NEWFOUNDLAND

CONGRATULATIONS AND BEST WISHES ON TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF UNION WITH CANADA

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, today Newfoundland completes 25 years as a province of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is obvious that all hon. members join me in expressing congratulations and offering best wishes to the people of Newfoundland on this happy and historic occasion.

[Translation]

At midnight on March 31, 1949 that old dream of the Fathers of Confederation finally came true. The oldest settlement in North America became the newest Canadian province and we then understood the meaning of the words "A mari usque ad mare."

Newfoundland has made appreciable progress during its first twenty-five years as a Canadian province and this is a source of satisfaction for all of us. It is also a source of satisfaction to have the irrefutable proof that Newfoundlanders have considerably enriched our national life.

[English]

With their rich traditions, their centuries old distinctive culture, their strong, independent spirit and their many talents, Newfoundlanders have made a very significant contribution in virtually every sphere of Canadian endeavour. I am sure this will continue to be the case for during the past 25 years Newfoundlanders have been loyal and dedicated Canadians. They have a deep commitment to national unity. Yet, no group offers clearer proof that it is possible in Canada for people of varied and differing backgrounds who have common objectives to work for the advancement of national purposes, while at the same time maintaining their individuality and their affection for their special and unique heritage. We all hope that Newfoundlanders will never lose these qualities and, knowing them as we do, there is scant likelihood that they will.

● (1410)

Several among us have enjoyed from time to time the generous hospitality for which Newfoundlanders are so rightly known. A greater number of Canadians will undoubtedly make that experience during the year of their 25th anniversary. Among them will be the members of the federal cabinet, because we have decided to underline that important event of Canadian history by holding a meeting of the cabinet in St. John's on June 24, 1974.

[English]

This celebration affords yet another opportunity for us to remind ourselves of our great good fortune in this richly diversified land. During the past few years we have observed our national centennial, as well as similar anniversaries in Manitoba, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

Now, our youngest province has very much come of age and all members will join with me in saying to the people of Newfoundland that we wish them well in the future, and that it is good to know that we will continue to work together to achieve a stronger, more united Canada of which Newfoundland now forms such an important part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this is a great anniversary in the history of our nation, and I join with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in expressing the appreciation of all Canadians for what it has meant to our nation to have Newfoundland, as he said, complete Canada from sea to sea.

It is worthy of note that 25 years ago in this House the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent spoke of what it would mean to Canada to have Newfoundland join with us. Only two members in the House of Commons today were here when confederation was indeed completed, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: At that time Mr. St. Laurent became, as it were, a belated Father of Confederation. It was his leadership that made possible the agreement that was entered into some months before the terms of union. At that time he said:

> We are taking a major step in the life of Newfoundland and of all Canada. The people of the nine older provinces and those of Newfoundland are equally aware that one circumstance that has contributed to union is our common loyalty to His Majesty the King. That common loyalty will continue to be one of the most important forces in the life of our united nation.

I mention that as the only living Canadian who is a member of Her Majesty's Imperial Privy Council. Indeed, what the then Prime Minister said was pregnant with thought and powerful in its prophesy, for Newfoundland has been associated with the British Crown since Sir Humphrey Gilbert proclaimed the sovereignty of Elizabeth the First. Through all those centuries the loyalty and devotion of Newfoundlanders to the Crown have become a byword.

My mind goes back to July 1, 1916, when Newfoundland, on that historic occasion at the opening of the battle of the Somme, wrote its name on the records of valor for all time to come. In the intervening years, as the Prime Minister has said, all of us have enjoyed something of the fervour, the strength, the character and the frankness of the Newfoundlander.

Others had a dream of confederation with Newfoundland. Sir John A. Macdonald, Georges-Étienne Cartier and George Brown strove to bring it about. The representatives for Newfoundland at the conference in Quebec in 1864 were Frederick Carter, afterwards Sir Frederick, and Ambrose Shea, afterwards Sir Ambrose Shea. They strove to bring about confederation, but in consequence of an election campaign in 1869 their hopes and those of the rest of Canada for the entry of Newfoundland into confederation were rendered of no avail.

Canada earned much with the entry of Newfoundland. I think I can do no better than to quote from one whom I have always regarded as Canada's greatest poet, a Newfoundlander, E. J. Pratt. I was able to obtain this quotation only a moment ago. He said of Newfoundland:

This is their culture, this—their master passion
Of giving shelter and of sharing bread,
Of answering rocket signals in the fashion
Of losing life to save it. In the spread
Of time—the Gilbert-Grenfell-Bartlett span—
The headlines cannot dim their daily story,
Nor calls like London! Gander! Teheran!
Outplay the drama of the sled and dory.

In the modern world but still maintaining the traditions of the past I join with the Prime Minister in saying it was good for Canada to have the Dominion of Canada finally completed in accordance with the hopes of the Fathers of Confederation. God bless Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, one of the joys of our parliamentary system is to listen to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) agreeing with the right hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Diefenbaker: With you joining in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert anticipates me, Mr. Speaker—with me rising on behalf of my colleagues and myself to agree with both of them.

I would find it somewhat presumptuous of me to sing the praises of the Newfoundlanders or, indeed, the praises of any people in any other region of Canada. But it is a fact that as one travels across this country one of the impressive parts of that kind of experience is the indigenous culture, habits and traditions that one finds in each area of Canada, and there is no doubt at all that Newfoundland added a tradition and a culture that were distinct and are distinct in this great country of ours.

• (1420)

I want to make only one other point. The Prime Minister said on behalf of all in this House, and the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert echoed him, that all of us wish the people of Newfoundland well—and so we do. As we wish them well I suggest that we in the parliament of Canada ought to keep in mind that their future welfare will in large measure depend on the success this parliament has in eliminating inequalities in this country and giving people in a province like Newfoundland the same conditions of life and the same opportunity for progress as other parts of the country enjoy.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): I always find it comforting, Mr. Speaker, to be able from time to time to congratulate fellow citizens for wise decisions they have made. In the world of politics, it is easy to criticize the doings of our fellow Canadians, but after 25 years in the Confederation, Newfoundland has shown its dedication and its ever-increasing contribution to Canada.

I would not certainly be able, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) did, to remind the House of Newfoundland's entry into Confederation especially since I did not live through it. But before I came to this House I had the opportunity on several occasions, through my work, to communicate rather closely with Newfoundlanders. I can say I gave a bit of myself in Newfoundland in the development of its micro-waves system. But, most of all, I have learned there the joy of living of its people. I think that we, Canadians of the other provinces, can look up to Newfoundlanders, because they are hard workers and do not shun work. Despite the hardships they have experienced at times, Newfoundlanders have managed to remain joyful, and this should be a lesson to us.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONGRATULATIONS TO AIR FORCE ON FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), the following motion:

That on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Air Force, all members of this House join in congratulating the past and present members of this great service on the contribution they have made to making the Canadian Air Force one of the outstanding air forces in the world, and in so doing have brought great honour to themselves and to their country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is suggested under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimity. The motion is carried.

Motion agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN ALBERTA JOURNALISTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that certain journalists in the newspaper business in the province of Alberta are reported to be under investigation by the RCMP, and in view of the fact that some of these reporters have been involved in attempts to organize employees of Alberta newspapers into a trade union organization, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the following motion:

That this House call upon the government to establish a one-man judicial inquiry into the activities of the RCMP in their reported investigation of these individuals and to report to the government on all matters concerning this case and its affects on the civil rights of the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

TABLING OF PRELIMINARY REPORT ON PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA, 1974

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I would like to table, in both official languages, the preliminary report concerning private and public investment in Canada, 1974.

HEALTH

MEDICAL RESEARCH GRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on what I consider to be a matter of very urgent and pressing necessity. Inasmuch as it has been revealed that medical research grants have been reduced, thus seriously undermining research and medical development within this country, with grants to deans of medical colleges having been reduced by 25 per cent, research scholarships by 35 per cent, and awards to visiting scientists by 50 per cent, and also in view of the fact these grants have not kept pace with the inflation caused by this government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this government immediately take steps to refund medical research grants within this country so that we keep up at least to present medical research.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some doubts as to whether this motion is in order because of the fact it is not accompanied by a royal recommendation. Motions, even those under Standing Order 43, are subject to all the rules of the House. Because a motion is moved under Standing Order 43 does not mean it can escape the constitutional requirements, particularly the one to which I have just alluded. However, I will simply inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

PARTICIPATION BY CANADIAN DELEGATION IN MEETING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact a Canadian delegation is taking part in a meeting of the Inter-American Development Bank in Santiago, Chile, thereby lending moral as well as financial support to the military regime in Chile, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House protest Canadian participation in the meeting of the Inter-American Development Bank in Santiago, Chile, and instruct the government to follow the example of the British government and withhold all aid to Chile until the regime in that country accepts common standards of humanity in regard to fundamental human rights.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

INFORMATION CANADA

PROPOSAL THAT ORGANIZATION BE PHASED OUT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of recent remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that increases in government expenditures are brought on by public pressure, opposition pressure and pressure from the media, and noting that there has been no public pressure, no opposition pressure and no media pressure to sustain the operations of Information Canada, and in light of the fact that there are 747 current information officers who are already duplicating the work of Information Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the Prime Minister consider the immediate phasing out of Information Canada.

● (1430)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EMPLOYMENT OF EX-MILITARY PERSONNEL AS PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 12—Mr. Rowland:

For each Canadian Forces base, station or other installation, how many ex-military personnel now receiving service pensions are currently employed as public servants in the Department of National Defence and, of these, how many are war veterans?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The information required by this question is not readily available and would necessitate a search of thousands of files. In view of the continuing heavy commitments and workload of departmental personnel officers, additional staff would be required in a large number of CF bases, stations and other installations to compile the data. The department does not have the resources that would be required to employ such additional staff.

NUMBER OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL IN RECEIPT OF PENSIONS

Question No. 27—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplement added thereto, of amounts within each of the following brackets (a) less then $20 per month (b) $20 to $29.99 per month (c) $30 to $39.99 per month (d) $40 to $49.99 per month (e) $50 to $59.99 per month (f) $60 to $69.99 per month (g) $70 to $79.99 per month (h) $80 to $89.99 per month (i) $90 to $99.99 per month (j) $100 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 to $249.99 per month (m) $250 to $299.99 per month (n) $300 per month and over?

2. How many widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the total number of retired Armed Forces personnel and also the number of widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans or Armed Forces personnel are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of February 28, 1974, the number of retired Armed Forces personnel receiving monthly pensions totalled 41,849 as follows: (a) Less than $20.00, 42; (b) $20 to $29.99, 70; (c) $30 to $39.99, 136; (d) $40 to $49.99, 252; (e) $50 to $59.99, 248; (f) $60 to $69.99, 207; (g) $70 to $79.99, 288; (h) $80 to $89.99, 379; (i) $90 to $99.99, 499; (j) $100 to $149.99, 3,257; (k) $150 to $159.99, 6,496; (l) $200 to $249.99, 7,962; (m) $250 to $299.99, 6,313; (n) $300 and over, 15,700.

2. The number of widows receiving monthly pensions totalled 4,069 as follows: (a) Less than $20.00, 63; (b) $20 to $29.99, 52; (c) $30 to 39.99, 45; (d) $40 to $49.99, 52; (e) $50 to $59.99, 97; (f) $60 to $69.99, 133; (g) $70 to $79.99, 196; (h) $80 to $89.99, 240; (i) $90 to $99.99, 228; (j) $100 to $149.99, 1,117; (k) $150 to $199.99, 830; (l) $200 to $249.99, 502; (m) $250 to $299.99, 231; (n) $300 and over, 283.

3. Retired Armed Forces personnel and widows residing in each province:

Provinces	Personnel	Widows
Newfoundland	174	14
Prince Edward Island	337	33
Nova Scotia	3,744	348
New Brunswick	1,376	145
Quebec	3,598	417

Saskatchewan	531	75
Alberta	3,406	274
British Columbia	8,775	665
Territories	78	4
Outside Canada	1,199	140

4. Number of orphans, 91. Average monthly amount, $45.59.

DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF SPEECHES MADE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 84—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,827 of the First Session of the 29th Parliament, what are the names and addresses of the 1,845 people to whom copies of addresses by the Minister of Agriculture to Liberal Party meetings were printed and distributed at public expense?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The 1,845 copies of addresses by the Minister of Agriculture to all public meetings are distributed as follows to: News media, 376; Members of Parliament, 307; Senators, 102; Provincial government and their employees, 283; Agriculture Canada employees (including extra copies to fill requests), 224; Other federal departments and agencies, 72; Individual members of the general public, 269; Organizations and associations, 82; Businesses, 62; Universities, 29; Diplomatic Corps, 22; Libraries, 17; Total, 1,845.

CONSTRUCTION OF MULTI-PURPOSE EXHIBITION PROGRAM

Question No. 112—Mr. Gleave:

1. How much of the $10 million program for the construction of multi-purpose exhibition buildings, announced by the Minister of Finance in the House on October 14, 1971, has been allocated?

2. What is the provincial allocation of money under this program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. There were $5,561,150 committed by signed loan agreements during the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73.

