is my chief complaint with the amendments we are studying today.

The definition of "disabled person" is contained in section 43(2)(a) of the act. That section reads as follows:

(2) For the purposes of this Act,

(a) a person shall be considered to be disabled only if he is determined in prescribed manner to be suffering from a severe and prolonged mental or physical disability—

I do not know what is meant by "prescribed manner", but it seems to me that if a person has a medical certificate from a qualified medical practitioner to the effect that he is incapable of working, and that further work would be injurious to his health, then that should be sufficient to qualify him for the Canada pension to which he has contributed since the plan came into force. "Prescribed manner" would seem to me to indicate that an examination by a qualified medical practitioner should be sufficient.

The subsection goes on to provide:

—a disability is severe only if by reason thereof the person in respect of whom the determination is made is incapable regularly of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation—

If an applicant's doctor advises him that, by reason of heart failure or a lung condition, or any other physical disability, further work is injurious to his health and might in fact result in his death, then surely that should be sufficient to qualify him under the disability section of the act for a pension. In fact the subsection goes on to refer to illness or disability that is likely to be long continued and of indefinite duration, or is likely to result in death.

I had a case the other day of a woman who had had one coronary and two cardiac arrests. Her doctor certified that she should not even take part in any light work. Certainly if anything is likely to result in death, it is cardiac arrest. This woman applied for her pension but was refused. In fact she was told, even though she had her own doctor's certificate, to get another medical examination.

Therein, Mr. Speaker, lies the rub. I come from a small town, and like most small towns in this country there is a shortage of doctors. It is hard enough to get one medical examination done by your own physician, but when you are told that your own physician's report cannot be accepted and that you will have to get an outside opinion, you find it takes 60 to 90 days, if you are lucky, to get an appointment with another doctor. I do not know whether the officials of the Canada Pension Plan are hoping these people will die within the 90 days while they are waiting for the other opinion or what, but I sometimes wonder.

This situation is serious enough, but much to my surprise only last week I discovered that in the city of Moncton—I do not know whether this applies to other cities—there are no doctors either capable of rendering a professional opinion that is acceptable to the department or willing to examine patients sent to them by the Canada Pension Plan administration. I do not know whether this is because the fee that the CPP pays is not high enough, or whether the doctors there are simply fed up with this business of having their professional judgment questioned; but we now have the ridiculous situation where people with serious heart conditions, emphysema, or other serious disabilities are told there is no doctor in Moncton qualified or willing to give the CPP a satisfactory report, and so they have to go to Halifax or Saint John.

When senior citizens who have had two or three heart attacks, and do not know how long they are going to last, are told that they have to take a bus, train or plane trip to Halifax, some 200 miles away from Moncton, to undergo a medical examination, the frustration and excitement are enough to knock them off.

I could not believe that this was the practice of the CPP, so I called the local office. The first reply to me was: "Oh no, this is only done in exceptional cases". When I asked what the exceptional cases were, I discovered they were heart cases and lung cases in particular. I consider these the two most common causes of physical disability necessitating early retirement from work, and I found the situation almost unbelievable.

I do not know whether this is a policy that has been laid down by the minister or his officials. People in the local office always say their hands are tied, that there is nothing they can do about it because it is determined by the Ottawa office. If that is the case I certainly feel that Section 43 should be revised in order to make clear what is meant by substantial or gainful occupation.

How disabled must you be before you are incapable of other work? Must you be a basket case, or bedridden? When a person has suffered three or four serious heart attacks, surely the fact that he is able to walk does not mean he is able to work, but this seems to be the interpretation placed on this section by officials administering the plan. These are the people who are suffering.

It is all right to say that there is an appeal provision, but anyone who has had any experience with the appeal procedure under the Canada Pension Plan will know that there is an initial three-month delay before you can get another medical opinion, and that medical opinion may not be accepted before the commencement of the appeal procedure. This is where the delay and frustration begin.

I remember an appeal a few years ago when it took 15 months from the time the application was put in until the appeal was disposed of finally. I cannot see the justice in decisions which delay the payment of benefits to persons who have been forced to pay into the plan because deductions were made from salary. Where is the justice in forcing these people to wait 15 months because officials of the department are not prepared to interpret the regulations as they should be interpreted, or because there is not sufficient staff to look after the applications?

Perhaps the wording of this section could be changed, or something could be made clear in respect of the interpretation of what is a substantial or gainful occupation. Is it fair to suggest that because an individual has been a carpenter, and cannot work with his disability, there is no reason why he cannot be a nightwatchman or perhaps run an elevator? This is one of the things that has bothered me. I use elevators quite a bit and, as many others, I am not happy having somebody operating an elevator who is so disabled this is the only type of job he can do. It does not make sense to tell a person who has had three or four heart attacks that he should take a job as a nightwatchman. I do not think we want a person who is apt to drop dead at any moment on that kind of a job.

I was happy to hear the minister refer to upcoming revisions. He talked about many things and I cannot find the exact reference, but he did say that amendments would cover several areas. There was reference to disability payments, but no reference to a definition of disability. The proposed bill makes reference to a clarification of the definition of disabled children, but does not make any reference to what is a disability, or what procedure must be followed for these people to qualify.

As I indicated earlier, I am in favour of the amendments and appreciate them as far as they go, but I hope the amendments the minister has promised to bring in will take into consideration this whole section I have mentioned. It may be possible to improve it by legislation, or it may be that all that is required is a direction to the officials regarding interpretation. When this goes to the committee I hope this will be one of the matters considered, so that this category of people now being discriminated against will be able to obtain the fair treatment they are entitled to as contributors under the act.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in rising to contribute to this debate I am in somewhat of a quandry as to whether I should begin or call it six o'clock.

An hon. Member: Call it six o'clock.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ASSISTANCE TO DAIRY AND EGG PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion.

In view of the fact that in the announcement made recently by the Canadian Dairy Commission concerning dairy policies for 1974, there is no guarantee of a required minimum income for dairy producers; that the Quebec Federation of Industrial Milk Producers has decided, at its annual assembly yesterday, to implement a plan of action aiming at withholding dairy products, and that the precarious situation in which the Canadian egg producers find themselves is due to the import of American eggs on the Canadian market, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That the responsible committee of the House do convene immediately to discuss these problems in order that new recommendations may be put by this committee to the House so as to solve the problems that these two categories of producers are now facing.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES PAID BY BANKS ON DEPOSITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek consent of the House to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. If it is accepted I have no plans to debate it, and I hope no one else will. The urgent situation concerns the action of the Bank of Montreal, as disclosed to me this morning, of responding immediately to the decision of the Bank of Canada to increase the interest rate by one percentage point by raising its prime rate from 9½ per cent to 10½ per cent for loans but not yet raising the interest rate payable on deposits for the benefit of its customers. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House is of the opinion that chartered banks, at the moment of increasing interest rates on loans, should also increase the interest rates payable to customers for money on deposit with the banks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion, proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

SUPPLY OF RAILWAY BOXCARS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the nationwide shortage of rolling stock on our railways and reports that Canadian National Railways has informed the president of Scott Maritimes Pulp Limited and others that a further withdrawal of boxcars will be made from the Atlantic region which, if carried out, in the case of Scott alone will result in a production curtailment and cost in excess of $100,000 per month for alternate shipping arrangements, and which also will affect shippers of fertilizer, peat moss and other staples of the Maritimes economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That the Minister of Transport, who indicated recently that it would be improper to take boxcars from the Atlantic area for use in the west because this would hurt the Atlantic economy, take all necessary steps and exert whatever authority he may have left to prevent the Atlantic region from being shortchanged by our national railway system.

PROPOSED CROSSING TO LINK NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 also concerns a matter of urgency. The direction of effort by the province of Newfoundland to develop the lower Churchill hydro resource, the effort to collaborate with the province of Quebec on a Quebec-Labrador highway, and the development of a national park in western Newfoundland emphasize the need to consider a connecting link between the land masses of Newfoundland and Labrador. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That studies produced by Acres Bechtel Limited, Northumberland Consultants Limited (1968) and the faculty of engineering and applied science of Memorial University be referred to a special committee comprising Regional Development, the Ministry of Transport, Energy, Mines and Resources, Science and Technology, and Indian Affairs and Northern Development to determine the feasibility of establishing a crossing between Newfoundland and Labrador for the social, economic and political well-being of and advancement of Canada's national goals.

PAY RATES OF POSTAL CODERS AND MAIL SORTERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to move a motion of importance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That, in view of the refusal of the Post Office Department to bargain collectively with the postal employees on the question of rate of pay for postal coders whom the Post Office Department proposes to pay $30 a week less than mail sorters are now getting, and in view of the fact that this refusal has led to a work stoppage in a number of Canadian cities and will, if not resolved, lead to a complete shutdown of the Post Office, the question of the pay rate for postal coders and mail sorters be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES EGGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of very urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the growing volume of egg imports from the United States, which is destroying the viability of the Canadian egg industry. Due to the recent high volume of imports and the probability of this level drastically increasing, plus the cost to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency to remove these imports and thereby try to maintain orderly marketing and pricing in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That this House instruct the Minister of Agriculture to take immediate steps to counteract the importation of United States eggs into Canada in order to protect the Canadian egg industry from below cost of production United States eggs further destroying our market in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion, as do others under Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

EMERGENCY MEASURES TO MAINTAIN DELIVERY OF SOCIAL SECURITY CHEQUES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43. I believe it will be acceptable because there have been conversations with representatives of the various parties. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) who, I might say, has agreed to do so:

That this House calls for, and offers its full support of, any emergency arrangements that can be made so that there will be no interruption in the delivery of family allowance, welfare and pension cheques.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, since the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) first raised this matter yesterday, we will give our support to this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that is not a point of order but rather an indication of how he proposes to vote. The difficulty with that kind of intervention is that it invites other similar interventions and possibly debate. We are now going to have one by the hon. member for Lotbinière. I really think the Chair should be allowed to put these motions without debate. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we would very much agree with the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), if he would include unemployment insurance cheques.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again suggest to hon. members there should be no debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lotbinière mentioned unemployment insurance cheques. Are they to be included as an amendment to the motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be glad to include those words, Mr. Speaker,

Mr. Speaker: I am not too sure how the motion would read. I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario, moves:

That this House calls for, and offers its full support of, any emergency arrangements that can be made so that there will be no interruption in the delivery of family allowance, welfare, unemployment insurance and pension cheques.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the motion is most commendable and I am sure everyone in the House is in agreement, but surely we should now have from the government a statement on motions telling us how it proposes to move these cheques since the whole country is paralysed as a result of its inactivity.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the alarming growth of labour disputes already causing strikes in vital areas, and the inflationary spiral giving rise to them, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House welcomes the Prime Minister back from his vacation in Barbados and requests him to postpone the government's political football bill by bringing forward immediate legislation to alleviate the staggering inflationary problems which affect all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimity.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING ADOPTION OF GENERAL GUIDELINES FOR WAGE AND SALARY INCREASES—ESCALATION BASED ON COST OF LIVING INCREASES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the work stoppages already taking place in the Public Service and others that are threatened, has the government of Canada adopted guidelines with regard to the wage and salary increases it is prepared to permit during the next year or the next bargaining period? Has the government adopted guidelines related to the wage and salary increases it will permit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, each case is being discussed on its merits by the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the government of Canada prepared to agree in appropriate cases to building in allowances for increases in the cost of living in contracts which are being negotiated or which may come up for negotiation?

Mr. Trudeau: Here again, we deal with each of these labour negotiations in terms of the propositions made by the two sides. It may be that in some cases escalation clauses are suggested and not in others. The government has no—

Some hon. Members: No policy.

Mr. Trudeau: —uniform approach. It has a policy of dealing equitably with every labour contract that comes before it, and we hope that in this we have the support of the opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: It is obvious that the Prime Minister has been away or he would have noticed that things were not going so well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Tell us about Jack Horner!

● (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether the government has any plan to break inflationary expectations, a plan that would really encourage employees to moderate their demands for pay increases and provide them with some sense of security with regard to being able to meet the increase in the cost of living? If the right hon. gentleman has any such plan, why does he not bring it forward instead of treating this whole matter as a political football, creating all kinds of difficulties in the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was quite clear that I said in my two previous answers that our plan is to deal with each particular case on its merits. If this is not the position of the opposition, then I take it they are just proposing a general wage freeze which, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, is a way of hurting the little man as against the big man.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE STEPS TO INDUCE FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS TO ROLL BACK MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Minister of Finance, and it will not be a question asking him or the government to get workers to agree to take less than they are entitled to. In view of the fact the recent increases in mortgage rates will not only place an unbearable burden on Canadian families but also bring millions, perhaps hundreds of millions, of dollars of additional profit to banks, mortgage companies and other financial institutions, will the minister take steps to persuade, order, or in whatever way he can, mortgage companies, banks and other financial institutions to roll back the mortgage interest rate instead of leaving them at the present usurious level?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the premises of the hon. gentleman's question is not correct. The spread between the price that trust companies, insurance companies and banks are now paying for money and the price that they charge for money has not changed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister of Finance ask his department to make some calculation of what will be the effect on profits. I want to ask the Minister of Finance this question. In view of the fact that the corporations in this country, according to various sources, are handing their high executives second mortgages at the best interest rate available, let alone first mortgages, will the government take any steps to reduce the burden of mortgage interest rates on the ordinary Canadian family, which has made it impossible for Canadian families either to buy homes or to contemplate this for the future?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that the legislative thrust of my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, dealing specifically with housing and the mortgage problem, namely, the social housing program and the poverty line housing program, is a matter with which I am closely associated. As for the general question of conventional mortgages in the private sector, I have already said to the hon. gentleman's colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, that, in this type of tight housing market where there is a strong demand for housing, any manipulation of the interest rate, either by way of allowing part of it as a deductible item against income tax or by way of some subsidization of the interest rate, would only be reflected in a transferred capitalization, increasing the price of a house.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR DOMESTICALLY PRODUCED COMMODITIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance believes that only private corporations can manipulate interest rates in favour of their top executives. I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question in this general area. In view of the fact that even the chairman of the Food Prices Review Board has seen the value of a two-price system in certain basic food commodities, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is now prepared to bring in a two-prices system for many commodities produced in this country so that Canadians will not have to pay exorbitant prices merely because of international shortages and pressures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will, of course, allow the right hon. Prime Minister to reply to the question, but the hon. member will appreciate that while this may be a related question it is hardly a supplementary. As the question has been asked, the right hon. gentleman may reply, following which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that Mrs. Plumptre indicated she was going to look into this matter, and we will, of course, study the results of her report with great care if and when it is made.

POST OFFICE

EXTENSION OF WORK STOPPAGES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Can he say what is the present situation concerning the postal strike throughout Canada? Has progress been made? Have there been negotiations and meetings between the department and union conciliators?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the situation is this: obviously, there have been work stoppages throughout the country. I must repeat that they are illegal and go directly against the present collective agreement. An injunction is being debated today in Superior Court in Montreal. I would also say that we keep in contact with representatives of the national executive of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and further discussions are to take place during the next hours.

WORK STOPPAGES—REQUEST THAT PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD INTERVENE IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Since most mail distribution centres of the country are strike-bound or occupation-bound, and particularly at a time of inflationary crisis when our needy citizens will suffer from delayed social benefits cheques, does the President of the Treasury Board expect to announce in the next few hours, for the sake of the common good, that he intends to sit at the negotiating table, the only place where a satisfactory settlement of this dispute can be reached?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can say that special measures have been taken by the Postmaster General in order that the cheques referred to earlier may have absolute priority for delivery. The moment my presence at any table may prove helpful, I shall be glad to take part in the negotiations.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Does the President of the Treasury Board admit that the root of this conflict among workers lies in the approach, the style and implications of the present automatic sorting of mail.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit that such a question is controversial. He could word it otherwise to enable the minister to answer, if not I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I note the bad temper of the Prime Minister who has just said that the question is useless and as usual blames the member for being incompetent. He thus accuses the Postmaster General of being incomptent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, I have allowed the hon. member to word his question in other terms. He could perhaps do it now so that we may hear the supplementary questions.

Mr. Wagner: Would the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that he intends to meet with the bargaining committee within the next few hours?

This question can easily be understood, even by the Prime Minister.

[English]

SUGGESTION THAT POSTAL CODERS BE PAID SAME RATE AS MAIL SORTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to either the Postmaster General or the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the work stoppages in post offices result from the dissatisfaction of the postal workers with the unilateral decision of the government to set the rate for workers who will be sorting mail with the new machines at some 72 cents an hour less than mail sorters have been receiving under the present contract, is the government considering adjusting that rate so it will be comparable with the rate now paid to mail sorters?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, when I met the executive of the Council of the Postal Unions I indicated that I would be available, as well as the deputy minister, to sit with the manpower committee to study and give priority to the coders' situation. I should like to take advantage of this reply to the hon. member to add that it is imperative—and I am sure both the public and most hon. members will agree—that the administration decide how the postal services are to be run and not the union as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would have it.

● (1430)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg North for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I note the offer of the minister to sit in on the negotiations. I ask the minister again whether he is prepared to make a concrete offer of an upward adjustment in the rate, which the workers feel is now completely unacceptable, so that they will have a reason to sit down with him?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think it is essential that the employees should first of all respect their collective agreement and return to work. Only then will we really be able to sit down with them and discuss a solution to the coders' problem.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INFLATION AS A FACTOR IN UNREST

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the position taken by the Prime Minister that each of the critical labour problems will be considered on an individual basis, is it the considered position of the government that the historic high level of inflation we have now in this country is not a major factor in the labour unrest in Canada today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I indicated my opinion on that in my speech during the debate on the throne speech.

WORK STOPPAGES—ACTION TO ENSURE DELIVERY OF SOCIAL SECURITY CHEQUES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Given the fact that a number of airports in Canada are already closed because of the firefighters' strike and the fact that we are facing a possible nationwide closing of airports because of the air traffic controllers' dispute, may I ask the minister how he intends to get family allowance and old age pension cheques across the country?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that a large number of post offices are still open where the mail is being sorted out, and that all those offices are giving priority to that type of letters. I also wish to tell the House that I hope an agreement will be reached as soon as possible to settle the matter.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister how he proposes to get the cheques out where airports and postal stations are already closed?

[Later:]

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to a previous question. I want to get back to this business of how pension cheques and other benefits will be moved across this strikebound country. I want to ask the Postmaster General whether his model of efficiency proposes to transport these cheques to the deserving recipients by means of the same private enterprise courier service the Post Office has used for many months to move its internal mail between cities of this country?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I should normally put my question to the Minister of Agriculture or his parliamentary secretary. Neither one is here so, although I do not want to cause any inconvenience, I dare ask the Postmaster General, who has other problems but once met with dairy producers, whether, considering that the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers which was holding its annual meeting yesterday decided to institute a program aiming at withholding dairy products—

[Mr. Gillies.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question cannot be put to the Postmaster General—unless he is the Acting Minister of Agriculture—and I have no indication that he is. The hon. member could perhaps address it to the right hon. Prime Minister. It would be more appropriate than to put it to the Postmaster General.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, as I am convinced he is already aware of the problem.

Since the recent dairy policy has been rightly judged to be totally insufficient for the future of the dairy industry in Canada, does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to ask the cabinet to reconsider it and to submit for the milk producers measures to ensure the future of the dairy industry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the premises of the question and cannot therefore agree with its conclusions, which are necessarily wrong.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS OF UNEMPLOYED RURAL WORKERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the Unemployment Insurance Commission has been making it a policy to disqualify unemployed rural workers from UIC benefits on the pretext that they are restricting their area of employment search, will the minister assure the House that he will take another look at the matter and instruct the UIC to stop discriminating against unemployed rural workers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think in this instance, as with other similar representations, I would have to ask the hon. member to give me specific cases in which this has been done and I would be glad to look into them.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. Nystrom: Considering the fact that most of these workers search for jobs within 25 or 30 miles from home, will the minister assure the House that the commission will not force these claimants to uproot their families and move to cities merely to qualify for the UIC benefits they deserve?

Mr. Andras: Again, if the hon. member would give me specific examples I would be glad to look into them. In the meantime, any such disentitlements or any such disqualifications are subject, of course, to the appeal system and those decisions would either be upheld or denied by the boards of referees or subsequently by the umpire.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture or the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I may interrupt the hon. member for Provencher, I believe the hon. member for Skeena is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the response given by the minister about unemployment insurance claimants being denied in rural areas is misleading because the minister has no authority under the law to do anything about specific cases. For him to say that an hon. member should give him specific information is misleading the House and I submit he should know better.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister rises on the point of order. I hope we will try to return to the question period soon.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the general suggestion made by the hon. member who preceded the hon. member who just rose on a point of order was that I should look into the policy aspect or the program aspect. Before doing so I wanted the hon. member to co-operate with me, in order that I can co-operate with him, by giving me specific instances on which I could base my decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member did not really have a point of order; it was a point of debate. The minister has replied to it. Now the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville rises on a further point of order. I will take all these points of order into account when allocating questions between now and the end of the question period. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege which I think affects most members of the House. I have on several occasions contacted the minister and given him examples of how the UIC discriminates against rural unemployed workers. I know that most members of the House have contacted him. He should not deliberately try to mislead the House in that way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has risen on a question of privilege and has charged that the minister is deliberately misleading the House. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has been here for a few years and he should know that under the rules and practice of the House he has no right to charge another member, be he a minister or another member of the House on one side or the other, with deliberately misleading the House. I would hope the hon. member would take that into account.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should indicate to the Chair that he would like to qualify the charge he has made against another member of the House.

Mr. Nystrom: Because of the fact that apparently it goes against the grain of the traditions of the House, I will withdraw it. I do so with some hesitation, but I will follow your instructions.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's assistance.

INFLATION—SUGGESTED TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR DOMESTICALLY PRODUCED COMMODITIES

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance.

Further to the statement made by the President of the Food Prices Review Board, Mrs. Plumptre, that the government should establish a two-price system for essential commodities, namely an export price and another one for local consumption, could the minister tell the House if he intends to apply such a measure?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, even before Mrs. Plumptre's statement which, by the way, I did not read, I have dealt with this matter in a quite accurate and general reply to our colleague, the hon. member for York South.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that Montreal Airport firemen are due to begin a study session at 6 o'clock tonight, and that the Montreal Airport will be the eighth airport thus affected by such study sessions throughout Canada, what precise step will the government take to improve this situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, very precise steps have been taken daily at least for the past week to settle this conflict and if the hon. member is aware of any means more effective than those now used, I should like him to indicate them to the House.

Mr. Grafftey: You are supposed to administer this country. You are the party in power, not us.

I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Could he advise the House of the precise step the present administration will take?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I fully rely on the hon. Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the government indicated to those involved in these illegal strikes what action it is prepared to take, either through the courts or by special legislation to end this illegal activity?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that on a few occasions I have made the situation quite clear. Treasury Board has negotiated with the Public Service Alliance which is the certified bargaining unit. The conflict is not between the two bargaining agencies but is within the union. We are trying to normalize the situation instead of compromising it at this stage and thus prolonging it. We hope that in a very short while the solution which is contemplated will be accepted.

Mr. Fraser: I have some sympathy for what the minister is trying to do, but the public interest is involved here and the public are asking how long the government is going to sit doing nothing and apparently not saying what it is going to do.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is only one thing which is not right, and I hope the hon. gentleman will admit it. It is not true that we are doing nothing. I have been working about seven or eight hours a day on this matter, trying to find a solution. It is not lack of esteem for the House if we do not speak of every step we take in order to restore peace in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada. We as a government are not responsible for this situation because we have negotiated an agreement and the Alliance supported it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver South on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, and perhaps other hon. members on further supplementaries.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Fraser: Again my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am in complete agreement that the minister has worked very hard but the question is: in view of the situation, which is not of the government's making but which is affecting the public interest right across the country, what is the government going to do now? Is it going to continue saying that there is nothing it can do about it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that the alliance, with which we have an agreement, has to have this agreement ratified by the firefighters. We are suggesting to the alliance that this might be too slow a process and that we have an alternative so that perhaps the situation can be handled faster than usual.

Some hon. Members: What is it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich on a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Would he be willing to tell the House and the nation the outcome of the informal meetings with the firefighters which we were told he was having yesterday in Victoria and Vancouver? This might clarify the situation somewhat.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I support the Minister of Transport in the view that it is not particularly helpful to try to negotiate at the bargaining table on the one hand and across the floor of the House on the other. This leads to confusion rather than clarification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LEAKAGE OF OIL FROM SHIP GROUNDED IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—ACTION TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF CANADIAN SHORELINE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the recent grounding of the ship, Imperial Sarnia, in the St. Lawrence waterway last Monday, resulting in a small but serious oil spill which apparently is still not all contained, especially on the Canadian side, what action is being taken to prevent any possible pollution of the Canadian side of the river, and is the water supply of any town or city threatened?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the water supply of any city or municipality is threatened as yet. There is close co-operation meanwhile between the company people, who are undertaking most of the clean-up, the Department of Transport, which has the lead clean-up role among federal departments, and the Department of the Environment in this respect.

Mr. Harding: In view of the planned co-ordination and co-operation between Canada and the United States on contingency plans for containing oil spills in the joint Great Lakes and St. Lawrence river areas, I would ask the minister if sufficient equipment was available and why these joint clean-up resources were unable to handle this relatively small oil spill adequately, especially as the weather was good and the water calm for several days after the spill occurred?

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member says, there is a joint Canada-United States contingency plan to deal with oil spills. This plan was invoked at an early stage and U.S. authorities have co-operated throughout.

ALLEGED WITHDRAWAL OF BOXCARS BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FROM ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is investigating representations that Canadian National Railways is withdrawing boxcars from service in the Atlantic region to the detriment of that region, and also whether he has any procedures in place to make certain that no region in Canada is treated unfairly at this time of nationwide shortage of railway rolling stock?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave me notice yesterday of this important question and I did make inquiries. I was told that it may be that some cars were withdrawn but that other cars that were idle either in Quebec or Ontario were added. When they withdraw cars they are just regularizing the situation. They do that not only in the Maritimes but in Quebec, Ontario and the west so as to utilize the maximum capacity of the cars. I did it personally for the fruit growers in the Okanagan Valley. They were asking for cars and we took some idle cars and brought them in. After that they were sent back to where they came from.

ALLEGED UNFITNESS FOR SERVICE OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOCOMOTIVES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport regarding the continuing transportation crisis in rail movement. Have he or his officials looked into the charge made by the Moose Jaw Railway Labour Association that a majority of CPR locomotives are unfit for service and, if so, is he in a position to make a report to the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will surely inquire and make a report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR DISPUTES WITH AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS, SHIP PILOTS, POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES AND AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board in reference to the difficulties with the firefighters, to which the Minister of Transport has referred, the difficulties with the ship pilots, the difficulties in the Post Office, and the threatened difficulties with the air traffic controllers. Does the minister have any explanation for this rash of difficulties throughout the Public Service? Is it due to bad employer-employee relations, for example? What explanation can the minister give the House in view of the concern we all have for the growing number of difficulties which are causing great inconvenience to the public?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think, as the Prime Minister has indicated, that there are no two situations which are exactly the same.

An hon. Member: They are all bad.

Mr. Drury: I should perhaps indicate to the House that because they are not the same the solutions will all of necessity be different, as the causes are different.

An hon. Member: Elementary, my dear Watson.

Mr. Stanfield: Now that the Prime Minister has suggested the explanation to the President of the Treasury Board, does the minister have any explanation why all these difficulties are breaking out and spreading in various departments of the government? Admitting that each situation is different, and so on, what is the explanation? Is the explanation simply bad management on the part of the government and an accumulation of bad employer-employee relationships?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think that to get a clear understanding—

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Ask Goyer!

Mr. Drury: —of the hon. gentleman's preoccupation would take a longer period of time than the question period would allow.

Mr. Stanfield: Revert to motions.

Mr. Drury: In one case the cause is technological change. In another case it is a general public change in attitude, the optical perspective in which one vocation is held in relation to the traditional vocations. In another case there are special circumstances related to the difficulties, the nervous tensions, in a job. These are all quite different problems and call for different treatment. I regret to have to say again to the hon. gentleman that there are no instant solutions, instant successes, or universal panaceas such as he has offered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I seek the co-operation of all hon. members. We will be running short of time in a few minutes. I will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a supplementary.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that we certainly have no panacea in the non sequitur from the President of the Treasury Board and since the Minister of Labour has returned to this country, and we welcome him back—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where have you been?

An hon. Member: Who told you? How did you find out?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley has the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, I guess we welcome all of you back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Labour has had a chance to get acclimatized to the very unstable labour picture in this country, I should like to ask if he has had a chance to talk with the hard-working Minister of Transport who is working overtime, and the President of the Treasury Board who is certainly working overtime in his answers in the House, to try to find not a panacea to settle all problems with a universal plan but to try to settle each individual problem with an individual plan so that we can get some labour peace and stability and this country can start to get on the road again in an economic way, that this government is not prepared to admit?

An hon. Member: Right on!

An hon. Member: What have you done, John?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult to take lectures on stability from this hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that we are supposed to abide by the laws passed by parliament. With respect to this particular matter, the series of labour disputes to which the Leader of the Opposition referred do not fall under legislation within the ambit of my particular responsibility. That is not to say that the government, collectively, is not dealing with them. I think the Minister of Transport particularly is doing an admirable job and will constructively help the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again seek the co-operation of hon. members. We are coming to the end of the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is prepared to recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, then the hon. member for Portneuf, and then we will just have about reached the end of the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: From the minister's answer, not the prelude to which I take some exception but the gist of his answer, do I understand he feels that, regardless of the specifics of the different acts involved, the Department of Labour in a general way has no interest whatsoever in trying to resolve these four or five present labour disputes that are fogging up the whole land?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member is not suffering some physical disability in terms of hearing. My answer quite clearly indicated the opposite.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will try to recognize the hon. member for Portneuf and perhaps two or three quick questions without supplementaries before calling orders of the day.

REASON ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PILOTS PAID LESS THAN PACIFIC COAST PILOTS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can the minister tell the House why the St. Lawrence River pilots are paid some $9,000 less than those of the Pacific coast and also whether he would consider inflationary granting the St. Lawrence River pilots salaries equivalent to those paid to Pacific coast pilots?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, salaries have been negotiated by the Pacific Pilotage Authority and the Pacific Coast Pilots Association. We are now dealing with the St. Lawrence River pilots. The hon. member certainly knows that throughout Canada, in the west, in central Canada, in Ontario, in Quebec and the Maritime provinces, the salary structures are different and they must be taken into account to determine salary rates. If the Social Credit Party of Canada ever has a theory on that, we would like to hear about it.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just said that the question period was getting to an end and that I hope we will be able to have two or three questions more without any supplementaries. Otherwise, we will have to call government orders.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: The statement just made by the Minister of Transport in connection with the relevant question by the hon. member for Portneuf demonstrates that he does not understand our solutions to this problem any more than he understood our financial suggestions, and he will be faced with as many problems in his department as there are financial problems in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport on a question of privilege. In spite of these interruptions, I will, however, recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West in a moment and then I will have to call the order of the day.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that if the hon. member for Lotbinière understands union problems as he does financial problems, I am not surprised he does not understand anything.

FINANCE

OPINIONS EXPRESSED BY PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER ABOUT FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether the Minister of Finance was stating government policy when earlier this week he said that the budget will not contain any instant solutions to the economic problems of Canada, including inflation? How can he reconcile that with his own observations about what the contents of the budget might be? Can he now tell the House whether the Minister of Finance's version of the budget will be the correct one?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any difficulty there. I indicated that I thought the budget would be a very good one. I understand that the Minister of Finance is of the same opinion.

MAJORITY RECOMMENDATION OF CONCILIATION BOARD ON AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS' SALARIES—POSITION OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues acceptance of the majority conciliation board report that recommends a two-year staged wage increase for air traffic controllers of 9 per cent in January, 1974, 2 per cent in July, 1974, a further 7 per cent in January, 1975, and 2 per cent in July, 1975?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations with the air traffic controllers are still in progress.

HOUSING

ACTION TO RELIEVE EFFECT OF MORTGAGE RATE INCREASES ON PROSPECTIVE BUYERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As many prospective home buyers in the middle and lower income brackets are having to cancel contracts for housing because of the excessive increase in mortgage interest rates, can the minister indicate if he is going to take action to relieve this problem that faces prospective homeowners?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether in individual cases that might be so but, despite rising interest rates, in the first quarter of this year, 1974, housing starts and mortgages were up again in the first quarter over last year.

Mr. Bell: You can bet mortgages are up.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands on a last question and then call orders of the day.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ACTION TO ENSURE DELIVERY OF CHEQUES IN LIGHT OF POST OFFICE DISPUTE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the resolution passed by the House earlier today and in view of the fact many post offices are already closed, will the minister indicate how he plans to distribute family allowance and other cheques which would normally be mailed in the next two days? I ask him this in view of the urgency of the situation and the hardship it will cause hundreds of thousands of Canadians, beginning this weekend.

Business of the House

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member said, the cheques should be issued in about two days. However we still hope the mailing services will resume; if it where impossible to issue the cheques in the usual manner, a public announcement will be made in due time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before you call orders of the day I wonder if we could hear from the Prime Minister, in view of the fact travel is paralysed across the country, there is no mail delivery and high interest rates are being charged. My point of order is this. I understand that today we are to debate the football bill. I wonder if the government could not bring forward some legislation or program to solve these problems, rather than kicking around a football?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether my question will help the mood of the House. May I ask the traditional Thursday question about business. While we are not sure how far we are going into next week, because we do not wish to transgress on our newly discovered friendship with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), if we do go into next week may I ask the House leader what the business will be?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the business for today, as is already well known, has to do with the Canada Pension Plan, a very important measure.

Mr. Woolliams: Will that solve the problem of interest rates?

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Trudeau: Keep your cool, Eldon.

Mr. MacEachen: This would be followed by the football bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It may be that I will ask hon. gentlemen later in the day to deal with a measure other than the football bill, although I have not reached that conclusion yet, namely, Bill C-3, to do with substances that contaminate the environment. I assure my hon. friends opposite that no personal references are intended. I would then call Bill C-4, the Export and Import Permits Act, the Federal Business Development Bank, the Export Development Act, the capital stock of banks bill, in the name of the Minister of Finance. I would also mention the possibility to hon. members that next week we may be asked to deal with legislation relating to the St. Lawrence situation.

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands).]

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate if amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, will be brought forward soon?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had some discussions yesterday with respect to the drafting of those amendments. I hope it will be possible to bring a measure forward at an early date.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELIGIOUS SECTS, EARNINGS FORMULA, BASIC EXEMPTIONS, ETC.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-19, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by the clock last evening I had not even had the opportunity to say that I will be supporting the general thrust of this bill. I feel that it is important for me to make a few specific comments about two or three clauses.

First, I, like some of my colleagues, want to destroy the illusion which was created by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in some literature he had printed and distributed in connection with the presentation of this bill. A claim was made in that literature that one of the major purposes of this bill was the elimination of discrimination between the sexes.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please? It is very difficult for the hon. member who has the floor to be heard, even by himself, with all the noise in the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think there is room on the floor for only one Munro at a time.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I like your tie.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): As I was saying, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was willing to leave the impression that one purpose of this bill was the elimination of discrimination on the basis of sex. One clause purports to do this. However, it would be most improper if the country were misled in this regard. I agree with those who have said that this is an entirely misleading representation. No doubt other members will make the same statement. Nevertheless, a step in the right direction has been taken. It is worthwhile and I am glad it has been taken. Let us not fool ourselves, let us not fool the nation. This provision does not finally eliminate discrimination between the sexes on the basis of pensions paid under the Canada Pension Plan. For example, housewives are not reckoned with here. They are not permitted to contribute and they are not allowed to apply in their own right for these pension privileges.

This bill merely adopts a principle that would allow others to cover you with virtue, especially when your own virtue is tarnished. However, I am forced to admit that the amendment to clause 56, which appears on page 25, provides for an upward adjustment of the pension due to the surviving spouse. There are two elements in this particular clause which I welcome, one the upward adjustment from 50 to 60 per cent and, two, the provision for the surviving spouse. In other words, there is no specific mention of the widow or the widower, but the one who survives. However, I do not consider the proportion sufficiently great. Like my colleague, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), I think 60 per cent is a pretty low rating for a surviving spouse of whatever sex. If we have to set the amount in percentage terms, and I suppose in the long run we must do that, I think 75 or 80 per cent would be nearer the mark.

I am very heartened to see this principle adopted because I am reminded of some remarks I made in this House on March 11 in my contribution to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. At that time I argued that it is grossly unfair to expect the surviving member of a couple to carry on with only 50 per cent of the revenue from the old age pensions that were enjoyed when the two were living. There are many continuing expenses. It is not just a matter of half the number of people. The roof still has to be maintained, the telephone paid and the gutter around the roof may have to be replaced. A surviving spouse has to deal with many things. Furthermore, the surviving spouse is not always able, at the age the pension is due, to do work himself or herself and must employ casual labour, if he or she can afford it at the reduced revenue. I say we have further to go in this direction.

I am not entirely sure I understand the full financial implications or impact of 56(1)(a)(i) where an amount of 37½ per cent is introduced. I hope the minister or the parliamentary secretary will elucidate further on that.

My next comment concerns the means test. I am glad to see it has been eliminated. Insofar as it is determined on the basis of age, it has had some pretty strange results. For example, when a friend of mine reached the age of 65, he was sent a form to complete in order to qualify for the Canada Pension Plan. He filled it in, submitted it and in due course, fairly promptly, the pension began to arrive regularly. When he filled out his income tax return at the end of the year, he received a very rude shock. He entered this revenue on his tax return and paid the tax on it. After the income tax return was received by the Income Tax Department, he received a letter from the pension people stating that he should not have been receiving the pension because his earnings were greater than those that merited the payment of the Canada Pension Plan at that age and that he must repay the pension. Happily, because of revenues he enjoyed during that year, he was able to make that repayment. It was not pleasant, but he did it.

Things went smoothly for this person for the next two or three years. After he passed his 69th birthday, he received another form. He had heard talk about a gradual reduction in the age of eligibility for the Canada Pension Plan from age 70 to 69 to 68, so he again filled in a form. The payments resumed. After filling in his income tax return this year, he has once again been told that he must repay those payments to the Canada Pension Plan. He did that, but perhaps not quite so easily. For a variety of reasons, his revenue on the earlier occasion was better than in the last year and therefore he was rudely shocked when told he would have to repay, without the appropriate adjustment in income tax I am led to believe, that portion of his income which came from the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore, I am glad that part of the problem is being eliminated by amendments that are now before us.

I have other concerns about the means test. I have had these for a long time. Here I will be speaking for myself and not for anyone else in my party. I want to make it clear that I think a means test of some kind is desirable. It should not be on the basis of age, but rather on the basis of income and income alone. There are some who do not need the Canada Pension Plan payments. There are some who work and put away money to look after their own future and the future of their family. I am glad of that. That virtue should be cultivated. We should certainly not discourage it. I do not disagree one bit with the cradle to the grave notion for those in need, and here I swiftly interject for those in need. Otherwise, I maintain we are destroying a very fundamental virtue in man, his sense of responsibility, resourcefulness and concern to look after himself and his family in his own way without leaning on the government or anyone else.

Governments have not always been considerate, let us remind ourselves, in human terms, as we can see even from the events of the last few weeks. Can anyone rely on government to be paternal when the time comes? If you are in need, you have no option, but when you are not in need I think you should not be obliged to accept this pension. In my view, a man should be encouraged by every means to look after himself and his family in his own way.

Having said this, I recognize that everyone is not able to do so, unfortunately. There are some who, through circumstances beyond their control, are not able to provide for themselves and their families. They may work all their lives and yet be unable to save for a rainy day. Let them save through the Canada Pension Plan. Why not? To this extent I favour the plan, but I think it should be regarded as a fall-back position, not as a primary post on which to lean.

Speaking to this bill on second reading, as reported in Hansard on page 1482, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) talked about families drawing $700 a month under the Canada Pension Plan and OAS allowances in 1985. This is a figure I find staggering. Have we paused to calculate what it would mean in terms of dollars from the treasury—what it would mean in terms of taxation? I am deeply concerned at the prospect. For those in need, fine. They will need every penny of that $700, the way things are going, unless there is a drastic change in the next month or so. But this should only be a backstop for those who have not been discouraged from looking ahead and providing for their own needs. Consider the extra burden that $700 a month would mean in terms of income tax—another $8,400 a year on which to pay tax. I suggest indeed, that payments should not be made even by way of AOS benefits—and here I know I am being heretical—unless requested. In this way we might avoid the difficulty referred to by my hon. friend and also the problem of the unnecessary income tax. The OAS payments and the Canada Pension Plan payments might be allowed to accumulate as savings, as a savings account, if you will, until such time as someone is in need, with the proviso that in case of a sudden demise the savings which have been accumulated pass into the estate of the deceased.

I must say I am not really happy about the amendment proposed to section 63(1) of the act related to the determination of the legal identity of the surviving spouse. The seven year "living together" principle has been dropped and in its place a three year period has been inserted.

An hon. Member: What about common-law?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Common-law people are pretty well looked after, I gather. I am talking about legally married couples. The time requirement in the amendment on page 25 has been reduced to nil. The surviving spouse of a deceased contributor is defined as the person who was by law married to the deceased contributor at the time of his death. I suggest that this is open to abuse and I should like to see a change made in committee.

With these comments, I close my reflections on the bill before us. However, I should like to summarize. First, I definitely reject the notion which the government has allowed to grow up that discrimination on the basis of sex has been eliminated by the bill before us. Second, I favour a means test and a deferment program for CPP and OAS, both of which should be optional. Finally, I am unhappy about the definition of a surviving spouse as "the person who was by law married to the deceased contributor at the time of his death." I think I should like to see a two or three year element introduced here to avoid abuses of or by, let us say, sugar daddies.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-19 I must say to the House that I was not here when the bill was first introduced or when second reading began. However, I have read the speeches which have been made. I took particular note of the speech made by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). At the beginning of his remarks, he said:

Mr. Speaker, I begin by giving the minister a hint that this measure will pass.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

That was a pretty brave thing to do, because a similar bill was presented to the previous parliament and I was successful in making certain that it did not pass. There is a significant difference between the bill before us now and the bill which was presented to the previous parliament. I should like to warn the minister and the hon. member for Hillsborough that the most significant difference I could find between the two bills was that the previous one contained seven clauses and the present bill contains 57. I have had some experience with regard to the passing, or failure to pass, of legislation brought before the House of Commons. I would remind all hon. members, particularly new members, that it is very difficult to block a bill which is only seven clauses long. Sometimes one is successful, sometimes not. Last session, I and a few others were successful.

I have counted the pages of Bill C-19, and I find there are 46. Now, there are a lot of words in 46 pages, and under our rules one can move to amend virtually every one of them. Mr. Speaker, you are an able person in your job, and you can group those amendments for debate in any way you please. Nevertheless, I believe the hon. member for Hillsborough, when he gave the minister a hint that this measure would pass, was a very brave person because I do not give the minister that hint. I would be less than honest with this House if I made anyone believe that I will contribute in any way to the passage of this legislation, because I will not. I think it is a mistake. It is poor legislation and I will do my best to encourage all members not to assist in its passage and to oppose it in every way.

I say to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and other members of the House that there will be votes, and I address my remarks particularly to members from Alberta. Their votes with regard to exempting various religious groups from this particular tax that the government has placed on all Canadians, a tax that this legislation is now increasing will be noted by Albertans.

Having made very clear to all members my stated intentions in the debate on this bill, I will now attempt to explain why I am so firm in my dedication to block this measure. First of all, the Canada Pension Plan covers only one third of the population of Canada. My hon. friends to my left, of whom there happens to be none here today, are forever talking about rip-offs and windfalls. When the Canada Pension Plan was first passed in 1966 there was a windfall age group, and, "windfall," became quite a common term. The first time I ever heard the word was in this House of Commons in 1966. This windfall age group fell between the ages of 55 and 65, people who were eligible for the Canada Pension Plan. This group of people were designated a windfall age group because they were going to get more from the Canada Pension Plan than they paid into it.

According to a report I read in a Toronto newspaper, though I do not have it here with me, the leader of the New Democratic Party is in this windfall age group. The first year he becomes eligible for the CPP at 65 he is going to receive more money from the plan than he has paid into it during the previous ten years. I am not going to suggest that the hon. member is going to accept a rip-off; he is against rip-offs and very often speaks in this House in disparaging tones about them, so I do not think he would accept one. But I merely point out, to make it firm and clear in everyone's minds, that there is a windfall group that will reap more from the Canada Pension Plan than they put into it. I notice one member of the NDP is now here and he can correct me if anything I have said during the last few minutes is absolutely wrong.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is a windfall group, then there is also a group of people who are going to pay more into the plan than they can possibly reap; that stands to reason. If there is a windfall group on one side of the ledger, there must be another group on the other side. Who comprise this group on the other side? Basically these are the 18 year olds who are entering the labour force today, or tomorrow or yesterday for that matter. They are the 16 year olds even, if they enter the labour force at that age. They will pay, for easy mathematics, for 50 years into the CPP, and pay into it far more than they will take out, provided the longevity of the average Canadian is not extended far beyond what it is today.

As I have said, only one third of the population is covered by the Canada Pension Plan. This piece of legislation is exempting another two groups. I am not going to go on at length about whether or not they are good Canadian citizens. I made a speech on the CPP bill in the last session, I think it was Bill C-190, and I was quoted as saying that Hutterites are not good Canadian citizens. I was quoting a brief, a study carried out by and for the Alberta government, in which the commissioners stated that they were not good Canadian citizens. I remember the debate we had on that bill very well. Some members of parliament broadcast across the air waves of western Canada their opinion that they were the best citizens, honourable Canadians, but I am not going to get into that. Each member of this House and Your Honour can determine in his or her mind what makes a good citizen.

Legislation has been presented to the House from time to time which singles out a specific group of people for special treatment because they are extraordinary citizens—for example the veterans. Our veterans have served Canada, and Canadian parliaments in years gone by—and I suppose parliaments to come will do the same—have brought down specific pieces of legislation for our veterans, who risked their lives to defend what we cherish most, freedom—freedom of the world, freedom of the western world, thus ensuring freedom within Canada. This signifies to me that it is a group needing special mention, that it is a group that has proven its preparedness to serve Canada.

I am not going to tell this House of Commons that all Mennonites are one, that they are all alike, because they are not. Members of the House who are knowledgeable in this regard know of what I speak. The Mennonites referred to in this bill are part of a sect resident in what might be called the southern part of Ontario. They in no way have anything to do with the Mennonites in western Canada; I make that abundantly clear.

This aspect was studied when we were debating Bill C-190 in committee, and at that time the minister informed the committee there had been no application by the Mennonites of western Canada for exemption from the CPP. In fact, the minister stated to the committee—I want to make this abundantly clear before the hon. member for Hillsborough leaves, since he made mention of Mennonites who were practising their religion and trying to promote it outside of Canada—that many Mennonites presently living outside Canada had informed the Department of National Health and Welfare that they hoped they could continue to make payments to the Canada Pension Plan because they wanted to look forward to retirement in Canada, a retirement during which they would receive benefits from the Canada Pension Plan. These people are Mennonite missionaries abroad in the world, some of them even in Bangladesh.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is no question in my mind that this particular group of people wants to remain within the Canada Pension Plan. I repeat that the Mennonites of western Canada have made no request for exemption from the CPP. This was clearly stated in the committee proceedings last session.

The other main group that is actively and avidly seeking exemption from the Canada Pension Plan is composed of those commonly referred to as the Hutterites, or the Hutterian sect, which perhaps is a branch of the early Mennonite order. I am not going into the history of the Hutterites. If any member wants to study them and their way of life he should read a book called "All Things Common," by a university professor who lived with the Hutterites in Manitoba, Victor Peters. That is a very interesting book and it is a very interesting religion. I have no axe to grind in respect of their religion as I fully believe they should be allowed to practise any religion they want within Canada, but I do not believe parliament should take it upon itself to say that one man's religion is better than another. I have made it a practice in public life never to ask anybody his religion, as I believe that is a personal belief and it should be retained as such. I have said in this House on a number of occasions that any religion is better than no religion at all. For you atheists in the House, and this is not for your benefit, Mr. Speaker, as I know you are not one of those, I mean just what I say, that any religion is better than no religion at all, but parliament should not rule that one religion is better than another.

● (1540)

One might ask how I determined that Bill C-19 suggests that one religion is better than another. The minister sometime ago in committee said the Hutterites should be exempt because of their religious beliefs and their zealous desire to take care of their elder citizens. He felt that, based on their past record, they did not need the Canada Pension Plan. One of the most deplorable things about our society today is that governments in recent years, and the present government more so than any other in the past, have encouraged Canadians not to save. It does not pay anybody in Canada to save money today. In fact, the way money is depreciating the quicker you can spend it the better off you are. In any event, governments have not encouraged people to save. You cannot take care of your elder relatives unless you do save.

Let us suppose someone has a government annuity of such and such an amount that will pay such and such a premium to a father and mother when they retire. Does that allow those persons to become exempt from the Canada Pension Plan because that is proof that they can look after themselves in retirement as well as they could if they were receiving benefits of the Canada Pension Plan? I suggest that does not make them exempt, and that is what the minister indicated.

A number of people in this House have made the suggestion that we in the Conservative party must believe in the freedom of religion, that the Canada Pension Plan does, in fact, prevent the Hutterian Brotherhood from practising their religion freely and that this is a contradiction. That is a very interesting concept, and I wonder what another arm of the government thinks about such a concept. I happen to have with me this afternoon a decision handed down by the Federal Court of Canada on September 15, 1973. This is not an old decision but is relatively new, and it is in respect of a case between a number of Hutterian people, as plaintiffs, and Her Majesty the Queen as defendant. This case was in respect of the payment of income tax by these people, and the suggestion was, by counsel for the plaintiff, that no income tax was leviable against them because they were not in receipt of income. Let me read from page 11 of this decision as follows:

—in any event, the income of a member is found to be taxable by reason of the provisions of the Income Tax Act, such provisions are inoperative because they are in conflict with the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights—

That was a reference to the position taken by counsel for the plaintiffs. That suggestion was made during the debate on Bill C-190. The suggestion is that because these provisions are in conflict with the Canadian Bill of Rights, specifically Section 1(c), they in effect interfere with the Hutterites' freedom of religion. The plaintiffs argued that because the Income Tax Act interfered with their freedom of religion it should not apply. The argument in this case was presented on September 11, 12 and 13, 1973. The government argued that the provisions of the Income Tax Act did not interfere with their right of freedom of religion, and at page 22 of the same decision we find the following stated:

Since the objects or purposes of each colony are not exclusively religious they cannot be ... "religious orders" within the meaning of Section 27(2) of the act—

That was clearly spelled out in that judgment at page 22 where we find the following statement, which I think is very significant and which I bring to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and his parliamentary assistant:

The application of the Income Tax Act in no way imposes any obligation upon the Hutterites to accept income. All that has been done is to enact legislation within the powers of the Parliament of Canada requiring the taxing authorities to tax the income earned by all Canadians including Hutterites.

What does the Canada Pension Plan do? It in no way imposes a tax on the Hutterites or anybody else if they do not make any income. In fact, this bill has a tendency to increase or broaden the terms of exemptions by increasing the amount one can earn without being subject to payments under the Canada Pension Plan. If you do not earn $600 a year you do not have to contribute one penny to the Canada Pension Plan, or that was the way it was, and this bill refers to the $600 amount and makes it 10 per cent on an adjustable scale, so it will go up over the years.

In any event, the Canada Pension Plan in no way obligates the Hutterites to accept income, and in no way imposes an obligation on them to pay to the Canada Pension Plan if they make less than $600 a year. They must only pay if they make more than that in earnings as individuals.

Let me just deal for a moment with the definition of "individual", and I did this at some length during the debate on Bill C-190 in respect of the whole question of social security. At pages 17 and 18 of this same judgment we find the following statement:

It is clear then that such earnings are the earnings of the members and are properly included as income in reporting their taxable income—

I do not intend to read the whole paragraph, but that in essence determines whether they should be considered as individuals under the Income Tax Act. Certainly, if they have earnings those earnings are taxable.

During the debate on Bill C-190 I read from the writings of a learned author who wrote about Hutterite teachings centuries ago. I believe his name was Rideman. He stated the Hutterites had no objection to and would comply with all taxes imposed by the government. He went on to state that they should render unto Caesar what is Caesar's. I will not read from his writings again, but the point is that contributions to the Canada Pension Plan are in fact taxes levied on any Canadian who earns income over and above a certain amount. If an individual does not have have an income over that amount the Canada Pension Plan does not apply. The question of whether they are allowed to freely practise their religion has been clearly spelled out. Their defence in respect of the application of the Income Tax Act is the same in respect of this plan, that it interferes with their right to freedom of religion. In any event, the court has ruled that the Income Tax Act did not interfere with that right of freedom of religion.

● (1550)

The defendant in that particular case was the Government of Canada. I commend the Government of Canada for taking that position. Here we have the Government of Canada, however, bringing forward a bill called C-19 which these people feel might interfere with their freedom of religion. It does not and will not. Unless they earn income they will not have to pay any attention to it. Here, clearly, the minister is trying to get rid of his workload because it is difficult to tax the Hutterites as individuals in respect of the Canada Pension Plan. They will not accept social security numbers, so the minister is attempting to lighten his load by increasing the load on every taxpayer of Canada.

The question of whether or not the Canada Pension Plan imposes a tax is interesting. One might look at the definition of the word "tax" in the Random House dictionary of the English language. It has this to say:

1. a sum of money demanded by a government for its support or for specific facilities or services, levied upon incomes, property, sales, etc.

This is a tax levied by the Government of Canada upon the people for a particular service. It goes on to state:

2. a burdensome charge, obligation, duty, or demand.-v.t.

3. (of a government) a. to demand a tax from (a person, business, etc.). b. to demand a tax in consideration of the possession or occurrence ...

That pretty well spells out what a tax is. I happen to have another dictionary, the Pocket Oxford edition. It states this in respect of the word "tax":

> Legally levied contribution to State revenue, levied from or in respect of; whose burden actually falls on those they are levied from . . .

That pretty well spells out the essence of what is a tax. It is a demand by the government upon the people whom the government is attempting to govern. This Canada Pension Plan premium is in essence a tax. I shall not suggest at this time whether or not it is a tax that is fairly applied. I think the fact that it covers only one third of the population of Canada suggests that it is not universal. I supported the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) in respect of his suggestion during the debate on the other bill that wives should be allowed to contribute a portion equal to their husband's contribution so that they could receive a full pension or in the event that there should be a separation within the family the wife would have made a contribution to the Canada Pension Plan.

An amendment of this type would mean that the legislation would cover a great deal more than one third of the people. I think the basic decision which must be made here is whether certain people are to be given the right of exemption from the Canada Pension Plan and not others. If we adopt the idea that some may be exempt because of religious beliefs then why should others not be exempt. My own religious belief is inferior to that of no one in this House. Therefore, I take great exception to the government suggesting that one religion is better than another. As recorded at page 1482 of Hansard, the minister said that because of his belief in freedom and tolerance he believed certain religious groups should be exempt. No one in this House cherishes his freedom more than I. I ask the government and the minister whether they really want this bill to be passed. I know the minister is not particularly fussy this week because this is purely a filler so far as the government is concerned. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came back today and it was nice to see him, but he really wanted to be away this week so they are just putting fillers before the House of Commons to test the wind so to speak. At the outset of my speech I indicated how the wind should blow in respect of Bill C-19.

An hon. Member: And we are hearing it.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): And you are hearing it, yes. This bill contains 57 clauses. That is sufficient number of clauses for some amendments to be moved. Some clauses contain subclauses and there might be two or three amendments filed in respect of a clause by certain members of the House of Commons. The bill contains 46 pages and there are many words contained on each page. This bill is in for a rough ride, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows we may be into an election before we even get through second reading of this bill.

An hon. Member: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): What am I going to do about it? If that is the only way I can kill this bill I hope an election comes along, but the bill shall die if I have my way. As recorded at page 1482 of Hansard, the minister stated that because he believes in freedom and tolerance he thinks the House should accept exemptions in respect of these two religious orders.

Let us take a look at the question of tolerance. Is it tolerance because the minister thinks these organizations are quasicharitable groups? Let us see what the court had to say with regard to the question of charitable groups. At page 9 the judgment states:

> The above, then, sets the framework for these appeals. Counsel for the Plaintiffs early in the trial acknowledged that he was not arguing that the colonies were charitable organizations . . .

I have known many lawyers who would not discard any point if they thought it would benefit their client, but this lawyer whom these people hired—and they get the best since they have the money because they have not paid income tax for many years—did not attempt to argue that these were charitable organizations.

The judgment states this clearly at page 9. I will read it again:

> Counsel for the Plaintiffs early in the trial acknowledged that he was not arguing that the colonies were charitable organizations within the meaning of Section 62(1)(e) of the Income Tax Act . . .

That disposes of that question in a hurry. Their legal counsel did not argue that they were a charitable organization. Why should the minister, out of the bigness of his heart, which he has demonstrated clearly all across Canada recently on a number of issues, ask for tolerance on the part of the House of Commons when the counsel for these people did not argue that they represent a charitable organization. Then, what are they? This is the question. In order to make it abundantly clear I should like to read from the Hutterite Church doctrine or what one might call their charter. It states this:

> Each congregation or community of the Church is empowered, inter alia, as follows:
> To engage in, and carry on farming, stock raising, milling, and all branches of these industries; and to manufacture and deal with the products and by-products of these industries;

● (1600)

> To carry on any other business (whether manufacturing or otherwise) which may seem to said congregation or community of the said Church capable of being conveniently carried on in connection with its business or calculated directly or indirectly to enhance the property or rights of the congregation or community;

That particular part of their charter spells out what they are. In essence they engage in the business of farming, stock raising and milling. This is no secret. Everyone in Alberta knows that they carry on an extensive operation in farming, milling and even manufacturing. When I was a young fellow I used to favour their brand of pancake flour. It made good pancakes, and still does. Now, my wife makes the pancake mix herself rather than buying the ready mixed pancake flour. But if you live in Alberta you can buy their pancake flour. The Hutterites in Alberta are in the manufacturing business. They manufacture pancake flour. It has a brand name and I would be doing them a disservice if I did not mention it. It is called Coyote Howling Pancake Flour, or something like that. In any case it has a picture of the coyote howling, and it makes good pancakes.

The Hutterites do not pay their workers compensation nor do they pay minimum wages in that manufacturing firm. Only recently have they paid income tax, that is after the judgment of a year ago and the last one which I quoted of last September when the income tax department told them that income taxes must be collected from them.

One can reach any conclusion one wants to on this particular issue. This judgment from which I quoted states very clearly at page 10:

Apparently until the year 1960, the colonies paid no income taxes of any kind.

The first court case was fought in 1966 and the final case was in 1970 with regard to one group of Hutterites commonly referred to as Lehrer-Leuts. I am speaking of Darius-Leuts rather than Lehrer-Leuts, and they fought this case on their own, as a separate entity. One or two years ago in May the Lehrer-Leuts lost their case, and last September the Darius-Leuts lost theirs before the federal court of Canada. Both cases were fought on the basis of the concept that the income tax levied against these people would, in one way or another, restrict freedom of religion. The courts ruled it did not.

It is interesting that there should be members of parliament coming before the House trying to make the case that this tax will restrict their freedom of religion. In no way will it affect their religion because, in the first instance, they do not make any income so this tax will never be levied; second, if they have really taken the vow of poverty, they do not want to make an income in any case, so they do not have to worry.

The judgment went on to summarize findings in a similar case. It reads:

. . . in my opinion, applicable in this case with the result that it would seem there is nothing to preclude the application of the Income Tax Act to the farm income merely because of the reference in each colony's Articles of Association to the promotion of religion.

Before I was led astray I read out the article of the charter of the Hutterites which specifically encourages them to engage in a business. The judge singled out this aspect in particular. I maintain that that particular aspect applies equally to the Canada Pension Plan which in essence is a tax, as I showed by quoting from the two dictionaries earlier. The judgment goes on to say:

. . . the revenues earned by the Plaintiffs herein are mere depositories for the income earned by each member. Since no distinction can be drawn between individual members each is the recipient of an equal share of the net income, even though it is not drawn by them and this is income within the meaning of sections 2, 3 and 4 and therefore taxable in their hands.

In other words, their income is taxable whether or not they give it back to the colony. If a portion of it remains in their hands, it can be used by them in whatever way they like. However, they must pay the levy for doing business in this country. It has often been said that they are good people, that they ask nothing from this country and therefore we should not tax them. It is said that very few of them go to jail and that they mind their own business. All this is true, but it is also true that 99 per cent of all Canadians do not go to jail, and 99 per cent of those engaged in business wish the government would leave them alone.

However, the long tentacles of government reach into every facet of every Canadian's life. Sometimes I feel that these tentacles reach farther every day, so why exclude a particular group from their reach? It has been said that they are good people. I will not argue whether they are good or bad. My argument rests on the fact that they live in Canada and many of them are Canadian citizens who do business in this country. Therefore, they should pay tax for doing business, whether or not they are good, whether or not they go to jail, etc.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

It has been argued that members of the Amish or Mennonite order in southern Ontario do not take advantage of what society has to offer them. What is interesting is that before they were to appear before the committee, some members of the committee did not want the Hutterites to appear so they quickly concluded the deliberations of the committee and the group did not appear. That was the committee members' mistake on that occasion. Perhaps it is true that the Amish group in southern Ontario do not depend on modern technological advances, but that cannot be said of the Hutterites in the three prairie provinces. They certainly take advantage of every new technological advance in carrying out their business. Certainly, they are not backward.

If I were a young, inexperienced farmer wanting to engage in the business of agriculture, one of the most knowledgeable men I could visit and from whom I could take advice regarding what is current, practical and applicable in agriculture in western Canada would be the Hutterite farming boss in the area. He knows what is going on and takes advantage of modern technological services provided to the farming community in Canada, as well as to the manufacturing industries with regard to flour and milling. They take advantage of our society and therefore I say they should pay the tax for belonging to our society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

● (1610)

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising to express my thoughts on Bill C-19, I should first of all like to make a few comments on clauses other than those that have been covered by the former speaker.

First of all, on the question of surviving spouse, I welcome the change in the bill that brings in the term "surviving spouse". I question, though, the adequacy of the 60 per cent which is being used as the base for the amount of the former pension that can be received by the surviving spouse. As mentioned by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, (Mr. Munro), while the expenses of the surviving spouse might not equal the total living expenses prior to the death of the spouse, surely 60 per cent is hardly adequate to meet the daily living needs of the person left behind. I would urge the minister very earnestly, that a re-examination of that 60 per cent be undertaken and that possible changes be examined very carefully in committee. Questions have also been raised as to whether the salaries of the husband and wife should not be combined when contributions are calculated so they could make a total contribution based on both salaries, regardless of whether that contribution is paid by the husband or the wife alone. I should like to present that possibility to the minister for further examination.

I also welcome the change that removes the earnings test between ages 65 and 70 in order for a person to be eligible for Canada Pension Plan benefits. I believe in our society today, with a retirement age of 65, one should not be asked to prove whether one is entitled to a retirement pension. In view of the fact that the Canada Pension Plan is a contributory plan, largely by the employer and employee, and these contributions have been made for the benefit of the employee, that person should receive those benefits at age 65. That correlates with the age at which a person becomes eligible for the old age pension or the guaranteed income supplement. I believe it is only natural and right that these clauses should be introduced. I welcome them and commend the minister for introducing them.

As I am sure many hon. members realize, when I got to my feet this afternoon those matters were not going to be the main thrust of my argument. I find it strange to be in a position where I have to challenge the thoughts of a colleague who sits on the same side of the Speaker as myself, but that is what I intend to do today. First of all, the spokesman for my party on this bill very clearly defined that our party was going to endorse the legislation. He gave the commitment of our party that we favoured the changes and while we have certain questions on various points, by and large we are in agreement with the bill. I did not believe that the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) was a brave person, although I will give him credit for that as well, but I believed he was an honest person, stating very clearly the position that his party had taken. I endorse the position that the hon. member for Hillsborough has taken on behalf of our party.

When a bill is presented to the House, every member has a right in his own good conscience to either say he is in favour of the bill or is opposed to the bill. I do not remove that right or have any intention of removing it from those who disagree with me, but I do seriously question a person who uses arguments that, through innuendo, question the sincerity of others and uses that approach to block a bill. I seriously object to that kind of approach, Mr. Speaker.

The basis of the Canada Pension Plan has been the concept of universality, that a person who earns a taxable amount of income pays Canada Pension Plan premiums. This was also the basis of the argument which the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) used but I maintain, just as I did on Bill C-190, that the concept of universality was not used when the Canada Pension Plan was introduced. I do not know how you can say you have universality and yet you do not. It is an all or nothing type of thing. When the Canada Pension Plan was brought before this House and passed by this House, exceptions were given to people who made the vows of perpetual poverty and who were church employed. Since the date when the bill was passed, effective in 1966, there have been people in Canada who have had the option of exempting themselves on the basis of those two positions.

I am not quarrelling or questioning whether people exercise that option, but I say the option was there and is there today. I further say, Mr. Speaker, if you follow the argument, that this exception was given because of freedom of religion, then it makes no difference whatsoever whether a person exercises that option. The option is in the bill, and it is in the law of Canada today.

If that is the basic concept of the argument I should like to read from the baptismal vows of the Hutterian Brethren, very specifically as to what their position is relative to these two clauses. The vows are that no one shall have any private possession any more: for one gives and surrenders himself to the Lord and His church with all that he has and is able to do, as it was in the original apostolic church, when no one said of his possessions that they were his own, but all things were held common to them.

The hon. member for Crowfoot mentioned the book "All Things Common" by Dr. Victor Peters. Dr. Peters takes the position, after extensive study of the Hutterians, specifically in Manitoba—and I know Dr. Peters—that the Hutterians are a group of people who are engaged in making a living for themselves. There is no question about that and I would maintain that almost all Canadians fall in that category. He maintains, too, that they hold all things common under the terms of Acts, chapter 2. This fact has also been based on a judgment in a case in Manitoba in which a number of former Hutterians left a colony. They took their case to court, arguing that the proportion they constituted of the male household heads of the colony of which they had formerly been members, entitled them to that same proportion of assets of that colony. Say for example, that they constituted 30 per cent of heads of households in the colony, then they should have received 30 per cent of the total assets of the colony when they left it. In the judgment the court very clearly stated, on the basis of the baptismal vows, that no one held anything but that the total membership held all goods and, as a result, those goods could not be divided because the common ownership had been given voluntarily by an adult at the age of accountability. One is not born a Hutterite. On reaching the age of accountability, a person can decide whether, by baptism, to become a Hutterite. That is an adult decision. It is not something which happens through birth.

How can you follow the argument of the hon. member, that you possess nothing as an individual? The Canada Pension Plan allows an individual to build up personal equity, just as if he were a member of a registered retirement savings plan. A person can build up equity by being a member of the plan, or by taking out a plan with an insurance company or similar type of company. At present we are talking of equity built up through membership in the Canada Pension Plan. How does an individual do this? He is given a social insurance number and makes contributions. The concept of individuality is in direct violation to the vows he has taken in the case in question, as an individual is held to own nothing.

Much of the previous speaker's argument was based on the fact that the Hutterites are not a church but, rather, a corporation or business. It is true that up until the 1960's they did not pay income tax. The government of Canada challenged that situation in the courts. The courts maintained the government's position. I firmly accept that decision. I am of the opinion that if Hutterites make a profit from farming, they should pay a tax. The difficulty with regard to the tax situation to which the hon. member referred and the judgment to which he referred was this: up to that time, Hutterites had paid taxes as any other corporation pays them. The tax decision resulted in Hutterites being assessed and required to pay individually. This violated their concepts under which individuals do not gain wealth. They challenged the decision but lost the case. It is now a matter of history. I want to make it clear that they challenged that decision as a corporate body and not as individuals, because it has been held that an individual should not build up wealth for himself.

There is no evidence to show that Hutterites have not paid taxes, or that they have paid less or more than other Canadians. They are paying their taxes. That is not the real point at issue. If one argues that CPP premiums are a tax, one might argue that the Hutterites should pay such premiums. If you subscribe to the idea that you should render unto Caesar those things which are Caesar's and unto God those things which are God's, the tax should be rendered to Caesar—I do not know if that is an apt reference to the present government. That is the argument one might make.

I do not think that the basic concept of CPP premiums being a tax applies in this case. Why? The individual who pays CPP premiums will also get a personal benefit. The member who began this argument said that some people might even get windfall benefits. Further, the member made the innuendo that this bill treats some religions as being superior to others. He then destroyed that argument by saying that the Hutterites are not a church, not a religion, but a business. I do not know how they can be a religion and not a religion at the same time; but that is the point he tried to make. That is not the main point of my argument. I do not see how we can maintain that one religion is better than another. I do not see how you can bring that concept into this argument on what the bill does.

The government took the position, first enunciated by the former minister of national revenue and repeated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), that Hutterites, effective January 1, 1972, would be exempt from the requirement to pay Canada Pension Plan premiums. Clauses relating to perpetual poverty and church employment were included in the original bill and therefore the present provision is not a special dispensation, as such clause has already been included. Therefore the government is fulfilling an obligation which was set out in the act it brought before the House in the 1960's.

Let me make one more argument. If my argument proves valid for January 1, 1972, it should prove valid for the time of the inception of the bill in 1966. What I am speaking of is this: We live in a democracy. Many have come here, to become part of the democratic framework of Canada. Canada took in many of these people who had been persecuted in other countries. Look at their history, and look at the persecutions under which they suffered in the 1500's, and at the places to which they were driven. At last they came to Canada; Canada gave them haven. All they asked of Canada was that they be allowed to follow their religion. Canada guaranteed them religious freedom. They did not ask for special favours. They did not say they would not become good citizens. They said they would obey the laws of this country, and they have. If you champion individual freedom, how can you champion it for one group but not for another? If certain freedoms are provided in a statute of Canada, how can you provide them for one group but not for another? All this bill does is finally rectify an inequity that has existed since the days the Canada Pension Plan bill was introduced.

As far as the democratic rights which this country gave to the Hutterites are concerned, I would like to point out that in Alberta, where there are a number of Hutterite colonies, there was a law that Hutterites could not build a Hutterite colony within 40 miles of an existing colony. It was called the 40 mile limit. The present government of Alberta rescinded that law. Under the Alberta bill of rights, the Alberta government took the stance that it was discriminatory legislation against a specific group.

Granted there are problems. I am not denying that. However, I think a number of us may have had neighbours with whom we might have had a problem or two. If we are honest about it, maybe some neighbours even had a problem with us. Alberta has rescinded the 40 mile law. There is a gentleman's agreement. I appreciate the difficulties in the implementation of it, but surely that is what life is all about. It is the responsibility of government to iron out differences between governments and individuals.

In Manitoba there has never been a law specifically relating to where Hutterites are to settle. We have a gentleman's agreement or the so-called 10 mile limit whereby Hutterites are asked not to build colonies within 10 miles of existing colonies. This has worked out quite well in Manitoba. Why? Because it has been based on co-operation between one group and another, between a government and its citizens. That trust is there. It worked with the former administration of Manitoba and it works with the present administration. Why? Because we want to make it work. If you are going to legislate and say that you are better than I or vice versa, you will run into trouble. You cannot do it. I maintain that this bill is trying to rectify that discrimination.

I would much rather discuss this bill on its merits but I have been forced into taking a position on clause 7 and that is why I spent most of my time debating that. I would like to conclude with this thought. If we want freedom, and if we want to do more than give lip service to the Bill of Rights, then we should be very careful and sincere about groups or individuals who feel certain actions would be a violation of conscience but not a violation of the laws of this country. Government should have the conscience and the ability to say a provision is discriminatory and remove the discrimination. That is the only way democracy will work.

I commend the minister for following up the promise made by the former Minister of National Revenue. I was disappointed in the previous session. On the last day of that session, I asked the minister about Bill C-190 because I was disappointed it had not gone through. The minister will recall that. I simply wish to reiterate that this bill has my full support and I hope for its speedy passage.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by associating myself with the comments just made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). He is well known to his colleagues for his decency, sense of compassion and sense of justice. He again demonstrated that. We can all be proud to be members of the House of Commons with him. His remarks, which were short and extremely meaningful, were among the finest I have heard since my election to the House of Commons in October 1972.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I will not speak for a great period of time. Like the previous member, I will confine my remarks to that portion of the bill which deals with the rights of minorities who conscientiously object to being included in the Canada Pension Plan.

This bill is essentially the same in relation to that particular aspect as the one presented in the last session. It is my intention to deal only with the question of the Old Order Mennonites in my area. Frankly, I am not competent to deal with the question of the rights of Hutterites. This was dealt with very fully and in an excellent manner by the hon. member for Provencher. I certainly accept his judgment on that.

The problem exists in my particular area because Mennonites are not allowed to participate in insurance schemes. The past practice has been that they will willingly pay taxes. Because their religion does not allow them to collect welfare or money from other programs such as family allowance or old age pensions, they simply pay their taxes but do not collect any money from these schemes. In other words, they contribute vastly more than the average Canadian to the general welfare, but take nothing in return. All they ask is a chance to live a decent life in peace and in freedom.

Old Order Mennonites are not allowed to participate in the Canada Pension Plan because it is considered an insurance scheme. The Mennonites in my area have publicly stated on a number of occasions that they are quite prepared to pay money and simply not collect, if the revenues come through general tax revenues and if it is not considered an insurance program. Indeed, the Mennonites in my area have made it clear they are willing to pay to a charity a comparable amount of money to what they are being asked to pay to the Canada Pension Plan. It is not a matter of asking for a free ride or for someone else to bear their burden. They are trying to abide by the principles of their religion as best they can. Let no one misrepresent what they are asking from this House of Commons.

In December 1971, the minister's predecessor and the predecessor of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) issued a joint press release indicating that in the next session of the House of Commons a bill would be introduced to exempt Mennonites and Hutterites, people who for reasons of conscience could not participate in the Canada Pension Plan, as of January 1, 1972. The government did not keep that promise. The legislation was not introduced in the next session. As a consequence, the Mennonites were forced to choose between their country and their God. The government seized the cream cheques of these people and confiscated that portion of their income. Ultimately, the sanctions available were for these people to go to jail for simply trying to live their religion.

In the last session, this minister finally introduced legislation to exempt Mennonites and other people with conscientious objections as of January 1, 1972. When the minister appeared before the committee, he was asked whether he was willing to accept an amendment or bring in further legislation which accepted the principle that these people were being denied freedom of religion by being forced to pay after January 1, 1972 in exactly the same way as they were deprived of their freedom of religion by making these payments prior to 1972. The minister refused. There is some question in my mind about both his sense of logic and his sense of justice. The house leader and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) allowed a tiny minority of the members of this House to frustrate the will of the majority. The hon. member for Provencher, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) and I went to speak to our counterparts on the other side to ask them at least to schedule the legislation. It would have been a lot easier to get that legislation through, a simple piece of legislation with regard to which the filibuster was dying, than it will be to pass the bill we are dealing with today. But the government was not willing to schedule the legislation. They allowed it to die.

Since hearing first of this matter I have held conversations with people in my area who have had dealings with the Mennonites. They have found them the finest of people, excellent citizens of Canada and of their community. The whole area has benefited economically and socially from their participation. The Old Order Mennonites are highly regarded, as anyone who wished to do so could ascertain if he talked to their neighbours. Mr. Speaker, the strength of a democracy is its willingness to tolerate people who choose to be different from the majority in a society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): We are saying in this bill that people have a right to differ, a right to live their own lives. This is a principle which makes the greatest difference between the socialists, the leftists and those who, as I do, support the Conservative party. It is the ability to allow a person to live his own life, to be different from the mass, to live in freedom. This is why I am proud to be a Conservative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): If any member of parliament believes that an appeal to prejudice or fear will cause Canadians to rally to his banner, let me disabuse him of that notion. Such an appeal is an insult to rural Canadians who have proven their tolerance, their sense of justice and their compassion. They will reject any such attempt to win their favour, whether it is expressed directly or in code. The politics of prejudice is dying in Canada, and it will not be missed. There should be no doubt as to where the majority of this House, or the majority of this party, stand. The will of the majority of Canadians must not be frustrated this time, and the rights of these Christian and devout people must not be denied them any longer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate and bring forward some ideas on an aspect of the bill which has not been touched on so far, that is, the general effect of the cost of the Canada Pension Plan in relation to its benefits in the future.

I am concerned to think we have been considering only the benefits which the CPP has in store for our citizens rather than its effect on our future economy. I might say that, speaking personally, I will probably receive benefits earlier than many people in this chamber. But in the course of this debate we have not touched on what the cost is likely to be, or upon the changes which are likely to be felt in the financial structure of the country. We have not questioned the effect of the proposed amendments or the actuarial soundness of the plan. We have tended to talk as though there were a bottomless pit of money rather than a fund designed to begin shrinking within the decade. I have heard it said by people who have studied it that the plan as now constituted will be bankrupt in four or five years. We have not considered the enormous amount of capital, under the control of the federal government and available for the use of the provinces; that, in fact, none of this money will be left to private enterprise for the development of Canada and to sustain economic growth. Enormous sums will be hived off from the general economy, taking no part in the national development.

I believe we have been guilty of assuming that dollars are the most important thing about a pension. In fact it is what those dollars can buy that matters. Merely giving dollars is of little value unless those dollars can purchase for their recipient the necessities of life. One comment about the inflation in Germany after the Second World War sticks in my mind. The housewives there said: We took our money to the store in baskets and brought the food home in our pockets. More and more, workers and employers regard the CPP contributions as a tax. With the emptying of the fund it looks less like a contributory, self-supporting pension scheme and more like a transfer payment. I have no quarrel with this essentially, as long as we know what we are doing and where we are going. We need to examine the consequences of this legislation, particularly to the young, including those who have not yet made their first CPP contribution, and demonstrate an awareness of the cost burden in the years ahead. To pass this legislation blindly without discussing these aspects of the plan would be a hasty action indeed.

This afternoon we have been discussing the aspect of the bill which concerns a religious group. These considerations are important. But if we do not deal with the financial aspects, the situation in the years ahead will be perilous. The magnitude of the benefits that the Canada Pension Plan will bring is quite staggering compared with what those affected—that is, the middle and lower income groups—might customarily expect. The minister outlined the very generous benefits that will be accorded those who contribute to the plan. If a contributor in 1966, at the onset of the plan, was earning $4,000, then was earning $5,000 a year in 1974 and $7,000 in 1985, and be then retired, had the plan remained as it was originally he would have received only $162 a month whereas he will now receive $223 a month because a cost of living index relationship has been built into the plan.

Then, the minister pointed out, and I think quite rightly, in calculating the entire income of a single wage earner or a couple, that a little over a year ago the maximum income derived from the Canada Pension Plan and old age security would have been about $240 a month, whereas today it is $320 a month. By 1980 this same couple will receive $525 a month, and by 1985 well over $700 a month. This assumes that the wage earner makes $7,000 a year during his last working year. In addition to that, the cost of living index will be incorporated into the plan, and with the increase now running at 10 per cent hon. members can see a truly large amount of money is involved. The cost of giving our retired people pensions will be a large element in our over-all social structure.

The minister quoted an example which showed that in 10 years a couple would increase their pension from $300 a month, with one of the couple working, to $700 a month. If he were to save this amount of money, the difference in amount would be quite staggering. Many years ago, in attempting to understand insurance annuities and so on, I was informed that it took approximately $1,000 of annuity at age 70 to give an individual $10 a month, for his life expectancy. At 65 an individual required an annuity of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,300 to provide him with $10 a month.