2. There was no stipulation under the program that specific amounts be set out for each province.

TENDERS FOR CONTRACTS FOR LIFEBOATS

Question No. 123—Mr. Crouse:

1. Were public tenders called for the contract awarded to Eastern Equipment Limited of Lachine, Quebec, for the supply of four 44-foot shorebased lifeboats, as required by the Department of Transport and, if so, how many companies tendered for this contract?

2. What were the names of the companies and the amounts of their bids?

3. What was the value of the contract as awarded to Eastern Equipment Limited of Lachine, Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Tenders were called on July 27, 1973 (closing date October 17, 1973) and three companies submitted tenders.

2. The tenders were publicly opened in Ottawa on October 17, 1973, the bids were as listed below:

Company	Bid (evaluated Total) $	(vessels only) $
Eastern Equipment Ltd. Lachine, Que.	1,062,000	1,032,000
P.E.I. Lending Authority, Georgetown Shipyard, P.E.I.	1,216,332	1,187,132
Caraquet Marine Industries Ltd., Caraquet, N.B.	1,221,985	1,198,000

3. Value of the contract awarded to Eastern Equipment Ltd., $1,039,271.32 as detailed below:

Cost of Ships Tender Price	$1,032,000.00
Less: Design Check (cancelled)	17,000.00
	$1,015,000.00

Four Sets of Electronic Spares	18,819.00
	$1,039,271.32

ACCIDENTS INVOLVING FEDERALLY SUPERVISED BUS TRAFFIC

Question No. 151—Mr. Forrestall:

For each of the past five years, what has been (a) the number of accidents involving federally supervised bus traffic on Canadian highways (b) the number of such accidents that involved fatal injuries (c) the number of fatalities?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): There are no federally supervised bus services. The Motor Vehicle Transport Act (1954) assigns federal responsibility in this area to the provincial motor carrier regulatory boards.

ACCIDENTS INVOLVING SHIPS IN CANADA'S COASTAL WATERS

Question No. 152—Mr. Forrestall:

For each of the past five years, what has been (a) the number of accidents involving ships in Canada's coastal waters (b) the number of such accidents that involved fatalities (c) the number of fatalities?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

Total Marine Accidents Involving Commercial and Fishing Vessels in Canadian and Adjacent Waters as Reported to the Canadian Ministry of Transport

(a) Number of vessels involved	401	438	420	460	417
(b) Number of accidents involving fatalities	20	17	13	13	9
(c) Number of fatalities	36	50	62	34	15

Note: The foregoing total number of vessels involved in accidents include all incidents in which a vessel reported any degree of damage.

Order Paper Questions

ACCIDENTS INVOLVING FEDERALLY SUPERVISED TRUCK TRANSPORT

Question No. 153—Mr. Forrestall:

For each of the past five years, what has been the (a) number of accidents involving federally supervised truck transport (b) number of such accidents that involved fatal injuries (c) number of such fatalities?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): There is no federally supervised truck transport. The Motor Vehicle Transport Act (1954) assigns federal responsibility in this area to the provincial motor carrier regulatory boards.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—GROSS TAKE HOME PAY

By rank, for officers and men, what percentage of gross pay to Canadian Armed Forces personnel was actually taken home by CAF personnel in 1963, 1968, 1972, and 1973?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): To provide the information as requested by rank, would entail heavy expenditure in terms of man hours and dollars, and in view of the heavy commitments and workload of the department, these resources are not available. However, the following information may provide the required comparison.

	Officers percent	Men percent
1963	84	88
1968	77	83
1973	73	79

Note: The above data represents gross pay less deduction for income tax, pension, supplementary death benefits and unemployment insurance.

AMOUNT PAID INTO CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

Question No. 221—Mr. Forrestall:

With reference to Article 47 of the Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1973 (a) where is the $2,724,000 which the Auditor General feels should have been paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund by the Canadian Commercial Corporation (b) to whom is that money available now (c) is that money currently gaining interest and, if so, at what rate?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) The money was disbursed by the Canadian Commercial Corporation in repayment of authorized advances from the Defence Production Revolving Fund. (b) To the Department of Supply and Services, responsible for the administration of the Defence Production Revolving Fund in accordance with the Defence Production Act. (c) No.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

TAX REVIEW BOARD PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 263—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Tax Review Board on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. 1972-73, none; 1973-74 to date, $237.22.

2. St. Catharines Standard, St. Catharines, Ontario, $54.72. Notice of sittings for appeals. Kitchener-Waterloo Record, Kitchener, Ontario, $65. Notice of sittings for appeals. The Spectator, Hamilton, Ontario, $117.50. Notice of sittings for appeals.

3. Not applicable.

MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 329—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the Prime Minister's statement of September 4 as recorded at page 6,184 of Hansard that there will be a milk subsidy of five cents per quart, for what reason has there been a recent one cent a quart increase in the Province of British Columbia, with a further one cent increase to be put in effect January, 1974?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The agreement between Canada and British Columbia regarding the federal consumer milk subsidy provides for price changes to the consumer only when the cost, as determined by the legal formula under the British Columbia Milk Industry Act, changes by about one cent per quart. Such a cost change occurred and the consumer price thus changed by one cent. Thus throughout the life of the agreement the consumer will be paying five cents less per quart than would have been the case had the federal government not put this program in place.

INVOLUNTARY STERILIZATION OF PSYCHIATRIC PATIENTS

Question No. 355—Mr. Rowland:

1. Is the involuntary sterilization of persons undergoing psychiatric care permitted and, if so, is consideration being given to amending the Criminal Code so as to render such practices illegal?

2. Has the involuntary sterilization of persons under psychiatric care been carried out in Canada in the past five years and, if so, in what jurisdictions and in what numbers?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice and National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. This question seeks a legal opinion and, therefore, may not be answered.

2. Only the provinces can provide a reply to this question as they have sole jurisdiction over the treatment of those under psychiatric care. Sterilization performed in National Health and Welfare hospitals occurs after the written and signed consent of the patient and the spouse has been obtained. This consent is granted by the person affected and the spouse only after a full explanation has been given them.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EXPENDITURES AND NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 369—Mr. Nystrom:

1. For the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73 what amount of the total expenditures for the Department of Agriculture were spent (a) outside of Canada (b) within Canada (c) in each of the 10 provinces, the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

2. (a) What was the total number of employees in the Department of Agriculture as of March 31, 1973 (b) how many of those employees would be considered employees of the headquarters and are employed on the (i) Quebec side of the national capital (ii) Ontario side of the national capital (c) how many employees does the Department have in each of the 10 provinces, the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1.

(a)	615	487
(b)	255,498	281,887
(c) Newfoundland	865	1,169
Prince Edward Island	3,868	4,218
Nova Scotia	3,370	3,455
New Brunswick	6,411	7,088
Quebec	60,653	80,122
Ontario	89,970	102,530
Manitoba	17,130	18,945
Saskatchewan	14,716	17,014
Alberta	22,772	27,234

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGRICULTURE MANPOWER AGREEMENT

Question No. 412—Mr. Laprise:

Is there any agreement between the government and the government of the province of Quebec concerning farm manpower and, if so, on what date was this agreement signed and for what period of time?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, there is such an agreement concerning farm manpower. The federal-provincial Agricultural Manpower Agreement for fiscal year 1973-74 was entered into by signature of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture and Colonization on June 29, 1973, for the period covering April 1, 1973 to March 31, 1974.

IMPORT OF TURKEYS

Question No. 433—Mr. Howie:

What was the volume of turkeys imported into Canada from the USA during the period January 1 to March 1 in each year 1972, 1973 and 1974?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Statistics on imports of turkeys are not tabulated separately in the Canadian trade totals but are included in a "basket" category entitled "Live poultry not elsewhere specified". This class includes ducks, geese, guinea and other fowls but excludes baby chicks, turkey poults and game birds (partridges, pigeons, wild ducks). Shown on the table below are figures for the above class as well as for the turkey poults which were imported from the United States in January and February of 1972 and 1973 and January 1974. The statistics for February 1974 are not yet available.

"Turkey poults"	Number Imported from U.S.A.
January and February 1972	27,390
January and February 1973	89,650
January 1974	150,268
"Live poultry n.e.s."
January and February 1972	133,690
January and February 1973	198,284
January 1974	140,810

AVAILABILITY OF REFRIGERATOR CARS

Question No. 436—Mr. Howie:

1. How many refrigerator cars were available for rail transportation of agricultural products on January 1 in each year 1972, 1973 and 1974?

2. How many refrigerator cars were purchased by CNR or CPR from January to December 31, 1973?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. CNR and CP Rail combined inventory of mechanical refrigerator freight cars is 1529; 1513 and 1506 as of January 1 of years 1972, 1973 and 1974 respectively. However, this does not include the rail fleet used exclusively to move agricultural products requiring heat protection in the winter and/or ventilation in the summer.

2. Nil.

*BEEF IMPORTS

Question No. 441—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many pounds of beef have been imported from (a) the United States (b) Australia (c) elsewhere month by month since July 1, 1973?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lengthy reply I have to give, I would like to ask that it be considered as read into our official report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing reply reads as follows:]

Statistics Canada reported as follows:

Statistics on imports of beef by month since July 1, 1973 from the United States, Australia and elsewhere are shown in the table below. The figures include fresh and frozen beef and veal, cured beef, canned corned beef and other canned beef and veal. Imports of sausage are not included since a distinction is not made in the data between the pork and beef variety.

Imports of Beef

*Most recent data available.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Provided the answer is to appear in Hansard. If it is to be shunted off Hansard, I object.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question asked by the right hon. member was whether the answer would appear in Hansard. The answer to that inquiry is yes.

DISTRIBUTION OF ADDRESS MADE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AT STE. ANNE, MANITOBA

Question No. 467—Mr. Cossitt:

Was a political address made by the Minister of Agriculture to the meeting of the Provencher Liberal Association, Ste. Anne, Manitoba on Monday, March 11, 1974 reprinted at public expense and, if so (a) how many copies were printed (b) how many copies were distributed (c) what specific individual authorized this expenditure of public funds?

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PENSIONS IN EXCESS OF 48 PER CENT

Question No. 521—Mr. Dick:

1. What percentage of the veterans receiving a disability pension have been getting more than 48 per cent?

2. How many of that percentage have been called in by the Canadian Pension Commission and had their pension reviewed and increased?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 19.69 per cent.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF NOTE TO UNITED STATES CONTAINING PROPOSALS RESPECTING OPERATION OF ALASKA-CHERRY POINT OIL TANKERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister prepared to table in the House the Canadian note delivered to the United States State Department suggesting a program of alternative options and proposals aimed at keeping oil tankers away from the coast of British Columbia and particularly out of the Strait of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to table this note. However, out of courtesy to the United States government I think they should have an opportunity to study its contents before I do so. It will be my purpose to table the note in a few days time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In light of the fact that in reply to my question about tanker routes on February 23, 1973, the minister stated: "Whether the tankers should go to another point farther down the United States coast is a matter for the United States itself to decide", and noting that the Canadian government has now offered alternative routes to the United States for tankers unloading Alaskan oil for the refineries at Cherry Point, may I ask whether this recent action of the government in presenting a note to the U.S. State Department on this matter represents a change in government policy?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. It will still be for the United States to decide. I have never said at any time that I would hesitate to make recommendations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister confirm that one alternative for U.S. tankers off-loading oil for the Cherry Point refineries is the option of setting up a terminal site offshore with an undersea pipeline to the refineries?

Mr. Sharp: This has always been one possibility. When I table the note in a few days time, the hon. member and the House will be able to see the alternatives we have put forward.

INCOME TAX

REPORT OF CORPORATE TAX MEASURES REVIEW COMMITTEE—NAMES OF CORPORATIONS TO WHICH QUESTIONNAIRE SENT AND THOSE THAT REPLIED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the report he tabled on Friday, the so-called review of the corporate tax measures. Would the minister agree to table the names of the 1,088 corporations to which the questionnaire was sent and the names of those corporations that replied? I am not asking that any of the replies be tabled, because I understand they were given in confidence. I am asking merely that Members of Parliament be given the names of the corporations that replied and the names of those to which the questionnaire was sent. Perhaps the names could be grouped in accordance with the categories set up by Statistics Canada in its census of manufacturers.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I see no reason why that cannot be done.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO END PROFITEERING BY CORPORATIONS—REVIEW OF TAX INCENTIVES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): In view of the fact that 47.2 per cent of the replies stated that the tax measures would have little or no effect on the prices of their products, and in view of a very recent report from Statistics Canada—I believe it was issued only last Saturday—that profits after taxes in 1973 increased by an astounding 42 per cent over 1972, I ask the minister whether he will present to parliament specific measures to end this profiteering at the expense of the consumer, despite the $1.5 billion in tax concessions he made available to the manufacturers in 1973 and 1974?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): By way of preamble, Mr. Speaker, may I say the hon. gentleman's figures are not right. It is true a proportion of the replies from corporations said that in the short term the measures would not have an immediate effect on their pricing policies. That would depend, of course, on capital investment increasing the production base, thereby the supply, thereby lowering the unit cost, thereby moderately affecting the pricing base. As for the hon. gentleman's reference to profits, I believe an objective study of the figures which are being shown to the country every day would indicate that, while profits have increased, more funds than are represented by those profits are being reinvested by business in capital expansion. These are the figures, and those are the intentions. Dividends paid after tax have dropped sharply over the average for the past decade. In other words, profits are being used to increase the capital industrial base of this country, thereby increasing employment prospects and moderating the price structure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Every time the Minister of Finance is asked this kind of question he makes the reply of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, which does not surprise me. I wish to ask a supplementary question—a final supplementary, I suppose, for me. In view of the fact that some members of the opposition are hesitant about using the review procedure provided in the law, in order to win support for the legislation of the same members, would the minister himself initiate a review by the House of the tax measures before we continue to make hundreds of millions available to the corporations at the expense of the ordinary Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am far more interested in the jobs these measures are producing. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I am less interested in the business community than I am in the new jobs they are producing in this country. I want to say to him also that it would not have mattered what had appeared in that report: he and his party had already taken a position before they ever saw the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The hon. member for York South rises on a point of order. The hon. member for Peace River rises on a point of order. I suggest this is becoming a debate between the minister and the hon. member for York South. We should try to return to the question period. The hon. member for York South rises on a point of order.

● (1440)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I was merely going to say that if the minister was going to make a speech, I would demand equal time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River has a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that this pillow talk should take place outside the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might return to this debate later.

If the Minister of Finance does not have any objection, we will now return to questions and answers and, for this purpose, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Can the minister tell us whether his department or himself have arrived at an agreement with Quebec concerning the request made by this province in respect of cable television? If so, what does it consist of?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement on this matter; moreover, I made a statement in this House on motions, about a year ago, concerning the federal government's views on the Quebec Act 35 and the orders that resulted from it.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Since there seems to be lack of agreement between Quebec and Ottawa on this matter, is the minister prepared to make it a test case before the courts?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, we have chosen another avenue of agreement with the provinces. We have chosen to meet them one at a time. I am going to start tomorrow and then we will bring them together to see if it is possible to come to an agreement that both complies with federal government jurisdiction and meets provincial needs. I shall report to this House after the consultations have been concluded.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NOTE TO UNITED STATES CONTAINING PROPOSALS RESPECTING OPERATION OF ALASKA-CHERRY POINT OIL TANKERS—ALTERNATIVE ROUTES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is supplementary to the questions of my colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich. As the reports of the secret note indicate that the government is suggesting or recommending alternative routes to Cherry Point, and since you can only get to Cherry Point from the open sea by going either north or south of Vancouver Island, the southern route being very dangerous and the northern route impossible, what alternative routes is the government considering?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to correct what the hon. member has said. It is not a secret note; otherwise I would not be giving an undertaking to table it. The hon. member will see from the note when it is tabled that we have suggested changes such as those suggested by his hon. friend in his own party. Perhaps he might consult him too.

Mr. McKinnon: Has the government recommended that a site other than Cherry Point should be considered, such as Neah Bay or Grays Harbour?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of alternatives that might be considered.

INCOME TAX

REPORT OF CORPORATE TAX MEASURES REVIEW COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked the Minister of Finance by the hon. member for York South. Would the Minister of Finance direct that the report on the success of the corporate tax measures be studied by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that the evidence he intends to file in terms of the companies that reported can be studied by the committee in order to find out whether the report has in fact made a proper assessment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the standing committee is always free, of course, to call the public servants who put together that report. I will be appearing on my estimates before the standing committee in short order. The hon. gentleman, who is a member of that committee, will be free to put whatever questions he would like to ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for a further supplementary, but hon. members will appreciate that with all these supplementaries we are still on the first or second question. Perhaps we should try to move on a little more quickly. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Mississauga.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the minister is undoubtedly familiar with the fact that the standing committees of the House cannot just enter into anything they want without a direction from the minister concerned. Would the minister allow the committee the opportunity independently to study the report so it can find out whether the statements made therein are correct and the tax changes are in fact benefiting the economy and are not just political buffoonery between him and the leader of the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NOTE TO UNITED STATES CONTAINING PROPOSALS RESPECTING OPERATION OF ALASKA-CHERRY POINT OIL TANKERS—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his statement a moment ago that in the note which was sent to the State Department of the United States there is a proposal for an offshore terminal at Cherry Point with an underwater pipeline to the refineries, may I ask the minister whether consultations were held with the government of British Columbia before these various options were submitted to the government of the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did have consultations with the government of British Columbia, which did not wish to associate itself with our note.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On March 27 the minister told the Leader of the Official Opposition that as soon as the energy question had been settled he would be presenting a budget to the House. Can the minister tell the House today, in light of the problems the country is facing and the need for a review of economic conditions, when we may expect the budget to come forward?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said at that time that a budget was not feasible until we analyzed the division of benefits and burdens across the country in fiscal and monetary terms. I also said to the House earlier, in response to an interjection by the hon. member for Crowfoot, that the budget would not be brought in before Easter. I will make an announcement some time after the House reassembles.

Mr. Gillies: May we reasonably expect that the budget will be brought down before the end of April?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman may have his own expectations but I will be making an announcement in due course.

GRAIN

WHEAT AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO INTERIM PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. All over the prairies today farmers are finding themselves in a position where they do not have sufficient money, except by borrowing at 10 to 12 per cent, to provide for needs in advance of seeding, by the purchase of fertilizer and registered seed. They are asking when they may expect an interim payment on their wheat and barley delivered to the board.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we announced several weeks ago that an adjustment payment would be made subsequent to the raising of initial prices as of March 1. The Canadian Wheat Board informed me on Friday that they expect the cheques for the adjustment payments to go into the mail beginning April 8 and ending April 26. Over that 18-day period the total amount going into the mail by way of adjustment payments is likely to be between $500 million and $550 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the minister's answer. Does the fixing of the date as up to April 26 indicate that the payments are to be made just in advance of an election?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. Following the announcement and the decision by the government on the initial payment increase, the timing of the adjustment payments is the total time required by the Canadian Wheat Board to accomplish the actual writing, preparation and mailing of the cheques. Even the mailing of these several hundred thousand cheques, with the most effective and efficient methods, takes several weeks. I am also frequently reminded that the right hon. gentleman and others find an occasion almost every two weeks to judge that there is going to be an election.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Red Deer on a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Northwest Territories and the hon. member for Vaudreuil.

REQUEST FOR SEVERE RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF MEAT TREATED WITH DES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is not a supplementary but is a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the province of Alberta has warned wholesalers that DES-tainted meat will be confiscated within its borders, would the minister consider the immediate implementation of severe restrictions on the importation of such meat?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I have, in answers in the House and outside the House, stated that it is illegal to sell meat that has been implanted with DES or where the animal has had an additive added to its feed in a form of DES. To sell that meat in Canada is illegal.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister be prepared to bring in legislation requiring importers of United States meat to post a $50,000 bond to be forfeited on conviction for the importation of DES-infected meat?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly want to talk that over with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO PERMIT SEISMIC EXPLORATION ON BATHURST ISLAND

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the proposed seismic operation on Bathurst Island by Panarctic Oils Limited. In view of the fact the people of Resolute Bay are clearly opposed to this project because of the effects they have observed of oil exploration on the migration of animals on which they depend for their livelihood, will the minister take into account the wishes of the people and reconsider his decision to allow the seismic work to go ahead?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, when the representatives of the Canadian Eskimo Association met me in this regard, they presented me with three requests. I was able to take two favourable decisions. Unfortunately, in the case of Resolute Bay, the opinion of experts did not support that of the Eskimos and, as the work is very limited, we felt that it was not dangerous to grant the permit to Panarctic Oils Limited authorizing them to proceed with a seismographic project of far lesser importance than those performed last year.

[English]

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Can the minister advise whether his decision to allow the winter seismic program by Panarctic Oils on Bathurst Island was made after approval by the Department of the Environment and subject to the environmental impact procedure announced by the Minister of the Environment recently?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is in fact considerable co-operation between my department and that of the Environment. We consult each other every time we are up against a problem, but decisions were taken, as they should, by my department and the Department of the Environment expressed no opposition.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister advise whether the decision to allow exploration was made after consultation with and approval of the Minister of the Environment?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I make the decisions. Naturally, when problems come up, we have consultations with the Department of Environment and in this case that department had no major objection to the work under progress.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE BY SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, in view of today's reports that technical interpretation was stalling settlement of the SIU strike, is the Minister of Labour continuing his efforts to settle the dispute?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: Give him a promotion.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance indicates that this is sour grapes. It is certainly not sour grapes. It is just a matter of seeing that parliament works as it should work. Rather than answer a planted question, the minister should have stood up and indicated that he wished to make a statement. He has the chance now to revert to motions and tell us what has happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vaudreuil on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons we ask questions in the House. One is for the purpose of receiving information. This question is asked for the purpose of receiving information. I therefore suggest I am perfectly within my rights in asking the question, and I request that the minister answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question. He was recognized for that purpose, and certainly the minister has a right to reply to the question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if I interpret the point of the hon. member for Hamilton West correctly, I am more than happy to ask for the permission of the House to revert to motions. It will be a very short statement indeed, if I have that permission.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE BY SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the parties met in intensive sessions since last Thursday night until this morning about ten o'clock almost non-stop. If I may report to the House, Mr. Speaker, I think there were intensive efforts by both parties. Mr. Roman Gralewicz of the SIU excelled himself, I believe, as leader of the union in the negotiations, and management did also. They certainly convinced each other, convinced me and I believe convinced the people of Canada of their desire for settlement and indeed they achieved one. To the degree that either myself or my officials were helpful in promoting this settlement, that is to be expected. I think the settlement was a good one for all concerned. It was 10 per cent in the first year of a two-year agreement and 12 per cent in the second year.

Before some hon. members start raising what may be an apparent argument to them, that this settlement is inflationary, I would point out that they should take into consideration that it is built on a conversion formula and built into a 40-hour week. I think everyone will agree that the hours of overtime were excessive. Also, the past agreement which expired on December 31, 1972 was a three-year agreement. There was a lot of catching up to be done. When one looks at the rates one will agree that these employees were certainly paid at a very low rate. That being the case, on a comparative basis I do not think the settlement can be regarded as an excessive one. Certainly I believe it was fair and equitable in every way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House thank the minister for his statement which he was forced to make. We welcome the statement because a prolonged strike unquestionably would have been detrimental to the public interest, the interest that we as parliamentarians I think should have uppermost in our minds.

The whole question of the collective bargaining process certainly has been brought into question, and I think rightly so. It appears to me that the third party so vitally concerned about what happens in the collective bargaining process is not represented at the bargaining table. This is the reason we must be concerned about arriving at a happy balance between protection of the collective bargaining system, with the time-honoured right to strike and to lock out, and the public interest. There is a need to see that services are provided and goods are moved.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, speaking personally and on behalf of my party may I say that we place a great deal of emphasis on and have an interest in and sympathy for the public interest and the need to have goods moved and services provided without interruption. This is why we believe we should continually be thinking about new methods whereby the collective bargaining process can work—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I notice the Prime Minister is pointing. I do not know who brought him into the act.

Mr. Trudeau: I was asking if you support the agreement.

● (1500)

Mr. Alexander: We must continually look for new methods so that the collective bargaining process can work to the satisfaction of the Canadian people. This is why we have taken the position that a public interest disputes commission should be established which would not only assist the Department of Labour in bringing about new techniques in order to help the parties in dispute but would determine what are the essential aspects of services and how we can determine what are the best steps in order to bring about reasonable industrial peace. In closing, I would just say this—

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, take more time.

Mr. Alexander: I will take all the time I want until Mr. Speaker tells me to sit down. I appreciate the Prime Minister's intervention. It makes me look like a hot shot when he has to get involved with the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: In closing I would just remind the minister—I have every sympathy for him in his job—that he does not have to be too queasy or hesitant about personal intervention, which is what we asked him to do a week ago.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be very short. I have an ingrown suspicion of hon. members who say they want a new way of settling disputes but are all in favour of collective bargaining.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seeks the floor on a point of order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for York South. The hon. member should indicate why he is seeking the floor now.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a question of privilege. I resent the leader of the NDP taking what I said out of context. I said we must devise new methods whereby we can make the collective bargaining process work better for the Canadian people. That is what I said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: My suspicions were not at all allayed by the charming interjection of the hon. member for Hamilton West. I happen to know that such ways have been sought for at least half a century, if not longer, and that all these people who are searching for new ways end up in one place, namely, compulsory arbitration. That is why I have some justified suspicions.

I merely want to say on behalf of my colleagues and myself, without any reservation, that we congratulate the officers of the minister's department who have worked so hard to reach a settlement and the minister himself for the part he has played. The fact that a settlement has been reached which will avoid hardship for parts of our economy and for people in the west merely underlines the value of collective bargaining when all those involved do it with good faith and with hard work.

I am not the slightest bit outraged by the fact that there will be a reduction in the hours of work. At a time of considerable unemployment in the country, to reduce the weekly hours to 40 is desirable not only for humane reasons as the work affects those now engaged in it but also for the purpose of opening jobs for those who are unemployed. I am sure every member of the House is glad that a settlement was reached without the strike continuing but for a few days.