Let us see what the Canada Pension Plan and old age security will do for the couple earning a maximum of $7,000 a year, with only one person earning. This single wage earner would have had to save somewhere in the neighbourhood of $40,000 to $50,000 in order to get a comparable annuity for himself. This is to say nothing of the very great benefits the CPP confers upon widows, dependent children and the disabled. I am not saying that this is not right, but I point out that the Canada Pension Plan as constituted, along with old age security, represents a transfer payment of a considerable amount.

In addition, no private plan would carry with it the cost of living index, as the CPP does. In fact, the $700 a month forecast by the minister with the cost of living index incorporated into the CPP and old age security that a couple would receive in 1985 may well rise as high as $1,200 a month. Perhaps this couple will need that amount then, but nevertheless this is an indication of the actuarial scope of the Canada Pension Plan.

When walking up to the House of Commons this morning I passed an institution down the street that invited me to invest my money. According to a sign in the window, if I invested $10 in 1966 that amount would now be worth $13.59. In other words, in the space of eight years the man who invested $10 would have made $3.59. This works out to approximately four cents on every dollar per year, not including personal income tax. When he comes to pay income tax on that amount, as he will some day, this investor is making a cent and a half on every dollar invested. This underlines how difficult it is to save money and how private fields cannot compete with the Canada

Pension Plan as amended by this bill. A lot of fundamental changes are going to occur in our society as a result of this bill.

In other words, this bill makes largely ridiculous the saving of money for an individual's retirement, at least the individual with an income below $10,000 or $12,000. It might be worth the while of wealthy people to save money but I presume they do not need to save money for retirement. For anyone earning less than $10,000 to $15,000, the wisdom of saving money can be seriously questioned. Any savings by the group above 50 years of age earning under $10,000 to $12,000 will be largely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but it is now five o'clock. Pursuant to Standing Order 40, it is my duty—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Perhaps I should put the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Canada—Negotiations respecting use of Winnipeg as overhaul base for Boeing 727 aircraft; the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty)—Housing—Action by government to reduce cost; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Unemployment Insurance—Eligibility for benefits of unemployed rural workers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions, and unless our tentative understanding has fallen through, I believe there might be agreement to use whatever part of this hour between five and six might be necessary to complete second reading of this bill.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. member. I think we should go into private members' hour, as was the original intention.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member does not agree with his own House leader.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

● (1700)

[Translation]

Since there are no private bills on the order paper, the House will now proceed to the consideration of notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR COPY OF AGREEMENT WITH WEST INDIAN GOVERNMENT FOR WORKERS TO HARVEST CANADIAN CROPS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the agreement between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the West Indian governments with respect to the hiring of West Indian workers to harvest certain Canadian crops.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since I now have the information I asked for in the motion on the order paper, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member for Bellechasse be allowed to withdraw notice of motion for papers No. 1?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR COPY OF EVALUATION REPORT OF CANADA MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and the government have refused to agree to the publishing of a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program as this is in line with the general policy of this government over the years to give members of parliament and of the public as little information as possible. The Department of Manpower and Immigration spends almost $600 million for its work in the field of manpower and immigration, and I exclude from that figure the amount which is spent by the Unemployment Insurance Commission which reports to parliament and the people of Canada through the minister. I will confine myself and my remarks to those programs conducted by the department in the field of manpower and immigration.

When one looks at this year's estimates, he sees that the department has estimated its expenditures for the year

1974-75 in the amount of $599 million. If one looks at the breakdown, he will see that it will be spending some $315 million on manpower program activities, and when one looks at the utilization and operation of those programs he sees that the estimated expenditure amounts to almost $300 million. Let us assume for the sake of argument that this department is doing a superlative job. I suggest that the officials are still human beings and can make mistakes, and if a member of parliament is in touch with his constituents he will know from speaking with people who have been in touch with manpower training schools and community colleges that from time to time departmental officials make decisions they feel are arbitrary or that they cannot understand.

Some weeks ago I raised a question with the minister in respect of the amount of money the department contracts to turn over to the provinces for manpower training. This amount seems to have been cut this year in respect of training projects by something in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent in almost every province. That may be a good decision as perhaps we have been spending too much money in the training of too many people, but there has been no evidence made public or to members of parliament at meetings of the standing committee, or to provincial governments, that would substantiate such a decision. This is a unilateral ukase on the part of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Without suggesting that officials of the department were wrong, they should be ready to explain and justify what is being done. They should be ready to show the people of Canada and members of this and provincial governments what has led them to the decision to cut the expenditures in respect of these programs, or the adoption of new ones.

What has bothered me for a number of years is the seeming desire on the part of the government to keep everything quiet, hidden and secret. It may be that the expenditure of something in the neighbourhood of $500 million is necessary, worthwhile and justified, but if that is so the department should be willing and eager to give this information to the public. The department should not have to be urged or coerced.

Let me give a specific case. We have a mobility program operated by the department of manpower under the jurisdiction of the minister through which a person with a particular skill can be encouraged to move to another area where there is a requirement for that skill if that individual cannot find suitable work in his own city, town or village. This might involve a miner from Cape Breton being moved to Sudbury or an electrician being moved from an area where there is no work for one with such a skill to Vancouver or another city where there is work. This is a voluntary program and no worker is forced to move because there is no work for him in his field in his own city or province.

The whole purpose of the mobility program is to encourage workers who have skills which cannot be put to use in the area where they reside to move to places where there is a need for skilled workers in that field, and where the likelihood is that such workers can obtain meaningful employment at satisfactory rates of pay. I support that program, but I think the people of Canada are entitled to as much assurance as possible that it is operating successfully and is actually achieving the purpose of finding employment for people in other areas when they are not able to find employment in their own cities or provinces.

I would hate to think of a person who had been encouraged to move from say Cape Breton Island or Halifax to Sudbury or Toronto, because supposedly there was a job waiting for him there, finding, after having worked for a month, two months, three months or six months that there was no longer any work for him and that he was unemployed in a strange city and a strange province. I am not saying this is what happens, but it is a possibility. I would hate to think that a worker who was encouraged to move by way of being given a mobility grant might find that the employer did not live up to the conditions. Perhaps the pay scale did not turn out to be what had been promised, or the working conditions were not as stated or decent housing was not provided after he had been promised that it would be available. This is the type of problem which I submit can and does occur. I do not say this in criticism of the government. The only way in which there could be no mistakes in respect of a mobility program would be if there were no such program.

I am not opposed to a mobility program. On the contrary I think it should be expanded. How can we know that the program is working in the way in which it was designed to work? How can we know whether the officials administering the program are doing a job or are doing it properly? I submit we cannot know if the government is determined as it seems to be to hide everything. I suggest, as I suggested on other occasions and I hope I will be more successful this time, that there is no reason the government should keep secret these house surveys, these detailed reports merely because the position is taken that they are confidential and therefore cannot be disclosed. On the contrary, I say we require much more information, much more openness and much more desire on the part of the government to tell the people of Canada what the government is doing and why it is doing it. The cost of government increases from year to year. The number of people employed by governments, federal, provincial and municipal, increases from year to year. It does not seem to matter whether the government involved is Liberal as it is federally, Conservative as it is in Newfoundland and in Ontario or NDP as it is in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or British Columbia. In any event, the cost of government increases.

The number of public servants employed by governments increases. I say this is inevitable so long as the people want government to provide more services. I do not object to it, but I believe governments must be more accountable for the responsibilities they undertake. I think governments must have not only a duty but a responsibility to account to the people for what they are doing and to inform the people what they are doing and why they are doing it. The people should be informed concerning how programs are operating, the success of the programs and so on. It is for this reason, after becoming aware of the fact that the government has received an evaluation report on the Canada Manpower Mobility Program, that I moved this motion. I would urge the government to stop hiding things. When it hides such reports the government convinces members of parliament and members of the public that they should wonder what is going on. I believe some members on the government side might agree with me in this regard but they cannot say so because they are members of the government. I do not say this in a critical way because I assume if I were a member of a government party I would feel the same way.

Stories are told about people ripping off the unemployment insurance fund, drawing welfare benefits to which they are not entitled and so on. One may hear stories about farmers receiving assistance under some farm legislation to which they are not entitled. If hon. members doubt what I am saying they need simply tune in on any hotline radio program in order to find out the type of feeling people have about governments, federal, provincial and municipal. In this way hon. members would realize that people are concerned about the way in which governments operate. I suggest to members on the government side that it is not surprising that people feel the way they do. On the contrary, it is surprising that more of them do not feel the same way.

If one wishes to see the extent to which people can become upset, or the extent to which they can come to believe that governments and elected members of a legislature or state or federal government can fail to do the job, one might simply look at the various polls being conducted in the United States concerning how the people of the United States feel about their President and their elected representatives in the House of Representatives or in the United States Senate. In a recent poll it was indicated that less than 25 per cent of the people believed their elected representatives are doing a good job. A large part of the disillusionment in this regard is that, rightly or wrongly, the people believe that President Nixon has failed to give them the facts concerning the Watergate affair. I am not suggesting for a moment that the people of Canada have as poor an opinion of their elected representatives as the American people have of theirs. I do not believe this is the case. I hope it is not. One should not be surprised, however, if Canadian citizens express concern or surprise about the way they are being governed if they are so consistently and deliberately kept in the dark concerning what is going on.

I wish to conclude my few remarks by simply appealing to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) to stop being so determined about hiding the real facts concerning what is going on in his department. If he believes, as I think the minister should, that his department, his officials and the people who work in his department are trying their best to do a good job and on the whole are succeeding, then the minister should have no hesitation in agreeing to table this kind of report so that in this area the people of Canada would be able to see whether the program is working and the way in which it is working.

● (1720)

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time I have had the pleasure and privilege of following the hon. member. It seems to me that he keeps repeating month after month, year after year the same fiction that we have heard from him and others about this particular government, namely, that it seems to be a secretive government that does not want to let the opposition know what is going on. We know that that is fiction, that there never has been a more open government or one that has been keener to ensure that opposition parties in particular have access to information. Not only are they given access to information but they are given research staffs—an unheard of step. This government, in the interests of being democratic—

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: I see the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) is speaking from his usual position, which is sitting down, not wanting to participate in the debate and not having the courage to speak from a standing position.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Cullen: It is not my role, as a backbencher, to answer questions. There is a position here that I want to advance.

An hon. Member: You do not have the courage to answer the question.

Mr. Cullen: If I may finish my remarks, I will be happy to accept any question from the hon. member at the conclusion of my remarks.

The point I was endeavouring to make is that it was this government which made funds available to the opposition parties so that they could hire a research staff and do more delving and digging. It was the regulations and rules passed by the House when this government was in power that permitted careful scrutiny of each bill at the meetings of various committees rather than having the bottleneck of committee of the whole House which would limit questions to those of two or three members on a particular bill. Now, we have a bill scrutinized in the committee its passage flows through much better and each member is given the opportunity to ask questions. If members have done their homework, they have the opportunity to obtain all the information that they want.

We also have the 40 minute question period, which is always extended beyond the time limit, as I think it should be, so that opposition parties can ask questions on a daily basis. In addition, we hear a catalogue of questions being answered in the ordinary course of events by the parliamentary secretary to the House leader. Despite the fact that more questions are put on the order paper due to the fact that opposition parties have research staff available to them, we find that anywhere from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the questions are answered. That is a commendable record. So for someone to suggest that this government is not being free with information is not in accordance with the facts.

I should like to paraphrase the statement of an individual who said that none is so blind as those who will not see. While listening to the hon. member, I thought it would be more appropriate to say that none is so poorly informed as those who will not read or, perhaps I should say, those who will not participate in debates that have taken place in this chamber. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on March 15, 1973, in what I felt was a splendid address and certainly guidance to opposition parties, gave an admirable presentation of this government's view and the views of the governments of Sweden, Great Britain and the United States, about the kinds of documents that should fall into the public domain. Then, he indicated the exceptions to such documents; in other words, those that should not be made public. On that occasion an appendix was added to the issue of Hansard of March 15 at page 2288. In that document the general principle is spelled out by the President of the Privy Council and I should like to read part of it:

General Principle

To enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry our their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistent with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

What we normally hear is a categorical denial of the exemptions without treating them on an individual basis. This, in fact, was the complaint registered by the President of the Privy Council when he stated this principle and exceptions to it. I will take one of them as an example, namely, "legal opinions or advice provided for the use of the government." I do not think anybody in his right mind, unless he is being totally political, can disagree with that exception. Another one is "papers, the release of which would be detrimental to the security of the state". There are 16 such exceptions. When we hear complaints by opposition members that a particular document should be made available or made public, it seems to me that we should answer on the basis of any of the 16 exemptions, and if they should be attacked, that is where the opposition parties should move in.

In this instance, when the hon. member moved his Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 12, in my view, he would have been well advised to read the comments made by Professor Knight of the University of Queensland in 1966. He would find there a strong case for not disclosing internal departmental memoranda. This is one of the main areas of interest in notices of motions which ask departments to produce internal memoranda. I will not read the whole article by Professor Knight but I think that a portion of it would indicate the thrust of the thinking of the Professor who is a recognized expert in the field. He said it in 1966 but I suggest it is equally true today:

The civil servant may feel, too, that he must avoid placing on record anything which is likely to offend or cut across the interests of any individual or group in the community. This could affect not only the generalist administrator having a policy advisory role, but also the large body of officials whose work is concerned essentially with matters of a technical or professional nature. An officer who prepared a report on, say, the relative merits of butter and margarine, might well find himself the centre of a political controversy long before any decision about subsidies or production restrictions had been reached at the political level. Even if he wished to defend himself and had the ability as a controversialist to do so, the means open to him to do so would hardly be adequate.

So we place our civil servants and people who were retained to advise government departments in an untenable position. If they are told that a particular study or report they are preparing for the consideration of the government on a policy that it has adopted or proposes to adopt or a program that has been in effect for a couple of years will not be kept confidential, I suggest that this weakens the report. If they give a report that they anticipate will be kept confidential and it is then not kept confidential, then I think you do a disservice to the individual who has been retained to give you that report.

There may be a series of suggestions in this report on the mobility program that the government would reject out of hand as not being consistent with the thrust of intention of the particular program. On that basis you would have an individual who has made a report contrary to a government position. A cabinet minister has the ultimate responsibility for making the decision, and then you would have a crossfire between the deputy minister, or whoever prepared the report, and the minister becoming a matter of public record.

I suggest that this would weaken the parliamentary system. This is going to the very root of what the parliamentary system is all about, that the man or individual who has the prime responsibility for a piece of legislation or a program is the minister himself, and it is up to him to cull out what he thinks is good in the program and then face the House of Commons on that subject. He then, of course, has to answer during examination of the estimates for the money that is put out on a particular program; he has to indicate its strength and defend its weakness. That responsibility in the parliamentary system falls upon the elected member who in this instance is a cabinet minister.

• (1730)

Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are many other members who wish to speak on the subject. I was going to elaborate, for the edification of the hon. member who moved the motion, on the general principles and exemptions that were indicated by the President of the Privy Council on March 15. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is here. I believe he participated in that debate. I thought, therefore, he might have drawn to the attention of his colleague why this particular report falls within the exemptions that were enumerated in the debate.

Recognizing that our time is limited, Mr. Speaker, I will yield the floor to others who wish to participate.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member will now entertain my questions. I gather that he will, from his gesture.

I should like to ask the hon. member for "Haldeman-Ehrlichman", who has just spoken on his concept of open government, what has happened to the assessment report of the OFY program for 1972, a program which operates without the authorization of a statute of this House. Also, what has happened to the assessment report of the OFY program for 1973? Why have we not had presented to the House the assessment of the LIP program for 1972 or 1973? Why have we not received in this House the assessment of the jeunesse Canada monde program? Why have we not received an assessment of the core funding program for native people? Why have we not received a copy of the assessment for the student summer employment program?

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I think the hon. member has my point. Can he answer these specific questions on behalf of his open government?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. The weakness of his action was pointed out by the snide remark in referring to me. I am the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, which I am proud to represent and which I hope to represent for many years to come.

The hon. member reminds me of an individual who looks at a glass of water which is three-quarters full and says it is one-quarter empty. That is why I would not want to live in a Conservative world. They always see the negative, black, and gloom and doom. In answer to the hon. gentleman's questions, I could use the tactic that he has used and catalogue a whole series of items that have been provided to the opposition at their request. There are many hundreds of reports, but he has catalogued five or six items that in his view should be made available now.

I suggest that the question has been asked of cabinet ministers already and satisfactory answers have been given, although they may not be satisfactory to him. There are good and sufficient reasons why some are not made available in the timetable in which the hon. member operates, which we have come to understand is from headline to headline.

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to intervene in this debate. However, I find myself in the unusual position of being able to agree with one of the socialist members of this House and, being struck by that unusual feeling, I thought I should express support for the motion and the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Having said that, however, I must say that I think this House, if anything, spends too much time on notices of motions for the production of papers. It spends too much time on these discussions because the government is forcing us into the position of continually bringing forward such motions. They could be avoided if this government were as open as it should be and if it recognized that the foremost responsibility of any member of parliament is to consider the programs of parliament and either to vote for or to withhold the supply of money to the government for carrying out the programs which it puts forward.

Here we have a classic case, as was pointed out by the hon. member who moved this motion. A department of this government spends $599 million per year; one could almost round out the figure to $600 million because, in keeping with the tradition of the Liberal Party as expressed by C. D. Howe, their attitude is "What's a million?" Unlike the hon. member for Winnipeg North, I will not excuse this government from its responsibility with regard to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The department is not entitled to expend funds not voted by this parliament. But they were spent anyway. This does not inspire confidence at all.

The Canada Manpower Mobility Program is worthy of support—and I think would receive it, from those who participated in the discussion of the program and voted supply,—if this House knew whether it is succeeding. Given the failure of this government to deal with unemployment, the projections as to unemployment in this country are that it will remain high and may even increase. This program, therefore, probably will be even more important as it seeks to encourage skilled people who are searching for jobs to relocate in areas where their skills can be used.

I come from the industrial city of Hamilton, and I venture to say that people will be referred there because we are in the fortunate position of being able to provide jobs. Indeed, if any problem is encountered by such major employers as Stelco and Dofasco, it is because of the abuses of the unemployment insurance program. Jobs are available, but sometimes people find it easier not to work. It has always been our belief in this country that a man should get what he works for, but he should work for what he gets. In Hamilton we know that this philosophy is not encouraged by the policies of this government.

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) who spoke before me put up a defence of the attitude of this government of hiding things and keeping them secret, basing this on the excuse that it was not necessary to produce papers because opposition parties had been provided with research staff. I venture to suggest that as eloquent as his arguments were, they were probably provided by his own research bureau. Having just entered the debate, I did not have the benefit of using the research bureau of the official opposition, excellent as it is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You don't know how lucky you are.

Mr. O'Sullivan: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says I don't know how lucky I am. Perhaps he is correct, except that I think the research bureau of the official opposition works with more accuracy and fairness than that of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I should know better than to permit a question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I will do so in tribute to his seniority.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member realize that I was suggesting that he will be a much better member if he does his own research work?

Mr. O'Sullivan: That is a very worth-while suggestion, and coming from someone as esteemed as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, with his years of experience, it is one which I hope to follow for a good many years to come.

To return to the basic argument of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, no amount of research and no amount of money applied to research can help a member of parliament discharge his responsibilities if he does not know what is going on in government and thus whether to withhold or to vote supply. We have another case of a program that does not fall within the purview of state secrecy or security, the right to privacy respecting confidential information that would be detrimental, if known, to the economy, or for any other reason. It is simply a program for which this parliament has voted funds. It has been demonstrated to be a department that does not inspire confidence in anyone, and we have a right to assess the program before we determine whether we should vote funds for it.

● (1740)

The general principle must not be overlooked. As the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton expressed it, information should always be provided to members of parliament if it will assist them in discharging their duties and not endanger the security of the state or of individuals within the state. Obviously, information about the Canada Manpower Mobility Program would assist members of parliament in discharging their foremost responsibility. Such information would not endanger the security of the state or of individuals within the state.

Government expenditures have reached a level which is nothing short of atrocious. The government is intruding more and more into the private sector and into the lives of individuals. The government is budgeting for expenditures of some $22 billion per year, or $1,000 for every man, woman and child in this country. I am not saying that $1,000 is spent on every man, woman and child; merely that the government's budget is huge when $1,000 per man, woman and child has to be budgeted for. If the parliamentary system is to be weakened, it will be weakened, not by disclosing information to which members of parliament are entitled but by withholding it. When you hide things from members of parliament, representatives duly elected of the people, you are saying, "We have something to hide."

If you have a good reason to withhold information, because disclosure would imperil the security of the state, individuals within the state or their right to privacy, that is one thing. On the other hand, when you withhold information you are encouraging people to fear what the government is doing, to be suspicious about how their money is spent. You weaken their confidence in democracy, confidence which is necessary if a democratic society is to function, if the government is to be respected and if it is to discharge its responsibilities to the people. This it can do only in an atmosphere of co-operation and when it feels it has the support of the people.

I join the hon. member in suggesting that whenever possible documents relating to government activity which will assist members of parliament discharge their responsibilities should be made available to members on the conditions previously referred to. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacGuigan) will respond in that spirit to my comments and, hopefully, give a more positive reply than has been given on other, similar occasions in this House.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the motion in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) reads:

> That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program.

When the hon. member originally requested the latest evaluation report on April 10, I replied to his request in these words as recorded at page 1331 of Hansard for that date:

> —the evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program was prepared jointly by the department and the Treasury Board secretariat as an internal working document for their exclusive use. I would therefore ask the member to withdraw his motion.

The hon. member was not willing to withdraw; hence, we are debating the matter today. This motion raises one of the greatest issues which confronts a democratic people—the right of people to know what is going on in their country. Although it may not be evident from hon. members' speeches, this is an exceedingly complex question: it is not a simple question to which a simple reply can be given. To show my general outlook on the subject, may I quote from the third report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments placed before the House in 1969. I had the privilege of being chairman of that committee. In the introduction to this report, the committee said:

> This report is based on the assumption that public knowledge of governmental activities is the basis of all control of delegated legislation. For parliamentary democracy is a system of government which requires that the executive be responsible to the legislature and that both be accountable to the people, and there can be neither responsibility nor accountability where there is no knowledge of what has been done. In political matters knowledge is the beginning of power, and its lack, impotence.

I stand by those words which I had the privilege of creating earlier.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That would be a good place to sit down.

Mr. MacGuigan: As I said, and would repeat for the benefit of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the question is not simple, neither is the answer. Despite the greatness of his contributions to the House, the hon. member tends to be precipitous in his comments.

The general principles which the government adopts were stated by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on March 15 last year. The criteria are set out in the appendix to Hansard at page 2288. As these have been alluded to, I do not think I need to repeat them. Basically, the thrust of these principles is in favour of providing members of parliament with all the factual information about government activity which can be provided consistent with the responsibility of the government to govern effectively. When speaking on the matter, the government House leader outlined a number of exemptions which he believed were necessary in order to enable the government to govern effectively. One of those exemptions relating to that which we are discussing today is No. 15, "Internal departmental memoranda".

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) earlier indicated the government's interest in keeping such documents internal to the government. If we followed the policy of releasing all such documents, a policy which hon. members opposite contend is proper, such policy could reduce us to the position of being unable to use paper for communication at all. If members on the government side, especially ministers and the public servants who advise them, could not use documents which are strictly for internal use, and if there were always the danger that these documents could be brought into the public arena at some time, it is difficult to see how the government could function effectively. Conditions like these would force the government to rely entirely on oral dealings. Obviously, that would not be of benefit to the country.

I remind hon. members opposite that there are many ways of obtaining factual information. The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton pointed out that this government has been very, very open. He gave as an example the research staff which the government has provided to opposition parties for the first time in Canadian political history. That this is not irrelevant I shall try to indicate in a moment.

As a result of the report of the committee on statutory instruments to which I referred a few moments ago, the government instituted a whole host of procedures which helped to bring about more publicity with respect to statutory instruments, and in that way, as well as in a number of other ways, to safeguard the liberties of the Canadian people. This government has been dedicated to the concept of open government. But not only must the government be open; it must be effective.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): So must its leader.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) may have his own opinion. I do not doubt that of the people of Canada when they are given an opportunity to express their views on it. I prefer the verdict of the people to that of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that by moving motions such as this they are asking the government to do their work for them. We have hearings in standing committees on legislation and, more to the point in this context, estimates are referred to standing committees. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) has appeared before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in recent weeks. In his statement to the committee he referred to the Canada Manpower Mobility Program and thereby, as well as by the consideration of the estimates, laid himself open to questions on the subject. I do not recall any questions being asked on this subject in committee. That would seem to indicate members were satisfied with the government's program in this area.

● (1750)

What is even more to the point is that the members of the committee unanimously adopted the estimates of the Department of Manpower. This has already been done. It was done without a single question being asked on the subject. What greater indication could there be? Either the research bureaux with which the opposition have been so generously supplied are not fulfilling their function, or members opposite are not using them. Or possibly the government's performance is so satisfactory that there is no reason for any questions to be asked in this particular area.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Or that you cannot find the facts.

Mr. MacGuigan: If the hon. member for Rocky Mountain had cared to attend the committee hearings, he might have had an opportunity of finding the facts. The minister was most open in presenting the facts. Members do not need to have the actual report presented as an internal document. They are able to question the minister about the same area as that covered by the document. They can ask his views and those of the departmental officials as to how well the department is functioning. In that form they get exactly the same information.

We are here discussing more a point of procedure than a point of substance. We on this side are not saying parliament should not have this information. We are saying we will not present an internal departmental document because that kind of documentation, in a case such as this, would establish a precedent which could lead to the breaking down of effective democratic government. Members opposite have other ways of finding out the same information. The best way is to criticize and question the minister when he comes before the committee on his estimates. They have not done that with regard to this program, yet they come here and ask us to hand them on a platter information which they have not taken the trouble to ascertain. I do not think that is good parliamentary practice. I will be charitable and suggest that perhaps this is the fault of the researchers they have hired. I think this is the best way to leave that point.

What is it the Canada Manpower Mobility Program does? What kind of concern would the department have in authorizing an analysis of this kind? The basic principle of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program is to provide financial assistance for unemployed, underemployed or persons about to become unemployed to enable them to relocate in areas closest to their homes where there are suitable job opportunities. It may be used to help the worker who is without a job because his skill is not required in his own area, or the worker who is underemployed in a job where his skills are unused or outdated. It can also help the person who needs to improve his earning capacity by attending federally-sponsored training courses not offered near his home, or persons who need specialized Manpower service not available in their home area.

The program complements other measures to promote high productivity. Assistance under the program forms an integral part of other federal government departments' adjustment activities, namely, those of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Newfoundland fisheries resettlement program and other provincial schemes. The aim of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program is not to subsidize all workers' mobility but, rather, to assist and serve as an incentive to those who need to move but require financial assistance.

The Manpower mobility regulations provide four types of assistance. First, exploratory grants to enable workers to search for employment in another area. Second, relocation grants to facilitate permanent relocation of workers and their families. Third, trainee travel and commuting allowances to enable adults to take occupational training in a locality other than that in which they reside. Fourth, special travel grants to obtain special Manpower services required to facilitate entry into productive employment.

Manpower Mobility Program

In his statement before the House the minister announced revisions to the regulations which improve the scale of allowances under exploratory grants as well as a major change in the home owner's allowance. This is the type of conclusion that is obviously based on studies which have been made and which the opposition could have asked questions about. His conclusion was as follows:

I am pleased to advise that these changes have made the relocation of workers and their families more successful than previously.

Our evaluation of the exploratory grants program indicates that approximately one in every two workers is successful in obtaining a job during the first exploratory trip.

The information is there being made available to parliament and to the public. The opposition just has not been able to recognize the forest for the trees which it has put in the way. Obviously, the kind of thing with which a study of this kind would be concerned would in large part be the question of disincentive. Is there any disincentive imposed by such a program? In the absence of the program would the worker have remained unemployed in his locality? Would he have placed an increased demand on unemployment insurance and social welfare? Obviously, this is the type of thing such a study would have attempted to answer. These are the very types of questions to which the minister was attempting to provide answers during his appearance before the standing committee on estimates. He also stated at that time:

The second change introduced was to increase the home owner's allowance from $500 to $1,500 to enhance the success of relocation for families who did not own a home. Since the revised home owner's allowances went into effect, there has been an increase of approximately 18 per cent in the number of workers who were able to purchase a home in their relocation area ensuring the success and permanency of the relocation.

The vote which was approved by the committee was for $9.2 million. That was a week or so ago. To continue with the analysis of the problem and the type of service given by the Manpower Mobility Program, a program about which the opposition might have asked questions if they had wished, I shall give a fuller explanation of the exploratory grants program to which I referred in mentioning the changes which the minister announced. The exploratory grants program covers the cost of return transportation of the worker to the nearest area considered by Canada Manpower to hold reasonable prospects for employment. Interviews for the client with prospective employers are often arranged by the department. The grant also includes a living allowance of $13 a day, for a maximum of five days, while the worker is in the area actively seeking work.

Perhaps I might call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELIGIOUS SECTS, EARNINGS FORMULA, BASIC EXEMPTIONS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-19, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was dealing with certain aspects of the Canada Pension Plan. Now, after the supper hour, I am happy to see that so many members, including the minister, were able to tear themselves away from the hockey game. If the minister could get the bill passed I am sure we would unanimously agree to deal with hockey in the next couple of hours instead of the football bill we may be faced with.

In setting aside people's savings under the Canada Pension Plan we are bringing about a vast change in the savings patterns of individuals. I suggest that savings by the group over 50 years of age is now much less important than in the past. With the present very high rate of inflation this large group is not able to protect itself by ordinary plans. The minister himself pointed this out in Toronto when making a statement according to a report in the Globe and Mail, before the Canada Pension Plan conference held in November of last year. He said, "When the value of the current $105 in old age security is added, we can discuss adequacy with a clear conscience".

I think he then drew attention to the important question behind this legislation: what is adequacy? If the old age pension and Canada pension together are adequate for an individual, then it seems to be of little value for him to save as well for his retirement. Has the Canada Pension Plan made private pension plans redundant or largely made private pension plans redundant? The minister went on to point out at this conference that it is a matter of public concern that only 40 per cent of Canadians are covered—this is quite true—and that in many ways the Canada Pension Plan can cover the whole field better than private plans. On the other hand, will the Canada Pension Plan be a truly funded plan, or will it be increasingly funded from general revenue with little relationship between what one puts in and what one takes out?

It also seems important that those who are retiring within the next 10 or 15 years take a look at their own savings from the point of view of spending them for their own personal benefit, rather than using them as an income supplement, since the Canada Pension Plan presumably will be quite adequate.

One other factor in comparing the Canada Pension Plan with private pension plans is that the Canada Pension Plan lends money to the provinces, and they alone are the recipients of CPP funds. If provinces are able to borrow from the CPP without having to go to the market for funds, then in my opinion this makes for an absence of the normal restraint that is placed on provincial spending. For instance, if a provincial government has a program that has to be funded, say a hydro development project, then if they go to the market to raise the money I think the project will be designed better and more thought will be put into it, whereas if the province is able to borrow from the Canada Pension Plan fund almost at will, there is an "easy come, easy go" attitude.

The Canada Pension fund also provides a huge reservoir of cash which is independent of the business cycle; hence over-all government spending, taxing measures and fiscal policy are beyond the normal restraint exercised by the legislature. Often people criticize free enterprise for its failings, but if there is a great deal of intergovernment borrowing that short-circuits the free market, then the free market is being jeopardized. If a province needs money, it should deal directly with the market. Borrowing from the Canada Pension Plan conflicts with two different interests—the needs of the provincial treasury and the rights of contributors to the pension fund.

Naturally, a provincial government prefers to borrow at the most advantageous rate, so any borrowing from the fund would, from the point of view of the fund, be disadvantageous. If there were an incentive on the part of the managers of the fund to obtain maximum yield from investments, then the productive and rewarding sectors of the economy would benefit. It is my understanding that the managers of the Quebec Pension Plan fund have had a much better return on their investments than have the managers of the Canada Pension Plan fund, and this is to be commended. I think the managers of the CPP fund should look at what has been done with the investments made by the QPP fund.

The accumulation of savings capital in the Canada Pension Plan fund, in private pension funds, in mutual funds and insurance funds is to the disadvantage of certain segments of the country. The pooling of investment capital tends to be in the large financial centres of the country, where it is managed by a few people, the large financial conglomerates, to the detriment of rural areas. It has been suggested that Canada Pension Plan funds might contribute to the financing of business and other enterprises in the free market instead of this being the prerogative of the provinces, and I think more study should be done along these lines.

I think the important thing to discuss when we consider the Canada Pension Plan is what effect it is going to have on savings and how best pension funds can be invested in this country to bring in as much income as possible for contributors. Above all, this large pool of money should be used in the most constructive way in the financial and industrial sectors of the economy.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I will close. In committee I hope we will find some answers to the many actuarial problems that this bill presents.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

CANADIAN FOOTBALL ACT

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREIGN ENCROACHMENT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-22, intituled Canadian Football Act, be read for the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say that I wish this bill had not been necessary. I had hoped that the policy adopted long ago by the government against the establishment of foreign leagues in Canada would have led the promoters of the World Football League to reconsider their plans for coming to Canada. I had hoped that they would listen to reason and understand that it would be neither in their own interest nor in anyone else's to force a confrontation with the government on this matter, and make it imperative for the government to take legislative steps.

Events in recent weeks have proved the pressing necessity of translating the policy of the government into an act on Canadian football, not only against the immediate threat which the franchise of the WFL constitutes but also against any future threat.

[English]

We all know that football in itself is not a life and death issue, or even a bread and butter issue.

An hon. Member: It is not even an issue.

Mr. Lalonde: I am sure that the country would survive a national football league, a world football league, even a universal football league for that matter.

An hon. Member: Then let's forget about it.

Mr. Lalonde: But at the same time we must recognize the incredible interest in this football question right across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It is an emotional issue, a gut issue, if you like, and it obviously stirs up deep feeling in a great many Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The minister has the floor and we are just beginning a new bill. Hon. members should let the minister complete his remarks.

Mr. Lalonde: In its own small way, this football controversy seems to epitomize the central dilemmas of our 100 years as a nation. The type of debate we have been witnessing seems to me symbolic of our history, too. It is the kind of debate we have had many times in the past. So many of the same old arguments keep popping up, arguments that we really should have settled and put to rest a long time ago.

● (2020)

We hear about the principles of free enterprise and free competition in the marketplace. We are told that the state should not interfere with private business unless, of course, private business requests state help. We are bombarded with lectures about people's freedom of choice and freedom of movement and other fundamental rights. I am not denying the values of free enterprise and competition, and I am not making fun of the people who advance these arguments; but they are not absolutes and never have been, at least not in Canadian history. As Canadians, we have always had to acknowledge the consequences of living alongside a much richer and more powerful neighbour. We have always had to be aware of what could happen and, in some instances, what has happened by allowing our neighbour unrestrained access to what is ours. While we have received literally countless benefits from our close relationship with the United States, we must also recognize that we have paid a price: too often, in the past, the demise or disappearance of Canadian institutions in the face of much greater economic and demographic powers.

This, then, is one of our traditional dilemmas as Canadians: how to remain open to, but not dominated by, the influence of our great neighbour. Ever since confederation we have tried to resolve that dilemma by taking conscious decisions at the federal level, either to impose restraints on foreign influences or to create or maintain institutions of our own. Without such conscious decisions we would have no national railway system today; our railways would probably run north and south along what we are told are natural geographic lines. Without such a conscious decision by the parliament of Canada we would today have no national broadcasting system and our radio and television stations would likely be local affiliates of NBC or CBS.

In both instances, in respect of the railways and the CBC, a decision to simply tie in with the American continental system would have been cheaper and possibly even more politically popular at the time. But the decisions to create and maintain our own Canadian systems, even with the extra costs involved, were seen, correctly, as part of the price of national sovereignty at that time. I am not talking only about decisions made "away back when;" the Foreign Policy Review Act, passed by this parliament, is one more recent example of federal intervention to control or regulate foreign domination in some sectors of our economy.

So there is nothing unprecedented or arbitrary in the government's present action to protect Canadian football, as some have charged. The legislation now before the House is in fact no different in principle from legislation that already protects many other Canadian enterprises. We are not trying to exclude foreign influences in football, but simply to control them. And I think even the most staunch advocate of free enterprise would agree there are times when the government must be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of all Canadians.

In this regard, Canada has traditionally been much more liberal than most countries in the world in maintaining an open door, especially for professionals. American musicians and other performing artists still have a much easier time coming to Canada to work than, say, Canadian musicians have in going to the United States. The same is true in many other fields; consulting, for example.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

One group of Canadian professionals, hockey players, have for 50 years experienced little trouble in entering the United States, but that situation could very well change in the next few years as the Americans begin developing enough professional calibre players of their own. In fact, many Canadians were effectively barred from playing U.S. college hockey by a recent decision of the NCAA, the governing body of American collegiate sports. The NCAA made a ruling in August, 1971, concerning professionalism which really applied only to Canadian Junior "A" players, and the stated purpose of the ruling was to encourage more American players. So this is not a one-way street; it clearly works both ways.

The flow of skilled people across international borders is rarely a case of simple supply and demand as some would have us believe. It involves many other questions, among them, as in U.S. college hockey, a policy of developing home-grown talent and the effects of unlimited foreign players on that development. But even if we agree that there are legitimate areas for government or state intervention simply to keep us Canadian, we then find ourselves confronted by another dilemma. What kind of Canada do we want? One in which the rich just get richer and the poor stay poor, or one in which there is a conscious effort toward equalization and interdependence? Again, this dilemma seems to be epitomized in the last few weeks' debate about football.

I have received telegrams of support for the government's position from the mayors of many of our major cities, Calgary, Ottawa, Hamilton, Regina, Winnipeg and Edmonton, which are six cities in the Canadian Football League. I have not received similar telegrams from the mayors of our three largest cities, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. Is this just a coincidence? I do not think so. I am not pointing a finger at the mayors of our big cities or accusing them of anything. Like us in parliament, they are elected to look after the interests of their constituents as they see them. Again, this split seems to reflect the traditional stresses and perhaps the lack of common interests between our large urban areas and our smaller centres—the kind of alienation reporters like to write about.

Those of us who live in big Canadian cities tend to forget the real nature of the problem. We know that if we did not have the CFL we would have some other kind of professional football. We have the population, the money and the markets, and we like to think of ourselves as big league in every way. But, as Canadians, do we have the right to say that what happens elsewhere does not matter to us? As members of parliament, do we not have an obligation to care about what the CFL means to all those other Canadians? What does it mean? I was on a CBC radio phone-in show a few weeks ago and a young man in Halifax said something that impressed me as a statement of what it means. There are as yet, as hon. members know, no CFL teams in the maritimes. This young man told me he often remains up at night to watch the games on television, even games from Vancouver which do not start until midnight, his time. He said the reason is that watching Canadian football makes him "feel connected with the rest of the country".

● (2030)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: What about Alberta and Saskatchewan? Somebody earlier mentioned Alberta. Over the last two months, as this House is aware, those two provinces felt they were entitled to the international price of $10.50 a barrel for their oil. The government's position was that it was all right for them to sell their own oil at that price abroad, but that selling it at that price domestically would have serious repercussions in respect of fuel costs to Canadians as a whole. As the House knows, they settled for $6.50 a barrel, a long way from the international price, in the interests of all Canadians—but especially, let us face it, the interests of consumers in the large eastern markets where the population is. This, of course, was not an isolated instance of Canadian provinces or regions agreeing to a reasonable compromise for the common good. As this House knows, it is precisely that kind of give-and-take that has made this country a viable entity. I am, therefore, disappointed when a member of Montreal's civic government is reported as saying, on the WFL question:

> What do we owe the west? Look how they held us up on the oil.

I am also disappointed when a Montreal sportswriter says:

> If Marc Lalonde has his way, the people of Toronto and Montreal will be compelled by law forever to accept an inferior brand of football simply because people living in smaller cities can't afford big league entertainment.

The basic assumption here seems to be that if it is Canadian, it is inferior—an assumption I for one am not prepared to accept.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Nor do I think any of us should accept that football teams are necessarily superior just because they play in a league which calls itself the World Football League and has yet to play a single game. Nor can any of us believe that football teams are somehow better or more big league only because they are located in cities bigger than some CFL cities. If that were the case, then Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal would dominate the CFL competitively—something we know they don't do. There is also some irony in the fact that the most vocal opposition to the government's policy of protecting Canadian football has been centred in that part of the country that throughout our history has benefited most from the protection of its own industries. That includes the sports equipment industry.

The protection of Canadian football is not a local issue. It is not a regional issue. It is not a partisan issue. In our view, it is an issue that effects all parts of Canada and all Canadians and it will be decided, not in the press or on radio or television but by the parliament of Canada.

The bill now before the House is designed to protect Canadian football. To that end it embodies the position adopted by the government of Canada in November, 1972, and the policy first stated publicly by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), a policy that has remained unchanged since that time. The Canadian football bill is a short and straight-forward piece of legislation which embodies only those provisions necessary to achieve its purpose. The bill, as proposed, would limit professional football in Canada solely to teams from Canadian leagues. It provides that a minimum of 55 per cent of the players in Canadian professional football will be Canadians, and that no team will have on its roster more than 15 players who are not qualified Canadians, whichever results in the lesser number of players who are not qualified Canadians. That formula will apply for the 1974 playing season and until December 31 of this year.

After December 31, 1974, the minimum number of qualified Canadian players will rise to at least 60 per cent or 15 players who are not qualified Canadians, again whichever results in the lesser number of players who are not qualified Canadians. The bill contains no retroactive measures. It will not create a monopoly situation since it will allow for the establishment of other Canadian professional football leagues so long as all professional teams meet the criteria of the legislation. The bill will allow the CFL to expand to other Canadian cities and it will even allow the establishment of second CFL teams in major cities such as Toronto.

We believe these measures will not only protect Canadian football but will also allow it to grow and develop while maintaining its Canadian character. Like the Canadian content regulations in broadcasting and other portions of our cultural life, this legislation is aimed at strengthening the Canadian content of our football by giving more players a chance to play professionally in their own country.

As one who believes that Canadian football must grow if it is to survive and prosper, I have welcomed the CFL's decision to expand into any area which could support a franchise. The CFL's eastern conference is at this time seriously considering the application of a group in London, Ontario, and the Hamilton club has agreed to waive its rights in that territory, subject to acceptance of the London application. The CFL has also indicated its willingness to consider expansion into Halifax-Dartmouth and would like to review applications from interested parties in that area proposing teams either privately or community-owned.

As I announced last week after introducing the Canadian football bill, steps are being taken to allow more Toronto people to see their team's home games. This has not been possible for many because of sell-out crowds and local television blackouts. Plans are going ahead to expand the Toronto stadium, but that may take some time and still might not meet the demand for seats. Accordingly, the new owner of the Argonauts has undertaken to lift the local television blackout on an experimental basis, beginning this season, when it is established in advance that games are sold out. No individual CFL club can make such a decision on its own without the approval of the other clubs in the league, but the CFL commissioner has undertaken to put the proposition before the other CFL clubs and encourage them to accept it.

The CFL has also given assurances that it will look favourably on the possibility of all-star games between the CFL and other leagues, whether played in Canada or abroad. We should also note that the bill does not in any way restrict Canadian professional teams from playing exhibition games against teams from other leagues, either in Canada or outside the country.

It is the government's position to uphold and to strengthen the Canadian character of our football. We believe that the growing number of positions for Canadian players assured by the present bill will greatly stimulate the development of high-calibre players across the country. To encourage the broadly based program that such development will require, my department has recently agreed with the philosophy of the Canadian Amateur Football Association stated in its proposed seven-year master plan for the development of Canadian football. The plan aims at greater participation and greater involvement in all areas—coaching, training, officiating and playing.

● (2040)

Through my department the government will be supporting the appointment of a technical director for amateur football. Through this measure, football becomes the first non-Olympic sport to receive such support. Through its seven-year master plan the CAFA hopes to increase the number of Canadians participating in football from the present estimated 250,000 to about 600,000, in this way both broadening the participation base and improving the quality of players through various technical programs.

Such efforts would be ineffective if we did not at the same time maximize opportunities for such players to play professional football in Canada. My department, through the fitness and amateur sport directorate, now funds the CAFA by means of normal annual grants for its ongoing programs, such as executive meetings, annual general meetings, Canadian eastern and western junior football playoffs and the Canadian junior finals—what we call the Junior Grey Cup.

My department has also agreed to fund a national officials' training clinic in which officials from all parts of Canada will participate. In the 1973-74 academic year, grants in aid to the student athletes program are providing scholarships for 27 outstanding football players to allow them to continue their academic studies at a number of Canadian universities. Those 27 football scholarships are the largest number awarded in any single sport. They represent a value of close to $50,000, which is in addition to the other football programs funded by the federal government.

I should also note that the Canadian Football League, even though it has no jurisdiction over amateur football in Canada, provides a direct national grant of $50,000 a year to the CAFA as well as another approximately $110,000 in cash and in kind through coaching clinics, try-out camps and other services by the CFL clubs to the amateur programs in their areas. I sincerely doubt that any American league would do the same for Canadians.

It is obvious from what I have said that the federal government's interest in Canadian football is not confined only to the CFL, its nine teams and 300 or so professional players. The CFL is merely the most highly visible part of the Canadian football pyramid which is made up of approximately 250,000 players. So when we talk about protecting football we are not discussing only the CFL, although any weakening of the CFL would have implications for the CAFA's amateur programs as well.

Saskatchewan's Premier Blakeney pointed out last month in a news release that if teams in United States leagues started to cut into general Canadian football revenues, the professional teams would not be the only ones to suffer. He noted:

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Teams such as the Saskatchewan Roughriders spend thousands of dollars a year encouraging high school and junior football in Saskatchewan. They give young Canadian football players a chance to play top quality football in their own country for the benefit of Canadians.

In short, whatever threatens the CFL threatens Canadian football in general. I will not dwell on the reasons why we believe the CFL is worth protecting and preserving. I will simply list them. The CFL is the only completely Canadian-controlled professional sports league in Canada. It consists solely of Canadian teams. Even under its present regulations, more than half its players are Canadians. The present number of more than 150 Canadian players will, of course, increase under the bill before the House. Its teams stretch across the country from Vancouver to Montreal. Thousands of other Canadians benefit indirectly from its activities. It provides a consistently high level of competition; seven different teams have played in the last four Grey Cup games.

In CFL cities, football is not merely another branch plant operation of the North American entertainment industry. It provides a focus for deep community involvement and civic and provincial pride. Finally, there is the Grey Cup—a Canadian tradition that dates back to 1909, and since 1921 has led to a great east-west rivalry. I think I need say no more except to underline the unique position the CFL holds in Canadian sports.

The National Hockey League has had a majority of American teams for more than 50 years; so has the World Hockey Association since its inception two years ago. In other words, hockey got away from us a long time ago, before many of us were born. No strictly Canadian hockey league has been jeopardized by the operations of the NHL and WHA in Canadian cities. Baseball is also a very different story from football. The Montreal Expos play in the U.S. National League as major league baseball's only Canadian entry. There is not, and there never has been, a national Canadian professional baseball league to protect.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Same thing for lacrosse?

Mr. Lalonde: I heard the interjection by my friend, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). I am sure he knows there is not now a national Canadian professional lacrosse league in this country, and there has not been for quite a few decades.

However, in spite of the obvious lack of parallels between the situation of the Montreal Expos and the Toronto Northmen, it has been said, or at least whispered, that the government would not have acted to stop the Northmen if their franchise had been located in Montreal. At the risk of dignifying such allegations by replying to them at all, I can only repeat that the government's policy on the protection of Canadian football has been clearly stated and has been consistent since it was first announced in November, 1972: no foreign-based football leagues would be allowed to operate in Canada and there would be no exceptions to that rule. At the time that policy was stated, possible expansion of the NFL into Canada was centred not in Toronto but in Montreal.

It has also been suggested that the government acted to block the WFL only out of some devious and partisan political motives. As far as I know, both the old and the new Toronto Argonaut owners are prominent Conservatives, so I cannot imagine what our alleged partisan political motives might have been. I am sorry to disappoint anyone, but our reasons for the legislation are not devious at all: they are as simple and straightforward as is our policy—to keep foreign football leagues out of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The Toronto Northmen consistently maintained that they were unaware of any federal government policy that would inhibit their operation until they received news reports of my speech in Regina on February 21 of this year. In that speech I reiterated the government's policy of November, 1972, and stated our determination to do everything possible to prevent the WFL from operating in Canada. All of the Northmen's arguments against the Canadian football bill and for excluding the WFL from some or all of its provisions are based on the flimsy premise that they did not know they were contravening government policy when they set themselves up in business. In other words, they have tried to convince people that they were simply unaware of government policy until February 21 and that they are, therefore, in fairness, entitled to special consideration.

● (2050)

For the benefit of the House, I am now going to review some facts that show the Northmen are in error when they say they did not know what government policy was. At a CFL executive meeting on November 16, 1972, Mr. John Bassett, Sr., representing the Toronto Argonauts football club, served notice that at the executive committee meeting on December 1 he would move a resolution providing that the Canadian Football League would approve the principle of the expansion of the league through the granting of new franchises which would be organized for the purpose of operating professional football clubs in the United States of America at such times as applications for such franchises were received by the league. Mr. Bassett also advised the November 16 meeting that he would move at the December 1 meeting that the commissioner be empowered to meet with Mr. R. Schmertz to negotiate the terms of application for a Canadian Football League franchise in New York city, such application to be submitted to the league for approval to be operative in the football season of 1976.

Following reports of the CFL meeting, the Hon. John Munro, then minister of national health and welfare, stated the government's view that any CFL expansion into the United States would represent an erosion of the indentity of Canadian football and the government would do everything possible to prevent it from happening. On November 21, 1972, Mr. Munro held a meeting in Ottawa to discuss the matter with Mr. Bassett and the CFL commissioner, Mr. Jake Gaudaur, and to find out why the CFL was contemplating expansion into the United States. The CFL representatives indicated that some CFL clubs were concerned that if the CFL did not expand into the United States, a new U.S.-based league would be formed that would grant franchises in Canada.

The minister advised Mr. Bassett and Mr. Gaudaur that it was government policy to oppose the expansion of the CFL into the United States as well as the expansion of any U.S. league into Canada. Mr. Bassett advised Mr. Munro that he would formally withdraw his notice of motion for CFL expansion into the United States at the next CFL executive committee meeting on December 1.

Mr. Munro made the federal government's position abundantly clear in a public statement on November 22, 1972. The story was carried by Canadian Press and was widely covered in the media. As a matter of fact, it was the subject of a front page story in the Montreal Gazette and the Toronto Star on the following day. Mr. Munro said that the government could apply sanctions to prevent expansion of the CFL south of the border into the United States, or expansion of U.S. leagues into Canada, or even formation of a new league with Canadian entries.

At the CFL executive committee meeting on December 1, 1972, Mr. Bassett formally withdrew his notice of motion concerning expansion into the United States. According to the minutes of the meeting, he also informed the committee about his meeting with Mr. Munro and stated that he had told the minister he did not intend to take any course of action contrary to declared government policy. So we know that Mr. Bassett, Sr., was fully aware of federal policy in November, 1972, when it was initially announced.

Now, what about Mr. John Bassett, Jr., president of the Toronto Northmen? At that time, Mr. Bassett, Jr., was a director of the Toronto Argonauts. His father was the president. The Bassetts are not only father and son; they are also business associates in several enterprises. They have other associates who share their interest in promoting. In addition, they are active in communications. It is therefore difficult to believe that Mr. Bassett, Jr., was completely unaware of federal policy when he acquired the WFL franchise.

On December 5, 1972, at a press conference as the newly appointed Minister of National Health and Welfare, I publicly stated my concurrence with the government policy Mr. Munro had announced. On December 11, 1972, I met in Ottawa with CFL president Bill Clarke and CFL commissioner Gaudaur and reaffirmed the government's position to them. On December 13, 1972, Mr. Gaudaur sent to all the CFL executive committee delegates and alternates—among whom were Messrs. John Bassett, Sr., and John Bassett, Jr.—a summary of his meeting with Bill Clarke and myself. In that summary he reported specifically that I, personally, and speaking for the federal government, continued to be concerned over the prospect of expansion of the CFL to the United States as well as the expansion of the NFL into Canada, and that in so far as the latter was concerned I would discuss with my colleagues what action might be taken by the government to deter or preclude NFL expansion into Canada.

On January 17, 1973, at a CFL executive committee meeting in Winnipeg, commissioner Gaudaur reported again on his December 11, 1972, meeting in Ottawa with Bill Clarke and myself. The Toronto Argonauts representatives at the January 17, 1973, CFL meeting in Winnipeg were, according to the minutes, John Bassett, Sr., Lew Hayman and John Bassett, Jr.

In the light of all these facts, it is more than difficult to believe the Northmen's assertions that they were completely unaware of federal football policy until my speech on February 21, 1974.

An hon. Member: We still don't know what it is.

Mr. Lalonde: I have met twice with Northmen representatives—both times in Ottawa—on March 4 and March 12. After those meetings and a careful reading of their briefs, I still do not think they have offered a single coherent reason as to why an exception to federal policy should be made in their case. At the time of those meetings I was still hopeful that legislation would not be necessary, and it still seemed possible that the Northmen could be persuaded to respect the integrity of Canadian football and the government's stated policy. They chose to force the legislation that is now before the House. Their position seems to be that they will continue to operate in Toronto until federal policy becomes law and they are forced to stop.

I hope the House will strongly endorse the bill. I said at the beginning that football is not really a life and death issue.

Mr. Stanfield: It may be for you.

Mr. Lalonde: As a matter of fact, although we consider this a matter of significance we do not consider it a matter of confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: There is hope for Jimmy Walker and Mitchell Sharp.

Mr. Lalonde: I suggest it has probably taken too much of our time and energy in recent weeks. But having said that, the only other recent government issue that has aroused as much public interest and heated debate was probably the Team Canada hockey series against the U.S.S.R. The Northmen may say that the preservation of Canadian football is a "bogus issue", and indeed it may look that way to them; but as we have seen, it is not a bogus issue for many Canadians—it is a very real and emotional issue that we as a people care about deeply.

This afternoon the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) suggested that we should go on to something else, that we should not spend much time on this particular issue as there were many others of importance facing this nation, certainly many of more importance than football. I agree with him, and we are ready to take up the offer of the official opposition in that respect. The bill is short and simple. There is no reason why we should not have a short debate and have this matter referred to committee for consideration, study and even the hearing of witnesses if the committee wishes.

● (2100)

I understand that discussions are being held with a view to concluding this debate tomorrow. I want to assure hon. members that we on this side of the House are more than willing to co-operate to that effect, either by limiting the number of speeches or by limiting the length of speeches. Our position is that we should make our decision and carry on with the business of the House. If there is any delay, it will not be blamed on this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will you drag the Expos in, too?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that some hon. members on the other side may make fun of the issue and try to treat the matter lightly. That is their opportunity and their right. As I said, we are ready to proceed speedily with this bill and have the House make its decision very quickly.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, as I strode purposefully through the lobby this evening, someone with a tone of surprise said, "Are you speaking on football?" I said, "Who else?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I have unique qualifications in the field. Two things I have not learned in my life are how to make money and how to play football. Those subjects are very much part of this discussion. So I have that negative qualification and certainly am removed from all prejudice in respect thereto. I was interested in the minister's invitation to shorten speeches, an invitation he extended one hour and five minutes after the House resumed its sitting this evening. I do appreciate, however, that this leaves me sufficient time to lay a sound basis for my remarks on this important subject.

I am sure that one or two of my colleagues know that I am not a football fan and not, indeed, a sports fan. Perhaps I speak tonight as the clergyman spoke one day to his congregation about the raising of a special fund: he said, "I speak to you this morning not as a Christian but as a businessman." I speak as a parliamentarian, not as a sportsman. I speak as a nationalist, not as a footballer.

An hon. Member: As a Canadian.

Mr. Macquarrie: I hope I always speak as a Canadian. I was interested in some of the remarks of the minister. He said this is not the kind of debate we have had in parliament before. Or did he say it is the kind of debate we have had before? Certainly, I do not remember one quite like it. For a while he was reaching great heights and had me thinking of Sir John A. Macdonald and saving the country from the Americans. Later he aspired to even more elevated heights when he talked about oil. He must have thought he was the minister of energy, mines and resources. That is a truly lofty height for him to seek. I was interested, too, when he said that the opposition to this measure has come from an area which has benefited from protection. I do not come from an area of Canada which has gained much from the protection of tariffs. We were sort of on the other side.

In common with many members here, I have over the years passed through many emotions on various debates. Sometimes one is amused, sometimes one is angry. Once in a while one is even informed. But tonight I am suffering from a sense of unreality. It almost passes my broadminded comprehension that, considering the state of this nation today, we in the House of Commons of Canada are dealing with a measure of this kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Inflation is soaring higher than the eagle—the American eagle, if I may be permitted to use that phrase because it is the highest flyer. Transportation, described by one of the chief authors of the transportation legislation as being in a mess one week ago, is still in a mess today. Many are here tonight listening to the minister's speech because of the curtailment of transportation. There is trouble on land, sea and in the air. We have gone beyond Paul Revere; he had only two media to contend with.

The country is rent with labour and industrial unrest. There is a housing crisis which is gripping and organizing the people of this country. We are not talking much about unemployment because it is becoming chronic and increasing and we are becoming used to it. We have a divided cabinet, with the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) saying one thing and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) another. We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who comes back on the day the football bill is called.

Yet in the present state of the nation we are talking about what Mr. Bassett said to Mr. Schmertz, and whether there were two Bassetts at one meeting or one Bassett at two meetings. That is the kind of thing we are talking about here tonight. Some Herodotus could use this occasion to illustrate what Nero did. There are so many things that cry out for priority, cry out for attention, not only within the government but within the minister's own department.

I am, perhaps regrettably, not a sportsman but I respect those who find satisfaction in sport. Yet somehow I am somewhat concerned about the 25 per cent of Canadians who today are living on or below the poverty line. I am a little worried about what has happened to medical research funds in this country and the serious shrinkage of them. I am a little worried because no one on the government side seems to think that anything can be done about inflation. That is not too far removed from suggesting that nothing should be done about it. Yet in the midst of all this travail, in the midst of the anxiety of the Canadian people, we are counting football players. I say all this not to scorn the minister; I say it in all seriousness. While it is all very well to make fun of politicians, to make them the butt of the joke syndrome, things are serious when the institution itself is held up for public scorn and for resentment and questioning by the people whom it serves. That is why this is so serious. I do not feel happy, as a representative of the people of Canada, to think that this is the best thing we can find to do on this night.

Mr. Woolliams: Isn't it terrible?

Mr. Macquarrie: I think it is wrong. There are many indications in the country that the people of Canada are looking with great skepticism upon this performance. They are passing judgment on what this government is doing.

● (2110)

An hon. Member: They don't care.

Mr. Macquarrie: I hear a suggestion from across the way that the people of Canada do not care. I say to him, don't count on that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I read the following in the Globe and Mail the other day:

> Health minister Marc Lalonde says they shall not pass—and he is mustering every weapon in the democratic arsenal to blast the intruders from Canadian soil. Though confederation last 1,000 years, people will say that this was when it became a country fit for the Canadian Football League to play in.
> It would be unsporting of us to go around quenching nationalist fires, and we understand perfectly that the federal government, having dealt adroitly and effectively with the problems of inflation, unemployment, poverty, the native peoples, immigration, energy, international relations, and health, must now accord priority to the fundamental issues of our day: which set of initials should be permitted to predominate on the football field.

As a greater man than I once said, "O tempora! O mores!"

> From Ottawa, Mr. Lalonde spotted a threatening manoeuvre developing in Toronto. A cheque book was seen to flutter in the breeze, and three Miami Dolphins football players were arrayed for the press as the latest acquisitions of the Toronto Northmen of the World Football League.

There were suggestions of a stiff diplomatic note, or sending for Henry Kissinger. This delightful editorial in the Globe and Mail ends:

> Yet Mr. Lalonde's quivering finger continues to indicate an approaching peril, and on Parliament Hill they are pacing the battlements and checking their muskets. On guard for whom?

I am not much of a partisan; I spend most of my time supporting measures which this minister puts forward. He has received my support and commendation on many endeavours, many proposals and many legislative pieces, but tonight on this measure I am amazed. I wonder if this is the same person who from time to time has shown such lucidity and perception. Indeed, he is sometimes so progressive that he could find a place in our party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Since I quoted Cicero, I must be bilingual and refer to Shakespeare who wrote, "On what meat doth this our Caesar feed that he hath grown so great?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: The pretensions and the parameters of this bill are, to say the least, startling. As I read the bill full of trembling, I read that people can go to jail for two years. My God, that is a non-sporting suggestion!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: The preamble would do well as the prelude to the lyrical ballads of Wordsworth. I have read a lot of dry statutes and a lot of dull bills, but I have never read such a hyperbolic expression as this preamble. Indeed, I wonder where the preamble ends and the propaganda begins. What lawyer ever heard a "whereas" followed by this:

> And whereas Canadian football developed for itself a unique national institution contributing to the strengthening of the bonds of nation-

hood and it is in the national and public interest that an effort be made to protect this institution from the encroachments of foreign sponsored enterprises extending into Canada;

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with—

Mellow stuff that. We are today faced with this urgent and necessary matter, a matter of which we heard incidentally, or was it coincidentally, on April 10, 1974, the very day of the release of the March consumer price index which recorded the highest peacetime cost of living increase since the index was established. That was the day on which this measure was launched. What happy auspices! How it will delight the housewives of this nation to know that the two came together. The preamble of the bill is interesting. It reads:

Whereas football has an established tradition in Canada as witnessed by the cup symbolizing football supremacy in Canada, which was donated by His Excellency, the late Governor General Earl Grey in 1909 for that purpose—

In the definition section, the term "football" means:

—Canadian football and American football but does not include soccer or rugby—

There is something quite interesting here. It can be historically proven that the established tradition which sports football claims to hold with regard to the Grey Cup is basically untrue. When the Grey Cup was donated by Earl Grey in 1909, it was intended to symbolize Canadian supremacy in "rugby football".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Even a layman like myself can see that is a sport emphatically different from football as it is known today. Rugby, as pointed out in the definition of "football" for the purposes of this bill, is not to be considered in conjuction with the term "football". Even dear old Lord Grey, who was invoked so greatly by the minister, did not intend this sort of thing at all. Grey, of course, was not an outstanding Canadian. Some do not think he was an outstanding Englishman. But a Canadian he was not. He was not one who would ever earn legitimately a place in any pantheon of Canadian national football heroes. Certainly he would not be happy—God rest his imperial soul!—to know that things were distorted in such a way that that which he claimed to be the goals and the focus of his cup award is excluded by a bill which names him as a sort of remote, historic godfather.

I hope the minister does not think I am being critical of him or his bill. I want him to know that with the basic intention of preserving Canadianism in professional football we join in our support and in our applause. It would be highly unlikely, and quite out of historic proportion, if a spokesman for the party of Macdonald, Borden, Bennett and Diefenbaker was not in the forefront of sensible, strong nationalism. When it comes to asserting our nationalism, we take second place to no group, political or otherwise, in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: If hon. members do not believe me, they can ask some of the pals of Earl Grey who had to deal with Canadian nationals like Robert Borden. Or you might check with some of the American authorities who had to deal with the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister, who when it came to the Trading with the Enemy Act did not engage in the protracted, pusillanimous patty-caking which went on in reference to WML-Worthington, but acted assertively and successfully.

● (2120)

We, of course, believe in sensible, sensitive nationalism in the whole spectrum of Canadian society. What we have to ask, as any thoughtful parliamentarian must ask, is whether the goal to which the minister alluded is likely to be reached by the measure before us. We have to inquire as to the likely efficacy of the measure, and we certainly have to examine its exclusive nature.

The minister has obviously decided to bring down a gridiron curtain on the forty-ninth parallel. What other protective measures does he envisage? Not being a sports fan, I do not understand all the subtleties, but it seems to me as a greenhorn, a layman, that though one sees baseball and other sports played in Canada by Canadian teams, there are always a lot of American players around. We know that in America there are great hockey teams, but even a greenhorn like myself recognizes that most of the players are Canadians. Bobby Orr is a great player, but Bobby Orr is not a true Bostonian. He is a Canadian. Does the minister intend to extend his sports nationalism to other areas, or is it football alone which deserves this special and unique legislative treatment—right up to two years in jail?

Canada's national game is not football. It is not hockey. It is lacrosse. Even since the minister's fearless Regina speech there have been two major exercises in what I would call the Americanization of lacrosse. But no one has murmured. No one has legislated or even threatened to legislate. What is wrong with lacrosse, our national game? Does it not deserve protection? Is it necessary to be both a footballer and a professional to be protected? Is that which is good for football, bad for lacrosse? Is our nationalism selective to the extent that it must be confined to football alone? My witty colleague from Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) put a question to the minister not long ago. He asked: "Does the minister plan to bring in legislation which would ensure that the Stanley Cup never leaves Canada?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: Lord Stanley was a Governor General. We are invoking Governors General now. Why doesn't he get a look in on this? These are hard questions for the layman to answer. But in realms other than professional sport one is troubled. Is there greater danger to the Canadian way of life from foreign football than from foreign forces in other fields? What of the arts? What of our universities? Many Canadian professors are expressing grave concern about the widespread appointment of American professors by American deans or American heads of departments in Canadian universities. If it is more dangerous to have "X" number of American football players out in the field than to have so many American professors in Canadian universities—many of them, incidentally, teaching Canadian studies—how do we measure this danger to our national soul?

When one reflects upon this question one gets into a realm approaching the ridiculous. Where will all this end? Where does it begin? And why does it begin? Are we really heading for a Fortress Canada where the full force of legislative power will decree what a citizen shall see, who shall play, who shall watch, who shall own, who shall coach, who shall form leagues? It is a horrendous prospect of prohibition. And I have never liked prohibition very much.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: From the very beginning I was troubled by the negative and restrictive aspect of the bill. I share with other Canadians a real appreciation of the CFL. I know what the Grey Cup means to so many of our people. If I were not a maritimer, I think I would like to be a westerner. I spent nine years of my life on the prairies and I learned a lot there. Indeed, as my former leader said, I was toughened up there when I was exposed and I understand exactly the feelings of some of those people toward certain aspect of this question. I know the Grey Cup means a great deal to a great number of our people, though I must say that as a maritimer I demur in the face of the contention that it symbolizes a national competition. As my hon. friend from Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has often said, Canada does not begin at Montreal; there is an important area eastward—an area, in fact, where confederation first began. And I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to represent the very place where it began, the cradle of confederation, the city of Charlottetown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: And I say in passing, without any rancour—and we maritimers are never rancorous—that football, or any other activity which does not include the Atlantic provinces, is something less than national. A moot question, of course, is whether the action this bill is intended to forestall would destroy, diminish or undermine the CFL. Mr. Speaker, when one does not know a subject it is always well to consult an expert. A great football player and also, in my opinion, a great educator is Mr. Russ Jackson of Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Jackson said, not long ago:

> I just think that if the CFL is too weak to face this kind of competition, we are going to lose it eventually anyway. If it can't compete without government legislation, then some other league, some other team such as the Northmen, or some other sport entirely, will knock it out. I think Toronto is a strong enough football town to support both the Argonauts and the WFL.

Even if Mr. Jackson is wrong and I am wrong—not likely, I would think, in either case—and if the dangers are as great as pessimists paint them to be, were there no positive measures which could have been taken to sustain the CFL? Was there nothing else but a measure which, in my judgment, comes very close to being a bill of attainder directed against one individual?

● (2130)

The minister talks of his meetings with Mr. Bassett and Mr. Bassett's father. I have never seen Mr. Bassett in my life. The only millionaires that I know are those in the House here—and most of them are across the way. I would be about as much at home in the board room of big business as I would on the football field; and I would be just as comfortable on the flight deck of Mariner IV in that regard. But was it necessary to be so restrictive? Was it necessary to have, as I say, something approaching a bill of attainder, which I think the British knocked out about four centuries ago—it was practised in the pre-Stuart era. This friend of the minister's whom he met so often may be rich, but he was a Canadian, not a foreigner, and so far as I can make out he was not at the time breaking an existing law, which should give him a half decent chance to express himself in these matters.

There have been some interesting discussions on the sports pages about the ramifications of this measure. I have made a careful study of all this, Mr. Speaker. When one starts from zero one has to study very hard. I have noticed that many friends of the CFL are expressing doubt as to the capacity of this bill to assist that very important Canadian institution. Indeed, there are many who fear that the results will be inimical to the CFL itself. They point out some very impressive and cogent arguments.

After all, if the WFL does not go into Toronto, it will not disappear, or evaporate, or leave the face of the earth. It will still be there, this bill passed notwithstanding. It will still be around with its attraction or its pressure, whichever expression one wants to use. Because no matter what success the minister has with this bill, no matter what station he will attain, his fiat will not run below the forty-ninth parallel. There will still be functioning football groups there from which we will not be able to separate potential Canadian players, any more than we will be able to separate potential Canadian viewers. So the gridiron curtain will be penetrable in very important ways.

I suggest the minister might well reflect upon the serious problems facing this country and the exacerbation of economic difficulties which for many portions of the Canadian population are approaching the unbearable. I suggest he pause, reflect, and say to his colleagues, "I started out well, but things have so developed in more important areas of our economic society that I hope you agree with me that we should wisely move on to something that would help the mass of Canadian people" who have suffered so long from 11 years of callous maladministration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) answer a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. This can only be done with the hon. member's consent. Is the hon. member for Hillsborough prepared to accept a question from the hon. member for York North?

Mr. Macquarrie: If it is in order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Danson: I just want to ask the hon. member whether he is going to support the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am the member who is fortunate enough, I think—though you may feel otherwise—to lead off for our group on this bill. I want to say at the outset that my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), is the quarterback and chairman of our caucus committee having to do with areas such as sport, and had he been here tonight he would probably be leading off; and doing so, I know, better than I. The members of our caucus will be free to vote as they choose on this matter, but I expect and hope that most, if not all, will support the legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I want to say that, unlike the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I am a football fan and I personally endorse and will support this legislation. The hon. gentleman, who was kind enough to close off his remarks to allow me to make mine this evening, which I appreciate very much, said that he was not a fan. My only reaction to that is that this is no time to brag about it. In fact, I am still not sure whether he is going to vote for or against this bill. However, if he is not a fan or a quarterback, he is a good water-boy, running about all over the economic and political spectrum and Canadian history, trying frantically to put out the fire over the Tory dilemma on whether or not to keep professional football in Canada, Canadian. The hon. member mentioned lacrosse, and I agree with him: I wish the minister had put a provision in this bill with regard to lacrosse and a number of other sports as well. But even the fact that the minister went this far is something.

Some will say that this is an area of endeavour in which the government of Canada has no business intruding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I note some Saskatchewan Tories applauding that one, Mr. Speaker. That professional football is a private business and is of sufficient insignificance in terms of culture, the economy and Canadian content, as not to warrant legislation is the argument put forward by these people. I submit that it is important enough to warrant parliament's stepping in.

Professional sport, in this instance professional football, is not only a business but a large industry. Professional football in the last five years has reached very large proportions in terms of dollars and volume of public interest, television coverage and television fees, and it is in fact an industry—and a significant one—even though it involves sports.

The parliament of Canada on a number of occasions in the last several decades has seen fit to intervene and intrude when an industry of any kind threatens to do injury, in order to prevent that injury to some Canadian endeavour. I submit that in this instance professional football is in the same category and I think it is proper for this parliament to intervene and intrude. When activities in professional football seem to be injurious or threaten the operation of our own professional sports industry, the government has an obligation to step in and prevent such a threat to at least that small part of our Canadian culture—and it is part of our Canadian culture.

In the past five years we have witnessed outstanding growth in professional sports both here and in the United States. Professional sport is no longer the preoccupation of a few sports-minded hobbyists. Coupled with our affluence, both gate and TV revenues from sport are extremely attractive to the diamond-studded aristocrats who can afford to buy sports franchises in major centres of the continent. There must be a number of these men in North America, because the expansion of league franchises, certainly in football and hockey, is enormous.

We are no longer dealing with a simple game, but a developing sports industry of major proportions. This major industry, I submit, should be subject to legislation and control just like any other business. It is a business. That is why I cannot accept the argument of those who say it is not the government's business whether the World Football League is allowed a Toronto franchise or whether the proposed $178 million stadium in Montreal, paid for by the people of Canada, will be used for an NFL franchise or for the Expos to play baseball in. A Montreal NFL franchise would be very attractive, of course, but not to the benefit of the people of Montreal and not to the benefit of Canadian football; it would be to the benefit of whichever mogul or covey of private entrepreneurs is successful in obtaining such a franchise.

In supporting the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in his attempts to arrive at some solution to American athletic imperialism, many members of my party are extremely concerned about the future of the Canadian Football League and especially about the community-owned teams in western Canada. We are conerned about the World Football League raiding the CFL for players, and that is why we back the minister in his stand against the WFL Toronto franchise application.

Anyone who would try to suggest that a World Football League franchise in Toronto will not harm the Canadian Football League is suffering delusions which must border on the delirium tremens that some people suffer. It is perfectly obvious that additional professional football teams in Montreal and Toronto could not help but reduce the gate receipts, television receipts and the receipts of the Argonauts in Toronto as well as the Canadian Football League, and anybody who suggests otherwise does not know what he is talking about. If Mr. Bassett wants to talk about a $48,000 gate equalization, I suggest he should make it $480,000 if he wants to talk sense. Such a franchise could not help but would hurt the Canadian Football League.

It is true that there are 15 Americans on each of the teams and most of the coaches and managers are American, but in spite of that there is a significant element of Canadian content, Canadian endeavour and Canadian effort and the majority of the players are Canadian. We also have Canadian rules, which in my personal opinion are a heck of a lot better than the rules of the National Football League. The game is more exciting to watch, it is a better game, it is a faster game and it is our game.

I should also like to refer to community ownership of five of the Canadian Football League teams. Maybe there are some members of this chamber who are not concerned because they happen to come from Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa which do not have community-owned football teams; but in my province of Saskatchewan the Roughriders team is ours, and the same applies to Winnipeg and the rest of Manitoba as well as to Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver. Even those well-to-do and well-heeled Tories and Liberals who actively work for and support these teams are deserving of full marks and full credit because nobody makes a buck out of them. I hope the day will come when the people of Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa will take over and operate on a community basis professional football teams and teams in other sports as well.

Another reason I personally support the bill is that I am not particularly interested in the welfare of the millions of dollars of one, John Bassett, Jr. Let us not kid ourselves. I have sided with the minister's position on this because I see professional football as an industry in North America. Perhaps only three cities in Canada are capable of supporting big league professional football, that is, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver; but if these three go American, you can kiss the other Canadian teams goodbye. And that is what the Bassett-Toronto deal means in the long run. Let us have no doubt about that.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bassett has one very simple motive. He does not really care if he wrecks the Canadian Football League. He just wants to make himself a few more bucks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friends to the right applaud that. I suggest that if Mr. Bassett wants to make a few more bucks out of football, he can damn well go to the United States and become an American citizen and make his bucks there, and leave our Canadian football alone. The Canadian Football League is not Canadian enough yet, and we all agree to that. The Canadian Football League must expand and must become even more Canadian. I would hope that within the next five or ten years the Canadian league is composed of even more, if not entirely, Canadian players.

We must also consider the efforts and the activities of our Canadian football teams in community and high school football leagues. The Saskatchewan Roughriders have provided equipment and professional assistance to a number of high school teams. For example, a great deal of such assistance was given to the high school football team in the little town of Maple Creek. We must consider the tens of thousands of dollars and the efforts that have been put into our high school, university and junior football teams. I do not hear Mr. Bassett offering any aid or comfort in that regard. He has put his money in his pocket and run. This is another good reason for having our own professional football league. It does something more than just try to make bucks for millionaires in Toronto, Buffalo, or somewhere else.

In addition to running the business of professional football, the CFL is also actively engaged in promoting amateur sports and in the development of Canadian talent on the part of players, coaches and managers. Surely that is another important part of the operation of the Canadian Football League and another reason for supporting the minister and the government on this bill.

I listened to the minister, followed by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), talking about the old days long before I came here. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might well have been here in those days. It is funny that mention was made of Sir John A. Macdonald and the national dream to keep the foreigners, the damned Yankees, out. Then there was R. B. Bennett, who in the late 1930s brought in the CBC and the Canadian Wheat Board. I am beginning to feel sorry I have been so critical of these historic figures of Canadian political life because it now looks as if they were a hell of a lot more progressive than the present Progressive Conservatives. I am not suggesting they were perfect. Mr. Macdonald's endeavours to get the construction of a transcontinental railway to knit together Canada was an excellent idea, but subsequently it turned out to be for the benefit of the CPR instead of for Canada. However, that can be corrected also. The NDP have some ideas on that.

I should like to urge hon. members to consider not only the community-owned teams of western Canada but also the other places in Canada that should be able to, and I hope will very soon, enter the Canadian Football League, such as London, Ontario, Halifax-Dartmouth and then, why not, Quebec city? I think British Columbia should have another team. Vancouver Island has the population to support a team. There is no way this can come about if we sit back and do not do anything just because a millionaire from Toronto wants to make a buck with an American franchise at the expense of some element at least of Canadian professional football league operations in this country. If that is nationalism, good. I think it is a lot better kind of nationalism than the hon. member for Hillsborough has put forward. He spoke about sensitive and sensible nationalism. That is fine. He wondered what other method might have been found to protect the Canadian Football League. I wish he would quit wondering and tell us what his ideas are and what the Conservative Party would do, if anything.

I hope the hon. members for Regina East (Mr. Balfour), Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Horner) and Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) will speak, because I should like to hear their views. I am sure the people in their constituencies who buy season tickets to support the Saskatchewan Roughriders would like to hear their views. In fact, I am sure the busload or two of people who make the 300 mile round trip to the home games in Regina from Swift Current would be very interested to hear what the hon. member from that constituency would say and how he would vote on this bill.

I hope the hon. member for Regina East lets us know where he stands on this. In case he or any other such members are unable to be present for the vote, I hope they will tell us where they stand on this question because I am sure the people from the steel plants, the packing houses and the railway yards in Regina, as well as the downtown storekeepers—the people who pool their money to buy tickets to the $100 dinner, and season tickets—will be interested to hear what the hon. member has to say. But more importantly they will be interested to know where he stands.

I agree with the hon. member for Hillsborough that this legislation is not as important an issue as inflation, or the corporate tax rip-off, the railways or what is being done by the government in the wrecking of the Canadian Wheat Board with the support of the Conservative Party. However, this matter is important and I want to ask my friends in the Progressive Conservative Party or anyone in my party who does not support this bill, for God's sake can't we have something of our own, or must we lose it because some millionaire wants to buy a football franchise? Is it not time to say, "No, no further"?

Of course this is not as important as many other serious issues facing this country, but I submit it is important enough for this parliament to deal with and it is important enough for this parliament to do something about. We need not take a long time tomorrow dealing with this bill at the second reading stage. If the hon. member for Hillsborough wishes to get on with something more important, I hope he will persuade his colleagues to take two minutes each tomorrow, then sit down and we will have a vote next week. Next Monday we could start dealing with something more important than professional football: we would spend merely a minimum of time in the House on this measure.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to urge upon members that it is important enough for them to even change their minds and support the legislation. It is important enough that the passage of this kind of legislation will serve notice and warning on people of the ilk of the Bassetts in other sports in other parts of the country. It is important enough that I think the government then might be encouraged to do more about other sports of a professional and semi-professional nature in this country. I wish to urge, certainly on my behalf, and I think on behalf of most if not all my colleagues, that this legislation is worth supporting and that if the Canadian Football League is worthy of extending and expanding I hope all of us will decide it is worth passing this bill, because we do not have too much time.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, if the House is ready for the question I am quite prepared to pass and have the question put.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I thought I had the floor if the vote was not to be put.