Mr. Speaker: We will now return to oral questions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF SENIOR CITIZENS IDENTIFICATION CARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise us whether he is giving sympathetic consideration to the very reasonable request of the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation that a senior citizens identification card be issued, and will he give some thought to my humble suggestion that such a card could efficiently be issued with the first cheque sent to every recipient of the old age security pension?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have had a very fruitful meeting with representatives of the pensioners federation. I have had the opportunity of advising them that I asked my department several months ago to study the items they have put forward, and this is under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board but as he has left the House I should like to postpone it.

ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF LIST OF CANDIDATES AND ENUMERATORS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Has he instructed the Chief Electoral Officer to ask the returning officers of the constituencies to submit lists of potential candidates and particularly to submit lists of enumerators for those who have urban districts in their ridings?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State—I am acting for him—I take notice of the question of the hon. member and convey it to the Secretary of State.

ALLEGED INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE INTO ACTIVITIES OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS—PROTECTION OF CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact six individuals involved in the media in the province of Alberta have supposedly been under investigation by the RCMP, can the minister now inform the House if in fact this is taking place and how this information gained the attention of a newspaper in Alberta? What action does the minister intend to take to protect the rights of these individuals?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned the other day, we do not confirm nor deny when investigations are undertaken by the police. However, I am continuing to investigate the story which appeared in the Calgary paper and I will report to the House as soon as I have that information.

ALLEGED INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS ATTEMPTING TO FORM UNION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): My supplementary is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the individuals involved in this investigation by the RCMP were attempting to organize a trade union within the newspaper industry in Alberta, can the Minister of Labour inform the House whether it is the policy of the government to investigate those individuals who seek the right to form a trade union?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

INCREASE IN DRUG PRESCRIPTION PRICES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the fact that the average price of medical prescription drugs increased by 140 per cent from 1949 to 1965, going from $1.38 in 1949 to $3.32 in 1965, can the minister say if he intends to take some measures enabling low income people and the whole population to buy prescription drugs at accessible prices?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that a whole series of measures have already been taken in this regard. I would refer him to means made available under either the public assistance programs or the provincial health insurance programs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED RESTORATION OF RANKS AND TITLES IN AIR FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Having spent some time last weekend at the largest air force base in Canada, and having learned first-hand of the great dissatisfaction felt by the men and women in that service that their service should be the only one which remains deprived of its proper ranks and titles, is it the intention of the government in the very near future to restore their ranks and titles to the members of the Canadian air force and thus end this discrimination against a great service?

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice for the minister.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER CHANGE FROM USE OF JP-4 FUEL TO JP-1 FUEL

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last June an Air Canada jet exploded at the Toronto international airport. The investigation which was ordered and which was completed nine months later could not determine the cause of this blast other than the fact that JP-4 fuel was in the tanks. Is the minister now in a position to state that the sole cause of the explosion was the use of JP-4 fuel, and is the government considering further studies of that fuel?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret that this is all wrong. The report we have does not indicate that the nature of the fuel was the cause of the explosion. I read the report just a few hours ago and the only reference is to the vent system around the tanks. It has nothing to do with the quality of the fuel.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): In light of the latest report by Flight International which states that JP-4 fuel presently used by Air Canada is a definite hazard, and in view of the fact that JP-1 is acknowledged worldwide as a safe fuel and is used by the Minister of Transport in its planes, will the minister now order that Air Canada use the safer fuel, JP-1?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not accept the premise of the hon. gentleman's question.

INVESTIGATION OF REPORTS CONCERNING ACTIVITIES OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS—METHOD USED—INSTRUCTIONS OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. When he replied to the hon. member for Assiniboia, he indicated that his department is considering an investigation to determine how certain reports appeared in an Alberta newspaper. Would the minister advise what methods he is using to carry out that investigation, and particularly whether the RCMP are involved in the investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I brought this matter to the attention of the Commissioner of the RCMP, and requested him to find out if there were any members of the force leaking either false or correct reports to the press. I intend to find that out in a few days.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Are we to understand that the Solicitor General has issued no instructions to the RCMP to undertake investigations of journalists in Alberta in connection with this incident?

Mr. Allmand: That is right, Mr. Speaker. There is no investigation of journalists in Alberta, but we want to find out if there was an infraction of the Official Secrets Act.

STABILIZATION PROGRAM—DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON AID TO HOG PRODUCERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the emergency action he has taken with regard to beef and the new dairy policy he announced last week, can he tell the House when the legislation for an over-all farm stabilization program, which was forecast in the Speech from the Throne and which he has talked about on the hustings, will be brought before the House? I ask this in particular because of the present depressed hog prices, with the chairman of the Canadian Pork Council stating that producers are in real trouble.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that we are hoping to bring it before the House in the very near future.

Mr. Gleave: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether he has had consultations with his provincial counterparts in Saskatchewan, British Columbia and, indeed, in Quebec on how to give the hog industry some aid before the producers all go broke?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can say this: I am consulting with them as much as or probably more than he consulted with me before they put their programs into effect.

BEEF CATTLE SUBSIDY—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF PROGRAM

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that grade A Hereford steers sold on Friday for as low as 38 cents a pound, and that there are many signs of discrepancies which indicate that the beef subsidy is not getting back to the producers, would the minister withdraw this program and let cattle trade in a free, open market until he comes up with a better system?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the market shows returning strength. It is returning to normality today, at least in Calgary and Winnipeg. I have not had the latest reports from Toronto today. I can say that there are many producers in real trouble and it would be no aid to them for me to withdraw this program at this time. As I said before, if everybody involved in this program wants to make it work and does not make unnecessary rip-offs, then it can work and be beneficial in assisting the industry to stay healthy, happy, and economically wise.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PENSIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO CONDUCT INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In light of the fact that on March 11 he stated in the House that he would be making significant moves in the direction of appointing a commissioner to go into all aspects of railway pensions, may I ask the minister what is the current status of his position on this matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The matter is under active consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKenzie: Having regard to the grave and serious concern expressed by all parties in the House, will the minister immediately introduce a government bill to amend the Pension Benefits Standards Act to remove the CNR from the scope of that act in order that, without adding substantially to its annual deficit, it may improve its pension plan, noting that private member's Bill C-139, introduced by the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to the hon. member's question, without the hon. member's additional notice.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a private member's bill introduced by a member of this party, the hon. member for St. Boniface, who has been championing the cause of the railway workers for many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The concept that is embraced in that private member's bill is under very active consideration with respect to measures the government can take to rectify the situation dealing with the pensions of railway workers. I have this matter under discussion with my colleague, the Minister of Transport. We hope to come up with a solution very shortly.

Mr. McKenzie: Would the minister not agree that a government bill would carry far more weight than a private member's bill, and would be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is of course, argument. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport rises on a question of privilege. I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre in a moment.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I would like to ask through you, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would agree that we do the same with this bill?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

INCOME TAX

PURCHASE OF T4 SLIPS AT DISCOUNTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO CONTROL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise the House whether legislation is proposed to curb the so-called income tax service firms that are buying T4 slips at fabulous discounts? These loan sharks are operating and preying on people who can ill afford—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to the question without the argument which the hon. member wished to add to it.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am consulting with my colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Justice, about this question. I appreciate the hon. member bringing this point once again to our attention.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING HIRING OF TEMPORARY STAFF

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Has his department made a decision to cease using private placement agencies for acquiring casual help in the Public Service here in Ottawa and, if no decision has been made, when can we expect a decision?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the use of private placement agencies is something done not by the Treasury Board but by departments to fulfil urgent, unforeseen needs. As long as there are no abuses from the taxpayers' and the government's point of view, the practice probably will continue.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if his department is considering taking over this operation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I replied to the same question a few days ago by saying that while we are looking at it we are not now authorized to operate an overload system. We will explore and are in fact exploring this question with other departments of government.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Inasmuch as the person who has been using the identity and social insurance number of one of my constituents is now in custody in Stratford, Ontario, and inasmuch as the Minister of National Revenue has stated in the House that it is not his responsibility to investigate fraudulent use of social insurance numbers, will the Solicitor General have his officials now investigate the various charges standing in my constituent's name, including outstanding income taxes?

DAIRY POLICY, 1974-75—ASSURANCE THAT PRODUCERS WILL CONTINUE TO OPERATE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since dairy producers have shown, with supporting evidence, that it costs $10.15 to produce 100 pounds of milk and since they have requested government assistance so that they may enjoy an increased income, can the minister tell the House whether he considers seriously that the new policy, which is effective today and guarantees only $8.50, is an adequate response to the dairy producers requests and that it will be such as to invite them to remain in business and invite young people to carry on with farming?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is most interesting, but he is inviting the minister to express a view or make a very general statement which, normally, should be done on motions.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT CONCERNING FIRE PROTECTION IN ROOMING HOUSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice may I put my question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that some 13 people have died in rooming house fires in Toronto in the last three months and serious concern has been expressed by municipal administrations over inadequate fire protection in private rooming houses in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto and other Canadian cities, and in view of the fact there was a unanimous request last week by the city of Toronto executive committee that the federal government amend the Criminal Code to make it an offence to maintain a multiple occupancy dwelling without proper fire protection and exits, would the minister indicate whether in any criminal legislation that is to come forward this session there is an amendment planned along these lines?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring that question to the minister's attention.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, then the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, and then call orders of the day.

PROTECTION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS OF CERTAIN DEFENCE RESEARCH EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. BRUCELLOSIS—FORCED SALE OF INFECTED ANIMALS TO GOVERNMENT INSPECTED SLAUGHTER HOUSES—ALLEGED INADEQUATE COMPENSATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture regarding brucellosis and the compensation paid in respect thereof. I understand that in the first place the government is willing to increase the compensation, but I direct my question to the second part having to do with the fact that the producers are being forced to sell to federal government inspected slaughter houses and that they have been taken advantage of in not getting a fair return for the slaughter of their infected cattle. Has the minister caused an investigation to be made in this field and, if so, when does he expect to receive a report and will he table it when he gets it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have informed some hon. members, including members of the committee, that we have asked for a complete report on this matter. The report will be made public as soon as it is submitted to me.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, ADMINISTRATION AND OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Friday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-7, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Competition Bill

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue the debate on the competition bill, C-7. Because of the numerous government interventions in the activities of the rural and agricultural society we are justified in examining the nature, the form and the result of such interventions. The mechanics of receiving and shipping grain from our country elevators to the terminal elevators have remained practically unchanged in western Canada. It is interesting to note that the most successful operation takes place when the deal between the buyer and the seller is by agreement. On the other side, the marketing of our grain products is now completely under the control of the federal government through its agent, the Canadian Wheat Board.

Over the years the grain industry in western Canada has complied with all the laws requiring standards of behaviour in almost everything it did. Market forces have required the industry to meet another set of standards, and to look to the efficiency of management and its ability to develop customers. These requirements were all well understood. However, within the last year there has been a new set of requirements imposed by various agencies and tribunals set up by the government, and we now learn there is a so-called "confidential" or "secret" set of proposals that will probably be taking effect on August 1 of this year. It appears to me that a number of proposals contained therein could be judged as restraint of trade and will cause our courts to be filled with grain officials.

It is interesting that after the close of the commodity market in Winnipeg every day a small group gets together to establish the prices at which flax, rapeseed and rye are bought from producers across the growing areas of western Canada. This fixing has been condoned by the government over the years. Surely here is a case of restraint of trade, but I must admit that it has been going on for years quite satisfactorily.

I know of no industry in Canada that is more controlled and regulated by the government than is the grain industry. It is worthwhile noting that no less than 15 royal commissions have investigated the exchanges, and marketing in general, but not even one has recommended any serious amendments to the system. However, in the present crop year the government effectively closed the market for feed grain in Winnipeg. The result has been complete chaos, bringing more foreign grain into Canada for feed, more United States cattle into Canada for slaughter, and emptying the feedlots across western Canada. The point I want to make is just how political grain marketing in Canada has become, and how politics play a part in that marketing.

In September 1943, the federal government took to itself, through its agent, the Canadian Wheat Board, the sole right to market and set the price for all prairie wheat. The problem we are now facing relates to the fact that the board has not remained flexible enough in its programs. Our grain industry people now must deal in a highly individualistic society. It is clear that interaction between the supplying companies and the market place has become a two-way street and the companies, through skilful product development, research, and marketing effort, must be able to steer a course that will be beneficial in the future.

It seems to me that as we move into a more intricate society, we shall have to depend more on the free marketing system to give producers clear signals about changing values and expectations of consumers.

● (1530)

Those who have been around for some time and worked for government, or, I should say, struggled with government, know that government cannot exactly tell the truth. The government says what it finds convenient to say. This very simple fact is not going to go away, because the government has to deal with problems like unemployment, inflation, strikes, and taxes. This means, simply, Mr. Speaker, that our business community must be given flexibility of operation and not disjoined change that will disturb and confuse.

I should like to return to the report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture of June, 1960. It reads in part:

1. The feeds industry is an integral and essential part of the livestock industry, and feed mills perform necessary social and economic services, expansion of which—is desirable in the interests of economical and efficient production of livestock and poultry and the products thereof.

2. The feeds industry has grown, and aided the general prosperity of local regions under a system of flexibility and the Committee finds that too much inflexibility in the allocation of quotas to feed mills is not in the best interest of either the producer or consumer of grains for feed. We, therefore, recommend that the former practice be continued.

Following the tabling of the report in the House of Commons, the Canadian Wheat Board took it upon itself to consider the message in this report as a dictum that instructed them how to deal with the marketing of feed grains in the local markets of the western provinces. In other words, it was parliament, the Parliament of Canada, that set up the system of non-quota, non-board marketings in western Canada. That way of doing things lasted from the beginning of 1961 until the end of July, 1973, when the present minister in charge of the Wheat Board brought in his decrees; as a result, confusion has reigned supreme. For example, we have at least seven different prices for feed barley in western Canada.

The argument that the Canadian Wheat Board is a government board stems from the fact that it is the government which appoints the commissioners to the board; the producers virtually have no say in these appointments. I suggest that no grain producers in western Canada would choose civil servants to be commissioners on their board. The government's habit of instructing the board to do this and to do that, to set initial prices and even the final payments, is just a facade, I suggest. It makes it appear that the government is controlling the board, but again I would say that in most routine matters the instructions given to the board by the government really originate with the board in the first place.

The increased interference by Ottawa in board affairs since about 1968 lends a bit more credence to the notion that the Wheat Board is now a government board. A quick review of the origin of the Wheat Board explains the situation a little bit more. Some here, at least, will remember that during the dark days of the depression the three pool organizations in western Canada, along with many other corporations and co-ops in North America and the rest of the world, found themselves in deep financial trouble. The pools, for they were then called pools, in each province pooled the purchases and sales of farmers' grain, on a voluntary basis, of course. The three pools formed a central selling agency to merchandise all pool grain that farmers delivered to them.

History tells us that in the beginning the pools set initial payments and hedged their purchases on the exchange; however, as the philosophical poolers grabbed power within the organization, they determined to overthrow the Exchange and refused to hedge their purchases. As the depression deepened, the pools found themselves in a most awkward position, having set the initial payments higher than world selling prices, or higher, at least, than the price that their grain could command when sold by the central selling agency. This couldn't last very long, and soon the pools had to appeal to the provincial governments for help in guaranteeing the loans of the pools and in assuring the chartered banks that their advances would be covered.

In return, the federal government said they would appoint all the officials on this Canadian Wheat Board which was to take over from the pool's central selling agency. I think it is important to note that the impetus for the establishment of the Canadian Wheat Board originated right inside the pool organizations, and those producers who preferred to deal with the line elevator companies really played no part in the establishment of the central selling agency or its successor.

Whether the government took over from the producers their marketing board in 1935, 1943 or 1968 does not really matter at this stage. It is still difficult to reconcile the fact that the government does not pay the expenses of operating this board. It leaves this completely to the producers. What happened as a wartime measure in 1943 in essence transferred producers from the tyranny of the market place to the tyranny of the Wheat Board.

The government in Ottawa brought in a partial answer to this when it passed the Grain Futures Act early in 1939. The act was proclaimed and came into force on August 1, 1939. The top position of director was provided for under the act. However, the war came along and the act was left inoperative. It would have been interesting to see how the director who, under this act, was to be appointed to supervise and police the activities of the exchange, would have carried out his job. It would have been very difficult for the supervisor to carry out his duties under the act, as the most consistant violator of the terms of the Grain Futures Act was the Canadian Wheat Board, the government agency itself. A reading of Bill C-7, makes it apparent that the government is still exempt from the provisions of this bill. This, of course, brings up a question that was pondered 2,000 years ago, namely, who will guard the guards? The Latin Phrase is, quis custodiet ipsos custodes, which, translated, means, who will keep the keepers. We sometimes wonder if the government and its agencies are beyond justice, beyond the law.

Insisting that everyone should be subject to a mandatory marketing board just for the sake of making sure that one farmer does not obtain more for his product than another is, to my mind, quite unrealistic. Certainly, there is a place for the great farmer-owned companies within our marketing system. One of their legitimate functions is that of to keeping the market honest.

In the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, the implications for the present system of moving goods to market are so far reaching as to be beyond my comprehension. There is an apparent determination to substitute the judgments of government appointed administrators for the judgment of the market, that is, the forces of the market, in what is acceptable and what is not. It seems to me that the key word to all this is flexibility. Inflexibility is manifest in marketing quotas, formula pricing, adherence to rigid agreements and arrangements. It interferes with orderly marketing. Surely, flexibility leads to beneficial growth.

Unless the philosophy of this government is turned aside, we will end up with an economy in which virtually every business decision will be subject to approval of the government's appointees. There has been a lot of criticism of our grain industry and our transportation industry of late, and probably it can be partly justified in light of today's situation. However, I would ask you to look back on the infamous "task" force on Agriculture of several years ago, which really forecast no future for agriculture. I think it is reasonable to say that industry, the railways in particular, took their cue from this report, made their decisions, and are now being blamed for a shortage of equipment and a lack of foresight, all because of the government's tunnel vision.

The real problem is the same old story. The senior government officials, disdainful of trade, have steered our industry down the wrong track. In this whole question before us today of what is right and what is fair, it seems that we must have some reference to the courts with the accompanying right to appeal. At least this will develop some precedents which are fairly consistent and lay down the guidelines required to keep our business practices under reasonable restraint.

There has to be co-operative consultation between business and all levels of government before and not after policy is determined. Forward planning will become sterile if there are conflicts in and between governments. I fear there is plenty of room for conflicts in the bill before us. We need a competition policy which will permit growth and a restructuring of business according to the market forces, by encouraging flexibility and adaptability in the economy. We will not get it with legislation such as is proposed here. The committee studying this bill will have their work cut out.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I could hardly have asked for a more fitting introduction to the comments I have to make than those provided by my colleague, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton). He talked about the problems the committee will have when it is faced with this particular bill. My misgivings about this bill are many, but I propose to concentrate my attention on one particular aspect of the measure, an aspect which is absolutely fundamental to the process of governing, to the philosophy of government. I am moved to contribute to this debate because of my experience as a public servant and because of my understanding of what public servants should and should not be asked to do.

This bill is directed toward extending the powers of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, created under the Combines Investigation Act. The powers now to be granted to the commission by the terms of the bill before us are to be executive powers. They differ considerably from the powers of the commission as created under the earlier bill. The commission, after investigation, can rule on the practice it has investigated and, depending on the outcome of that investigation, shall rule whether or not that practice is legal and may be allowed to continue or, alternatively, is illegal and shall therefore cease. This is what I mean by the grant of executive powers. The commission is no longer an advisory body. It is first a judicial body and then an executive and operational body in an area of activity where economic and political factors have a strong inter-play. In other words, the government is asking this parliament to delegate powers to a quasi-independent body to take action in an area that is properly the government's sphere of action, the political arena, the determination of the public interest defined in economic and competitive terms.

We have seen this before. We have seen what happens when these quasi-independent bodies get to work with their delegated powers. I will come back in a minute to look at some of the consequences of this kind of delegation of parliament's proper powers, but first I would like to look at some of the philosophy which underpins two of the principal parties in this country.

According to an article which appeared on page 7 of the March 29 edition of the Ottawa Journal, in a newsletter being circulated in the Liberal caucus, an assessment is made of the recent convention of my party which was held in Ottawa 10 days prior to the article being written. Among the "conclusions"—I insist that Hansard put quotes around that word—that are drawn in this letter, of the resolutions presented during the convention, the following was considered of key importance, according to the article. I quote:

> "The Conservative party is not, as it claims, the standard bearer for individualism and free enterprise except for the big corporations and those already rich. It is now, more even than the New Democrats, the most government-interventionist party in the Commons.
> "The Conservative party would intrude government departments, agencies, commissions and boards into every area of Canadian life, into areas where even angels, much wiser beings, fear to tread.

If these are actual quotes from the Liberal caucus newsletter, I must say that I have to admit to amazement. Such allegations, which were presented as "conclusions"—again in quotes—for the Liberal caucus and presumably the Liberal faithful to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest, are to be explained in only one way. If you are yourself guilty of an offense, the best way to obscure the fact is to charge your opponent with that offense.

Intervene in government departments? Intrude into government departments? Can anyone in this House honestly look at government operations these days and say that there is not now a deep, deep and virtually ineradicable Liberal intrusion into government departments, agencies, commissions and boards? Where are the defeated Liberal candidates from the last election? Are there any left without federal employment? Where are the executive assistants of earlier Liberal regimes? Where are the personal nominees of prominent members of the government? I do not propose to put names to each of these categories, but if we were adept at ESP at this moment, can you just imagine the catalogue of names and faces flashing through people's minds as I asked those questions. Some late starters may still be showing up. Therefore, let us have none of that nonsense about intrusion by the Conservatives into areas where angels fear to tread. The Liberals are no angels because there is no area where they fear to tread.

I have been a civil servant, a public servant. My role, as I conceived it, was to serve the public, as the name given to my employment indicated. The manner in which I did that was to advise the government in the area of my professional competence, namely foreign affairs. I could formulate suggested lines of action, suggested policies and even urge that some of these policies be adopted. However, I was not occupying an executive role in the largest sense of that word. I could not put into execution my recommended courses of action, the advice I offered. One time I recall being sternly reprimanded for having fired a cook. I was not even permitted, though head of post at the time, to execute even that sort of a recommendation.

There are limits within which public servants can act. The line is not easy to draw but a good public servant, properly motivated, knows where it lies. In the administrative field over which he has been given jurisdiction there should be no need to question his executive powers, provided, of course, he has been properly chosen for the job on the basis of proven competence. If, however, he is allowed to assume he is more powerful than he actually is, he may draw the line in the wrong place. He is then obviously not fitted for the job to which he is assigned. He can act on his own if he is acting within an area which has no political implications. He can act in the political area, however, only when specifically instructed to do so, and instructions in this instance must issue from the servant's political master, his minister. But here, in the bill before us, is a case of parliament being asked to approve a measure which will authorize the government to deprive itself of a power which it ought to retain, power to decide whether this or that activity ought to cease or be allowed to continue in a modified form. This is the area of the public marketplace.

Why do I say the government should retain the power to act in this area? I take this view because I believe in maintaining the power of parliament to hold governments responsible for their actions, and unless this power is retained, the government itself cannot be called to account. Let us consider this measure more closely. In clause 12 we find such expressions as "The Commission may order...", "The Commission may make an order prohibiting...", "The Commission may direct that no measure be taken in Canada...", "The Commission may by order direct..." and so on. Then, in the proposed amendment to 31.1, the bill indicates quite clearly that failure to obey an order of the Commission becomes an actionable offence, because 31.1 makes provision for collecting damages from those who have failed to comply with an order.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Perhaps I might read from the bill itself at page 14:

> Any person who has suffered loss or damage as a result of conduct contrary to any provision of Part V, or the failure of any person to comply with an order of the Commission or a court under this Act may... sue for and recover from the person who engaged in the conduct or failed to comply with the order...

There is no doubt but that the government is striving to empower a body of appointees, backed up with public servants, with authority to make their decisions stick, and this in areas of the most complex economic and political interest, without at the same time making provision for the agency responsible for those decisions and orders to be answerable to this House—not even through a minister, if I read the bill correctly.

Are we sure that this is the way in which we want to bring harmful competitive practices under control? No one questions that from time to time such practices are being followed. But is this the way in which we want to deal with the situation? Let us be sure on this point before we give approval to the measure before us.

I should like to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared this morning in the Toronto Star, dealing with this very subject.

> Amendments to the Combines Investigation Act now before parliament would give the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission vast new powers to regulate all business.

Including, presumably, the football business.

> The problem is that the commission, now an advisory body to the government, would function as an arbitrary authority with virtually no restriction or precise guidance from the law. In effect, it would make its own law...
> No businessman would be able to tell from looking at the amendments what constitutes adequate competition. If the bill passes in its present form, the philosophy of the people appointed to the Commission will determine what the phrase means, and until that meaning is spelled out by a series of decisions, no one will be able to determine what he has to do to obey the law. That is the wrong way to go about things.

I agree fully.

> The rule of law requires that parliament, not an appointed Commission, determine the public interest, which in this case means providing guidelines as to what is meant by adequate competition. If the public does not agree with the law, then in an election it can replace the people in parliament; but if it does not agree with the rules of the men on the Commission, the public has no recourse.

The last paragraph of the editorial is also worth putting on record. The minister is not in the House, but may I quote?

> There are good intentions in Gray's bill and the consumer needs better protection against unscrupulous operators in business. But it is wrong to try to achieve this by infringing basic principles of justice in a free society. The ordinary citizen has a right to know what is expected of him under the law, and parliament has an obligation to spell out what the law means rather than delegate that right to an appointed body.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the burthen of my argument. Once it has conceded this point and granted to the Commission the power the bill would have us confer upon it, parliament has completely lost control of that Commission except by way of amendment of the Commission's statute, an initiative normally reserved to the government in power. Parliament, as such, will have been excluded from any further voice in the matter.