An hon. Member: You said you passed.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Fleming: It is the government's turn. I said I wanted to speak unless there was a general willingness on all sides of the House to go to a vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, if this is what the hon. member had in mind, I am sure the hon. member for Rocky Mountain would allow the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) to have the floor at this point.

Mr. Fleming: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, if the House leader would just nod his head to indicate that this is to be the business for tomorrow, I am sure Hansard would record his nod.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could we know by a nod or by some other indication what we will do tomorrow after we finish this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will deal with this bill, and if we complete it we will begin the second reading of the bill to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, is it not too much for even the government House leader to expect that this bill will go through, with so many Toronto members on the government side wishing to speak?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make clear that on this side we are ready to deal with the bill quickly and will not be putting up a speaker other than the hon. member who sought the floor this evening. The bill could pass easily tomorrow, from our point of view.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING USE OF WINNIPEG AS OVERHAUL BASE FOR BOEING 727 AIRCRAFT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, over the past year I have risen many times to speak on subjects relating to Air Canada. As everyone who has ever flown on Air Canada knows, there is a great deal wrong with our national airline. Specifically, my interest in Air Canada centres around the transfer of the air maintenance base from Winnipeg to Dorval in 1969 and the concomitant problems which have ensued both in Winnipeg and Dorval. Hon. members are only too familiar with the history surrounding the move, so I will not expand on it again except to say that the transfer effectively destroyed Manitoba's aerospace industry. It was thus heartening to hear that the government may finally be doing something to revive the industry. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is to be congratulated for his stand to establish an Air Canada overhaul base in Winnipeg.

Since the departure of the base, the Manitoba aviation industry has floundered as successive Liberal governments have failed to honour their commitments to that industry. Air Canada's successor at the Winnipeg base, CAE Aircraft, has been beset with difficulties ever since it took over the operation. Government contracts or assistance have not been forthcoming as promised, and as a result the aerospace industry in Manitoba is slowly dying. But this is no real surprise. After all, CAE could never hope to replace Air Canada.

What is needed in Winnipeg is not government and Air Canada contracts to CAE but the return of portions of the Air Canada overhaul base from Dorval to Winnipeg. This would allow many of the 1,000 or so Manitobans who were drafted to Dorval to return home, and it would allow former Air Canada employees who are now with CAE to return to Air Canada at a higher rate of pay. It would also rebuild what was once a viable industry in the province and provide the government with an opportunity to live up to its avowed policy of industrial decentralization. To date this policy has been an outright sham, especially with regard to Air Canada. The government seems to forget that a confidential transportation study completed in 1971, the McKinley report, recommended that Air Canada's operations be decentralized.

Both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) have said that the government is firmly committed to a policy of industrial decentralization within Canada and have talked at great length of the need to develop secondary industry in the west on top of our great resource and energy base. Well, here is their chance to put their money where their mouths are. The McKinley report was correct in recommending that Air Canada decentralize its operations. After all, Air Canada operated two bases for several years and did so very efficiently. Just look at the 1957 Wallace Clark report. Furthermore, most American airlines operate their maintenance and overhaul of both aircraft and engines on the fleet base station concept. That respected periodical, the Journal of Air Law and Commerce, listed the following advantages of decentralization: shorter lines of authority, greater field economics, and increased stress on the profit centre concept and cost control.

The problems at Dorval to which I alluded earlier have been the subject of many of my previous remarks regarding Air Canada. Suffice it to say that these relate to safety, staffing and the violation of various regulations—all problems which the unions have brought to the attention of Air Canada management. While nothing has been done to alleviate these problems, Air Canada apparently has finally realized they exist: witness the recent replacement of the vice-president in charge of maintenance.

As well, Dorval is overcrowded and operating close to maximum efficiency. The result of such a situation is increased inefficiency. Currently, Wardair, Air Jamaica, Eastern Airlines, Quebec Air and CP Air all make use of the Dorval facilities along with Air Canada. Any union fears that a transfer of parts of the maintenance base to Winnipeg would result in a loss of jobs are unfounded. Air Canada operations are increasing at the rate of 10 per cent annually, and thus there would be no shortage of work. Also, the airlines I have mentioned no doubt will be adding to their fleet, which will continue to create a high level of work for the Dorval air base.

In view of this entire situation it was thus heartening, as I mentioned, to hear that there have been consultations over getting Air Canada to assign some of its jet overhaul activities from Montreal to the Winnipeg base, and over the defence department's related plans to have the repair and overhaul of their Boeing 707s done in Winnipeg as well. Because the overhaul of the 707s is related to the establishment of further repair and overhaul work in Winnipeg, it is to be hoped that the government and Air Canada will decide to send Air Canada's Boeing 727s to Winnipeg instead of Montreal. And this does not mean assigning the work to CAE. Rather, portions of the base must be moved from Dorval to Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since Air Canada has ordered Boeing 727 aircraft, the first of which are due for delivery this fall, it had to make arrangements for their maintenance. At first, these aircraft will be providing an improved Rapidair service between Montreal and Toronto, and it therefore makes sense that such aircraft be maintained, initially, at Dorval. In due course, as more and more aircraft of this type are delivered and as the entire Air Canada fleet is increased in response to the growth in demand, Air Canada will no doubt assess the optimal way of arranging maintenance for its aircraft in an efficient manner.

As the hon. member knows, the corporation's management is responsible for the performance of the airline. Naturally, it is of interest to the government to know how the airline, as a Crown corporation, is harmonizing its corporate objectives in providing safe and efficient transportation to Canadians, with other government policies, without jeopardizing the viability of its main activity. As you are very well aware, the government is involved in a very comprehensive review of Canada's aerospace industry, and the contribution that Canadian airlines can make in this, especially Air Canada, is not overlooked. Air Canada's participation in the development of such strategies cannot be based on any one particular aircraft type but, rather, on its wider need for the maintenance of its fleet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

HOUSING—ACTION BY GOVERNMENT TO REDUCE COST

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am speaking tonight before this "packed" House is that on April 10 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) specifically what measures the government had in mind to deal with the rising costs of housing and whether he was able to give an assurance to the Canadian people and to parliament that the cost of housing, which has risen at a staggering rate within the last year, could be slowed down. The minister, of course, did not answer my question. He replied by saying:

> Mr. Speaker, we cannot give the hon. member that guarantee, but we can assure him that we share his view of the seriousness of the problem he has stated.

That is some consolation for a person who cannot afford a house! In a previous answer the minister explained the reason why housing had jumped at such a remarkable rate when he said:

> Basically, one of the problems is the excessive demand for housing within the middle income group which is produced, first, by an attempt by Canadians to protect themselves against inflation and, second, because the profit from the disposal of a house is still the only thing free of capital gains tax.

In other words, because of this incompetent government, people are forced to invest in housing and that is part of the reason for the cost of housing going even higher. Figures were released just recently which show that the cost of the average house in Toronto jumped within the last year by 41.8 per cent. The average house in Toronto at the present time is selling for about $50,435. Throughout Ontario in 1973, the increase in housing costs was 26.2 per cent. In my community houses have virtually doubled in price since 1970.

A study recently done in Ottawa before the latest increase in the mortgage rate showed that the average family which wanted to buy the average house here needed an income of $17,000 a year to pay for the mortgage, roughly two-thirds more than the average family makes at present. The problem is not quite so bad if you own your own house and plan to move to another, because the price of your own house will have appreciated along with the market. What is particularly bad is the prospect that literally millions of young Canadians, like myself, may never in their lifetime afford adequate housing of their own.

What is particularly shocking is the most recent hike in interest rates which has taken place since the time I asked my question of the minister. Our party has asked the government to bring in a series of comprehensive controls. The government has refused. We asked them to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials which in itself is inflationary and helps the government to profit from the cost of inflation the average consumer must bear. Again they refused. We asked the government to bring in an early budget. Again they refused. Obviously, part of the government's so-called anti-inflation program is the latest increase in the bank rate. The effect on housing will not be to repress prices but, rather, to drive them up more. The government's actions, ostensibly to curb inflation, only make it worse. Yesterday's Toronto Star says:

> "People are determined to buy houses now because they feel prices are going to keep on rising," one trust company official said.
> Another said dearer mortgages will scare off only a few potential buyers who previously could barely scrape up the financing.

[Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin Waterloo).]

It is worth reading into the record part of the lead editorial in tonight's Toronto Star. It is entitled "Interest rates feed inflation" and reads in part:

> In the case of businesses, interest payments are another cost item, just like labour and materials. When the price of any of these goes up, businesses pass the added cost along in the form of higher prices for their products.
>
> By way of illustration, a spokesman for Trans Canada PipeLines Ltd. was quoted this week as saying his company "is not directly concerned" with higher wellhead prices for natural gas as long as it can pass the increases along in full to the ultimate users.
>
> As for those ultimate users, many have no such quick and easy way of covering their higher costs. They have little economic muscle and can only watch helplessly as their pay cheques spread thinner month by month. So the burden of fighting inflation falls on their backs.
> That's why, with inflation running at an annual rate in excess of 10 per cent, a further cost increase in the form of higher interest rates is not only inappropriate, but intolerable.

The government claims that inflation is largely imported. Of course, statistics show that two-thirds of our inflation is generated domestically. I think the people of Canada are entitled to more than a government which refuses to act. They are entitled to the option of choosing a new government if they so wish—and the polls show they are prepared to do that. That is why the government has refused to call an opposition day, when a vote of non confidence could be moved, before the budget. They are afraid of facing the electorate. The government is in decay, leaderless. Before today, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was down south, it was literally leaderless. Further, it is visionless. It stumbles from crisis to crisis. I and my party think that the Canadian people deserve something better.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would answer very briefly to the comments of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) to remind him that there has been much activity in the residential building industry in recent years. Costs of residential houses and apartment rents have risen significantly during the same period, partly because of ever higher wages and costs of building materials and serviced lots, partly because of the continuing strong demand for housing resulting from the desire for better accommodation and from inflation obsession.

Several initiatives have been taken by the federal government. To reduce the cost of serviced lots, for example, the government allocated from the budget of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $100 million yearly for five years, to its land servicing program. This loan reserve is available to provinces and municipalities wishing to buy and service residential lots. The government provided also a significant amount, $135 million, for sewage treatment under the loan program. Under this program, municipalities may borrow an amount equal to two thirds of the cost of sewage disposal plants and main ducts construction. The municipalities can benefit from a subsidy equal to 25 per cent of the loan granted.

Further to these measures which have been passed to help provinces and municipalities turning lots into residential districts, hon. members will recall the changes to the National Housing Act which were passed last year and especially the program to help low income homeowners to borrow from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at preferred rates. Under the program to facilitate the purchase of a house for low income families, they can borrow at a very low interest rate, as low as 6 per cent.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, in 1974 the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will allocate the major part of its budget to housing programs for low and middle income people and to programs to help provinces and municipalities in the development of residential lots. Furthermore, the hon. members will remember the passing of Bill C-135, a few months ago, which has allowed us to increase funds available for housing.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS OF UNEMPLOYED RURAL WORKERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I directed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) regarding the Unemployment Insurance Act which I feel discriminates against people in rural Canada. I base this on the interpretation that is made of the act by the officials, referees and umpires as to whether a person is actually available for work or whether he is restricting himself in terms of the distance from home he will go when trying to obtain a job. Because of the strict interpretation of these regulations, I also asked whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission expected a family to uproot itself in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

The minister replied that all I have to do is give him the information, he will look into the case and all will be well. The fact is, I have done that on numerous occasions. Almost every member from rural Canada has done the same. This is something that cuts across party lines. I have been told by members of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and my party from five or six provinces that they have run into the same problem where people in rural areas clearly qualify for unemployment insurance but because they live in a small town and cannot travel 40 or 50 miles—

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Many do not have cars.

Mr. Nystrom: As the hon. member has pointed out, many do not have cars. They do not have adequate transportation. They are not in the same position to look for a job as people in urban Canada. The act is very subjective. It leaves it open to interpretation when deciding whether someone is available for work. For example, there is no mileage qualification which indicates a person must look for employment within 10, 20 or 40 miles. As a result, many people in rural Canada are discriminated against. I say this for two reasons. First, as all members know, job opportunities in rural Canada are scarce. Second, many of these people do not have cars and public transportation is not available to them in order that they may travel 40 or 50 miles to find a job.

There are many cases of this in my constituency. There is a woman, a farm wife, in the town of Balcarres, 55 miles from Regina, who had worked for many years. She became unemployed for very legitimate reasons. She applied for unemployment insurance. She made it very plain to the commission that she would work in her own town or in another town adjacent to her own town, and that she was willing to work at jobs which were much lower in pay, status, and so on, than she was qualified for. But the Unemployment Insurance Commission said she had to look for a job in the city of Regina. That is 55 miles away. She has no car—her husband needs the family car for his business. Therefore she was disqualified. If she had uprooted her family and moved into Regina, she could have qualified. It seems to me that this is a rather ludicrous thing to happen.

● (2220)

The other thing which I often find, Mr. Speaker, is that if a person were actually to lie to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and say, "I'll look for a job anywhere at any salary", then they would qualify; but if they are honest with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, they are cut off. I have in my hand a file with maybe 10, 15 or 25 cases at least in the last few months where precisely this has happened. People who move from a rural area into an urban centre and look for a job but can't find a job right away are cut off because they are restricting themselves. I have here a ruling of an umpire. This is back in June of 1973. I quote the ruling regarding this particular point:

> The umpire, who is the final authority for interpreting the Unemployment Insurance Act, has established the following principles when considering questions of availability for work:
> 1. A person who leaves employment in an industrial area to take up residence in a small town or rural area fails to prove that she is available for work.
> 2. A person who restricts herself to employment in a small town where opportunities for employment are limited, fails to prove that she is available for work.

I know people who have been willing to go 40 or 50 miles, to pay babysitters, to drive their own cars 40 and 50 miles, but the UIC people say these persons are not available for work. For God's sake, if a person lived in one of the cities of urban Canada and took exactly the same attitude, that person would qualify for UIC. A person in my riding, or in a comparable rural riding is not abusing the act; he is just desirous of getting the same benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Act as someone who happens to live in urban Canada.

What I am saying tonight to the parliamentary secretary and to the government is that they should do one of two things. They should either change the directive so as to enable the officials to interpret the act in a different way, or they should amend the act so that rural people would not be discriminated against by reason of the facts of geography; so that rural people do not have to connive or try to deceive the Unemployment Insurance Commission officials. I telephoned the Unemployment Insurance office in Regina today to find out how many claimants have been disqualified for the reason I have mentioned. Apparently this statistic is not kept. I suggest that it should be kept. In rural southern Saskatchewan, the area from which I come, several people were disqualified after having first qualified for UIC, and I suspect that most of them were disqualified for this reason.

My last point is this. I believe women are discriminated against more than men under this particular provision. This is for various reasons. The husband may be employed in a rural area and the wife is looking for a job. The officials seem to interpret the act very religiously and very tightly. I could go on at great length and recite many cases. The minister knows all about this situation. I have been in touch with him several times. Members of all parties have been in touch with him. All I am saying is that some action should be taken to clarify this situation because at present there is discrimination against people who live in rural Canada whether they come from one province or another.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is not the policy of the UIC to disqualify rural workers from benefit on the pretext that they are restricting their area of employment search. On the contrary, the commission simply requires, in accordance with the act, that claimants, whether urban or rural, prove that they are unable to obtain suitable employment in order to be eligible for regular benefits. The manner in which this proof is requested by the commission is through the job search statement which the claimant completes as he looks for re-employment. This listing of potential employers contacted provides the basis for continuing eligibility for benefits.

The one difference between the magnitude and the area of search required between urban and rural claimants is the distance from their residence that they should search for work. Rural claimants characteristically work within a range of some 25 to 30 miles from their residence. In fact, it is likely that they obtained their insurable employment with employers that far from home. It is therefore reasonable to require that they should search for work within that same reasonable distance. Urban claimants, on the other hand, do not normally work at such distances from their residence and in fact can usually make sufficient contacts with prospective employers within much shorter distances.

It is important to note that any denial of benefits, whether to urban or rural claimants, can be appealed by the claimant to a board of referees. This board of referees is generally composed of independent people selected from the claimant's community who have a knowledge of the work patterns of the claimants appealing. In point of fact, the insurance agent who makes the initial decision on a claim is also knowledgeable about a claimant's area and the distances which people in his district would normally travel to and from work.

Once a claimant has proved that he or she is unable to obtain suitable employment, the commission is obliged to continue to pay benefits. There is no requirement for claimants to move from their residence in order to obtain unemployment insurance benefits. If the claimant obtains his insurable employment in the area of his residence, then he or she is entitled to receive benefits while residing in that area provided be on she adequately show that they are unable to obtain employment.

The question that the hon. member has raised tonight is difficult to discuss because essentially it is a question of fact. But what strikes me very much about it is that the decision on this question of fact is made by officials who live in the area and it is reviewed by a board of referees who live in the area. It is hard to imagine people who could more adequately decide the facts in cases of this kind. We would be most happy to review any cases the hon. member cares to submit to the minister for review.

EXPO '74, SPOKANE—BORDER CROSSING HOURS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the opening of Expo '74 in Spokane, Washington, in less than two weeks time and the urgent need to extend border crossing hours at several ports of entry in the Kootenay and Okanagan area, and since this extension of time has been promised and planned for by the department concerned, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House unanimously endorse the need for adequate extensions of time at these border crossing-points and requests the Minister of National Revenue to announce these time extensions at the earliest possible date so that individuals, groups and organizations can make plans for widely advertising the border crossing hours and for arranging their own visits to Expo '74.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

HOLIDAYS ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE "DOMINION DAY" TO "CANADA DAY"

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-280, to amend the Holidays Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of one of our main holidays to Canada Day, a name that is already being used in the majority of the cities of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ALLEVIATE DIFFICULTIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who eight days ago, according to a transcript released by his office, said:

We've had very very little legislative time as you know. We think we should be using the days before the budget to bring in legislation to alleviate the various difficulties in the economy to help the people in various ways—

● (1110)

Would the right hon. gentleman tell the House what this legislation is and why parliament is not dealing with it today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is because of that, because of my statement, that the leader of the House made the suggestion to parliament last night that we should deal most expeditiously with the football bill which is of importance to some people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We are prepared to put up only two speakers and if the opposition will co-operate we shall certainly be very pleased to move on to other business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government is responsible for the business before the House and, Lord knows, it exercises that control in a rather tyrannical way. I want to ask the Prime Minister where this important legislation is, why it is not before the House and why, in view of the rapid inflation in the country and the spreading chaos with regard to the provision of essential services, the Prime Minister is not telling the people what the government proposes to do to restore some sense of confidence and stability?

Mr. Trudeau: The House can deal with only one bill at a time. The judgment of the government was to bring forward the bill which is before the House today. I repeat, we are seeking co-operation from all parties to deal with it in a businesslike fashion, and then we shall bring on other legislation.

Mr. Stanfield: We should like to know what the business of the government is. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to test the confidence of the House on the basis of the replies he is making today?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I find it rather typical of the Tory opposition that they are never prepared to deal with matters before them because they never have any answers for them.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact parliament has passed only seven or eight bills, none of them dealing with inflation on either a long-term or short-term basis, and in view of the fact parliament will today be occupied in considering a bill dealing with football at a time when the country is being paralysed by strikes, when the regional price index will come out today showing the highest inflation rate in the country, will the Prime Minister change his priorities and bring on legislation to deal with these problems?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not agree with the premise of the question. Only this week very important matters of great concern to the fishermen and farmers of this country were dealt with, and the Canada Pension Plan bill is also of great concern to all Canadians. I repeat, we shall bring forward other business but I think it is very important that the opposition should not make this kind of speech merely to hide the fact they do not know what position to take on the football bill.

Mr. Stanfield: If you had been here last night, you would have known we have taken a position—against the bill.

REQUEST FOR TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR LUMBER IN LIGHT OF PROSPECTIVE FURTHER INCREASE IN WHOLESALE PRICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Ontario Lumber Manufacturers Association that the wholesale price of lumber will increase by a further 25 per cent by next fall, does the Prime Minister think the time has now come to introduce a two-price system for lumber in this country, as in the case of oil when an export tax was imposed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): My view has not changed from that expressed by the Minister of Finance on a two-price system a few days ago.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the announcement that another increase of 25 per cent can be expected by the fall and the fact that the cost of lumber is already very high, can the Prime Minister tell the House what he intends to do about the high price of housing in this country?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: This has been the subject of many statements by the government, particularly by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

MEASURES TO CURB INCREASES IN COST OF LIVING

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the cost of living is steadily increasing and since there is no forseeable end to this trend, I would like the Prime Minister to tell the House which steps he is taking right now to prevent a further increase in the cost of living next Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have been away from the House for months to ask such a question. As to Monday morning, I suggest that he should read this morning's Financial Times.

[English]

Looking at the Canadian economy, it talks about the remarkably strong performance of our economy in the first two months at a time when industrial production fell back in other major industrial countries, including the United States, Britain and France.

[Translation]

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the right hon. Prime Minister that I was here and that if the rate of economic output is exceptional, so is the rate of inflation. What I want to know is what the Prime Minister is doing to prevent a further deterioration.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would like the government to reiterate large portions of the Speech from the Throne. We said that inflation was being fought in several ways, we never promised that inflation would be reduced to zero before Monday morning, and we indicated that the best way to control inflation was to increase commodities supply in the country. The hon. member knows that the throne speech contained a series of legislative programs that the House should allow us to implement, so as to get those results.

DATE OF BUDGET AND INTRODUCTION OF EMERGENCY LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman assure the House that the Minister of Finance will have named the date upon which the budget will be brought down before the Prime Minister takes off on his political trip around Ontario next week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance. I am not afraid to show myself in Ontario as the hon. member is.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to show myself in the House of Commons in any case. I have a supplementary question for the right hon. gentleman. Will he assure the House that any emergency legislation necessary to deal with the plethora of labour disputes and strikes that abound in Canada will also be introduced before the beginning of his political trip next week?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that, so has the Minister of Transport and indeed even the House leader. I cannot recall whether the hon. member was brave and showed himself in the House yesterday. If he was in the House yesterday he is certainly different from the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who is not here today and was not here yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West and then the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not hear a good deal of what the right hon. gentleman muttered toward the end of his speech; maybe he was simply moving his lips again. Will the Prime Minister assure the members of this House and the people of Canada that it will be the Liberal party that will pick up the tab for the many government aircraft needed to transport him around the province of Ontario and not the taxpayers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can say that it is the government of Canada and the taxpayers who are picking up the tab for the many Tories who are flying out on DND planes both last night and today.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order respecting the Prime Minister's charge about members of the opposition. If any members are on government planes, they are returning to their constituencies to look after constituency business. It is because of a national strike that this government cannot handle that they are using DND planes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1120)

Mr. Bell: I might say they are not using government or military helicopters.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do agree that it is customary to use government planes—I do not see the relevancy of whether they are helicopters or fixed wing aircraft—to bring members back to their constituencies. I just find it strange that the opposition wants to play with the rules only for its side and not for both sides.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

DISPUTE WITH POSTAL WORKERS—ACTION TO ENSURE MOVEMENT OF MAIL—CODERS' PAY RATE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, obviously my question is for the Postmaster General.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris has the floor.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I am sure everybody has heard of sunny Manitoba. In view of the fact the Canadian Union of Postal Workers national executive has now called a national strike, can the Postmaster General indicate to the House what action he is taking to get the mail moving again?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see the sun has done some good to my hon. colleague. I should like to remind him that we held a meeting yesterday with the national executive and that another is to be held this afternoon. As far as I know, the national executive did not call the national strike. I wonder where the hon. member got his information. Be that as it may, if it did, and I repeat what I have already said, the strike is illegal and infinitely regrettable because the permanent employees of the postal department are guaranteed jobs and salaries under their collective agreement.

I am terribly sorry such excessives steps should now be resorted to in order to solve a problem which, basically, concerns only a very small number of our employees and could be solved within the framework of the collective agreement. Provisions stipulate specifically that a manpower committee must sit to solve those problems.

I have often expressed the wish that the manpower committee should work out. I have expressed my willingness to take part in its work. I hope our employees will understand that it is in their interest and also their duty to go back to work. Then, we can solve the problems that trouble them.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that morale in the Post Office Department, as well as in other branches of the Public Service, has been sagging disastrously during the past few months, and as the key issue with reference to the Post Office is the wide differential between the pay rates of sorters and coders, is this particular item a part of the current negotiations?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is part of the agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if the morale has been so low these last few months, it is certainly not because of the Post Office administration. We have said again and again that all our employees had a guaranteed employment and salary.

The hon. member spoke about the coders, but I must emphasize that there are only 95 such employees and that the difference in wages is 54 cents an hour. The Post Office employees have approved the last collective agreement providing for that wage scale. I think they have no excuse to stop work like that, just because of 95 employees.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the answer given by the President of the Treasury Board last Thursday, when I asked a similar question, indicating that this item is a problem, would the President of the Treasury Board speak to the Postmaster General and apprise him of this situation please?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say that the Postmaster General and I are in almost continuous consultation.

SETTLEMENT OF PAY RATE FOR POSTAL CODERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in answer to a question the Postmaster General said that he would not negotiate with the postal employees while they were engaged in this work stoppage. However, he has been meeting with them. I should like to ask him whether he and his department have now moved away from the position they have taken until the last couple of days at least of insisting that the pay rate for the coders is a matter which will be settled by the department and will not be discussed with the employees even though this is the question about which the employees have in fact left their work?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday and I repeat that we are ready to discuss with the representatives of employees any issue which concerns them. However, I have already assured the House that the problem of coders can quite well be discussed with the manpower committee whose creation is provided in the collective agreement.

Our employees are not entitled to leave their work at the present time since they benefit from a mechanism provided in their collective agreement to discuss and settle the matter. I repeat that I am ready to sit on the manpower committee to find a solution. It is not by an illegal work stoppage that the employees will obtain what they are asking.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North for a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands also on a supplementary.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the minister says he is prepared to have the matter discussed by the manpower committee. This issue has not arisen just in the last couple of days. The employees have indicated for more than a year that they are not satisfied with the much lower rate of pay set by the department for the coders. If the manpower committee has been ready to discuss this question, has it in fact been discussed and has any progress been made, or is not the case that, while the minister and his department are ready to listen to the objections, they are not prepared to take the objections into consideration and move on this question at all?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: We are ready to discuss the matter, but I remind the hon. member that only 95 employees are involved. Now this illegal work stoppage is due to the classification of 95 individuals in a department of 50,000 employees. In my opinion, it is entirely irresponsible to deprive the Canadian people of such an important service to settle the case of 95 individuals, especially in Montreal where there is not a single coder and there will not be any for two years.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the minister has repeated several times that there are only 95 people involved. Is it not true that the report on which this whole mechanism or automation is based—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is hardly a point of order. The hon. member might be recognized for a further supplementary later, but in view of the fact that we are still on supplementaries the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

MEASURES TO ENSURE DELIVERY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is prompted by the fact there has been so little information forthcoming from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Now that the deadline date has arrived for the normal mailing of family allowance cheques, will the Prime Minister tell the House and the country what contingency plans the government has for the distributing of these cheques beginning today?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to answer this question and advise the House that 95 per cent of all social allowance cheques have already been delivered or should be delivered today. We have taken exceptional steps to give preference to these cheques in the sorting of the mail, and I can assure the hon. member that, with a few exceptions, all these family allowance cheques have already been delivered or will be delivered shortly.

Arrangements have been made with the various provincial governments for the delivery of their respective welfare allowance cheques.

Moreover, I must advise the hon. member that old age security pension cheques are not due for mailing until April.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Postmaster General be good enough to name the exceptions, including Kingston and the Islands?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Unfortunately, I have been unable to obtain a final answer concerning this, but I think that the mail in the Kingston area is being delivered today.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S PLANS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the general mortgage market in Toronto in particular has broken down as a result of the inordinate increase in interest rates and the uncertainty in the market, and will the Prime Minister direct the Minister of Finance or himself to make a statement to the House on motions as to the government's long-term mortgage interest plans so that mortgage companies, at this critical time of the year when housing starts must commence, will know where they are going and will be able to make commitments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no.

Mr. Blenkarn: Does the Prime Minister realize that housing starts cannot commence unless mortgage companies are able to make long-term commitments, and will he actually inform the mortgage industry as to the government's plans so that something can be done to make sure there will be some housing built this year?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the hon. member from Barbados has indicated that football is more important than food prices, may I direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. When will the study, either by his department or the Food Prices Review Board, of the extent to which the food processing industry has pocketed the corporation tax cut to 40 per cent be completed and a report made?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member must be referring to studies carried on under the auspices of the Department of Finance with respect to the effect of the tax cuts in question.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I based my question on the response that the Minister of Finance gave me on April 10, about which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would know nothing. In response to a question of mine he said that if in the report of the Food Prices Review Board the facts alleged are proven, the government will do something. I am merely taking the advice given me by the Minister of Finance who obviously knows more about it than the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES—RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT FOR ACTION BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Kenneth J. Higson (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one put by my friend, the hon. member for Mississauga, and it is for the Prime Minister. Do the Prime Minister and the government accept responsibility for the recent action taken by the governor of the Bank of Canada in increasing the interest rate, which has resulted in chartered banks and other lending institutions across Canada increasing their interest rates across the board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has answered similar questions many times.

Mr. Higson: No.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, he has and, if I am given time, I could probably read his answers.

Mr. Stanfield: You have lots of time.

Mr. Trudeau: The long and short of it is that the governor of the Bank of Canada decides what the interest rate will be but in consultation with the government, and there is an over-all responsibility by the government for the general monetary policy of the country. This is the way the law stands and this is the way we operate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Higson: Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the next adjustment of the bank rate will only be downward, or is it the policy of the government that increasing inflationary pressures will be met by simply increasing bank rates?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have the general reference for which I was looking in my first answer. It appears at page 1413 of Hansard where the Minister of Finance was giving a series of answers. One of them reads as follows:

The governor of the bank indicated to me over the weekend that monetary policy will continue to accommodate the rapid expansion in the economy—

Mr. Woolliams: You're reading.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course I am reading. I am reading from Hansard. Did you not realize that?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It continues:

—but that he is concerned about the increase in the monetary aggregates—in other words, the money supply.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Could he advise the House whether or not he intends to amend the Criminal Code section dealing with abortion so as to assure nurses, who are refusing to participate in abortions because they consider them immoral, that their employment will not be jeopardized?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take the hon. member's question as notice and relay it to the Minister of Justice. I am sure he will let the hon. member know.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY BOXCARS TO MOVE GRAIN

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Following the transportation conference of over a week ago and the chaotic situation described by the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, can the minister assure the House and the country that his department has looked into the problem of boxcars in western Canada for the movement of grain and that the situation is improving?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are following this problem on a daily basis. I think the situation is improving.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: Daily basis?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): However, what can complicate the situation is the strike on the St. Lawrence. As hon. members know, ocean-going ships cannot go up to Thunder Bay, and this might have some implications.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPO '74, SPOKANE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BORDER CROSSING HOURS—PARTICIPATION BY GOVERNMENT IN FAIR

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue or his parliamentary assistant. In view of the fact that Expo '74 in Spokane, Washington, opens in about two weeks time, does the department plan to extend the border crossing hours at several ports of entry and, if so, when will this announcement be made?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to draw this question to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Harding: I think this supplementary should be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to his parliamentary secretary. As Canada is participating in Expo '74, what plans, if any, have been made for the federal government's participation on either the opening day or some other appropriate occasion?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall submit this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

FINANCE

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING STABILIZATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister who I notice has acknowledged ultimate responsibility for interest rates in Canada. Because the increase in mortgage interest rates has been triggered by the government, with the result that a person now needs a $17,000 income to buy a below average price home in Toronto, and in view of the continuing instability of mortgage rates in Canada, would the Prime Minister indicate if he has any plan to stabilize mortgage rates in this country, or is it his government's policy that mortgage rates should find their own level?

● (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any announcement in this respect will be made in due course.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Prime Minister that this is the two hundred and ninth sitting day since the last budget and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question.

Mr. Stevens: As mortgage rates in Canada are now 25 per cent higher than in the United States, and in view of the continuation of the unfilled demand for housing, at what level does the government think mortgage rates should be over the coming months so that a person desiring to purchase a home in Canada may do so?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion. I do not think a question in those terms is quite in order.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the airport firefighters' strike is spreading like a prairie fire in the west and is now affecting Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver, and as it appears there may be another strike, what is the government going to do? What plan does the government have, and how long does it expect the country to tolerate this kind of performance?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last part of the question, I think the country will have to answer that for the time being.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good idea if some members of the opposition would read the law relating to the labour negotiation system that has been established in Canada. We are negotiating with the Public Service Alliance. A proposal has been made and has been submitted to the firefighters. We are supposed to receive an answer. Of course, if the situation does not improve we have other means that we can use.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I respect the Minister of Transport. He knows that, but I wish he would not hide behind the law. We know what kind of strike the firefighters' strike is. I want to know how long the government is going to allow this thing to drift without making a decision and doing something about it. The whole of western Canada is now paralysed by the inactivity of the government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is something even worse than that. I heard this morning that even Quebec City airport is closed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The alliance is trying to have the understanding that was reached ratified, and we have to accept this procedure which is normal in such cases.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, with all the strikes and study sessions, actual and pending, in the Public Service I should like to address my question to the minister who in the final analysis is responsible for negotiating with the designated bargaining agents on labour contracts covering government employees. Has the President of the Treasury Board, since his return from Victoria where he talked with the firefighters, managed to get negotiations under way between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance with a view to getting the firefighters back to work under the terms of the equitable settlement which was mentioned during the question period yesterday by the Prime Minister?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman is aware that the Treasury Board has a settlement agreed with the Public Service Alliance. The procedure of ratification and acceptance by the membership of the settlement reached between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance is now in process. We have agreed with the Public Service Alliance that this process of consultation with the membership will be carried out with the utmost speed.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Is it the position of the government that because you have an internecine dispute going on inside a union there is nothing the government can do until it is resolved by the parties within the union itself? Is that the position you are trying to put to us seriously?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether that question was addressed to the Chair.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSITION OF TREASURY BOARD IN NEGOTIATING CONTRACTS WITH EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF PROVISION FOR ESCALATION BASED ON COST OF LIVING INCREASES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that what we are talking about this morning, namely, the curtailment of essential services, is really symptomatic of a lack of speed and responsiveness to inflation in terms of the collective bargaining process in the Public Service, would the minister please inform the House whether any new departure, new policy or new direction is being taken by the Treasury Board in presenting itself to bargaining unions for the purpose of settling contracts in the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, there are no easy panaceas. I hope there will be an intelligent and at the same time forceful approach to the different problems with which we are faced in seeking different solutions.

Mr. Baker: In view of the fact that one of the problems facing the Public Service is that it is being met with bargaining offers from the Treasury Board which are completely unrealistic in view of the rate of inflation in the country, will the minister undertake to make an immediate study and a statement on motions with respect to the principle including in contracts with public servants cost of living increases on an escalating scale as has already been done for retired public servants?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting suggestion which has already received serious consideration and will continue to do so.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

POSITION OF CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD IN LIGHT OF FEED GRAINS POLICY

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding his feed grains policy and his new alliance with the Conservative party on that policy. In view of the fact the Conservatives conceived the Wheat Board in 1935 and the Liberal party has managed to get along with it for 30 or 35 years, is the government now proposing to abort the Canadian Wheat Board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. But I am very happy that the hon. member has realized that the Tories are coming along in agreement with our policy in regard to feed grains.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE TO SETTLE DISPUTES WITH EMPLOYEES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. With the Prime Minister saying that he will take certain things under advisement and the President of the Treasury Board saying that certain other things are interesting, while all the time chaos continues to spread throughout the country—

An hon. Member: What would you do?

Mr. Stanfield: I have several recommendations I could make if the government would only adopt them. The simplest one is that the government resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: It isn't going to be that easy.

Mr. Bell: Make them suffer it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. We are coming to the end of the question period. There is just about one minute left.

Mr. Stanfield: In light of the fact that those of us who stayed here have listened to the Postmaster General give the same explanation for a week, when the difficulty seems to deepen every day, and with other ministers, including the President of the Treasury Board, passing things off with generalities, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the spreading chaos he is prepared to interest himself personally in these problems and really put something before the House that will restore some hope of order in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition seems to recognize chaos everywhere except where it really exists.

[Mr. Drury.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1150)

Mr. Trudeau: If the solution to chaos were, as he suggests, resignation, he would have long ceased to be the leader of his own party.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he is trying to get an Oscar award for playing Nero.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington and then call orders of the day.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED USE OF EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT REGULATIONS TO CONTROL IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES EGGS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is an agricultural one but in the urgency of the moment I direct it to the Prime Minister. During the term of the former minister of agriculture the government promised Canadian egg producers that if they would govern their industry by setting up marketing agencies the government would protect the industry against foreign competition. This is not happening at the present time. United States eggs are now coming into Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that he is making a speech. He should come to the question.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to state to the Prime Minister the conditions that exist. United States eggs are now coming into Canada based on a New York price of 47 cents a dozen for Grade A large. The Canadian price to producers is 66 cents. Why does the government not make use of the anti-dumping Export and Import Permits Act regulations, as tabled on March 26 last, to help the egg producing industry in these difficult times?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an hon. member asked a question along similar lines yesterday. It is already being processed by the Department of Agriculture and an answer will be forthcoming soon.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CANADIAN FOOTBALL ACT

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREIGN ENCROACHMENT

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-22, intituled Canadian Football Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the last seven or eight weeks the uproar over Bill C-22, the football bill, has both been positive and negative. Certainly, the members of the Toronto sports media would have people believe that a terrible thing is happening and is being permitted by the government of Canada. Certainly, members of the opposition party would like us to believe that as well, and the Canadian public to believe it. I noted, when the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) led off for the official opposition last night, that at no time during his amusing and sometimes interesting comments did he put weight on either of his feet when coming down on both sides of the fence. The hon. member for Hillsborough stressed that he spoke for the opposition, and that there are important and critical matters to be dealt with by the government and the House. That is quite true. The Liberal party recognizes that, as does the government, and I will be the final speaker on the government side. Yet this bill must progress, not only in fairness to the Canadian Football League, but also in fairness to the Northmen and John Bassett. It must be dealt with, surely, before the football season approaches. If this is not done real harm could be caused to fans in Toronto as well as to the Canadian Football League.

I remind my hon. friends opposite that the government was forced to legislate, after having made its policy eminently clear through the former minister of national health and welfare some 17 months ago, and reaffirmed by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) when he took over that portfolio. The government was forced into legislating, and now this bill is before the House.

You know, filibuster can be a very effective technique for the opposition in times of majority government. It can be used to keep the majority from legislating something that the opposition feels is not in the public interest. However, the majority rests with the opposition parties at this time. There is no reason to prolong this debate. If members want to act responsibly, surely they will deal with the bill in fairness to the CFL and the Northmen before the football season begins. I hope there will be co-operation by all parties in the House so that we can get on with this matter. Many members on my side would like to participate. I think the hon. members for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), Spadina (Mr. Stollery), Labelle (Mr. Dupras) and others want to participate. They are satisfied, I believe, however, to work in committee, and have us get on with second reading.

The hon. member for Hillsborough said that the government and the House have more important things to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: He said we are taking up important time. Well, I am pleased to see that I have the rapt attention of hon. members opposite because, so far, this debate has taken less than two hours of the time of the House. The bill could be dealt with in five or six hours, if the opposition wants to be co-operative. We want debate to be short. As I said, I am the final speaker.

An hon. Member: You hope.

Mr. Fleming: Well, we have not spent two hours so far debating this bill. All of us on both sides, especially those representing constituencies in Metropolitan Toronto, have received a great deal of mail. Answering it is very time consuming. Many of these letters say, why is the government spending so much time on this subject? I write back and say that the government is not; we have said what we want to do, and we want to get on with it. It takes me and my colleagues a great deal of time to reply to these letters. I note, having checked my files, that I have not received letters from these people covering such other matters as labour strife, inflation, justice, pensions and what have you, subjects which the opposition says must be dealt with. I agree. But sports are extremely important to Canadians, as you will agree if you look at the pages of coverage given sports in our newspapers and the attention our broadcasting media gives to the subject. It is of great interest to Canadians and that is why this bill is before us today.

The hon. member for Hillsborough made several other points to which I should like to reply. At one point he mentioned the domination of our colleges by foreign professors. That is the kind of red herring that party brings forward when it has no united policy of its own. It is clearly a matter of provincial jurisdiction. I wish the hon. member could talk to the government of Ontario, in which my constituency is, so that he could convince the government of Ontario to act on policies which my party has put forward provincially for several years to correct that situation. The hon. member for Hillsborough said, as the official lead-off speaker for his party, that it was "beyond his comprehension" that we were dealing with this subject at this time. He said that we should debate other matters. I say, let's finish this one, and have done. The strength of the majority is not on the government side; it is with the opposition parties. It will be "beyond the comprehension" of other parties in this House and the Canadian public if the opposition says that debate on the subject is beyond its comprehension but then delays.

The hon. member for Hillsborough's speech was perhaps the most entertaining I have heard since coming to the House. It was 40 minutes of witticisms, rhetoric and, at times, buffoonery. But I have found that when the Progressive Conservative Party have trouble facing an issue together, when they are seriously split, as they usually are, up goes this smokescreen. The Canadian public is well aware of their talent to cover division in their party and, so, their credibility goes up in smoke as well.

Just after I had been recognized to speak last evening, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made the comment, "Let him dig his own grave." I am confident that the overwhelming majority of Torontonians, given a chance to understand this issue, are going to support the government and Canadian football. Toronto has always been prepared to shed parochial, selfish advantage, if it is in the national interest to do so. The hon. member for York-Simcoe seriously underestimates the electorate of the greater Toronto area if he thinks that anyone will be elected or defeated because we did not follow our own self interest but rather what is good for Canada.

Before touching on the essentials of this legislation, I wish to make one final point of rebuttal to the comments made last evening by the hon. member for Hillsborough. He said that, lacking expertise, he was quoting Russ Jackson, who, he said, doubts the efficacy of the measure before the House. The Canadian Football League teams, the western cities directly affected, the Canadian Amateur Football Association and the players' association do not doubt the efficacy of this particular measure. They are all on record as supporting it strongly. They are not one football player but the entire football industry.

Ninety five per cent of the Toronto sports press has been strident in opposition to this move by the government. I suggest that there are some honest conflicts of interest, in that they want the benefit of this football club to Toronto. It might provide very good football, indeed. They also have some real conflicts of interest in who would be travelling with that team around the United States to cover its games and which of them now who are so stridently against the government are receiving moneys from the World Hockey League for play by play and colour comments on television and radio in Toronto?

Despite the organized lobby that I believe has been developing in support of the Northmen, including a letter writing campaign, in two months in a constituency of 160,000 people, I have received less than 40 letters. About one quarter of those letters are in support and they were not prompted by a strident campaign of the Northmen managers.

It has been suggested on several occasions that polls in Toronto suggest overwhelming support for the Northmen coming into Canada. I suggest that if we wrote polls with questions worded in the same way, we would be saying "Are you in favour of free ice cream?" If those polls had said "Are you in favour of it if the CFL is jeopardized", I suggest they would be very different. If they had said is Canadian football important, they would have been very different. If they would have asked whether the CFL and the Grey Cup game plays an important role in developing Canadianism, those polls would have been very different. The Northmen suggested along the way that the government has not offered a compromise and has not been willing to sit down. I suggest you cannot compromise on a situation where once they are here, and I will carry that argument further in a few minutes, the CFL team is lost.

Let me take up a couple of the arguments they have put forward as areas where they would compromise. One is on equalized payments. They say they would pay the largest amount they have ever paid, the amount that the Argonauts paid last year of equalization of $48,000. There is no mention of pre-season equalization which manages to be a cost of $25,000 to $30,000. There is no mention of play-off equalization of $40,000 to $60,000. There is no mention of $150,000, but in fact $48,000, a very limited amount which would make very little difference to the survival of the CFL. They argue they would be the only franchise and they, the Northmen, control the rights in Canada. They say it would only be in Toronto. I think one team in Canada in the World Football League is as dangerous as two or three teams simply because of the great pride of Canadians and their great sense of competition.

You suddenly have the one Canadian David taking on the American Goliath. The three quarters of Canadians who can see American television will turn toward that because of their very pride and sense of Canadianism, but in time where will we be? If the one team is allowed, then where do we find the top of the pyramid where now our young people can develop in football, become the best, become professional and find nine teams in which to place themselves? Perhaps in an expanded CFL with London and perhaps Dartmouth-Halifax there would be an even larger top of the pyramid, but where when there is only one team? When they are looking for American super heroes, will those American teams, which can draw from 10 times the population, really start looking at Canadian talent? I doubt it very much.

If Toronto were allowed that WFL franchise, how could a government whose responsibility is the national interest possibly give a special deal to one Canadian city? Would we not then have to go ahead and allow what I believe will come about if this bill is not passed, namely an application from the National Football League for entry into Canada as well? Then, what will we have because with those two teams, there can be no doubt but that the CFL will die.

We will have two little brother football clubs in Canada playing all the big brothers in the United States. Then, where is Canadian football? Where is the incentive to develop Canadian football? Where is the east-west rivalry in Canadian football? Where are the five publicly owned western clubs? Where is the huge Canadian audience watching Canadian Grey Cup over Canadian television each year?

There are also the apples and bananas arguments that have been put forward. What about the Montreal Expos? The Montreal Expos came here and got assistance from the government in some tax forgiveness clauses simply because there was no major league baseball in Canada and because the government thought it would be good. For our largest city, Montreal, it is good. It attracts many fans, it is popular, provides entertainment and this government has no argument with it. On that same point, may I say that the same incentive and help is available for the development of a major league baseball club in Toronto. One of the people bound up in that and probably the person who will succeed in developing it is John Bassett Jr..

What about the NHL? Surely, that battle was lost some decades ago, not because of the most recent expansion, but away back when Canadian hockey began to involve itself with American cities. However, I cannot believe that yesterday's mistakes justify inaction today. We can protect a Canadian institution and, as a parliament, we should do that.

In Toronto there is concern about making the expanded stadium pay its own way if there is not a second football team. Well, I understand that the additional revenues from a second major league football club in Toronto would be about $200,000 a year. Much more than that would be provided if major league baseball came into that stadium simply because many more games would be played in that sport in that stadium each season. Three out of four American cities which tried two major football leagues failed, Dallas, Chicago and Los Angeles. The only one that succeeded was New York City which could draw on a population of almost 14 million.

What good relying on revenues from a second major league football club to support that stadium if within a year or two, as experience has shown, one of those teams would fail? If that happened, I suggest the team would be the Argonauts and goodbye Canadian Football League. I do not deny that the Northmen would bring new and exciting sports to Toronto but do we need it so much in Toronto? Is it so essential to us in addition to what we now have? Are we so short of good competitive sports and entertainment that we will ignore our western Canadian cities and fellow Canadian football fans?

I think it is very important to put on the record a line or two of what is being said in those cities. Mayor Rod Sykes of Calgary said:

> Strongly support your stand re keeping professional football Canadian Congratulations

Pierre Benoit, mayor of the city of Ottawa, stated:

> —please allow me to express my whole-hearted support for the position, I understand, you have taken.

Mayor Copps of Hamilton stated:

> Everybody here right behind you in urging the government to act immediately to preserve Canadian football.

Mayor Baker of Regina said:

> I commend and support your stand regarding the World Football League.

Mayor Stephen Juba of Winnipeg stated:

> I wish to advise that I wholeheartedly support your recent announcement respecting the intrusion of the World Football League into Canada.

Mayor Ivor Dent of Edmonton:

> I appreciate your attitude and back your statement made in Regina.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. They all line up with the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I think it should be made clear that Bill C-22 is not an act against one single Canadian enterprise. It is for Canadian enterprise and for Canadian sports development. The CFL expansion has been brought about as part of the action of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. London can now have a franchise. Halifax-Dartmouth is open for expansion so it is truly national from coast to coast. I do agree with the comments in that part of the speech of the hon. member for Hillsborough last evening.

Over seven years, the training of young Canadians will be doubled to 500,000 or 600,000 in football. For Torontonians, the blackout will be lifted on an experimental basis when the expanded stadium is sold out. Exhibition games are encouraged. We can have the David and Goliath battle with the Americans. We can fill our great sense of competition and pride in competition with the American leagues but meanwhile protecting our own Canadian Football League.

The legislation is not negative. It is positive and it is for Canadians. The government of Canada has been making efforts to protect Canadian industry as long as this country has existed. Most recently the government acted against the DISC program in the United States with a measure that allowed corporate tax cuts. We have had tariffs, special grants to business, loans and all sorts of other incentives to help Canadian business in competition with foreign interests.

In the development of artistic talent, literature and sports, CRTC regulations have encouraged more Canadian development. John Bassett Sr. and John Bassett Jr., through Glen Warren Productions in Toronto as well as through CFTO, have developed with their own business expertise, which is recognized and respected, and with the rules set down by the CRTC one of the most successful television production and television operations in North America because the Canadian government provided special incentives and Canadian content rules. The Canadian Film Development Corporation has spent millions of dollars to develop the Canadian film industry because we in this country are in such tough competition with the United States. Hundreds of thousands of those millions have gone to Agincourt Productions and John Bassett Jr. for films like "Face Off", "Flick" and "Paperback Hero". It was his excellent entrepreneurship and this government's assistance that made it happen.

In 1972, John Bassett Sr. sought government financial assistance for the publicly owned western clubs in the CFL. Yet today many members opposite would like to argue, as the press reports, that though the government may wish to act against the Northmen it has no right to intrude in Canadian football. How does that gibe?

● (1210)

I see no financial hardship for the Northmen owners, Mr. Speaker. They will prosper if they run their team in the United States. I would not be unhappy to see a Canadian enterprise move into the United States for a change and if they sell it to an American city they also will profit. Meanwhile, the people involved in this operation can go on and develop baseball in Toronto on a major league level. They can go on with their Canadian films with government assistance, they can go on with their Canadian T.V. supported by government control of Canadian television. If the Northmen are allowed, the NFL in Montreal cannot be denied. That is the next step.

Is there a real possibility such a development would kill the CFL, Mr. Speaker? Well, the CFL teams think so, the Players Association thinks so, the Canadian Amateur Football Association thinks so, the Prairie Cities think so. All those important groups say that the CFL will be jeopardized, and if parliament respects those fears and believes Canadian football is of real importance to Canadians as a part of our lifestyle, then parliament will support this bill.

As I said when I began, Mr. Speaker, we want to have brief but meaningful debate. The government and the backbenches, certainly on this side, are not suggesting closure or the muffling of contrary views. We are prepared to complete our participation at this point, however, in the hope that this House can soon move on to other matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by drawing the attention of the House of Commons and the country once again to the wide range of problems which beset us in Canada today. Inflation is running at a rate of approximately 10 per cent, the government is obviously disorganized—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): —but instead of coming to grips with the situation which exists in the country we are here today discussing football. Earlier today, during question period, the point was made that, with all its articulated concern, with all its phoney interest in the country, the government has not brought down a single piece of legislation to deal with the economic and other ills which so badly affect us. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) excused himself by saying parliament had come to the aid of fishermen, farmers and small businessmen by passing legislation last week. I would point out that the only reason this bill was passed was that the party to which I belong preferred to stay here this week and work, and not run away to Barbados—

Mr. Haidasz: A cheap argument.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I want to deal with some of the remarks which were made by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) when, echoing his master's voice, he said his party had no interest in a filibuster and no interest in closure. The hon. member put forward on behalf of the government he supports a proposition which strains the credulity even of those who are accustomed to watching the way the government works. The government has placed before the House a bill which is clear evidence of its distorted priorities at a time of national emergency. It is the government which controls the business which is to be brought before the House, but having brought this bill forward, what does it do? It asks us not to talk about it. It tries to curtail the right of individual members to deal with the bill.

An hon. Member: What's stopping you. Deal with it.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): If the government is concerned about inflation, as the hon. member suggested it is, let them change their priorities and bring in legislation dealing with inflation. Let them not seek to mislead the House of Commons.

Mr. Haidasz: You are running scared!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That kind of approach indicates a double contempt for parliament; first, contempt by introducing legislation which ignores the obvious priorities, and, second, contempt by seeking, with all the means at its disposal—

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Haidasz: Are you for or against Canadian football? That is the issue.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Let me suggest to you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Haidasz: Are you against a Canadian identity? Yes, or no?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I find it strange that a question about the Canadian identity should come from a minister who has responsibilities in this field but no staff at all, which indicates the kind of identity—

Mr. Haidasz: Come and see us some time.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): One other matter before I come to the substance of the bill. I wish to refer to the suggestion by the minister yesterday, supported by that very great ability of his to count noses, that the bill did not involve a question of confidence. I want to ask the minister what right he had to state, in his place, out of the shadow of the grey eminence he used to occupy, that this is, or is not, a matter of confidence. Such a question is surely one for the House itself to consider.

Mr. Lalonde: Read Beauchesne!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): He makes such statements simply because he is having trouble getting the member who sits in front of him to support his legislation. The minister made the suggestion on television, which has now become the principal method used by ministers when they wish to make announcements, that this bill was a trade-off designed to help western Canada in exchange for concessions western Canada made in connection with the petroleum question. I shall not deal with this aspect at length, but I would make the point, as an Albertan, that if there is to be some kind of balance in confederation we in western Canada would much prefer that attention be given to our legitimate concerns for equality in freight rates, a better balance in industrial development and so on, rather than an unprecedented and direct interference in the business which is professional sport.

There is an old adage in the country that Toronto is a great unifier because Toronto gives everyone in the rest of the country something in common to hate. I think the minister was probably banking on this attitude when he introduced his legislation. I will concede that there is some resentment in my riding of the idea that Toronto is the centre of the world—an idea which was in the mind of the hon. member for York West when, talking about east versus west, he told us this really meant Toronto versus the west; apparently eastern Canada stops at Toronto, excluding every large part of the country. Anyway, I know this opinion of Toronto exists in my part of the country. I regret it. I think the resentment of Toronto is not sufficient reason for embracing legislation which fails to do what it attempts to do, and which sets a very dangerous precedent for direct intervention by government in the field of professional sport.

The single, primary point about this legislation is that it is not going to do what it tries to do. It is not going to be effective. The WFL, whatever the House does, is not suddenly going to dissolve and go away. It is not suddenly going to stop being competitive for Canadian football players on member teams in the CFL. Indeed, it could be argued that the best protection that the CFL has against competition from the WFL is having the Northmen in Toronto, where the guarantees that were given by the sponsors of the Northmen would ensure that there will be an honouring of CFL contracts, that there will not be raiding. John Bassett Jr. has given certain guarantees to the government which would take effect if the Northmen were allowed to continue to function in that city. One was that there would be no raiding, and that would be a great protection to the CFL, a greater protection than is now envisaged in the legislation that has been brought before this House. Then, there has been a guarantee of certain equalization payments to the CFL. There has been a guarantee that no other WFL club would be established within Canadian boundaries, that the franchise rights would be turned over. They are concrete guarantees to the future of the Canadian Football League and will do something, whereas this bill only pretends to do something.

The hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming), who has now left the chamber, quoted some statements from various officials in western Canada and elsewhere in support of the idea that the minister had articulated in Regina. I think it would be important to add to the record the dates on which that correspondence took place. Because it is my very deep suspicion that that correspondence was sent before the bill was seen; it was sent in support of an idea which would win support in western Canada and elsewhere, but not in support of a piece of legislation which all of us who can read know is not going to be effective in doing what the government says it is trying to do.

It is very clear, and a matter of very great concern to any member of this House who has an interest in professional and amateur football, that the CFL is threatened anyway by the very existence of the World Football League. So long as the WFL exists and is competing, one of two things is going to happen to the CFL, and maybe both. First of all, there is going to be competition for players, which might mean that some of the U.S. imports, who at least add to box office appeal and strengthen CFL teams, will be drawn away; and there is the danger that the quality of football in the CFL will go down, regardless what we do with this bill, unless we can accept and implement the guarantees associated with the establishment of the Northmen in Toronto.

The second thing that could happen is that in this competition for players the CFL would have to bid higher, and consequently it would become more and more difficult for those clubs operating near the profit margin—clubs in western Canada particularly and perhaps the club at Hamilton—to continue to compete. It would be particularly difficult for them to continue to make whatever contribution they are making now to the development and encouragement of amateur football.

I suggest to the House that if there is an aspect of this question that is of legitimate and real concern to those of us here, that aspect is the future of amateur football in this country. It is clear that amateur football receives a certain benefit now from CFL teams who make money available on a voluntary basis and who also make coaching, films and other assistance available. But it is also obvious that the first people to suffer when there is a decline in the revenue of CFL teams, such as will come from competition with the WFL, will be the amateur teams.

I say again that the one possible protection against that—unless there is to be some new legislation brought in—resides in the guarantees that are associated with the location of the Northmen in Toronto. I hold the view that if there is genuine Canadian football of the kind the minister, in his preamble to the bill, talked about, it is the amateur Canadian football teams. That is where support is needed in this country. If the government is serious about that, and if it does succeed with this bill, maybe—just maybe—it should increase the percentage of Canadian players to 80 per cent, 90 per cent or even 99 per cent. This would be one way of ensuring that there would be effective encouragement of the amateur football associations of this country, whatever happens to the CFL.

Last night the minister indicated there are some other programs that the government intends to follow to encourage amateur football. He indicated that the government had accepted the seven year plan of the Canadian Amateur Football Association and intends to do some other things. I simply want to make it absolutely clear that that undertaking is a separate item from the bill concerning the Northmen. We can presume, unless the minister is involved in some kind of subtle encouragement of support for this bill, that we are going to have support for amateur football anyway, whatever happens to this bill.

Many of us who over the years, in one party or another, have developed an admiration for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) were struck last night by the very defensive nature of his speech. It was the speech of a man who knows he has made a mistake. He made a long apology for singling out the Northmen, for not acting on those other occasions in professional sport in Canada which have caused harm either directly or by foreclosing possible options for the development of Canadian leagues. He did that by concocting the argument that these other activities, such as baseball, lacrosse, etc., are not Canadian entities anyway. So he is doing nothing about the Expos; he is doing nothing about the fact that foreign owners have to buy the Vancouver Canucks; he is doing nothing to protect lacrosse which suffered a serious blow even during the months that this issue has been before us.

Because this issue has great emotional content the minister also talked about the Grey Cup and how important it is as a national institution. And of course it is. But it is simply false to argue that the Grey Cup will lose its status as a national symbol and event because the Northmen play in Toronto. The Grey Cup has withstood the erosion of broadcasts every Sunday from the National Football League, broadcasts, I might remind the minister, on the Canadian public television network. It has withstood the conversion of the game of football into one that is dependent for its stars and box office appeal primarily upon imports. I say the CFL and the Grey Cup will withstand the Northmen.

The hon. member for York West, if I can return to him for a moment, was eloquent in his early obituary to the CFL, suggesting that this bill before us is the thing, and the only thing, which will keep the CFL in existence. I do not believe, as Russ Jackson, who is a far better authority than I, does not believe, that the CFL is such a fragile plant that it will suddenly wither and die if this piece of ill-considered and ineffective legislation fails to carry in this House.

The minister in his defensive speech last night also spoke at length about the Bassetts, father and son, about what they knew or what they should have known. I suggest the minister's intention was to indicate that the Bassetts knew that the government was going to bring in this kind of legislation, that they knew that the strong arm of the state was going to be brought to bear against them well before they acted. With all respect to the minister, I think that is simply a red herring. Even if the Bassetts did know what the minister and his predecessors had said, and we can only speculate that they did, things ministers say are not law until this parliament makes them law.

I recall, Sir, and I think other members do, that not very long ago the Prime Minister of this country announced a certain skepticism about the work ethic. Is that policy? Will that be law? Will all of us who work be subject to retroactive legislation and two years in jail? I think that indicates the absurdity of the minister's suggestion that because he or his predecessors might have said something that did not then have the force of law, or did not then carry with it the intention of acquiring the force of law, the Bassetts acted in some way that justifies this retroactive legislation against them.

The minister has taken this bad legislation, bad because of the precedents it sets and bad because it does not do what it sets out to do, and he has tried to cloak it in the attractive garb of Canadian nationalism. I mean no offence to the Canadian Football League, but I think that since the minister has made this argument, and since so much of his case depends upon it, and since it has excited the interest and put in jeopardy the seat of his colleague the Minister of State who sometimes is responsible for multiculturalism, I think it might be legitimate to ask how national is the CFL when all of its coaches and nine of its general managers are American born? Most of its stars and most of the people who draw Canadians to the box offices are American born.

The history of the sport and the history of the game that is played in the CFL is a history of change. It started, as my colleague the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) pointed out the other night, as a game that is now explicitly excluded from the effects of this legislation by the minister and which has gradually evolved into the game it is today generally along the lines of the U.S. game. It is obvious that the CFL is important to Canada, an important institution as are other of our institutions of national origin, but it is simply misleading to suggest that the Canadian Football League possesses a Canadian identity so distinctive as to be in a place of priority when protecting Canadian culture.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

I want to come for a moment to this question of priorities of nationalism and priorities of protecting Canadian identity. Even if this government had turned around and suddenly been seized with the need to protect Canadian identity, why should it start here? Why start with a game dominated by Americans? Why start with football? My colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough, pointed out the other night that a better place to start would have been by changing the federal immigration laws. If the hon. member for York West were in the House, I would draw to his attention the fact that the federal immigration laws are the responsibility of this government, and this in one thing he cannot fob off on Queen's Park.

The federal immigration laws are the prime reason there is a very serious problem about non-Canadian nationalism in teaching, controlling and hiring in our Canadian universities. Why should football have priority over universities? Why should professional football which does not even directly affect the physical wellbeing and the physical development of Canadian youngsters have a priority over a question which very clearly affects the mentality and attitudinal development of Canadians in universities in this country?

Again on this question of priorities, why do we start with football, with a club owned by Canadians when we continue to allow concessions to Time magazine? Why does football have priority or precedence over Time? Why does football have priority and precedence over book publishing in respect of which the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has been dithering and dallying, making brave but empty speeches about what he is going to do, yet has done nothing at all? Why is football more important than books?

If football is of such almighty importance, why is there not a policy that will do something about the televising on the Canadian national television network of NFL games every Sunday? If the influence of American football is so rending to our national identity and being, why do we subsidize the CBC to carry NFL football games into Canadian homes for far more Canadians to watch than get into the stadiums, particularly since you cannot get into them in most of the cities in the country? As was pointed out to the minister the other day, if the CBC is carrying these things and we are really concerned about these questions, why do we go to the length of providing French-language translation to carry the NFL into the province of Quebec? Surely, if there were some sense of priority or some sense of context to this action these would be the steps the government would be taking.

I have asked already why, if the minister is worried about developing football as part of Canadian identity, the government is not taking steps now to encourage amateur football in Canada and, indeed, to encourage amateur athletics of all kinds? As an aside, Sir, one of the very great concerns many of us have about this bill that is brought in is a concern which was apparent when the Department of National Health and Welfare began to get involved in fitness and amateur athletic sports. We believe there is a very real role on the side of encouraging Canadian fitness, but the action this government has taken and the priority it has given to professional football has given the caste of nationalism to its activities in sports as being one of preoccupation with professional sports and one of caring not at all or caring enough about amateur athletics. If the Department of National Health and Welfare is to be involved in sports and athletics, then it should be involved on the side of fitness and amateur sports and it should not be long in its acquiring of these priorities and concerns with the professional game.

What is most remarkable of all, Sir, about this legislation and this so-called act to protect and advance Canadian identity, is that it occurs absolutely without any context of national policy. It is not part of a policy at all, it is simply a random strike by the strong arm of the organized state against one venture.

Speaking personally, I believe there are occasions when the state must move in the national interest into fields where it had not been before. I am proud to be part of a party, as was indicated earlier today, which took the initiative to establish the Canadian Wheat Board, and proud to be part of a party which took the initiative to establish the CBC. I believe there is very real room for argument to be made for the state moving from time to time into areas where it had not been before. Once you accept that view you have to go on to say that the state should do that only when it is necessary, as it is not necessary here, and only when the action will be effective, as it will not be effective here, and only when the state knows what it is doing, and I think it is pretty clear that the government of Canada does not know what it is doing with this legislation.

One of the aspects of this bill that worries me most of all as a Canadian who believes there is a legitimate role for state activities and careful watching is that the minister's action today jeopardizes the legitimate principle that the state has some right in activities where the right did not always exist. That right and that principle is jeopardized when the state moves into everything without consistency and without the context of a general policy. It is a very dangerous mentality in a free country that favours governments rushing into every phase of life.

Even if this bill were to be effective, and it is not, there is a legitimate question as to whether the state should suddenly swoop into sports, and particularly into professional sports, because professional sports, as we all know if we are honest, are much more entertainment than athletics. This is another kind of business, and that is a question to be considered if this bill is to be effective.

This bill will not be effective. It will not do what it is supposed to do. It is even more dangerous as a precedent of the random intrusion of the strong arm of the state in professional sport. The minister made the point in his remarks that there are no absolutes about whether the state should be in or out of these activities. I happen to believe there are no absolutes about that, but I think the question we must consider all the time is, when does the state become too active. That question is particularly important for those of us who believe that the state does have some legitimate role and who do not want to see that legitimacy destroyed by a random raw exercise of state power without a context of general policy and without a purpose which can be achieved. If we argue that football is distinctive Canadian culture then this bill is reversing the way we encourage Canadian culture. It is turning it around because the Canadian way is to encourage our own culture positively and not to contort ourselves to keep others out.

That was the principle involved in the establishment of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in the establishment of the National Film Board and in the establishment of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, which is that we act positively to encourage Canadians. However, if the Lalonde principle is applied to other cultural areas what we would do instead would be to ban circulation of United States movies in Canada, prohibit the circulation of foreign books in Canada and tear up foreign magazines at the border because we are turning around in this legislation the whole long-established Canadian principle of the way in which we encourage identity and self-expression in this country. What we should be doing here, if anything, is encouraging amateur Canadian football and this bill not help that at all. In a free society there are some things the state cannot do.

In Alberta we had experience with that not too long ago in respect of cable television when it was proposed by a former roommate of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that access to cable be prohibited to Calgary and Edmonton. That was designed to protect us against the televised influence of the United States while residents of cities closer to the border in Vancouver and in central Canada were bathed in that influence. This was discriminatory against Alberta. It did not work because it was ineffective as a protection of the Canadian identity. The same kind of inconsistency is evident in a proposal which would allow Torontonians to sit at home and watch United States football on the Canadian National television network or on the United States channels and yet not allow them to go downtown to watch it live. Not only will they not be able to watch the Northmen if this bill passes, but they will not be able to watch the Argos either because they will not be able to get in.

In conclusion, I want to draw attention again to some of the central criticisms with regard to this bill. First, it will not protect the Canadian Football League. The World Football League is an inevitable competitor and its very existence either in Toronto or in some city across the border will create very serious problems of player quality and revenue for teams in the CFL. I repeat this point because I think it is highly important. It may very well prove to be the case that the guarantees associated with the Northmen in Toronto may be the best protection to the CFL as against the inevitable competition from the world Football League. That is point one. This bill will not protect the CFL.

The second point is highly important to all of us concerned about amateur athletics, particularly in the smaller communities. This bill will not protect or encourage amateur football. Indeed it may endanger amateur football and other sports as well because it may give the impression that the government is preoccupied with professional sport rather than with amateur athletics in this country. The third point is that this bill entails an attempt to reverse, to turn right around, the whole approach of developing Canadian culture to an approach of prohibition.

The approach of encouragement is being discarded. The fourth point is that this action is being taken outside the context of national policy. No national policy is involved here. It is simply a random strike by the state against a particular entrepreneur and activity.

Finally, the principles involved in this bill will be a dangerous intrusion by the state, reflecting a dangerous mentality whereby the government might pass retroactive legislation to prohibit anything that it does not much like, an intrusion which threatens to change the entire nature of sport in Canada. The best possible result of this bill would be if the minister would stand in his place and have the courage to say he had made a mistake, that he wanted to do something which perhaps many individuals in Canada wanted to do but that he was not able to devise a bill to achieve what he wanted. The minister should have the humility to say he made a mistake and that he is backing off.

Mr. Lalonde: You are an expert at it.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I perhaps am an expert at humility. I am not sure the minister could make the same claim. He should be prepared to reassess this bill. He should do the right thing which is stand up now and withdraw this bill which will be harmful to professional and amateur football in this country. There is no question that the best way to proceed would be to withdraw this legislation, but if it is not withdrawn then I want it to be clear to the Minister of State and to everybody else that I am against this bill and intend to vote against it.

My party intends to vote against this bill because we think it is dangerous, ineffective legislation and involves principles which will not only reverse the principles and practices in Canada but which will give more force to the idea that the state should intrude at will whether or not it knows what it is trying to do, whether or not the intrusion has any effect and whether or not it is operating in the context of policy.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intend to oppose this bill and I intend to vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I will summarize the reasons for my view. I think I have about six points on which I will want to expand later. First of all, I say we should not be discussing the issue of football at all at this time when we are faced with the problem of inflation, housing, energy, taxation and a host of other urgent economic and social problems. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) reached back into antiquity in his speech. I would say that this is an example of Nero fiddling while Rome burns. My second point is that the parliament of Canada should not be in the business of regulating professional sport at all, and least of all should it be an arbiter between two competing private enterprises.

● (1250)

My third point, and I will expand on it later, is that, in my view at least, the legislation is clearly unconstitutional and beyond the powers of this parliament. My fourth point is that the pretence that this legislation is essential to defend Canadian culture and unity, to my mind at least, is completely phoney. Canadian culture and unity do not depend upon which of two types of football are played or watched in Canada, and least of all do they depend in the degree of American content in these two particular brands of football. If this is Canadian nationalism, and I say it is not, I want to have none of it.

My fifth point is that a basic right is involved here, that is the right of people to choose for themselves, unless there is some very good reason why they should not be allowed to and such reasons do not exist in the present case, what they want to watch on television or hear on radio. There is no reason why the consumer, that is the viewer who wants to view football directly or through any other means, should not have the widest possible choice, and if that choice involves some degree of American importation—and it does now and will continue to do so—so what? No nationalist rule compels us to say that we are going to shut our doors to seeing things, hearing them and enjoying them because they come from some other part of the world.

Last, and not least, perhaps my reason for opposing this legislation has been said already and I heartily agree with it. This legislation will be completely futile; it will accomplish none of the purposes for which it is designed. I do not regard this matter as being in any sense a party matter. In my party, and no doubt in others, we discuss policy at conventions, at meetings of our council, and in our caucus. We have not done any such thing with regard to this subject. Our caucus has taken the view, and quite rightly in my opinion, that we should be completely free to exercise our own judgment in this matter. I realize that there are strong regional feelings pressuring certain people into the acceptance of this particular type of legislation. I respect their point of view, but I cannot agree with it.

I want to expand on the points I have made. My first point dealt with a proper sense of priorities. I know that the people in my riding in particular, and I have been talking to a good many of them lately, are deeply concerned about the economic crisis that is facing this country. They want action from this parliament in various fields, above all in the field of the high and increasing cost of living. In my own judgment, and that of many people, parliament is demeaned when it departs from these crucial bread and butter issues and spends its time discussing the type of legislation that is presented to us today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: The next point I made was that the parliament of Canada should not be in the business of regulating professional sport. I, myself, think that there is an aspect of sport in which the federal government and the federal parliament should be involved, that is the promotion of amateur sport to assist the health, welfare and fitness of the people of this country. I do not believe this legislation adds one iota to the health, welfare and fitness of the people of Canada. If we are going to spend time and money dealing with sport, let us deal with it on that basis and not on the basis that this legislation purports to do.

I say that the legislation is unconstitutional. I know very well, as one who has had some experience in constitutional law, that it is very hazardous to predict what the result of constitutional decisions in the courts may be. I know that these matters are complex. It is possible to take different points of view. But from the basis of any knowledge I have I say there are at least grave and serious doubts as to whether this parliament has any right to legislate in this field at all. I would have thought that the regulation of sport generally was a matter for the provinces under property and civil rights and a matter of local and private nature.

I do not quite know how this is justified. We have not heard any justification. I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) make some frivolous replies to questions from the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), but I have not seen, nor have we been vouchsafed any serious analysis as to whether we have the right to deal with it. Does it depend on peace, order or good government, the opening words of section 91? To me that is a nonsensical suggestion. That particular power relates to times of emergency. What emergency requires us to decide whether the Northmen play football in Toronto or do not play football in Toronto?

It might be thought to be justified under the heading of trade and commerce. I know that is a complex subject and there are numerous cases, none of them clear. From my reading I have not been able to discover any case that justifies the suggestion that to allow someone to come across the border to play football, to play a musical instrument, albeit they are playing for money, is a matter of trade and commerce of such dimensions that it would justify legislation here on issues of trade and commerce.

Is it criminal law? Some clauses appear in the bill as if criminal law were included in this bill on purpose. This is an indication of the completely unconstitutional nature of the bill because criminal law certainly is a power that the federal government has but it cannot be used to justify interference in a field where the government has no right to be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: My colleagues assure me that their applause is for me, and not for my speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear! You are a fine man.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I was giving an outline of the various reasons why I think this bill should be opposed. One of the reasons was that I thought it was beyond the constitutional power of this parliament to pass, and I touched on some of the headings under which it might be sought to be justified. I mentioned the subject of criminal law which, of course, is within the power of parliament. But, Mr. Speaker, I find the references to penalties in this bill clearly colourable. One just cannot attach a penalty to a bill which is dealing with something that is basically provincial and, as a result, call it criminal law.

I do not think criminal law has any part in dealing with the question of who plays what sort of football, or who watches what sort of football. I cannot imagine that that subject has anything whatsoever to do with the field of criminal law. I find the suggestion that perhaps it is justified under this heading is clear evidence of the lack of any proper basis of constitutional support, and indeed is a clear indication that this legislation is colourable legislation.

Some people may ask why bother about the constitution these days? Some people do not seem to be very interested in or to bother much with constitutional matters. I particularly ask the government members, some of whom have been stout defenders of provincial rights, why are they so silent with respect to this intrusion in the field of provincial rights? I myself have never been a strong defender of provincial rights because I felt that, as a federal member of parliament, my main interest was concerned with defending the federal rights of this parliament. But I think we need balance.

To me it is a most extraordinary thing that a whole political party—so far as I know not a single one has got up here to protest against this bill—has been silent on this invasion of the provincial sphere. Could it possibly be because the bill in the first instance is aimed at the area of Toronto, at the province of Ontario? Do they think provincial rights are important when they concern some other province, but not worth defending if they concern this particular area of the country?

I want to warn people who think like this that if they can invade the field of provincial rights using the flimsy pretext of this bill, then they can invade those rights tomorrow in a different sphere affecting different areas of the country. As I say, the silence of the government party on this issue is astounding and astonishing to me.

● (1410)

My next point is this: I do not believe that the pretence that this bill is a defence of Canadian culture and Canadian unity has any substance. I have described it as phony, and I cannot think of a better word. We are all Canadian nationalists and we all recognize the importance of maintaining the identity and self confidence of Canada. There are many fields in which we need more Canadian nationalism. We need it in the defence of our resources, in the development of our resources, and we need it particularly in international affairs. All too often we have borrowed our ideas from other countries, first from Great Britain and, currently, the United States. I believe in the strength and independence of Canada and, although nationalism is not the ultimate loyalty, I still think it is very important.

But how is it that a game which is at least semi-American, professional football, has suddenly become the symbol of Canadian nationalism. If that is the symbol of Canadian nationalism, I say Canadian nationalism is pretty sick. If we have to borrow, as our symbol, a game which everybody who knows anything about it will admit is thoroughly Americanized, if we have to borrow that and defend that as the symbol of our nationalism, our nationalism is in a pretty poor state.

If one concedes that somehow or other Parliament must insist on Canadian sports remaining Canadianized, what were we doing when a genuine Canadian sport, lacrosse, was taken over by the Americans. No one can deny that lacrosse was a basic Canadian institution. Is the football that is played part of our culture, when a large proportion of our players are American and rules are the same as American rules? When the forward pass was introduced in the United States, it was introduced in Canada as well only a few weeks or months afterwards. Our so-called Canadian football is a derivation of American football. Even if it was not so originally, it has become so over the course of years.

There are forms of nationalism which are just. It is perfectly reasonable to require a certain Canadian content in what goes over our air waves. I do not object to that, for what goes over our air waves is closely related to our culture and nationality. But I deny that this particular form of football, this professional football which we are discussing, is such a national symbol.

I read the recital to this bill. It spoke of national unity. All the noble words were used in it. I have never before seen such a ridiculous recital to a bill. If I were to bring a bill forward with that sort of recital in it, I would be ashamed of myself.

Another point I made is this: people have the right to choose what they shall see and view, and what sort of entertainment they want to watch. This right belongs to everybody, not just to people in the Toronto area. It will be a sorry day when Parliament gets into the business of trying to regulate what we can see.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: True, the right to choose is not absolute. At times it must be interfered with for the benefit of the public generally. As I say, it is not an absolute right. But I fail to see what circumstances has suddenly come about which gives the government the right to tell people, in effect, that they cannot watch a football player who happens to be affiliated with some foreign league. I would deny the government this right. Although it is not covered in the Bill of Rights, this involves a basic human right, and you should not interfere with it unless you have a very good reason. I do not see any such reason in this particular case.

Another point I made is that the present legislation is doomed to futility. It just will not work. This point has already been expounded in the House and I will not spend long on it. I see no reason for believing that this legislation will achieve the purpose at which it is aimed, the protection of the Canadian Football League. They would be far better protected if they accepted the proposals made by the proponents of the WFL, that there be no raiding. If they insist on throwing the other league out of the country altogether, they cannot appeal to them. They cannot ask them to desist from raiding, from using their superior financial resources to diminish the quality of Canadian football. If they are thrown out, how is that going to help Canadian football? This bill is a weapon. It is a weapon which should not be used at all, for the end that it purports to achieve it obviously will not achieve. Therefore, it is futile.

I have had and have a great deal of respect for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. His is an extremely important portfolio. So far as I know, he is carrying out his duties well. I say to him, this bill is an aberration. It is tragic that a man with his reputation has come forward and associated his name with this sort of aberration. I have no desire to prolong this debate. Let me summarize the reasons why I say we should vote against this bill. First, it is an unwarranted interference with freedom of choice. It is an invasion of the provincial field of property and civil rights. It is outside the constitutional power of the federal government. Its pretended defence of Canadian nationalism, unity and culture is without substance. It is not a matter of high priority in the present day of crisis. Lastly, it will be futile for carrying out the purpose for which it appears to be aimed. For these reasons I appeal to all members of the House, irrespective of party, to repudiate this particularly bad legislation.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I follow the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who showed great concern for the rights of individuals. I agree with him, even though such concern has not normally been expressed by those who sit to the left of me in the House.

Mr. Brewin: Nonsense.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) wondered what my position would be, as I come from Saskatchewan. Before the barbs come from the other side of the House, let me say that I am for Canadian football and for Canadian sports of any kind. Also, I am for excellence in sports. I shall deal with this later. At present, I wonder how relevant this debate is.

The Treasury Board has just received word that the air traffic controllers will go on strike at midnight, on Sunday, and here we are, arguing whether we should protect the monopoly of the Toronto Argonauts, the team the people watch in the Toronto area. What is all this nonsense? The country is saddled with strikes. The railways are 56 million bushels behind in grain deliveries. People in the world are starving because we cannot deliver wheat to export position, and we talk about football. If inflation goes above 10 per cent and if half the traffic in the country is stalled, will we talk about tennis? Taking the argument to ridiculous lengths, when inflation reaches 15 per cent, will the government bring in a bill to regulate ping pong?

● (1420)

One wonders about this government. When I go to my constituency, people ask why we cannot have legislation which deals with the Criminal Code and abortion. I tell them there are 30 departments of government and everyone is either trying to update their legislation or bring in new legislation to meet the ever-increasing demands of the public. How will I ever be able to explain to my constituents why we had to spend several days debating football? When the minister introduced the bill, he spoke for an hour, and closed by saying that he hoped no one would want to talk about this measure, that there would be co-operation from other members and the debate would be closed. I would like to take this opportunity to discuss some of the issues in his department.