Before we proceed further, I submit we should examine the whole philosophy of the bill most carefully. Do we want to see the mess which now admittedly exists in transportation extending to the whole area of marketplace competition? This is what could happen if we were to hand over to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission the full powers for which the bill provides. In the same way, a previous parliament handed over extensive executive powers to the Canadian Transport Commission. Parliament, and the people of Canada, cannot really get at the CTC via the committee structure. Although the President of the Commission deigns to appear before the appropriate committee from time to time, he cannot be hailed before the committee and required to defend his activities in the same way as the government can be compelled to do on the floor of the House, in committee and at the ballot box to justify actions it has taken.

So we must be very certain, before we finally give this bill our approval, that it extends to the Commission only those powers we want to see extended. In order to be sure of this, we need time in which to hold hearings, to hear witnesses, to obtain reactions from those who may find themselves affected by the provisions of this measure. Let us not be tempted into precipitate action by the impatience of the minister. Let us be sure we are doing the right thing. The government may want to pass the buck in this area of competition; it has done it before. Let us be quite certain that we agree that they should be permitted to pass this particular buck before we let them do it.

Does the minister, or the government for that matter, have detailed terms of reference for his commission? To my understanding, they do not. Is the commission, then, to be assembled—as the Foreign Investment Review Board is now being recruited, with 50 economists, I am told, at pretty high wages—and asked to write its own terms of reference, as the Foreign Investment Review Board is about to be asked to do? Is this the way to govern a country? Here, surely, is abdication of responsibility by the government. Governments in this country must continue to be answerable for actions of boards and commissions created by statute. Nineteen eighty four is only ten years off, Mr. Speaker. Let us not hasten the process.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973 to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before we proceed to the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada, perhaps I should communicate some comments to hon. members on the different motions that are to be moved. It is not my intention at this time to invite hon. members to participate in a procedural debate, but I think we should proceed in an orderly way.

It is suggested that motions Nos. 1, 2 and 4 are acceptable to the Chair from a procedural point of view. This will permit the House to proceed immediately with motions Nos. 1 and 2, which might be grouped together for debate, if hon. members agree. A decision on motion No. 1 will also dispose of motion No. 2. Motion No. 4 could be considered separately. It has been suggested that motions Nos. 3 and 5 are out of order in that they seek to introduce a provision that is outside the provisions of the clause and the bill that they purport to amend. Motion No. 6 also appears to be defective in that it is consonant neither with the provisions of the recommendation accompanying the bill nor the title of the bill.

When the House proceeds with the examination of these motions, the Chair in due time will invite hon. members to comment. It is not the intention at this time to render a decision on motions Nos. 3, 5 and 6, which will give hon. members time to look at the procedural aspect of these motions.

I will now put to the House motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga) moved:

That Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in paragraph 3(1)(a) by (a) deleting the figure "$225,500,000" in lines 3 and 17 on page 2 and substituting therefor the figure "$211,021,000" and (b) deleting lines 13 and 14.

That Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in paragraph 3(1)(b) by deleting line 22 on page 2 and substituting therefor the following:

"lines but excluding any amount in respect of hotels or C.N. Tower Limited) in the calendar year 1974, prior to"

He said: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the amendments are precisely the same amendments that were before this House when this House was apprised of them with regard to Bill C-164 during the last session on January 7. Since January 7, I have had an opportunity to travel across Canada and look at some of the activities of the Canadian National Railways, particularly in respect of hotels. While I do not intend to bore the House with a repetition of what I said on January 7, I believe it is only fair that I should bring to the attention of the House some of the activities of our national railway with regard to its operation of hotels, and indeed with regard to its operation of a number of activities, although hotels and a tower are referred to in these amendments. I say to you, Sir, and to this House that this Crown corporation is spending much of its efforts and energies on the great and grandiose and is not concentrating as it should on supplying proper rail transportation to those who need rail transportation in Canada.

With regard to hotel operation, the activities of this railroad over the past many years have been a horror show. The railway became involved in the hotel business after it was organized because it decided it would like to emulate the Canadian Pacific. It proceeded to acquire and build a number of hotels throughout Canada. At one time it had hotels in Brandon, Thunder Bay, or Port Arthur, and in Charlottetown. It had lodges in Ontario and in Quebec. It still has a lodge, as you know Sir, in Jasper. The result of its management of hotels over its entire history has been that it has been one great big loser.

With regard to the 1972 statement, it became apparent in the committee that the five hotels managed by the Canadian National Railways have a book value of some $43 million and that the total profit generated was only some $400,000 or a return of less than one per cent on the capital investment. Looking at the income or revenue from these five hotels we find the revenue was $23.9 million. So, the profit of $400,000 received on revenue is a return of less than two per cent on the total turnover of cash. This is bad enough, but when we compare it with the Canadian Pacific, we find that the Canadian Pacific has a return of 5.7 per cent after taxes in the management of its hotels.

This railway continues its desire to go further into the hotel business. Indeed, when the President of the railway was asked in committee about the new project in Moncton, he said he hoped this new project would provide the railway with a return of 12 per cent on the money invested. If this should occur it would be the first time this railway ever returned 12 per cent on anything. But even if it did return 12 per cent on money invested, is that a realistic return when one looks at the fact that the rates on first mortgages are now 10½ per cent and 11 per cent. There is ample private money to build hotels and provide hotel accommodation and this is no longer necessary to the operation of the railways. People do not, as a practical matter, travel between cities by train. They travel by air. Private concerns like Commonwealth Holiday Inns of Canada and so on have been building hotels and hotel facilities all across Canada through the use of private funds. Hotels are really organized to serve conventions and to serve the public generally in the cities in which they exist.

Hotels are not a necessary adjunct to the transportation system. There are sufficient hotels. They are being built by private concerns as investments. They are built through the use of private capital. Public capital must be preserved for the provision of service to the people of Canada. Yet, Sir, the railway decides to come to this House of Commons and ask for appropriation of some $5.6 million to expand its hotel business. It is a disgrace that this should happen. I am glad the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is here today because when he appeared before the committee he said he looked at the problems of the railways in terms of the global aspect and did not go into the detail of hotels. I am sure that had he thought about the money of the people of Canada which goes into hotels he would at least have read the glorious account of the Canadian National Railways as related by the author G. R. Stevens in his book that was published in 1970. Mr. Stevens talks about the losers in the hotel business and the fact that the hotel operations of the railways do not work and do not produce a profit.

When appearing before the committee, the minister asked what about the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal. When one examines the figures one finds, in fact, that this hotel does produce a return of about 10 per cent on the money involved. The Hotel Vancouver produces a return of 6.7 per cent on the money involved. These hotels, however, while they might be owned by the railways are not really Canadian National Railways hotels at all but are Hilton hotels. The Canadian National Railways realized it could not manage hotels, at least these two structures, and turned them over to that American hotel chain management company. When one looks at the profits of the railway in its operation of hotels one gets the picture that on, $43 million of public money invested as a minimum we receive a measly $400,000 return in the form of a profit.

Let us look at these hotels. First, we have the Hotel MacDonald in Edmonton. The Hotel MacDonald is a huge hotel in the city of Edmonton. It is a well-built structure; it is an impressive building. It has ample rooms and facilities for conventions and the like. This hotel returned to the railway $15,000 in 1971. In 1972, it had a good year and showed a profit of $32,000. The investment in that hotel is $8.9 million. In such a situation, I suggest that it is the responsibility of the government to say to the railway that it is not doing a good job in this regard and that it should get out of the field because it is not competent in it. Yet the government is prepared to bring to this House an appropriation that would enable the railway to use $5.6 million to expand its hotel operations.

For a moment I want to relate to the House a horror story that is almost as bad as the story of the Bonaventure. You remember that famous aircraft carrier, Mr. Speaker. I want to recount the horror story of the Hotel Bessborough. The Bessborough was built in the depression with good, hard brick and was well trimmed out. It has fine panelling and it is located in what is probably the best site for any hotel or any structure in the city of Saskatoon. It is between the two bridges and it owns all of the property there. It is right in the main business section of the town. It is a glorious site. In 1971, the hotel lost $400,000. In 1972, it lost another $400,000. Then, in 1972 we spent $214,000 on renovating the hotel.

Then, the CN decided to sell the hotel and they scratched around for a buyer. A promoter from the province of Saskatchewan went down to Montreal, sat at a table with the directors of the railroad and asked them what they wanted for their hotel. He was prepared to pay a fair dollar for it, even despite its losing history. They said: "We don't know; make us an offer". So, he lowballed them, by his own admission. He made them an offer of $1.6 million. They snapped at it like a large fish going after a small one because they did not know any better. They spent $214,000 on fixing the place up. They did not know that you could make money on hotels in Saskatoon, and yet the Sheridan Hotel chain has a hotel right across the street from the Bessborough, a swinging place where the liquor flows, and they are making a fortune. The site of that hotel is not even comparable to the site on which Bessborough stands.

Did you know that the Bessborough has two floors in its building that were never opened up? The original broadloom is still on these floors and some of the original furniture is still there. Yet, a new hotel can be built across the street and make a profit, while the hotel operated by the railroad can suffer loss after loss. That is because the railroad is not a competent manager of hotels. Yet, they come again before this House of Commons and ask for $5.6 million to pour into some more liquor lounges and into some more bedrooms. I do not know what it is for, because we really do not need to use the money of the public of Canada to finance the grand hotels that the railroad insists on building.

These hotels are not for poor people. A week or so ago this party had a convention at the hotel down the street, the Chateau Laurier. I will tell you that the service was not as good as it might be, but the prices certainly were. That hotel is not designed to care for the poverty-stricken traveller. Yet, this is where public money is going to be put, not into social housing or into the necessary things for the ordinary working men, but into building hotels in competition with private people who can make them pay and who pay income taxes. This operation run by our national railway system cannot even earn one per cent on its money invested. It is very nice for us to own Jasper Park Lodge. It is very nice for the people of Canada. But is Jasper Park Lodge something that the ordinary constituent in your riding and mine can visit and for which he can pay the bill? Not at all. Yet, we are able to earn 2.5 per cent on our money invested in Jasper Park Lodge.

Here again when I talk about money invested, the properties that this railroad has covered with hotels are very valuable properties but they are in the books at their original book value, that is the value of those properties when the land was given to Mackenzie and Mann and to Grand Trunk. The land is not properly valued there—it is of historic value—in some cases $10 or $15 an acre. If you only sold the land on which the Bessborough stands you would get a heck of a lot more than $1.6 million. Yet, the railroad does not value this in the true sense of what the investment really is worth. When they value it at $43 million, they get less than 1 per cent of their money, but if you valued it at the real value, of what the money invested by the people of Canada is really worth, then you would get even less, .1 per cent. Yet, they come to us and ask us for $5.6 million. Of course, it is not very much to this government.

This government does not look at $5 million or $6 million as anything to worry about. The government says: if the railroad wants more money for another venture, they are entitled to it; let them have it. Let us not cross-examine them and tell these fellows that they must account for their management. This is not an operation to move grain, potatoes or corn. It is not moving oil but rather looking after the privileged. It is an unnecessary public service, although hotels are necessary in our organized communities, but this is an activity that can be undertaken by any private investor. Is it fair to the people of Canada that they should be putting their money in four per cent, no-payment-ever shares in a national railroad so that it can build another hotel, especially in view of its history and the way in which this national railroad operates its facilities?

I want to leave that subject for a moment and go on to the matter of a tower, because this is also part of this amendment. The Canadian National, together with Canadian Pacific, own some 186 acres in the downtown part of Toronto. There is a partnership agreement between the two railroads for the development of what is called the Metro Centre. It will be a very good development. Somewhere along the line the CNR had the idea that the way to make the development successful was to build a communications tower. I am quite sure, having examined Mr. McMillan in committee, that the reason for that tower is not to attract people to the site as much as to supply facilities for the CBC. So, indirectly, we would have the CNR financing the CBC. We have enough problems with the CBC asking this House for $300 million a year without having the CNR also kick into the CBC.

But be that as it may, we have a project that was estimated to cost $29.5 million. The CPR, as a partner, in the project wanted a breakdown of the costs of that project; it wanted a projection of profits. A projection was taken on the basis of a cost of $29.5 million. They found that the project would return 7 per cent if it were amortized over 25 years, or perhaps 12 per cent if we were really lucky and the people went up the tower to do various things, including enjoying the 400 seat revolving restaurant. Again, this is a restaurant not for the poor and the under privileged and not for the rail traveller, but nonetheless the railroad will be involved in using public funds to build a revolving restaurant. This leads one to consider whether the railroad is really interested in supplying the people of Canada with transportation or in building towers in the sky for their own edification.

This project is supposed to yield 12 per cent on investment. I inquired in committee, and received confirmation that they did not base that calculation on the cost of the land. Of course, land in the Metro central region is very valuable. Conservatively, it can be estimated at $50 a square foot, and it is probably worth more than that today with land prices as they are now in Toronto. But just at $50 a square foot, the tower will occupy $7 million worth of land, so you would not calculate the return on the basis of $29.5 million but on the basis of $35 million or so.

Then, of course, the estimate was based on 1970 construction costs. And they estimated the fares they could charge people to go up the tower—$3 a crack—on a 1973 basis. I say the construction costs of this tower in Toronto, including the value of the land, will probably exceed something in the neighbourhood of $45 million. Here we are asked to use the scarce social capital of the people of Canada to build a tower, to which the partner in the real estate venture, CP Railway, said, "No way." They said "No way" because the tower is economic idiocy. Of course, I am sure the tower will be a fine, a marvellous place, and I might have enough money one of these days to take my wife up there for dinner. But really, Sir, there is a place for the use of social capital. We have a housing problem. We need more serviced land. We have a transportation problem. We need more boxcars and a rationalization of our transportation system. But do we need to use public money to build what are clearly speculative ventures, that have nothing to do with transportation, and are just for the glory of the directors of the Canadian National?

I suggest it is time the government called on the railway to halt these ventures, and to perform its proper function in our society. It should not continue to get involved in one scheme after another. Remember, Sir, at one time this railroad had a bunch of steamships. It lost a fortune on them. Then, it got into the radio business, and later peddled that off to the CBC. Now, it is getting more into the hotel business. It lost money on almost every hotel it owned, yet it continues to build new hotels, while selling the old ones off so that someone like the promoter in Saskatoon will make a bundle, as he undoubtedly will through his purchase of the Bessborough Hotel.

It is a disgrace that I, as a member of the opposition, should have to present these amendments to the House. It is especially a disgrace that this bill should be back for debate today since less than a week and a half ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) declared that he could not control the railroads, that he wanted a full investigation into the way the railroads operated, and that he was disturbed about the lack of transportation planning in this country. That was a tremendous admission that the government has no policy in transportation, and clearly, Sir, it has no policy in connection with hurdygurdys in the sky, or in connection with hotels.

Why are we again being asked today to approve this bill without saying to the Canadian National Railways, "Fellows you have no right to continue to use the people of Canada as a well from which to grab more money for more of your grandiose schemes." Until it can operate transportation properly, until it can move freight and passengers, which is the prime duty of the railroad, then surely it has no right, no licence to come to this House and ask for money for schemes of dubious value, schemes that are not likely to assist in the transportation of people or goods, and schemes for which its management is inept, according to the history of the railroad in this class of activity ever since its inception.

The Minister of Finance should amend this bill and tell the Canadian National, "Here is enough money to carry on with track laying, and to provide the necessary additions to rolling stock that are required. We are going to have a full investigation into railroading, but here is the money in the meantime. But also in the meantime, just get out of a business you do not know the first thing about." "You are losing the people of Canada money on hotels. You are not making a profit. You are building fancy bedrooms and fancy lounges. That is not the business of Canadian National."

There is no excuse for this railway to be in the hotel business, to be building towers and the like, since its management in past years has indicated how inept it is in looking after this class of business.

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on motions Nos. 1 and 2 pertaining to Bill C-5, and to deal not only with the financial aspects but also with the internal operations of Air Canada. An immediate investigation must be launched into the operations of Air Canada, especially at the Dorval base. It would seem that instead of spending money on towers and hotels we should be directing our efforts to improving our national transportation systems, including our national airline, Air Canada.

To say why there should be an investigation into Air Canada's operations may I point out that morale and safety are two of the company's major problems. I would like to quote from a recent publication of the airline's "Lodge News" as follows:

> Unfortunately the shop stewards in customer service have to deal with first level Air Canada supervisors that are not interested in resolving grievances or applying the collective agreement. The supervisor's only concern is trying to run a schedule operation at all costs. The result of this attitude causes one of our largest problems and most frequent violation of the collective agreement, i.e. safety. The collective agreement is quite clear in that management is specifically charged with the duty of initiating and monitoring all practices necessary to ensure the safety and health of employees as well as ensuring the safety of all equipment.
> Because of the attitude of first level supervision and their refusal to initiate safety, the shop committee is presently handling the problem at the second level of the grievance procedure which is the regional vice president or his designated representative.

I would like to give an example of what I am talking about in regard to air safety in Air Canada. Last Tuesday flight 531 out of Quebec was climbing at 14,000 feet. The plane lost cabin pressure. Masks were deployed, but only 40 per cent supplied oxygen. This is a condition that has been prevalent with Air Canada planes for some time. It is a matter which I brought up before the Standing Committee on Transportation last spring, and apparently nothing has been done about it. At that time I read this letter into the record:

> On November 23, 1973, I boarded Air Canada's flight 280 to attend an archeological symposium at the University of Calgary. Within 20 minutes of take-off I experienced that sense of continuous "ear popping" (for want of a proper medical term). The aircraft became instantly chilled, and to my horror the oxygen cabinets opened and we were instructed to use the orange masks. You can well imagine the anxiety, especially among the more aged passengers. In addition, not all the masks produced oxygen. The man sitting next to me tried in vain to operate his, but without success.

As I say, I quoted this letter last spring, and apparently nothing has been done since. That is why I am calling for an investigation into the operations of Air Canada. I saw a recent news release which informed us that the vice president of maintenance for Air Canada is being replaced by an American who is being brought in to take over, so obviously there are problems at Dorval.

I brought another matter to the attention of Mr. Pratte last spring at transport committee meetings, and drew his attention to a document signed by eight Dorval employees. I should like to read this letter into the record as follows:

Attached to this letter, please find a Submission related too the Unit and Support Shops Inspection functions. It is a critical report presented in the interest of achieving a more effective Inspection program and hopefully to create an awareness of an existing low morale condition.

Copies of this Submission have also been forwarded to Messrs. J. B. Russell Chief Inspector and G. Belanger Inspection Foreman.

It is our hope to have a full discussion on the report and we hereby request a meeting with Messrs. Russell and Belanger in the near future, to review it in detail.

We also request a subsequent meeting with you, at your convenience, in order to clarify and review this Submission.

This might seem a little off base, having regard to these amendments, but this is the reason we should be taking a serious look at the funds we are allotting Air Canada. I should like to read some of the comments made by these eight employees who signed and presented this document to Air Canada. They stated that in their opinion the quality development program has not been thoroughly and adequately developed and that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I always hesitate to interrupt hon. members or prevent them from expressing their views, but at this time the House is considering the report stage of the bill before us and two specific amendments. I am sure if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) takes the time to read the amendments he will see they both refer directly to the CNR and not Air Canada, and that the objective of the two amendments is to reduce the sums of money requested by the bill in respect of hotels and the CN Tower Limited in Toronto. I would hope that the hon. member will defer these remarks to a later debate in respect of further amendments that might be related to this particular point, or until the debate on third reading when he will have the latitude to bring forward his points and complaints about Air Canada.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, will I be able to speak on this point under Motion No. 3 which pertains directly to Air Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair is not inclined to give advice on a judgment that might be rendered later, but I am sure the hon. member will have more latitude then as the amendment is related more specifically to Air Canada. The two amendments now before us for consideration relate to the CNR and, particularly, to hotels that are administered by the CN.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will wait until you make a ruling on Motion No. 3 in respect of Air Canada.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this is an unexpected pleasure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For us too, Paul.

Mr. Hellyer: I listened with great interest to the speech made earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), and I was impressed by his remarks.

An hon. Member: You are easily impressed.

Mr. Hellyer: As a matter of fact, I am not easily impressed; I am a realist, but I thought the hon. member's speech was very well documented and very thoughtfully prepared. It is for that reason I listened to his remarks with considerable interest.

I notice the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) stroking his chin, Mr. Speaker, as well he might, as he of all people in this Chamber should be concerned with the expenditure of public funds. Had he been as careful in his attention and as impressed by the arguments put forward by the hon. member as I feel he would have been had he been paying full attention I think he too would be on his feet expressing grave reservations about the proposal of the Canadian National Railways, as did the hon. member for Mississauga.

As pointed out by that hon. member, the CNR experience in railway hotel management has been an unhappy one. One would have hoped that over the years the management would have learned that you have to keep up-to-date with the times. A matter of considerable regret to many of us, and to many members of the travelling public, has been the fact that CN hotel management has not been aware of changing conditions. The examples one can cite in this field are many.

For years now in most well run hotels one has been able to expect to have nicely coloured towels in the bathrooms, something which adds an element of warmth to the reception of an hotel, yet in so far as CNR hotels are concerned, years after everyone else has departed from the sterile white, and sometimes not quite white because of the lack of sufficient soap, chlorine or bleach in the wash, these same old bedraggled towels have appeared giving many people the impression that the CNR hotel management just does not care.

An hon. Member: They don't.

Mr. Hellyer: So, it has been with other furnishings and with the quality of soap. Long after most first-class hotels decided to improve the quality of soap, and sometimes for the ladies to have little bars with just a little French perfume added, or something of that sort, the CNR was still back in the age of hand-laundry and outside laundries, just not keeping in touch with the times. This is indicative of the failure on the part of CN management to pay attention to changing times and to details which are important to the travelling public.

An hon. Member: The old soap and towel operation.

Mr. Hellyer: The furnishings in the rooms were often not well kept, and the artifacts were not as tastefully chosen and assembled as one would find in an hotel run, say by Western International, which has developed a level of expertise that offers a standard which other hotel chains, including the CNR, might well attempt to emulate.

One finds, when travelling, a whole range of small details which seems somehow for one reason or another to have escaped the attention of CN management. I know there are many people who believe that television sets are an unnecessary luxury and that they really have some intrinsic evil property which no government organization should associate itself with, but on the one hand we have these vast estimates before us in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the production and distribution of television programs, and on the other we find that years after most hotels and motels in this country began installing television sets the CNR was a holdout, and came along well after the others in providing what has become virtually standard equipment in most hotel chains in Canada.

● (1650)

As for the insignificant little key, that grotesque little red abomination which CNR hotels hand you every time you go in to register, I do not know who dreamed it up. Whoever it was, he should get a special award. For that the corporation should have its estimates cut to $1. And, speaking of all the hundreds of attachments to keys I have seen in travelling across Canada and in many parts of the world, I have never seen one anywhere in the world which can match closely that of the CNR in sterility of design. No other attachment has aroused in me such feeling of coldness and lack of appreciation with regard to design. Without doubt, some great study was undertaken in arriving at a design which would be appropriate, attractive to potential CNR hotel customers and, in some way, enhance business. If that was the object of the exercise, it failed miserably, I have talked to a number of people about this minor item, and they share my view. The question is often asked, how can anyone do a study and then come up with something which is as basically ugly and unattractive as the CNR hotel key?

Mr. Foster: Now, start on the door mats.

Mr. Hellyer: I am glad the hon. member opposite mentioned door mats. I might have overlooked them. In my experience, many door mats were unsatisfactory. They were threadbare. So, too, were blinds and drapes in some cases. They gave you the feeling that you were going backward in time, not forward to some new and enlightened age. The impression was that you were going back in time, to an age when society could not afford and had not developed what is essential in the field of hotel accommodation, to the time when there were not standard products, unattractive as they are, which are available today. That this is so is tragic. I feel let down and disappointed as a Canadian taxpayer.

I felt, and still feel, that many of the natural locations of these hotels are extraordinary. As the hon. member for Mississauga said, the lands on which these hotels stand today are worth many times book value. They stand on very valuable pieces of real estate, in many cases real estate which should be put to better use. So, Mr. Speaker, I think we should look carefully at any proposal of Canadian National Railways for extending their hotel business. This is not their primary business. Their primary business is moving passengers and freight. Heaven only knows, they have enough trouble with that.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) reminded us recently of the difficulties he has encountered in making sure grain moves to markets. As I pointed out the other day when I was so rudely interrupted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), five or six years ago the CNR was doing a study on how grain might more efficiently be moved to market. The study looked into whether new terminal facilities are required, whether changes are required in methods of grading and cleaning, whether new equipment is required, and whether we should move to the adoption of unit trains for moving grain across the country. These are matters which are ultimately the concern of Canadian National Railways and their primary raison d'Être. One would think the company would turn their attention to things with which they are primarily charged. If they relieve themselves of responsibility in other areas which are peripheral, they can concentrate on establishing a first class transportation system in this country.

A few years ago when I was in Japan I had the honour of riding on that famous train, "The Bullet." I admit I was favourably impressed with the technological advance of those very up-to-date people. The Bullet was designed to provide comfortable, fast transportation for the Japanese. It is a decade ahead of any Canadian ground transport system for moving passengers. I think that organizations like Canadian National Railways and Air Canada should not be involved in fields which are not their primary concern. They should not attempt functions which can better be carried out by others, such as the operation of hotels, such as, in the case of Air Canada, going into the aircraft manufacturing business. We shall touch on this later.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) told us this afternoon that Air Canada finds it difficult to maintain its aircraft. How much more trouble would it experience if it found itself in the aircraft manufacturing business about which it knows nothing. As Canadian National Railways has been declared by Parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, I hope it will live up to its responsibilities, concentrate on those functions which are legitimately within its purview and provide the Canadian people with the kind of extraordinarily good service they have a right to expect from their nationally owned railway.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley)—Sports—Establishment of camps to train athletes for Olympics—Suggested use of abandoned Canadian Forces base at Clinton, Ontario; the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)—Penitentiaries—Government action to alleviate shortage of psychiatrists.