Over the years I have sent requests to the department asking for financial support for people honestly engaged in the promotion of amateur sports. The answers have always been the same, we get nothing. However, the minister is going to spend $18 million this year and $25 million by 1975-76. Where is it going to go? I can well remember living in Saskatchewan and wanting to see some Canadian football. All we ever got over CBC television was American football. I did not like it at first, but after seeing nothing else, it kind of grew on me. The CBC could not carry Canadian games so we had to watch American ball. Now, the government is getting kind of fussy about what kind of ball there may be in Toronto.

It seems the department of fitness and health can give grants to Lethbridge and Montreal. The people in my constituency contributed to support Expo '67 and the great monuments and facilities that remain there. Olympics '76 will also cost the Canadian taxpayer. However, we do not get anything in the rural and sparsely populated areas. North Battleford in my constituency was going to host the Canadian senior baseball championships this year. When we hosted the Saskatchewan winter games, we requested some television coverage by the state-owned CBC. They said they could not go there and do that, yet they spent $25 million sending progress reports on sports events in Mexico. Why do they not have money to project happenings that are taking place in remote areas, as I suppose the government considers them to be, like North Battleford? Facilities will be required to host these games in Kindersley and Unity. It will not be possible to get any financial assistance from the minister's department.

There is talk about football being part of the Canadian culture. I have not received one single letter on this issue. I did receive a booklet from the Canadian Football League which is not looking very far down the road when supporting this legislation. I quote from that paper:

—Canadian Clubs would lose just as much or more money but more importantly they will have lost 100 years of Canadian sporting tradition.

They say it will not only wipe out the Canadian Football League, but all sporting tradition in Canada. What nonsense. They further state:

The Grey Cup Game, as one of Canada's greatest annual events, will disappear with it—

No one is talking about the disappearance of the CFL. This bill does not guarantee the Saskatchewan Rough Riders will survive in Regina. I do not see anything in this bill that assures a football team in Saskatchewan. Whether or not Saskatchewan continues to have a football team will depend on the ability of those managing the team to sell their product. It will also depend on the willingness of the people with the entertainment dollar to purchase tickets and see football. They have to compete with hockey, other sports and activities of all sorts. That is as it should be.

This bill to keep a football team out of Toronto and support the monopoly of the Argonauts in that city will not do anything for Regina, Calgary or Edmonton. You do not get excellence in sport by eliminating the better players. Look at what the Americans have done to promote hockey in their country. They could simply say they will not allow any Canadian hockey players into the United States. We know what the result would be. There would not be a team in St. Louis or Cleveland. There would not be two hockey teams in New York or Boston. Without excellence in sports, you just do not get spectators. A person will pay $100 to see two excellent boxers but will not walk across the street to see two mediocre ones. This socialistic minister is trying to promote mediocracy in sports as well as everything else.

The minister's speech made it quite clear why we are debating this issue today. The government is hanging by a thread not knowing what to do. What do you do in a case like that? You find some filler legislation. The minister said, as recorded at page 1566 of Hansard, and I quote:

As a matter of fact, although we consider this a matter of significance we do not consider it a matter of confidence.

Why is it here? Why are we debating it? They sense an election in the near future. As the minister said at page 1561, it is an emotional issue, a gut issue. That is why we are debating it. The government cannot be defeated on it. It is an emotional issue, but they are trying to gain the support of Canadians for it.

I live in a town of about 3,000 people. We have local hockey teams. They have done something to promote unity. In the last three years, they travelled to Powell River, B.C. and Bathurst, New Brunswick. They went to the Canadian finals intermediate A hockey, real amateur hockey. These fellows do not get paid fancy salaries. They play for pleasure and to entertain the local people. They live in sparsely populated areas and are hard pressed for money. We produce a lot for the economy of this country in terms of grain and cattle, but we are denied any support from this minister's department. I requested some support when the Rosetown Red Wings had to travel to St. John, New Brunswick, to play in the intermediate A finals. There was no support in terms of travel expenses or help to have these games broadcast in Rosetown and surrounding area.

If football is a traditional part of Canadian culture, certainly hockey is much more so. I would not hesitate to guess that for every child with a football, there are a thousand children with a hockey stick. The minister made a speech at the University of Lethbridge on awards night. He said that Canada was not winning gold medals at the olympics and countries with populations smaller than ours were winning more medals. He said we want to help the best Canadian athletes in their pursuit of excellence.

Let us look at those two objectives, achieving more medals for Canada and helping our athletes in their pursuit of excellence and look at the bill this minister has brought forward. How does the bill achieve either of these objectives? I do not see how keeping the Northmen out of Toronto is likely to help us win more gold olympic medals. I do not see that it will help our athletes achieve any greater excellence. It is difficult for socialists to understand excellence, to understand that mankind has always sought excellence and tried to achieve the best. The socialists formula is to say: you cannot run as fast as the next fellow, but never mind, we will legislate a stone around his neck. There will always be followers of that philosophy because there will always be people who cannot run as fast as the leader. So it always goes over well.

● (1430)

The minister says he intends to appoint an executive director for amateur football. That is a fine sounding idea. Perhaps the man selected will be a defeated Liberal candidate, or, perhaps, a football player. In any case, he will need a secretary. If he is a football player his spelling will probably be no better than mine. Whoever is appointed will probably need a few assistant directors, one for the west, I suppose and another for the east, with a commissioner to represent the maritimes. Half of the staff will be French, and the rest will be English. Having done this with football, what about hockey? Will the minister appoint a director to look after hockey? What about lacrosse, Canada's national sport? This is how bureaucracy grows. This is the reason I am opposed to the legislation, and I think it is the reason most of my constituents are opposed to it. If the CFL had any opinion, they would be opposed to it as well. We just cannot achieve excellence in Canadian football by protecting players.

It would not be gratifying for any Canadian player to find himself part of a team simply because someone in his family had influence or owned a share of the team. Just now, the Americans are achieving greater excellence in hockey, not by banning our players but by welcoming Canadians who have achieved eminence in that sport. I think we could learn from them. If it is the intention to improve football in Canada, the federal government might try to find ways of improving the standard of coaching in our high schools, colleges and universities. If the government is so anxious to spend money it could make grants available for hiring American coaches, or the best coaches wherever they can be found, rather than protecting footballers who in time, nobody might care to go and watch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Stanfield: Not yet!

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Before I begin, Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to old leather lungs over there that he and the rest of his accomplices in the government party, to judge from their demeanour during the consideration of this bill are analogous to the young man who, having murdered his mother and father goes into court pleading for mercy on the grounds that he is an orphan—I have used that comparison before, but only once; the lawyers will know it.

An hon. Member: Very funny!

Mr. Stanfield: Not bad.

Mr. Reilly: It is they who brought this bill before the House. It is they who urge the rest of us to pass it without debate. Yet it is bad law. It has dubious constitutional backing. They want us to get rid of it so that there can be a vote. Well, they are not going to get it. In case there should be any doubt in the mind of the aforesaid leather lungs, I intend to speak against this bill as will most, if not all, of my hon. friends in this party.

An hon. Member: And so would they, if they could!

Mr. Reilly: Yes. As my hon. friend says, if the truth ever came out there is hardly a member within that tatty caucus who, if he had the courage, would not stand up and say exactly what I am saying about this affair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I am in some difficulty, I must confess, in finding within the lexicon of the English language words to describe the emotion I feel as I stand up here to debate this over-poweringly important measure. My thoughts stray to my riding, not 2,000 yards west of here. I think of the young housewife whose husband, by whom she has had three children, earns less than $10,000 a year, and of the tiny, tiny tender smile that must flit over her lips as she delves deeply into her handbag in an effort to make a down payment on the weekend groceries, and remembers that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has made Toronto safe for the Argonauts. I think of the many hundreds of thousands of people—507,000 by the government's own count last Monday—who are out of work in this country and who, as they line up to receive their unemployment cheques, may be taking real comfort from the fact that the WFL shall not pass.

Mr. Muir: A thousand laid off last week in my city.

Mr. Reilly: Last Monday, the increases in the cost of living were announced. As we all know, the average increase in the consumer price index for the year was 10.1 per cent. In some cities it was as high as 12.5 per cent for the year with St. John's leading the pack. In Ottawa, where the minister sits five days a week, it was 11.4 per cent, the monthly increase being .9 per cent. This is in addition to the multiplicity of other disasters which have been brought on the heads of the unsuspecting and undeserving people of this country as a result of the really creative incompetence of the government.

As I say, I find myself at a loss for words to describe my feelings. Certainly, "honoured" is not the word. "Happy" does not describe the way I feel, either. What I really feel is demeaned and deceived and put upon at having to sit here and watch this kind of spectacle. I think of all the people in the Public Service who are trying through their collective bargaining agents to get a decent collective agreement out of the Treasury Board, and not succeeding. I think of all the travellers who find themselves waiting at airports, unable to reach their destinations. I think of the many people waiting for mail, including a bunch of postal employees in Kentville, Nova Scotia who went on strike because they could not get their pay cheques because the post office employees are on strike elsewhere, as a result of which their cheques could not get to Kentville.

The firemen at the airports across the country want to vote on their contract, but once again they cannot because the post office is on strike and they cannot receive their ballots. Even if they did succeed in getting their ballots on the plane, they had better vote fast because the air traffic controllers are going to be on the street by midnight Sunday. In the midst of all this the government brings on this extraordinary measure to regulate in what fashion, in what numbers, and by whom, a leather spheroid shall be propelled up and down a 100 yard field.

At this point I should like to read a charming editorial that appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail entitled "Canada crowds in again". I think it is particularly poignant in the context of this moment. It goes like this:

It is said that Barbados can bestow a special sense of tranquility on all who visit it; a calming, benign influence that can waft troubles away on zephyr breezes. We trust it worked its therapeutic wonders on Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau during the five or six days he spent there, because he returns to an in-tray that threatens to break the legs of his desk.

If I can interpolate a personal observation here, those of us who have been unfortunate enough to have to witness the ill temper of the aforesaid member from Barbados know full well that there is no discernible evidence that the tranquility or zephyr breezes had any ameliorating effect on his temper at all. To continue:

Some of us can go on holiday and return to find that our week has been invisibly mended. Hardly anyone noticed we were gone, and events just lumbered easily along. It doesn't work that way for prime ministers.

Then, it poses this rhetorical question:

From calypso to collapso? Well, we can't be sure what lurks behind the enigmatic smile of New Democratic Party Leader David Lewis or behind the doors of the Conservative caucus room, but staying afloat in Ottawa can be more fun than skindiving in the Caribbean.

The first thing Mr. Trudeau should understand is that if his in-tray is overburdened, it is not the fault of the Post Office. That operation has done all that could be expected of it to ease the flow of communication by letter.

Let him be thankful also that the possibility of intrusion on his working day by delegations from all parts of the country has been thoughtfully reduced through a gift by airport firefighters, with air traffic controllers standing by. In keeping with the fiesta spirit that goes with labour's rites of spring, the St. Lawrence River pilots have made their own unique contribution.

Canada is wonderful in the springtime. It's nature's time of renewal and all around us things are pushing merrily upward—wages, prices—you name it. Yes, inflation is another of those little things that tells you you have been away. Even in six days you can see the index move.

Lay a budget on us. Give us something to sing and dance about. The good old countervailing force, remember? We have it on the highest authority that this will be a good budget, and those of us who didn't make it to Barbados this winter need a glimpse of sunshine.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if we have not got sunshine, at least we have football. In an earlier reincarnation the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) once functioned as principal secretary to the Prime Minister. In that lofty capacity he had occasion to speak to a seminar of Liberal party workers on the west coast. This particular seminar had to do with the participation of party workers in the formation of Liberal party policy. He said at this seminar: "Of course, you have to realize that none of these policy resolutions are binding; after all you are only a few per cent". So they said to him: "What if you have more than a few per cent? What if you have 51 per cent, or even 100 per cent of all the workers in the Liberal party deciding we should do something that you did not want to do?" "Well," he replied, "we would send our P.R. men out to do a better selling job because we would realize that we had made a mistake".

If I ever saw concrete evidence that that curious attitude toward the democratic process has not changed one bit, it is the almost inch think folder of profession "bumph" that came our way in trying to sell this dubious proposition to members of parliament. We have received telegrams from mayors, and following a rhetorical question posed this morning by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), I should like to tell the minister that of all the telegrams and letters received from mayors of various cities in this country, only three were written after March 1, out of about 15, by the look of it. One has to assume, since the bill was recently introduced in this House, that they knew not what it contained, unless the minister was sliding around showing it to them in advance, and I can scarcely credit that. So I think we can take these letters, telegrams and all the rest with a grain of salt.

As far as the letters are concerned, I should like to read a couple of them to the minister. One from a constituent of mine says this:

I would like to list a few of the reasons why I think Mr. Lalonde is being ridiculous in his stand.

—The Northmen have guaranteed that the equalization from the Argonauts would not decrease from last season's level for the next three years.

Actually, it is the next ten years.

They also hold refusal rights to another WFL team in Canada and have guaranteed the government they will not allow another team to play in Canada.

Mr. Lalonde's worry about Canadian sport comes much too late for anybody to seriously believe that is his only motive and not a vote-getter from the western provinces . . .

If the government is really worried about the CFL going belly-up why don't they set up a grant system for the leagues teams that are not drawing large enough crowds to support them. The manner in which the government is spending money and giving grants to the most idiotic causes would suggest this would be a worthy cause.

This is a letter to the minister from a constituent of mine who was kind enough to send me a copy:

Canadians have more faith in their institutions and themselves than you give them credit for. Normal competition leads to strength and vitality—government interference leads to complacency and decay.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a letter that appeared a couple of days ago in the Ottawa Journal from an admirable person who signs himself or herself "K. C. Shindler":

Sirs:

Our federal government has strange priorities. The cost of living has gone up 10.4 per cent in one year, vegetable prices will go up between 20 and 30 per cent by next autumn, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan wants higher beef prices in Canada, and now Health Minister Marc Lalonde has introduced a bill to protect the CFL from the WFL.

How about a bill to protect me from the federal government?

Mr. Lachance: Why don't you table the letter?

Mr. Reilly: Here it is, any time you want it. I should just like to comment on some of the remarks made during the minister's lengthy and paranoid apologia for this curious position of his last night. He said, as reported at page 1561 of Hansard:

We hear about the principles of free enterprise and free competition in the marketplace.

Fancy that.

We are told that the state should not interfere with private business unless, of course, private business requests state help. We are bombarded with lectures about people's freedom of choice and freedom of movement and other fundamental rights.

I suggest that must be an imposition on the government. Imagine being bombarded with speeches about people's rights! This entitles them to take a long, long second look at this bill. Just imagine—freedom of choice and freedom of rights are being urged upon the government. How uncomfortable it must make them feel. The minister goes on to say that there is nothing unprecedented or arbitrary in the government's position.

I ask hon. members to consider precisely what it is that this bill does. It makes it a criminal offence, punishable by up to two years behind bars and/or a fine which is set at whatever a court deems advisable, if a person decides to set up a particular business in Canada, to employ American nationals and to carry on part of that business in the United States. That is exactly what the bill does, no less.

Is there another industry to which this applies? Is there another area of entrepreneurship in which a person risks going to jail and/or a fine of undetermined size because he decides to hire as his employees people who come from countries other than Canada, and because he decides to carry on business at least part of the time in another country? I do not believe so. As for being arbitrary, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a fashion in which you could behave more arbitrarily than by threatening someone with two years behind bars, unless it is to threaten him with a sentence of death. I think on this basis the minister's defence of this position fails to stand up at all.

Then, he goes on to appeal to the basest kind of prejudice when he says that those whose manufacturing industries have been protected in the past by tariff legislation should not complain about this. He finds that terribly ironic and he tried to suggest to us that this is a quid pro quo on the part of the whole of eastern Canada because of a reasonable position taken in bargaining over the price of oil by western provinces. I suggest to you that this is just about as strained a comparison as the bit of gibberish that came out of the minister of state for multiculturalism this morning when he was insisting on bellowing across whether the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) was in favour of Canadian unity. I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) that if the issue of whether John Bassett or Fred Schmertz, or whoever, is going to be allowed to operate a football team in Toronto in competition with the Toronto Argonauts bears heavily on the issue of national unity, then this country is in worse shape than I had imagined it to be.

This issue of national unity has been a stalking horse of this particular brand of Grits for far too long now. In the first session of this House after the election of 1972 we heard them get on the national unity hobby horse and, in the person of their Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and national leader, accuse even the leader of this party of racism during the election campaign of October 1972, and accuse this entire political party of damaging the concept of national unity. They were rebuffed at that time quite properly and they will be turned back and rebuffed on this issue if they try to make out that this is important to national unity, any more important than mom's apple pie. Perhaps they will come back in here with another imagined threat to national unity in the near future, but they certainly have not made any point here at all.

As to whether this team, the Toronto Northmen, would be a threat to the Canadian Football League, and this is the unifying premise of the bill, I want to examine this with you. I would be very, very grateful if the minister or anybody else over there could tell me precisely how this team located in Toronto is going to damage anybody. The existence of the WFL itself is going to threaten not only the Canadian Football League but the National Football League in the United States because there will be unrestrained raiding and bidding for services. Indeed, this very day in the newspaper John Bassett claims to have signed Larry Uteck, the Toronto Argonauts' first pick of the Canadian college draft. That kind of thing is going to go on apace. The very existence of that league, with its need for players, is going to put the pressure on every other professional football league in North America, and it is not going to matter a hoot in hell whether that team is located in Toronto, Nashville, North Carolina or wherever it is they propose to locate if they are turned out of Toronto. It is the existence of the league that is a threat, and, despite what the minister would like to do, we cannot legislate the league out of existence; we can only knock out one of its teams, and even then we can only push that across the border. It will not make one iota of difference to the Saskatchewan Roughriders, the Edmonton Eskimos, the Vancouver Lions or any other team if that team is allowed to operate out of Toronto.

It is the league itself that threatens, if indeed there is much of a threat, and I do not think there is because it has been the experience with professional sport of any kind, particularly professional football, that the more people who are exposed to the sport the higher the number will be at the box office. Today, in fact, the United Press International has reported out of Washington:

The Federal Communications Commission reported yesterday the lifting of the home game television blackout by Congress last season had little if any impact on the mounting prosperity of professional football, which enjoyed its best year in 1973.

"The anti-blackout law appears to have had minimal impact on the 26 member teams of the National Football League in its first season of operation," a report issued by the FCC read. "It is unlikely that season-ticket sales will be adversely affected by the law because there seems to be an excess demand for tickets.

"In fact, 1973 was the best season ever for the NFL—"

That simply means that a great many more people are turning out to NFL games despite the fact that they can see them in their own homes on television in some cities because they are being exposed to the game, a great many converts are being made and they want to see them in person. The same thing is true of Canadian football and of Canadian hockey. Whenever you expose more people to a sport everybody benefits.

I suggest the very same will be true of Toronto where there is a market of up to four million people. You can not buy a season-ticket in that stadium and you have not been able to in the last 10 years. You are lucky if you can get standing room even when they are losing, and that is most of the time. I should know having been an Argonaut fan until I moved down to Ottawa, and I cannot even get tickets to the games here.

Let us consider what the Toronto Northmen have offered to pay. They have offered to pay the difference between the equalization grants, paid principally by the Argonauts to western teams, if they need it; the difference between what was paid under that heading in 1973 and any loss experienced by the Toronto Argonauts in earnings at the box office for the next 10 years. They have offered to restrict their television broadcasting to local TV; they have offered a no-raiding clause of teams in the CFL and have stressed that they will urge upon their colleagues in the WFL the same no-raiding agreement.

I ask you to consider what is going to happen if the Northmen are barred from Toronto. There will, of course, be the absence of a no-raiding agreement. They will be free to raid, and they have already started to do this. There will be absolutely no prohibition on all of the teams in the WFL from raiding the sources from which the CFL customarily gets its American imports, and we must bear in mind that all the CFL teams have a very high proportion of Americans on their payrolls. They are getting these players from the U.S. college draft and from American teams in the NFL, and now they are going to have a powerful and well financed component to bid in all in the same fields in the same places.

Unfortunately salaries are going to rise for a couple of years and everybody is going to feel the pressure. Unfortunately, the quality of play will decline because talent is going to be diluted. That happened in the NHL which is just starting to get a little better. Football leagues in both countries are going to feel the effects of the WFL and there is no mistake about that. The World Football League will continue to exist and will continue to be in opposition to the Canadian Football League regardless of what this parliament does.

I would suggest to you that what we are being asked to do here is accept a law which is pure, political protectionism, which is legislation in restraint of trade, which has as I said earlier dubious legality and constitutionality and which is a very thinly disguised attempt on the part of the federal government to do under the guise of criminal law what it could never do in civil law because of provincial jurisdiction.

We are being asked to do this at a time when more than half a million people are out of work, at a time when inflation is at an all-time high, at a time when the country is very close to being paralyzed by strikes in the public sector due to this government's incompetency, and at a time when this government has been discredited from coast to coast in the public view and would not continue to exist were it not refusing daily to submit to a test of confidence in this House.

● (1500)

Despite all the sophistry that floats across the floor to any member unfortunate enough to differ with the spurious arguments of the Liberal Party, despite all the sophistry about "Let us pass it now," I will say once again to the government that until the happy day when the voters of this country have a chance to express their views at the ballot box you—as disgusting a prospect as it may be for most—are the government, and if you bring in bad legislation in this House you need not expect the opposition parties to lie down before you and let you roll over them and enact bad law. And that is all this bill is.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my remarks this afternoon will be very short because I would be pleased to allow this matter to go to a vote as soon as possible. Indeed, the only reason I rise to speak is to express my shock and the shock of my constituents at the decision of the government to introduce this legislation affecting football as a means of disguising its abject failure to deal with the pressing social and economic problems facing this country.

Last night I indicated my concern about the failure of the government to take any action to deal with the explosion of housing costs in Canada today. I was shocked, and remain shocked, that the only recent action by the government was to further drive up interest rates and to put the cost of housing even further beyond the reach of the average Canadian. The government is not presenting any more speakers to defend its flimsy case for second reading of this bill. They have obviously received the same response from their constituents as members of parliament on this side of the House have received, namely, that the parliament of Canada should be dealing not with frivolous legislation about football but with measures to come to grips with the host of crises facing this country.

I am intrigued that hon. members opposite claim we should hurry this legislation through to committee. All of us on this side would be delighted to do so if the government had any legislation to present dealing with the problems facing Canadians. In Canada today we have more than a 10 per cent rate of inflation. Where is the government's budget that we have been demanding? The government cannot even give us a date for the budget. The cost of housing increased by 41.8 per cent in Toronto in the last year. Torontonians are demanding legislation, not to tell them what football teams they can watch but how they can own a home.

The Unemployment Insurance Commission is in disarray. Where is the legislation to deal with that problem? Half a million Canadians are without work at the present time. What does the government plan to do to deal with that situation? There are strikes at our airports, in our mail system and on our lakes. What action is the government taking to deal with these problems?

Mr. Stanfield: They are probably getting ready to stop the railways.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says the government is probably getting ready to stop the railways now, too. If the government were prepared to introduce legislation that would deal with these matters, all of us on this side would gladly sit down. But we know, the government knows and the people of Canada know that the government has no program to present to parliament and that any legislation we will see after this bill goes to committee will be strictly housekeeping legislation. It will not deserve, and it will not obtain, the attention of the press or of the Canadian people.

Instead, the government is carefully preparing a well orchestrated, three-ring circus of witnesses for the committee, thinking at the same time that no one will be able to say the time of the House of Commons is being taken up by this silly bill because it will be in committee. In other words, the effect of this legislation is only that of a red herring the object of which is to distract public attention from the failure of the government to deal with the real problems facing Canadians today. I repeat, if the government has any legislation to present to cope with the high cost of housing or with the chaos caused by strikes, or if it has a budget to present, I will sit down now and my colleagues also will be silent.

What has been the record of this government? It was the intention of the government that we should not be here this week, that the problems of Canadians should not be discussed in parliament at this time. When we demanded that, as a condition of parliament's recessing, members of parliament should at least have a day this month or early next month to deal with the government's handling of the economy, the government refused because it knows it has lost the confidence of the parliament of Canada and the people of Canada and it is determined to cling to power with all its force.

When we refused to allow government members their holiday, what did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) do? He flew off to Barbados. I was interested on Tuesday to read the article which appeared on page 9 of the Globe and Mail dealing with the Prime Minister's reaction to this particular problem. The final paragraph of the article reads as follows:

> A spokesman for Mr. Trudeau said the Prime Minister, who left for Barbados on Friday with his family, would probably return to Ottawa either today or Wednesday—in time for health minister Lalonde's controversial football bill.

In other words, in the opinion of the Prime Minister and of his discredited government, the government's handling of the economy is not important enough to bother with, but this fraudulent football bill justifies the Prime Minister's return to Canada.

What is the attitude of the cabinet, the people who are supposed to be running this country? During the question period today, 60 per cent of them were missing, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). I am delighted that today the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is gracing us with his presence. As we look at the treasury benches now we find that of the 29 members of the cabinet who should be here, two are present. And these do not include the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) or his parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: They are out blowing up the football.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): This is a government that is leaderless and directionless, a government that was repudiated by the people of nine of the ten provinces, and of both territories; a government that has the sight and the smell of decay about it. Nothing more graphically demonstrates its distorted sense of priorities in its last days than this legislation.

[Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin Waterloo).]

Mr. Speaker, the government says it wants to protect Canadian culture and Canadian athletics, although only yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare admitted on television that this bill will not save the CFL, that it is no panacea. In fact, there is even evidence to suggest that it will damage the CFL by encouraging American WFL teams to raid their lower-paying Canadian counterparts. I think it is worth remembering, when the government wraps itself in the robes of Canadian nationalism and takes measures to protect football, that our national sport in Canada is not football and it is not hockey; it is lacrosse which was first played here by our Canadian Indians.

I come from a town in which lacrosse has been played for generations. I invite the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has now returned to the House, to talk to the people who play lacrosse and learn from them what assistance they have been receiving from the government and from his department. There has been precious little help, if any, for our national sport. As my colleague from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) pointed out last night, there is the prospect of our losing the game of lacrosse to the Americans as teams are created in the United States and there is virtually no assistance available for the sport from our federal government.

Last summer I wrote the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the minister responsible for Information Canada, pointing out the importance of promoting this part of our national heritage. I was informed that the government's promotional efforts amounted to one 14-minute film produced in 1964, another produced in 1965, and a booklet on lacrosse in Canada. What a bold initiative!

Mr. Speaker, last year I had an opportunity to watch the Grey Cup game in Toronto. I could not help but have the feeling, watching these two corporations play against each other, that it is very similar to watching the struggle between General Motors and Ford. Unlike the minister, however, I do not begrudge people watching football if they wish, whether it is played by the Toronto Northmen or by the Toronto Argonauts. As individuals, they should have this opportunity. But I cannot help getting the feeling that the ultimate good of the country will be decided, not by professional athletics but by amateur athletics which have been neglected by the government. I see the minister nods his head; he is in agreement.

● (1510)

Mr. Lalonde: With the first part, yes. With the last part, no.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I repeat that this is not the time for smokescreen legislation from a dying government. This is not the time for inaction on national issues. It is the time for an honest attempt to deal with our real problems. I am afraid that such an honest attack on our problems is more than we can expect from this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I note that some members are eager to refer this bill to the committee, but I think there is much to be said about it. As for myself, I am particularly interested in Bill C-22 now under consideration.

My interest is quite natural since I spent some years practising various sports, namely hockey, baseball and football. The latter is not unfamiliar to me, on the contrary, because I had the opportunity to follow closely and particularly the sports practised in Canada. The motivation which can be instilled into young people in connection with sports generally deserves special attention.

I find it strange, though, that members of the party sponsoring this bill be absent or remain silent because I know, especially since I come from the province of Quebec, that thousands of sports fans, especially football fans, are following the debates on this bill. From the outset, we were asked to limit the number of speeches, so that the bill might be referred to the committee and that the House might deal with more important problems.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite unbecoming on the part of the government party to tell us that we are delaying the debates and wasting the time of this House because we have been saying for two months to the government that we do not want this legislation.

Mr. Ethier: The hon. member himself is now delaying the debate, not us.

Mr. La Salle: Exactly, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member who has just interrupted me should then rise and speak right now.

We are being blamed for delaying the debates whereas we have been warning for two months the responsible minister and the government not to bring forward such a meaningless legislation. Mr. Speaker, the government has no business interfering in such an area.

And they will try to make the public believe that the Official Opposition party is wasting the time of this House, when we are calling upon the government to introduce specific measures dealing with today's problems.

I wonder, for instance, whether it is not government strategy to put forward a bill about football, in order to hide basic problems our society is faced with, such as the strike that is presently under way throughout the country. Members of Parliament are invited to speak about football in order to prevent the public from realizing the failure of the government to find solutions for several months, Mr. Speaker.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I really wanted to speak about this legislation because I am interested in sports in general. I think I can say that I have some knowledge in the whole field of sports. I think it is not exaggerated to add that putting forward a bill about football under the pretence that this is the only way of saving Canadian football and getting thousands of young Canadians to be interested in it, is a phoney assertion. The provisions of this bill certainly do not deserve the support of most hon. members. What is the reason for such a bill? They claim that it will foster national unity. I wonder what is the relation between that concept and football. God knows how many times we failed in respect of a great many problems a lot more important than this one.

Now they are talking about economic nationalism. A number of speakers have already urged the Minister to take more concrete steps, in the industrial area, for example, so that Canadians may own a majority of shares. In my opinion, the government should introduce measures to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian industries, so that they may feel they are the real owners of this country's resources.

Mr. Béchard: When we introduced such a bill, you voted against it.

An hon. Member: The hon. member should keep his ears open and his mouth shut!

Mr. La Salle: I do not think there is enough legislation fostering economic nationalism, but the government should not make us laugh. While a number of hon. members have cracked jokes which were apparently aimed at reviling members of the government but which only succeeded in making us laugh, surely the Canadian public must wonder why the government introduced such legislation which affects one particular sport only.

Mr. Béchard: You are saying this, not the Canadian public.

● (1520)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I will later make some revealing comments to the minister.

If he wants us to promote Canadian football, there is not one member in this House who is against giving direct support to Canadian football. I am the first one to promote this sport and I wish a law were passed to ensure that most if not all owners of these teams were Canadians. I also wish to see any possibility of competition banned in football. But I will not accept to see young Canadians deprived of motivation to achieve excellence, to better themselves in a professional sport, whether football or hockey.

The minister has stated that football is in danger. But I have here a paper that sheds light on this, which has precisely been issued by his department. And I quote: "Football is in danger". In fact, Mr. Speaker, all sports are in danger.

We talk about the importance of participation, about the quality of football players. Why don't we talk about participation in all sports, about the quality of hockey or baseball players as well as players in any other sport. That is just as important as the opportunities offered to young people by Canadian football. And why should it not be so for all other sports?

The problem in the area of football in particular will not be solved through this legislation, which is totally inadequate and even unfair. I fail to see how the government could justify itself by saying that Canadian football can be promoted through such legislation.

I have here a document signed by Mr. Jean-Paul Chartrand of Montreal which says: The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not helping the Montreal Alouettes. In Ontario, football is a great deal better organized than in Quebec where it is almost nonexistent at the serious amateur level. One look at the Alouettes line up is enough to find out that our best Canadian players are not home grown, unless they attended an American college.

There is talk of actually encouraging our young people to play Canadian football. But I regret that all sports in Canada have not been included and it is certainly not necessary to pass a legislation to keep a foreign league or team from settling in this country, when this would be the only opportunity for our young people of being offered sound competition with all the advantages that this carries.

Until now funds allotted to amateur sport have been entirely restricted to a few super stars, some of whom have benefited from scholarships. What has been done for kids in grade school or high school? It is at this level that an amateur sport policy must truly be initiated. The present policy is altogether inadequate. It is not by passing legislation on football that we would remedy these anomalies. What is keeping the minister from allotting funds to our universities in order that our football players may develop in a normal way as they have the right to?

So the government's problem lies not in the need to pass a piece of legislation but in the inadequacy of the funds allotted to amateur sport while the Canadian policy in that respect is altogether inadequate and even absurd. What is required, as I have already mentioned, is the establishment, in consultation with the provinces, of a department of sports and recreation which would be responsible for physical conditioning in Canada. This will help solve many problems, besides encouraging young people to play not only football but all the other sports in which they are interested provided they are qualified to participate in them. So, this participation and the quality of the players to which reference is made in this bill make it totally unacceptable if other sports are not included. Therefore, this bill should surely not, I think, constitute a government priority.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote some comments I read recently, in particular one by Jean Barette, an experienced Montreal columnist. I think that he is right to ask himself several questions, and he would have desired to put some questions to the minister if the latter had been able to answer a recent invitation to come to Montreal. His absence was undoubtedly warranted.

This bill which is now before the House requires a minimum of Canadian players and sets the number of import players. Mr. Barette says, and I quote:

For example, The United States Congress could require that U.S. hockey clubs have a 60 per cent American roster. This would have tragic consequences for many Canadians who earn a very good living in the United States and who pay their taxes in our country, which provide some nice dollars to Mr. Lalonde and several politicians like him.

[Mr. La Salle.]

First of all, the following question could have been put to Mr. Lalonde:—

—and we wish we could have asked it.

. . . "Will you meet the deficit of the Montreal Olympic stadium following the 1976 Olympic Games?

We are quite aware of the fact that for the Olympic Games Montreal will have a most adequate stadium. I am happy to see that Toronto has a chance of getting a professional team and I wish them good luck. We know that cities like Montreal and Vancouver can have their professional football teams but this bill will not allow it. I know that the Island of Montreal at present does not have any Conservative member and I wonder if a plot is not being weaved against Montreal and the interests of the football fans of this city on account of the members remaining silent in this House. I believe it is important that the hon. members should express their views on this subject, because I have met Montreal members and they are against the passing of this bill. Of course the party line will be respected and they will vote for the bill. I know that three Montreal members are absolutely against it. I will not name them because I am discreet. Other members, also from Quebec, are not in favour of the bill. But we know the influence of the minister in the cabinet. I will not blame him for it but I know that as usual the orders given will be followed and they will deprive Montreal of any chance of having a professional football team.

People are concerned about professional teams. The Montreal Expos seem to be a good business proposition. We have witnessed a new motivation on the part of the young in baseball immediately after the coming of the Expos. Thousands of young Canadians are interested in baseball because Montrealers are proud of their professional team. The City of Montreal has become famous because of them. Every hon. member enjoys watching the Expos and seeing them win most of the time.

I am of the opinion that a professional football team would stir up the same motivation and I doubt that it would cause the death of the Canadian Football League. This is a false assumption. We know full well that businessmen would not invest huge amounts of money in cities where the endeavour would not be profitable. Cities should have been chosen which are able to encourage professional clubs. But no. The easy way out is preferred, by removing the possibility of competition, of rivalry between teams and sportsmen.

It is therefore not a waste of the time of the House to oppose such a bill that is moved by a minister who is certainly ill-advised. I have suffered too much from this type of thing when I was young. I too dreamed of going into professional sport, at the early age of 20. But there were only six professional hockey teams: many were called but few chosen. Today, the teams having multiplied, young talented Canadians have had the opportunity of bettering themselves and representing Canada admirably well throughout the world.

Therefore, these opportunities must be real for those young Canadians who play football, and this bill will eliminate those opportunities. The unwavering answer will be that the Canadian Football League will be able to expand in Canada. We know full well that youth want perfection and that a player with a legitimate ambition cannot be satisfied with playing in a minor league. This league can be the best in the country but there can be a better one, and the sportsman who has plenty of guts will not be satisfied with playing in the first one. Personally, I am happy as a Canadian to see those superstars play all over Canada and abroad.

I believe that passage of the bill we are discussing now would be unnacceptable.

I would like to add a few words to Mr. Barrette's remarks which I just mentioned.

As for the second question that Mr. Barrette would have liked to ask the minister, I will ask it in his place:

Will you make up the deficit of the olympic stadium?

I mean the stadium which would or could be used by such a team.

Will you take action against all sports such as golf, which comes under the control of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, which bows before the American PGA for the Canadian Open and submits to ridiculous restrictions on the number of Canadian golfers entitled to take part in the National Open of their own country? . . . we doubt that he could reply in the affirmative since the federal government, like Pontius Pilate, has washed its hands of everything that concerns the 1976 olympic games organization. However, if Mr. Lalonde's bill eventually becomes law, it will deprive Montreal of a good source of revenue since the National Football League or the World Football League already have their eyes on the spacious stadium which will be completed in time for the olympic games. It would have been very profitable to have an American football franchise. And this would not have prevented Mr. Berger from making his Alouettes play in the same stadium, even if the caliber of the Canadian league is clearly inferior. Some fans prefer the Canadian game to the American, whatever the quality of the players.

If the federal government does not help Montreal in the form of subsidies, the financial charge will naturally fall on the shoulders of Montrealers many of whom are supporters of our dear national "boy scout".

As for the second question, Mr. Lalonde could not have replied because, first of all, he must not even be aware of the existence of golf, even less of that of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, whose pundits have just announced that the Canadian Open will always be held in Toronto the Pure starting in 1980.

If Mr. Lalonde deigns to look into this problem of the takeover of the organization of our national Omnium by the American PGA, he will have to legislate in order to put an end to this infamous practice.

Mr. Speaker, this proves that when we discuss a bill relating only to football, arguing that it will allow thousands of Canadians to develop, we are making a mistake. At no time can the government introduce measures on recreation, physical fitness, the assessment of basic tools that we now have, or on the appropriations for our recreational organizations, in order to enable young people to develop properly.

I remember that not long ago, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) had called for an assessment of our recreational organizations. He talked about the addition of some buildings, if necessary, but unfortunately he will probably do the same as other members; he will not say a word because our time must be saved for other great current problems.

However, I think it is the right time to ask the responsible minister not to introduce such a bill, but rather to apply himself more, to increase appropriations and grant them to the department responsible for physical fitness. I think that this affects all citizens, whatever their age, not only children but also older citizens. It is very important that we agree to establish such a policy. It will be argued that we spend millions of dollars on OFY and LIP programs, but nobody ever says that half of this money is wasted because of poor submissions and selections.

I think it would be more profitable to affect those millions of dollars to a department for physical fitness, but not under the terms of a bill such as this one, because we know very well that the government has no business telling competent people how to organize a football or hockey league.

There are knowledgeable people who can take care of that. Our responsibility, of course, is to provide the thousands of Canadians who practice this sport each and every opportunity to give a first-rate performance. It is not up to us to tell them what to do.

That is why this is a ridiculous bill. We would have hoped that the minister would allocate additional funds. We are accused of wasting the time of the House; if the minister is willing to withdraw the bill, we would be quite happy to proceed to the consideration of much more important problems. But let not the minister believe that I will support his bill which goes against the liberties of all sportsmen. I think the minister will have the opportunity to read many reports from knowledgeable sport commentators which will enable him to think twice about it and to withdraw his bill. Even if it takes two weeks or two months, I will do everything to prevent the passage of this bill, which is not the right answer to the young people who are expecting new forms of assistance as well as justified and justifiable measures. We hear about encouraging young people to engage in recreative activities; that is surely not a way of accomplishing that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me to ask a very serious question?

Mr. La Salle: Yes, I would like him to ask his question. I have doubts about its seriousness, Mr. Speaker, but I allow him to ask it.

Mr. Béchard: You will see later on.

Mr. Speaker, a while ago the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) seemed to ridicule the relationship between Canadian football—

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Béchard: That question is similar to that of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)!

—and national unity. Could he tell me if he agrees with the statement from the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said in 1961, and I will repeat it in Shakespeare's language, which is the language of the former Prime Minister of Canada—

The annual Grey Cup game is a great national event for all Canadians. It stimulates an interest in sports, for it has become symbolic of athletic competition. It brings east and west together and contributes to the unity of the nation.

Does he agree with that?

Mr. La Salle: The answer is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. The former Prime Minister of Canada was quite right but why ask such a question? Why does this bill mention only national unity about football, while east-west competition has national overtones? In my opinion, a simple legislation cannot help Canadian football, but we should make additional monies available to help young Canadians interested in football. This has no connection with the statement of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

An hon. Member: You have another question?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Should we understand that he disagrees and, by the way, this would not be the first disagreement within the Progressive Conservative Party—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad we could not have more speakers from the opposite side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ellis: As my colleagues have pointed out, it is too bad that some of those who believe very strongly that this legislation, Bill C-22, is a mockery of parliament are not allowed to speak. If the minister would like to call the debate to a close, all he has to do is ask for the floor, which I will gladly relinquish, and withdraw the legislation.

In the first place, we should not be here at all this week. It was planned that we would have a recess, and I think there was need for a recess. During such recess we could have met with our constituents, discussed the problems of the day and tried to find out what is going on in those parts of the country which do not revolve around Ottawa. Sometimes I think we are here too much. It is necessary to get away from Ottawa to find out what is going on. We had planned to do this. Many of us had not planned to go to Barbados or anywhere as exotic as that. Unfortunately, the government was afraid to meet a simple test of confidence, a test they have boastfully been able to accept until now—a test they now feel they may lose.

I want to make it clear for the record, although the few of us in the House this afternoon are aware of it, that the government sets the schedule and places the bills before the House. The government sets the priorities. The Easter recess could have been called. One opposition day prior to a budget would not have made a great difference if the government is as confident as it seems to be. We are now faced with the ridiculous situation whereby after the budget is presented there will be more opposition days than government legislation days, yet the government is worried because it does not have enough time now. We need legislation to deal with the problems of this country.

Let us take a minute to look at the legislation we have dealt with so far this session and see how important some of it is. Look at Bill C-2, the Fisheries Development Act. This provides funds for conversion of fishing vessels. It is very important for fishermen, but it does not do a thing for those with inadequate housing, those who every day fight inflationary food costs. Let us look at Bill C-5, the CN financing bill. It is a very necessary housekeeping type of bill. It was not passed in 1971, 1972 or 1973 and it does not do a great deal toward providing the extra freight cars which are needed in the west. It certainly does not do anything to clear up the transportation mess the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) spoke of a few weeks ago.

Take Bill C-6, the national parks legislation. A lot of time was spent on this subject last session. But the bill does not do a thing to create land banks which would provide lots at lower cost for those wishing to own houses in Canada. Bill C-7 was designed to amend the Combines Investigation Act. A lot of time was spent on it. It should have been brought in last session because it was badly in need of revision, as are most of the bills brought forward by the government. It is restrictive and it does nothing to roll back major price increases which are likely to face us. Bill C-9, the Yukon and Northwest Territories legislation, increases the numbers of councillors in the north from 7 to 12 and from 14 to 15 respectively. It is probably very important for those who live in the north, but it does not do a thing to increase the number of officials employed by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who inspect delivery equipment used in the supply of fuel oil to homes. Meters in my riding have not been tested for three years and are bound to be inaccurate by now.

Bill C-14, the one we discussed a week ago, raised the ceilings on loans to farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. I spoke at some length on that bill last week and I do not intend to go into the subject again. The legislation falls short in many respects. For example, it fails to allow a person to qualify if he works away from the farm and also operates a farm. The ceilings are still not high enough to be of much practical value to business. The banks are not obliged to lend money to people who need it. As usual, it is too little and too late.

Then there was Bill C-17, the VLA measure. This was extended at the eleventh hour. Finally, it was extended under pressure from my hon. friends and myself. It was necessary, but the bill could have been brought in last session and it should have been if the government had any sympathy whatsoever for the veterans of the country. Bill C-18 was a very important bill dealing with the export tax on oil. It was necessary following the decisions reached at the meeting of first ministers. But there was nothing new in the bill, no provision which would result in a supply of energy from new sources, nothing which would encourage the development of our nuclear potential, nothing for the northern part of Hastings county where uranium which could be used to provide an alternate source of energy for the country is lying untapped.

As for Bill C-19 to amend the Canada Pension Plan which we were discussing yesterday, it does improve things for people between age 65 and 69, and certain other improvements are to be brought about, and though it is necessary legislation which I expect we shall support, it needs review in committee. It does nothing to bring down the price of food for senior citizens. It does nothing to reduce the cost of other necessities of life for senior citizens.

So with these priorities we come to Bill C-22, the football bill, and we are asked by the minister to say absolutely nothing on it. Take a look at the bill. It is supposed to protect the Canadian Football League. I personally support the Canadian Football League, unlike some of my colleagues and, indeed, unlike some of my constituents. I prefer Canadian football; I am not a follower of the National Football League. I deplore the fact that Canadian funds are going into the Olympics field in Montreal and that the field is only being built to NFL size.

One of my constituents telephoned me some time ago. He was worried about the CFL, quite naturally, because he is an ardent football fan. This bill does not protect the CFL. It merely attempts to keep out one team of the World Football League from the city of Toronto. The constituent who called me has suddenly turned about, because the government has absolutely no business getting into professional football, baseball, hockey, basketball or lacrosse. As has been said here many times, the government might do better if it took a greater interest in minor sports, the interest of many Canadians who spend hours of their time on Saturdays and weekends coaching young players with little or no help from the federal government.

In my home city of Belleville, in the heart of Hastings county, there is a group of citizens known as the Belleville Yardmen who, with other concerned people in the area, have raised over $1 million to build a major sports complex which will enable all manner of athletes to train to a level which would allow them to compete in the Olympics. If the federal government wants to get involved in the business of sport, this is the place where it might start.

The minister said in the course of his speech that this was an emotional issue, one which stirred up deep feelings. I have news for him. The majority of people in my riding could not care less whether the Northmen play in Toronto or not. I think that on a Friday afternoon they are much more concerned about the fact that it takes more money to buy less when they go to the grocery store. Perhaps the minister might suggest that since they cannot buy as many groceries, they get a smaller car to carry them in. That is the type of thinking we have been given recently.

The minister said there was incredible interest in this subject. The hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) said he had received only 40 letters on it and none on inflation. I do not know whether the hon. member for York West is particularly unpopular or whether his constituents know that he will do nothing to deal with the inflationary situation. As far as I am concerned, only six people have talked to me about this football question; five of them were opposed to it and the other one changed his mind. But I have had all kinds of letters, telephone calls and personal representations on the subject of inflation because people are genuinely concerned about it.

The minister went on to say that this football issue "epitomizes the central dilemmas of our 100 years as a nation". Then he added that it was "symbolic of our history". I shall not be as polite, perhaps, as some of my hon. friends. I have been trying to think of a term which would be parliamentary and which I could use. The only word I can come up with is "balderdash". I can think, of course, of many that are stronger, but I cannot use them within the confines of this august chamber.

I find it extraordinary that we should be asked to approve legislation which proposes, among other things, a two-year jail sentence, plus a fine, for those who set up an enterprise employing persons other than Canadians in order to provide employment or pleasure. I note, sadly, in this connection that a man may still kill two young people—as recently happened—and incur no greater penalty than a fine of $125. But this is typical of the government and of the minister's department.

One short aside, if I may. About a year and a half ago a meeting was held in the west block, I think it was. It was referred to as Sport Canada. The meeting was attended by some hockey stars, and photographers were present. I thought my son might get a chuckle out of seeing his dad with Jean Beliveau and Johnny Ferguson. Certainly he would be far more impressed in those circumstances than he would by seeing me with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Lalonde. The photographers took some pictures, and when the meeting was over I asked whether I could have a copy of some of them. They sent me the proofs and I said, "Yes, that's the one I should like to have." That was a year and a half ago and I still do not have the picture. I think this is typical of the hon. gentleman's department—overkill in one area and complete loss in another.

An election is coming. The Minister of National Health and Welfare felt that this was the way to placate the west. I suggest he is not at all interested in the Canadian Football League or in any other sport for that matter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been wrong before, he will be wrong again and he is wrong now. He is wrong to believe that Canadians will be fooled by this type of nonsense.

In Canada today we have strikes, transportation problems and inflation. What an opportunity for fine leadership. What a time for a leader to take firm hold and deal with these problems. Good leadership thrives on adversity. We are floundering. There is no way that I, for one, and my colleagues with me, will submit to the threats of this minister. He accuses us of holding up legislation by dealing with this bill at length. As I said, it is the government that sets up the schedule, so let it withdraw the bill. The CNR bill was discussed for three years. Let the government bring in new legislation to deal with problems in Canada.

I am not fond of sitting in an almost empty House on a Friday afternoon when I could be on the way to my riding. I do not notice the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin) making any contribution, but if he wants to speak I will give him the floor. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I could be on the way to my riding where I would at least be providing some kind of useful service to my constituents. But I resent strongly the threat of the minister, and I will sit here as long as necessary until some good legislation comes forward from the government or they finally have the good grace to ask for the judgment of the Canadian people.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much time left, so I shall not go into many of the things that I wanted to say. It is interesting to sit here and watch hon. members, especially the minister, across the way with their long faces and none of them speaking. This is because they realize the stupidity of the bill. They realize they have lost the confidence of the people of the country, not only on other matters but on this bill as well. The people of this country do not support the intention of the government to keep the Toronto Northmen out of Canada, and certainly the people of British Columbia do not support this bill.

After what I have said, Mr. Speaker, it is pretty obvious that I will be voting against the bill, but I also want to inform the minister that in committee I intend to move approximately 50 amendments to his bill. A lot of them will be ridiculous amendments, but they will be moved in order to delay the bill. Then when we come back to the House for third reading, I will propose the same amendments and the hon. member sitting next to me will second them. I shall speak for the full allotted time on every one because I think we have to show the people of this country the stupidity of what this government is doing. If hon. members opposite ask me why don't I vote, I say I am not prepared to vote because the minister has twisted the arms of all his members across the way, insisting that they vote along with him and not in the way their conscience dictates.

The minister talks about the number of Canadians and the number of Americans who should be on a team. What does he know about it, Mr. Speaker? I think I know a little about it because I played football in my younger days. I just cannot understand why he says there should be 15 Americans and 70 Canadians. That is none of the government's business. If he is going to make that provision, perhaps we should amend the bill to provide that there must be six women playing for every team because we have to be fair to the women of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: Perhaps we should amend the bill to provide that there be two or three men over 45 on every team so as to be fair to the older people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: Football players in Canada cannot collect unemployment insurance. Perhaps we should amend the bill to provide that they can collect unemployment insurance. Perhaps they should also be allowed workmen's compensation. We could amend this bill in many ways.

I think the best thing we could do with the bill is to have the minister put it back on the shelf and wait until after the election. Then we will find out what will happen from the people of this country. The minister is going to ban an American team from playing in Canada. Is he going to ban the team of Simon Fraser University, one of the best college teams in Canada, from playing football in the United States? The people of British Columbia would like to know, because they are quite happy when American teams come into British Columbia to play college games. They play American rules, and we happen to like them as well.

We also happen to like our hockey in British Columbia. We have two professional teams, one in the world league and one in the national league. We get the largest crowds of any team in the World Hockey League. We get large crowds to watch the Vancouver Blazers play. The Canucks are sold out for every game—15,540 people and 2,000 standees. It has been that way since the team came there. We support two teams. The funny thing about it is that the National Hockey League team is owned by Americans. Is the minister complaining about that? No, he does not think that is so bad. The World Hockey League team is owned by a Canadian, as I think are most or all of the World Hockey League teams in Canada. The teams in Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto and Vancouver are owned by Canadians. What has the government done for the World Hockey League? Nothing at all.

In the National Hockey League Stanley Cup finals there are four American teams. They will be competing tomorrow night, next week, and so on. The CBC will be covering every game. The Toronto Toros are playing in the World Hockey League. They have made the semi-finals of the championships, yet the CBC will not televise one of their games across Canada. People in Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver deserve to see a Canadian team in the World Hockey League.

The hon. member for York West is mumbling and grumbling across the way. I can understand how sad he is at having to support the government's bill. Living in the area he does, he knows damned well what he will get when he goes back to his riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in another seat speaking to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Marchand) when the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) wondered whether the hon. member for Ottawa Centre wished to contribute to this debate. Indeed I do, but in a positive way, as I have in a positive way outside the House. Additionally, I would hope to promote the amateur side of sport, to increase participation—

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege and there are two members rising on points of order. However, the Chair brings to the attention of hon. members that it is four o'clock and time to go to private members' business.

[Translation]

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business, as listed in the order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

[English]

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions and I think you will find there is agreement to discuss private members' public bill C-112 standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and that private members' notice of motion No. 6 standing in the name of the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) will be discussed on Monday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I ask the acting government House leader either to confirm or deny that we will be proceeding with this legislation on Monday, the football legislation?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, it had been hoped that the debate on this particular bill would be concluded today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: We will tentatively continue, and hopefully conclude, the debate on Monday, with the possibility of a further vote at a later stage. Following that we will proceed with the Export and Import Permits Act for which there has been some urgent demand on behalf of the egg producers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BROADCASTING ACT

ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-112, to amend the Broadcasting Act (advertising on children's programs), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the record could show that the seconder of the bill is the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the distinguished chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: At the moment the record shows otherwise, but this can be done with consent. With the consent of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the House, the seconder of the motion will be the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1600)

Mr. McGrath: Surely this is one private member's bill whose time has come. This is the last vestige of child exploitation in Canada. To support that contention I will just very briefly fill the House in on the background to this bill. It was first introduced in the House on April 7, 1971. I might say that since the bill received first reading, considerable progress has been made in this area of long overdue reform. For example, following the introduction of the bill on October 13, 1971, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters drew up a voluntary code of conduct for advertising directed to children, and following the drafting and publication of that code the bill received second reading. At that time, I am sad to say, it was talked out. However, the germ of the idea had been planted and the box had been opened.

Following second reading of the bill, the Quebec government, in November 1972 under the limited jurisdiction it has in this area, brought in regulations under one of its existing statutes making it all but impossible for advertisers within the province of Quebec to direct their sale messages to children or, indeed, to produce commercials directed to children. That certainly was one of the major steps forward in this direction.

The bill was again introduced in the form of Bill C-22 at the next session on January 15, 1973. To give you an idea of how much progress had been made up to that time, as a result of the initial introduction of the bill and the coming into play of public opinion and various groups that sprang up across the country in support of the bill, the House agreed to a compromise at that time whereby the bill would be withdrawn in exchange for which the subject matter of the bill would be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

The committee met, and after nine sittings and hearing 32 witnesses under the distinguished chairmanship of the hon. member for Cochrane it made its report to parliament in the form of five recommendations, which I might say are very interesting and with a very worth-while preamble. I will not go into that preamble but I think the record should show what the committee recommended in its report. The recommendations are as follows:

1. that the CRTC pass regulations which would provide that advertising must not be directed exclusively to children;

2. that the CRTC limit further the number of commercial minutes per hour during children's programs;

3. that the CRTC require the deletion of advertising directed to children from American programming distributed on the Canadian cable systems;

4. that the Income Tax Act be amended so that advertising directed at Canada on foreign television stations would no longer be considered deductible for income tax purposes;

5. that ways and means be found to expand the Canadian program production industry with particular emphasis on the creation of children's programs.

We should determine exactly what is the position of this bill in relation to those five recommendations put forward by the committee. For example, during the course of the committee hearings the CAB and the CAAB announced that they would bring in further amendments in order to strengthen the broadcast code for advertising directed to children to take effect October 1, 1973, and still further amendments were to be brought in to be effective January 1, 1974. At the same time as the committee was meeting, the Consumers' Association of Canada, at its annual meeting in June 1973, in Ottawa passed a resolution urging the government to ban all advertising on television directed toward children.

The report of the committee containing the five recommendations was concurred in unanimously by the House of Commons on July 24, 1973. At that time the CRTC took some time to consider the impact of the concurrence in the committee's report by the House and did not issue its statement until October 16, 1973. At that time the CRTC responded by saying it would enforce the voluntary code but it would not subscribe to the principal recommendation of the committee, namely, the implementation of a regulation. It is rather interesting to see what the committee said about the voluntary code and its effectiveness. It said:

> The Canadian Association of Broadcasters and the Canadian Advertising Advisory Board presented a good case for self-regulation through the new broadcast code. However, it is the opinion of your committee that any code, regardless how excellent in itself, would need a much tougher enforcement system.

Therein lies the argument in support of putting this bill forward today. Mr. Juneau at that time was quoted as saying, and I read from the Toronto Star of October 17, 1973:

> But CRTC chairman Pierre Juneau said in an interview that parliament will have to pass a law if it wants the commission to ban advertising aimed at children.
> Just endorsing a committee report is not enough.

It is in compliance with that wish of the CRTC contained in that interview, notwithstanding the procedural or constitutional argument that is involved here and which I hope will be advanced by other members, that the bill has been reintroduced in a slightly revised form, with a new clause (1) added to cover any difficulties with the present law, because it has been argued with a great deal of force that the present broadcasting law does not in fact, in section 16, give the CRTC the power to implement this kind of regulation to regulate broadcasting in Canada. The bill in its present form would certainly meet the requirement put forward by the chairman of the CRTC in his statement of October last.

As I say, considerable progress has been made and I think it is worthy of noting for the record, but the fact is that parliament was frustrated in its efforts to pass a directive in the form of a recommendation to a body that had been given broad delegative authority by this House. I would refer to what Your Honour said in this House on October 24 last year, as reported at page 7174 of Hansard, in ruling on a petition I had presented to the House the previous day. I adopted this infrequently used parliamentary device to bring to the attention of the House, through Your Honour, the fact that recommendations of the House were not being implemented by a body which derives its authority from this House. Your Honour stated:

> I appreciate the position of the hon. member and his suggestion that this is a matter which ought to be considered either by the House or by a committee of the House. I respectfully suggest to him, however, that the procedure which should be adopted should be some procedure other than a petititon.

I sought the advice of the learned counsel of the House and others, and came to the conclusion that perhaps the only avenue left open to me was to proceed again with the introduction of this bill in revised form, in the hope that the House would be disposed, having already passed judgment on the bill in the previous session, to adopt it, get on with second reading, into committee of the whole—since we have been through the standing committee stage—and give it third reading so it could go on to the other place.

I said at the commencement of my remarks that I feel that surely here is one private members' bill whose time has come. To bring the situation up to date, further progress can still be reported. The CRTC, in its decision of March 31, 1974, concerning the application for licence renewal of the CBC, laid down certain conditions in respect of renewal of the CBC licence. Commercials were to be eliminated from children's television programs by the end of 1974. I say that is commendable.

The CRTC has gone a long way toward meeting the wishes of this House, and indeed in meeting the wishes of the majority of the people in this country. Gallup conducted a poll in Canada early this year, in January, which was released last month. That nationwide survey was a major survey coast to coast. There were 1,037 adults included, which in the opinion of Gallup constitutes a major poll. The poll showed that 57 per cent of the people of Canada favoured a direct ban on all children's advertising in Canada.

It is very interesting to note the figures in this regard in the various areas of Canada. The Atlantic provinces favoured the plan by a margin of 65 per cent. The percentage in the province of Quebec was 55 and the Ontario percentage was 59. In the prairie provinces the percentage went down to 49, and went back up to 64 in British Columbia. So there is no question that the people of Canada obviously want the last vestige of child exploitation eliminated from Canadian society.

I do not know the position of the House in respect of this bill. Certainly it must be without precedent to have the CRTC ignore a bill which has been disposed of by the House and which has had its subject matter referred to the committee—because I agree to withdraw the bill subject to its subject matter being referred to the committee—a subject matter in respect of which the committee carried on an exhaustive examination of over 30 witnesses and then laboured to bring forward what I think is a fairly exact report, notwithstanding some of the criticisms, in which the House unanimously concurred.

This is the situation at the present time. Having consulted learned counsel of the House, in accordance with your ruling on my petition last year, Mr. Speaker, I came to the conclusion that the only opportunity open to me was to bring forward this bill and take advantage of the situation to state for the record the progress that has been made in this matter. I shall not take up the time of the House by going through the evidence, because it is here. It is well documented in these nine reports of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

In addition to that, on two previous occasions this bill was presented to the House, when all the evidence and statistical data was brought forward. It is all a matter of record. We have made considerable progress in Canada, but the fact is that we feel we are right in respect of this matter and that the people of Canada support us. Surely in this regard we should not to have to ask for half a loaf, because if we are right that the situation is reprehensible and unacceptable to the people of Canada, then we can only settle for this bill in its totality. That is the position I put forward to this honourable House at this time.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. It is a pleasure for me to second the bill of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) because I think he had no other choice but to bring it back into the House. He should not have had to bring it back. We should not have to discuss it today, because the House has already dealt with it. The committee dealt with it at length. Many witnesses were called before the committee and the committee came up with a report which I think was a satisfactory one because it reached a conclusion that satisfied the majority of the people in this House. That became obvious when we asked for concurrence and the House unanimously gave concurrence.

It would seem to me that once this happens, a corporation of the Crown has a very grave obligation to follow the recommendation contained in a committee report which has been concurred in. I note that in October the chairman of the CRTC stated that parliament would have to pass a law if it wanted the commission to ban children's advertising. I believe the chairman of the CRTC stated that mere endorsement of the committee report is not sufficient. When the CRTC brought out its regulation in respect of the CBC a couple of weeks ago and spoke about not renewing the licence unless certain things came about, it seems to me the commission did not wait for a law of parliament to do that.

In addition, although legally speaking a corporation such as the CRTC does not have to go along with the committee report, it would seem that once concurrence has taken place in the House of Commons and 264 representatives of the people of Canada have endorsed the committee's report, a Crown corporation that would fly in the face of that kind of representation is taking an awful chance indeed if it refuses to comply with the wishes of parliament.

The question before us today, in my view, basically is not the bill itself. The committee recommended that a regulation be passed by the CRTC in order to prevent advertising aimed directly at children. This is essentially what the committee said. So the question is not on the pros and cons of advertising for children but, in my view, whether or not this parliament has the kind of authority that I always thought it had, which most of us feel it has and which the people of Canada expect it to have. Is it the right of a corporation of the Crown to unilaterally decide, against the advice of this House, to do such-and-such or not to do such-and-such? It seems to me this problem is far deeper than the question of children's advertising and that it goes to the very root of the authority in this country, an authority which is being removed from parliament as a result of the power held within Crown corporations.

I think that is the question to which we should be addressing ourselves in the weeks ahead, because certainly if the CRTC can ignore this House on a matter such as this and simply say it will not pass a regulation which the House says it wants passed, then it would seem that the Crown corporations can do much more which is against the will of the people of Canada. That, to me, is the essential situation with which we are faced. This is the reason I feel it is my duty to endorse this bill proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. It is my duty to say a few words on this subject today because I feel that this House must accept the bill in order to let the CRTC know they are not running the show in Canada but that the parliament of Canada has the last word.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) in commending our colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), for bringing this bill before us today. Although we are dealing with a technical question, namely, how to get our will translated into practice, perhaps it is appropriate to take at least a few seconds to say that we in this party thoroughly support the substance of the proposition which is that commercial advertising should be eliminated completely from television programs directed at children. As the two previous speakers have made clear, this point has been well established and well accepted by this House and by organizations that are interested in the welfare of our children. On that point I suggest there is no serious argument. Commercial advertising should be banned completely from television programs directed at children.

However, we come to the question as to how we are going to achieve this, and I have to say that in listening to my friend the hon. member for Cochrane I found myself in a strange position. Let me digress for a moment and say that I read with a good deal of interest again today the ruling Your Honour made on October 24, 1973, with respect to the petition which the hon. member for St. John's East had tabled. In that ruling Your Honour pointed out that the House had not been able to effect its will by approving certain recommendations. In other words, that course was not effective. But you also made the point that because parliament had delegated control of broadcasting to the CRTC, we could not get around the statute that had been passed and give them direction on the basis of a petition.

Then, in what I thought was a sympathetic reference on Your Honour's part, you suggested that the hon. member for St. John's East should find some other procedure. Well, I do not know what learned counsel my friend consulted, but it would seem to me that any counsel, learned or otherwise, would come up with the obvious answer that if recommendations of the committee do not do the trick, if a petition cannot be approved, then there is no other course but to bring in a bill amending the statute that gives the CRTC its authority. Therefore, I support what the hon. member for St. John's East has done, and I shall try to keep my remarks brief in the hope that we can pass this bill within the hour.

When I said a moment ago that I find myself in a strange position, especially after listening to the hon. member for Cochrane, I had in mind that about three days ago I introduced in the House a bill to abolish the Senate. I did not get along very well with it: it was talked out. That has happened before. I have been at it for 30 years. However, I have almost succeeded; there are only two or three of Their Honours who were here when I came left in the other place. But here I am having to stand and say to the hon. member for Cochrane, I, the proponent of the abolition of the Senate: but the place exists—and since the CRTC operates under a statute that was passed not just by the House of Commons but by parliament, in other words, all three branches of this institution, we cannot, as one branch of the institution, say to that commission that it must do what we say. The authority we gave the CRTC by a statute of parliament can only be altered by amending that statute.

I do not like it that way; I would rather that my bill to abolish the Senate were carried and that the will of the elected members would prevail. But at the moment we still have this antiquated system under which we bow to the opinion of non-elected persons, and since that is the situation I think Your Honour was right in your ruling that the only way we can give a direction to a commission established by parliament is for parliament to amend the statute that gave that commission its authority.

Therefore, I believe that the hon. member for St. John's East is doing the right thing. Perhaps some day we will get rid of the Senate and we will be able to do this in some other way; but at the moment we have to do it this way. Therefore, I commend the hon. member for bringing in this bill, I commend him for making it so brief and so much to the point, and I commend him for drawing it up in a way that even meets the wishes of the chairman of the CRTC. I hope, therefore, that we will pass this bill and thus do our part in making it possible for parliament as a whole to say what we want done. When parliament as a whole has said it, it will be done.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I will not pursue the subject taken up by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but would possibly refer to Bill C-112 itself and make an effort to see whether or not the feeling of the House is such at the moment that an alternative concept or arrangement might be satisfactory to all members present.

As the explanatory note in the bill points out, children are a captive audience. That is the evil that we are attempting to do away with, in the sense that as a captive audience they are subjected on some occasions to the abuse of a very unsatisfactory type of advertising. Alternatively, again as the explanatory note points out, the content of many of these programs directed at children is quite good, quite commendable, and it should be pointed out in all realism that the cost of producing those programs is very often borne by the revenues earned from advertising.

So we have a black and white situation in that we can call for the complete abolition of advertising and see some substantial damage done to the type of program production we would like to have, or we can look to a middle ground which over the course of six months or a year or so might prove to be more satisfactory and, I would suggest, would be worthy of our consideration.

The CRTC, in its public announcement on television advertising to children dated October 16, 1973, expressly indicated that the commission would bring its full influence to bear on broadcasters to ensure compliance with the provisions of the broadcast code on children's advertising. It was indicated that "all broadcasters would be required to provide the commission with specific individual commitments that they would abide by the code". However, it appears to be the view of members, some of whom have already spoken this afternoon, that even though the self-regulatory procedures of the broadcast code have proven somewhat effective, further assurances are required to ensure continuous, strict adherence to the code through legally enforceable procedures. The broadcasting committee, of which I had the honour and pleasure to be a member, when it presented its report in July, 1973, indicated that regardless of how excellent the procedures of self-regulation through the broadcast code might be, we need a tougher enforcement system. That was the essence of what we proposed to the House.

I am now informed by the commission that in conformity with its previous undertaking to ensure the effectiveness of the code and to meet the agreed objectives of all members of the House, the commission would undertake, first, to notify all holders of broadcasting licences in Canada and all applicants that adherence to the provisions of the broadcast code on children's advertising would be made a specific condition of each broadcasting licence. Second, the commission would require that a representative of the CRTC should formally represent the commission at all deliberations of the children's sections of the advertising standards council which have the responsibility for pre-clearing all children's commercials. In this way the commission would participate in and have full knowledge of all advertising that was being approved for children for broadcasting in Canada.

If I may summarize, broadcasters would be warned that the very existence of their licence and the possibility of its renewal depends upon their co-operation with the CRTC in clearing up abuses in advertising. The CRTC, as mentioned, has undertaken to sit in on the meetings of the council to assure this House and the public that only the most acceptable form of advertising will be permitted.

I realize that many people are of the opinion we should do away altogether with advertising directed toward children. I suggest to the House and to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to whom I pay a personal compliment for pursuing this subject for so long, that an alternative to his private member's bill might well be the regulations to which I have just referred which emanate from the CRTC. Mr. Speaker, as other members wish to speak I will cede the floor to them.

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as the undertakings of the commission, as repeated by the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker), are most important, and as I have no copy of the statement in which the undertakings are included, I wonder if it would be possible to ask the hon. member to repeat again the particular commitments of the CRTC as outlined in his speech.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think there is any objection to that, although I remind hon. members that all that was said by the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) will appear in Hansard on Monday. However, if hon. members wish to hear the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore repeat part of his speech a second time, I have no objection. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I gather the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) rises on the question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, to facilitate our proceedings I wonder if I could direct a question to the hon. member before he complies with the worth-while suggestion of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker). I suggest, however, that it is not necessary to repeat the undertakings as they will appear in the record.

I ask the hon. member if the position he has put forward represents the position of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) who is the only one with authority to speak for the CRTC in this House. I think it is important to establish that. Secondly, as the hon. member referred to the fact that the CRTC would make adherence to the code a condition for obtaining a licence, and that it would insist on being represented on the committee of the advertising standards council, would the commission be prepared to help that council which I understand is underfinanced, overworked and understaffed? In other words, the council does not receive the kind of financial support it should receive from member companies and member stations.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, answering the hon. member for St. John's East, I suggest that the CRTC, like any other government agency, answers to the minister. In that sense I suggest the hon. member ought to draw his own conclusions as to whether this constitutes an undertaking. In ordinary circumstances he would draw the obvious conclusion that if the CRTC makes such an undertaking, it would do so with the approval and understanding of the minister. With respect to financial support, I would have to disappoint the hon. member and suggest it is not relevant to the subject before us. I could not answer that question.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the suggestion put forward by the hon. member. I understand he was speaking for the minister. If that is the case, to save the House the embarrassment of having to talk out this bill, and as we have made some progress, I am prepared, with the consent of the House, to withdraw the bill and to see exactly how this new enforcement of the voluntary code will work over the next year. Perhaps we will make our decision one year from now.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) may I say that I understand the hon. member for St. John's East suggests that his bill might be withdrawn. Perhaps before inquiring whether there is consent for this we might allow the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, who appears to have words of wisdom for the benefit and guidance of hon. members, to speak. Is the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I too would have liked to say a few words on the bill, but I certainly agree with its proposed withdrawal, or passage, not knowing the exact terms of the agreement. However, I would like to have some comments recorded in Hansard.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I gather there is no translation. The hon. member is claiming the same right that the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes claims. He does not object to the bill being withdrawn, subject to his right to say a few words.

[Translation]

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I followed with much interest the speeches delivered this afternoon in the course of this debate. Personally, I am against advertising aimed at children. I also listened with considerable interest to the statistics given by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) with regard to Gallup polls. I have also had the opportunity of conducting my own miniature Gallup poll in my riding through a parliamentary report, and my statistics are even more eloquent than those we have heard. Out of 1,500 replies from my constituents, almost 99 per cent were opposed to that type of advertising.

I feel the proposal of the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) made on behalf of CRTC shows real progress. However, I must say that this is not quite enough. I would be willing to agree to the withdrawal of the bill, but I feel we should go further. In my opinion, the conditions for the renewal of the licence recently granted to the CBC by the CRTC required that the CBC discontinue all advertising meant for children at the end of 1974. I really think that we should follow such direction.

As a temporary solution, I am ready to agree that the CRTC should closely administer the voluntary code already mentioned by the hon. member for St. John's East but I do not intend to give you again an historical account of the debate as the hon. member did.

In short, this is not only a problem of advertising for children but is also related to the production of children's programs. But there are other means to ensure the production of first-rate programs. I know that all members are aware of that problem and that it is a problem which is of concern to us all. The fact remains that with its own resources the CBC can produce first-rate children's programs. We also have in Canada the National Film Board as well as the Canadian Film Development Corporation. It might be time that the latter, which has already done a lot for film development in Canada, paid more attention to the development of good TV programs for children.

Moreover, provincial Departments of Education, like some educational TV organizations in the U.S., should allocate more funds for the development of quality children's programs.

Mr. Speaker, I think in principle that we should see to it in the future to prohibit all advertising directed at children under 13, as suggested in the bill put forward by the hon. member. As a temporary measure, it might be possible to instruct the CRTC to carefully review the present system with a view to abolishing eventually all advertising, while asking other concerned organizations that come under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada to allocate a larger share of their financial resources for the development of children's programs of high quality.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, will be very brief. I agree with the suggestion to withdraw this bill in order that it is not talked out and we can make some progress on the matter. I commend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I do not often find myself agreeing with him, but in this matter I certainly do. I think the intent of his bill is very good.

There are several problems related to the situation were this bill accepted and passed today that I wish to mention. While I very much approve of the intent of the bill and hope that its withdrawal and the action pledged by the CRTC will improve the situation, I want to express my own very real concern. United States penetration of a great part of the Canadian market will remain a very real problem unless we find a way to fight it. In areas of Canada where U.S. television is received, children will still be able to watch programs which contain the kind of advertising we are trying to eliminate.

There is also the great danger that if a means is not found by the government or the CRTC to develop Canadian programming for children, such as animation, cartoons and other types of children's films in the private sector, it will place in jeopardy Canadian programming for Canadian youngsters. If advertising is simply removed from children's programming in Canada and some sort of pressure is not put on private broadcasters to continue children's programming, there will be not only the danger of the removal of programming for children but the aspect of driving our youngsters to watching American programming with the advertising it contains.

These were simply the points I wanted to make. I hope the government and the CRTC will be cognizant of these very real problems. We need a Canadian industry producing films for children. We need children's programming and good Canadian programming in the private broadcasting sector of Canada. One of the recommendations in the committee's report—and I am sure the hon. member for St. John's East agrees with it—is that action must be taken by the government to remove the advertising deductibility from tax for Canadian companies advertising in Canada through American channels.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say that the two commitments made by the CRTC, or its chairman, do not cover a situation which seems to be covered in the bill introduced by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

I congratulate him and I want to say to him that he has my full support, because I have been concerned about this problem for quite a while. I was concerned about it even before he introduced his bill in this House. I think he deserves credit for publicly bringing that question to the attention of this House.

The two CRTC commitments apply specifically to advertising directed at children on children's programs, but there are identification periods for local stations between programs, commonly called station breaks, and private stations use that period for advertising that is obviously not intended for children, but that children watch nevertheless. That has been brought to my attention, and I found out myself that some television stations used that period on children's programs to advertise pornographic movies, for example.

The people in the area I represent are deeply concerned about that, all the more as they have no local television station. They have no local production so they depend on a satellite station in the province of Quebec and cannot therefore intervene effectively.

A mother sent me a letter on December 7 along with a copy of an article she sent to a local newspaper about the station using identification periods to advertise pornographic movies for local cinemas.

I immediately brought that serious problem to the attention of the CRTC and it took a while before I received a reply but, practically speaking, Mr. J. H. McKernin, regional representative for the Atlantic provinces wrote the following to CJBR-TV station manager, Mr. Walter Ruest:

> You will find herewith copy of a letter from the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria, Mr. Eymard Corbin,—
>
> The complaint can be divided specifically into three components:
>
> They object to the promotion of violence and pornographic movies;
>
> They object to the showing of such advertisements at a time when children are normally watching TV;
>
> They object to "practically any advertisement directed to young children".
> These are questions which, as you know, are of great concern to the Commission. We feel that this is a serious complaint and would you please send us your comments as well as a copy of your answer to Mr. Corbin.

They complied with this request on February 12 and, for all practical purposes, made apologies. They claimed they had lost the recording tape of this flash and that they generally keep a close watch over all material promoting pornographic movies.

● (1650)

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the situation is not improving. On April 4, a Madawaska newspaperman from Le Madawaska wrote to me about this situation which, instead of improving, is deteriorating. He concluded his letter with the following remark, and I quote:

> By the way, please do not believe that I am a scrupulous man of the colonial era; quite the contrary, I am a 34 year old father who feels that it is ridiculous and inconceivable that someone should pollute the TV screen before the eyes of our young children.

The problem which concerns me most, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that advertising flashes before and after the station identification does not appear to be covered by the promise made today to the House by the CRTC. I therefore strongly urge the CRTC to consider also the question of advertising between programs for children.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would simply join my colleagues in saying that I agree that this bill be withdrawn. For quite some time, I have been concerned with this important matter because of the many representations I have received on the subject. I would simply say that it is high time that a stop be put to the creation of needs in the minds of youth, especially of young children. If those in the know would watch commercial advertising on television—and I think that the hon. member who brought forward the bill is in a better position than we to know—they will find, very often with great sorrow, how this amazingly intelligent publicity is aimed directly at children. We should consider all the unhappiness that can be brought in a great number of homes. I refer in particular to large families in dire need of money, where the children ask incessantly for everything they see on television. It is therefore high time and most healthy that such a bill be implemented as soon as possible. So I am pleased to agree that the bill be withdrawn and I join with the hon. members who preceded me.

FLOODS

SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the widespread flooding and immense damage to private property by flood waters in the province of Saskatchewan, particularly to such communities as Moose Jaw, Regina and Lumsden, and as the province of Saskatchewan has declared the Moose Jaw area as being in a state of emergency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House call upon the federal government to provide financial assistance to those detrimentally affected by the flood conditions.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have a similar motion with respect to the city of Moose Jaw which suffered millions of dollars of damage over the weekend.

Mr. Speaker: There is no difficulty in the hon. member putting the motion now, and I recognize him for that purpose.

MOOSE JAW, SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the tragic flood conditions in the city of Moose Jaw during the past few days, which have caused losses amounting to several million dollars, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the government give consideration to declaring the Moose Jaw area a national disaster area.

Mr. Speaker: Again I remind the House that this is a motion under Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

AGRICULTURE

SUPPLY AND PRICE OF FERTILIZER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a most urgent matter.

In view of the serious problem of chemical fertilizer supply, as well as the uncertainty regarding the prices farmers will have to pay as sowing time is approaching, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House inquire about the causes of the price increase in this area, and appoint experts to ascertain whether there is a cause-effect relationship between the use of chemical fertilizers and the increasing number of cancer cases and whether Canada would benefit more from a more biological and less chemical type of farm industry?

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

HEALTH

TRANSPORT OF NEEDED MEDICINES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, seconded by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel):

That in view of the disruption caused to the supply of needed medicines across Canada, particularly to St. John's, Newfoundland, the government consider the use of military aircraft to alleviate the immediate delivery problem.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires the unanimous consent under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be consent. The motion will be put. There is a suggestion that an hon. member said no. I will inquire again. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent.

AIR CANADA

WITHDRAWAL OF CERTAIN SERVICES TO NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Air Canada officials have committed and redirected aircraft regularly destined in and out of Newfoundland on April 21, 22 and 23 to other parts of Canada even though the firemen were out for only 24 hours and returned to work on April 21. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That in the opinion of this House the Ministry of Transport should immediately reinstate these flights and that action be taken to correct this discrimination by Air Canada officials against some sectors of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM "MIDDLESEX" TO "MIDDLESEX-LONDON-LAMBTON"

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-281, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Frank: The purpose of this bill is to change the name of the constituency I represent to a name that will more fully recognize the geographic area it encompasses.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY RELOCATION AND CROSSING ACT

PROVISION FOR PLANNING, ACQUISITION OF LAND, GRANTS, GRADE CROSSING ASSISTANCE

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-27, to facilitate the relocation of railway lines or rerouting of railway traffic in urban areas and to provide financial assistance for work done for the protection, safety and convenience of the public at railway crossings.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

PROVISION OF CANADIAN ARMS AND EQUIPMENT TO PORTUGAL

Question No. 8—Mr. Rowland:

What steps has Canada taken in order to ensure that Canadian arms and equipment which may have been provided to Portugal through our mutual association in NATO are not being employed against independence movements in Portuguese colonial territories?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As has repeatedly been stated, we have sold no arms to Portugal since 1963. Even sales of non-offensive equipment (such as spare parts and engines for transport aircraft) have been made only on the assurances from Portugal that such equipment will not be used outside the NATO defense area. If evidence were to be produced that Canadian equipment over whose export the Canadian government had control was being used by the Portuguese in Africa, this government would prevent further exports.

AIRCRAFT ACCIDENTS

Question No. 150—Mr. Forrestall:

For each of the past five years, what has been (a) the number of air accidents involving Canadian aircraft (b) the number of such accidents that involved fatal injuries (c) the number of fatalities?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The following are the statistics requested with respect to accidents to Canadian registered aircraft.

Year	(a) Total Accidents	(b) Fatal Accidents	(c) Fatalities
1969	503	62	134
1970	531	54	220
1971	544	75	157
1972	615	84	160

UIC—CLAIMS AND BENEFITS PAID

Question No. 336—Mr. Reynolds:

1. How many claims were made against UIC in (a) 1970 (b) 1972?

2. What were the total amounts paid on these claims?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):

1. Year		Initial Claims	Renewal Claims	Total
(a) 1970		1,678,969	581,877	2,260,846
(b) 1972	Old Act	241	71,400	71,641
	New Act	2,051,387	346,890	2,398,277
	Total	2,051,628	418,290	2,469,918

2. Year		Gross Benefit Paid $

FIRE AT KITWANCOOL INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 403—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development been advised of the death, since the beginning of 1974, of four children at the Kitwancool Indian Reserve which deaths resulted from a fire?

2. Is it a fact that fire hoses were not provided for the residents of Kitwancool but that a water system and fire hydrants were provided?

3. Is the minister aware that the only fire hose available was a discarded forest service fire hose which contained at least two holes and which the people at Kitwancool attempted to use to quell the fire in question?

4. Was a letter sent from the Regional Offices of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development located in Vancouver to Indian Agency Offices in British Columbia at the end of November, 1973 stating that funds were available for the replacement of worn out and broken fire prevention and firefighting equipment and for the purposes of training firefighters and setting up fire prevention programs on Indian Reserves and, if so (a) were the contents of that letter drawn to the attention of the Kitwancools (b) were any steps taken by the department, or any section thereof, to take advantage of the offer contained in the said letter to provide fire hoses for the Kitwancools to go with the fire hydrants?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. The water system was installed in 1954 and it was equipped with fire hose.

3. The firefighting equipment in the village at the time of the fire consisted of dry chemical (ABC) extinguishers, 100 foot hose with nozzle, axes and shovels. The hose was too short to reach from the nearest standpipe and it was also defective.

4. (a) A letter from the regional office was sent to the districts and the bands in November 1973, advising of the availability of funds to replace unserviceable or worn out equipment. (b) No action was taken by the band but the district office ordered 500 feet of hose, nozzles and adaptors. Until received, 200 feet of hose had been borrowed from another location, but it arrived on the reserve on February 27.

AIR CANADA—LOCKHEED L1011 JETLINER SERVICE

Question No. 415—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Since the inception of the Lockheed L1011 jetliner service by Air Canada, what is the record of on time arrival and departure performance in percentage figures?

2. Is this percentage satisfactory to Air Canada?

3. If the record of on time performance is below satisfactory standards, what are the major reasons for failure to achieve an acceptable standard?

4. Is the mechanical and operating performance of the Lockheed L1011 satisfactory to Air Canada management and is the performance consistent with the predictions of the manufacturer?

5. (a) How many L1011s does Air Canada presently own (b) what was the purchase price (c) how many are on order and still to be delivered?

6. (a) What are the present routes designated for the L1011 (b) are additional routes being proposed and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1.

1973	Per cent Departures Within five Minutes	Per cent Arrivals Within five Minutes
March	58.5	52.9
April	47.2	48.6
May	25.7	32.4
June	11.0	15.4
July	10.7	22.0
August	12.6	26.7
September	32.3	50.4
October	52.1	59.2
November	42.2	45.3
December	26.7	30.4
1974
January	27.9	30.9
February	47.0	57.0

2 and 3. These percentages are below the system average for all types of aircraft now in Air Canada's fleet. However, this is not unusual for a new aircraft type. As with other new aircraft types introduced in the past, level of performance will improve as the airline gains operating experience with the L 1011.

4. Mechanical performance has reached 95 per cent mechanical dispatch reliability. This level of performance is comparable with that of the two main U.S. carriers using this equipment. Performance goals set by the manufacturer for the first three years of operation were overly optimistic and have not been reached by any wide-bodied fleet to date. However, mechanical performance is consistently improving and should achieve 97.5 per cent dispatch reliability in the second year of operation.

5. (a) Nine L 1011s are now owned. In addition, two aircraft are leased for six months (May through October) each year for 15 years (1973-through 1987). (b) $17.65 million per aircraft. (c) Ten L 1011s were ordered, with one aircraft yet to be delivered.

6. (a) Montreal-Toronto-Vancouver; Toronto-Calgary-Vancouver; Toronto-Edmonton-Vancouver; Toronto-Winnipeg; Toronto-Halifax-Torbay (summer schedule); Toronto-Tampa (winter schedule); Montreal-Toronto-Los Angeles; (b) Montreal-Halifax.

AVAILABILITY OF FEED GRAIN CARS

Question No. 435—Mr. Howie:

How many railway cars capable of transporting feed grains were available in Canada on February 1 in each year 1972, 1973 and 1974?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): CNR and CP Rail inventory of six-foot door boxcars, which are used in feed grain and other commodity service, was 54,399, 48,967 and 45,320 as of February 1 of years 1972, 1973 and 1974. Over the past three years a substantial amount of the six-foot door cars were converted to wider door sizes, to offer more flexible service with respect to other commodities. CNR and CP Rail inventory of covered hopper cars, which are capable of transporting feed grains and are assigned to carry fertilizer, potash and other commodities, was 12,329, 12,268 and 12,871 as of February 1 of years 1972, 1973 and 1974. The Canadian government owns 2,000 covered hopper cars which were purchased for grain services.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA ANNUITIES

Question No. 448—Mr. Howie:

For each fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, 1972 and 1973 how many Government of Canada Annuities were sold and what was the total amount of money paid for them?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):

Annuities Sold Fiscal Year Ending		Total Amount Paid
March 31, 1971		$
Immediate Annuities	31	129,392.75
Deferred Annuities	31	8,581.08
Total	62	137,973.83

DREDGING OF ST. LAWRENCE CHANNEL AT CAP-AUX-OIES, QUEBEC

Question No. 459—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. With respect to the amount of $325,000 in the estimates of the Department of Transport for the 1974-1975 fiscal year relating to the dredging of the St. Lawrence channel at Cap-aux-Oies, Quebec (a) what distance will be dredged (b) what is the present width and the depth of the channel (c) what will be the width and the depth of the channel once the work is completed?

2. Were dredging operations carried out in this area of the St. Lawrence River during the 1973-1974 fiscal year and, if so (a) how much money was allocated for such works to March 31, 1974 (b) was the job carried out by the Department or by private contractor and, if by contractor, what was the name and address?

3. What are the works planned for the future years requirements of $1,850,000 as listed at page 27-20 of the 1974-1975 estimates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No channel dredging is contemplated in the St. Lawrence River at Cap-aux-Oies, Quebec. The amount of $325,000 in the estimates of the Ministry of Transport for 1974-75 fiscal year relates to provision of navigation aids required to delineate a channel compatible in depth with the channel now being deepened upstream from St. Jean d'Orléans to Cap Gribane to provide access for deep draft vessels to the Port of Quebec.

2. No dredging operations were carried out in the Cap-aux-Oies area during the 1973-74 fiscal year.

3. The works planned for future years requirements of $1,850,000 in the 1974-75 estimates relate to provision of structures in the river for permanent navigation aids and for floating aids.

FUNDS CONTRACTED TO EACH OF FIVE REGIONS IN CANADA BY DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS

Question No. 500—Mr. McKenzie:

1. In the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74, how much money was contracted to each of the five regions of Canada by the Department of Communications?

2. What was this in per capita terms for each region?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): In reply to the above question, the Department of Communications submits the following:

Region	72/73	(Per Capita)	73/74	(Per Capita)
Atlantic	27,172	.0131	163,389	.0773
Quebec	4,047,019	.6689	6,188,177	1.0176

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to refer to several long unanswered questions which I have on the order paper dating back to last session. I refer to question No. 50 seeking information on trips made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) since October 30, 1972, at public expense, and the occasions on which such trips involved addressing or appearing at Liberal party functions. Second, I refer to questions Nos. 45, 87, 88 and 89 seeking information on the extensive and expensive renovations being conducted at the Prime Minister's official residence in Ottawa and his summer residence at Harrington Lake. Finally, I draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 407 of this session asking for information concerning reports that Mr. Martin O'Connell, principal secretary to the Prime Minister, has been spending government time in the constituency of Scarborough East showing pictures of the Prime Minister to school children.

May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether he can guarantee to the House that these questions I have mentioned which have long stood unanswered will be answered before the imminent collapse of the government takes place?

POST OFFICE

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—SPECIAL MEDIATOR—AUTHORITY FOR APPOINTMENT—TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in respect of the postal difficulties. Last week the Postmaster General indicated that those on strike would have to return to work before the Post Office would be prepared to sit down with them to discuss a solution to the coders' problem. A special mediator has now been appointed. I ask the Prime Minister, under what authority was he appointed and who made the appointment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a special agent, Stanley Hartt, who is intervening in this, and I will ask the Postmaster General to reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on the initiative of Mr. Finkelman, the parties agreed that a third party should be invited to discuss with them with a view to finding a solution to the postal conflict. At Mr. Finkelman's suggestion, Mr. Taylor was therefore appointed and meetings are now being held between the two parties and Mr. Taylor.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Postmaster General what the terms of reference of Mr. Taylor, the special mediator, are? Has he any authority, for example, to discuss a solution to the coders' problems before there is a return to work? In other words, has he any authority to discuss a solution to the coders' problems other than within the terms laid down by the minister in the House last week and outside the House also?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I should not like to interfere with the work Mr. Taylor has undertaken. That is why I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition will agree with me that any statement at this stage would likely make his work much more difficult.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, because it is of interest to the House and to the country I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether the position taken by the minister last week and stated quite firmly still stands or whether Mr. Taylor has authority to consider other methods of achieving a solution? After all, there is a national strike and the House needs some information concerning what the terms of reference are.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the present strike is illegal. It is national in part only, in that postal employees are still at work in several places throughout the country. I feel, however, that it is important for me to say that I am very happy that a third party is now working towards a solution to the conflict, and I am quite willing to trust him with the job.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There are three or four members seeking supplementaries. Perhaps we should try to complete the first round of questioning, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, who undertook to let parliament know the date of the budget this week, whether he is prepared to let us know that date today?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to let the House know the date this week.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance what day this week he intends to announce the date of the budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How about tomorrow, Mr. Speaker?

POST OFFICE

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—AUTOMATION AND TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE—INSTRUCTIONS TO MEDIATOR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Postmaster General. In light of the fact that automation and technological change are the two most important matters with which the postal people are concerned, can he advise whether or not the mediator has strict instructions in this regard, and is the minister in a position to elaborate somewhat in this area?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said a while ago; at Mr. Finkelman's request, Mr. Taylor intervened as third party, and I should not like any statement of mine to the House to complicate his work.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: In light of the very serious matter with which the mediator has to contend and in light of the fact that the postal workers are very concerned about job and wage security, were any specific instructions given the mediator in this regard, or is the minister prepared to sit on his fanny and be mum about that too?

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING INCLUSION OF CLASSIFICATION WITHIN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as minister responsible to parliament for the Public Service Staff Relations Board. Can the minister say whether the government is giving consideration to proposing an amendment to the Public Service Staff Relations Act to include classification and reclassification within the terms of collective bargaining?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, Mr. Finkelman has brought forward two parts of his report on collective bargaining in the public service. It is expected that the final part of the report, which is a draft bill, will be tabled by the end of the month. At that time we intend to refer the whole question to a parliamentary committee, but before that time it is not the intention to bring in any amendments to the law.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the government be prepared to indicate to Mr. Taylor what its intentions are in this regard so that this information might help in the settlement of the present dispute?

Mr. MacEachen: The government has already undertaken that it will listen to the views of the employees, the employers, and members of parliament before making its policy position known on the aspects of the Finkelman report.

POST OFFICE

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—POSSIBLE ACTION AGAINST UNION LEADERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question. Can he tell the House what action he is contemplating against certain union leaders, as he suggested over the weekend, and what advice he is seeking from the Department of Justice? Will he also explain in his answer how that will bring about a settlement of the strike?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we consulted our legal advisers about the procedures that could be followed. I think the matter is still under study and there is nothing else I could add for the moment.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister indicate whether this is a civil action or another kind of action, and also tell the House how any kind of proceedings of this nature would bring about an amicable settlement so we can get the Post Office back to normal?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it would of course be in the best interest of all to get the employees back at work as soon as possible. I think the Canadian public is now convinced that this is an illegal strike and I hope that the majority of the employees will realize it is urgent that they return to work.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. Grafftey: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member in a moment. I will see the hon. member for St. John's East now.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF BEEF—JUSTIFICATION ON BASIS OF RESTRICTION OF IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES TREATED WITH DES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he satisfied himself that the latest increase in the price of beef in Canada can be justified on the basis of the move of the government to restrict imports of DES-treated United States beef into Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am presently seeking further information about this question.

Mr. McGrath: While the minister is seeking further information I should like to point out to the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McGrath: —that on April 10 the Food Prices Review Board said that in their opinion the restrictions on DES-treated beef imported into Canada should have no bearing whatsoever on the retail price in Canada. May I ask the minister, on the basis of that statement by the Food Prices Review Board, what steps he is taking to examine the latest increases in the price of beef which appear to be gouging the consumer?

Mr. Gray: I think my hon. friend is mistaken. The board as such has not yet pronounced itself on the subject. I understand it is meeting on April 25 and it is very likely that as a result of this meeting we will have more definite information to go on than the unsubstantiated press report on which my hon. friend may well be basing his question.

Mr. McGrath: I have a further supplementary question based on the same press report in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 10 that carried the story regarding the Food Prices Review Board. The same article reported that the Minister of Agriculture had said he could see no justification for any increase in the price of beef on the basis of restriction of DES-treated beef imported into Canada. Will the minister now consult with the Minister of Agriculture and then tell the House what the report of these findings is?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am obviously in closer consultation with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, than the hon. member has been in consultation with agricultural spokesmen within his party who support the DES ban.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH INFLATION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister consulted with his cabinet colleagues in order to ascertain when relevant and necessary legislation will be introduced in the House to deal with both domestically and internationally induced inflation, and is such legislation prepared and ready now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member is asking a very general question about the whole program which was proposed in the Speech from the Throne. Naturally, in the course of the session we will bring forth all of the matters proposed in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Grafftey: In view of the latest statistics which have come out since the Speech from the Throne, will the Prime Minister direct the House leader to suspend debate on the football bill and have such legislation introduced and debated immediately on the assumption, perhaps erroneous, that it is now prepared and ready?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the member that the House can stop debate on the football bill at any time by allowing it to come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe, following which I shall see the hon. member for Assiniboia.

REASON FOR DROP IN REAL LABOUR INCOME ON INDIVIDUAL BASIS IN 1973—SPLIT IN FUTURE INCREASES IN REAL NATIONAL INCOME

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. If we accept the minister's representation that real output in our economy rose by 7.1 per cent in 1973, can the minister explain or at least reconcile for the House why real labour income on an individual employee basis fell by 1.8 per cent in the year, in contrast to other sectors of the economy which saw their real income jump by as much as 27 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the minister to reply to the hon. member's question, but it seems to me that a question asked in those terms is more debate. The hon. member asks the minister to reconcile one position with another. That is debate, essentially. Perhaps the minister could reply briefly, following which I will see the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is advancing statistical information which really has to be answered in debate. I would be prepared to do so at the appropriate time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a short supplementary of the Minister of Finance. Does the minister anticipate that any future increases in real national income will continue to be split 50 per cent to the corporate sector and 40 per cent to the eight million members of our Canadian labour force?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with that more fully at an appropriate time.

FLOODS

SASKATCHEWAN—FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO COMPENSATE FOR LOSSES—DECLARATION OF MOOSE JAW AS NATIONAL DISASTER AREA

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that areas of Saskatchewan, Moose Jaw in particular, are suffering from severe flooding and millions of dollars of damage have been caused up to this point, can the Prime Minister tell the House if there will be federal assistance available to meet some of the costly difficulties which have arisen for many citizens of that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already communicated with the premiers of the provinces involved and reminded them that there is a federal formula whereby assistance can be extended to the provinces provided they make such requests. In the meantime, of course, the federal government is assisting. The armed forces, I am told, are doing a splendid job. We have one minister on the spot, the Minister of National Defence, and I believe the Minister of Justice will be going there very shortly.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Bell: He will start a legal argument.

Mr. Trudeau: We are very concerned and intend to assist in every way that our policy permits.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there are a number of supplementaries on this subject. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and then the hon. member for Assiniboia for his supplementary.

● (1430)

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a specific request from the premier of the province of Saskatchewan to have the city of Moose Jaw declared a national disaster area, and can the Prime Minister give an assurance to those people in the city who lost millions of dollars in homes and property that the federal government will make arrangements to see that they are compensated for their loss?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just indicated in reply to the previous question that there is very substantial federal assistance which is forthcoming in cases where provinces suffer great disasters. The formula is well known and I have reminded the provinces of its existence. It will be up to them to decide whether they want to apply for assistance and whether they qualify.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the formula now being used is somewhat new, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether within that formula there is assistance for communities such as Lumsden which to a certain point in time has been successful in preventing flooding but at great cost in terms of dyking, etc.? Can he tell the House whether assistance is available under this program?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was, of course, referring to assistance which comes after the fact. There are other ways in which the federal government can assist in the building of preventive works. The Minister of the Environment has applied these policies in other areas and we will look into the particular case of Lumsden to see if it qualifies on future occasions.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Prime Minister answered my question. I wanted to know if there had been a specific request by the province to have the area declared a national disaster area?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no memory of such a specific request. There have been, as I said in answer to the first question, reports exchanged back and forth between the government of Saskatchewan and the federal government involving various forms of federal action, but

I cannot say whether they have made a specific request that it be declared a national disaster area.

MANITOBA—FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO COMPENSATE FOR LOSSES

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact Manitoba is also involved in a flood situation even though we have two floodways which I doubt will serve the purpose, may I ask the Prime Minister if he has received a request from the province of Manitoba for help? Second, is there anything the federal government can do to urge the provinces to act and act more quickly to help the people involved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have an indication that, apart from the Canadian air force, various departments such as Indian Affairs, Health, Transport, the CNR and others—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's you, Joe!

Mr. Trudeau: —have been involved and there has been communication between the provincial government and the federal government. In addition, I was kept very much up to date on this question by the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. Bell: Take your shovel with you, Joe!

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

GRAIN

OFFER BY WHEAT BOARD TO PURCHASE ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER AND FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Wheat Board. Was the offer by the Canadian Wheat Board to purchase 4,000 hopper cars with the farmers' money if certain conditions are fulfilled by the railways made after consultation with the minister himself?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board informed me of the intention of the commissioners to make this proposal before making it.

Mr. Ritchie: Can the minister tell the House if the Wheat Board had consultations with the various farm organizations before making this offer?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would have to inquire as to the extent of their consultation.

SUGGESTED RELIEF OF PRODUCERS FROM ADDITIONAL CHARGES BECAUSE OF TRANSPORTATION AND CONTRACT DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is also directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made recently by the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board to the effect that the board may be faced with charges for contractual default which will have to be borne by the producers, and the fact that vessel demurrage is costing producers millions of dollars because of the breakdown in the transportation system, can the minister inform the House what immediate steps the government is taking to relieve producers of this unforeseen cost which has come about through matters beyond the control of the producers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the events which occurred were the result of events largely beyond the control of everyone. What we have done is to take emergency action to attempt to ensure that the maximum amount of grain can be moved so that we can have more grain arrive at the terminals in the immediately forthcoming period to catch up on any backlog as soon as possible. This is the course of action that is required. We stand ready to take other steps as may be recommended by the operational committee set up for this emergency under the chairmanship of the Canadian Wheat Board to make sure that anything that can be done for any part of the industry is done in order to facilitate the movement of grain.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would the minister answer the precise question I put to him? Is he considering any measures to relieve the producers of the abnormal cost of demurrage and the abnormal cost caused by contractual default which are not the result of any action by the producers at all?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact measures I have referred to are those which will minimize any such loss and they are the ones which we are putting into place.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE HIRING OF YOUNG INDIANS AS POLICEMEN ON RESERVATIONS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that differences of opinion have arisen between the government of Saskatchewan and the federal government about the hiring of young Indian boys to become policemen on reservations, can the minister report if any policy decision has been made in the last few weeks on this subject?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, several months ago I wrote to the attorney general, Mr. Romanow, in this connection and I made a proposal, but I have not yet heard from him.

REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER ON UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON ENERGY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that the minister has just returned from a conference at the United Nations on energy and I should like to ask if he will make a report to the House on that important conference by way of a statement on motions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the conference continues so I do not think it would be appropriate to make a statement, but I would be very happy to table the statement I made on behalf of Canada.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF FINANCIAL REPORT—REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATION DURING COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF ESTIMATES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. When may we expect the financial report of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to be tabled in the House?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I was under the impression, as I advised the hon. member—I was obviously wrong since he is inquiring today—that it had been tabled. However, I will find out and let him know later this day.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): When the Cape Breton Development Corporation appears before the committee for examination of its estimates, will the minister assure the House that a review of the legislation and the administration thereof will be included in the terms of reference?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge it is not within my capability to set the terms of reference for the committee. I would assume that the committee can examine any aspect of the operations of the corporation that it wishes.

EDUCATION

NUMBER OF NON-CANADIAN UNIVERSITY TEACHERS AND NUMBER RECEIVING RESEARCH GRANTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. Have the minister or any of his colleagues compiled, and is he prepared to present to the House today or this week, an exact and accurate indication of the proportion of non-Canadians teaching and hiring today in Canadian universities and an accurate indication of the number of non-Canadians whose research projects are being funded by the National Research Council, the Canada Council or similar granting organizations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression is that the information requested by the hon. member, particularly in the second part of his question, would normally be supplied by way of a reply to a written question. If I am wrong in my interpretation and the hon. member thinks the matter should be discussed urgently, perhaps it could be considered at the time of adjournment.

● (1440)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase the question, put it in writing and also discuss it at ten o'clock. As a supplementary, may I ask whether the minister has prepared any legislation similar in intent to the football legislation to ensure the maintenance of Canadian content in Canadian universities, and when will that legislation be before us?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, and I am not sure it is necessary.

AIR CANADA

CANCELLATION OF CERTAIN SERVICES TO WESTERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Is it the policy of Air Canada indiscriminately to cancel flights to one part of Canada and redirect the planes to another region?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to which period the hon. member is referring. If it is what is going on now, I think Air

Canada has many good reasons to switch aircraft from one airport to another.

Mr. Marshall: Due to the fact Air Canada officials have cancelled three fundamental, normal and regular flights to western Newfoundland and redirected them to other parts of Canada, will the minister take the necessary action to reinstate this fundamental service and ensure that Air Canada does not discriminate against one particular part of Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no discrimination. However, there is no doubt that when an aircraft cannot land in St. John's or Gander it is very difficult to have a flight back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse will perhaps allow me first to recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe who would like to ask a supplementary question.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: Does the minister not know there are four airports in Newfoundland? He referred to St. John's and Gander. The western part of Newfoundland also requires service. It is that service Air Canada officials have taken off and redirected. These people deserve service as much as anyone else.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to give me some particulars, I can inquire and give him an answer.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MEASURES TO ASSURE DELIVERY OF BENEFICIARIES' CHEQUES IN LIGHT OF POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the postal strike has become alarming, can the minister tell the House whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission will take special steps so that the beneficiaries of the Montmagny area will receive their cheques without delay and their weekly report cards will also reach the Commission in due time?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are doing our best, and have since the inception of this unlawful strike in the Post Office, to take emergency measures. I will certainly look into the particulars of the hon. member's community and see how it is working out. But we are taking special measures and are attempting to expedite both the reporting system and the delivery of cheques.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF PROVISION IN CANADA LABOUR CODE RESPECTING HOURS, WAGES AND VACATIONS

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will he inform the House whether it is still government policy, as orginally expressed by the government in 1965 and reaffirmed by the former Minister of Labour in 1971, that Part III of the Canada Labour Code dealing with hours, wages and vacations applies as government policy to employees in the public service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Ottawa West will recognize that the Public Service is governed by the terms and conditions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, my recognition of that fact was implicit in the phraseology of the question. Despite the fact that the law does not apply, the former Minister of Labour established, and I can quote from Hansard if necessary, that as a matter of government policy Part III would apply to employees in the Public Service. I asked the President of the Treasury Board whether this was still government policy and I would still like an answer to that question.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there has been no recent change in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West for a second supplementary, following which I will see the hon. member for Vaudreuil.

Mr. Reilly: That being the case, can the President of the Treasury Board explain to the House why there has been, according to the president of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, in current negotiations between the institute and representatives of the Treasury Board, "a refusal to comply with the statement of government policy, specifically as it relates to Section 32 of the Canada Labour Code, dealing with the question of overtime compensation?"

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of this particular allegation. I will be glad to inquire into it and furnish the hon. member with an answer.

INCOME TAX

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS BECAUSE OF POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the current delivery difficulties, is the minister giving any consideration to extending the April 30 deadline on which date some of us have to send him a cheque?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the matter is being kept under review. I can assure hon. members and the taxpayers that they will not be penalized as a result of any delays in the Post Office or, for that matter, as a result of prairie floods.

POST OFFICE

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—DELIVERY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that family allowance cheques are in post offices in British Columbia waiting to be processed, and in view of the fact housewives are threatening to picket the pickets and have already done so in Kamloops, will the Postmaster General make provision for the housewives to get their family allowance cheques, even if he has to allow them into the post offices to process their own mail?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunately true that some family allowance cheques, particularly in British Columbia, and some in Alberta and in Quebec also, have not been delivered, although they have been in most cases. I can assure the hon. member that we have asked the Post Office employees from those regions to try to deliver themselves those cheques or to allow that an agreement be reached so that Canadian families do not suffer from the present dispute.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he is aware of allegations made over the weekend that beef prices in Toronto will increase by some 20 to 30 cents per pound this week? Has he investigated such allegations and can he assure the House they are incorrect?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard the same reports over the weekend. As I said to another hon. member, I am having these reports looked into.

Mr. Grier: Is the minister in a position today to indicate when he will be reporting to the House on the results of these investigations?

[Mr. Herbert.]

AIR TRANSPORT

STATUS OF PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Transport. Can he now clarify the present status of the proposed airport head tax that was announced last January?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this air tax is still being discussed within the department.

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister give some details as to the exact amount of the proposed tax, some of the particulars about its collection and some idea as to when it will commence?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if I were in a position to give all those details the matter would not be under discussion within the department; it would have been discussed.

BANK ACT

PREPARATORY WORK ON REVISION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact high interest rates, bank prime rates and the bank rate itself are very much a topic of consideration today, would the minister advise us whether any preparatory work is being done toward the revision of the Bank Act, including the extent of the plans at the present time, the composition of the committees which may be at work, and whether the government intends to publish a white paper prior to the revision of the Bank Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The Bank Act is up for renewal in 1977. I would anticipate I would be able to deposit a bill some time in late 1975 or 1976.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In the meantime, both the Canadian Bankers' Association and ourselves are making an independent review.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I think the minister is dangerously overconfident. I am sure he recognizes that, in order to get an appropriate Bank Act with the changes required for a modern banking system, the lead time is really much shorter than it appears when the act needs to be in place and operating by January 1, 1977.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. I have taken steps to ensure there will be adequate public and parliamentary review so that the revisions to the Bank Act will be in place by that time.

CITIZENSHIP

SUCCESS OF PROGRAM TO ENCOURAGE LANDED IMMIGRANTS TO BECOME CITIZENS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Last May the minister made a statement on motions indicating that his department was embarking on a program to encourage landed immigrants eligible to become Canadians to take out Canadian citizenship. He mentioned at that time there were approximately 800,000 in that category. Can the minister tell me whether the program ever got under way and how successful it has been in terms of new applications? How many remain at this time in the category referred to?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the program is well under way and it has been very successful. It would probably be more prudent of me to try to answer detailed questions when I appear before the committee. I should be delighted to do so, but the answer involves mobile units, storefront offices in Toronto and a variety of other moves.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): The minister did not say how many remain in that category, or whether he has any idea of the number. He did appear sympathetic last May to the idea of waiving the citizenship fee as far as old age pensioners are concerned. Has any decision been made in that regard?

Mr. Faulkner: No, Mr. Speaker.

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—QUEBEC SALES TAX—AVOIDANCE OF PENALTIES AGAINST MERCHANTS BECAUSE OF MAIL DELIVERY PROBLEMS

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

As it is known, the Quebec Department of Revenue requires at fixed dates that businessmen hand over their 8 per cent sales tax, as otherwise they are liable to a rather stiff penalty. Has the Postmaster General met or communicated with provincial government representatives to solve this problem and thus avoid penalties for Quebec businessmen?

NAMED FOREIGN WORKER PROGRAM—PROVISION OF WORKERS FOR AGRICULTURAL HARVESTING

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, the substance of my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has already been discussed with him. Is the minister now in a position to announce the implementation of the named foreign worker program so vital to supplying workers for the agricultural harvest this season?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): We are prepared to implement this program. We have indicated to certain farm groups where this ranks in the order of priorities. Certainly we wish to preserve jobs for Canadians available to fill them. We also wish to support formal exchange programs concerning offshore seasonal workers to which we are committed in the case of one or two countries. After these programs have been supported, and only then, would we look upon the named foreign worker program as being legitimate.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Is the minister aware of the need for an early announcement concerning this program so that prospective employers and employees can make arrangements in time for the harvest season? Last year I think it was announced some time in March.

Mr. Andras: I have already announced a program to the farm groups which have come to see me that is very similar in terms to what I said a few minutes ago. It has been a standing arrangement. If the hon. member thinks there should be a formal press release I will look into that matter, too.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN COST OF CLOTHING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of recent statistics indicating that the clothing component of the consumer price index rose sharply in February of this year at a rate of 2.3 per cent in St. John's and 1.5 per cent in Vancouver, what steps does the minister intend to take to deal with this aspect of today's high cost of living in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I would prefer, at least at this stage, to take the hon. member's question as a representation.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO APPLY SANCTIONS AGAINST EMPLOYERS NOT GRANTING EMPLOYEES TIME OFF TO VOTE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. It relates to the requirement in the Canada Elections Act that three hours be granted to employees to enable them to vote. This provision has been demonstrated to be unenforceable. In these circumstances, does the minister plan to bring before the House shortly legislation which would apply sanctions against employers not complying with the law?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): There have been a good number of representations with respect to the experience during the last election under this particular provision. The matter is under consideration and it is my expectation that amendments to the Canada Elections Act will be introduced. Certainly it is one of the prospective items that would be dealt with. I cannot assure the hon. member that legislation will be introduced shortly, however.

FINANCE

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA—DORMANT ACCOUNTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Every year the Canada Gazette publishes a list of uncollected or unaccepted bank accounts. This year the Royal Bank of Canada, the head offices of which are in Montreal, has eight pages of unknown people, names of creditors, and addresses. Has the minister considered the possibility that there is something unusual taking place or that the bank is not living up to normal expectations?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I think I had better take a look at that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: I consider this matter to be very serious, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering whether there is any unusual connection between these circumstances and the underworld.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will consider that as a related part of the question. I assure the hon. member that I take it seriously and as soon as I look into the facts as he has presented them I shall be in touch with him.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN FOOTBALL ACT

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREIGN ENCROACHMENT

The House resumed, from Friday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-22, intituled Canadian Football Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Question!

[Mr. Rowland.]

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in this debate I suppose it is necessary to point out to members on the other side of the House that it is they who introduced this measure, and until they provide more evidence than has been provided by government speakers so far, it is in the public interest to determine whether or not this legislation is really necessary, to determine whether the fears which have been expressed by people outside the House and by government spokesmen inside the House are well founded. Essentially, we have to ask ourselves whether or not the government has so far produced any evidence which supports the suggestion that its fears are grounded on fact, not just on fancy.

It is important for all hon. members, and especially for those people we represent in consituencies across Canada, to recognize that it is the duty of the government to propose legislation. That is a proper function of government. But it is also the duty of the government to indicate in debate the reasons for which legislation has been introduced and the evidence supporting those reasons. I think probably hon. members of this House on both sides and in all parties, would call themselves Canadian nationalists in what I think is the best sense of that word. However, I do not think, with respect, it is enough for the government to presume upon that very natural instinct on the part of members of parliament of Canada by asking them on that basis—after all we are all interested in the national wellbeing of our country—to pass this bill without examination because the government tells us this is essential to the maintenance of our national identity.

Some government members may say the government has not gone quite that far. I am glad that some of them feel that government has not as this would indicate that they have not completely lost their own faculty for looking critically at this legislation and recognizing that we are really not talking about a matter of maintaining Canadian national identity. If I thought that was the issue I would say so, but no doubt if it were the issue there would be some pretty strong evidence to support it. What we are being asked to believe is that the entry of a WFL team in the city of Toronto is going to break up the Canadian Football League. We are also being asked to believe that should that happen the playing of Canadian football in this country will cease. We are also being asked to take from those propositions the assumption that this somehow, or in some way, will seriously impair our sense of being Canadian.

There has been a lot of talk about the role of Canadian football in keeping this country together, perhaps not so much in the House as outside the House, but this has to be taken in perspective. I, for one, along with many of my school mates, grew up in a city where we played American football in highschool because the university team had to play in an American football league. The school board was asked whether teams playing football in highschool could switch to the American rules in order that the talent coming to the university from the highschools would be better prepared to play in that league in which the university played.

Many of us also played Canadian football in weekend leagues at the same time we were playing American football in the highschool league. In those days we did not have a Vancouver team in the Canadian Football League. We also played other sports, including English rugby and soccer. We did not play much hockey as there was not very much ice in Vancouver in those days. We played a mix of sports, and I think most of us have grown into pretty strong Canadian nationalists. I do not believe for one minute that I was somehow robbed of my right or chance to be a Canadian because I did not have imposed upon me a solid dose of Canadian football and nothing else during my so-called formative years.

It is also interesting that when we talk about the role of sports in Canada it seems we have been speaking for a number of years now about the importance of the government's role in assisting amateur sports. Some figures have been bandied about in respect of the nearly quarter of a million young people playing football in this country, but how many adults play Canadian football in this country after they leave school? Canadian football in that sense is certainly not as national a game as some other sports. I think there is no question that probably far more adults play hockey for recreation long after they leave school, than play Canadian football. I have not the figures but perhaps some government speaker will provide them during this debate. I suggest that soccer is another game which many more adults play long after they leave school than play Canadian football. I suggest also that the same is true of English rugby. It is not surprising that this is true because football, as such, has not been a game which has been easily converted into an amateur type sport to be taken up on an informal basis after you get away from the rigorous discipline of school or juvenile leagues.

When we talk about the position of Canadian football in sports for Canadians I think it is important to put it into perspective. As I say, I played Canadian football. I think it is a good game and, in some respects, its rules are superior to American rules, despite the fact that they are very similar. I would like to see young Canadians play not only Canadian football but soccer, rugby and hockey as much as possible. That does not mean we should denigrate in any way other individual sports which perhaps in the long run are more useful to the individual as they can be played for many years and provide a great deal of pleasure, and good healthful recreation, to persons of middle and older years.

I should point out also that when we are talking about government assistance and getting more and more people to participate in Canadian sports, in my own province and in my own city field hockey is now a major amateur sport, amateur in the best sense of the word, as is English rugby and soccer. When we talk about the government making a move to assist in the growth of Canadian football, to which I have no objection, I just hope that these other sports which are very much a part of the sports fabric of this country will not be neglected.

I could not help but be struck by what I thought was the consummate commonsense of much of the speech of my colleague in the NDP, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). The first thing he said, and it is not with any vituperative attempt that I repeat with endorsement his remarks, the thing that everyone of us has to look at is that this is no time to be debating a bill like this. The hon. member for Greenwood said during the debate on Friday, and I quote from page 1592 of Hansard for that date as I think he has put this succinctly and responsibly:

> First of all, I say we should not be discussing the issue of football at all at this time when we are faced with the problem of inflation, housing, energy, taxation and a host of other urgent economic and social problems.

I am in entire agreement with the hon. member in that regard, and I suspect there are many members of the government who are in as absolute agreement with those statements, but who have for their own particular reasons not yet expressed that view.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Would you agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)?

Mr. Fraser: I hear the hon. member speaking from the government side. He is attempting to ask a question, as he often does, but most of the time he does much more than ask a question; he proposes the answer. That is the part of my hon. friend's attitude in these debates that has brought him so much affection from this side.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I can stand up to ask the question, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) has the floor, and if he wants to allow the hon. member to ask a question he should signify his approval, at which time I will recognize the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I hold the hon. member in some considerable esteem and I would be pleased to hear his question.

● (1510)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question, Mr. Speaker, relates to a matter about which I am very concerned. I wish to ask the hon. member, in view of the fact that he was speaking of his views and those of others, whether he agrees with the statement made by his confrere, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds), on Friday afternoon. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta is not here today but in any event I should like to ask whether the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) agrees with the speech that hon. member made in this House on Friday.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, first of all the hon. member has not indicated exactly with what he wants me to agree or disagree. I think the hon. member is asking whether I agree that this measure should be delayed as long as possible, no matter what it involves, and whether or not there should be a number of amendments moved by private members. The hon. member asked my opinion, and I may say I regret that any time at all is being taken up on this bill. I do not think it is good legislation.

But every hon. member who believes that this is not good legislation—and this could apply to some hon. members on the government side because some of them do not like this legislation—would like to actively do everything within reason to oppose it. My hon. friend has a frank answer and if he will let me continue I might be able to persuade him that the reasons for my not agreeing with this legislation are sound. I would be delighted if my hon. friend would enter the debate at a later time.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not identify the hon. member who made the lively interjection, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I did not feel that it was necessary to identify him because all regular readers of Hansard would know immediately of whom I was speaking. However, I apologize to the hon. member for not identifying him earlier. He is very identifiable, Mr. Speaker. He is always a delight and makes a great contribution to debates in this House.

As I was saying, I think one of the most significant contributions made to this debate was that of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). First of all, the hon. member said that we should not have to discuss the issue of football at this time and then enumerated other matters which are of greater importance to which I referred a few moments ago.

The hon. member for Greenwood, in a speech which I think every member of this House should read because it is pretty succinct and gets down to the nub of the issue, brought forward another reason for opposition to this bill, with which I agree, namely the question of the constitutionality of the bill. This is an aspect to which no speaker on the government side has directed his mind. As recorded at page 1593 of Hansard for Friday April 19, the hon. member for Greenwood said:

> I would have thought that the regulation of sport generally was a matter for the provinces under property and civil rights and a matter of local and private nature.

On the same page he points out the second reason for worrying about the constitutionality of this:

> Does it depend on peace, order or good government, the opening words of section 91? To me that is a nonsensical suggestion. That particular power relates to times of emergency. What emergency requires us to decide whether the Northmen play football in Toronto or do not play football in Toronto?

Of course, when one looks at the constitutionality of a bill one must consider the trade and commerce clause in the constitution. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Greenwood said this, again record on the same page:

> It might be thought to be justified under the heading of trade and commerce. I know that is a complex subject and there are numerous cases, none of them clear. From my reading I have not been able to discover any case that justifies the suggestion that to allow someone to come across the border to play football, to play a musical instrument, albeit they are playing for money, is a matter of trade and commerce of such dimensions that it would justify legislation here on issues of trade and commerce.

The hon. member continues to cite a real problem which ought to jump out at all hon. members and when regard is taken of the penal provisions in this bill. He very correctly draws the attention of this House to this aspect of the bill. As recorded at page 1592 of Hansard, he asks this question:

> Is it criminal law? Some clauses appear in the bill as if criminal law were included in this bill on purpose. This is an indication of the completely unconstitutional nature of the bill because criminal law certainly is a power that the federal government has but it cannot be used to justify interference in a field where the government has no right to be.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Greenwood has very properly brought a serious issue before this House, one to which at least at this date the government has not addressed its mind in this debate.

There is another point, and I was pleased to see that the hon. member for Greenwood has alluded to it. It has been alluded to by other speakers here and by people generally outside the House. He said:

> A basic right is involved here, that is the right of people to choose for themselves, unless there is some very good reason why they should not be allowed to and such reasons do not exist in the present case, what they want to watch on television or hear on radio. There is no reason why the consumer, that is the viewer who wants to view football directly or through any other means, should not have the widest possible choice, and if that choice involves some degree of American importation—and it does now and will continue to do so—so what? No nationalist rule compels us to say that we are going to shut our doors to seeing things, hearing them and enjoying them because they come from some other part of the world.

I think we can get too caught up on the fact that this bill relates to Canadian football and forget exactly what kind of precedent we are setting here. It is a little like saying that what Canada needs is to decide on what national game we want and have the government so state and disallow all other games. It is like saying that we will play this one game because it is Canadian. That would be preposterous.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said this was analogous to what we have done under the Foreign Investment Review Act. I wonder if it is. Surely, all we did under the Foreign Investment Review Act was say that if someone wishes to have a business in Canada, no matter what kind it may be, we will ensure that there is sufficient Canadian control and Canadian ownership so that there is a greater probability of that business acting as a good corporate Canadian citizen. But we never said in that bill that there are some kinds of businesses one cannot have. This surely is what the bill in front of us is doing. It is saying there are some kinds of sport which one cannot have. If somebody plays American football in one city or in two or three, how does it become such a serious threat to our national way of life that it should be outlawed?

This is not the same as the situation in respect of banks or trust companies or the stopping of the sale of a company which controls the extraction of uranium. It is not something which goes to the heart of the national interest as has been propounded.

I think we must put Canadian football in some sort of perspective. As I have said, I have played the game of Canadian football and hope to watch it for the rest of my life but frankly I do not believe, unless there are better reasons than have been given so far, that we need this kind of legislation to protect Canadian football. If there are a quarter of a million young people playing this game right now, and if steps will be taken to increase that number to 500,000 or 600,000, as the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) said in Friday's debate, surely to goodness we will be producing so may competent football players, so much Canadian football will be played, that there would be no difficulty in a commercial league existing in this country in a good, healthy way.

Another question one should ask oneself is: given the amount of professional football that is being played south of the border, can anyone seriously think that Canadian players will not be induced to play in the United States if they are good enough and if they are paid enough? It is very difficult to see exactly how the bill before us will stop that sort of thing from taking place. Surely, the way to combat that kind of thing is to have a heck of a good Canadian league, do everything you can to promote it in the schools, play the game well, play it constantly, and do one more thing which is very important, namely, have people play it after they leave school so that it becomes an integral part of our adult amateur sports scene. If it does not do that, then all of this is being done just to have a commercial league, and I for one am not prepared to see the government put all its effort into assisting the commercial side of a sport in which a large number of our people do not engage in their adult years.

The hon. member for Greenwood spoke about Canadian unity. I should like to quote him from Hansard of April 19, page 1592, where he is reported as having said the following:

My fourth point is that the pretence that this legislation is essential to defend Canadian culture and unity, to my mind at least, is completely phoney. Canadian culture and unity do not depend upon which of two types of football are played or watched in Canada,

I will not go quite as far as the hon. member did because I do not believe that the Minister of National Health and Welfare or, for that matter, some members of the government who have got themselves in this jam, did so on a phoney basis. It may be phoney in fact but I do not think that was their intent. But I am concerned about the suggestion that to even question this bill makes your own Canadian nationalism, Canadian identity or Canadian patriotism suspect. What is it that has suddenly put the Canadian national identity in peril? Is it the WFL team playing in Toronto? Somehow that seems rather absurd. We have gone through much peril since the time our ancestors, French, English and otherwise, arrived on this continent and hammered out a good country, contrary to many people who said it could not be done and contrary, as some people would put it, to the law of economics and the commonsense of geography. We have done that and we are in the House today debating because this country's sense of identity is not on the skids; this country's nationalism, our sense of who we are and what we are, is very much alive. I know that all hon. members, deep down in their hearts, realize that.

Throughout our history there have been those who have constantly told us that we would not make it, that we would slide into an abyss, that we would divide and separate among ourselves and that we would be gobbled up by the American colossus or we would be lost to materialism or some other undesirable event. I grew up reading learned essays by people who constantly repeated that we have no Canadian identity, that we have no national purpose, that somehow or other we do not know who we are or what we are. There are always some who, lacking anything else to write about, create issues. They transport them into the centre of academic discussions and, having invented an ailment that does not exist, they spend the rest of their careers prescribing methods to cure it. These people really do not do much harm, but I am sorry they do not apply their talents to real problems. Frankly, I think there is something peculiar in the Minister of National Health and Welfare suddenly dropping his important responsibilities to join these Cassandras of Canadian social history.

The hon. member for York West suggested that it was in the public interest to pass this bill. That is what he appears to have said, and I refer to Hansard of last Friday at page 1585 where he is reported to have said:

You know, filibuster can be a very effective technique for the opposition in times of majority government. It can be used to keep the majority from legislating something that the opposition feels is not in the public interest.

I take it from that the hon. member for York West believes that this bill is in the public interest. Certainly, one can take from his comments that only if what the opposition is saying is in the public interest should there be any prolonged debate and the implication is that this bill is in the public interest and so there should not be any debate. The hon. member for York West made a very good speech but, like the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he did not advise us upon what evidence his fears and doubts were grounded. Where is the evidence that the Canadian Football League is really threatened?

The hon. member for York West said, as I have mentioned earlier in my speech, that in a few years there will be 500,000 to 600,000 young Canadians playing football. According to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, there will be help from his department, and with all this help and with that kind of growth one wonders why the CFL is in so much trouble. I say that even if I cannot see the reasons why the Canadian game is in trouble, it is incumbent upon the government to tell me why it is in trouble, not just to tell me, as the minister did, that it is a gut issue. He should tell me why we have to take this rather extraordinary step to save the CFL and apparently our sense of Canadian identity.

As I said earlier it is incumbent upon the government which proposed this bill to give me the evidence upon which they base their assertion that it will be the end of the Canadian Football League if we do not pass this bill. Surely, that is their theory, and that is what they think will happen if this team comes to Toronto, if this Mr. whatever-his-name-is who is supposed to be a millionaire and is apparently so important in the world of sports these days, brings this team to Toronto. I could not care a fig for the owner of this American team. I do not give a hoot whether or not they play. What I am concerned about is whether or not this is the way we should deal with it. People in Canada, and people in Toronto in particular, want to watch that team play and unless you can give me very good reasons why they should not, then I am afraid I have to say: let them play.

I am certainly no spokesman for the owners of that team. Frankly I am not much interested in professional football. I do not think that in terms of the actual state of health of most Canadians, professional football contributes very much to it. Whether it is the American stations we watch or whether we go to the stadium to watch the Canadian game, it is entertainment. I do not think it does very much for anyone's health except those who are playing—they are probably in pretty good shape.

If we take a look at what the hon. member for York West said we will see that there is no evidence that the things he fears will come about. But what is even more surprising is that there is no such evidence in what the minister said. There are assertions but not evidence, and there is a difference. There are fears, and the objectives of the bill are stated. They are to maintain Canadian football in Canada. But where is the evidence that the CFL will fall apart or that there will be one person less watching the Lions in Vancouver?

● (1530)

An hon. Member: There is going to be a collapse.

Mr. Fraser: Give me the evidence on which you think there is going to be a collapse. I ask this of the hon. member through you, of course, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: What about New York city?

Mr. Fraser: I ask my hon. friend to tell me why he thinks there will be a collapse. Let us look at the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and see if it contains any evidence. I ask all hon. members to read the speech carefully. Even if they have read it already, I ask them to look at it again. As recorded on page 1561 of Hansard of April 18, he said, "We all know that football in itself is not a life and death issue, or even a bread and butter issue". He said that it is a gut issue, an emotional issue. He took some time to get that argument out of his system.

On page 1562 he is reported as making the suggestion that the aims of this bill are similar to those of the Foreign Investment Review Act. I do not think the same arguments apply at all. Then, he continues at great length in his speech setting out reasons why we should believe that this has been government policy since 1972. I do not think it matters whether it has been government policy since 1972. In the absence of evidence to show why we should support the bill, I do not think the minister should have spent so much time on that aspect. But he felt it important to show that under the regime of the minister's predecessor, this was government policy, back in November, 1972.

On page 1563 of Hansard the minister is reported as suggesting that a strong CFL will help the growth of Canadian football. I do not quarrel with that. On the other hand, he presented no evidence to show that without this bill the CFL will not be strong. I am saying that Canadian football as developed over the years is not dying. Frankly, I do not understand the minister's position. If many young people play the game, if it has caught the imagination of young Canadians, if over a quarter of a million people are already playing the game, and half a million will be playing it, surely, there is room for a viable commercial league. We do not need to be afraid of the WFL, as the minister suggests. As recorded on page 1564, he suggests that his department will assist the growth of football. That is fine, so long as every other sport is given the same treatment.

The minister spent some time documenting how the Northmen were told about government policy. That was very interesting, of course, but does not seem relevant to the issue on which this debate is taking policy. He says they were told. I am glad. They should have been told of government policy; but that does not mean this bill is right. This is the first time such government policy has been in front of the House. We are asked to support it. Surely, in the name of heaven, we should be shown the evidence upon which the request for our support of this measure is based.

The minister said, as I mentioned earlier, that this is a gut issue, an emotional issue. I am not one who has ever avoided problems or issues because they happen to be emotional. Some of the most important things in our lives are emotional. There is a time to appeal to emotion. If we lived lives in which we did not appeal to emotion, and if we acted in a way that did not recognize the emotional sides of our lives, we would live a dry, rigid, dusty existence, without humanity and compassion. So, I do not criticize the minister for saying this is an emotional issue, a gut issue. I think it is. I merely say that we should also apply reason.

After letting this emotional response work through our visceral innards, we should apply our minds to the real issue. Really, there are only two questions that need to be asked. First, is it certain that Canadian football is going to be extinguished if we let people play the American game in Toronto or anywhere else. Second, do we really believe that the only way to preserve Canadian football is to prohibit a game that happens to have its rules made outside of the geographic boundaries of this country. I ask all members to ask themselves these questions. Let them look at what the minister has said, and let them ask themselves this: Where is the evidence upon which you have built your fears and doubts.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief. I would like to say only a few words. Perhaps the hon. minister will be touched down! In any case, I am not converted to this C-22 balloon.

I want to take part in this debate to criticize the preamble of the bill. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think we have a precedent as it is the first time we have been mixing politics and sports; as it has always been quite fair not to introduce nationalistic, political or other factors in sports, we have just broken with this process we are used to.

When we read the first paragraph of the preamble to this bill, we realize that one of the premises on which this government based the drafting of this bill is the following:

—football has an established tradition in Canada as witnessed by the Cup symbolizing football supremacy in Canada, which was donated by His Excellency, the late Governor General Earl Grey in 1909 for that purpose;

Mr. Speaker, they claim in a peremptory fashion that football is a tradition. Although this may be the case, they try to turn it into a basic principle, which I feel is a mistake, for what does the word "tradition" mean and how can football be considered a really true Canadian tradition? Perhaps it is because I come from the province of Quebec, but I do not feel I could agree with this point. In my opinion, the tradition they are talking about here is the following: football provides the Prime Minister with a once a year opportunity to "kick the ball" and show himself in public in more or less garish outfits. This is what struck me especially, and if it is a tradition, I wonder if we could not do without it.

Further on, it is stated that it may contribute to create bonds. I agree, but is it the only way? Is that famous kick-off by the Prime Minister necessary? Is it not simply a mistake to refer to bonds, Mr. Speaker? It happens from time to time, at most once every ten years, that the Montreal club can take part in the Grey Cup finals. Then our kind friends from the West or Ontario will sing: "Alouette, gentille alouette". That is all, but there are thousands other opportunities to do that. I wonder why it is stated that football is a typically Canadian tradition which can be used to establish bonds. I do not deny that it can become a means to that end, but there are thousands other more important and constructive ways than that one.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to be brief and explain why I do not consider it a tradition. The few remarks I have made sum up well what I think. It does not create many ties. In any event, the occasions on which Canadians demonstrate together do not depend, to my mind on football since, in the final analysis, at the Grey cup festival, or show, call it what you will, it often happens that the basis of the event, the notion of sport, is totally lost.

I find it strange that this controversial bill should be introduced and should perturb some of our principles, while nothing has ever been done in other fields that are far more important than this one. If there is a Canadian sport tradition, Mr. Speaker, there is only one sport that can properly be associated with Canadian tradition and be said to create ties between all Canadians, and that is hockey. No one has ever been too concerned about it, to the extent where American professionalism has managed to take over, to all practical intents, a sport which in fact is our true national sport.

Mr. Speaker, by opposing hockey to football I want to prove that the preamble of the bill is misleading. It is not true that football is a truly Canadian sport. Back home in the riding of Champlain, I never see lads practicing that sport.

● (1540)

On television that is of little interest to Quebecers or French Canadians in general. The proof of that is that there are nearly no professional football players who are Quebecers or French Canadians. I say so not to bring in nationalism but to contradict the minister. It is not true that it is a national sport nor that it interests all Canadians.

There is a sport whether it be in St. John's, Newfoundland, in Quebec City or elsewhere in the province of Quebec, in Ontario, in B.C. or even in the Northwest Territories in which all Canadians are interested. They know it nearly from the day they are born. That sport is hockey. Since I think this bill has no raison d'être I could make a few suggestions. Since hockey is a truly national sport we could really help create genuine ties between Canadians by encouraging it. I would see examples to follow outside since the purpose of this bill is to preserve our little Canadian football very preciously. They do not want anybody to touch it. And I still wonder why.

Sport belongs to everyone. There are no reserved rights to any sport. Even if we were somewhat hurt in our pride when we lost the world amateur hockey championships the fact still remains that we are proud that our national sport was born and grew in Canada, became a world sport, particularly appreciated in Europe where it has been developed to such an extent that today in the amateur branch Europeans are better than we are.

Mr. Speaker, if we wanted to enhance somewhat the prestige of Canada, if we wanted to preserve something worthwhile we should consider developing our national sport at home a bit like the Russians do, Mr. Speaker. We could follow their example.

It would be marvelous to have in Canada a Canadian national league of high amateur or semi-professional calibre in which all provinces would be represented and we would have the best prospects in junior hockey in this country. We should encourage young players to play in that league, and it would be possible. Some kind of support, perhaps direct, should be given to amateur or semi-professional hockey. A Canadian national league should be established that would compare favorably with those existing in the USSR and which would include players from all the Canadian provinces. That would be a concrete and useful action for there is a lack in that area. Everything has been tried to piece together our crumbling national prestige in the field of hockey, and it has not been successful as yet. The two major professional leagues and all other professional leagues in general are now American and come to get our Canadian players. That is the prevailing situation.

If some legislation should really be passed in favour of sport and if it is desired to implement the principles indicated in the preamble of Bill C-22, I think, Mr. Speaker, that it has been a failure. Hockey, and not football, should have been the object of this bill. There should be some motivation for Canadians to preserve their really national sport, in order to help not only hockey as such but all the youth of Canada to have the ambition one day of playing in a truly Canadian league made up of the best players. I think that this is possible, and if the minister wants suggestions, we will make them.

At any rate, I do not know what has bitten the minister for putting forward this legislation when the situation is growing more critical and that we are facing all kinds of problems. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the minister wants us to pass a legislation on Canadian football which, in my view, is not a national sport in Canada. You can check it by asking Quebecers if they are interested in it. I am sure they are just as much and perhaps even more interested in American football. Anyway, the preamble does not correspond at all with the hon. minister's intent.

As regards his primary purpose, I do not say it is wrong. I think that his intent was basically good, but the minister does not achieve the goal he is aiming at by putting forward a bill designed to safeguard Canadian football at all costs. And yet there is no evidence that, because professional teams that belong to other leagues are playing in Canada, Canadian football as we know it will disappear. Mr. Speaker, what can lead it to disappear—and this is about to happen in Montreal—is the fact that not enough people are watching it, as it happened last year. Football will not disappear as a result of any bill or the sudden arrival in Canada of American financiers who want to enable teams to play in Canada, but rather the fact that people are no longer interested in football. When no more spectators watch the games, bankruptcy is at the door. This is what can happen, with or without any bill, since we will never oblige spectators to watch games they are not interested in.

I think the hon. minister tried to give a fantastic kick, but he missed the target.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, within 60 seconds, I will sit down as a protest against the distortions of a decaying government bringing football legislation before us when the country is crippled with transportation and postal strikes, layoffs are multiplying, flood waters are rampaging in the west, housing prices are scandalously high and inflation is savaging the economy. People want to get Canada back together again. But all the Liberal government can offer is a football.

I favour protecting the community football clubs of western Canada. But, with Peter Newman, I say that "The prairies wouldn't vote Liberal if Pierre Trudeau became water boy for the Regina Roughriders". The Liberals are bankrupt. Give us important legislation—or give us an election!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1550)

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, the contribution by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) may be the most significant that has yet been given in the context of this debate. Perhaps it is appropriate for me to begin my remarks in a debate like this by stating some basic propositions. These propositions may be seen as fundamental goals and objectives. It may be they will meet with general agreement in this House and across the country.

The first proposition is that the Canadian game of football is unique. It is different in form from its American counterpart. It is probably preferred by the majority of Canadians.

The second proposition is that the Canadian Football League, as the only professional league in which Canadian football is played, should be given an opportunity to continue as an entertainment and sporting vehicle for Canadian fans. It should also provide professional career opportunities for aspiring young Canadians.

The third proposition is that the Grey Cup Game, being about the closest thing Canada has to a national festival, should be preserved as a vehicle for bringing together Canadians from east and west in a sporting context.

I am sure the government will agree with those three propositions. Indeed, in the preamble to the bill before us, I detect a certain sympathy for them. Where I quarrel with the government is in the actual means it has employed to achieve the goals and objectives I have stated, and perhaps others which I have not stated.

I would first observe that the government appears to have been putting its head in the sand by refusing to recognize what is happening in professional sports in North America. I need only make a passing reference to pro hockey expansion, pro baseball expansion, pro basketball expansion, pro lacrosse expansion and pro tennis expansion to indicate generally what I mean. Consumer demand for professional sports is increasing, precipitated largely by television coverage. Professional opportunities for good young players, regardless of their country of origin, have almost doubled in a very short period of time.

What is happening with football? We all remember the American Football League, a bunch of upstarts who could not hold a candle to the Canadian Football League, let alone the National Football League. Where is the AFL now? It has emerged as part of a giant major league operation in the country to the south of us.

Through evolution, we now see a third major league on its way up. The important thing for Canadians to remember is that the price is going up. It is just like oil. The supply of players for the most part has remained constant, but the demand has been increasing. What happens when demand increases and supply remains about the same? The price goes up. Regardless of what the government of Canada does, regardless of what this parliament does and regardless of what legislation is actually enacted as the law of this country, there is going to be a significant impact on Canadian professional football by economic events I have described in the North American context.

The salaries of players are going up regardless of whether we have legislation. The cost of equipment and stadia, is going up regardless of whether we have legislation. There is going to be more competition in television from the new U.S. leagues regardless of what happens to this bill. Most important, there is going to be some raiding of the Canadian Football League. There is going to be a significant amount of raiding if this bill goes through.

What about this purely Canadian league which the government is attempting to insulate from international competition? This bill does not say anything about salaries. There is nothing here about the cost of equipment and stad to our Canadian cities. There is nothing about television competition from the leagues to the south. Indeed, the government owned CBC is apparently going to continue to nurture Canadian interest in the American game by televising NFL games on Sunday. Most important, there is nothing in this bill about the raiding that will go on.

One of the significant practical implications of events to date leading up to the introduction of this bill has been the guarantees given by Canadian owners of the Toronto franchise in the World Football League. There have been guarantees related to equalization and no television competition, which I will describe and go into in a moment. I think the most important guarantee was with regard to raiding. I wish to quote from a document which was presented to all members of parliament and the government by the owners of the Northmen. I quote:

> If we remain in Canada, we are prepared to urge upon our associates the adoption of the same policy against the signing of "futures".

That is a policy between the National Football League and the CFL.

> Since our associates are anxious to have a team located in Toronto we would expect them to accept this suggestion. If the signing of "futures" is permitted to continue, we would expect that fully 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the present name players in the Canadian Football League will not be playing in the CFL next year.

If the Northmen are allowed to play in Toronto, there will be an attempt to avoid the signing of CFL players into that new league. That is a league promise, not a Northmen promise. It is not a Northmen threat of any sort, but a fact of life of the WFL. It is a statement and a guarantee that we have every indication they will be prepared to live up to.

I have given the international and the North American background to professional football and professional sports generally. Strangely enough, when this government is dealing with a matter such as inflation, it is only too willing to blame international factors as being the cause of the problem. They throw up their collective arms and say "We can do nothing about it; it is international in nature." However, when the matter comes down to a really important aspect such as the game of football, what happens to the international aspect of it? It is ignored. We have "head-in-the-sand", restrictive prohibitive legislation as the immediate solution. As virtually every speaker from this side of the House has said, the government has got its priorities mixed up.

To put it in a nutshell, my fear is that this legislation may do more harm to the Canadian game of football, the Canadian Football League and the Grey Cup than would be the case if the government had kept its nose out of the whole area of professional sport. Canadian football is a good game. I happen to like it. I watch a lot of it over television and I attend the occasional Argo game. In the words of Russ Jackson, we in Toronto have to look at some of the practical and economic facts of life. Russ Jackson, who is no stranger to Canadian football, said "Toronto is a strong enough football town to support both the Argonauts and the World Football League."

I hope the CFL will survive. I hope the Argos will survive and prosper within that league. Indeed, they may even win the Grey Cup some day. However, with a potential market of some two to three million people in this country, the Argos playing to a packed house and many thousands of Torontonians unable to get access to the stadium to watch that fabulous team, the addition of another professional team should not warrant the kind of negative concern that emanated from the government benches and which is manifested in the bill before us today.

If this bill passes, what will happen to the Northmen? What will the impact be on the CFL? We saw in this morning's paper that the Northmen may go to Seattle. I ask all hon. members from southern British Columbia what impact this will have on the Vancouver Lions. Television rights will be involved. Northmen games will be beamed right into Vancouver. I suggest that from time to time a busload of people will go to Seattle to watch the games.

● (1600)

Alternatively, the Northmen may go to Buffalo. What would happen in that case? I am told that some 5,000 Torontonians presently journey to Buffalo every Sunday to watch the Buffalo Bills. It would not be difficult for the owners of the Northmen to lay on extra buses, a few extra trainloads, and take thousands and thousands of Torontonians down to Buffalo, or for the CTV network or for the major radio stations in the Toronto area to continue to broadcast those games because of the factor of Canadian ownership of the team which enables it to qualify as having Canadian content. What will happen to the Argos in this context, particularly when there is this real possibility that the World Football League will be taking the most important Canadian players out of our country and into their league? I think we can see the direction in which the whole shooting match can go.

I have put the argument in favour of not passing legislation with the intent to preserve Canadian football and the Canadian Football League and the Grey Cup. But let us look at the other side of the question, since we ought to be realistic and honest in a debate such as this. What if the Canadian Football League is too weak to face the competition in the marketplace? Despite the recent pleas of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) in the debate on the competition bill for more competition in professional sport, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) insists on proceeding with this protectionist measure. Let us take a hard look at what he is protecting. On Thursday, the minister told us why he feels the CFL is more Canadian than apple pie. I quote:

> The only completely Canadian-controlled professional sports league in Canada is the CFL.

Take a look at the Canadian Football League. Seventy-five per cent of all revenue generated by that league is paid into the hands of Americans. Virtually every quarterback, coach and general manager in the Canadian Football League is an American, or was an American when he entered the league. The star players, the ones the fans pay to see, are Americans for the most part. Finally, an increasing number of the Canadians who do make the big time, maybe one third, who are good enough to become well paid stars in the CFL, receive their early training at United States colleges, playing the American game. This is the league we are preserving as a Canadian league.

The truth is that the CFL cannot be effectively isolated from the North American marketplace. It never has been and the government may be hypocritical that it can be, now. If the government is really serious about Canadianizing the CFL it would have carried its legislation much further. Let me suggests some additional clauses it might have inserted. It would have increased the minimum Canadian content in terms of players to 75 per cent. Or why not carry it right through to 100 per cent so that all the players would be Canadians—no imports at all would be allowed.

Allow me to suggest a further amendment. The minister and the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) have made noises about new Canadian teams entering the CFL—teams from London, Ontario, and Halifax-Dartmouth were suggested. Why not tell the CFL to put its money where its mouth is? Why not make provision in this bill whereby any Canadian city of reasonable size which can provide a stadium with 20,000 seats would be entitled as of right to a CFL franchise? This would be the kind of quid pro quo the government should demand for giving to the CFL the protection it is giving the league in the bill before us.

But looking at the issue seriously, we all know that the CFL is really not all that Canadian. There are only limited opportunities open to aspiring young Canadian footballers to make it into the big time in the league. The big salaries will still go to the Americans, as they always have. The all-star positions, the Schenley awards, will still go to Americans, as has been the case for some 25 years. On the other hand, the Toronto entry into the World Football League would open up new opportunities for good Canadian players. It has already done so, Mr. Speaker, just as the World Hockey League has opened up an entirely new career vista for young Canadian hockey players.

In the context of the debate today, I think I should at least raise the spectre of possible retaliatory legislation on the part of the United States Congress. How many hundreds of good Canadian hockey players are making their professional living in the United States right now, and how many legislators in the Senate or Congress of the United States have been approached by constituents saying: Why cannot we enjoy a measure of protection to allow young American hockey players to make it into the big time? Why cannot we Americanize the game of hockey? After all, the Stanley Cup is becoming an American institution—it goes more often, now, to an American city than to a Canadian city, and this year is no exception. We have seen already the beginnings of a lobby in the United States Congress and Senate, a retaliatory lobby which restrictive legislation of the type now before us is bound to precipitate. I think this is bad. Many of our young hockey players have found a whole new world of possibilities opened up to them and I, for one, would not wish to support legislation which might have the effect of restricting that prospect for them.

What has the Minister of National Health and Welfare done beside issue an occasional threat and, of course, issue the bill we are now considering? Perhaps he could tell us at some time during the debate, if not in committee, what communication he has had with the executives of the National Football League, or with its president. After all, that is the league which is the big threat, the league which may well go into Montreal. In many respects, the Toronto Northmen and the WFL are being made scapegoats. Has he attempted to extract from the president of the NFL an undertaking not to come into Canada because doing so would run contrary to government policy? I have seen no evidence of any such communications, and I would be delighted to hear the minister or his parliamentary secretary outline to us the form and nature of any communications with the National Football League.

I would also ask the minister what communication has taken place with the Mayor of Montreal. The Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) might care to tell us what communication he has had with the Mayor of Montreal in connection with the new stadium which is to be financed at least in part through a scheme for the sale of coins and postage stamps which is federally sponsored. I understand that the minister did indeed talk with the Mayor of Montreal immediately before he delivered his speech in Regina on February 21, and that no undertaking was forthcoming from the Mayor at that time with regard to the use of the Olympic Stadium for the purposes of the National Football League. It may be the Mayor has since seen the light. It may be that he will be willing to compromise. I should like to see some evidence that an attempt has been made to communicate with the Mayor of Montreal. I know an attempt has been made to communicate with the Mayor of Toronto and with the Metropolitan Chairman in that city.

But what we do know, on the minister's own admission, is that he did not communicate with the owners of the Toronto Northmen prior to his speech in Regina on February 21, notwithstanding the fact that the establishment of that WFL franchise in Toronto was announced six months earlier, in August 1973. The news appeared, of course, in all the daily newspapers and was broadcast throughout the country. It was well known not only to sports fans but, I suggest, to the government. My feeling is that if the minister were willing to communicate a little more readily he would need to legislate a little less. To his credit, the minister conducted two meetings with the owners of the Northmen in mid-March, after he had let the axe fall in Regina on February 21.

But despite all the guarantees the owners of the Northmen were willing to provide, a guarantee to make up the loss of equalization, a guarantee not to expand the league into any other city, a guarantee of no competing national television coverage, and a guarantee that there would be no raiding, the minister on April 10 brought forth a bill which is restrictive and retroactive, virtually cutting off all communication. In other words, the minister threw down the gauntlet and they are prepared to do battle. I find that course of behaviour a little strange, particularly in view of the comments made by the hon. member for York West who followed the minister as the only other government speaker who has had the nerve to enter this debate.

I quote from that hon. member for York West, who I am delighted to see in his place, who gave his version of how communications were operating between the government and those to be affected by this bill:

> I remind my hon. friends opposite that the government was forced to legislate, after having made its policy eminently clear through the former minister of national health and welfare some 17 months ago, and reaffirmed by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) when he took over that portfolio. The government was forced into legislating, and now this bill is before the House.

I ask hon. members and all the people in the Toronto area, who forced the government? Where is this great body of opinion that required the government to come forward in response to this widespread demand? The government was forced by whom? I suggest that the hon. member for York West may have his political blinkers on because he said later in his speech:

> I am confident that the overwhelming majority of Torontonians, given a chance to understand this issue, are going to support the government—

The hon. member for York West has put his neck on the line. Let him come out and speak in Toronto on this very issue.

Interestingly enough, a committee that has been formed in Toronto, to actively consider the issue which we are now debating in this House, and which will hold meetings in the City Hall in Toronto. It is the committee of Toronto fans for football. It has issued an invitation I believe to every member of the House of Commons to attend and participate in the debate, to come forward with views. There have been a number of people accept the invitation to this meeting but, strangely enough, the only supporter of the bill who has yet to acknowledge the invitation and indicate he will attend has been the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Cafik). I am delighted, of course, that he will be there, but I had hoped we might have one member in support of the bill from Toronto.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On the basis of my assumption, and you may rule that I am wrong, from the comments of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), that he is suggesting some people in the House of Commons from the Toronto area are not responding to the invitation, and may thereby be avoiding the responsibility they have to their constituents in Toronto, I should like to say I did not receive any invitation to that particular meeting until this morning. I must say I have a previous commitment to attend an anniversary celebration for the State of Israel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I think that is more of an explanation than a point of order.

Mr. Atkey: I thank the hon. member for York West for that intervention. I intend to be at the same anniversary celebration, and I will catch the plane from there down to Toronto. I will be pleased to make airline reservations for the hon. member if he cares to attend with me.

If that is not enough of a negative impact for the people of Toronto, the Minister of National Health and Welfare had the audacity to perpetrate what really has been the greatest fraud on the people of Toronto that perhaps this House has ever seen. I refer to the minister's statement, which was not issued in this House but given to the press, as is the usual practise of this government, concerning television blackouts in the city of Toronto when the Argonaut games are sold out. I quote from that statement so it cannot be suggested that I am in any way misleading members:

> One of the concerns articulated by the people of Toronto has been the inability to see their team play, because of games being sold out. While plans to expand the Toronto stadium may eventually contribute to alleviating this situation, any such expansion may take some time and still might not meet the demand for seats. Accordingly, an undertaking has been given by the owner of the Argonauts that on an experimental basis, and beginning this season, the television blackout would be lifted when it was established in advance that the game would be a sellout. The minister is fully aware that such a decision cannot be made by any individual CFL club without the approval of other clubs in the League, but the Commissioner of the CFL has undertaken to put such a proposition before the other CFL club members, and to encourage its acceptance.

That is the sop to the people of Toronto, and it might be a meaningful sop if the government could do what it has promised. What the minister forgot to tell the people of Toronto was that there had to be some other approvals which might not be forthcoming. It is one thing for him not to tell the public of Canada that there had to be approval of the Canadian National Exhibition, which actually owns the stadium and has certain contractual rights, of which the minister was well aware as he is a lawyer. He is well aware, too, that the Argonaut owner, just because of a unilateral representation from the federal government, cannot back out of his contracts. Indeed, I believe the commissioner of the CFL, or the Argonaut president, Lou Hayman, said on the weekend that in addition to the approval of other teams in the CFL, they will have to honour their contract with the CNE, because that contract gives the CNE the right to approval as well.

As if that were not enough, there is this other indication that the owners of the Argonauts have certain contractual obligations with the radio station. In this case it happens to be a rather substantial contractual obligation with Radio Station CFTR, which entered into the agreement before all this matter arose, with certainly a large amount of money involved, I think in the area of $125,000 the first year, for exclusive rights to broadcast Argonaut home games. If there is going to be no television blackout when the stadium is sold out, the radio rights are not going to be worth nearly as much as they would otherwise be, as people will watch the television as opposed to listening to the radio when they cannot go to see the game, and the owner of the Argonauts knew of this contractual right when he gave his undertaking to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I am not suggesting that the minister knew of this contractual right, but again I am putting before the House the fact that the minister is a lawyer and now has become somewhat of an expert, I hope, on how professional football teams operate. He should have realized he was holding out a false promise, which may in fact be the cruelest hoax on the people of Toronto, to suggest that TV blackouts will be lifted. The minister does not have any guarantee, and neither does Mr. Gaudaur, that there will be an agreement forthcoming from every CFL team, and indeed there may be some indication to the contrary. I am happy to sit back and watch what happens in that regard, but for the moment I think it is cruel, and it may be somewhat deceitful, for the government to hold out to the people of Toronto the hope that next fall they will see Argonaut home games on television.

Mention has already been made by two hon. members, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) about the problem of the constitutional validity of Bill C-22. This is a complex matter and perhaps one that is better argued in the courts than in the House of Commons. After all, though, the House of Commons is regarded by many as the highest court of the land and I think it would be inappropriate if not irresponsible if opposition members were to let a bill of this nature pass without commenting on the constitutional problem which appears so obvious on the face of the legislation. I refer specifically to this most restrictive clause of the bill, Clause 6 which reads:

> Subject to this section, no person owning, operating or managing a football team within a foreign league shall require or permit that team to play football in Canada.

Subclause (2) reads:

> Subject to this section, no person shall play football within Canada as a member of, or as a player on, a football team within a foreign league.

Subclause (3) merely goes on to provide an exception in the case of exhibition games. How can the federal government justify the constitutional validity of this particular clause? Prior to the introduction of the bill we heard reference to trade and commerce powers, and we have also heard reference from time to time to the powers of the government in respect of immigration in the British North America Act. We have heard reference during this debate to the emergency power, the so-called peace, order and good government power of the federal parliament. Of course, the federal government has undisputed jurisdiction over criminal law and procedure under Section 127 of the British North America Act.

● (1620)

I think at the very least it should be incumbent on the minister, when he knew there were problems in respect of the constitutional validity of this bill, to explain the justification upon which the government was prepared to rely to support the validity of this bill. I say to the minister and to his parliamentary secretary that these may be the type of questions opposition members will want to put to the minister and his officials when the bill goes to the committee in the very near future. It will go to the committee very shortly provided it survives the vote, which is questionable. There is a question in my mind concerning how one can support legislation which focuses on the playing of a game within a province. This legislation does not relate to a commercial process or interprovincial or international boundaries. It contains a criminal prohibition relating to the playing of a game. The criminal sanction is invoked when the player in that game or the person who happens to be owner, manager or coach is with a team belonging to a foreign league. In other words, the crime is belonging to a foreign league and playing the game of football.

It has already been pointed out by several speakers that legislation relating to the playing of a game, traditionally at least, has fallen within the purview of the province. About the only legislation to my knowledge that has been supported as valid federal legislation related to the playing of games relates to pinball machines. This type of legislation, which is included in the Criminal Code, has been sustained on the ground that it has an element of immorality attached to it. In other words, there is something morally wrong or mischievous about playing this machine. Perhaps it leads to an unreasonable propensity to gamble. I challenge the government to prove what moral aspect exists in respect of playing football in Canada merely because the people involved happen to be part of a foreign league.

I predict what will happen is that this legislation will be in trouble when it goes before the courts. I say in all seriousness that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who apparently drafted this bill has the statutory obligation to check the provisions of this bill to determine whether or not they are constitutional in respect of the Canadian Bill of Rights. The phrase in the Canadian Bill of Rights to which I refer is "equality before the law". There are certain protections in respect of equality before the law and against discrimination on account of national origin which exist in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

[Mr. Atkey.]

In the first instance, I think the Minister of Justice has a statutory obligation to come before the House and say that he has checked the bill and that it is constitutional in that it complies with the Canadian Bill of Rights. As the government well knows, it is open to any person affected by legislation, including the government itself, to test the bill to determine its consistency or inconsistency with the Canadian Bill of Rights. I repeat that I think the government has the duty to come forward and say that the law officers have looked at this legislation and that in their opinion it is proper. This has not taken place.

In conclusion I wish to ask some questions about the implications of this bill in relation to things other than professional football. I might ask what are the implications of this legislation in respect of other sports. We have heard mention of hockey, baseball and soccer. I am sure the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) would be interested in this game and the implications of this bill related to professional soccer as played in Toronto. Let us consider other forms of entertainment and culture such as ballet, music, opera, theatre and painting. What are the implications of restrictive legislation of this sort in that area? I find this a little frightening. I hesitate to use the term but I think we must consider this. There has been a great national debate about football.

One of the most prominent figures in this debate now is the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Some sports columnists have suggested that this legislation is devious. I think that is unfair. Some suggest it has been introduced for partisan political purposes. I think that is unfair. Indeed, I think if the Minister of National Health and Welfare thought about it and considered the political winds of change, he would realize that this bill may not bring any political advantage. I think the minister was serious in bringing forward the bill. If I can be charitable, I believe he was ill advised perhaps in doing so. That is the way I would characterize his attempt to enact this legislation, and apparently it is too late at least in his opinion to withdraw this bill.

Today during the question period the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said we should end this debate and move on to other things. He agreed with the comments of questioners from this side of the House and said that the simplest way to move on to other things would be for those on this side of the House to stop talking. I think I can speak for most of us on this side of the House when I say that we will end this debate immediately if the government will do the one thing it should do under the circumstances, and that is to withdraw the bill.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I say I regret that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has seen fit to involve himself in professional sports. We are all aware of the fact that hon. members of this House welcome the idea of the physical fitness and amateur sports assistance made available by the government. I think it is more fact than rumour that the NHL headquarters will be moving out of Montreal when Mr. Campbell completes his term of office. There goes the national aspect of the Canadian game! Will the minister be prepared to introduce legislation to compel the National Hockey League—we have only three teams left in this country—to keep its headquarters in this country where it belongs. We might look at the preamble to the bill. It begins this way:

Whereas football has an established tradition in Canada as witnessed by the Cup symbolizing football supremacy in Canada, which was donated by His Excellency, the late Governor General Earl Grey in 1909 for that purpose;

That is absolutely false and incorrect. I am under the impression that probably the minister received some pretty bad advice from Senator Keith Davey whose tenure of office as Commissioner of the football league did not see him through one season. I think the failure of Senator Davey has a lot to do with the minister being poorly advised.

● (1630)

Now we come to the definitions in the bill and we find the following one:

"football" means Canadian football and American football but does not include soccer or rugby;

How has the minister gone so wrong? In the first place, let me point out that Governor General Earl Grey donated the Grey Cup for rugby football, not professional football. In those days rugby football was played as an amateur sport. On what has the minister based himself? The minister referred to all the things that have been said in favour of the action proposed by the government in this bill. He quoted various authorities. He quoted the players' associations, and he came up with the name of George Reed who is an American. I want it completely understood here that I am not criticizing George Reed as a football player. His contribution to the game in Canada has been outstanding. No man has ever established the records that he has, nor do I think anyone will for a long time approach the record that this man has established. He has meant much to the game in Canada and to the team for which he plays. George Reed stands alone in this particular sport. He has been symbolic of the best there is. However, when the minister, speaking about protecting the Canadian Football League, quotes an American player, I think he is straying far from the intention of his legislation.

Now let us speak for a minute about the game itself and the importance of competition. I think, personally, that the establishment of more teams in Canada is good. It will certainly provide greater opportunities for a greater number of Canadians to participate in the sport in view of the fact that a certain number of them will have to fill up the rosters. It is a possibility that the opening up of opportunities and the establishment of more teams will cause the deterioration of the game. But that does not mean a thing. It is competition that makes the game, no matter what type of game is being played.

I can say without fear of contradiction that the worst game of hockey I ever watched was between the Chicago Black Hawks and the Toronto Maple Leafs. I watched the best players and at the same time I watched the worst game. It is the competition that counts. Horseracing fans in this country will know that a race run in two-eighteen or two-twenty can be just as exciting as one run in two flat because of the competition. It is what is happening at the end of the game which makes the game itself come alive—it is competition.

I am also somewhat disturbed about the geography brought in here. First we talk about Vancouver, and then we come all the way down to Montreal. I always understood that the country stretched from Victoria to St. John's, Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The bill refers to the national aspects of the game. There is nobody more fond of watching American football than I am. Even if I have to be fed my supper watching television—we are not too sophisticated down in Nova Scotia and we still have supper in the evening—I will not miss any of the game. If necessary, I will stay up after midnight watching the games from the west coast which we do not get until after midnight in the east. I follow the game; I like the game; I like to watch Sunday afternoon games. I will not support anything here that will deprive me or anyone else in eastern Canada of the opportunity of watching American football games on Sunday afternoons. While in Ottawa I like nothing better than to watch American college teams perform. I think that they perform more excitingly than any of the professional leagues. They may lack a good deal in finesse but they make up for it in desperation, and to me that makes for a better game.

When we talk about the geography of the country and the national aspect of this game we overlook the fact that eastern Canada does not stop in Montreal and that western Canada does not stop in Vancouver. Reference is made to the financial aspect and to what the league is doing for the teams in the amateur ranks in Canada. Let me point out that what they are doing is purely in their own interests. If there is any subsidy given by professional sports in this country to give an opportunity to the younger men in the sport, it is done with the sole purpose of pulling these young men into the professional league and the professional team. It is self-serving and the assistance is not provided under physical fitness and amateur sports legislation which is something worthwhile. Believe me, professional sport is a business and any financial assistance they give to any minor league team is given with one purpose in mind, to strengthen their own position.

Earlier I spoke about the donation of the Grey Cup by the late Governor General Earl Grey in 1909 and the fact that the definition in the bill states that football is Canadian football and American football, but does not include soccer or rugby. This is absolutely wrong. I still say, and if I were still involved I would make the claim, that any rugby team in Canada that can prove itself superior can lay claim to the Grey Cup which was originally intended as a rugby award. Somehow or other Canadian football got past the Rules and the Grey Cup was awarded to professionals playing Canadian football, but it was never donated for any such purpose in the first place.

Let me tell you something about the history of the game. Originally the first game was rugby. When we talk about the international game we know that rugby football has a far greater appeal on the world scene than either the Canadian or American football games. I think we would all admit that probably soccer is the greatest of the international games, the game which is played in most countries. Perhaps now that the European countries have taken up hockey, we could consider hockey to be close to the top also. I would say that basketball also has gone up a long way in popularity. It was the Canadians who invented basketball and the Americans took it over.

However, speaking of international games, rugby must be up at the top in popularity. The French team is one of the leading teams in Europe. We have all heard of the New Zealand All Blacks—a famous name for years. They are playing Wales, Scotland and Ireland. They have played all over Europe, in Canada and the United States as well. A few moments ago someone mentioned that soccer is becoming professionalized. Indeed, Toronto has a soccer team in the professional league. Why is there so much emphasis on the Canadian-American football game? What I will say now may be a denial of what I originally said. I enjoy watching the game, but I have no choice. However, I will try to give members of the House an opportunity to see a game later this week. I have arranged to have a film shown here and I invite everybody here to look at that film. It will show a game played between the New Zealand All Blacks and the Barbarians. You will see 80 minutes of sustained action. This is the game for which the Grey Cup was originally intended.

I say that with proper promotion amateur football can take over in this country. You will be watching a football spectacle that will make your Grey Cup games look like child's play in comparison. Why do I say that? Because in this game a player goes on the field for 80 minutes. What do our professionals do? Probably they play for 15, 17 or 18 minutes, and between the shuffle that goes on between the bench, the field and the delays, the game lasts three hours. I intend to watch 60 minutes of football and it takes me three hours to do it. With amateur sports you get 80 minutes of football all wrapped up in an hour and a half or an hour and 40 minutes. This is sustained action. You will see the pro coming off the bench; he will run down the field 75 yards, either complete the run or miss a pass and the coach will give him a breather. This is professional sport. There is sustained action for 80 minutes; there is continuous football, such as the Grey Cup was originally intended for.

● (1640)

As we delve into the history of the game, what do we find? The game which was played by the American ivy league by Rutgers, Brown, Princeton, Harvard, Yale and other similar colleges, is based on English football. We call it English football in my area; actually we should refer to it as rugby football. How did the American game develop to its present form? According to history, and I am talking off the top of my head but have read the facts, Harvard built an enormous stadium, only to find that not enough room was left for the playing surface. They had to narrow the field, therefore, cut down the length and begin innovating with regards to the rules. That is how we developed the forward pass, which is supposed to make the game so glamorous. I sound as if I hate the game, but I do not. I like to watch sports events and will continue to watch in future. I hope I will not be denied the opportunity by the ridiculous measure the minister has brought before the House.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

The game as we know it developed from rugby football, and began because some people decided to reduce the dimensions of the playing field and make innovations in the rules. The minister has stepped into the area of professional sport. What will this do for the development of football in Canada? I don't know. I think he is playing a dangerous game. I have learned that the Senate of the United States is considering measures of retaliation whereby they will restrict the number of Canadian hockey players who may play on American NHL teams. Perhaps this will turn some players loose. They could come back to Canada and be absorbed in an NHL team, go to Winnipeg, or possibly Ottawa. We all know what happened to the last professional hockey team that tried to establish itself in Ottawa. I think we are playing a dangerous game when we tamper with professional sports. We are becoming involved with business. The minister may be restricting the entry of Americans to our game, but he is running the risk of having our hockey players excluded from the United States.

That brings me to another point. Look at what happened to the Canadian intercollegiate basketball finalists not long ago. What went on was shameful. There is a small university in Nova Scotia which has a tremendous record in intercollegiate sports. It was finalist two years in a row in intercollegiate hockey, winner of the 1973 Canadian football championship and won last year the Canadian basketball championship. Again this year, the team was a finalist in the Canadian basketball championship.

When that team went to play, what happened? There were three American players in the line-up and what anthem did the band play? Did it play O Canada? Not on your life. It was decided, because there were three Americans on the team, that the band would play the Star Spangled Banner. Is this the way to treat a maritime university because there are three American players on the team; is that any reason to play the American national anthem rather than the Canadian national anthem? Is this the kind of treatment we can expect for people east of Montreal.

The preamble to the bill is based on facts which are not correct. Look at the history of the game. The Grey Cup trophy was never intended to be a trophy for professional sports. It was intended for the best team playing rugby football, and rugby football developed into American style football through an accident. If you want to see real football, you should see a film which is available from Toronto. You will see, 80 minutes of sustained action. At the least you will see 45 minutes of action. You will see football as it should be played. You will not see players spending 20 or 25 minutes in a huddle, or using up time in scrimmages. The game is fast moving. Let me tell you, if professional athletes had to perform in the way these players perform for 80 minutes, they would be exhausted. You will be most impressed with these players. I urge members to see the film.

Returning to my original theme, what will the minister do if the Americans decide to retaliate and exclude NHL players from participating with American teams, or limit the number of Canadian hockey players who may play with an American team. As I said, there is a bill to that effect coming before the American Senate. It requires a certain percentage of players on American teams to be Americans. If that bill is enacted into law, many would-be Canadian hockey players will be denied opportunities because of the geographic area from which they come. What about the subsidy, in a manner of speaking, which is to be provided by the professional football league in Canada. Will it apply to Cape Breton, to Nova Scotia, to P.E.I., to Newfoundland and to other areas?

I have not listened to the debate up to now. However, as soon as I looked at the first paragraph of the preamble to the bill, I knew the minister was wrong. In addition, the definition section of the bill says, football means Canadian football and American football but does not include soccer or rugby. That is entirely wrong and flies in the face of why Governor General Grey in 1909 presented the trophy. That section and that preamble constitute an absolute denial of the original reason for presenting the Grey Cup.

In making these remarks I do not intend to involve myself in the financial aspects or the TV coverage aspect of Canadian or American football. Again, I say on my own behalf and on behalf of lots of people in the maritime provinces that, if this bill becomes law, we may be denied the opportunity to watch games, as we have done in the past.

The physical fitness and amateur sport legislation is well worth supporting. I think it is supported by members on both sides of the House. I have, at times, criticized what is going on within the responsible department; I have also criticized groups who have come forward for financial assistance under the act. For instance, I do not consider chess to be a game which deserves financial support from the physical fitness and amateur sport branch of the department. How much physical fitness are you developing when you sit down to play a game of chess? I think it should be directed into those sports which are strictly amateur in nature. Later, there is nothing to prevent an amateur from turning professional, of course. The preamble to this bill is absolutely wrong, absolutely false and inaccurate. You can apply any adjective you wish, but it does not belong in the legislation nor does discrimination, as I outlined, in the definition.

● (1650)

I hope the minister will stop heeding the bad advice he is getting, which I assume comes from the short-lived commissioner, Senator Davey. I could be wrong but there is no doubt in my mind that this matter has been brought before parliament strictly on a political basis. It is strictly political. What they hope to gain I do not know, but I do not see how restricting competition can do any good.

If Americans begin to retaliate there will not be much left and in the end we will probably get back to what was originally intended—that is, playing a game of football for 80 minutes of sustained play rather than 17 or 18 minutes per game for the professionals who have to stop for a breather after a 70 yard dash. In rugby union football you run 75 yards and get knocked on your butt. Then, you have to pick yourself up and run another 75 yards. There is none of this pampering.

This is a dangerous area in which the minister has moved. If he is going to be consistent in his approach to professional sports, I think he had better amend his bill to provide that the Montreal Expos baseball team should have a percentage of Canadian players. If the legislation applies to professional football, why not apply it to baseball and make the Expos use a percentage of Canadian players in their lineups. What would that do to professional baseball in the Montreal area? We all know it would absolutely chase it out of Montreal.

I do not think the minister has been properly advised on bringing in this bill. In fact, he has been poorly advised on the restrictive type of legislation which will only be detrimental to other professional sports throughout the country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—External Affairs—Charge by United Nations Secretary General that Canada engaged in brain drain of developing countries—government position; the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—Agriculture—Dairy policy, 1974-75—Assurance that producers will continue to operate; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Government Administration—Request for Royal Commission into increasing cost and effect in feeding inflation.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have run into some difficulty in connection with private members' hour. The arrangements made on Friday are not possible of consummation. Because of the strike in the air industry, the member who was to move the motion has been unable to attend. There have been consultations with the parties, and I think there would be agreement to move to public bill No. 120, standing in the name of the hon. member for Nipissing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Before going on, I was to recognize the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) before five o'clock.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, seeing that it is just a couple of minutes before five o'clock, I wonder if I could call it five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): That means there will be an hour and five minutes for private members' hour. Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lefebvre: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, we can call it six o'clock at three minutes to six. It will come to the same thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS—PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT PUBLICATION AND DESTROY RESULTS OF IDENTIFICATION PROCESS UPON ACQUITTAL

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing) moved: That Bill C-220, An Act to amend the Identification of Criminals Act, be read for the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to submit my first bill since I have been elected to this Chamber. I have many times had the opportunity to adopt a negative attitude towards bill submitted by other colleagues who are, in fact, here in the House. I was very sorry to see their bills dropped at the bottom of the list, because we did not have enough time to discuss them. I hope that this tradition will not be followed this time and that we will have the opportunity to see the bill I am now submitting to the House debated in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that, of course, the essential amendments I am now proposing to the bill regarding the identification of criminals be adopted, since I think they are vital. So that we may discuss this bill in committee, my participation will be very short, but clear and accurate.

The bill that I suggest be amended concerns the Identification of Criminals Act. This act allows the police, investigators, Crown officers, even before an individual is convicted, to prepare and compile a file for identification purposes in relation with this individual. However, this may present some difficulty. As everyone knows, there is a fundamental principle in our criminal justice system according to which every accused must be presumed innocent until proven guilty in court.

On various occasions, we have attempted to change this principle a little, but without success. However, I believe that the Identification of Criminals Act is in direct opposition to this principle which is part of the English common law and which we have always tried to sanctify, indeed, to perpetuate.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

● (1700)

[English]

One has to read section one very carefully. It speaks of the identification of criminals. Therefore, it speaks of the identification of people who, under our law are deemed to be criminals. Section 2 reads:

> Any person in lawful custody, charged with, or under conviction of an indictable offence, or who has been apprehended under the Extradition Act or the Fugitive Offenders Act, may be subjected, by or under the direction of those in whose custody he is, to the measurements, processes and operations practised under the system for the identification of criminals commonly known as the Bertillon Signaletic System, or to any measurements, processes or operations sanctioned by the Governor in Council having the like object in view.

I stress the fact that those people who are subjected to this system of identification are those in lawful custody or charged under a criminal statute. Under this bill, there is no necessity that the person be convicted, be brought before a tribunal, be arraigned or indicted. There is simply the need for that person to be lawfully arrested or charged. Whether that charge is proceeded with is of absolutely no merit.

The question is whether he has been charged and whether he is under lawful arrest. If those two criteria are met, the whole procedure of identification falls into place. That may not be absolutely detrimental to our whole system of criminal justice, but I draw Your Honour's attention to Section 3 which reads:

> No one having the custody of any such person, and no one acting in his aid or under his direction, and no one concerned in such publication, incurs any liability, civil or criminal, for anything lawfully done under this Act.

Sections 2 and 3 permit the complete publication of any information obtained through this identification procedure. It permits the dissemination of that information at any time without any limitation, notwithstanding the fact that that particular person has never been produced before any court in this country and has never been convicted of any offence. Therein lies the big fault of the statute as it now exists, namely that individuals are subjected to identification although there has only been a charge levelled against them and that information is subject to publication.

This can be done in any way the constabulary sees fit. There is no remedy offered under civil or criminal justice. Although Section 3 limits this publication only to those engaged in the execution or administration of the law, that particular group can be very wide indeed. That publication could be very detrimental. In the course of its publication, it could well be that the information is obtained by the press, news media or other citizens who may well want to make use of it even before the individual appears before a tribunal or is convicted. I draw Your Honour's attention to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, clause 2 reads as follows:

> 2. Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or feeedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to . . .

(f) deprive a person charged with a criminal offence of the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, or of the right to reasonable bail without just cause;

Mr. Speaker, I can see no way that this bill as it reads now can comply with the Canadian Bill of Rights.

This, Mr. Speaker, makes it a necessity to amend the bill, and I think the amendment I suggested is quite reasonable because it does not prevent identification but only the publication of information gathered by police officers. Its object is to force the court to destroy evidence after the case is heard and the individual is discharged.

[English]

It is essential that this bill be passed because it orders the destruction of cards and other results of the identification process wherever anyone has been acquitted of the offence with which he was charged or discharged under the recent amendments to the Criminal Code.

In conclusion, perhaps in anticipation of an argument which might be presented, I simply want to state my rejection of that argument. It has been indicated to me that this information serves to identify criminals who, although they have not been convicted before a court of the country, are engaged in criminal activity. I suggest that the exception must be very rare. It does not outweigh the right of any Canadian citizen to be deemed innocent until proven guilty and the right of a Canadian citizen to not have published throughout the country an indication that he is under criminal charge. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your attention.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the calling of Bill C-220 this afternoon gives me the opportunity to practice the fine art of turning the other cheek. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) is a frequent participant in debates on private members' bills and resolutions. I think I can say that when one of mine is before the House, he speaks with respect about it. He says what a fine person I am and so forth, but he always finds something wrong with my bill or resolution. I want to say to him at the outset, in terms that I want to make as unqualified as I can, that I see nothing wrong with this bill.

I recognize the arguments that will be put forward. There will be those who in the name of assisting the police and so on will say that the right to publish mug shots and fingerprints should be retained without restriction. However, I think the essential point made in this bill, and in the speech of the hon. member for Nipissing, is valid, namely that until a person is proven guilty, he is innocent and that until he is charged and brought before a court, he should not be treated as though he were a criminal. I believe, therefore, that the hon. member for Nipissing has done a service in drafting and presenting this bill. Its purpose is clear. It contends that mug shots, fingerprints and other means of identification used with respect to persons who are in trouble with the law should not be published before that person is brought before a court; and if such a person is found to be not guilty, those various forms of identification should be destroyed.

● (1710)

I listened with a good deal of interest to the wistfulness of the hon. member's plea that the House should not waste a full hour on this bill, but should deal with it quickly and send it to committee because it ought to be passed. I guess he was quoting me, because I have been saying that for years. I include this measure among the number of proposals by private members which come into this category as deserving of approval—deserving to be passed and enacted without undue delay. I hope it will receive second reading this afternoon so it can be sent to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of showing a negative attitude to this bill. On the contrary, I see many good aspects in the bill. However, I believe it may be somewhat excessive.

Amendments should indeed be made to the Identification of Criminals Act, but the destruction of all criminal identification would be in my opinion a serious mistake, especially in the case of acquittals, because there is no proof that where persons are acquitted of an offence, they do no commit other offences later on.

The acquitted person is in fact often guilty. There is no doubt about it in anybody's mind. But because of circumstances surrounding the crime, because of the reasonable doubt benefitting the accused, and often through some jurors' incompetence, the accused is acquitted. But it is not proven that he never does commit other offences later on.

I remember a famous hearing in Quebec City, a few years ago. A certain individual had been accused of kidnap and murder, and was later on acquitted. I will not discuss how the jury came to such a decision but one thing I am sure of is that to destroy signaletic cards or identification papers concerning that individual would be a very serious mistake. Also, to destroy certain identification papers concerning, let us say certain present activists taking advantage of labour conflicts in Quebec for instance, would also be at this time a serious mistake.

However, in the case of juvenile delinquents who are brought before the social welfare courts, one could say perhaps that the judge shows a little more flexibility and since fingerprints and mugshots are not used in that case, I believe it is a good thing. As regards people accused for instance of having used drugs for non-medical purposes, they have the benefit of getting a suspended sentence. There again, I suggest identification papers for fingerprints should not be used. But I am thinking of the dope pushers who are declared not guilty and in such cases, I do not believe the fingerprints should be destroyed.

As a matter of fact, when we visited penitentiaries this year, we were told that 85 per cent of the prisoners were repeaters. Therefore, one could perhaps wonder how many of them were acquitted the first time. Again, I say one cannot be sure that an acquitted person will not commit a second or even a third offence. I would have suggestions to make about that. Again, there is much to be said for Bill 220, but over-indulgence is the weakness in some clauses. For instance, I think identification papers, fingerprints or mugshots should be destroyed, let us say after ten years, if the person did not commit any other crime. I also think that certain signaletic cards should be destroyed in the case of certain types of persons. I refer to young people who commit a crime through an excess due to their age, do not commit any more during a period of five or eight years. I think their cards should be destroyed.

I would also make a difference as regards persons acquitted in the case of a very serious offence or breach of the law. I refer here to those accused of sexual offences who are later acquitted.

I feel that those people should be set aside in a special category and, at the end of five or six years, their files could be destroyed.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely against this bill but I would make certain amendments to it ensuring that the files of those who have been accused but not proven guilty are not completely destroyed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question! This is a Liberal bill.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I trust the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is calling "Question", does not wish to deny me the opportunity of taking part in this important debate. The fact that the motion has originated from the Liberal side is evidence of the many gifts possessed by those who sit with me in support of the government—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That means it will not get through.

Mr. MacGuigan: The House has probably devoted more attention in recent years to the subject of the convicted criminal than to the person whose case has not proceeded to a conviction. Several years ago we enacted the Criminal Records Act to provide a certain measure of relief in the case of people who had been convicted of offences, by way of directing that records shall, in a sense, be sealed after a certain period of time. Many of us who were involved with the progress of that bill, and the lengthy discussions which took place in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, are concerned about the fact that so few of the provinces have done much to follow up this legislation and ensure that a person who has been convicted is not placed in an invidious position. A person who is convicted and has been pardoned ought to be able to say when he is answering the question: "Have you been convicted?" "No." Or perhaps we should insist that the question be framed so as to read: "Have you ever been convicted of a crime of which you have not been pardoned?"

● (1720)

People come to me in a difficult dilemma as to how to answer, as they have been convicted of a crime, served their sentence and have subsequently been pardoned and they are asked in some form of government process or questioning, usually not at the federal level,—and that is where the problem comes in—"Have you ever been convicted of a crime?"

[Mrs. Morin.]

The clear intention of this legislation, which members of all parties of the House supported so strongly several years ago, was that persons should be able to answer "no" to that type of question, or at least have the assurance that the kind of question which could be asked would be very limited, indeed. There is a serious difficulty in the follow-up to the law by the provincial authorities. This parliament does not have complete legislative jurisdiction, as we all know, and there are many aspects of the problem which can be dealt with only by provincial law. I would suggest to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), who I understand does intend to bring in an amendment to this legislation during the present session, that he attempt to provide strong leadership to the provinces in order that the clear intention of parliament in this legislation can be observed.

I might also note along the same line that we have also provided that a person who is accused of an offence, and perhaps may even in a sense be guilty, may be given an absolute discharge before any conviction is registered. We have also done this to assist a person who either has committed an offence or, we might say, suspending judgment, may possibly have committed an offence. He is the kind of person we have been concerned about.

Referring to the explanatory note to this bill, we find pointed out there:

> The purpose of this Bill is to amend the Identification of Criminals Act to provide that the results of the identification process e.g., mug shots, fingerprints may not be published unless and until the person in question has been convicted of the offence for which he was charged and subjected to the identification process. Similarly, provision is made for prohibiting the publication and for destroying the results of the identification process when the person has been acquitted.

I think in order to understand the change which the hon. member is purporting to make through this bill we ought to look at the legislation which is being amended and which, incidentally, happens to be one of the shortest pieces of legislation on the federal statute books. The full title is "An Act respecting the identification of criminals", but is more often cited as the Identification of Criminals Act. Since this is such a short act, I should like to read it in its entirety to the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That will take a few minutes; it helps to fill out the time.

Mr. MacGuigan: I think the hon. member should allow me to make my own speech, Mr. Speaker, and I would note that he has taken up some time with his interjection. The second section of this legislation reads as follows:

> Any person in lawful custody, charged with, or under conviction of an indictable offence, or who has been apprehended under the Extradition Act or the Fugitive Offenders Act, may be subjected, by or under the direction of those in whose custody he is, to the measurements, processes and operations practised under the system for the identification of criminals commonly known as the Bertillon Signaletic System, or to any measurements, processes or operations sanctioned by the Governor in Council having the like object in view.
> (2) Such force may be used as is necessary to the effectual carrying out and application of such measurements, processes and operations.
> (3) The signaletic cards and other results thereof may be published for the purpose of affording information to officers and others engaged in the execution or administration of the law.

It is this publication of fingerprints, etc., which the hon. member wishes to bring dramatically to our attention today. He has illustrated for us that we have to consider the provisions I have just read also in connection with Section 3 of the same Identification of Criminals Act, which I shall again just draw to the attention of the House as follows:

> No one having the custody of any such person, and no one acting in his aid or under his direction, and no one concerned in such publication incurs any liability, civil or criminal, for anything lawfully done under this Act.

This Section 3 is a very broad exculpatory section which gives very complete, probably total, protection to all those who may act under Section 2 of the legislation and, therefore, is the kind of protection which the law should give only very cautiously.

As I understand the contention of the hon. member who proposes this legislation, he thinks we have not in the past in passing this legislation acted with sufficient care, and that the net covering what may be done, and what may be protected from potential lawsuit, has been cast far too wide. He proposes to remedy that by Bill C-220 which is before us for discussion this afternoon.

The actual changes the hon. member would make in the legislation, looking at the text of his Bill C-220, would be to change subsection 2(3) to the following:

> Where the person who has been subjected to the measurements, processes and operations under subsection (1)
>
> (a) has been convicted of the offence with which he was charged,
>
> (b) has been ordered to be surrendered or returned pursuant to the provisions of the Extradition Act or the Fugitive Offenders Act as the case may be, or
> (c) has escaped lawful custody,
> the signaletic cards and other results thereof may be published for the purpose of affording information to officers and others engaged in the execution or administration of the law.

His subsection (4) would be as follows:

> Where the person who has been subjected to the measurements, processes and operations under subsection (1) has been acquitted of the offence with which he has been charged, or has been discharged pursuant to the provisions of the Extradition Act or the Fugitive Offenders Act as the case may be, the court shall prohibit the publication and order the destruction of the signaletic cards and other results of the identification process.

I share some of the doubts that have been expressed about this bill by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), and I think perhaps the hon. member goes too far in what he proposes to do. As I understand the effect of his bill, and I trust I am reading this correctly, he would prohibit not only the giving of information in the public forum but would also prohibit the giving of it even in the internal forum of police work. The word that is used here in this section is "publish" and we normally think about this as publishing abroad, that is at large to the world. However, as we know from the traditional defamation action, publication can have a much more limited meaning than that. Even the contemporary connotation of "publish" in the written form in the newspaper or the monograph is not at all the only meaning of the word "publish". The word "publish" can be used even in respect of the transmission of an idea to a single person.

I recall that one committee of which I was a member decided for that reason that the word "publish" was not a very good word to use. This was the committee on hate propaganda which reported to the federal government in 1965. This led, of course, to the amendment to the Criminal Code dealing with the subject of hate propaganda. This committee in its deliberations thought that the word "communication" would be a more precise word in the context of what was in question there, because its meaning clearly went further in the direction of providing for a situation which the word "publish" is not normally presumed to include in our normal conversation, though it is actually included in the legal and technical dictionary meaning.

● (1730)

So, I think the effect of the bill which my hon. friend is proposing would actually be to prohibit internal communication. How can our police forces possibly do their work adequately if they are unable to transmit information to other police forces?

Mr. Blais: But these people are not convicted.

Mr. MacGuigan: If the hon. member wishes to ask a question I would be very pleased to sit down and await his comments.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, my question simply is whether my friend interprets the statute to mean abolition of publication in any event or only if the person charged is not convicted.

Mr. MacGuigan: I interpret Bill C-220 as prohibiting publication until conviction is established. However, when a person is arrested for one crime he may very well be wanted for other crimes, and it might be necessary for the prosecution to have this information in order to build up an adequate case. There may be facts available in other cities which other police forces could furnish, even in respect of the same crime.

I would think the work of the police forces in our country would be somewhat inhibited if we were to go as far as my hon. friend recommends. It seems to me he is going to the opposite extreme from the law in force. He has convinced me, and I am sure his persuasive words have had a great effect on other members of the House as well, that the present legislation is not very satisfactory. But in persuading us of that he has overstated his case. I think he has over-reacted with this legislation, and I feel the consequences of this legislation would be undesirable and not in the public interest.

I commend the hon. member for bringing this suggestion before us and especially for the careful drafting I know he has done to produce a bill on this scale. Those of us who are lawyers recognize, of course, the care that must go into each word in the drafting of a document such as this. I believe he has placed before us an admirable bill, but I would urge him to go back and re-examine it, taking into account the suggestions made here today.

In this hour, Mr. Speaker, the suggestions hon. members make do not always immediately see the light of day. But I think one of the most valuable features of this hour is that we are engaged here in an educational process not only for the country at large but also for ourselves. We need this process of education by our fellow members, and this hour is the best teaching hour we have in the House of Commons. My hon. friend has taught us something. What I am suggesting is that I hope we in return have taught him something and that he will go back to the drafting board and re-think the proposal he has set before us. I hope in years to come—and in not too many years to come—the hon. member will again be successful in the draw and will get his bill on at a very early stage in our considerations so that it will have an opportunity to be referred, with the support of the members of this House, to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, the committee which is normally charged with responsibility for the legal affairs of this House and which we know possesses the very considerable expertise of lawyers from all parts of the country and on both sides.

I think in years to come the hon. member will thank us for the fact that we have been able to refine his ideas and his language. When this bill is returned to the House, as I do not doubt it will be next year, and when it in some form sees the light of day, perhaps under the name of the Solicitor General—who may even be my hon. friend—he will be very pleased that this educational process in the House has worked well in both directions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what we call "killing with kindness".

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I am not very kindly inclined towards criminals and I may not perhaps have cultivated the virtue of charity as much as my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but when I deal with criminals I am much more concerned with protecting society than the criminals.

Every day we see examples of society's problems in this regard.

Today, in the Montréal Matin, we can read at the top of the first page: Foul play suspected in ten-year old's death. If an adult contributed to his death I think this murder is vile. I resume my quotations from the paper: Restaurant owner mows down three motorcyclists. I am reading one newspaper only for if I were to take Le Devoir, La Presse, the Journal de Montréal, Le Jour or any other newspaper, other crimes would probably be reported.

This is why, I think, it is essential for policemen who have to investigate those crimes to have the necessary tools in order to work effectively.

It is all very well to have compassion on those who are charged with a crime, but let us be realistic. When teenagers are involved, I agree that that they should be treated with a little more clemency, in order to spare them a stigma they would keep for the rest of their life. Moreover, perhaps they did not make those mistakes. We are dealing with minors, young people of 16 or 17 with no police record. It is obvious that we must show discretion towards them.

However, as far as habitual criminals are concerned, people discharged from prison but condemned again for other serious crimes and still sought by police for murder, rape, fraud or any other crime, it is important for the authorities to have the necessary tools to face the facts.

The bill reads as follows:

1. Subsection 2(3) of the Identification of Criminals Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(3) Where the person who has been subjected to the measurements, processes and operations under subsection (1)

(a) has been convicted of the offence

In other words, publication will be allowed only when the person is convicted. This is out of this world. Why not say then that taking steps to find a person and identify him or her will be allowed only when this person has been convicted?

According to the law we have now, signaletic cards are most important to find criminals. If we are to wait for a conviction, the best records will not be of any use.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that significant reserves must be made about Bill C-220. It is all right to have advanced ideas and to think and be a freethinker but we must not overdo it if individuals are to respect the administrative structures of this country. Authority must take action to be respected.

For those who have some notion of it, history teaches us that when progressive ideas get too strong in some country and when criminals are considered heroes instead of public enemies, this country begins losing prestige and to sink into decay.

Canada must avoid this. Furthermore, I think hon. members of the New Democratic Party should first show more respect for the life of unborn children by condemning abortion instead of fighting for it. It seems more important to me to protect these children's life than the criminals' who have no respect for their neighbour. In short, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill goes too far.

It is important that governments have a sense of justice so that each citizen feels happy to live in the country, so that nobody feels victimized. But we know that the freedom of one person ends where the freedom of the other begins; in other words, when one encroaches on the other's rights, the latter begin to lose his freedom and then he is less free, he does not feel free any more. I shall not say that we must favour criminals or crime, but to alleviate the measures against crime, which are definitely so light, is to favour crime. I think that it is against individual freedom. This bill does go against individual freedom since it prevents the police or the authorities concerned from taking the necessary steps to arrest those who prejudice the freedom of other people.

I do not think that this bill must be enacted or accepted by the Canadian people before decline has weakened us enough. It should thus be completely amended to give perhaps more justice to young people, as I said earlier.

As far as murderers, gangsters and criminals are concerned, I do not see very much where is the interest for society to protect them.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I had not intended to speak on this bill until I came to the chamber and had an opportunity to listen to some of my colleagues participating in this private members' hour. I think that one could justifiably, on the basis of this afternoon's debate, suggest a change of name for the private members' hour to the "hypocrisy hour". Because in listening to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) filibustering his colleague's bill, though I realize that he did not really want to do so, one is provided with some justification for the suggestion that there is something radically wrong with the system, or procedures.

This bill is basically a very good and very enlightened bill, one which, I would like to state at the outset, I support. I share the feelings of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that this is a good bill and that it should be sent forthwith to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for further study. So far as I can see, the provisions of this Identification of Criminals Act are often abused. Section 2, as the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville pointed out, has a discretionary feature in that it states that:

> Any person in lawful custody, charged with, or under conviction of an indictable offence, or who has been apprehended under the Extradition Act or the Fugitive Offenders Act, may be subjected . . .

This is the part I would like to speak on for a moment or two. I have seen instances where police have in some cases, in my opinion, improperly invoked or tried to invoke the provisions of the Identification of Criminals Act when the circumstances made it clearly unnecessary to do so. I would like to point out to members in the House that on many occasions a criminal charge itself provides a punishment that can never be redressed. I am sure all hon. members realize that if, for example, a person is charged with a serious offence, comes to trial before a jury and is completely acquitted, on future occasions most people do not say: "There is John Jones, the man who was unjustly charged with robbery and was acquitted". They say: "There is that Jones fellow who was once up for robbery". This is the type of stigma that attaches to people even though they have been given a lawful trial and have been acquitted. I will not add any more on this point but I think it would be very interesting for the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to issue guidelines and to make certain that this Identification of Criminals Act is not being abused by over zealous police officers across the country.

At this time I would also like to point out another area that bears looking into, and that is the department's policy regarding conditional discharges which, as I understand it—and many of my colleagues have brought this to my attention—is often opposed on principle by over zealous prosecuting officers who, in my opinion, often go against the spirit and intent of this government's policy by making it very difficult for defence counsel to utilize the very provisions that this government, very commendably, recently built into the Criminal Code.

At this time I do not want to be accused of speaking for too long because I would be doing what I am suggesting it is wrong for my colleagues to do, that is, talking out a very worthwhile piece of legislation that I for one would like to see referred to the committee. I would urge my colleagues to join me in this regard and not filibuster this bill, which I think is one of the best I have seen come before the House during private members' hour recently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to my colleague, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) when he introduced his bill.

I must say that from the very beginning, he seemed to me to be somewhat reticent, as though he wanted to plead in favour of this bill, but without conviction. I think he was quite sincere when he said that a burden should not be placed on some people for the rest of their lives unless they had appeared before the court, been formally charged and found guilty.

He has done some research on this bill, I am sure. He explained why we should not do these things, but I am still hesitant to accept his plea, regardless of his eloquence.

On a number of occasions, while considering private members' bills, he has looked into some situations which certainly appeared worthwhile to those who had brought them forward, but which seemed to show certain shortcomings after they had been scrutinized by other hon. members.

If the hon. member for Nipissing has himself listened to those who have accepted to participate in this debate, he must, I am sure, be entertaining some doubts by now.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) went further and has denounced certain offences brought before the courts. As the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) was saying a while ago I think, it is not in any way permitted to interfere with the courts' work or with the carrying out of justice.

We have now reached the point where society has become quite belligerent. One hon. member was talking about it a few minutes ago. One has only to read newspapers, look at TV or listen to the radio to realize that people indulge in violence nearly everywhere.

If pieces of legislation are not brought in and discussed, if they are not thoroughly considered, we will feel somewhat remorseful. As I said earlier, there is violence in society.

The hon. member for Nipissing has pondered over the matter and suggested that if the person involved is not convicted, then his records should perhaps be destroyed. But it has also been pointed out during this debate that people may not be convicted for the offence which brought them into court, although they may have taken part in 15 or 20 other offences.

If the police or other investigating officers can be provided with some means that will enable them to identify the accused brought before the tribunal, then society will likely be relieved of a burden.

I think that the member for Nipissing was referring to the individual, but in terms of the community, of society, one must remember that a given measure may at one time or another make it difficult for some people.

I agree fully with the hon. member when he suggests that one should not have to carry the burden of a charge if one is not guilty of any offence. On that point, I agree.

One other thing comes to mind: the police should be permitted to use whatever tools they have been provided with, but I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, the way certain business firms set up identification records by making use of fingerprinting, when they extend credit to people.

I do not think these practices are covered by the bill. And this does happen. People accused of no crime whatsoever have identification records set up against them merely for purposes of credit purchasing in stores. If these people resort to the identification process, why should we, in our wisdom, at least I think that the hon. member said it earlier, deprive the authorities that are trying to protect society of those tools? It is just as necessary.

I think we should devote to this problem much attention and much more time than we now have at our disposal.

Someone referred earlier to unions. Everyday we hear people say that unions harbour people who have criminal records or have committed offences and who are themselves responsible for the violence that exists. This has probably not been proved. I am sure that there are union people who have no twinges of conscience. They are doing a job and want to keep on developing the labour movement. However, some people who should not be there happen to worm their way in this movement. They are taking advantage of society and deprive other individuals of their freedom. If we think we can solve this problem by denying the necessary tools to those who are responsible for protecting society, we will do a disservice to society.

I am sure the hon. member for Nipissing wants to see his bill passed. I agree with my other colleagues who said that the main thrust of this bill was good. This measure is valid but I agree, however, with those of my colleagues who expressed much reservation in this regard.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say I am more concerned by the fact that we would deprive those who were asked to protect us of a tool which, in my view, is absolutely necessary. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

● (1750)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I can call it six o'clock.

[Translation]

We are here again faced with the difficulty encountered last week with two clocks indicating different times. One says three minutes to six, and the other two minutes to six. I understand that private members hour started today at three minutes to five and should therefore be up at three minutes to six. The hon. member might have 30 seconds left.

Mr. Trudel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Trudel: Well, I wanted to abide by the ruling of the Chair a while ago because the debate started at three minutes to six. I looked at the clock facing me and it indicated three minutes to six. That is why I concluded my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think a true difficulty arose recently when the hon. member for Nipissing had the floor a few minutes before six.

It is obvious I think to all hon. members that there is a difference of about two minutes between the clock facing me and the two on the sides. I think we can take for granted that there are now at least three minutes left before six which means that the hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired and if hon. members agree we will now leave this House for dinner.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.58 the House took recess.

CANADIAN FOOTBALL ACT

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREIGN ENCROACHMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-22, intituled Canadian Football Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible and even embarrassing for me to have to stand up in this House to speak on an issue dealing with football when this country is beset with so many critical issues affecting the lives of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: I hear the hon. members opposite already making noises. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that last Thursday I gave them the opportunity to withdraw this bill when I asked for the unanimous consent of this House to move the following motion:

> In view of the alarming growth of labour disputes already causing strikes in vital areas, and the inflationary spiral giving rise to them, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):
> That this House welcomes the Prime Minister back from his vacation in Barbados and requests him to postpone the government's political football bill by bringing forward immediate legislation to alleviate the staggering inflationary problems which affect all Canadians.

As hon. members well know, this motion was defeated by members on the government side. I am not sure whether they opposed the part of the motion which welcomed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back from his vacation or the portion to postpone the football bill in favour of more pressing legislation.

While the cost of living rises at a rate unprecedented in our history, the Liberal government still refuses to launch any attack to protect the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. Nothing can be more ludicrous than this House sitting to discuss football while record breaking increases in the cost of living have once again been announced. It is incredible that while Canadians from one end of our country to the other reel in shock from food prices and housing costs, the Liberal government places before this House, as the priority item, legislation banning the World Football League from entering Toronto. At a time when every member of this House has received hundreds of letters urging the government to take action to control run away inflation, how can the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in all honesty, even consider this is the time to discuss football?

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that were it not for the incompetence of the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet), who has failed over and over again to stop this illegal postal strike we are presently faced with, doubtless many more letters would have reached the offices of each and every member. Yet the government has chosen to force football legislation on to the House, despite the pressing priorities facing each and every Canadian in so many other fields.

Not only does the government not have its priorities straight in introducing legislation, but even in the legislation before us its priorities are not in the right order. If we are to get involved in sports in this country, then surely we should not be putting the emphasis on professional sports but rather on the development of amateur athletes, as well as the over-all physical fitness activities of all Canadians.

The federal government's purpose—in sports and fitness as in everything else—should be to help all Canadians to enjoy richer, fuller and more satisfying lives. The government cannot achieve that purpose by concentrating on, and indeed emphasizing the importance of, professionalism, as it is with this bill. Our most important national resource is the youth of this country, and, as with any other resource, a national development policy must be initiated, with incentives for participation heading the list.

I made it very clear during the debate on the Combines Investigation Act, Bill C-7, that not only do I believe that for us to debate this bill at this critical time is wrong, but that the bill itself will not fulfil the purpose for which it was intended, namely to protect the Canadian Football League.

I would be the last person wishing to see the demise of the Canadian Football League in any way whatsoever. On the contrary, it would be my wish to see greater opportunities afforded the youth of this country by encouraging even greater Canadian participation in the Canadian Football League than that proposed in the bill before us. On the other hand, a recent statement made by a great ex-football star and great Canadian, Russ Jackson, who said that if the Canadian Football League cannot stand on its own feet then it should not stand at all, should be considered.

Be that as it may, what is of prime concern to me, and should be of prime concern to every member of this House, is that the youth of this country be afforded every conceivable opportunity not only to participate in sports and become physically, as well as mentally, proficient, but be afforded as well the opportunity to participate in professional sports in Canada regardless of league. They should be protected in their choice of team and league. Indeed the government has introduced legislation to this effect. Allow me to quote section 32.3(1)(b) of the Combines Investigation Act amending Bill C-7:

> Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person
> (b) to limit unreasonably the opportunity for any other person to negotiate with and, if agreement is reached, to play for the team or club of his choice in a professional or amateur league > is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable on conviction to imprisonment for two years.

Naturally, we would not want to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) imprisoned for a two year period. However, if he had been imprisoned in the past, then we would not be faced with this ridiculous bill that we have to stand here and debate at this time.

● (2010)

However, I personally approve in principle of the sports sections of the combines investigation bill, which ironically is in total contradiction to the bill before us. We have, on the one hand, the government submitting a bill which it alleges will stimulate competition. On the other hand, we have the same government introducing a bill to prevent competition. If this bill before us becomes law in its present form, we will be the first country in the world outlawing international sports competition in a certain field and will become the laughing stock of the sports world.

Has this government forgotten that this country was built on free enterprise? Has this government forgotten that this country was built on competition?

An hon. Member: I hope so.

Mr. Jelinek: I hear the NDP yelling "I hope so." They are against free enterprise. The reason I escaped with my family from Czechoslovakia was to get away from guys like that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Since when does any government have the right to dictate to the people of Canada what they can or cannot see in professional sports, or for that matter in any form of entertainment?

Where was the federal government when the World Hockey Association entered the Canadian sports scene? Where was the concern for the advancement of opportunities for the youth of this country? Why did the government fail to provide safeguards and encouragement to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, and why are there no proposed changes in this bill relating to hockey, truly our national sport? Why has football been singled out as a target of intervention? Would it not have been reasonable to expect the government to take a firm stand on the protection of this sport long before the World Football League was even contemplated? Certainly safeguards are needed to keep our amateur junior teams viable.

Possibly the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) interfered in football at this stage of the game to set a precedent for Montreal. The ultimate use of the Olympic stadium after the 1976 Olympic Games by a National Football League team is a great possibility. It is a possibility that has been rumoured. Even Mayor Drapeau has suggested on numerous occasions in the past that it might be his wish to bring a National Football League team into Montreal. If this were to happen, then unfortunately the Montreal Alouettes, which do not get the crowds they deserve, would be hurt financially a great deal and, therefore, the Canadian Football League may suffer.

While we are on this subject of the protection of other sports, may I ask whether the government should not consider obtaining revenue for amateur sport development from foreign organizations such as professional ice shows? And I am speaking specifically about American ice shows, professional basketball teams, professional basketball players or golfers who come into this country. Why are we not concerned about them? They come into this country and continue to drain off all our top talents without contributing to Canadian amateur organizations which have invested their time and money in developing these athletes.

As I have previously outlined, I am opposed to this bill as it in no way serves its purpose of protecting the Canadian Football League. I believe that contrary to my wishes, however, the bill will pass into committee stage, at which time I hope hon. members will seriously consider options which will truly Canadianize professional sports in Canada but will at the same time allow foreign teams to play in Canada under certain conditions and with the approval of the local populace and their civic authorities.

Some of the options or amendments which in my opinion should be considered in professional sports in Canada—and I stress professional sports, not just professional football—are the following. First, to have the civic authority in the designated area consent to the foreign team operating in their area. Why should we not let the people of a certain area decide what they want to charge and what they want to participate in instead of meddling with business that is not even national or interprovincial business?

Second, the foreign team should guarantee to the satisfaction of a Canadian professional sports league concerned to save harmless the Canadian league that there will be no decrease in equalization payments based upon the sharing of gate receipts within the Canadian league due to the operation of the foreign team in the designated area.

Third, the foreign team, at the direction of, and in an amount determined by, the Canadian league, should contribute monies toward the support of the amateur league in Canada.

Fourth, the foreign team, and all other teams within that foreign league, should honour the contracts of players on teams operated by members of the Canadian league and not interfere with the regulation by the Canadian league of the recruitment and allocation of players within that league.

Fifth, the foreign team should undertake not to permit any game in which it participates in Canada to be broadcast in any area where such broadcast would, in the opinion of the Canadian league, adversely affect the gate, broadcasting or other receipts of a game in which two teams operated by members of the Canadian league are participating.

In this manner we would give the Canadian Football League, if we want to be specific and talk on football, the right to veto any particular team in any one city, rather than give the federal government authority to close the door on international competition. International competition has been the basis of all sports competition the world over. This government is now trying to stop that. It is trying to set a precedent with one sport. That has never before been seen in the world. In this manner also, Canadian professional sports would be protected to a greater extent than by totally banning international competition in a specific sport.

I said I would be brief and that I am embarrassed to be discussing football at this time, with all the problems we have arising from the inflationary situation. In closing, let me just say that, in retrospect, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should have closed his remarks in Regina last February with the following statement: "I know that you believe you understand what you think I said, but I am not sure you realize that what you heard is not what I meant."

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have read everything that has been written by all of the competing interests with regard to this debate and I have heard advanced various theories with regard to the motivation of the government in bringing forward this bill.

I want to say to the members of the government and the House that, as a member of this House, I carry into it no brief for either of the professional organizations involved which will either be the recipient of a benefit or a burden, as the case may be, from this legislation. However, I do carry a brief into this House for the people I have the honour to represent. I have heard from some of those people, and from what I have heard the opinion of those who have written or telephoned me accords with mine. That is fortunate. The opinion is that if ever there was an ill-conceived piece of legislation, and ill-timed in terms of the problems which face our country today, it is this.

Mr. Sharp: Then why don't you sit down?

Mr. Baker: I must say that I have been sitting in this House throughout this debate. I have been listening desperately to the government attempting to do indirectly what it wants to do directly, and that is to withdraw the bill by asking us to stop talking on it.

● (2020)

An hon. Member: Come again?

Mr. Sharp: How will you vote?

Mr. Baker: When a Member of Parliament sees a piece of bad, ill-timed legislation, he ought not to sit in his seat because some football player on the other side says he should. I did not come to this House to give what might be considered tacit support to ill-timed, bad legislation. I say to the government in all seriousness that there is nothing which indicates more clearly its lack of relevance with respect to the problems of the day than the pig-headed, wrong-headed effort it is making in connection with this legislation. Particularly is this so today, when I note that 2,000 employees of Air Canada have been laid off, inflation is rampant, and the postal unions are so disgusted with the archaic and dinosaur-like methods of the government in bargaining with the Civil Service that they are prepared to withhold their services. This is a time when the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) should be directing his attention toward mediation, instead of publishing a stupid advertisement two days running which only inflames the situation.

That is typical of a government which has chosen to bring forward a bill of the kind before us, ignoring the national issues which are concerning our people. We do not intend to be party to that kind of irrelevancy and ineptitude. If ever there was a monument to government ineptitude, it is the present bill introduced at this time.

A great deal of reference has been made to the views of Mr. Russell Jackson, a Canadian who made his way in football without assistance from the government opposite or from any government. Mr. Jackson's name has been used in this chamber on many occasions. He put his opinion clearly when he said:

> I just think that if the CFL is too weak to face this kind of competition, we are going to lose it eventually anyway. If it can't compete without government legislation, then some other league, some other team such as the Northmen, or some other sport entirely, will knock it out.

That is a statement by a man who knows Canadian football. It might be pointed out again that the legislation before us will not help the Canadian Football League. Many reasons have been advanced in the course of the debate and I shall not repeat them. Not a single speaker from the government side, including the minister, has shown us how this legislation will help Canadian football. I am not prepared to take the government's word for it because this is the same government which told us there was a fuel shortage in Canada and then went on to make a wasteful purchase of Roumanian oil, after which we found out there was not a shortage at all.

The people I represent in this House say there are two real issues which concern us. First, there is the irrelevance of the government's action at this time. They say it is not proper, in the face of the urgent problems now before the country, that parliament should be dealing with football. I concur in that view. The second thing they say is that parliament has more important things to do.

An hon. Member: Right! So sit down and we will vote on it.

Mr. Baker: As a matter of propriety, parliament ought not to be injecting itself into the field of professional sport. That is the second consideration. They say the government does have a mandate with respect to amateur sport, a role to play in terms of helping to secure the participation of the greatest possible number of Canadians in sport and fitness programs. The appearance of this bill, and the pressure the government has applied, indicate how it has failed in carrying out that mandate.

There is a lot to be done in the field of amateur sport. All of us, I believe, have a feeling of gratification, a sense of obligation toward those who engage in the coaching of young players, and a sense of pride in the achievement of those who take part in amateur sports. Those who work with boys and girls, helping them to participate, are the unsung heroes of sport in Canada. These people are being neglected as a result of the government's preoccupation with a field in which it has no real reason to be active. Think of the shortage of playgrounds in Canada, the shortage of equipment, the fact that there are not enough arenas.

When I think of the great value there is in figure skating, soccer, lacrosse and hockey on the amateur level, and of the thousands of young people who are involved in these sports, and weigh this against the preoccupation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) with professional sport, I begin to wonder how the priorities of the government are arranged. Where is its sense of relevancy? Where is its sense of urgency? I come to the conclusion that the government is out of touch.

Mr. Gillies: What is the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Sharp: I am not going to waste the time of the House.

Mr. Gillies: It is you over there who brought the bill in. You are caught with it anyway.

Mr. Baker: I, for one, intend to vote against this legislation, and I invite other members of the House who feel that important issues in Canada are being neglected to mark that feeling by their own votes. The other alternative is for members who have some influence with the minister to go to him and tell him it is not too late for him to withdraw this piece of irrelevancy. I do not want to disturb the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) while he is reading his newspaper over there, but I do think that he, as a member who has from time to time made statements in this House on matters of importance and relevance, should be one of those expressing to the minister his concern with respect to the bill in front of us.

● (2030)

I commend, as did my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: You were reading your paper; don't deny it.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I was reading the newspaper in an attempt to find any report of intelligent remarks by the press gallery in respect of anything that was being said by the opposition members on this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Why don't you make a speech tonight?

Mr. Baker: I do not want to prolong the point, Mr. Speaker, but if the hon. member wants to read something I suggest he turn to the comic page where he might find something which is equal to the relevance of this bill in respect of Canadian context and conditions.

Before being interrupted by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) I was about to call attention to the speech made in this House by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I think that was one of the most thoughtful speeches I have heard in respect of the elements which are or ought to be the minds of members in respect of this bill.

That hon. member laid out six very important points which ought to be considered by hon. members, some of which I have touched upon. He said that this bill could not by any stretch of the imagination be construed as an attempt to defend anything cultural. He called that a phony aspect of the considerations of this bill. He said that this legislation would be futile in respect to protecting the Canadian Football League, which every member of this House wants to see flourish. The point is that this bill will not protect that league. He went on to say, and I think this is a most important part of his speech, that this government is denying to Canadians the basic right of viewing sports in the manner they wish.

If you look at the restrictive provisions of this bill you will find that they are restrictions which you cannot find in any other piece of legislation. All in all, the bill is bad. It is an irrelevant piece of legislation which will not carry out the object the framers of the bill would like everyone to believe it will carry out. The bill encroaches upon the rights of Canadians in respect of the field of entertainment in a way no other government has ever seen fit to do. The bill puts this parliament into a position where it is invading a field it has no right to be in.

As pointed out by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), there is a real question as to the constitutionality of the powers of this bill, and there is certainly a question as to the propriety of the powers it purports to give to the government.

Lastly, and perhaps most importantly, in the face of all the problems confronting this country, with people crying out for a reasonable choice of housing at a reasonable cost, people asking the government to devote its priorities to land banking in order to increase the supply of serviced land and to engage in a dramatic program of servicing acres of land so there will be adequate land for housing, in an age when the people of Canada are saying to this government that because of inflation they do not know where they are going to be next year and do not know whether labour contracts negotiated this year will be relevant, at a time when the whole system of bargaining in respect of the Public Service is breaking down and becoming irrelevant because it is slow, cumbersome and unresponsive to needs, at a time when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has indicated his department is in difficulties in supplying hopper cars for the movement of grain in Canada, when his airline, for whatever reason, is not functioning and is tying up transportation, and at a time when post office workers have decided, rightly or wrongly, to withhold their services, we in this House are discussing football!

An hon. Member: You are delaying.

Mr. Baker: Let me say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Cafik) that the government which he supports sets the priority for legislation in this House, and if that government had its priorities right we would not have started to debate this bill. But having started this debate we intend to make sure that we do not become the unofficial lackeys of this government by doing what it has suggested.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Let it come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I am obviously getting home to some hon. members over there. I note that the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has suddenly broken his notable silence. Perhaps I have knocked a few apples out of his tree. Certainly he looks decidedly uncomfortable.

An hon. Member: We don't want to waste time.

Mr. Baker: I should like to hear his views in respect of this bill.

An hon. Member: Let's have a vote.

Mr. Baker: I would also like to hear from the hon. member for Eglinton, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Cafik: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) agree to answer a question?

Mr. Cafik: I have a very simple question I should like to direct to the hon. member. I can understand the frustration of anyone on any subject, but if he believes there are other priorities—and I do believe there are other things more important than this—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: —would the hon. member recommend to his colleagues that we bring this debate to a conclusion by voting one way or the other?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, we have just had the first ray of light in respect of the attitude of this government. At last a responsible supporter of the government, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has admitted for the record that there are more important things to debate than football.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is merely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: I should just like to point out that the hon. member is quite right in that I do recognize other priorities, as does the minister and this government, so let us get on with the bill and vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I would suggest that this is not a point of order. I recognize the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, there are other alternatives that could be put to this government, and I will do so at this point.

An hon. Member: They could resign.

Mr. Baker: Aside from resigning, they could withdraw this bill this evening, or they could table it.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Cafik: Let a vote decide.

Mr. Baker: The government could withdraw or table the bill.

Mr. Cafik: Let parliament decide.

Mr. Baker: I am sure I speak for every member of the official opposition when I suggest that we would be delighted if the government would do either of the things suggested in order to bring on legislation to deal with the cancer of inflation within this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I would like—

An hon. Member: Make a speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Cafik: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Why don't you make a speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I understand the hon. member is rising for the purpose of asking a question. Does the hon. member agree to accept a question?

● (2040)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered two questions in the course of this debate. If the hon. member wishes to make a speech then let him stand up and make a speech. Let us not have the member use subterfuge again to try to do indirectly what he is afraid to do directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The greatest contribution that has been made in the course of this debate, I must say, has been the sudden revelation that there are some people on the government side, though perhaps not on the treasury benches, who are prepared to admit there is something more important for this parliament to deal with. I am very grateful that the hon. member has indicated the difficulties there are on the other side of the House so that the public can be made aware of them. Let me say there are some things for which there can be feelings of concern by all members of the House.

As a member of parliament I am tired of receiving letters from constituents who ask me when the government intends to deal with inflation, when the government intends to deal with housing, when it intends properly to administer the public service legislation and when it intends to take a look at the whole question of transportation in this country. When are we to deal with all these important things? I say to this government it is its duty to bring forward this legislation. If the government brings forward sound legislation we will undertake to support it; but we will not stand idly by or sit silent while it does nothing but deal in irrelevancies. We give our pledge on that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It has been pretty noisy during the last few minutes. I know the football season is not here yet, but I suppose the hon. member for Nipissing is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there is agreement that there are other matters we could be considering, and in view of the fact that the hon. member is the House leader for the Tories, I wonder whether the question might be put now, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, there may be some others who wish to speak on this bill, but I can give the House the undertaking that it is certainly not the wish of any responsible member of parliament to inordinately prolong discussion on this bill.

Mr. McKinley: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Nipissing wonders why some members do not allow the question to be put. I wonder if he recalls that during private members' hour today, when he had a motion which he wanted to put, his own members would not allow that motion to be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I guess now everybody has the right to the floor.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the bill presented in private members' hour was so important that I understand a number of speakers who had indicated previous to private members' hour that they intended to speak were not reached until the hour had expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I think all hon. members have had a chance to play football games so let us see if we can now recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Canadian Professional Football

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-22 I think I should first say that truth is indeed often stranger than fiction.

An hon. Member: God, I wish I had said that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You said it the first time.

Mr. Stevens: We might take as an example last Thursday. The government was then faced with inflation running at 10.4 per cent per annum and with wage earners who had had their purchasing power eroded by 1.8 per cent in 1973. The government was faced with postal workers who were tying up the mail from coast to coast while airport firefighters were disrupting air travel at Canada's main airports. The government was also faced with 2,100 air controllers threatening what the air controllers call a total airline shutdown, which is similar to what 136 seaway pilots had succeeded in doing in respect to the St. Lawrence Seaway. There were reports of rising labour militancy across the land, including violence on the picket line with 400 Toronto food workers struck.

Yet on that Thursday, late in the evening the government chose, from among 17 items of government business that could have been debated, to ask parliament to debate this bill concerned with who should play football in Toronto, who should own the team that plays the game, and what league the team should be in. Mr. Speaker, in asking for a debate on the football bill the government had to move the matter from 12th position of priority to the first position of priority. The government had to move it ahead of items such as a bill to help control rising commodity prices, which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), if he were here I know would agree we have assured him will receive speedy passage in this House when the government introduces it. It had to be moved ahead of a bill to protect human health from contamination in the environment. This football bill had to be moved ahead of another one which might even have brought more competition into our banking system in this country.

Having decided to introduce the bill, after one hour and five minutes in which he explained the bill to the House the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) then asked the House to pass the bill speedily with as few debaters as possible. Then the same Minister of National Health and Welfare, apparently a little worried that the bill might not pass, was very quick to claim that the matter was a "gut" issue, but of course not a matter of confidence. I found it very interesting that a minister introducing a bill would show so little confidence himself in its passage that he would hasten to say to members that, in his view, it would not be a matter of confidence if the bill should be voted down by members of the House.

When this legislation was first proposed, and indeed after the bill was introduced, I did not intend to speak on the matter since I felt it would be well covered by members from the government and the opposition.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

● (2050)

I say that because I believe that many in this country enjoy football, and certainly I am one. I have attended Canadian football games in Ottawa, Toronto, Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Hamilton; and I have attended many Grey Cup games, including some held in Hamilton, Ottawa and Toronto. I even attended that famous Grey Cup game when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), wearing his Dracula hat and cape, was present. It may be that that is the instance when it dawned on the Prime Minister that this thing called the Grey Cup promoted national unity.

But after listening to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and after reading the bill I could see only two reasons why the government was advancing this bill as top priority. The first was that it seemed to me that they had decided that they must make some token gesture to indicate their concern with foreign investment or involvement in this country, and they felt that perhaps what might get the best press for them was to present this football legislation and shake their fist at the Yankee and say: Go home, Yankee, leave our football as it is.

The second reason I felt that the minister and his government were advancing the legislation was that there was vindictiveness towards those who were proposing to bring a new league into Canada and establish a new football team in Toronto. I say that because all of us here remember that only very recently another international football league played in Toronto, the Continental League. They had a team in Toronto, namely the Rivals. I do not recall this government or its predecessor uttering the slightest murmur that they felt that somehow that entry into the Toronto market was objectionable.

So I am suggesting that there are possibly only two basic reasons why this government is virtually using closure to try to get this bill through the House: one is the token objection that they wish to make toward foreign investment in this country; the second is the vindictive streak in this government toward the promoters of the foreign team.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: These are my preliminary views. I wanted to look up the history of football, so I went to the library and read two or three books on the Grey Cup and the CFL. I would strongly recommend that before the little trained seals across the way continue to support this legislation they read some of the history of our Canadian Football League and the Grey Cup itself. I think they might find it interesting to know that although we call it a Canadian game, in fact the game was derived from England. It evolved as a result of a league between McGill and Harvard. So right at its inception we find that it was in fact a Canadian-United States activity.

I also found that the Grey Cup was in fact made in England and exported here. I found that the Toronto Argonauts, who, as they say, are proud to play under the double blue, got the light blue from Cambridge and the dark blue from Oxford. So here we have what I would regard as not a truly Canadian sport in the sense that it was developed and inspired by Canadians; it is a sport which in fact evolved in Canada from its predecessor in England, and which has subsequently been exported from Canada to the United States where they developed it still further to what is now known as the American game. I think we should all realize, first of all, that what we call Canadian football, about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare was so emotional, is in fact an evolving sport and one which will continue to evolve.

Having traced that background I think I should refer to what I regard as this government's token gesture. To do this I think it is only fair to review very quickly the extent of foreign ownership in this country.

If the government is indeed alarmed about foreign involvement in our business world and in our culture, surely it is cognizant of the figures made available under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act which came out in March, 1974. Hon. members will note that the total assets of foreign controlled corporations in Canada were approximately $50 billion in 1970, and in one year they went up $4.5 billion to $54.5 billion. Then we find that the profits of the same corporations—I am referring to the corporations controlled by foreign interests in Canada—rose between 1970 and 1971 from $3.5 billion to something over $4 billion, an increase of $582 million in one year, over half a billion dollars. I think it is interesting to note that over $2 billion on that amount—$2.2 billion—was actually paid to the foreign owners of those businesses in 1971. This sum made up of $791 million in dividends, $523 million in interest, and $925 million in business services such as management contracts.

Let me summarize. In 1971, foreign controlled corporations in the non-financial industries in Canada, while they accounted for only 4 per cent of all the corporations in Canada in terms of numbers, represented 37 per cent of the assets, 44 per cent of the equity, 38 per cent of the sales, 46 per cent of the profits, and 47 per cent of the positive taxable income in Canada. To which foreigners am I referring? Specifically, the report points out that in 1971 total payments to foreigners in the United States was $1.599 million.

I have been referring to a Canadian publication on the extent of foreign ownership in the business world in Canada. I would draw attention once again to the fact that this publication only came out in March, 1974 and that the most up to date figures given were those for 1971. It is regrettable that in order to get more recent figures concerning foreign investment in Canada I have to turn to the International Economic Report of the President of the United States.

In his report of February, 1974 he gives the American version of what they are receiving from Canada. We find that in 1972 the investment income receipts in the American books from Canada are shown as $2 billion. On top of that are royalties received by the Americans of $.4 billion. In 1973—and I again emphasize these are American presidential figures because Canadian figures are not provided—the investment income receipts had jumped to $2.5 billion, another $500 million increase, and royalties stayed at the $.4 billion level.

I mention that bit of background, Mr. Speaker, because I suggest that this government has not done anything effectively to reverse the foreign ownership of industry in Canada. In fact, in introducing and speaking on this bill the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) did not even know the name of the bill that his government passed concerning foreign investment in this country. If you check Hansard you will find that he referred to it as the "foreign policy review act" and took great credit for the fact that this was something that was somehow going to counteract foreign investment in Canada. The correct name is the Foreign Investment Review Act. I think that shows how lightly the cabinet weigh the various pieces of legislation that come before it. It may in fact be a freudian slip, that reference to the foreign policy review; undoubtedly their foreign policy does need review.

I have touched in a general sense on the impact of foreign investment in Canada but I should like to be more specific, Mr. Speaker. After listening to the debate on Friday I went home on the aeroplane to Toronto and for the first time in many years looked through a copy of Reader's Digest, that fine Canadian journal to which this government has given such favourable tax treatment in order to keep it in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: Did you read George Hees' article?

Mr. Stevens: In answer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), there was not only George Hees' article, but on the inside front page I found an article by none other than the hon. Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis). I found it most interesting that the article was entitled "Understanding is Half the Battle". In it he recited various things that the Reader's Digest had done that he thinks are commendable. Specifically he says "I commend the magazine", and he concludes by saying that we must remember those ringing words of Maurice Strong, who said "There is 'only one earth'".

Mr. Speaker, surely it is an odd situation that we have a government that says that national unity is at stake if certain people are playing football in Toronto this year or next year, yet apparently feels there is no particular reason to change the favourable tax treatment for the American publication Reader's Digest. I have seen some balance sheets and sales figures of professional football teams in Canada. I know what they earn and I know what their sales are. Reader's Digest sales in 1973 were $28.5 million and their profit was $1,757,000 after tax. Their shareholders' equity of $5,534,000 is larger than the revenue of the entire league. I can assure hon. members that it is probably three times, maybe four times, the size of the entire league.

What can we draw from this odd and apparent contradiction? Why should the government be so concerned about who plays football while seeming to have so little concern about foreign ownership in this country generally and specifically about such things as Reader's Digest—which in fact is even commended for its fine activities in Canada?

Let me give the House another example of how one who comes from the general area of Toronto finds the priorities of this government so odd. Some of us may have heard of the Process Church of the Final Judgment, which is often referred to as the Satanists. As we know, that church had its origin in the United States and its followers decided to come over the border. We did not see any bill rushed through this House to stop them. In fact, we found the reverse; they were able to pick up a LIP grant of $40,093. I would imagine, Mr. Speaker, that most members, like myself, sometimes stroll along the Sparks Street mall. If they do, they may be approached by one of the disciples of the Process Church. I would suggest they ask where they receive their greatest assistance in Canada. If any hon. member speaks to the same disciple that I spoke to, he will be rather startled to hear that it was the federal government that gave them their greatest lift in Canada with a LIP grant.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we have a government that sees nothing wrong with giving grants to a foreign religious cult that wishes to come into Canada, and which on the other hand gets up so tight that it asks the parliament of Canada, in face of all the other problems in this country, to give priority to a bill to decide who should play football.

I noticed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was hovering around me. He may wish to speak; I am not sure. Now dealing with sports, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere with "Boom-Boom Knowles". There is an explosion coming, I understand. In fact, he has even told me to be careful what I say now!

Mr. Sharp: We are not worried.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I think it is pretty obvious why we have this bill before us at this time. In addition to the reasons I have mentioned I think this is perhaps a very easy meeting ground for the poor, tired old government that is so rife with indecision.

Mr. Sharp: Like the unity of the Conservative Party—tremendous.

Mr. Stevens: What better meeting ground for the left wing of the government, of which presumably the Minister of National Health and Welfare feels he is part, and the right wing of that party, members such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Here we have a business proposition and a sports activity blending into one, allowing the right in that party to meet the left and advance something with some type of accord.

● (2110)

Let me be specific. I believe the government should not be giving the priority it is to this bill. We have more serious matters to deal with than a football bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The government must accept full responsibility for what we are debating in this House at any time. If they wish to bring in meaningful legislation or, better still, if they would like to name an opposition day to test the confidence of this House, I will be the first to say let's get on with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Stevens: Second, I suggest the government has no place trying to regulate professional entertainment, which is all that professional sports is in Canada at the present time. I suggest that likely the bill before us is not constitutional. In this regard I agree with the excellent speech by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). If the government thinks it is constitutional, exactly where do they get the federal power under the British North America Act?

There is a right for people to choose their own form of entertainment. It may be that, contrary to the government's contention, a Bassett knows what people in Toronto want more than a Lalonde from Montreal. It is no accident that CFTO, the television station, is the number one station for viewers in the Toronto area while the CBC ranks number five.

It was suggested—and surely the minister must have been laughing when he said it—that this bill ties in with national unity. I guess he had been watching the TV series "The National Dream". He referred to such things as the building of the railways. If this is the thread holding our country together, I suggest it is a very, very fragile union that we have in this country.

This bill does not do what the minister should be doing, that is helping amateur sport in this country. When I decided to speak on this bill, I spoke with Canadian and American football players who are now active in the Canadian Football League. I now have the firm conviction that the number one thing that is wrong with Canadian football at the present time is that there is not enough assistance to ensure that players right down to the lowest grades are given the opportunity to learn and play the game that is given those in the United States.

Without mentioning his name, one chap who is perhaps one of the leading players with the Toronto Argonauts told me he played the game in the United States from grade six, and that at the present time they have coaches in their public schools encouraging and coaching the American children to play football. That is how to learn the game. That is how we are so eminent in the world of hockey. If we wish to be eminent in football, it would be more practical for the minister to be suggesting that kind of legislation, rather than fretting over who is going to put on a sports spectacular in Toronto.

Although the point has been made, I think it should be made again that the Canadian Football League is not national. Its activity stops at Montreal. We should bear in mind that almost 25 per cent of the Canadian population lives east of Montreal.

I again refer to how somebody in the Toronto area may look at this. For example, my constituency takes in part of the region of York which would like to build a dome stadium. They have proposed a site and have plans to dig. They have not had one iota of encouragement from the federal government to get on with this development. Surely that is an interesting contrast with the $500 million the government has put up for the Olympics in Montreal. Dealing again with the Toronto situation, one of the reasons given by the federal authorities as to why we are not entitled to help for a dome stadium is that it might be used for professional football.

I have attempted in the few minutes available to me to touch on what I think are the pertinent points in this bill. I urge members to vote against the bill. I intend to do so. My party intends to do so. I can assure hon. members that given an opportunity, as has been outlined in our policy papers which were approved at our convention, we will bring in more meaningful legislation to help amateur sport in this country and to ensure that resource industry companies and companies in general will be restored in ownership to Canadians.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill, not with the intention of prolonging the debate but to say some things that I think need saying.

This bill has stirred up a great deal of public controversy. Until the mail in this country stopped, this bill accounted for at least 10 of the letters I received a day, and for numerous telegrams and telephone calls both to my office here and my constituency office on the weekend at all times of day. This bill has stirred my people up to a great extent. It has wrought controversy throughout my constituency on both sides of the question. I will go into that controversy later.

This bill is very much like one we had last year in connection with capital punishment. It hits at the roots of people. It attacks the "gut" issues. Members opposite are afraid to talk about it. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) is afraid to talk about it, as is the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, if it is not asking too much in this House, individual members should behave with a certain degree of responsibility. I certainly am not afraid to speak about this. I have spoken about it across the country. However, I am prepared to vote on it, which is the very function we have in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I should not comment on the activities of other members in this House, but if their mail is anything like mine, and I know it is, they have a duty to their constituents to say where they stand and why they are voting. This is not a clean yes or no issue. It is very complicated. It is an issue that strikes at the very guts of all of us. That is why we have to stand up and speak. That is why every member in this House should stand up. It is why this bill should be set aside until the situation in this country clears up a bit. We should not be talking about this bill at a time when we have an increase of 1 per cent a month inflation. The Post Office is not working—

● (2120)

Mr. Sharp: Well, sit down so that we can talk about those things.

Mr. Blenkarn: The bill should be deferred so that we can consider it dispassionately, so that members can air the feelings of their constituents and explain to their constituents what the bill is all about. We cannot be expected to vote on a bill without setting out the reasons why we voted and what it is all about. It is imperative that we analyse the feelings of our constituents. That is the least we owe them. They have the right to expect this of us as members of the parliament of Canada. It is not fair for an hon. member to hide behind the curtain, to refuse to speak. He cannot escape his responsibility by not voting or by keeping quiet because some party official or whip has been on his back.

An hon. Member: At least we are not split on this issue like you are.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not an easy problem. It is one which raises the whole question of freedom. It is an issue on which members of parliament should stand up and be heard. A government which brings forward a bill of this kind, puts on two speakers and then says "Vote, vote, vote!" is not responding to the needs of the people of Canada as it should be required to respond.

There are two issue here, and they are in conflict. The first is the right of a free people to see what they want to see, to play what they want to play and to hear what they want to hear. The other issue involves the national unity of Canada and the extent to which football unifies the country. And it does unify the country. We cannot forget that there is a big brother south of the border. These are the two issues before the House and they must be spoken about. This is what parliament is for; parliament is a speaking place. Gut issues are before us, yet members say "Vote, vote, vote, vote!" That is no answer to their constituents.

I took a poll in my riding. I do that often through the mailing system we have. The questionnaire asked two questions: Are you in favour of (a) preventing the expansion of American professional football into Canada? To this, 44 per cent of my constituents said, yes, 32 per cent said no, and 23 per cent were undecided. Then I reversed the question. I asked: (b) Are you in favour of allowing American football into Canada? To this question, 39 per cent said yes, 37 per cent said no, and 23 per cent were undecided. As hon. members will appreciate, it is almost a 50-50 issue.

We get opinions in letters and telegrams from people right across the country, people who are worried about the identity of Canada, people who are worried about whether we are creating the kind of country Laurier talked about at the beginning of this century, people who are worried about the freedom of Canadians as individuals to do what they want to do—play a sport, listen to a sport, see a sport. These are gut issues, and that is why the country is divided. That is why members opposite have a duty to speak.

The question is: Do we need legislation to protect the Canadian Football League? When we look at the league we find that 80 per cent of the stars are American. It is rumoured that the ownership of at least one team may be American. It is rumoured that every coach in the league is American. The bill before us permits 45 per cent of the players to be American this year and 40 per cent next year. This is Canadian football and we have to make sure that Canadian football is protected.

This is not a positive bill, a bill which does something for Canadian football. It does nothing for Canadian football at all. This is a piece of legislation which says: If you play in a foreign league, you go to jail for two years. Football is an important national sport, but we must remember that it is only played actively as a professional sport west of the island of Montreal. As I say, it is a unifying sport, but is it so important that the government of Canada should be making rules to control it and not rules with respect to every other professional sport?

Is this a subject which should be looked at now, a time when economic exigencies are threatening the country, or should such consideration be deferred to a more apt occasion? Is it really necessary to make sure that the Northmen are thrown out of Canada on the grounds that if they were not, poor old Canada, and national sport in Canada, would disintegrate? I suggest the raison d'être of this bill will not stand up to serious examination.

● (2130)

The Toronto market is more than capable of supporting two professional football teams. After all, we have an affluent market of at least four million people and there are already many competing athletic events as well as other cultural activities taking place simultaneously in Toronto. The entry of the Toronto Northmen playing in a foreign league will not mean a thing to the market, any more than if we organized a new soccer team, a new lacrosse team, another hockey team, a professional basketball team, or even more professional tennis stars. This really would not matter because the market is far larger than any which could be satisfied by the Canadian Football League at the present time or in the foreseeable future.

This bill is not really going to do a thing for Canadian unity, but it will deprive the people of the greater Toronto and Ontario area of the right to look at what they want to see when they want to see it, or if they are prepared to pay for the ticket to see it.

When the minister introduced this bill he waxed long about the CPR as the national dream, about the CBC and how the Conservative party was responsible in the original instance for forming that corporation, and he talked about national unity and national identity. He did not mention the penalty of two years in jail when he talked about national unity in relation to these other national things.

What are we talking about here? We are talking about a football team. We are talking about one football team in one city competing in an international league. Perhaps this is just a continental league, but it is a league about which we are talking. What audacity to compare that with activities in Canada such as building a pipeline, a seaway, a railway, a radio network or the unity of this country! As I suggested earlier, that borders on the ridiculous.

This arrangement Mr. Bassett has with the WFL is an arrangement whereby he has the right to operate one team in the World Football League in Canada. He has given the minister the assurance that there will be only one WFL team in Canada. What the minister is suggesting is that the city of Toronto cannot support one football team playing in international competition, and that if that one football team plays in Toronto the gate receipts of the CFL will be so tremendously damaged that the whole CFL will fall apart and the Grey Cup will be used as an ash can. That is what he is saying. Does that not sound ridiculous when compared with the CBC, the CPR, the trans-Canada pipeline, the Seaway and all those things Canadians have accomplished through good times, bad times, depression and war? He says the CFL will fall apart if we have one team located in Toronto competing in an international league. He says the whole country will fall apart and national unity will be destroyed forever.

What about this international league? When people talk about professional baseball in this country they cheer the Montreal Expos because they play big league baseball in the big leagues. Canadians who are interested in big league baseball like to see the Montreal Expos play in other cities throughout the United States. We have a team playing baseball in international competition, so what would be wrong with our having a team playing football in international competition—and I emphasize, only one team in Canada? The minister says this is going to destroy the country; it will destroy Regina, wipe out Winnipeg and visit disaster upon Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver. Such nonsense! Can Canadians not go beyond their borders and win games in New York, Atlanta and other cities in the United States, and perhaps even lose some as well? What is wrong with Canadians going into international competition? The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) spoke earlier about this.

This is the first time the government has said: Thou shalt not enter a league in Canada, competing internationally in any league in another country. That is what this bill is; it is a "Thou shalt not" bill.

Hon. members opposite suggest that we should keep quiet, not speak too often, let this bill come to a vote and pass quickly. They do not want to talk about it because they know in their very heart of hearts that this bill is not right and should not pass.

Mr. Alexander: Show me a Liberal with a heart. I don't know any of them.

Mr. Blenkarn: The part of this bill that bothers me most is Clause 6. If this was a bill designed to encourage Canadians by providing that any professional football team in Canada must have so many Canadians on its roster and no more than so many foreigners on its coaching or playing staff, I would not be quite so upset. This bill provides that any Canadian who plays for a team playing football in any foreign league in Canada as defined—and it refers to Canadian or American football—will be subject to two years in jail. That is the iniquitous part of this bill. If this bill, following its marvellous preamble, went on to show some method by which growing young Canadians would be encouraged to play football and be given more opportunity, that would be pretty good.

If this bill provided that the CFL must have teams in London, Halifax, Quebec City and Charlottetown, that might be a good thing too. But this bill provides nothing of the kind. This bill confirms the fact that the Canadian Football League is entitled to continue to have at least 15 American players on its roster, providing that is not more than 40 per cent of the authorized playing group. It does not say anything about giving more opportunity to young athletes, and it does nothing to encourage amateur sports in Canada. This is a "Thou shalt not" bill, and this government is used to that kind of bill.

Last session when the matter of foreign control was raised this government produced the foreign control takeover bill, another "Thou shalt not" bill. Every time we on this side of the House suggested that there should be taxing incentives and better arrangements for banking facilities for Canadians to take over Canadian enterprises in Canada, hon. members opposite did not want any part of it.

● (2140)

This is a "Thou shall not" approach to Canadian identity. As a member of this party I say that if we are to build an identity in Canada we will never build it by two years in jail. That is the approach we have had from this government in connection with Canadian identity. We need a positive approach which gives Canadians encouragement to do things, to build Canada. There is no attempt to build Canada in a statute which prohibits and controls, which makes Canadians look inward, which provides that Canadians shall not compete in international competition. That is the nature of this bill and this is the reason it must fail. It does nothing for Canadian identity. It does not build up Canada. It is a two-years-in-jail bill. That the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) should let that pass I am surprised.

Much has been said about whether this bill has constitutional validity. I have said before that I am only a country lawyer and do not know very much about this, but it strikes me that any sport that can be broadcast on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation must not be a sport that is criminal in nature. So to ban the playing of that sport as a crime while at the same time allowing the broadcasting of that sport on a national television network owned by the people of Canada must perforce mean either that the government is full of criminals or that the sport is fine. So this bill cannot stand on the basis of the criminal law or the peace, order and good government provision.

Is there likely to be insurrection if this bill should not pass and the Northmen do in fact play? Are we to destroy peace, order and good government if we have football in Canada? Clearly not. There are two members on the government side who are law professors and one on this side, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). I am surprised the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) has not stood up in this House and given a legal opinion in this case. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), a former dean of a law school, has not given his legal opinion on the validity of this bill. Clearly the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the hon. member for St. Paul's and a number of others have called into question the validity of this statute.

Surely it is incumbent upon competent people with legal talent on the government benches to say that they really believe concerning the validity of this statute. Yet we have not heard from them. They do not want to speak about it because they are pretty well convinced we are right when we say that, and they do not want to embarrass the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

The evidence is that there would be no damage to national unity in Canada as a result of the non-passage of this bill or as a result of the Northmen playing football in Canada. There is no evidence that people will really be injured, that the cities of Regina, Winnipeg and Calgary will fall apart. All we have is suspicion. All we have is an issue which is pretty small, which really does not go to the heart of what this House should be discussing at a time when we have the Post Office and the air line out of commission. This bill should be tabled by this government. It should be brought up again for future debate, but it should be tabled now so the government can get on with the urgent business of running the economy of Canada instead of messing around with football.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it has been evident all day and all evening not only that the government want this debate truncated but that we know why they want silence. They have much to be silent about. They certainly have a desire to be silent about the way they have bumbled the economy of this country, bumbled the issue of the cost of living and now have bumbled this. But this can be seen in a tragic light when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) gives priority to a bill such as this at a time when there are so many things vital to the future of the Canadian people, so many things on which we would welcome legislation and direction from the minister and his colleagues. However, about these things he and they have been silent.

We wish, for example, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would give us an opportunity to debate with him the present inadequate funding of medical research in this country and the way increases for the Medical Research Council are not even keeping pace with the cost of living.

We wish the minister would give us an opportunity to deliberate upon the inadequate funding of institutions that fight alcohol and drug abuse. The government takes in hundreds of millions of dollars in revenue from the sale of alcohol, yet provides only a token amount of this for education to combat it. We wish, for example, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, would bring in a program on the subject and challenge of traffic fatalities, which are now threatening 200,000 potential years of lost life annually. We wish there were some presentation from the minister on what could be done to increase government funding for research in respect to heart disease, cancer, mental health problems, aging and many other priority items of the Canadian people. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare gives priority to a bill such as this we must think that he is now becoming the Mr. Bumble of Canadian politics. Here is another example of how this government has bumbled without leadership and direction in so many areas and so many challenges.

Who can believe in a government that produces legislation of this kind at this time? Indeed the only explanation that can be given is that this must be the creation of those so-called strategists who devised such incredible things as the 60 days of decision during the 1963 election and now have conceived this brainchild.

This bill was supposed to arouse political support for the government in the west and was supposed to give direction to the cause of nationalism. This bill has instead aroused an increasing number of Canadians against the government, and I think that is why throughout the afternoon and evening the hecklers, who are the substitutes for speakers on the government side, have been calling for a truncation of this debate. They are on the wrong side of the issue. The debate is embarrassing them, and that is why they want it to end. Ever since 1956 that party have been in favour of closure. Now they are trying to do it again. They want to put through this House a bill without adequate debate.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stackhouse: This bill is a demonstration of the arrogance of this government. It is a bill introduced by a minister who said in his opening remarks that this is a very real and emotional issue that we as a people care about deeply. But I say, hon. members opposite do not care about it deeply enough to debate it adequately.

Mr. Sharp: We want a vote.

Mr. Stackhouse: Many of them do not care deeply enough about it even to be in the House to debate it.

One reason why an increasing number of Canadians are aroused to oppose the government on this issue is that this bill is striking at what should be the basic personal freedom of every Canadian. There are so few areas of life in which the ordinary citizen has some control left that surely what he does with his spare time should be left to him. This is a free country for all. Surely it is a country in which the ordinary citizen will have at least the freedom to choose what football teams he can look at in his spare time. Yet, we have a government which is saying: "Oh, no, the ordinary citizen, especially the citizen in Toronto, will not have that freedom; it is the government that will decide that." In fact, the government is bringing in legislation that will determine that.

What has amazed me is the way this government, which over the past several months has said that there is absolutely nothing they can do to combat inflation, to regulate the price of housing or to help the ordinary citizen cope with the cost of living, on this issue finds that there is much they can do. On this issue the members of this government certainly have "muscle". They cannot do much about inflation, housing, and so many things that now confront Canadians, but on football, ah, that is where they are really big.

It is clear that this country may have a cabinet, but it does not have a government with a sense of priorities. If the government really had a sense of priorities, the last bill that they would want to bring in now is the one that they have brought before us for this debate. Surely they would have dealt in a realistic way with the problems that truly challenge us today.

I know that throughout the afternoon and evening members of the government have been urging an end to this debate because the debate embarrasses them. But we also know that because of this bill they have lost whatever shred of confidence the public has in them. While they may, because of their party discipline and because of the alliance they have with the socialists, be able to ram this bill through when a vote is taken, they are certainly on the wrong side of this issue so far as public opinion is concerned, particularly in the Toronto area.

Therefore, in this debate we want to challenge the government to show a greater sense of priorities. They have said: Bring the debate to an end if you do not think it is really a vital issue. But the question I put to them is: If this debate had ended a few hours ago, would they have brought in something to deal with the problem of inflation or to deal with housing? Oh, no, they would simply have brought in some other time filler, which is what this bill has been. They would have brought in some other substitute for legislation, for the inaction that has characterized them.

So we say that if ever there is anything that justifies the lack of public confidence in this government as shown in the public opinion polls, and before long to be apparent at the election polls, it is this kind of masquerade, this kind of burlesque which the government has perpetrated on parliament and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, before the House makes a decision on the second reading of this quite important bill I would like to take some time to say a word or two on whether or not the government is taking the right step in controlling entertainment. The question is not whether I as a young Canadian—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —believe that football is a sacred sport or whether I as a somewhat handicapped young Canadian should be protected from entering into that game. I do not think that is the question. I do not think we should equate football, which needs greater protection for the young Canadian, with baseball, hockey or soccer. I think that we as Canadians have proven over the past number of years that we are able to participate fully in all major sports, whether it be hockey, soccer, baseball or football.

I was very interested to hear the minister remark that we do not have a professional baseball league. I thought back to the number of baseball games I played and the number of times I asked myself whether some time there could be a professional baseball league that I could break into. Then I thought of the city of Calgary which had attempted to establish a major professional league but failed to draw a sufficient audience to pay the salaries of the members of that league. Then I thought of the baseball tournaments in the province of Saskatchewan. There really are professional baseball tournaments in western Canada today. I thought of the Battleford Beavers, the baseball players that they hire from the United States to play in the Lacombe tournaments. Then I thought of the baseball teams from Moose Jaw, Sceptre and Unity, Saskatchewan, that came to play in the baseball tournaments in Alberta and took away top money.

May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved,

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CHARGE BY UNITED NATIONS SECRETARY GENERAL THAT CANADA ENGAGED IN BRAIN DRAIN OF DEVELOPING COUNTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on March 19 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to comment on the report of U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to the U.N. Committee on science and technology a report entitled "Outflow of Trained Personnel from Developing to Developed Countries". This report names Canada as one of the advanced nations benefitting from the migration of highly trained persons from the developing nations.

This problem, known as the brain drain, is of great concern to the United Nations, for the very persons best equipped to build up the poor countries of the world are often the ones who migrate. For example, in the five year period from 1968-1972, 2,178 Filipino nurses came to Canada, 450 doctors from India, 606 teachers from China, Hong Kong, and 1,601 teachers from the West Indies.

It is essential to take a responsible, global view of this problem. I welcome all immigrants to Canada, and I would not in the least interfere with the human right of anyone to migrate. But there are very large implications to this problem. As the Secretary General's report makes clear:

● (2200)

> The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada are receiving as a gift from developing nations a large cadre of trained persons whose education was expensive to the developing countries, and who contribute critically important medical services to the populations of the developed countries. It is not possible to arrive at any single figure representing the monetary gain to receiving countries. However, it is clear that the total gain for major receiving countries should be considered as being in the hundreds of millions of dollars per year.

Consider migrating physicians for a moment. Physicians can secure a higher income by migrating, even though they are on the average at the lower end of the income scale for physicians in the developed countries. The glaring paradox is that they move from countries where the need for their service is acute to countries much better supplied with medical personnel. Stated another way, a few relatively poor developing countries are devoting scarce resources to the costly education of a critically important professional group, many of whom migrate permanently to a few developed countries.

Migration of highly skilled persons is thus correctly perceived by some countries as a serious threat to successful development efforts. In short, many developing nations see large numbers of their trained persons contribute to the steadily growing output of the developed countries at a time when they are desperately needed at home.

All of this, says Dr. Waldheim, raises questions of the "equity . . . and adequacy of the developmental assistance programs of the richer nations." For the brain drain problem is but a symptom of the much larger problem of development of the developing countries. The vast numbers of talented people in all countries must be encouraged and helped to accept the challenges within their own countries. Solutions to the brain drain problem must be integrated in a renewed perception of international social justice. This integrated approach is essential to the attainment of peace, freedom and justice in the world.

We must ask ourselves if it is socially just for Canada to impose such restrictive immigration regulations as was done last February 21. Under these rules, non-sponsored immigrants to Canada will have to prove their talents are needed before being allowed in the country. By so closely tying immigration to manpower needs, does not the Canadian policy work against the interests of the developing countries in precisely the way Dr. Waldheim protested? Our policy inevitably discriminates against the non-white, non-industrialized, non-rich parts of the world, because the general population of these areas is excluded from Canada while the most highly educated are welcome. Thus Canada, like other western, rich countries, skims off those persons most essential to the modernization of their countries. This is what follows from having economic indicators dominate immigration policy.

In the immigration review now under way, Canadians are being asked the key question: "What are our international responsibilities?" Mr. Speaker, I urge the government and indeed all thoughtful Canadians to consider immigration and population policies in the framework of this larger question. The world is changing more rapidly than we can perceive and piecemeal answers are inadequate.

Affluent man has created more wealth than Croesus ever dreamed of, but at the expense of more misery than the world can bear. Hundreds of millions of people living in the developing countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America are caught up in conditions of deprivation that no set of statistics can begin to describe. The rich squabble over butter; the poor cannot even afford fertilizer. It is a scandal beyond belief.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs made an excellent speech before the special session of the United Nations General Assembly on April 11, in which he pledged increased Canadian aid in the areas of the developing world most in need. I congratulate him on that speech and I urge the government to contribute to the forthcoming World Congress on Population with this same large viewpoint. Not population problems alone, not immigration policies alone, not foreign aid and trade policies alone, will help the two billion people in 100 underdeveloped countries of the world, only an integrated policy of world development will meet this massive challenge. We must accept this challenge, and all of us in parliament should help Canada take a role of international leadership in removing the inhuman inequalities which exist today.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) for having raised this issue and for the excellent statement that he has made in support of the question that he asked the other day about the report of the Secretary General.

With much of what he said I find myself in agreement, but perhaps I might be permitted to make a few comments that I think will illustrate that the problem is somewhat more complex than can be seen at first glance.

As hon. members are aware, Canadian immigration policy since 1967 has been based on the principles of non-discrimination and respect for the universal declaration of human rights. We recognize the problem for developing nations of the so-called brain drain, but any restrictive action of developed countries against people emigrating from less developed nations would be difficult to implement, as it would be contrary to the spirit of the declaration, specifically article 13, paragraph 2, which states that everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

In our own specific case, it would be contrary to our policy of non-discrimination. However—and this is the first point I would like to make—Canada does not actively promote recruitment of immigrants in developing countries, skilled or otherwise.

In the report referred to by the hon. member, the Secretary General warned against drawing simplistic conclusions about the so-called brain drain because of the many complex factors involved and because of the paucity of information available. A case in point is the fact that developing nations such as Mauritius are encouraging the migration of trained personnel, nurses in this case, due to unemployment. Yet this is considered to be a part of the brain drain.

A major part of the Secretary General's report dealing with reasons for migration focuses on problems of unemployment, under-employment and misemployment of trained personnel in the developing nations themselves. Another example cited in the report is the over-production in the developing countries of engineers with training not related to the needs of the country. So from the report it can be seen that the causes of the brain drain are to some degree inherent in the conditions of the less developed countries. In presenting his remarks tonight, I think the hon. member admitted that this is essentially a problem we are facing.

We have no wish here in Canada, with a very substantial program of development assistance, to undermine the value of our assistance by draining skilled personnel from developing nations. I say to the hon. member that if we were to welcome more people, even if our policy of immigration was less selective, we would not necessarily reduce the brain drain. People who saw an opportunity of coming to Canada to take preferred jobs, where they could get more money or where their training equipped them, would come as well as the others. Therefore, I do not think it is our selective policy that is producing the brain drain.

Like the hon. member, I believe we have a responsibility to try and improve economic and social conditions in the developing countries of the world. This is essentially the way of dealing with this problem, so that there are opportunities for educated people to stay at home and work satisfactorily.

[Mr. Sharp.]

AGRICULTURE—DAIRY POLICY, 1974-75—ASSURANCE THAT PRODUCERS WILL CONTINUE TO OPERATE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced on March 29, 1974 a support and subsidy program for the dairy year 1974-75 and considering that this program does not meet adequately the producers' wishes and needs, I took the first opportunity offered to me, on April 1, to ask him whether he considered seriously that the new policy which guarantees only $8.50 a hundred weight of milk is an adequate response to the dairy producers requests and that it will be such as to invite them to remain in business and invite young people to carry on with this important sector of the farming industry?

Although the Chair considered this question very interesting, it was suggested that I was asking the minister to express a view which normally should be done on motions.

In view of this situation and the urgency of this question, I availed myself of the privilege granted to all hon. members to raise the question again at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, when I rose previously concerning this matter both in March and April of this year, I brought the seriousness of the situation to the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the Cabinet. I dare hope I have clearly substantiated the claims made by industrial milk producers which apply also to whole milk producers. In fact, the costs of chemical fertilizers, farm implements and labour, as well as a number of other factors are about the same for industrial milk producers and whole milk producers.

This is why, as spokesman for both, I wish to work on the improvement of their lots. I am aware that the minister or his parliamentary secretary is likely to reply that the lots of dairy producers has considerably improved over the past few years. I agree on this to a degree, but it must be said that production costs have increased considerably so that in 1974, the difference between production cost and cost price is wider than ever, which means the net income decreases.

The question is not to see whether the improvements brought about by one party have been better than those of some other party, which is of minor interest for the producer. Rather, we must take steps to give to every producer of industrial or whole milk his fair share of the national income. This is the objective we must meet.

Dairy producers clearly stated that the real production cost is more than $10 for 100 pounds, and that to guarantee profitability in this industry, the selling price must of course be higher than the production cost.

That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. During its ninth meeting, held from March 17 to 20, 1974 the Food Prices Review Board studied the problems of the dairy industry and its effects on both producers and consumers.

It stated that there are now serious reasons to worry about the income of a large number of producers in that sector, the present possibilities in the industry, and its capacity to supply Canadian consumers adequately at reasonable prices.

To study the problems of the dairy industry, the board used a report prepared at its request by Professor MacFarlane. According to that report, the dairy industry must face the following problems:

a) the low income of producers and decreasing production in spite of subsidies;

b) a shortage of qualified labour and producers' difficulties in competing with non-farming job opportunities;

c) the current high cost of feed grains.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the problems of the dairy producers. It is therefore not surprising that the country should fall short by 7 to 8 per cent in its dairy production and resort to imports to meet the needs of Canadian consumers, to the extent of some 50 to 60 million pounds of butter from January to April 1974, which situation has, to my mind, helped to add to the number of unemployed.

At this rate, we will import even more in coming years. But from where shall we import, since in other countries such as Australia and New Zealand, the dairy producers are experiencing the same problem? Yet, we have great potential in dairy production in Canada, particularly in Quebec and Ontario.

Recently, a dairy producer in Bellechasse won a prize as the owner of the Holstein cow that produced the most milk in the province of Quebec last year, that is 17,438 pounds of milk with 5.92 fat content. The owner of the cow is Mr. Alfred Boulet of the parish of Saint-François in Bellechasse, Quebec.

I would like to extend my most sincere congratulations to this young farmer and dairy producer who does credit not only to the Quebec dairy producers but to Canada. It is an honour for the member for Bellechasse to mention it in the House.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that we of the Social Credit Party have a very wise suggestion for the House and the Minister of Agriculture which would do justice to the dairy producers and consumers. It is that a discount on dairy products be established by the Canadian government and that the producers be compensated for this discount, which will benefit the Canadian consumer, by new credits created for this purpose by the Bank of Canada which, after all, belongs to the Canadian producers and consumers, and that these new credits be created according to the needs of the consumers and the industry's productive capacity. The producer will then be well paid and unfair advantage will not be taken of the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, this is a concrete suggestion which takes the needs of the consumers and the rights of the producers into account. There is no inflation or deflation involved, only scientific balance. This, Mr. Speaker, is the solution submitted by the Social Credit Party of Canada.

At the present time, our dairy production has a deficit of 7 to 8 per cent because we operate haphazardly. In recent months, we have imported from 50 to 60 million pounds of butter when our production capacity is sufficient to meet our needs.

What are we waiting for to act? The month of April is nearly over and May is coming up. What will then be the answer for June 1974 and the following months? That is the question put by producers and consumers to this government. What will be the answer in the present financial system? But for the Social Credit Party of Canada the real answer based on common sense is in line with the material possibilities of this century.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not want at this time to discuss the adequacy of the amount of $10.15 mentioned in the hon. member's question because I feel his inquiry is about whether the incomes by milk producers will be adequate to promote sustained, and even increased, production.

I would like to insist that the price of $8.50 per hundredweight is a goal lower than the price a few producers will be receiving. Several major changes were made in the new dairy policy which will have a positive effect on production.

For example, producers receive the full subsidy of $2.30 per hundredweight for any production within the marketing quota and not only just on the subsidizable quota. The subsidizable quota per producer was increased to 900,000 pounds of milk and additional subsidizable quota is available in cases where two or more producers work as full time partners on a dairy farm. This is in addition to increases of 6 cents and 12 cents a pound in the support price for butter and powdered skim milk respectively.

The minister is quite aware of the need for additional steps to bring renewed confidence to industry. The purpose is to set up a program which will ensure a better cost-receipt balance to the producer while at the same time making that occupation attractive to younger people. For that purpose the Canadian Dairy Commission received terms of reference to consult with producers and other groups concerned to present to the government proposals likely to reach those goals, and work in that direction has already started.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION INTO INCREASING COST AND EFFECT IN FEEDING INFLATION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, on March 14, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) to consider a royal commission inquiry into the large and growing cost of government administration and the effect that such expenditures have in feeding inflation. He indicated he was prepared to consider my request. Tonight I hope to provide reasons that will encourage him to move further in the direction of an affirmative answer.

I think the time has come to examine the large, sprawling empire of government departments and agencies and to determine whether the existing structure is the most efficient vehicle for serving the Canadian people and identifying the changes required to perfect the system. I suggest we should start at square one and ask ourselves what role government should play in our society and whether we have exceeded that function perhaps to the detriment of higher priorities.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has frankly told this House of the complex and difficult situation he faces. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is the Department of Transport as it is now constituted an adequate vehicle for development and implementation of badly needed new policies to serve this nation? I suggest that we need the best available independent professional advice. This can be provided by a royal commission with broad terms of reference.

While I have the greatest respect for every committee of this House which deals with the estimates and expenditures of government, I believe the time has come to take a giant step forward in examining the total impact of government expenditures and new systems and methods that can streamline our operation and lighten the burden on the Canadian taxpayers. As a corollary to this, I believe we should examine the impact of government spending on the Canadian economy and its relationship to the inflationary spiral.

Since the royal commission on government organization, commonly called the Glassco Commission, reported in 1962 the $6½ million expenditure of that year has tripled in the 12 year interval to some $22 billion, as shown in the main estimates before us today. In the 12 years since the Glassco Commission reported some outstanding social legislation has been enacted, and federal government assistance to disabled and disadvantaged Canadians has improved immeasurably, both in its quality and amount. Indeed, in respect to disabled people, particularly the blind, and in respect to our senior citizens I find it easy to support the proposals of my colleagues in this House for even more generous treatment.

At the same time I believe we can make some real progress in identifying areas within each department of government which can and should provide a service for other departments of government, and avoid costly duplication, the tremendous expense of hiring outside professional and other services, and consulting with experts outside departments of government.

The total budgeted cost of outside consultants in all departments disclosed in the estimates is approximately $750 million, much more than to total expenditures of any of the maritime provinces. I believe also that the total structure of our government has become so complex and so unwieldy that the lines of authority from the minister to those in the lower echelons are strained to the utmost.

The ability of all departments of government to focus on any one problem in our economy, like that of regional disparity, leaves much to be desired. For example, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has expended millions of dollars in Atlantic Canada with some degree of success in building the economy of that area. As DREE takes one step forward in establishing new industries, the lack of a cohesive and progressive transportation policy erodes its effect. The total amount spent by DREE on incentive grants since its inception is considerably less than the amount projected for the Mirabel Airport alone. The Auditor General's report should not be a once a year embarrassment to government. The function of this office should be a continuing service of remedial action.

[Mr. Howie.]

In department after department of government estimated expenditures climb. Current estimates before us now show that justice and administration of our courts has an allocation of $23 million. The RCMP budget will increase by $20 million to $125 million. The Food Prices Review Board budget has risen to $1.9 million, up 90 per cent over the last year. The CBC has increased its budgeted expenditures by 25 per cent to $298.8 million. The Post Office expenditure is up 17 per cent to $689.7 million. The Commissioner of Official Languages budget is up 36 per cent to $1.9 million.

It is imperative that every one of these expenditures receive the closest possible scrutiny, but the time allocated to our House committees to perform this function and the research facilities needed to dig into them are not sufficient to do the best possible job for the Canadian people. I feel that with the tremendous increase in the complexity of government organization since the Glassco Commission of 12 years ago, we need to examine our administrative process in the light of the vast improvements and changes that have taken place in business, accounting, policy auditing and computerization, thus ensuring that the total delivery system of government best serves the challenge—the Canadian people have given us.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) has indicated the desirability of a royal commission investigation or inquiry into government operations with a view to doing really quite a wide ranging number of things. This suggestion is based on the assumption that, because the federal expenditure budget has very largely increased, there must be increases in duplication and inefficiencies. In fact, while total federal government expenditures have increased very largely over the past period, as he has indicated, to some $22 billion this year, if one looks at the estimates it will be found that slightly over 50 per cent of these expenditures are accounted for by transfer payments to provinces which administer programs. These have been the fastest rising of our total expenditures. He did not suggest that the royal commission should inquire into the provincial administration of these programs, but here is a very large area of expenditure.

Second, there have been substantial increases in other kinds of expenditure represented by direct transfers to individuals, such as the substantial increase in family allowance payments, in veterans' pensions and in pensions paid to the aged. All of these account for a substantial increase, but these are not programs where the efficiency of the administration is a substantial item of cost. Indeed, while in 1961 the cost of operations of the federal government, excluding transfers to other levels of government and excluding transfers to people, such as family allowances and old age pensions, accounted for some 10.2 per cent of the gross national product, today this share of the GNP accounting for services to a very largely expanded population in a variety of much more complex issues has declined from 10.2 per cent of the GNP to 8.9 per cent. One hopes that this percentage of the cost of operation, the overhead, will continue to decline. I suggest that this is not evidence that a commission of inquiry of the range and nature that the hon. member suggests is needed.

I might also say in respect to lightening the burden on the taxpayer, which we all desire, that the burden is largely the consequence of legislation passed by the House increasing transfer payments to the provinces, the administration of these large social programs, and transfer payments to individuals, such as family allowances. This is where the increase in the taxpayer load has occurred.

There is just one specific item more that I would like to comment upon and then I will sit down, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman mentioned that parliamentary committees do not have the time to look into these expenditures, and that in particular the cost of outside consultants has risen to $750 million. It is rather curious that the hon. gentleman should be proposing the seeking of advice from outside consultants because we cannot solve our own problems and at the same time complaining about this advice being sought. I should point out that in the $750 million, the largest single item is the payment made to the provinces for vocational training instruction rendered at federal government expense to the citizens of provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would like to point out to the hon. member that under the adjournment procedure there is no possibility to rise on a point of order. Should he have an important question to raise, I suggest he does so at the beginning of the sitting tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY RELOCATION AND GRADE CROSSINGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has now introduced Bill C-27, which concerns railway relocation and grade crossings, and in view of the fact many municipalities are holding their grade crossing plans pending passage of this legislation, thereby creating severe urban traffic problems, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

That consent now be granted by this House for passage of Bill C-27 at all stages, without debate.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION—IMMEDIATE DEBATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which he would never expect today. I should like to ask him whether he is now prepared to indicate the date on which he will bring down the budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, God willing, I expect to present my budget to the House of Commons at eight o'clock on the evening of Monday May 6.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Chicken!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the government House leader. Can he assure the House that the budget debate will commence practically immediately after presentation and continue uninterrupted by other House business until the budget debate is completed and all question put?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question I think is yes, practically immediately, the next day if need be. As to the second part of the question, I have not considered it. I do not foresee circumstances at this point that would oblige us to interrupt the debate but I have always been somewhat skeptical about casting my bread upon the waters, especially in light of the question put by the Leader of the Opposition.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF OPPOSITION DAY THIS WEEK OR NEXT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, some ten days ago the government House leader refused to commit himself to an opposition day this week or next week but indicated it was something he might very well favourably consider as the time approached. Now that the time has arrived I should like to ask the government House leader whether he is prepared to allocate a day this week or next week as an opposition day in the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in view of the budget itself and the nearness of its date of presentation I doubt whether it would be wise to distract the hon. gentleman by putting down an allotted day.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for York South rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on a supplementary.

THE BUDGET

TIME OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can now tell the House why the budget of the federal government will be presented only after all provincial budgets but one have already been presented—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Go back to the bush league.

Mr. Lawrence: —at a time when we are looking for some initiative and leadership from the federal government? Will he also tell us why the federal government waited almost 15 months before making the announcement it made today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should recognize that in this House the government does not determine its dates according to provincial decisions. We make our own decisions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN RETAIL BEEF PRICES—ACTION BY MINISTER—ALLEGED UNWARRANTED PACKING COMPANY PROFIT MARGINS

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises from reports that retail beef prices will go up anywhere from 12 to 30 cents by the end of this week despite the fact that prices being paid to beef producers as recently as yesterday have not been rising. What steps is the minister taking to prevent these retail price increases, and what assurances will he give the House that no unjustified increases will take place?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my information that there were some increases in the price of cattle during the week of April 15 to 19. I am having further inquiries made. Our action as the government will follow as a result of the information we have, particularly any reports from the Food Prices Review Board.

Mr. Grier: I might say that the minister only needs to check the livestock commodity price index reported daily in the press to get the information he appears to be seeking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Grier: May I ask the minister whether he is investigating the allegations which are being made by the Cattlemen's Association that packing companies are taking advantage of uncertainties in the present beef situation to raise their profit margins and their prices to the retailers to unwarranted levels?

Mr. Gray: I am having that aspect looked into and I particularly welcome any findings of the Food Prices Review Board in this area.

Mr. Grier: The minister has frequently referred to the findings of the Food Prices Review Board in regard to beef prices. Can he advise the House when the long-awaited report of the board on beef prices is expected to be published?

Mr. Gray: I will be happy to check into that and advise the hon. member as soon as I have the information. I understand that the board is meeting on April 25 and it could be that the result of this meeting will be the report in question.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED MODIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SYSTEM TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Because of indications that the international monetary system is a cause of inflation in all industrialized countries, can the minister tell us whether he intends to put forward concrete measures to protect the Canadian economy against the detrimental effects of this system in order to enable Canadians to control their own economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this subject could be discussed during the budget debate.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

Could the minister tell the House if he looked into the speech made by Dr. Otmar Emminger, Deputy Director of the Central Bank of West Germany, who recognized that the most eminent experts consider now the international monetary system as the ideal inflation-producing machine. If so, can the minister say if he has taken measures to stop the havoc wrought by this machine?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I did not examine the speech of Mr. Emminger. However, at a meeting of a national banks committee for the revision of the monetary system, some suggestions to curb world inflation have been brought forward. I will send a copy of that speech to my hon. friend from Témiscamingue.

INCREASE IN RETAIL BEEF PRICES—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore and it is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the minister indicated that he was seeking further information on the increases in retail beef prices. Has the minister now obtained this information? May I ask the minister whether, in view of the urgency of this matter, he has consulted the chairman of the Prices Review Board to see if an interim report can be made available to the Canadian public?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my staff has been in touch with the board in this regard. The inquiries which are under way are well advanced but not yet completed. I will pursue my hon. friend's suggestion further.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY WHEN ECONOMIC REVIEW WILL BE TABLED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance who has finally announced the long overdue budget date. In light of the fact the Economic Review of the Department of Finance was tabled on April 25 in 1972 and April 12 in 1973, will the minister indicate to the House when the latest review will be tabled?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): April 29, 1974, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jelinek: The Minister of Finance stated that the delay in the introduction of the budget was due to the complexities of the latest round of oil price negotiations. In light of the fact that both Alberta and Saskatchewan have already presented their budgets, an indication that there was awareness of the benefits and burdens of the latest oil price negotiations, why has the minister consistently delayed the introduction of the federal budget which the whole country has been awaiting for so many months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is argument which perhaps might be useful during the budget debate.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES ON ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. In view of the lengthy delay in presenting the budget and in light of the fact the government fears to allow an opposition day to the opposition parties, will the government House leader now take into consideration the proposition I made to him a few days ago about estimates and bring estimates back into the House in order that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and their colleagues can be challenged and hopefully impeached for their high misdemeanours against the people of this country?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been no delay in bringing forward the date of the budget. In fact, the contrary is the case. The hon. member will have full opportunity to move amendments on that day or the day after if he wishes. In the meantime, if he would consult with his colleague, the opposition House leader, I would be glad to consider a way by which we could allow estimates to be considered on an allotted day. However, I am not going to go beyond that in terms of providing an opportunity to challenge, except on the main financial policies of the government.

POST OFFICE

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—MEASURES TO ASSURE DELIVERY OF SOCIAL SECURITY CHEQUES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Can he give the House the assurance that, throughout Canada, cheques for unemployment, old age security pensions, veterans' pensions, welfare allowances, family allowances, will not be delivered late? If not, what specific steps will the government take?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, of the four million family allowances cheques which have been mailed, over 3,400,000 have already been delivered. With regard to those that have not, extraordinary arrangements have been made locally to ensure that the recipients will get their cheques. I cannot say publicly what those arrangements are; this the hon. member will surely understand. However, I shall be pleased to tell him privately what they are.

Moreover, I wish to advise the House that, as for all other cheques, the officials of my department are keeping close day-to-day contacts with those of the Department of Supply and Services.

I wish to remind the hon. member that the old age security pension cheques will not be delivered before the end of this week, so that we will be able to take, in their respect also, the steps which may prove necessary in case the postal conflict has not been settled before the end of the week.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the hon. minister assure the House that these arrangements will apply to rural districts as well? They may apply to urban districts, but could he assure the House that the cheques will be distributed also in rural districts throughout Canada?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris for a supplementary, then the hon. member for York South and then the hon. member for Charlevoix.

POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF EARLY SETTLEMENT—CONSIDERATION OF POSITION OF CODERS AND SORTERS BY MANPOWER COMMITTEE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the growing public concern over the total collapse of Canada's postal service, what assurance can the minister give us of an early settlement through the efforts of the mediator?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that Mr. Taylor who has been asked to discuss with the parties involved to find a solution stated during the luncheon hour while the two parties interrupted their meeting that the purpose of those discussions was to find some means to end up the illegal strike now under way. According to Mr. Taylor, there is always hope of an early settlement.

I would like to remind hon. members, especially those of the official opposition, to be patient and responsible enough to enable Mr. Taylor to do his work without encouraging by hasty statements the workers to carry on their illegal strike.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact this whole mess has been created because the Postmaster General has failed to activate the manpower committee provided for under the collective agreement signed last March, as his contribution to a reasonable solution is the hon. gentleman now prepared to state publicly that he will activate that committee and refer the critical issue of discrimination between coders and sorters to the deliberations of that committee as provided under the collective agreement which he has ignored up to the present time?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have already publicly stated that I hoped that the two parties would find some factors to solve the problem within the manpower committee. I am pleased to see that the hon. member has finally understood it.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF RATE OF COMPENSATION TO OIL COMPANIES TO ACHIEVE SINGLE PRICE ACROSS CANADA IN LIGHT OF INCREASED PROFITS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I was originally going to address it to the Minister of Finance but I gather he has ascertained that God is willing for him to tell the House what he may do and say in the budget on May 6. I should like to put this question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the increase in the profits of Imperial Oil in the first quarter of this year of more than 100 per cent over the same quarter last year, which amounts to a profit of $1 million per day, as much as Canada spent per day in the last war, and this on the basis of $4 per barrel oil rather than the increased price, may I ask whether the government is now ready to reconsider the rate of compensation to those oil companies that is now promised to them in order to have a single oil price across Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the government's view would be, in view of the fact that there is more than one company operating here and more than one company that does not have western producing properties as the company in question does, that any change in this regard should be dealt with by fiscal measures rather than by changing the compensation program.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether the government would then consider, which can surely be easily done, a difference in compensation between the multinationals like Imperial, Shell and Gulf that have made immense profits and those companies that do not have oil properties in the west instead of paying the huge amount of roughly $1½ billion per year to corporations that have made immense profits on the $4 per barrel price and will have astronomically larger profits on the $6.50 or $6.70 per barrel price?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

APPLICANTS' CLAIMS UNDER CONSIDERATION—PAYMENT OF ADVANCES BY QUEBEC WELFARE AUTHORITIES

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Because of the postal strike, special measures have been set up to ensure delivery of unemployment insurance cheques. But those involved in a decision delaying the administration of unemployment insurance could get cash advances from the Quebec social welfare plan. Is the minister now aware that pursuant to a directive originating from district offices in the province of Quebec, all offices are prohibited from advancing moneys to unemployment insurance beneficiaries at grips with the commission?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. gentleman is referring to a routine precaution or caution which was sent out with regard to cases of unemployment insurance in dispute. I can assure the hon. member that we are quite prepared to take emergency measures to look after particular cases of hardship, particularly those arising from delays in the issuance and delivery of cheques due to the postal strike.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON PARTICIPATION IN TRI-LEVEL TASK FORCE STUDY OF PUBLIC FINANCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities yesterday in its presentation to the federal government protested that it was experiencing opposition and an impasse with regard to the tri-level process, will the minister now state unequivocally that the government will participate in a tri-level task force study of public finance to develop the concept of tax sharing that the municipalities have long been pleading for?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that I think we have the very enthusiastic support of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. We also, as a government, indicated our complete support for the holding of a third national tri-level conference this year or early in 1975. I indicated that decision by the federal government to the provincial ministers responsible.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I can only conclude, and I am trying to interpret, that the minister's answer was yes. It was not very clear. That is why I asked for an unequivocal statement. I now ask the minister, what factors led to this change in federal policy since at the national tri-level meeting in Edmonton last fall the minister warned the municipalities that if they persisted with their request for a task force to study tax sharing it would wreck the tri-level process. Was not the federation yesterday protesting against the impasse when it met with the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. I suggest that it is not in order to ask the minister to indicate what factors led to a decision. This kind of information would normally be given to the House by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I have to rise on a point of order because it is very important to the municipalities and to the House to obtain a clear position from the government as to what it will do with regard to the study on tax sharing. The federation came before the Progressive Conservative Party today because they wanted to make a presentation to the next government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roche: My point of order is that the federation told us that the government had said yesterday that it would receive their brief very favourably. I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now give us a clear, firm statement that the federal government will participate in a tax-sharing study on a tri-level basis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the hon. member had a point of order. He has asked a different question. I suggest that his first supplementary was not in order. Perhaps the Prime Minister could reply to the hon. member's redrafted supplementary, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North who also has a supplementary.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that we will. We want to proceed with the study which was agreed to by all parties at the last tri-level conference. There was agreement there to undertake a study. We repeated yesterday to the mayors and municipalities that we are in favour of that study. We hope the official opposition is in favour of it. We know that some provinces are trying to drag their feet, but we want the study to go forward.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON HOLDING OF REGULAR TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. As the municipalities seem to be starving for lack of proper financing and as Mr. Bird, on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, asked for regular tri-level conferences to assure that municipalities of various kinds, urban and rural, get an equitable share of the taxes collected by the federal government at that level, will the Prime Minister assure the House and the people, and particularly the municipalities, that there will be regular and meaningful tri-level conferences?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance so far as this government is concerned. The hon. member probably realizes that some provinces do not seem to be as enthusiastic about the process as we are, but it was a federal initiative of this government. We are very much in favour of it. We think it would be much better for the municipalities than the priorities for tomorrow conference proposed to them by the official opposition, which is really a meeting between the federal and provincial governments at which the municipal governments are not one of the levels of government participating.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North for a supplementary, then the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and then the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, from the Prime Minister's answer I assume that he is in agreement with the statement made by the provincial government of Ontario that they would share on the basis of dollar and dollar and that he is in accord with that kind of financing.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is talking about a subject completely different from the one he raised in his first question. His first question was about tri-level conferences. Now he is talking about fiscal sharing arrangements. He should get his questions straight.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEW CANADIAN PASSPORT—INQUIRY WHETHER SYMBOLS OF CROWN TO BE ELIMINATED

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it true that in the design of the new Canadian passport the Canadian coat of arms which contains the Crown and other royal symbols is to be eliminated and, in addition, that the design removes the special exhortation to Her Majesty's representatives round the world and in her name to give aid and comfort to those who hold this document and seek such assistance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of any of these suggestions.

REPORTED MASSACRE OF CIVILIANS BY PORTUGUESE COLONIAL TROOPS IN MOZAMBIQUE—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the recent confirmation by a group of Portuguese officers of the earlier accounts by Catholic priests of the massacre of civilians by Portuguese colonial troops in Mozambique, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs take the opportunity to repeat to Portugal, an ally of Canada in NATO, our abhorrence of the repression of the remnants of the Portuguese colonial empire in Africa and will he urge Portugal once again to grant freedom to the independence movements in these areas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I have no independent confirmation of the reports on the radio this morning. I should like to say, however, that Portugal clearly must be held responsible for any such atrocities committed by their forces against innocent civilians in those African territories. I am happy to repeat two statements I have already made. First, I have urged the Portuguese foreign minister, and I will do so again whenever I have the opportunity, to negotiate with the liberation movements for the independence of the colonial territories. I would remind the hon. member that in the United Nations we voted in favour of a resolution calling for the establishment of an impartial and responsible commission to inquire into reports of massacres in the Portuguese territories.

● (1440)

Mr. Brewin: In posing my supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question rather than tell something to the minister.

Mr. Brewin: I will do so, Mr. Speaker, but the minister should look at the Manchester Guardian—it is a liberal newspaper, "liberal" with a small "l"—and he will find it contains a report on this matter. My question is this: will the minister go beyond what he has said and raise this matter publicly in NATO which purports to be a defender of human rights? Will he consult with the other allies in NATO to ensure that NATO is used as an instrument to deal with this affair?

Mr. Sharp: I would not give an undertaking to raise this issue publicly in the NATO forum. In the first place, it would not be public; NATO meetings are not in public. Again, an effort to raise issues of this kind in a NATO context has been made and it has been uniformly non-constructive and has only led to long and futile debate. However, we are very much concerned about these reports and we shall be consulting with our allies.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH INFLATION AND HOUSING BEFORE PRESENTATION OF BUDGET ON MAY 6

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman undertake to introduce legislation having to do with inflation and housing in the interval between the present date and May 6 when the budget is to be brought down so that we may get on to dealing with these problems which are bedevilling people in urban Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That, indeed, is one of the reasons we are hoping to use some legislative days before the budget to introduce important legislation against inflation—

Some hon. Members: Football!

Mr. Trudeau: We hope the House will permit us to get on with these measures very soon.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S PLANS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On April 19 I pointed out to the Prime Minister that the unsettled interest rate situation had destroyed the entire mortgage market in metropolitan Toronto and I asked the Prime Minister to have you, sir, make a statement on motions about the mortgage market. Would you now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member direct his question to the Chair.

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the minister now make a statement on motions as to the interest stance so that mortgage companies can get on with the business of lending to private builders, or will the government make private representations enabling the mortgage market to know where it is going so that some houses can be built in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I think I had just better work on my speech for May 6.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF LOANS BY BANK OF CANADA AT ADMINISTRATIVE COST TO MUNICIPALITIES, SCHOOL BOARDS AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Will his May 6 budget put forward a valid answer, off the beaten track that led us to inflation, to solve investment problems in the public sector in Canada, for municipalities, school boards and provincial governments, through loans granted by the Bank of Canada at administrative costs?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I take note of the question, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member should not get impatient.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REVIEW OF REGULATION AFFECTING ENTITLEMENT OF CERTAIN ORPHANED CHILDREN

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I do not want to distract him from protecting underpaid football players in Canada. It has to do with a matter I raised five or six weeks ago. Has he had an opportunity to review the regulation under the family allowances legislation under which orphaned children are struck off entitlement to allowance on the death of both parents when an estate of more than $1,600 a year is left?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been reviewed and we are examining various possibilities of amending the regulations so as to improve the situation. However, this process is not yet completed.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF PRICES—LENGTH OF TIME LAG BY PROCESSORS IN IMPLEMENTING REDUCTIONS AND INCREASES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I can well understand his need to consult with his colleagues on occasion. As beef processors claimed a lengthy time lag between producers and consumers when beef prices to producers were declining but an extended time lag does not seem necessary when the reverse is taking place and prices are rising, has the minister ordered an immediate investigation into this specific circumstance and, if not, will he undertake to do so?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): This is an aspect I am looking into in line with answers I have given to other hon. members.

BEEF PRICES—ACTION TO PROTECT PRODUCERS FROM BLAME FOR INCREASES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): I should like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture. Since it now appears that beef producers are once again to be the whipping boys in relation to the current rise in the consumer price, and bearing in mind that the biggest weekly supply of Canada beef reached the Toronto market last week, may I ask the minister what action he is taking to protect producers and prevent them from being blamed for yet another display of fancy footwork by the food distributors?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the hon. member I would say that the facts speak for themselves. The market shows there has been no tremendous increase in the price of beef to the beef producers of this nation. The statistics show there are 37.5 per cent more meat products in storage in Canada at this time than a year ago and there is no basic reason at all for the price of beef to be increased by 20 cents a pound as some are suggesting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member can tell that to his friend from St. John's East.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I have just received a press wire and I hope Your Honour will give me a bit of leeway. It states in part:

A union spokesman in Montreal says the federal airport firefighters are expected to end their two-week strike later today even if a nation wide vote rejects the latest federal offer.

The union spokesman said the firemen would report to work on one condition, namely, that a mediator be appointed immediately to reopen negotiations. He said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asked for leeway but, really, he should attempt to ask his question without quoting the document to which he has referred. The hon. member will, of course, be given all possible leeway because this is an important matter.

Mr. Alexander: I had to give the President of the Treasury Board some indication of what the press wire said. Since the firefighters have stated they will go back to work, as I understand it, in half an hour under certain circumstances, can the President of the Treasury Board give the House an assurance that he will pursue this matter and see to it that a mediator is appointed forthwith?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am glad to give an undertaking to pursue the matter in any way that is likely to lead to the cessation of this illegal strike.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF GRANT TO MICMAC FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT CO-OPERATIVE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is also prompted by a wire but I will not read it. I should like to take the House from Mozambique to Eskasoni, Nova Scotia. My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister aware of a commitment of funds from his department for Micmac Fisheries Development Co-operative Limited engaged in oyster farming, funds which to date have not been forthcoming? If the minister is not familiar with either the project or the commitment, will he be good enough to look into the matter and make a report? As he well knows, coming from Newfoundland, time is of the essence where a project of this nature is concerned.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As to the second part of the question, I shall be pleased to look into the matter immediately. My recollection is that I did receive a representation with regard to the catching of what I believe were described as baby oysters by this group. It is probably the same one, and action is being taken on it.

FLOODS

PREVENTION MEASURES BY TOWN OF LUMSDEN, SASKATCHEWAN—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment in relation to the reply by the Prime Minister yesterday to the hon. member for Assiniboia. What are the other ways, referred to by the Prime Minister, by which the town of Lumsden can receive federal assistance in the heroic efforts its people are making to prevent their town from being flooded?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, federal financial assistance is available to the provinces and through the provinces to the municipalities for all works of a temporary nature and for all outlays in the nature of compensation. In other words, temporary works such as the dykes now being built and sandbagging are subject to the formula for cost sharing.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED LAY-OFFS OF EMPLOYEES IN VIOLATION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. As Air Canada has laid off some 4,800 employees and these layoffs have been labelled as a complete violation of the collective agreement, what action will the government take to rectify the violations of the agreement by Air Canada management?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport I would like to say it is true that there has been a lay-off of over 4,000 employees. This is an issue which has arisen before during Air Canada strikes. It has been discussed at length by the company and the various unions. We understand that the unions involved can follow the grievance procedure provided for in the collective agreements. However, Air Canada does not feel it is in violation of any provisions of the collective agreements.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, as there is a difference of opinion between Air Canada and the unions, will the government request Air Canada management to call back the employees who were wrongfully laid off?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the second question to the attention of the minister.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES BY BANK OF CANADA—EFFECT ON HOUSING COSTS EXPECTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who last Friday took responsibility for the decision by the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates and thereby mortgage rates and indicated that this decision was made following consultation with the government. At the time the decision was made by the government to allow the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates, what effect did the Prime Minister expect this would have on the cost of housing? In other words, would it cause housing costs to go up or down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not indicate that this particular decision was taken after consultation with the government. I did repeat what the Minister of Finance has said, that the policy of the bank is in general accord with that of the government, and that the governor of the bank had, indeed, as he always does, informed us of the action he was going to take.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that we have just about reached the end of the question period, but perhaps we might have one or two additional questions without supplementaries, with the co-operation of hon. members, of course.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board and it is somewhat supplementary to one asked earlier. The President of the Treasury Board has now given a clear indication that if the firefighters return to work he will appoint a mediator. I would ask him to repeat that because this, of course, is all the assurance they want. Can he give us some indication whether or not an agreement has been ratified yet, or when he might know?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman is aware that under the collective bargaining process a mediator is sought with the consent of both parties to the discussions. At the present time the Treasury Board has a settlement with the union, and it would be difficult to see what role a mediator would play.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, they need the minister's assurance. Are you withdrawing it? Give it once again.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF FERTILIZER

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the minister some months ago assured the House that there would be an adequate supply of fertilizer for all parts of Canada this year, can he assure the House at this time that there will be an adequate supply of fertilizer and also an adequate supply of chemicals for use this summer?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we do realize that there are some problems still existing in distributing fertilizer to areas throughout the country and that there will be some shortages in some parts of the nation. There is an increase in the production of fertilizer; in western Canada, for instance, it is 68 per cent more than two years ago, so it is away up there. Nitrogen production is away up in Canada. We have met with the chemical industries that are supplying different chemicals and understand they have found other sources in other parts of the world and, according to the information we were given about a week ago, they hope to be able to meet the demands for all of Canada.

THE MINISTRY

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY PRIME MINISTER FOR TRIP TO ONTARIO CENTRES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from his announced trip beginning Thursday to certain centres in Ontario, including the Ontario Liberal Party annual meeting in Sudbury. Will he tell the House whether he will make use on this trip of any aircraft belonging to the Department of Transport or the Department of National Defence and, if so, what factors have led to this method of spending public funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, just like the Tories who flew back to their ridings last week on DND aircraft, I intend to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a point of order. If it does not take too much time I will see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Prime Minister on a matter of concern to many Canadians, and I do not feel that the question should be answered by a non-answer. Is the Prime Minister the hon. member for Sudbury? That is where he is flying in a departmental aircraft. I think that this kind of answer to the question is arrogant, out of order and is an affront to parliament and to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I see you have finally found a use for that guy.

An hon. Member: He has lots of Liberal experience, John.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT TREASURY BOARD MAKE EVERY EFFORT TO REACH SETTLEMENT WITH AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS BEFORE STRIKE DATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact the air traffic controllers in their collective bargaining with the Treasury Board have followed the law at every point, and in view of the fact they have given two weeks' notice of their date for a legal strike, will the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that the board is making every effort during this two-week period to reach a just settlement with the air traffic controllers so their strike will not be necessary?

An hon. Member: There goes the budget.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that, with the help of the mediator, is our firm intention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster rising on a point of order?

Mr. Bell: No, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question but it will keep until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member feels his question might keep until tomorrow, we will call orders of the day. Is the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo rising on a point of order? Perhaps he should be recognized first and then I will call orders of the day.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the question I asked the Prime Minister. While I appreciate the fact you are very anxious to move on to other matters, the fact is that I asked the Prime Minister a question which he did not answer and at the same time he inadvertently misled the House. I think he should at least be given an opportunity to correct the mis-statement he made to the House. I have in mind the fact that on page 1581 of Hansard for last Friday the Prime Minister is reported as having said:

> The long and short of it is that the governor of the Bank of Canada decides what the interest rate will be but in consultation with the government—

● (1500)

While he was busy debating the question I had asked him the Prime Minister said to the House that in fact there was consultation about the interest rate with the government, and I think he should be given an opportunity to clear up any misconception which might have been created.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the Chair should allow the Prime Minister to answer a supplementary question. The question raised is hardly a question of privilege. However, if the Prime Minister wishes to do so he will be recognized for the purpose of replying to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me this opportunity. I would refer him to my answer of that day and the reference I was making to the answers of the Minister of Finance. What I indicated was that the Minister of Finance had given a very good description of the relationship between the governor of the bank and the Minister of Finance. The essence is that the governor of the bank has to have a policy with which the government agrees, but there is not day by day consultation on every matter on which the governor of the Bank of Canada decides. However, it is the practice that before increasing or for that matter decreasing the bank rate he will advise the Minister of Finance and in this case I am quite certain he did so.

CANADIAN FOOTBALL ACT

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREIGN ENCROACHMENT

The House resumed, from Monday, April 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-22, intituled Canadian Football Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, when I began my remarks shortly before ten o'clock last night, I had referred to what I thought was a rather misleading statement by the minister when he said we have no professional baseball in Canada and that, therefore, he and the government would not necessarily have to be concerned about baseball. We have many semi-professional baseball teams across the country. Attempts are being made to establish leagues in Canada. The main difficulty in respect of baseball in Canada is in attracting people to watch the game. This has been a severe problem in the city of Calgary where I know many people have attempted to establish a semi-professional league. At the present time the game does not have sufficient drawing power to attract great audiences. However, it might do so some day. We might be able to entice Americans to come up here to play baseball and thereby encourage Canadians by providing them with an opportunity to learn from the best there is in the business. This is one aspect of football. Over the years we have encouraged American players to play football in Canada so that we could learn from them, the best in the business. Many of our young players have gone to United States colleges to learn to play football and then returned to Canada. It is true that a few remain in the United States to play football there.

I was quite disappointed when I read the speech of the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming). I had thought he was a long-time admirer of the former leader of the Liberal party, Mr. Pearson. However, it seemed to me that he was preaching for a cause which was not necessarily football but rather a personal cause within the Liberal party. Certainly Mr. Pearson, well known by many people to have been a great admirer of sports, would have been very hesitant to put his stamp of approval upon the minister's legislation. But this government, of course, is doing a number of things the former Liberal government would never have done.

The hon. member for York West stated that he had received communications from the various mayors across Canada. He did not include Mayor Drapeau of Montreal among those. The minister, in closing his speech during the debate, said that this bill will go to the committee and that the committee will be at liberty to call all the witnesses it wishes. Well, in respect of the Bill C-18 concerning oil, the committee was told there was a desire to get the bill back into the House the next week and, therefore, it was hardly possible to call witnesses. This question perhaps has been better aired and maybe witnesses would be prepared to appear before the committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to discuss the pros and cons of the Toronto Northmen operating in Toronto or in Buffalo or in Seattle. Surely, among the witnesses who should be called are the COJO people from Montreal or Mayor Drapeau, because Montreal generally gets what Montreal wants. We should know exactly what it wants so that we can support or not support this bill from the proper outlook one might form here in Ottawa.

Let us take a look at football itself. The Canadian game of football was originally called rugger. An article which appeared in the Globe and Mail for April 17 says that rugby football originated in England. This game has been changed and somewhat modified. We have adopted the American rules. We took the forward pass and we used American imports. Even the scoring system was changed to correspond with the system in the United States. A touchdown originally counted for five points, but we increased it to six points to correspond with the value of a touchdown in the United States. It is said in this article that the west was the first to use American imports. It goes on to mention Fritz Hansen. I knew Fritz Hansen but did not know he was an American. Certainly, many Americans have come to Canada to play football and have remained in Canada.

The minister has no precedent for this particular piece of legislation. He mentioned that the Grey Cup game is a great national event for all Canadians. It has been said that this event stimulates an interest in sports, that it has become symbolic of athletic competition because it brings east and west together and thereby contributes to the unity of the nation. If the minister wants to bring together east and west he could make a contribution to the eastern part of Canada. He does not seem to be doing anything to encourage the playing of football in the maritimes. He does nothing to subsidize a team in St. John's, Newfoundland. That is where hockey is presently taking over. The people love the game. I am sure there are many people there who would like to play football and have the benefit of the salaries paid by the CFL or the WFL. I do not see Mr. Lalonde giving any help to teams in St. John's, Halifax or to any other Canadian team.

The minister goes on to say that without denigrating the value of free enterprise, even its most vocal proponents would concede that government must be prepared to intervene on occasion to protect the legitimate interest of all Canadians. Then, it is stated that various actions have been taken by the Canadian Government to control the operations of numerous aspects of the private sector, such as in banking, foreign investment, broadcasting, and communications. Well, it is nice I suppose for the football players to realize they are part of that eminent group of bankers, broadcasters and communicators, but certainly we must ask what we are doing for the young Canadian who wants to play ball and get paid the best money possible. Recently reference has been made in the newspapers to the Toronto Northmen signing three players from the Miami Dolphins. In addition, however, they signed up a Canadian boy named Stevenson from Edmonton. I do not think the Edmonton Eskimos could pay him enough. Who would say that young Stevenson should not accept more money from the Toronto Northmen? I do not believe any thinking Canadian would blame Stevenson for taking more money from the Toronto Northmen to play in that league. Why should he not do so? His athletic career will last only a few years and he should get the money while he can.

Mr. Lalonde made a few erroneous statements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows he should refer to hon. members either by their constituency or by their official position in the government.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He made a number of erroneous statements. Apparently the minister said on a radio program that the World Football League would go after CFL players even if the Northmen were allowed to operate in Canada, and the World Football League would probably set up teams in Montreal and Vancouver. The Minister knows full well that he has had an offer of a written guarantee from the Toronto Northmen to the effect that if they are allowed to operate in Toronto they will honour the CFL contract, and will in no way attempt to raid the CFL, except, when a contract on a player's option was available.

● (1510)

The minister also knows full well that if the Toronto Northmen were allowed to operate in Toronto the government would then have the determination as to whether or not there would be another world football team operating in Canada because Mr. Bassett has that franchise and is prepared to turn it over to the government or to the CFL, whichever the government felt would be better. The Northmen have also offered to make payments for the next ten years that will equal the payments the Argonauts have made into the equalization fund in 1973.

It has been said that the Regina team sorely needs these equalization payments. If one wanted to look at their books one would find that their operation has been rather a success financially. I am not saying that they are as well off as they would want to be, nor am I saying that they are rolling in cash, but they are far sounder as a financial enterprise than are the Montreal Alouettes. The Canadian Football League has sent every member of the House their blue brochure which outlines the average payments of the Argonauts which have been $55,000. I do not think that $55,000 divided into eighteen will make or break the Canadian Football League. The people in Regina to whom I spoke on this matter said that their big problem is to fill Taylor field with spectators. We will fill Taylor field with spectators if we provide them with a good brand of football and if the economy of the local citizens allows them to pay the price of the tickets. I do not think they will have any trouble maintaining the Regina football team. If the economy worsens so far as grain prices are concerned, Taylor field might have difficulties. If the Regina team does not find successful replacements for their all star quarterback and their running back, then they may have trouble filling Taylor field.

But it will not matter what happens in Toronto because Mr. Bassett and the Northmen have also promised not to televise the games of the World Football League anywhere in Canada. That is a bigger commitment than they are prepared to make if they have to move to Buffalo. If they move to Buffalo, CTV already has a contract with them to televise their games in Toronto. The amazing thing is that even though the Toronto Northmen will be operating in Buffalo, the fact they are owned by Canadians will allow compliance with the Canadian content rule of our broadcasting system, so their games can be broadcast in Canada if they are forced to move out of Toronto. It seems to me that it will be more detrimental to filling Taylor field in Regina if I, or a person in or near Regina, can sit at home and watch the World Football League on television. It may not be a Canadian team, but it will be owned by Canadians and may have Canadian players on it, so we may be more content to sit at home and watch that game than pay the price of a ticket to watch a game in Taylor field.

So it seems to me that Bill C-22, rather than helping the Canadian Football League, is in fact doing it harm. It will be detrimental to the Canadian Football League if the Toronto Northmen have to move out of Canada. If they are allowed to remain in Canada, it may be difficult for the Toronto Argonauts, but if there is no broadcasting of the games in Canada the other teams will not hurt, provided the Northmen live up to their commitment that they will make the equalization payments the Toronto Argonauts have made. The book I have here says that last year the Toronto Argonauts paid $50,000 in equalization payments, and the average payment has been $55,000. I do not think the Northmen will quibble about the other $5,000, but they are serious and they will have a team on the World Football League. The World Football League will become an empire.

If they are forced to go to the United States then, as they have said publicly, they will openly raid the CFL, and the CFL will be in severe danger. There will be far more Stevenson's who will opt to go for the higher money. Stevenson, from Edmonton, had a perfect opportunity; he was breaking into professional football. Born in Edmonton, he went to the United States to learn how to play the game. He was offered big money and went for it. There will be all kinds of American players now playing in CFL who will, in fact, be offered contracts and no attention will be paid to their existing contracts. Jack Gotta, the former coach of Ottawa Roughriders, has stated that he would not mind having five members of the Grey Cup champions, the Ottawa Roughriders, on his team in Alabama. I suppose he would be prepared to pay somewhat more than they are getting up here, and he knows exactly what they are getting here having been their coach. If we want to help the CFL in Canada, then every member of the House should defeat this bill, but if we want to kill the sport and kill the hopes and aspirations of many young Canadians who believe that through sports they can achieve their fame, then we should support this bill.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has never been much of an athlete or he would not have put this bill before the House. I know nothing of his past but I judge the man by his attempts to stifle sports in Canada and I am very disappointed in his attitude to that matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING EXPORT OF NATURAL RESOURCE PRODUCTS AND LIMITATION OF IMPORT OF FARM PRODUCTS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing this bill for second reading, it is my intention to outline the basic reasons for proposing the amendments to the Export and Import Permits Act as set out in the measure before us. As I am pinch-hitting for my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), who will be returning tomorrow from a trade mission, I shall confine my remarks to the fundamental objectives of the bill and try to be as brief as possible. We can go into detail while in committee to whatever extent may be necessary.

Under the terms of the Export and Import Permits Act, the Governor in Council may establish a list of goods called an "export control list" whereby the export of any article can be made subject to control for certain purposes as specified in section three of the act. The first objective of the bill is to add the following two purposes to those already set out in section three:

to ensure that any action taken to promote the further processing in Canada of a natural resource which is produced in Canada is not rendered ineffective by reason of the unrestricted exportation of that natural resource;

to limit or keep under surveillance the export of any raw or processed material which is produced in Canada in circumstances of surplus supply and depressed prices and which is not a produce of agriculture.

Under section five of the same act, the Governor in Council may also establish a list of goods, called an "import control list", whereby the import of any article may be made subject to control for certain purposes as specified in that section.

The second objective of Bill C-4 is to add the following purpose to those for which imports can be made subject to control:

to restrict, for the purpose of supporting any action taken under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, the importation in any form of a like article to one produced or marketed in Canada the quantities of which are fixed or determined under that act.

The third objective of Bill C-4 is to repeal section 27 of the Export and Import Permits Act setting out the expiry date of the act.

The first point I would draw to the attention of the House is that, apart from the deletion of the expiry date, the proposed amendments constitute enabling legislation. The fundamental concern of the government in respect of both the proposed amendments is to establish further purposes for which products can be placed on the export control list to ensure to the maximum extent possible that proper economic advantage is derived from raw or processed materials produced in Canada.

The object of the amendment to enable the Governor in Council to place items on the export control list in order to promote further processing of a natural resource produced in Canada is self-evident from the wording. The amendment will provide one of the means which may be needed to promote the processing of resources in Canada in cases where such processing can be internationally competitive and consistent with sound industrial structure. This is not to imply that the most desirable or the most effective way to encourage the processing of resources is by introducing export controls. Quite the contrary. The government's general approach is to focus on constructive co-operative tools such as multilateral trade negotiations, taxation policy, existing programs of industrial support, consultation with industry and the foreign investment review process. Nevertheless, it is conceivable an occasion might arise when, despite such positive efforts or in conjunction with them, it might be necessary to make the exportation of some natural resources subject to control if further processing in Canada is desirable and is to be achieved.

The object of the proposed amendment to limit or keep under surveillance the export of raw or processed materials produced in Canada in circumstances of surplus supply is to establish a provision which can be used, if needed, to ensure that proper economic advantage is derived from raw or processed materials produced in this country. Occasions may arise when Canada possesses a particular material in abundance, as well as an influential place in the international market with respect to its price. In such circumstances, over-supply from Canadian sources could result in reducing prices or holding them at an inappropriately low level having regard to such factors as the capital invested in production, the long term need, and the future value of the material involved. In this situation, various steps to promote appropriate pricing might be possible; for example, international or national co-operative marketing arrangements. However, one advisable step might be to make the material in question subject to export control for a time. The proposed amendment in respect of material in surplus supply would make it possible to initiate such action and to do so with a promptness which would yield best results.

Hon. members will have noted that agricultural products are excluded from the amendment dealing with materials in surplus supply. The reason is that there are no situations involving products, other than those already under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board, in which Canada would have the necessary strength in world markets to influence the price of a commodity through unilateral export restriction.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to turn to the proposed amendment aimed at establishing an additional purpose for which imports can be made subject to control. The amendment is as follows:

to restrict, for the purpose of supporting any action taken under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, the importation in any form of a like article to one produced or marketed in Canada the quantities of which are fixed or determined under that act.

As hon. members know, the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, which became law in 1972, allowed for the creation of national farm marketing agencies to promote strong, efficient and competitive industries having due regard to the interests of producers and consumers. To date, such agencies have been established to deal with eggs and turkeys. Under the act, agencies have the power—in respect of eggs and poultry only—to determine quantities which may be marketed in interprovincial and export trade by setting production or marketing quotas.

It is possible that in future a supply-management program of this kind could be undermined, on occasion, by an influx, or the threat of an influx, of low priced products, particularly from other countries. Therefore, it is being proposed to permit the application of import controls, if required, to support the operation of national supply-management programs for eggs and poultry. This is not to imply, of course, that it would be the intention of the government, if it did decide to apply import controls on eggs or poultry for a particular period, to attempt to insulate the Canadian market for these products for long-term trends in international prices.

One point to which I should like to draw the attention of the House is that, if this amendment is enacted, it does not mean that an agricultural product will be automatically added to the import control list because a supply-management program is being implemented under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. In fact, if the authorities concerned under this act believe that a particular product should be added to the import control list to complement a particular supply-management program, they will have to make a specific recommendation to this effect. Then, the government will, of course, examine the case and decide whether or not to recommend to the governor in council the desired addition to the import control list, as well as establish the duration and conditions under which import controls will be exercised for the particular product or products in question.

Finally, Bill C-4 proposes the repeal of Section 27 of the Export and Import Permits Act which states that "This Act shall expire on the 31st day of July, 1974". The act, which was enacted in 1947, has been repeatedly extended. The last extension, which established the existing expiry date, took place in 1969.

It is proposed to repeal Section 27 since the inclusion of an expiry date in what is, in effect, ongoing enabling legislation, is, first, inconsistent with the fact that the act was intended to implement various international commitments, as well as complement other acts of parliament which are not subject to expiry dates; and, second, leads to unnecessary administrative expense both for industry and government departments, as well as introduces an element of uncertainty in private companies' export sales efforts on long lead-time delivery items in contracts with certain potential purchasers. As hon. members appreciate, the repeal of Section 27 would simply mean that the act's continued existence is at the pleasure of parliament.

Canada has various ongoing international commitments that are implemented under the Export and Import Permits Act which are not subject to expiry dates corresponding to the limited duration of the act, the time and extension of which I just described. These include export control commitments in respect of military equipment and strategic supply; controlling trade, for instance, with Rhodesia in keeping with the United Nations' resolutions on Rhodesia; implementing international commodity control commitments, for example on cocoa; and administering cross-border arrangements with the United States to facilitate Canadian trade. The act is also used on an ongoing basis, as required, to complement action initiated by agencies named in Section 5(b), that is the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Fisheries Prices Support Act, the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, the Agricultural Products Board Act, and the Canadian Dairy Commission Act. None of these five acts contain an expiry date. In addition, the Export and Import Permits Act is used on a continuing basis for implementing import controls which are deemed necessary as a result of recommendations to the government made under the Anti-Dumping and Textile and Clothing Board Acts.

In referring to the various other acts for which the Export and Import Permits Act may provide complementary support, perhaps I should mention at this time that the act does not, of course, include any provisions, nor are any provisions being proposed, whereby items are automatically added to the import control list or export control list at any time as a result of action initiated under any other act. When items are added or deleted from the import or export control list, the government takes and must continue to take a decision in each case having regard to its international commitments and the recommendations which may be made to it by departments, agencies or boards, as well as whatever other significant circumstances prevail at the time.

I might add also that the Canadian Dairy Commission Act is the only act of the group of five named in subsection 5(b) for which the Export and Import Permits Act is being used to provide complementary support at the present time. In this connection, 10 products are on the import control list: Animal feeds containing more than 40 per cent of non-fat milk solids, butter, certain butterfats, cheese of all types, dry buttermilk, dry casein and caseinates, dry skimmed milk, dry whole milk, dry whey and evaporated and condensed milks.

The inclusion of an expiry date in the act leads, as I said, to unnecessary administrative expense for industry and government departments. For example, it is customary practice to issue export permits covering a six-month period to reduce the work of applying and issuance to a minimum. However, once the act approaches its expiry date, as is the present situation, this economizing of effort cannot be achieved so that additional applications must be filed and processed this year.

Another example is that it is customary to issue certain export permits for periods of one year for aircraft replacement parts in cases where companies have specific ongoing commitments to export items on an urgent rush basis in order that aircraft will only be grounded for a minimum length of time but, during the calendar year in which the act is due to expire, the business of arranging these special permits must be done twice. The same situation does exist, as a matter of fact, in respect of approximately 400 special calendar year export permits which have been issued to logging and pulpwood firms. Similar difficulty is being encountered on the import control list side in respect of shirts, where approximately 65 importing companies are involved.

An expiry date in the act can also introduce an element of uncertainty in private companies' export sales negotiations with potential purchasers, particularly in countries which are on the area control list. State-trading countries are accustomed to obtaining export permits and, indeed, in most cases, require that a permit be issued to cover a long-lead delivery item before completion of a final sales contract. Cases have arisen, however, where it has been impossible to issue an export permit for long lead-time items since delivery was scheduled after the expiry date of the act.

Therefore, industry and government obviously have been required to go to considerable lengths in such instances to provide as much reassurance as possible to potential buyers, short of a definitive commitment, that export permits will be granted. Since it is hoped that Canadian exports of long lead-time, advanced technology products will expand to state-trading nations, it would be useful to reduce administrative impediments and irritations in dealing with these potential customers to a minimum.

For these reasons I hope that hon. members will join with me in recognizing the urgency of dealing with these matters and, hopefully, will give prompt passage to the bill.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this bill is received with somewhat mixed emotions. It gives to the government a very substantial increase in its arbitrary powers, which has in fact the potential for consequences which are far beyond those that might appear inevitable in the short-run or on cursory examination. Curiously enough, the vehicle for this new broad range of powers is the Export and Import Permits Act, envisaged primarily as an act to protect the vital interests of Canadian security from a defence and security standpoint. One wonders if it is a sign of the times, based perhaps on the experience of the Arab world in using a resource, namely oil, as a strategic weapon, that we now consider raw materials in that sense or is it merely a question of expediency that an existing act is being used for the purpose of obtaining new powers with objectives far removed from those associated with the main purport of the original act.

The proposed amendments have the effect of introducing economic dirigisme with somewhat nationalistic overtones. Clause one will permit the cabinet to restrict the export of any natural resource produced in Canada if national policy requires the further processing of the product in this country. In addition, the cabinet would be permitted to restrict the export of raw or processed material other than agricultural products in circumstances of surplus supply and depressed prices.

On the agricultural side the cabinet, in addition to the powers already explicitly provided in the act, will be able to limit the import of any article under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act similar to articles produced or marketed in Canada where the quantities are fixed or determined under the act. With the general objective of increasing the extent of processing of Canadian raw materials in Canada it is difficult to argue. This is a view which is widely held. I think Canadians are tired of being hewers of wood and drawers of water. They feel we should have a greater participation in the processing of our own raw materials. This is a perfectly legitimate aspiration of Canadians. There are many examples one can think of.

Uranium, for instance, is a natural resource which obviously will come into increased demand around the world. It is a rare commodity in the sense that it has such a vast power potential. It is, in fact, one of the great resources of the world. It can be used as a trade-off to other power sources. It will have a profound effect not only as an alternative to the burning of fossil fuels, for example, but consequently as an economic limitation of a sort to the pricing of other energy sources. It has often been suggested that we should enrich uranium in this country and take advantage of the tremendous increase in value added that that would entail. It has also been suggested we should refine more of our oil in Canada and should export, to the extent that we do export oil from this country, a higher proportion of refined and finished products, thereby ensuring a greater return to Canadian industry and greater opportunities for Canadians to participate and thereby benefit from the higher technology and techniques involved.

Some of our entrepreneurs are doing the same thing in respect of lumber. We are now developing at a very rapid rate trade in pre-fabricated houses which are being exported to France, Japan and elsewhere. One could make a case for the encouragement of a greater degree of processing of these materials, including Canadian lumber, in this country. Of course, another example where we have long complained that United States markets were not available to us to the extent they should be, is in the field of fine papers from our forest products. These are merely indicative of the types of processing opportunities which are available to us as Canadians.

There is a long list. I have not attempted to enumerate in any exhaustive way the wide variety and scope which is available to us, but have merely indicated that there are areas where we could increase the extent of processing in Canada, and consequently benefit in a very material way from the availability in this country of the vast natural resources we have. I suggest this is an area which deserves perhaps more study than we have given it, and that we should undertake as a matter of urgency a study of the areas in which Canadian value added could be achieved, with a minimum of capital investment and a maximum return to Canadians. The whole question of resource development is a very controversial one, in respect of our renewable resources less so than when one discusses the non-renewable resources. When it comes to renewable resources I think the principles are fairly widely accepted. The principle of course is that we should manage our forests, our fisheries and our farms in such a way that we are able to optimize the yield on a sustainable basis. It is just a matter of common sense that we introduce policies that will give us, on a long term projection, the maximum yield which can be obtained without destroying the basis of the annual harvest.

We have much to learn in these areas. Our forest management techniques although quite excellent in some areas are perhaps not as good as they could be. I am sure that hon. members who are particularly interested in the fishery would say we have much to achieve in this area, including the development of international agreements which will not only enable but require our partners in the world to use the discretion necessary in order to maximize the yield on a long-term basis. But in these areas there are some established principles. The principles are really those I have stated, a maximization of the long-term sustainable yield.

When it comes to the question of non-renewable resources the determination of what one might call the best interest is not so easily made. Extreme positions range all the way from a full-speed ahead type of unlimited exploitation on the one hand, to an attitude of leave the resources in the ground for future generations and only use what is immediately required in Canada by Canadians, on the other hand. These are the extreme positions. I would suspect, as is ordinarily the case, that some middle ground would make the most sense for Canada. I urge the government once again to consider the desirability of cost-benefit studies in these areas. Seldom have I heard—as a matter of fact I have never heard—a discussion of this very important question based on sufficient information as would answer the question whether it is in Canada's long-term interest to accelerate exploitation of certain resources and to use the yield from those resources to repatriate the ownership of Canadian equities in many areas, including manufacturing facilities, as against the inevitable appreciated value of the resources if left for exploitation at some future time. I do not say that the answer to this question will be a categorical one but I do say that any good manager—and certainly this would apply in the present case in so far as a government of Canada is concerned—in order to make the decisions which are in the best interests of Canada should have that information available to him.

So, it would be very worthwhile without any further delay to have some top notch economist work out the long term benefits of Canadian equity ownership of industry, for example, and to compare what the yield would be to Canadians as consumers and as taxpayers by following different courses, whether they would realize the most benefit from an accelerated exploitation of some limited part of those natural resources available to us or whether, in fact, an elongated repatriation of Canadian ownership of the equities in some of our major companies and a delayed exploitation of our resources would make more sense. I cannot say and I do not know, but I have the feeling that it might be in Canada's interest to try to earn some extra foreign currency in the short run and to use some of the proceeds for the enhanced participation by Canadians in the management, control and direction of their own industrial future. But I would like to have the information made available in such a way that the whole question could be studied objectively and that rational decisions, rather than merely seat of the pants and subjective decisions, would be taken.

I hope the government will use its good offices to move in this direction and to obtain this information because at the moment we just do not have a set of clearly defined goals which would make it possible for the government to administer this act as I am sure they would wish. We should have clearly stated objectives. We should have some sort of industrial strategy. I realize that there are limitations in preparing an over-all blueprint and that successive ministers of trade and commerce have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to lay down a set of rules which are immutable, and I do not quarrel with that judgment. I think it would be very difficult to have one document which would state the objectives in all areas and in such a fashion that there was very little room for negotiation or discussion, but I do think that we could have far more definitive goals than we have been given so far.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), if he were here, I am sure would agree, if not publicly at least privately and in his own heart, that we have not yet managed to come to grips with the necessity of establishing national goals to the extent that the average Canadian entrepreneur, taxpayer and voter can say: these make sense and at least we know what it is the government is trying to achieve and therefore we are in a position to participate in a more meaningful way in the achievement of those goals.

So, I would hope that these studies could be done on an urgent basis, and that based on the studies and on the dialogue that would ensue from them it would be possible upon their completion to develop a better defined industrial strategy or, if you prefer, a better defined set of industrial goals for Canada, and that these could be clearly stated in such a way that they would be understood by all because in the present situation a lack of a real strategy is a substantial liability to commonsense decision making.

Even with a clearly defined set of goals the government, as the minister introducing the bill today has suggested, has to operate in this area with some discretion. The act, in addition to the capability that it has of being used explicitly in some cases, has another value which must be appreciated, and that value is the leverage that it gives to the government of Canada to use moral suasion in some circumstances in order to achieve results without actually passing regulations. I know that ordinarily Canadian suppliers try to look after their Canadian customers as a matter of priority, but I also know that there are occasions when export prices are high and when the temptation is great to try to take advantage of those export markets. Sometimes in the shuffle Canadian requirements can be neglected or overlooked in the short term.

Such a case occurred earlier this year when the small independent newspapers of Canada found themselves with insufficient supplies of newsprint. I think that this was a perfect example of the minister's use of moral suasion in a circumstance where probably that was the best way to attack the problem, merely to say to the industry that the government would expect the industry, without telling them exactly how it should be achieved, to ensure that the needs of the Canadian consumers were met as a matter of first priority, and that this commitment would be expected of them. I, personally, feel that this is a legitimate use of power by the government, but it has the responsibility to see that Canadian users of materials have first opportunity to have their needs met and that perhaps this legislation will enhance in some small way the ability of the government to make sure that the needs of Canadian producers and industries of various kinds have their needs met without at the same time the need to pass a lot of regulations.

On the agricultural side, if the amendment to the act is intended to fulfill the pledge in the Speech from the Throne, then of course it falls far from the mark. I would say it fell short of the mark by at least a country mile. It only applies to those products controlled by the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. As the minister has stated, this is a very narrow list and, subject to correction, I believe it would only apply to eggs and poultry. I hope that this amendment will not at any stage be used to apply pressure on the farmers of Canada to extend the scope of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. I think this would be an abuse of power, and I would caution the government not to follow that course.

The farmers of this country want a fair trade, and I know that in many cases, such as in the case of the small fruits, for example, problems do arise, often because Canadian farmers are jeopardized by the importation of large quantities of American fruit which come at the tail end of the American production season. When that happens, unfortunately Canadian farmers have often found themselves in a situation where government action was too little and too late.

I well remember one of my first cabinet meetings many years ago when the strawberry producers of my native county of Norfolk were threatened in just this manner. The season was just opening in Canada. It was a time when the Canadian strawberry producers would normally be able to benefit from reasonable prices for early produce. They were, in fact, inundated by American imports which represented the tail end of the American production season. Thus, the Canadian producers were robbed of a fair opportunity on the domestic market. This type of problem has come up periodically in respect of cherries and other farm produce. Inevitably, the complaint has been failure of the government to act quickly.

I hope the government will learn to respond to this kind of legitimate demand from the Canadian agricultural community in an effective manner and not in the process apply pressure, direct or indirect, to extend the scope of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act beyond that which is required or determined by the farmers themselves. They should not be subject to subtle pressure from the government or the civil service which may have its own ideas as to how things should be done.

Finally, I think the minister has made an acceptable case for the deletion of the expiry date of the act. I think its original inclusion was related to the cold war and the hope the day would come when it would not be necessary to have this kind of legislation on the books. In those circumstances, it should have a periodic review by parliament. With the kinds of powers now being asked for, and the extension of the scope of the act as to what is really an economic dirigisme, it would seem proper that the act be accepted as a permanent piece of legislation and given a fair trail. It should of course be subject to amendment at any time in the normal way, but without the consequent problems that arise from statutes with a specific expiry date.

We will support this bill, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the far-reaching consequences. We reserve the right in committee to examine in detail some of the more profound and possibly far-reaching consequences that are difficult to really come to grips with at first glance. At the same time, we think these powers are probably a legitimate extension of government in the present context and we will go along through second reading to the committee stage.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pick up the point with which the preceding speaker concluded his comments. He referred to the fact that the act to be amended by this bill originally came into being to deal with the armament trade. I think that is highly symbolic of the kind of situation in which Canada finds itself, whether it is governed by the Liberal party at the federal level or the Conservative party. We do not have an act directly, primarily or fundamentally concerned with resource development which is in force at the federal level. Instead, we are gradually inching our way toward some kind of resource management policy by means of amending an act that was originally passed to deal with trade in armaments. This is symptomatic of the kind of resource management we have had in Canada for many years under the Liberal government and for a brief period under the Conservative government since world war II.

What we have in Canada in terms of resources is a situation where our country is rich in resources but poor in policy. We have wealth and poverty together, poverty of ideas and programs, but rich in potential. I do not think there is another country that has allowed its resources to be plundered in the systematic way for short-range financial gain that we have permitted in this country. What has happened has been that the federal governments of Canada have taken a very short-run view. They have looked at the resources of northern Ontario, and it is interesting to note that the minister who introduced the bill is from northern Ontario, as well as similar kinds of mineral deposits in part of the prairies and from the rich resource province of British Columbia, and allowed them to be sold to the highest bidder on the world's markets.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

This action provided jobs in the short-run at a faster rate than would otherwise have been the case. I think that point must be acknowledged. However, that is the sole virtue for such a policy.

Since world war II, more jobs have been created as a result of that policy than would have been the case had we adopted a sensible resource management policy which was concerned with the long-run development of Canada as an independent trading nation, and diversified the foundation of its economy by having a much higher percentage employed in the manufacturing sector.

I want to briefly outline a basic shift in policy that is required. I am speaking in terms of the general objectives of this bill. I am under no illusion. This bill in itself only deals with this question in the most peripheral way. None the less, one can take the opportunity of indicating that we really need a much broader bill, one that goes far beyond the details of this one in terms of implementing the general purpose to which the minister alluded at the outset.

The minister said that the purpose of this bill is to give manifestation of the government's concern. He said there should be a proper management of resource export policy to ensure, and I am just summarizing his words, that maximum or proper economic advantage come to Canada. That is precisely what has been neglected in the past. It has been a short-term policy rather than long-term. It is precisely the stated objectives of the minister's speech that we should be concerned about in terms of the future of Canada, especially future generations of Canadians.

What we need is a full implementation of the steps that have so far been partially implemented by this government in the life of this parliament, that is a full fledged commitment to a two price system in terms of our natural resources. We now have a two price system for agricultural products and we have a two price system for oil. We got the latter grudgingly from the government of Canada in the middle of last December. But this has had distinctly important advantages for Canada in the short-run and in the long-run. I will come back to that in a minute, Mr. Speaker.

What we need, and I want to assert this now, is an extension of the two price system beyond these two commodities, to a whole range of other commodities. I will list some of them before I suggest in a general way what the benefits would be from such a program for the people of Canada. I should like to suggest that such a two price system, one for export and one for import, be applied to energy resources—oil, natural gas, coal, uranium and hydroelectric power. In metals it should include copper, lead, zinc, gold and silver; in non-metallic minerals, gypsum, salt, asbestos, phosphates; and forest products, including lumber.

What we need at the federal level is a natural resources marketing board in each of these areas, that would take as its basic objective, the need to establish a two price system; one for Canada and Canadians and one for world exports.

Mr. Hellyer: That is the Russian system!

Mr. Broadbent: I heard an interjection from somewhere saying that is the Russian system. I am not at all sure that in detail that is the Russian system. But apart from a lot of negative aspects of that society, if they have the kind of system that I am about to detail, I think it is a remarkably good idea. Just because it is in effect in a fundamentally totalitarian society like the Soviet Union, whose basic negative components all in this House would reject, is no reason we should automatically conclude that they might all be wrong. I understand, for instance, that the Soviet Union has developed good medical techniques for operating. I am certain that even certain Conservative members of parliament if they needed brain surgery—and someone has said that some of them do—would not reject techniques that were originated in the Soviet Union!

That digression aside, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on. First of all, in terms of dealing with inflation, we want to be able to protect Canadian businessmen as well as Canadian consumers. We want to ensure that when world demand for our natural products is increasing, the price that is established at the world market level may not be the price paid to Canadian producers for that portion of the product sold to Canadian consumers. This applies directly to a number of petrochemical products.

A businessman from Montreal telephoned me about three weeks ago. He was concerned that he could not get a certain product because the multinational corporation in Canada which controlled its production was shipping it all to the United States. In this case it was not simply a matter of price, but of getting the commodity at all. As a result, part of that enterprise is going out of business and those consumers who were buying the product will no longer get it. The kind of control of resources which I have suggested would ensure that Canadian needs were met, and that related to that the price established in world markets need not be duplicated in Canada but that lower prices could be made to prevail in Canada where the natural resource is located.

The government recognizes this principle in its oil policy, as a of which they have developed, and I think sensibly, a two price system for oil: one that will meet the needs, in some sense, of the oil producing provinces to get world prices for their products and also to ensure that Canadians who have natural resources are not charged the higher world price level. So, there is that benefit. We get lower prices in terms of natural resources for Canadians and, second, we ensure that Canada's needs in terms of supply are met.

The third point I want to make is worth elaborating at greater length. It is my view that developing a two price system of this kind for natural resources in the areas I have outlined would provide the best foundation for building a competitive secondary industry in Canada. This is a much better system to ensure that Canadian secondary industry has access to commodities that we have in this country at lower prices, simply because the product is located in this country, than trying to build secondary industry either on the basis of higher tariffs which simply build in inefficiency and protect firms that are not innovative or this is the alternative approach that has been used by this government trying to encourage the development of industry in Canada by having absurdly low taxation levels in the corporate sector. I repeat the point: making sure that Canadian businesses have access at lower prices to Canadian resources is the best way of ensuring that we can get a manufacturing industry under way that is competitive, in world terms, in Canada. That is why an overall national strategy is essential in terms of dealing with natural resources. It is much better than a tariff policy and is much better than reducing corporation taxes to ensure an industrial growth for Canada.

Let me give an illustration from an area of the economy that I am particularly concerned about because it is in my constituency. I refer to the automotive industry. As a result of action taken by this government, we have had a significant reduction in corporation taxes to manufacturers in the last few years. This has affected my constituency directly, as it has affected many other manufacturing constituencies. But have the benefits of the special tax concessions really amounted to much? In introducing the measure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that he wanted three things: he wanted to improve our trade and manufacturing; he wanted to increase jobs, and he wanted to see the benefits of reduced taxes passed on in the form of lower prices to consumers.

In every aspect of manufacturing, and particularly but, not exclusively automobiles, the minister's stated objectives were failures. In terms of improvement in trade, the fact is that in 1973 our manufacturing deficit increased to $6.4 billion. This is up from a deficit of $4.9 billion in the previous year and $3.7 billion in 1971. In other words, one of the objectives of reducing the corporate taxes, namely, to increase trade in manufacturing, failed. We continue to have a mounting deficit in manufacturing trade. The corporate tax reduction did nothing to alleviate that trend which is many years old and is continuing. In terms of increased employment, the fact is that in manufacturing there was an increase of some 6 per cent in jobs last year. During the same year employment in sections of our economy concerned with trade went up by 6.2 per cent and in construction, by 9.6 per cent. Again I say that the corporate tax reduction approach did not necessarily bring about any great increase in the number of employed, because in those sectors where the tax reductions did not apply, namely trade and construction, the sectors just mentioned, there was a greater increase in employment than in those sectors where the tax reduction did apply. So, the objective of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) does not seem to have materialized.

● (1650)

I hardly need to elaborate on the theme of price reductions for consumers. Our inflation rate now approaches the highest levels of other western economies. There has been no reduction in price. By following the route favoured by this government, that of reducing corporate taxes for the manufacturing sector of our economy—and I will not document cases because that has already been done many times by members of the NDP—you bring about increases in profits. Profits in the corporate sector are now at their highest since the Korean war. Clearly, that approach does not work. Reducing the corporate tax simply benefits those who control the corporations. That action gives them higher profits, but does not produce any net benefits which could not be exceeded by other measures relating to other aspects of economic policy. I have just discussed those.

If we want to ensure the development of our economy, we do not need lower taxes for our corporations, nor higher tariffs to protect the inefficient; we need measures to make sure that industry in Canada will have access to our resources at prices lower than those available for the manufacturers of the United States, Japan, France and West Germany, who now purchase great amounts of our natural resources.

Let me give an example of what this means in the automotive industry. At present, a large proportion of bumpers for automobiles on both sides of the Canada-U.S. border depends very substantially on the production of Canadian nickel which comes from northern Ontario. At present, on the Canadian side of the industry we are witnessing many lay-offs because of the cutback in the production of certain automobile models in the United States. If we were to say to Canadian producers, "You can get your nickel at a lower price, establish it in Canada, than American producers can," that would mean that our firms which will compete in Canada with United States firms for contracts will be in a much better competitive position. That, it seems to me, is what can be done in almost every other aspect of Canadian manufacturing. We could give our manufacturers that sort of advantage on the basis of the resources existing in Canada. Let us not give them artificial protection by means of tariffs; let us not protect them artificially by means of lower taxes which bring negative effects for the rest of the population.

Let us give them an advantage that is appropriate in a country rich with natural resources. I gave the foregoing illustration on the basis of what I know from having studied that industry directly. If you provide nickel to Canadian producers at prices lower than you provide it for American producers, the result would be an increase on this side of the border of some thousands of jobs. The stated purpose of the bill is to give the federal government greater control over resource policy and to ensure that maximum economic benefits will accrue to Canada from resource management. Let me conclude my observations on the bill by saying that an over-all two price system such as I have just suggested for natural resources is absolutely essential. The bill, unless supplemented and fortified by such a national policy, would be almost totally useless in meeting its stated objective. It would look fine in print; it would sound splendid when ministers made speeches about it around the country; but, in terms of bringing positive benefits for the people of Canada, it will be entirely without substance.

I want to add one final point. If we establish over-all control over the export of natural resources, if we regulate the amounts of non-renewable resources in particular which can be shipped abroad, we can, at the federal level, control the rate of depletion of our non-renewable resources. We also need that kind of policy in Canada, a policy which has not been brought in because of the commitment made by the present and previous federal governments to create the greatest number of jobs in the shortest time. If we implement the kind of over-all control over natural resources which I am suggesting on behalf of my party, we would ensure for future generations in Canada a continuing number of jobs based on important Canadian resources. Further, they will not simply be jobs in our mines and forests; they will also be jobs in our cities and towns, in the manufacturing centres.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please; it is five o'clock. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse)—finance—statement of minister concerning level of corporate profits and necessity to pass on cost increases; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—publishing—intention of Houghton-Mifflin to expand into Canada—government position; the hon. member for Southwestern Nova (Mr. Haliburton)—post office—proportion of employees working on mechanical sorting devices recruited from within service.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

FEDERAL TRANSPORT COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved that Bill C-109, to provide for the constitution of a federal transport commission of inquiry (impartial investigation of transport accidents) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House has been brought forward at my initiative. Similar bills have been brought forward in the three preceding Parliaments. The bill flows from the concern felt not only by myself, but by the transportation industry in general and particularly by the aviation component. It represents an attempt by some of us to bring Canadian legislation and thinking into line with that of the rest of the international community. We are talking about the removal of any possibility of conflict when legislation requires regulatory bodies to conduct investigations arising within the parameters of the very regulations for which those bodies are responsible.

● (1700)

The need for action in this area is urgent, and the degree of urgency is increasing with the passage of time. I do not wish to burden the House unduly with statistics, but the number of train accidents—incidents, perhaps—is running well in excess of 4,500 annually. In 1970, there were 787 accidents involving trucks. In 1972, there were 1,429; the number had almost doubled. The same trend is noticeable in the case of registered aircraft—500 accidents in 1969 and 715 in 1973. Even a cursory review of the statistics will show a similar trend in all the media of public transportation where federal jurisdiction is involved. The number of marine fatalities continues to rise. In 1969, over 400 vessels were involved. Well over that figure was recorded in 1973. What is obvious from all the statistics is that we should be more concerned than ever about the manner in which we proceed with the investigation of these accidents.

My files continue to grow as correspondence flows in from all segments of the transportation industry as well as from the travelling public who, after all, must look to parliament to produce legislation which will make their travel, whether for business or pleasure, as safe as possible. Moreover, we should ensure that when accidents do happen the circumstances lend a little more knowledge to the governing bodies concerned, so that eventually travel can be made safer. Of even greater importance, the investigation of these accidents should be free from any possibility of conflict of interest.

We talk about conflict of interest. In this connection let me point out that the Air Accident Investigation Branch of the Ministry of Transport is responsible for NOTAM. I see the parliamentary secretary in his place across the way. I suggest that this is not what is required in the interest of safe travel and efficient safety and accident investigation in Canada. I shall not refer at length to the bill in my name which has been before the House for a considerable period; I have been through it on a number of occasions, after all, but I do wish to read into the record the explanatory note which accompanies that bill. The measure is entitled "An Act to provide for the constitution of a Federal Transport Commission of Inquiry (Impartial investigation of transport accidents).

The purpose of this bill is to establish a permanent but impartial commission of inquiry to investigate transport accidents which are within federal jurisdiction. Under present laws, many of these transport accidents—perhaps resulting in loss of life—are investigated by the federal body which is responsible for making and enforcing the rules under which the transport operated when the accident occurred. There is an obvious conflict of interest in such cases.

The commission I propose in this bill—and I note that this proposal has received the widest possible support from the various transportation sectors in Canada—would have exclusive but selective authority as against any other federal body to investigate all accidents resulting in death, injury, or property loss involving any transport under federal authority. However, the commission need not exercise this authority in cases where it felt the public interest would be sufficiently served through an investigation by the appropriate federal regulatory body, that is, in cases where the federal body would not be impeded in its investigations by a conflict of interest.

I go on to suggest in this bill that the commission should also have authority to investigate safety standards and practices and to recommend changes. I propose, further, that the commission should report its findings and recommendations, if any, to parliament so as to provide opportunity for public debate. Provision is made also for any person whose conduct or judgment becomes an issue during the investigation to appear and be heard, or, in the event of his death or other disability, to have his interests represented by a person appointed by the commission.

The application is as broad as possible. It covers transport by rail, by air, by water, by pipeline in the course of moving bulk material from one province to another or beyond the limits of any one province, by motor vehicle and so on. This will mean consideration of the Railway Act, the Aeronautics Act and the Canada Shipping Act in addition to other legislation. I think it is understood that we are dealing here with transportation involving a connection between two provinces. Since the philosophy is sound, transport by aircraft, ship or motor vehicle used by Her Majesty in the right of Canada is also covered, the implication being, of course, that accidents involving modes of transport owned by the several government departments, including the Armed Forces, the RCMP and other somewhat separated Crown agencies like the CBC, should be included.

I think it is important to review this principle for a few moments. The area of precedent that comes to our attention is that other western countries, for example the United Kingdom, have separated this responsibility for regulatory authority, if you will, from the investigative responsibility. The United States started to take this very firm step 10 or 12 years ago and finally separated the responsibility totally about eight years ago, in fact in 1966. Australia is now moving very rapidly in this direction, but Russia and France continue to hold out, although France is in the process of looking very seriously at the validity of such a move. Virtually all western nations have moved toward the removal of any possibility of conflict of interest, but Canada, as I have indicated, remains certainly alone on this continent in not having done this.

● (1710)

I do not think this is because we fail to recognize the importance of this. I do not want to be political about it and perhaps I should be generous to our good and charming parliamentary secretary, as I know he is somewhat in sympathy with this proposal, by suggesting it is because we have not found the useful vehicle or means for doing so. I hope that in the minister's review of the needs of his department in respect of reform he will find high on that list of recommendations to his colleagues in Cabinet a procedure which will remove this responsibility to an independent commission. It is time to end the uncertainty that we create in this manner in the minds of our friends in other nations, as well as in Canada, in the various sectors of the transport industry.

I should like very much to see the substance of this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. We sought in the past to have this subject raised in the committee. We would like to hear evidence, and hear what the various sectors of the transport industry have to say about this. I have been somewhat surprised in the last three, four or five years that the government has not acceded to even this simple step. We have ample precedent in this House for referring the subject matter of a private member's bill, without referring the bill itself, to standing committees for investigative work. I hope that out of this debate, and perhaps as a prelude to the minister's efforts within his own department, such a step could be considered. I feel strongly about this, as most members of the House are aware. I am encouraged, by contact with various sectors of the transport industry, in my belief that any attempt by the minister to bring forward such a bill designed to achieve the desired aim and principle, will receive nothing but the widest possible support, as it certainly will from this side of the House.

I think the government does recognize its fallibility in areas such as this, as I think any government would. Again I am encouraged by the minister's comments in the House the other day in response to questions I raised. At the time I felt I should ask a supplementary question in connection with an accident involving a DC-8 at the Halifax International Airport, specifically dealing with whether the minister did not then feel it was time to move in this direction. The minister was kind enough to reply, and I quote from page 1227 of Hansard from April 8, 1974:

> Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in the House a few weeks ago I think I mentioned that I would favour an independent board in such cases, and that whenever a new policy was introduced this would be part of it.

What I am concerned with today is the word "when". I am concerned with the delay in getting on with what the minister indicates will hopefully be a series of reforms including this one, but we do not know when that will be. We may have an intervening general election, in which case there would be no delay whatsoever. You will have it in front of you very shortly under the order of government bills along with, I am sure, a virtually parallel list of reforms in the ministry of transport.

All that I really seek to do here, through the medium of a private member's bill such as this, is to transfer the professional and technical expertise from the responsibility of the ministry of transport to another body so that as time passes there can be no question of conflict. I would ask of this commission that it report to the House through some other minister, perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), but that is unimportant, and that it do so in order that the Canadian travelling community using various transportation modes will know there cannot be any possibility of repetition of the examples we have seen. I will not repeat them as they are a matter of Hansard record. Rather I would cite only one, and that I refer to briefly, being the situation in which we have seen individuals enter the service of government in the ministry of transport, maturing and advancing in that service, winding up heading different sections of the same branch. In this situation, we would have one responsible for regulation and one responsible for investigation.

We have in front of us, now still unresolved, a situation in which we caused two highly professional and competent men who have known one another for all their lives to be pitted against each other and in conflict. This resulted from permitting a situation to happen in which it is very clear that in part the regulatory authority failed to do something that the investigative authority had to uncover. Honourable men would do this and I am not suggesting that the honourable thing was not done. What I am suggesting is that we do not need to impose upon our public servants in this particular area of transportation accidents, regulation, investigation and so on, the burden of this type of conflict.

I note with some satisfaction that there are others in this Chamber who would like to comment on this matter. I hope the parliamentary secretary can shed some light on the intention of his department, at least in respect of the philosophy of such a move as this. I would ask hon. members if they could exhibit some agreement in respect of this matter by finding some way of referring to the Committee on Transport and Communications the subject matter, if not the bill itself. I thank the House for its understanding and patience during my remarks on this matter for probably the twenty-third time since I first introduced it.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commence my remarks by congratulating the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for the continuing interest he has shown in this House and elsewhere in promoting safety in transportation. He has undoubtedly devoted a good deal of his time and energies in the preparation of this bill and as a result deserves, in my opinion, a great deal of credit. Possibly in not too long a time we will give him that credit for the dedication he has shown in promoting the idea. The hon. member also has been responsible for publicizing the inherent danger of possible conflicts of interest in accident investigation in Canada, a process which is always helpful in molding public thinking and engineering the climate of change. While the hon. member has publicly advocated a change in investigation and report procedures, the government has been quietly behind the scenes reviewing the advisability of a somewhat similar change. I will say more about that at a later stage.

● (1720)

At this stage I should like to make clear that I am not an opponent of the idea embodied in this bill. I think, however, the matter has not been looked into to a sufficient degree at this time to convince me that the time is quite yet ripe to proceed with the commission of inquiry to investigate transport accidents, or indeed that the method of appointment and operation of the commission of inquiry as set out in the bill is the best one.

The idea of creating some type of accident investigating body responsible for investigating accidents in all modes of transportation coming within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada has been under consideration in the Department of Transport for more than a year. On instructions from the Deputy Minister of Transport, a study has been initiated within the public service to study the pros and cons of the idea of creating an independent body, and a report following the study has been submitted to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). The study was participated in to some degree by representatives from the air, marine and railway administrations, and from the surface administration. The actual report was prepared by an official on loan from the Department of Justice. This official held a number of meetings and travelled to Washington to interview officials of the United States National Transportation Safety Board. The official also interviewed representatives from the United States Department of Transportation so that he would have the benefit of representations from the department responsible for regulating the modes of transportation as well as from the members of the independent board.

As members may be aware, in the United States a reasonably independent board has been set up and has been functioning for some time somewhat along the lines of the commission of inquiry envisaged by Bill C-109. I can say quite frankly that there appears to be mixed views concerning the efficiency and usefulness of the board which is in operation in the United States as compared to the methods of accident investigation employed in that nation prior to the creation of the independent board, although the general opinion appears to be that the board is a moderate success. The officials also reviewed accident investigation procedures in the United Kingdom. I should like to emphasize that they went elsewhere.

I think it will be apparent to hon. members that the agencies responsible for the regulation of the various modes of transportation must have a continuously up-to-date knowledge of accidents which take place in the mode for which they are responsible. It is, therefore, not only desirable but also essential that each mode maintains some degree of accident investigation capability. At the present time the only qualified and trained air investigators are employed within the ministry of transport in the air administration. Similarly, the only trained and technically qualified railway accident investigators are in the employ of the Canadian Transport Commission. The marine administration has up to the present time maintained a three-man special accident investigation section with duties restricted to that particular activity.

The immediate creation of an independent federal transport commission of inquiry could very well result in the creation of a body which would be totally unable to obtain the necessary qualified staff to carry out its duties. One result of this possibility could be the retention of unqualified or incompetent persons to carry out a function on which the basic day-to-day safety of every member of the travelling public might depend. On the other hand, the newly created commission of inquiry might be able to attract the majority of the existing personnel from the various administrations. This could well result in at least temporary short-staffing, causing deficiencies in the continuation of the regulatory process. It therefore appears desirable, if not essential, that before proceeding with the creation of any independent accident investigation entity, a thorough review should be completed which would establish the optimum size of the commission and the level and number of supporting staff which would be required and the inter-relationship between the investigation entity and its staff on the one hand and the regulatory organizations on the other hand. If a good deal of care is not taken in this area, the government may well find itself faced with a situation in which there is a total duplication of personnel in the administrations and on the staff of the commission of inquiry.

Another interesting point which hon. members might wish to consider is the possibility that the independent accident investigation board might itself conceivably be in a position involving conflict of interest. It might be possible, for example, for the commission of inquiry to investigate an accident and through inadvertence or inexperience or incompetent staff overlook the actual cause of a number of fatalities in a particular mode of transportation. This failure on the part of the commission of inquiry could very well result in the commission being reluctant to divulge the real cause of the fatalities in due course because the revelation of the cause would at the same time demonstrate to the public the commission's earlier incompetence. The point I am trying to make is that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to remove every element of conflict of interest in every situation. The best that can be accomplished it seems to me is to keep conflict of interest situations to the minimum.

In making these remarks I have not referred to the situation in the case of surface transportation other than railways. This omission results, as hon. members well know, from the fact jurisdiction of this House over highway transportation is considerably limited by the constitution. We have adopted safety standards for automobiles and some components and there appears to be considerable federal jurisdiction to ensure that manufacturers provide reasonably safe vehicles for the public's use. There is considerable doubt, however, whether there is any federal jurisdiction to ensure that intervening agencies do not render unsafe the vehicle which was originally safe. Accident investigation in the highway field is usually done by provincial organizations and, in particular, by the police. The surface administration in the Department of Transport, and in particular the motor vehicle safety division is, however, taking an increasingly active role in this area. It is expected that the operations of the motor vehicle safety division will increase as time goes by as the investigation of individual highway accidents sometimes reveals design deficiencies which do not come to light in any other way.

I notice that Bill C-109 appears to obligate the proposed commission of inquiry to investigate all accidents in modes of transportation coming under the jurisdiction of Parliament where the public interest so requires.

● (1730)

I think there will always have to be some degree of selectivity in the investigation of accidents. As I pointed out earlier, railway accidents occur on an average of one a day and aircraft accidents occur with a regularity of almost two a day on the average. We are also painfully aware of the fact that accidents on the highways occur with even greater regularity. The creation of an organization and staff sufficient to investigate all of these accidents could be expected to bankrupt the public purse. I am advised that every air accident is investigated, at least to some degree, even if the investigation only involves the filing of a report by the person having knowledge of the incident. Perhaps consideration should be given to the setting up of some procedure or directing personnel to review reports of incidents and accidents which come to the knowledge of the regulatory officials or accident investigators, with a view to carrying out a more detailed investigation if anything appears to be amiss or if the public interest appears to make this desirable.

In this regard I am advised that even before the study to review the possibility or advisability of creating some type of independent accident investigating board the air administration was already considering a proposal to set up an accident review board which would consist chiefly of persons other than Department of Transport officials. This development need not await legislation.

As I stated earlier in my remarks, I am not at this time unalterably opposed to the principle embodied in Bill C-109. In fact, I support the principle. On the other hand, I am not sufficiently in favour of the bill to support it. The principle being advanced is in fact a very good one, but I think it is desirable, before proceeding with such a measure, to have available and to give full and adequate consideration to an analysis of all the factors involved. Because whatever body we set up will be of a permanent nature. This process is now taking place and some type of proposal, similar in principle to this bill, should be forthcoming without too much delay.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the parliamentary secretary on his remarks, but I would also like to point out that many of the matters he brought up would be better discussed in committee. With respect to finding qualified people for an independent inquiry board, we could arrange interviews and we might even import people from other countries.

I have been quite anxious for some time to speak on this important bill presented by my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). Bill C-109 would provide for the formation of a federal transportation committee of inquiry to investigate transport accidents. Such an impartial committee has long been needed in Canada and would be especially valuable right now in view of the many problems created by this government's disastrous transportation policies. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has admitted that transportation in this country is in a state of chaos and has promised many changes and a vast re-organization of his department. When this will come about is anyone's guess, but personally I am not optimistic.

My scepticism regarding the government's intention to revamp and revitalize transportation in this country is based upon my own experience with the Department of Transport over the past 18 months. During this time I have done virtually everything I can in an effort to alert the minister to the many serious problems involving Air Canada, especially at Dorval where the air maintenance base is located.

I have repeatedly called for a full scale investigation into the Dorval operation. I have written letters to the minister and to the president of Air Canada. I have spoken to the press and have held a press conference. I have spoken numerous times in this House, and I have travelled to Dorval and reviewed the situation with the employees there, with many of whom I am in constant touch. Yet to my knowledge none of my charges concerning the problems with Air Canada at Dorval have been investigated, and if by chance they have, the investigation has been conducted intra departmentally and in secrecy.

My colleague is correct when he asserts that there is a serious conflict of interest here. Even though Air Canada is a Crown corporation, it is still a case of the Department of Transport or Air Canada investigating itself. Thus, there is a very real need for an independent federal transport committee of inquiry to investigate any and all accidents relating to transportation in Canada. Such a committee could also investigate certain charges and allegations made by individuals and unions concerning the safety of our transportation modes. Only through an independent body such as this could the people of Canada be guaranteed proper and credible investigation into transportation accidents in Canada.

I am positive that such an impartial committee would, upon investigating the deteriorating Air Canada situation at Dorval, discover that the problems there relate directly to air line safety. These problems include overstaffing in some departments and understaffing in others. While overstaffing results in extra costs through duplication, understaffing often results in failure to comply with MOT regulations. This fact has serious implications in regard to safety. Then in addition outdated systems which are responsible for much inefficiency are in widespread use; equipment is not performing properly, attributable to poor servicing; basic training in rules etc. for employees is poor, and many are unaware of MOT standards, requirements and general procedures; and little effort is made by officials to obtain MOT required manuals or old out of date manuals which would acquaint and familiarize employees with particular subjects.

This brief list is far from exhaustive. There are numerous other instances of incompetency and inefficiency. The alarming fact, however, is, as I mentioned, the possible safety hazards incidental to such an arrangement.

Generally, this is the situation at Dorval today, a situation which I have endeavoured to bring to the minister's attention. I should also point out that I have not been alone in the effort to acquaint the Department of Transport and Air Canada with the current state of affairs. Many individual employees and several unions and associations, the most notable being the Canadian Air Line Employees Association, have also tried to draw attention to what they see as a dangerous situation with regard to safety. For example, a recent bulletin of the regional shop committee customer service at Dorval stated that, because first level Air Canada supervisors are concerned only with running a schedule operation, they are, like other Air Canada employees, forced to discuss problems at the second level of management. One problem these men would like to discuss is safety. Their collective agreement clearly specifies that management is responsible for initiating and monitoring all practices necessary to ensure the safety and health of employees as well as the safety of all equipment. But the regional shop committee at Dorval has had to deal with second level management and supervise many safety policies themselves.

As well there is the September, 1973 letter, sent to Mr. R. J. Thatcher, director of maintenance quality at Dorval, from eight inspectors. The letter is a critical one, presented by the men with the aim of achieving a much more effective inspection program at Dorval's unit and support shops. It contains an exhaustive list of areas where radical changes are needed so as to maximize Air Canada's maintenance operations and minimize safety risks. To my knowledge, no heed has been paid to the suggestions of these inspectors. Why? Because Air Canada investigates itself. It is called conflict of interest.

With regard to specific safety dangers and accidents relating to Air Canada at Dorval, I can discuss many, but a few will suffice. Most recently there was the serious incident on March 26 involving flight 526 from Quebec City. While climbing at 14,000 feet this DC-9 aircraft lost cabin pressure. Only 40 per cent of the oxygen masks on board were operational. This is absolutely inexcusable. Fortunately the aircraft landed with no injuries to the passengers on board. It turns out that this plane was only 26 hours off its "A" check. Air Canada conducts its layover checks at Dorval after a plane has flown some 50 hours. So what went wrong? Unfortunately, we will never know. However, with an independent commission investigating such incidents and reporting to parliament, the public would know.

● (1740)

As things are now, the public is misled by Air Canada on incidents concerning safety. After I brought this matter up in the House, the freshman president of the air line, Ralph Vaughn, had the gall to deny that the just mentioned incident ever occurred. He actually said, and I quote:

> We have found that these charges have no basis in fact and it is unfortunate that Mr. McKenzie continues to make these allegations.

However, these are not my allegations. Rather they are the facts as stated in the daily aircraft performance summary sheet issued by the maintenance branch at Dorval. Also the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) admitted in committee that there was an oxygen problem on flight 526. So there is a conflict between the minister and Mr. Vaughn.

Another incident involving Air Canada safety which was hushed up by the air line concerns their L-1011 aircraft, a jet which has been, according to Air Canada, performing far below the goals set by the manufacturer. On May 19, 1973, Air Canada flight TO20 was forced into an emergency landing after a fire on board. Upon investigation it was discovered that the number one engine had two boroscoping ports open and that the fire was caused by hot gases blowing on to the engine fire wire from the open boroscoping ports. Fortunately once again there was no major accident or injuries, but think of what could have happened, Mr. Speaker. Your guess is as good as mine concerning what Air Canada and the government have done to prevent such an incident from happening again.

Then there are the incidents concerning five Air Canada flights which occurred between January 24 and February 22 of last year. Flights 296, 634, 625, 238 and 280 flying on January 24, February 13, February 15, February 19 and February 22 all did so at tremendous risk to their passengers. A March 22, 1973 daily aircraft performance summary issued by the Dorval maintenance branch stated that in all cases the engine push/pull control cables, with the exception of aircraft number 709, were in various states of distress ranging from moisture in assembly and lack of lubrication on the cables to worn cables and deterioration of teflon linings in the conduits. The summary also said that these things went unnoticed "as a result of a breakdown in the routine C-3 maintenance check." This in turn was due to the fact that job tickets were not issued for the work. Why? Nobody knows except perhaps Air Canada.

These, then, are but a few examples involving Air Canada and safety at Dorval. Incidents of this nature seem to occur now daily on our public air line and I am quite sure similar things happen to and on our other transportation modes. We simply must have some sort of federal commission to investigate these and other incidents, whether it be Air Canada, CP Air or another air line that is involved, and whether it be an air, rail, ground or water transportation accident or incident.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-109 as set out in the explanatory note is to establish a permanent and impartial commission of inquiry to investigate transport accidents that are within federal jurisdiction. The explanatory note further suggests that under present laws many transport accidents, sometimes resulting in loss of life, are investigated by the federal body that is responsible for making and enforcing the rules under which the transport operated when the accident occurred. It is suggested that there is an obvious conflict of interest in such cases. It seems to me that the statement contained in the explanatory note setting out the reasons for the introduction of this bill could stand some analysis.

It is true that in the case of railway accidents, as an example, a good deal of the regulation of the railways is done by the railway transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. The same commission normally investigates railway accidents and attempts to determine their cause. It may be an over-simplification, however, to suggest that because an entity regulates a mode of transportation it is in a conflict of interest position when it investigates an accident involving that mode.

It can be argued, I think with a considerable degree of justification, that the regulatory agency needs to conduct accident investigations to determine what changes in its regulations may be necessary or desirable in the interests of safety. Although the personnel involved in this type of responsibility are human like everyone else, it is probably safe to say that they are dedicated to the objective of insuring that the mode of transportation for which they are responsible is as efficient and, in addition, as safe as human ingenuity can be expected to provide. In an area in which it is very difficult for anyone to maintain any degree of secrecy, it appears highly unlikely that the railway transport committee could, even if it so desired, hide from the public's knowledge the fact that a railway accident resulted from some deficiency in the railway transport committee's regulation of the railway industry.

In the case of other modes of transportation, for example the air mode, the regulatory agency is organized in such a way that there is no responsibility, direct or indirect, of the air investigation branch to the portion of the air administration which is responsible for the act of regulation of the air industry. In fact, the accident investigation branch and the regulatory portion of the administration are independent from each other and independently report to one public service official who, in turn, is responsible to the deputy minister and on up the line through the minister to parliament. It can be argued, as a result, that there is really no direct conflict of interest at the accident investigation level. There is no reason why the accident investigators should not feel free to recommend what they wish and to make whatever findings they wish arising out of any particular accident.

While the suggestion has been made that there is a conflict of interest situation in existence in the various modes of transportation coming under federal jurisdiction, I do not know of any case in which it has been specifically alleged that the facts giving rise to an accident have been hidden from the public view or in which recommendations have been altered in order to protect any regulatory body or personnel. It may very well be, therefore, that the suggested conflict of interest does not exist to any extent, or if the possibility of conflict of interest does exist, there may be very little chance that in practice injustice to the public may result. By the same token, I know of no concrete evidence to suggest that the regulatory process suffers to any degree as a result of the present method of investigating accidents in the various transportation modes.

I think it might be of some value to hon. members if I give a very brief summary of the actual procedure which is followed in the investigation of accidents which occur in each mode of transportation coming under federal jurisdiction. I will start with the air transportation mode.

At the present time, there are presently registered in Canada approximately 13,000 aircraft. The registration of aircraft is growing at the rate of 10 per cent per year. These aircraft are involved in an average of between 600 and 700 accidents per year; and the accidents to which I refer are those which meet the International Civil Aviation Organization's definition of accidents. This definition includes accidents which result in substantial damage to aircraft or serious injury or death to a passenger. The air administration maintains a roster of trained accident investigators. Canadian accident investigation experts enjoy the opportunity and privilege of developing their expertise in co-operation with their counterparts in the United States. Both Canada and the United States provide their investigators with the same manuals and standards for use in accident investigation.

● (1750)

The considerable number of aircraft accidents in Canada resulted in the creation of teams of accident investigation experts which are available in the various air regions in Canada. In the case of very large accidents, a plan which is in continuous existence and which has been adopted by the International Civil Aviation Organization is brought into play. Under this plan trained investigators head up each element of a team of investigators in an attempt to investigate and determine the cause of the accident. In this regard the Aeronautics Act has been amended to give full recognition and powers to accident investigators, such as the right to interrogate persons, to enter premises, and to inspect.

Information and materials supplied to accident investigators are maintained on a confidential basis and this confidentiality has been supported by the courts. The purpose of the investigation is to promote and maintain safety, not to assign blame for the accident to any individual or groups of individuals. The creation of major accident investigation teams is an important development because it makes it practically impossible for the Crown or for public servants to hide the action of their own regulators or personnel should they be guilty of wrongdoing. When a major investigation team is set up the team leader and the heads of the various groups are the only personnel from the Department of Transport who are involved. The rest of the investigators come from a number of sources, including the air industry, universities, research laboratories, aircraft manufacturers and the like.

In the case of major accidents it is the practice for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to appoint a person to conduct a public inquiry into the cause of the accident. In practice the person appointed is invariably a judge with long experience in the courts. The reports of the various components of the accident investigation team are then adduced as evidence in an open hearing before the judge and the witnesses are available for cross-examination by interested parties. The report of the judge is almost invariably made public, and the report is usually made the basis for whatever changes in the regulatory process may appear desirable as a result of the judge's findings. Less important aircraft accidents are not, of course, given the same treatment as more serious accidents, but even then a careful investigation is carried out and in due course the accident report is made available to the public.

Marine accident investigations are carried out under the authority of the Canada Shipping Act and reports are made to the Minister of Transport. Shipping accident investigations consist mainly of preliminary inquiries which are held in camera, followed, where the circumstances appear to justify it, by a formal investigation which is held in public. The marine administration at the moment employs only three persons, whose sole responsibility is the investigation of marine accidents.

Under the recently enacted shipping casualty reporting regulations, all ships, as opposed to only Canadian and British vessels, are now required to report casualties in Canadian waters to the nearest coastal radio station, which reports are passed to the appropriate region for action. Upon receipt of such a report in any region, a marine surveyor is detached from his normal duties and dispatched to carry out an investigation, his report being passed to the marine investigation section in Ottawa for assessment and any recommendations considered necessary regarding follow-up action.

The field officer appointed to hold a preliminary inquiry is usually a nautical surveyor, and he may be supported by engineer and/or hull surveyors. Only in cases of major casualties is an officer of the marine investigations section sent to investigate. Where no other action is considered necessary following a preliminary inquiry, a summary report of investigation is prepared for release to the public on request.

Preliminary inquiries in the marine field are held in camera, each witness being interviewed separately with no one present other than his counsel, should the witness desire to retain counsel. The witness is informed that he has this right. Every effort is made to encourage full and frank statements, each witness being afforded the protection of the Canada Evidence Act.

Formal investigations of marine accidents are conducted in four main categories of accidents. The first category is where the casualty is one giving rise to a considerable degree of public concern—that is, where the public confidence in the mode of transportation is at stake. The second category is where the casualty has resulted in some major loss of life, either to passengers or to crew. The third category is where the minister has been unable to determine by the normal investigative process what the casualty was all about. And the fourth and final category is where the casualty may involve lessons or practices which the Minister of Transport may wish to bring to the attention of the maritime industry.

While the Canada Shipping Act empowers the Minister of Transport to appoint any officer of the government of Canada to be a commissioner to hold a formal investigation, the practice has been to appoint a member of the bench in the same way as judges are appointed in the case of aviation accidents. In addition to the commissioner, assessors are selected and appointed by the minister to assist the commissioner in technical matters which may arise in the course of the public inquiry. The conduct of formal investigations is governed by the shipping casualties rules made under the Canada Shipping Act.

The investigation of railway accidents is covered by sections 225 and 226 of the Railway Act. Under the existing requirements, railway accidents must be reported immediately and the Canadian Transport Commission maintains an office that is open 24 hours per day to receive such reports. Following receipt of a report, a district inspector is immediately dispatched to the accident scene. The district inspector's report and any information provided under section 225 of the act are privileged and cannot be released except with an order of the Canadian Transport Commission.

In carrying out accident investigations, the inspector has all the powers of a court. On average, the railways have one accident per day. Thirty per cent of the accidents are caused by motor vehicles colliding with the sides of trains. Of these accidents, 80 per cent take place at protected crossings and 50 per cent take place in daylight. In 1968 an amendment was made to the Railway Act requiring trains to carry reflective markings on their sides but there was no marked improvement in the accident rate. A public inquiry is usually held by the Canadian Transport Commission in the case of major accidents with the objective of finding the cause of the accident and trying to avoid a recurrence. As in the case of the other modes, the purpose of the investigation is not to find fault.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING EXPORT OF NATURAL RESOURCE PRODUCTS AND LIMITATION OF IMPORT OF FARM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see this bill being debated. I hope it represents a new commodities policy which will govern the export and import of raw products. I want to talk about a commodities policy, and I hope, by bringing in this bill, the government is facing the realities of the present day. We must recognize what Canada is, what our role has been, and what it is our potential to become.

We learned at school how trade in this country was originally developed by the fur trade. Our people trapped animals and sold furs to the markets of Europe, where they were made into articles of valuable clothing. After that we began cutting timber. In Ontario, the white pine and the oak were reserved for Her Majesty's ships, and large rafts of timber were floated down the Ottawa river, to be exported to foreign markets where the wood was manufactured into useful products of greater value. That has been the history of Canada. We have exported from our soil iron ore, coal, nickel, copper, zinc and asbestos. From our forests we took lumber, turned it into pulp and shipped it to foreigners in other countries, there to be processed into higher valued articles of ultimate use. In truth we were labelled a nation of hewers of wood and drawers of water. That has become almost a cliché when describing Canada's role.

In the seventies we are faced with a new concern. New mining machinery, manned by one or two men at the most, is capable of tearing out whole mountains of ore; new shovels can load unit trains which can quickly haul the resources of this country almost untouched by human hand, to foreign lands. Very little employment results for Canadians. The upshot is that we are exporting the lifeblood of the nation without getting any of the real advantages from those raw materials.

● (2010)

What we have seen as a result is a flight from the small towns, from the remote places in the country, to the cities. We have seen unemployment rising to a high of 17 or 18 per cent in Newfoundland, unemployment of almost unbelievable proportions in the northern parts of the prairie provinces among the Metis and the Indians there. Yet from those very areas of Canada we have shipped out by boxcar loads, by pipe line, by unit train and by large trucks the very lifeblood which could make those areas grow and prosper.

We all know that manufacturing industries in this country are no more than 75 per cent efficient on an average compared with equivalent operations in the United States.

Yet today we see a foreign exchange rate that indicates that our dollar is worth $1.04 on the market in comparison with the United States dollar. If we were classified according to the efficiency and productivity of our manufacturing industry, our dollar in relation to the United States dollar would probably be worth not more than 75 cents. A great deal of the problem is caused by our willingness to pour out the raw resources of this country to the markets of the world unprocessed and untreated, raw resources that a hungry world, a world dying for unprocessed raw products of our forests, soil and farms, so easily consumes. We have all seen or heard of the brown-outs in New York. We have all heard of factories in other countries closing because there is no energy available to them. What we do here is pollute our rivers, our streams and our air to produce raw materials for someone else's factories, hydro-electric power for some one else's air conditioners.

It is about time this government, or any government which is to govern the country during the seventies and for the balance of the century, showed concern about the resources at our disposal. We sold coal to Japan at one time because we could not sell it anywhere else, and we sold iron ore to the smelters of the United States because we could not sell it anywhere else. We have sold our pulp and pulp logs to other countries because we could not sell these materials anywhere else. We have discounted our lumber and sold it cheap because we could not sell it anywhere else. The reality of 1974 is that the world is starving for the raw commodities we can produce. Anyone, even Simple Simon, could sell pulp in today's world. Simple Simon could sell wheat to a hungry world. Simple Simon could sell iron ore and coking coal to starving smelters in Japan. Anybody could sell to the people in New York City a little extra electricity, especially when they have a brown-out and the air conditioner is not working because there is no power.

It does not require any imagination to sell our raw materials in the world of 1974. Anyone can do so, and that is exactly the problem. The raw commodities of this nation have been bid up and bid up. The consequence is that our dollar stands at $1.04 in comparison to the United States dollar, when on the basis of productivity, on the basis of manufacturing efficiency, it should be considerably less, possibly 75 cents.

I hope the minister in presenting this bill is putting forward a new policy with regard to commodities. I trust when I vote for this bill, as I intend to do, that this is what the minister has in mind—that we shall not just give away our resources, holus bolus, as in past years. We should be selling beef, Kobi beef, not feed grain; we should be selling J-cloths, not pulp; we should be selling steel, either in billets or in some other way, not iron ore and coking coal. What we need is a new commodities policy. We must look after the interests of the people of this country objectively.

In the past, Canadian producers have produced without any guarantee that they could sell their products. We have seen the price of wheat fall as low as 60 or 70 cents on the black market in western Canada, way below the cost of production. We have seen paper mills very close to going bankrupt because they could not sell their products. We have seen oil producers come begging on hands and knees to Ottawa for a chance to sell their oil on the Canadian market, and they have been turned aside because somewhere along the line some of us Canadians could buy the same product cheaper from another country. We have sold iron ore from British Columbia. We have raped whole mountains of ore. We have built railways and ports at government expense and sold that ore at prices below the cost of production. Indeed, at one time the financial statement of McIntyre Mines looked like a disaster. I don't blame producers today for saying: "When we had the product and wanted to sell it, you would not buy; now there is a world shortage we intend to get every penny these products will fetch. We have been diddled in the past, but now its our innings."

It is time we made a reanalysis of the nature of the economy of Canada in terms of commodities. It is time we looked at things not only from the producer's point of view and the consumer's point of view, but from the point of view of long-term national interest, and developed a fair commodities policy. I should like to spend a few minutes illustrating what I mean by a fair commodities policy as I see it in this country today.

First of all, this nation must analyze in terms of commodities what we can produce as a nation effectively and cheaply, or at least as cheaply as any other country in the world. Having made that analysis we must determine that those basic commodities which we can produce cheaply or as cheaply as anyone else in the world are Canadian commodities.

Secondly, we must determine that those Canadian commodities hold a monopoly position on the Canadian market, so that when there is a surplus of cherries in Oregon they cannot be dumped on the Toronto market, driving prices down and hurting our producers. Or if there happens to be an offhand surplus of beef on the Chicago market, we must see that they cannot dump it in Toronto, putting our livestock producers out of business. If there is a surplus of steel in Sweden, they cannot be permitted to dump it on the Canadian market and put our steel producers to the wall.

Let me talk about surpluses for a moment, since commodities represent a big part of the picture in respect of the economy of this world in 1974. I say to you, Sir, that if bread was 10 cents a loaf I doubt that you would eat one more slice than if it was a dollar a loaf. The truth of the matter is that price increases do not materially affect the demand for commodities until or unless there is a competitive product. The truth of the matter is that it takes an enormous increase in the price of commodities to reduce the demand and, in the converse situation, it takes an enormous decrease in the price to increase the demand.

It has been well said that less than a 1 per cent surplus in the production of copper on the world market will drive the price below the cost of production, whereas less than a 1 per cent surplus on the market will increase the price three or perhaps four times.

Mr. Whicher: The same applies to beef.

Mr. Blenkarn: The same applies to beef and to wheat and to barley and to corn and to potatoes. This basic theory applies to all the basic commodities we produce as a nation. What this country must do for the producer is to make sure that at all times we will be the final banker of last resort for commodities. This may mean that as a nation we will have to build some storehouses in which to put aside some commodities in times of surplus, allowing them back on the market in times of deficit; but we will bankroll on the basis of the efficient producer's cost of production.

We have done that in Canada already, it is now new. Not very long ago when the uranium industry seemed likely to collapse in this country we paid for the stockpiling of uranium at $8 a pound. Today the price of uranium is $20 a pound. Not long ago, and indeed for some 10 or 12 years, we financed the gold mines in order to keep them in business. Some of that gold which we bought from these mines, taking into account the subsidies to the mines, probably cost us $40 or $45 an ounce. It may have even cost us $50 an ounce. But look at the price of gold today. It is very close to $200 an ounce, so we as a nation did not lose anything. Indeed, this was probably the finest investment the government has ever made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: So in terms of bankrolling commodities, this is the type of approach a large commodity producing country must always look at.

Lastly, Sir, in times of excess world demand or excessive high prices we must consider a two-price system. We must look at the situation and make sure that those in Canada who manufacture and convert commodities into usable goods in society are able to buy the raw materials at a price on which they can operate in order to produce and sell.

As an aside, I suppose that might have something to do with the inflationary situation we have in Canada. I do not think a commodities policy is essentially an inflationary policy, but it has certain side effects on the inflation situation. The government suggests that inflation is a world problem, and consequently throws up its hands and says nothing can be done about it. The truth of the matter is that Canada is perhaps the greatest contributor to world inflation, because we have allowed our raw materials to escalate in price on world markets. Countries like Great Britain and France have had to pay the kind of premium prices we in Canada demanded. We have put inflation into their economies, and stupidly we have even put it into our own economy.

As a result of this stupidity the price of pulp and paper has doubled in Canada, yet we export 66 per cent of all the pulp and paper we produce. Indeed, we control the pulp and paper markets of the world. We have allowed the price of that commodity to double in our own economy because we have said we will sell to Canadians at world prices. Thus Canadians have brought inflation into their own markets for their own commodities, and this has probably been the greatest contributor, aside from monetary policy and government expense, to the inflation in this country.

I did not intend to talk about inflation tonight, but I suggest that a commodities policy which was sensible would have very materially reduced the cost of living for all Canadians. We would not now be talking about problems in respect of feed grains, the excessive cost of feeding animals and all the rest of it, with everything going higher and higher, had we adopted a sensible commodities policy.

One of the basics to a commodities policy is a quota system, and that is permitted under the amendments to this act. This would enable the government to set a quota on the production of raw materials exported from Canada. I suggest that is very much like the policy of the Progressive Conservative party of the province of Ontario under the late George Drew, when the province banned the export of pulp logs, and later under the late Leslie Frost, who banned the export of pulp.

Mr. Baker: And built an industry.

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, and built an industry here. We could build an industry in respect of every processing operation of raw material. I should like to point out to the hon. member who interjected that two-thirds of all the pulp produced goes into the making of paper, and one-third of all the pulp produced in this country is exported from Canada as pulp.

● (2030)

You cannot eat pulp, you cannot drink it, you cannot wear it and you cannot live in it. You can use it to manufacture something else, however. Yet one third of the pulp produced in this country is exported in the raw state, none of it from the province of Ontario. Here is a situation where it is high time a federal government concerned about employment and about opportunity stepped in. Recently we had a two-price situation in respect of oil. While I am not particularly impressed about the use of export tariffs to control the export of raw products—and I intend to say more about that later—the oil we export from Canada goes to refineries largely in the Chicago area. Those refineries turn our oil into anti-freeze which is put in tin cans. They turn it into gasoline which is put into pumps. They turn it into chemicals and nylons. Yet we continue to export raw crude to those refineries.

Clearly it should be the policy of this government, if we are to export oil, that this oil should be exported as oil in tin cans, or in the form of gasoline, or as chemicals, or as pantyhose and that type of thing. We should not continue to export our raw crude, our raw butane and our raw chemicals. We should get down to the business of exporting finished products that every society demands. I had this brought home to me once by my father when he was dealing with the Japanese and importing commodities into Canada. You will recall, Sir, the fancy printed scarves the Japanese made out of silk with embroidery along the edge. These were sold as a package. I asked him: "Why do you not buy the silk in rolls and embroider it here?" He said: "Son, the cost of silk scarves packaged and shipped from Japan is exactly the same price as a roll of silk unprinted, untreated and unpackaged".

What was happening in respect of the Japanese in that case is exactly the type of activity a government interested in industrial development should take on as a pattern in Canada today. Is there any reason we should not sell steel at the same price as we sell the makings, the iron and the coal? Is there any reason we should not say that we will sell Kobi beef at the same price as the calves and the grass? We can say that if they want to raise beef, look after it and slaughter it, that is all right, but they can buy Kobi beef here already packaged.

Is there any reason that we should sell lumber and not pre-cut homes with furniture for them at the same price at which we sell our lumber? The same applies to pulp. We can say that we will sell it at the same price as toilet tissue and J-cloths. That would be using the raw product of Canada developed in its best fashion for the markets of the world.

I hope the minister, in using these controls that will be given to him under this legislation, will use them in that type of discretionary fashion. I realize it is not possible to have one blanket law covering all commodities. The situation in respect of each commodity is slightly different. In respect of some it may be drastically different. That is the reason it would be very difficult to spell out exactly what should happen in respect of every commodity covered by the Export and Import Permits Act. I suggest the minister should follow that approach, look at things and say that we will reduce the quota of raw product exported from Canada and demand of our customers that if they want the raw product they must buy the finished. We should organize the trade of Canada so that the price product of the raw will be the same price as the manufactured. In this way we could build a decent society and as a nation get what we deserve from the raw products of our soil, our farms and our mines.

Some people may say that the cost of what I am talking about is pretty enormous, that it includes subventions and the bankrolling of producers. It may include significant tax changes in favour of manufacturers or processors. Some of these are approved of and some are under attack by members of the New Democratic Party. I say that as a nation which can afford $3 billion for unemployment insurance and manpower surely we can afford to say that work is beautiful and that Canada is worth working for, that it is worth using the resources to make ourselves grow as a nation. Canada has huge advantages in 1974. The world is crying for raw products. The only thing that can be done with a raw product is manufacture it, and if people are crying for the raw product they will take the finished product. It may not be as easy to sell the finished product as the raw product, but only if we take advantage of our position will we as a nation be able to grow and be a nation which the Leader of the Liberal party said will be our destiny in the twentieth century.

I fervently hope that with the passage of this bill the government will use its ability, initiative and the advantage Canada has as a nation to make this country grow. While I have grave doubt as to the managerial ability of the government, surely even simple Simon can sell raw products in this world today.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the bill which is before us today is long overdue vis-à-vis the industrial development of Canada. It is designed basically to do two things. It is designed to give power to the government to restrict the export of our raw material unless processed in conjunction with government policy. Secondly, it gives the government the power to control the export of any surplus raw material we have in Canada selling at depressed prices. I think both things are commendable. I believe both are long overdue.

There are a couple of matters I should like to raise of concern to me. The first is that the government should use this policy once it is adopted, because for all too long in this country we have been exporters of raw material and importers of manufactured goods. We have been a hinterland economy responding to the whims and wishes of multinational corporations and United States entrepreneurs. We export most of our raw materials to the United States and we import manufactured goods. Canada imports more manufactured goods than any other industrialized nation in the world and that is why a bill of this sort should be part of an industrial and economic policy to develop Canada for the future. We must see it in that light, not as a solution but as a step toward developing a nation that is regionally balanced and has a rational economic policy, a nation that is in control of its own economic destiny. I hope that this bill will move us a long way in that direction.

● (2040)

Because of the fact that we are an exporter of raw materials, that we have had a very high unemployment rate, and the extraction of raw materials is capital intensive rather than labour intensive, we have built into our economy a high level of unemployment structurally. A bill of this sort, taken together with another more comprehensive policy, will go a long way toward getting rid of some of the structural unemployment in our economy.

The former member for Duvernay, Mr. Kierans, stated in the House a number of times that a $100 investment in the extractive industries would probably provide about $5 to $6 worth of wages, but that a $100 investment in the manufacturing or processing industries would probably provide wages of about $25 to $30. Despite those facts, over the years we have had a government that has pursued a policy that has given incentives to the mining, gas and oil industries to extract their resources from underground and ship them across the border to be processed elsewhere. It is about time that that policy was changed for the benefit of all Canadians.

This bill in itself is very subjective. I hope that this government does have some policies regarding the processing of raw materials in this country, but I realize that in many ways the bill must be subjective because all commodities are different and cannot be treated the same. For example, it might be to the advantage of Canada in some areas not to do too much smelting because of pollution problems. But those are things that can be taken on balance if we have a comprehensive industrial and economic policy. Those things would be part of that policy.

Another thing that we should consider in the upgrading and processing of raw materials is regional balance. This is missing in the bill before us today. The bill gives the government the power to insist that producers of raw materials manufacture them in this country in the national interest; but it says nothing about where that processing should take place. For all too long most of the manufacturing has been concentrated in the golden horseshoe in southern Ontario, in Montreal and in Vancouver.

When this bill reaches the committee stage we should take a serious look at amending it so as to give the government the power to direct where the manufacturing, processing and upgrading should take place. There is no reason why the petrochemical industry should not be located in the prairies, primarily in Alberta but also in Saskatchewan. That is where the raw material is. Why can there not be more upgrading of the raw material in the prairies? Why can there not be more processing of nickel in the Sudbury area? Why does Sudbury have to be an exporter of nickel, the hinterland of the south or of American cities? We should amend this bill to give the government power to direct that processing be done in the region where the material is produced in its raw form.

In looking at the development of resources in this country we should also consider the establishment of a two price system for many of the basic resources we have in Canada. I do not see any reason why some artificially high world prices should influence the price of our commodities. We in Canada are very fortunate to possess most resources. We have iron ore, nickel, copper, potash, hydro electric power and many other resources which are necessary for any nation. Indeed, we have almost any resource that one can think of. The only thing we do not have is a tropical climate and some of the tropical foods that are produced in such a climate.

Since we have these resources, and since abroad such resources as oil are sold at artificially high prices, we should consider a two price system in Canada. If we had a two price system for basic commodities such as oil, lumber, iron ore, lead or zinc—we have it for copper, wheat and oil—we would make our industries more competitive because we could sell their products at a lower price than can our competitors, such as Japan, western Europe and the United States. We would also be providing more jobs since manufacturing is labour intensive. We would help fight inflation because we would be importing less inflation from abroad. We would have a better grasp of our economy and we would be able to do more regional planning.

Those are some of the advantages which a two price system for basic commodities would provide. This has to go hand in hand with some export controls and with greater public investment in some of the resources of this country. I think that could be done. A national development policy is something that Canada needs desperately.

In the Toronto Star issue of yesterday the lead editorial came out in favour of a two price system for some of the basic commodities to which I have referred. I should like to quote four of five short paragraphs from that editorial. It reads:

> Canada has one of the world's largest deposits of potash and is self sufficient in oil, two of the basic ingredients in fertilizer. But because of shortages in the U.S., Canadians will pay 20 per cent more to make their flowers and vegetables grow this year.
> Canada is one of the world's great growers of evergreen trees. Because of world demand, primarily in Japan, the home handyman has to pay 20 per cent more for a sheet of plywood made from them than he did last year.
> We produce far more white beans than we consume. But because anchovies disappeared for two years from the waters off Peru, an acute shortage of protein material developed. Canada's white beans, a protein substitute shot from $11 to $60 a hundredweight last year.
>
> All these are instances where developments outside Canada caused large price increases for goods that are abundant within our borders.
> More and more, Canadians wonder whether there isn't some way to escape this kind of externally produced inflation, by having one price for Canadians and a higher price for exports.

I think that the view expressed in the editorial of the Toronto Star is a valid one. We produce an abundance of some commodities for which world prices are artificially high. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says that we would be unfair to our trading partners and would be inviting retaliation if we had a two price system. I do not buy that argument because I say that we would be selling those commodities at world prices; we would not try to get a higher price than other producers in the international market. All we would be doing is developing an industrial strategy for Canada, an economic strategy and a development plan that would help control inflation, produce more jobs and make our industries more competitive. These are important considerations in discussing the bill before us.

One last thing that I want to mention is that in upgrading our resources in Canada we should take a look at our taxation system which favours the development of capital intensive extractive industries over the development of processing and manufacturing. I will give the House one or two examples. I have here some corporation taxation statistics, series 1965-70, which are very revealing about the gifts and handouts made to the extractive industries. The profits of the metal mining industry in that six year period before taxes amounted to $3.165 million. On that income before taxes they paid federal and provincial corporation taxes on only 10.8 per cent. I think that is grossly unfair. Certainly it would be grossly unwise to permit this to continue in planning and developing a rational economy in this country. During the same period of time, the gas and oil companies paid taxes on only about 5.7 per cent of their profits while the ordinary Canadian, the retail merchant, the farmer and others, paid tax on everything they earned.

● (2050)

In closing, I support the bill before us, but I strongly suggest we cannot look at it in isolation. It should be part of an over-all development plan for this country, an industrial economic strategy that would make this country the greatest by far of any nation in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-5. This bill, as far as we can see, is quite important.

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System—I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, it is rather Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. I quote:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:
> 1. Section 3 of the Export and Import Permits Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (a) thereof, the following paragraphs:

Mr. Speaker, the regulations on imports affect a great number of citizens, especially Canadians and we would like to export as much as we can, but we are now realizing that our domestic consumption must increase, because exports do not alter our national economic conditions.

Mr. Speaker, for instance, if in 1974 we produced for $125 billion, consumed and exported for $75 billion of this production and exported for $25 billion of the $75 billion that was consumed in the country, if we exported for $25 billion of our production and re-exported for another $25 billion, this does not affect at all the national total of $125 billion of production in Canada. Exports, even though they are very important, do not solve the basic problem of the economic situation that we now face.

Mr. Speaker, exports and imports must balance and, when there is a difference between the two, this affects the value of currency. For instance, if we export to the United States more than the United States export to us, they will have a favourable balance with us. At the present time, for instance, the Canadian dollar is worth maybe 3 per cent more than the American dollar. This depends on the exports.

If the opposite happens, Canada will have to depreciate its currency. When a country must pay royalties or has more exports than imports, it has an unfavourable payment balance, it must reimburse, as in the case of the United States. If our payment balance with the Americans is unfavourable, we have to pay the difference in American currency.

If we did not have enough tourists to consume our products and give us American capital, and if we do not have American capital, we have to depreciate our currency accordingly and lower the value of our products. The Americans therefore pay less for our goods than Canadians can. This is the result of an international agreement which, I am sure, could be reformed. In fact, money should not depreciate to such an extent, it should keep a certain value, and goods should not depreciate by as much.

Mr. Speaker, exports and international exchanges should not, once again, alter the total amount of a country's national production. At most, they mean entries on the books under credit and debit, and adjustments at the end of the course as I said before.

Mr. Speaker, since the subject of the bill is rather general in nature, we can generalize somewhat about the economic situation, and speak of exports, transports, Canadian companies, Crown companies and state companies. We can say, Mr. Speaker, since it concerns Air Canada to some extent, that it had an income of $45,492,000 in 1972. It paid $32,487,000 in interest, had a deficit of $8,648,000 and carried over a debt of $640,114.

● (2100)

Mr. Speaker, since this is a transport company with which we must deal and agreements must be entered into with foreign countries to carry on air transport activities I will say that according to the report I have here the year 1972 was one of the best I think for Air Canada, yet they managed to register a deficit of $8,648,000.

Mr. Speaker, the CNR had an income of $48,257,000 in 1972 and it paid $66 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate somewhat to interrupt the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) but I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that we are considering Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. I think that even with the fullest indulgence it would be quite difficult for the Chair to allow an hon. member to speak to the financing of the CNR or Air Canada. That subject was discussed on several occasions in recent months in connection with legislation dealing vaguely and perhaps even remotely with the financing of the CNR and Air Canada but I do not think that even with the wildest imagination it would be possible to establish a relationship between Bill C-4 now before us and the financing of Air Canada and the CNR.

I urge the hon. member for Compton and all hon. members to limit themselves to the principle of the bill now before us.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, it is true that I perhaps wandered somewhat from the subject but I will try as much as possible in the few minutes available to me to come back to the subject and talk to the amendments to the act.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to permit the governor in council to limit the import of any article that, under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, is limited in respect of production or marketing in Canada. It deals with farm products and all sorts of other products. I thought, Mr. Speaker, that the financing of Air Canada with its international scope could come under that item. That is why I was speaking about Air Canada and I ventured to make comparisons between the CPR and the CNR to say that those large companies registered deficits, to say that they pay considerably high interests on borrowed money. Interest rates, Mr. Speaker, are a great source of difficulties for us. The same applies also to our exporting trade with other nations.

Mr. Speaker, if we are unable to do as much business as we should like with other countries, it is due to commercial and financial factors. Because we are unable to offer finished goods at prices sufficiently low to compete with other nations, it is like being held in a vice exerting increasingly more pressure all the time. It is becoming more and more difficult to make deals with other countries.

Interest on loans are the main reason for the high costs of living and production. And then, the second major cause is financing. Those who operate all sorts of industries and create all sorts of goods are faced with taxes which keep on increasing, so that marketing their products becomes next to impossible.

Let us consider, for instance, the 11 per cent tax on building materials and the 12 per cent excise tax. They raise thhe price of Canadian products to such an extent that it has become difficult to increase production.

If we want to export at a cheap rate and get commodities to export at a better cost, we must first reduce our rates of interest which cripple the Canadian industry. We must also reduce certain taxes and certain export duties in order to compete with any country. We could produce more, Mr. Speaker. There is an overproduction of about $50 billion in 1974 and if there is overproduction, we certainly have products to export. But since we have to import for about the same amount, our national accounts remain the same. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have to produce at a better rate if we really want to export. There are all kinds of ways we could use to produce at better rates. They are logical ways that should be studied. Many things have to be reconsidered in our economy. Reforms must be made in the various segments of the economy if we really want to produce here at a cheaper rate and if we really want to become an exporting country. There are all kinds of commodities that we can produce. We have in Canada, Mr. Speaker, everything needed for that, including the necessary engineering and the modernized industries.

In the food stuff sector, for instance, we could have produced at least 10 per cent more in 1973. Our national production could have been better by at least 10 per cent and if we made low-interest credit available to farmers, thus enabling them to buy the farm machinery they need, and even if we granted the compensated discount on certain farm machinery or machines used in trade and industry, we could, Mr. Speaker, produce at a much cheaper rate. And if we lowered the rates of interest, which is the most important factor, we could lower the production cost.

At present, we have a surplus of about $50 billion in capitalization, and all this surplus supply is piled up in warehouses, in department stores, and this is financed through the bank financial formula at an interest rate of 12 per cent, which cannot possibly lower the price of products. To lower the price of products, we could finance all these stocks, all these inventories, at much lower interest rates, and we could thus cope with imports in all kinds of fields. That is the main point I wanted to stress.

There would be so many things to say about this bill, but other members have dealt with a great variety of matters and I do not intend to repeat what has already been said. The previous speaker almost made the same speech as mine a moment ago. I wanted to make practically the same comments as he did. Therefore, under the circumstances, so many things having been said, I will conclude my remarks and resume my seat.

[English]

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on Bill C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. There is no doubt that the government has again moved to placate the NDP by bringing in this bill. One wonders if it is the result of yet another telephone call between the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You don't mean that!

Mr. Kempling: Oh, I do mean it very much, my hon. colleague. There are some hidden factors in this bill that require explanation. For instance, why does the government seek to have this act expire on July 31, 1974 and become a permanent statute? This bill removes the act from the control of parliament and places it in the hands of the Governor in Council. It places in his hands complete control over the Export and Import Permits Act. This is another example of the government circumventing parliament and removing from the House any consideration of commerce conducted under the Export and Import Permits Act. It creates a situation whereby the Governor in Council can, by order in council, exert tremendous power over what has been a relatively free market.

For years we have been striving for certain export markets. We now find that we may be denied some of those markets if a particular product is placed on a certain list. I agree that we should process more of our natural resources in Canada, but this has to be done in the context of world supply. If, for instance, we ship less copper to Norway or Japan because of an action of the Governor in Council, will we lose this market, say, to Chile or some other world producer of copper that does not have these restrictions?

Where do the amendments fit into the GATT negotiations? Are they not in fact another tariff? Are we, on the one hand, negotiating at GATT conferences for freer access to markets and a general reduction of tariffs, and then imposing new kinds of tariffs by placing export and import permit controls in the hands of the Governor in Council? We will want to hear from the minister, when this legislation goes to committee, just where this fits into our whole trade picture. Where will these amendments fit into the total transportation picture? What freight rates will apply to the semi-produced natural resources we are talking about?

We know what happened to rapeseed cake production in western Canada. Lack of a comprehensive policy has cost the Canadian taxpayer hundreds of millions of dollars over the last several years. Bringing before Parliament half a policy without the other half smacks, I say, of political mischief. As I have said, this is a move to placate the NDP and nothing more.

If there were parallel legislation which would encourage industry to process more raw materials or natural resources, or provide that our program will be staged over a period of time to allow our customers overseas to adjust to our new policy or provide that our negotiators at GATT negotiate on the basis that a percentage of our natural resources will be processed, which percentage will be increased over a period of time until we reach an optimum level, then I would say that this is a pretty good bill. We shall put these questions to the minister and expect answers in committee.

We are putting power into the hands of the governor in council to restrict the export of certain products which will be placed on a list. We are not told which products will be on the list, or why. We are asked to make the Export and Import Permits Act a permanent statute, not subject to parliamentary review. Personally, I am not confident that the government can carry out this function.

At present the government has power under the act to restrict exports. There was no move on the part of the government to restrict the export of finished lumber, even though domestic demand for lumber for the housing market has reached unbelievable heights. In the United States we saw the government move to restrict the export of lumber from the west coast because there was a shortage which was driving up the price of housing. The United States government moved to cut the export of lumber to Japan by some 30 per cent. The Canadian government did not move; Canadian exporters picked up that market, to the detriment of the housing industry of this country and to the detriment of home buyers. How can the government justify this lack of action and remain credible? How can it ask parliament to give this act permanent statute status, with no review by parliament? Is it any wonder we have lost confidence in the government? The Canadian people are fast losing confidence in it.

I should like the minister to explain how, by exporting a product in semi-finished or partly processed condition, this can have any effect on the price paid for the product on the world market. It does not make sense. My instinct tells me the potential customer will shift his purchasing to where he can buy that product at the price he wants to pay and in the state of manufacture he wants for processing in his country.

On the import side, the government, with this bill, is moving into supply legislation by limiting the importation of any article which, under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, is limited in respect of production or marketing in Canada.

Subsection 5(1) of the act being debated reads in part:

> The Governor in Council may establish a list of goods, to be called an Import Control List, including therein any article the import of which he deems it necessary to control for any of the following purposes . . .

I have serious reservations about this. I know that we face many serious supply problems, but why are we moving into this field? It is evident that the government made grave errors in certain farm production policies it brought forward. On the one hand, the government is playing the consumer against the producer; on the other, it is playing the producer against the consumer and using the threat of imports against the producer. In the process it may wreck an industry.

We talked recently to people in the cheese industry, who told us that Ontario used to produce and export 100 million pounds of cheddar cheese. That production has almost been lost because of the disastrous industrial milk policies sponsored by the government. It is plainly evident to anyone that the fiscal and monetary policies of the government are just not working. It is also evident that the selective controls used by this government are not adequate. This whole business, it seems to me, is like a machine which is running out of control. You pull a lever here, but it is still running a little rough; you push a knob there, but it is still running a little rough; you put a control on here, add a product to a list, use a regulation or order in council, and keep it out of parliament so that it cannot be criticized or questioned. I do not think this is any way to go about it.

I wonder how these controls will affect our export trade? Let us look at some of the markets with which we trade. I see that on our trade with African nations in 1972 we incurred a trade deficit of $58,509,000. In 1973 that deficit had more than doubled to $135,550,000. How will this legislation affect products traded with the African nations? How are we to better our deficit position, or will it be worse? For example, look at our trade with South Africa. In 1972 our trade deficit with South Africa was $15,147,000. In 1973 it almost doubled to $27,597,000. How will this legislation affect products which are traded back and forth? Some of them certainly fall within the scope of this bill. Will that situation change?

[Mr. Kempling.]

Our trade deficit with Middle East nations in 1972 was almost $129 million. In 1973 the deficit had risen to $182 million. So we go. We will see the same pattern emerging from our trade with Pacific rim nations, Scandinavian nations, and so on down the line. We all see our trade deficits increasing. Our trade deficit with the Scandinavian countries of $42 million in 1972 rose to $59 million in 1973. Our trade deficit with Pacific rim countries of $58 million in 1972 has moved up to $65 million.

The most telling figures concern South American countries with which we do a good deal of trade. In 1973 we imported from South American countries $751 million worth of products. We exported only $379 million worth, leaving a trade deficit of $371,731,000, more than double that of the previous year. So when we talk about export and import controls, we should look at our total trading picture and see what is happening. No doubt this bill will be referred to committee, where I am sure we will take a serious look at it and have some serious talks with the minister and his officials to find out what they expect to achieve with this bill.

I am somewhat disappointed about the way in which this legislation has been brought forward. It seems the government follows a pattern in its legislation of mixing good things and bad things together. They include in a bill a provision which is not too palatable and then offset it by a provision which may be more acceptable. They play one aspect against the other. I guess this is called politics, but I do not think it is good legislation.

When the bill goes to committee members on this side will ask some searching questions as to where it is leading us. We shall want to know what plans the minister has in store for the processing industries, whether parallel legislation will be brought down to help establish processing plants, and so on. Where they will be established is another question again. Certainly, if we propose to urge industry to carry out more processing in Canada we shall need to ensure that the necessary financial arrangements can be made, that the economy of the country can stand it, that the transportation facilities are such that they can handle the situation, get the products to the market or to the ports in good condition at the lowest possible price, so that there may be a chance to compete with similar products manufactured elsewhere in the world.

We must also consider where this bill will lead us as far as GATT negotiations are concerned. I am a little worried about this aspect. Among the people negotiating on the government side at GATT I see no one who has ever been prominent in business. Most of the Canadian representatives have spent the greater part of their lives in the Civil Service. I know of no one who can claim any great industrial background. I wonder what the other delegates will say when they look at these provisions, for this is really another type of tariff and it may be placing an added burden on our representatives at a time when international trade is so vital to Canada.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us brings back memories of the infamous Bill C-176 which was bandied about the House of Commons for a couple of years or longer, the bill which attempted to make agriculture a public utility, the bill which set out to impose a program of supply management and a system of production control on agricultural products.

Bill C-4 deals in part with that very act, the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. It has to do with the imposition of import controls on any product which comes under the auspices of that act. It seems strange to me that the government should be asking us to legislate in this manner today when we were told during consideration of the marketing bill in the last parliament that any provision for the implementation of import control was totally unnecessary.

It is precisely to this area that I wish to direct my comments this evening. I repeat that members on this side had very serious reservations about Bill C-176. In particular this question of import controls gave rise to misgivings. It was our contention that supply management would be totally ineffective in the domestic market unless some provision was made with respect to import control. Members of our party pleaded with the minister and with government supporters to remedy the defect but they declined to incorporate in the bill the provisions we suggested, displaying their intransigence and their stubbornness. They assured us our fears were unfounded. So when we look at clause two of Bill C-4 as it is presented to us today, all we can say is that it is a classic example of a government flip-flop, the sort of thing which has created such a huge credibility gap as far as any government announcement is concerned. It is a wonder to me that a government so narrow-minded and so afflicted with tunnel-vision has been able to survive for so long.

Tonight I wish to place on record some of the words which were spoken at the outset of the consideration of Bill C-176. The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) in his remarks on the second reading of the bill, as reported in Hansard at page 815, on November 2, 1970, stated:

> Nowhere in this bill is there an indication of implicit power in an agency, council or even in the minister himself, to control imports. This is a major weakness. If you cannot control imports, it renders almost valueless attempted supply management, . . .

That is precisely the position we took. The minister of agriculture at that time was the hon. member for Medicine Hat. We are grateful to the present member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who drove him out of office. It is because of his intransigence and ignorance that the former minister is not sitting in this House. Thank God for the present hon. member who came upon the scene to relieve him, and also to relieve us. Anyway, the former minister said this, as reported at page 831 of Hansard for November 3, 1970:

> I can also advise the hon. member, and I am sure this will relieve some of his anxiety with respect to the matter, that under these international agreements as I understand them, although there is some complexity about this, we can impose the same kind of supply management provisions on imports as are in fact applied to our domestic producers. That is the case with respect to some of the international agreements. It seems to me that here is a balance which allows us, first of all, to take into account the interests of our domestic producers and also allows us to respect the international agreements we have made.
> I am not suggesting because it will be easy to do this in all cases, because of course different points of view are taken from time to time depending on a country's own interests. However, I would like the hon. member to understand why it would not be possible to transfer automatically to a marketing agency set up under this bill the authority to deal with imports. It must remain the responsibility and prerogative of the government to change tariffs, or to change the impediments to trade coming into Canada, if you wish to call them that. I suggest that one can be made compatible with the other.

We then took that argument into committee. As hon. members recall, the Standing Committee on Agriculture dealt very extensively with Bill C-176, and this same argument was put forth in the committee when the hon. member for Battle River at that time, Mr. Downey, posed these questions to the chairman of the committee. I quote from page 25:24 of the proceedings and evidence of February 25:

> —I was going to propose somewhere in the bill in regard to import controls. At what point or after what existing clause does he feel this would be appropriate.
>
> I think it very important that we consider this matter at the present time because of the parallel situation we presently have going on in the Finance Committee, with the Textile Bill presently before it. During our hearings it was said many times that production controls were not practical without import controls.

Mr. Downey went on to address a question to the minister as follows:

> Does the Minister feel that there is some degree of acceptability in this type of an amendment? Do you feel that it may be practical?

Mr. Olson then replied:

> No, Mr. Chairman. I do not think it ought to be in the bill and I have stated that many times before this committee. I have also stated under our international agreements that we have the power or the authority, without violating those agreements, to apply essentially the same kind of regulations to some imported products as we apply to the supply management of our own domestically-produced products. The Governor in Council could delegate that kind of authority for administration if he chose to do so.

Mr. Downey then went on to state:

> Mr. Olson, the same type of import tariff controls exist in the textile industry. Are you saying as Minister of Agriculture that you would not support the same kind of extra controls and protection for the agricultural industry in Canada that you were prepared to support as a member of the government for the textile industry?

The then minister, Mr. Olson, replied:

> We have done this, Mr. Chairman, with many agricultural products including dairy products and grain products.

What the minister was really saying, then, is that there was no necessity for providing import controls in respect of the items that would come under the aegis of the agricultural products marketing bill.

It was at the report stage that the then hon. member for Battle River, Mr. Downey, moved another amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act which in fact would have achieved the same purpose that the provision in clause 2 of this bill attempts to achieve. At that point in time this amendment was voted on and defeated.

I simply want to point out that although members on this side of the House were accused during the consideration of that bill of filibustering and blockading, I remind

hon. members opposite that we did pinpoint a number of major weaknesses in the bill, among which was the absence of any mechanism for control of imports. You cannot conceivably exercise a program of supply management without some measure of import control on products coming into the country. The exercise we were engaged in was not a filibuster but an attempt to improve this obviously bad piece of legislation, and I suggest it was bad in that it took over two and a half years for that bill to pass through all stages of this House. I suggest the bill took that long during those stages because of the dedication and determination of a number of members who considered its impact and proposed amendments to make it workable. Because of their intransigent position, the government failed to recognize some of the inherent shortcomings we pointed out when attempting to make that bill workable.

I think the piece of legislation before us now, particularly the provisions in clause 2, represent a classic example of this government's backtracking. One of the major products covered under the farm products marketing bill was eggs and other poultry products. Today we find egg producers in a very serious state of affairs because of the tremendous importation of eggs from the United States. It is the egg producers who are asking parliament to expedite the passage of this bill, as they are faced with the prospect of a depression in prices due to the huge number of eggs coming in from across the border. Many of the egg producers in Canada are being literally driven up against the wall because of high input costs.

Naturally I support this legislation, as I know hon. members in our party will support it, but I want to remind hon. members on that side of the House that they alone do not have all the answers in respect to good legislation in this country. They and they alone do not have a monopoly on good ideas. Had they considered and accepted our amendment in the first place they might have been saved a great deal of embarrassment. I think the type of backtracking evident in this bill is a classic example of this government using its arrogance and intransigent attitude to hide its ignorance.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I could not possibly turn a phrase like the one turned by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who just sat down, but I should like to make a few remarks about the bill before us. I might say at the very beginning that the specific bill before us skirts very closely to that part of the Export and Import Permits Act which could lead to a fair amount of controversy.

The bill we are now studying, specifically that part in respect of Section 3(a), which comes very close to sub-section (b), allows the governor in council to produce a list of goods which may not be re-exported from Canada; that is to say, goods which are imported into Canada to be re-exported to other countries. This is the rather infamous part of the act which allows the governor in council to prevent the exportation of goods produced in one country to another country, using Canada as a vehicle.

However, part of the bill before us does deal with a very important matter. It is a very short part but very important, and its importance is not so much in the amount of power it provides the government as an indication that there are the beginnings of a change in our thinking in this country about exports and their relation to our total production and the wellbeing of the people of Canada.

Most of us have been brought up in a certain cultural ambience. In this cultural ambience we have certain articles of faith that have been passed down to us without this ever having been questioned. One of these articles of faith held dearly and without question by most Canadians is that to export is a good thing, and that the more we export the better off we all are. I submit that this is an article of faith which is so firmly lodged in the Canadian consciousness that it is something we have inherited from the days of the Montreal fur merchant.

Of course, to them export was a good thing, because to export massively meant more money and profits for them. They can also justify the exportation of that commodity, and later on persons can justify the exportation of other commodities because such exportation satisfies a very real and physical need of the mother country. But we are now a country on our own and we have to begin to bring into question this ancient tendency of our economic fate, which is simply that we must export not only to survive but to thrive.

In a small, very hesitant way this bill begins to question that tenet. We did some questioning earlier this year when we slapped an export tax on petroleum. For the first time in the history of this country we told ourselves it was not our duty to export everything our land could produce. We began to tell ourselves that perhaps it was our duty to satisfy Canadian needs first. To very many people in this House or in this country, that was a milestone in our history. It was the first time this ever really happened.