It being five o'clock, the House will proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO COUNT OVERSEAS SERVICE OF VETERANS IN ESTABLISHING ELIGIBILITY FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to bringing in an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to ensure the Canadian veteran with overseas service that such service be counted for time in Canada for the purpose of the Old Age Security Act whether or not he has resided full-time after discharge in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am presenting this motion to the House today in order to correct what I believe to be a discriminatory situation. This is caused by an interpretation of the rules and regulations by the officials of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in Victoria. On January 7, I received a copy of a letter written to one of my constituents by the regional director of Old Age Security in Victoria. I quote from the letter:

For our purpose we cannot consider you as physically present in Canada when we have confirmed that you were overseas with the Canadian armed forces from June 8, 1940 to March 1946 and in addition left Canada again in November of 1946. The Old Age Security Act does not permit us to consider overseas service as physically present in Canada for Old Age Security purposes.

I think we must emphasize the phrase "physically present". I immediately thought it was an outrage that this government actually wishes to, and does, discriminate against proud veterans who served overseas. Why should there be a difference in interpreting the rules as they apply to me, who never went overseas, and one who did? If after the war I had gone out of the country under similar circumstances, presumably when I came back I would be eligible. Surely, that is discrimination against those veterans who served overseas.

Under the present legislation, there are three ways a person may qualify for an Old Age Security pension. First, if he has resided in Canada after reaching the age of 18 for periods which total at least 40 years; second, if he has resided in Canada for 10 years immediately before approval of his application, and third, if he has been present in Canada after reaching the age of 18, and prior to the 10 years mentioned above, for periods which equal when totalled at least three times the length of his absences during the 10 year period and has resided in Canada for at least one year immediately preceding the approval of his application.

The legislation then states that some types of absences from Canada during the qualifying periods referred to above may, under certain circumstances, be considered not to interrupt residence in Canada. These include, among others, absences while employed by the Canadian government, as a member of the Canadian armed forces, as a missionary, by a Canadian firm or by an international agency. It was the decision of the Old Age Security pension board that my constituent's overseas service would not be counted as physical presence in Canada. It would appear that this ruling was based on the third provision which states:

Have been present in Canada after reaching the age of 18 and prior to the 10 years mentioned above for periods which equal when totalled, at least three times the length of your absence during the 10 year period and have been a resident in Canada for at least one year immediately preceding the approval of your application.

It does not refer to physical presence. It is on this basis that I believe the whole problem stems from a misinterpretation of this rule. The Canadian government defines a resident of Canada for the purpose of Old Age Security under rules and regulations, one of which is Section 15(1)(i):

a) A person resides in Canada if he makes his home and ordinarily lives in any part of Canada.

Subsection 3(b) reads:

b) That any interval of absence from Canada of a person that is a member of the Canadian armed forces pursuant to act in connection with the requirement of his duties shall be deemed not to have interrupted that person's residence in Canada.

Under Section 20(f) the government claims:

c) The right of defining residence in Canada and in defining intervals of absence from Canada that shall be deemed not to have interrupted residence in Canada.

This, I believe, strengthens my argument that the interpretation of my constituent's case is incorrect and that he is being discriminated against.

When my constituent applied to join the service, he did not choose to be sent overseas. If he had been stationed here in Canada, as I was, there would be no trouble. However, he went where his country sent him and for this he is being penalized today. This is discriminative and unjust. I do not think a man's courageous war service in defence of this country should be used against him. My constituent did not choose to go overseas. He was sent; he returned home, was discharged in Canada in March 1946, and did not leave again for England until November of 1946. I cannot find any rule or regulation that gives the government the right to define presence. I am, however, satisfied in my own mind that the rules and regulations give a member of the armed forces the same status and rights as a resident of Canada, whether he is servings overseas or not.

Look at the income tax laws. They treat him the same when in the armed forces, whether he is in Canada or overseas. Family allowances are paid to members of the armed forces whether they are serving in Canada or overseas. An overseas member of the armed forces has a vote in Canadian elections. In other words, he is treated as a Canadian citizen. We now find, by an interpretation, that his overseas service does not count as presence in Canada for the purpose of Old Age Security. What discrimination.

The minister has not, however, seen fit to have these rules and regulations interpreted any differently from that which was set down by his officials in the letter of December 18 to my constituent. This letter even goes so far as to use the phrase "physically present." I have been unable to find the word "physical" in any of the statutes, rules or regulations. Our proud overseas veterans are being discriminated against. We are denying them the rights and privileges they fought so valiantly to earn and preserve.

The minister has said that an amendment to the act would be necessary so that overseas veterans in this category could receive their old age pensions. The minister stated in a speech on January 10 and, I quote:

Let me assure you that I am indeed looking at this particular matter and I have asked for even the legal opinion to be reviewed. If this can be done without any amendments to the act, I would certainly try to do it if the appropriate regulations could be amended.

However, I am afraid that the advice I will get is that the legal opinion which was given to the government must be maintained, and I will have to come before parliament with an amendment to the legislation in order to provide for cases such as this one. I waited until after the Speech from the Throne, fully expecting an announcement of amendments to the act to which the minister referred. The minister claimed to be sympathetic and interested in veterans of Canada, but still an amendment was not proposed.

It is for these reasons I have taken the initiative and am proposing this motion as well as bringing forth a private members' bill on the same subject. I believe this motion is straightforward and self-explanatory. It simply asks the minister to amend the act so that my constituent, who served this country overseas from June 1940 to March 1946, and others I have heard from, can receive their Old Age Security pension.

It should be pointed out that time is of the essence because my constituent would qualify on April 1, 1974, if the interpretation of the act had been different. I believe the amendment should be brought forth immediately, and that it should be backdated so there is definitely no discrimination in this case. If the minister and the government are serious about this, I am sure they will let this motion pass and not endeavour to talk it out. To talk it out on the basis that the minister is bringing in a bill to take care of the problem is, in my opinion, not valid. This matter could be disposed of very quickly. The minister, I am sure, is going to bring in the amendment embodied in a bill that has many more proposals in it. It will be necessary to have them all analysed so none can be taken in isolation. This is bound to take time and my constituent will have to wait because of an interpretation pronounced by a section of the minister's staff.

● (1710)

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) for bringing before the House a motion whose purpose is to improve the Old Age Security Act by means of an amendment. Improving the Old Age Security Act has been an on-going policy of Liberal governments, and the present government in particular has introduced several additional measures which, in total, have given us one of the finest old age security programs in the world. It is, however, not perfect. Hon. members recently came upon an anomaly in the regulations which govern the existing act. The government is in complete agreement with the intent of the hon. member's motion to allow time spent overseas by a resident of Canada while a member of the Canadian Armed Forces to be deemed as not to have interrupted presence as that is presently defined by regulation. It could be done through an amendment to the act, so that a person will be deemed not to have interrupted presence in Canada if he returns to Canada at the conclusion of his duties.

That is a complicated technicality, and one which for a long time I did not understand myself until I spoke recently with officials of the department. The question before us is a confusing one. It concerns regulations but certainly, no question of principle is involved here. The hon. member, along with other hon. members, is now aware of the difficulty and we all wish to improve the Old Age Security Act to correct the problem. The hon. member has certainly brought his representation to the right place because he will find a ready response from this side of the House.

Ever since 1908, successive steps have been taken to enact old age security legislation in which we can all take much pride. Income security measures directed to older persons developed gradually in Canada over a considerable number of years. The first legislative action of the Canadian parliament in this field was the passage, in 1908, of the Government Annuities Act, which was designed to promote habits of thrift so that Canadians might be encouraged to provide for their old age. In succeeding years, a series of committees studied the problems of the aged and an old age pension system was recommended to provide assistance on the basis of a means test to British subjects with at least 20 years of residence in Canada, under a federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangement.

Resolutions were submitted to the provincial governments for approval in 1925, and in 1927 parliament approved the Old Age Pension Act. Under this legislation the federal government was to pay 50 per cent of the cost of the program, which was administered by the provinces. Between 1927 and 1949 the federal share of the cost was increased to 75 per cent and benefits were increased to a maximum of $480 annually. Admittedly, by today's standards that is not a princely sum. By 1950 this program provided benefits under restrictive eligibility rules to over 40 per cent of Canadians aged 70 and over. In 1950, a joint parliamentary committee was appointed to look into the matter of pensions for older persons and to make recommendations to the government. This committee was composed of members of the Senate and of all parties in the House of Commons. As a result of the study, it was decided to adopt a universal flat-rate type of pension, with eligibility based solely on age and residence in Canada, to be administered by the federal government. Legislation was then introduced to bring into being the present Old Age Security Age, which became effective on January 1, 1952.

The Old Age Security Act provided for a universal flat-rate pension of $40 monthly to all persons who could fulfil the age and residence requirements. The eligible age was 70 years. The basic period of residence was 20 years in Canada immediately preceding the approval of the application for pension. A person who had not resided in Canada for the full 20 years could make up for the absences by presence in Canada prior to those 20 years on a two-for-one basis. In addition, the applicant must have resided in Canada for the year immediately preceding the approval of the application for pension. The requirement of the one year's residence was introduced because it was felt that persons who had been absent from Canada for some years should have a recent attachment to the country in order to be able to obtain the pension. It was also intended to discourage former residents from returning to Canada solely for the purpose of receiving the pension.

The joint parliamentary committee which examined old age security in 1950 pointed out, with respect to residence requirements, that for a program such as the old age security plan, which had no citizenship requirements and under which no record of contributions had to be demonstrated, it was not unreasonable to expect an applicant to live in Canada for a substantial part of his productive years. The committee suggested a period of 20 years, which was written into the original legislation.

It was recognized that some persons would be required to be absent from Canada in connection with their employment. It was felt that for a resident of Canada who was absent from the country for specified reasons and who returned to reside in Canada at the termination of his employment, such period of absence should not interrupt his residence in Canada. A resident of Canada is defined, for the purposes of the Old Age Security Act, as one who makes his home and ordinarily lives in Canada. The original regulations provided that certain periods of absence from Canada of a resident of this country would be deemed to be periods of residence in Canada if the specified conditions were met. This covered members of the Canadian Armed Forces, federal, provincial and municipal employees, employees of Canadian firms abroad, Canadians employed by the United Nations or engaged in missionary work, and so on. It also covered married women accompanying their husbands in these circumstances. If a resident of this country absented himself under such conditions and returned to Canada at the termination of his duties, the period of his absence could be counted as residence in Canada. A little later on, the regulations were amended to provide that these periods of absence in prescribed circumstances, could also be considered as not interrupting presence in Canada.

In 1957, the basic period of residence in Canada required for eligibility was reduced from 20 to 10 years. The purpose of this amendment was to provide for persons who came to Canada late in life but who, nevertheless, had become permanent residents and were considered to have some claim to benefits on reaching pensionable age. The amendment had, however, a further result: since the two-for-one make-up formula remained unchanged, the maximum amount of earlier presence that could be required was decreased from 38 to 18 years. Thus, a person who had resided in Canada for the first 18 years of his life and had then left the country and spent all of his productive years elsewhere, could return one year prior to his seventieth birthday and qualify for pension at age 70.

Later, the Old Age Security Act regulations were amended to provide that where a resident of Canada was absent from the country in specified circumstances, including service with the Canadian Forces, his absence would not interrupt his residence in Canada if he returned to Canada at the end of his service or if he reached pensionable age while so engaged. The provision for counting the period of absence as presence in Canada—that almost sounds like double talk, Mr. Speaker, but it really does make sense—was rescinded because it was felt that the change in the amount of make-up time under the two-for-one requirement brought about by the reduction in the basic period of residence in Canada from 20 to 10 years would make it possible for a person to qualify for the pension on the basis of a very short period of actual presence in Canada if a period of absence could be counted as presence.

In 1965 also the Old Age Security Act was amended to reduce the age at which pensions could be paid from 70 to 65. This was done by reducing the eligible age one year at a time over a five year period from 1966 to 1970, so that in January 1970 it reached age 65. Effective from December 1971 the two-for-one requirement became three-for-one, with presence in Canada only after the 18th birthday to be counted. This increased to 27 years the maximum amount of presence that could be required to make up for absences in the 10 years immediately preceding the receiving of the pension; that is, the 55 to 65 years of age period. If you were absent during that 10 year period, you had to make up for that time by actual presence in Canada on the basis of three-for-one. So simply put, if you were away two years, you had to have a physical presence requirement in Canada in the preceding time of six years, which is three times two.

This change was brought about as a result of complaints. This is usually why we change acts or bring in legislation, because there is pressure from the public indicating something is wrong or that something different must be done. There were complaints by residents of Canada about the situation described earlier, wehre persons who had left Canada at an early age were able to return to Canada and qualify for the old age security pension after only one year of residence. Many of these persons who had spent their working years in the United States had also qualified for social security benefits in that country. They had those benefits and then they returned to Canada and received the benefits that had been passed by the Canadian parliament.

The Old Age Security Act provides that payments are to be made from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and charged to the Old Age Security Fund. In former years the Old Age Security Fund derived its income from a special tax on personal income, corporation income and sales. This special tax was eliminated with effect from January, 1972, and provision was made to credit the Old Age Security Fund from general revenues in respect of each fiscal year with an amount equivalent to what would have been collected under former provisions. Although entitlement to the old age security pension is not based on the insurance principle, it seems reasonable to require a period of residence or presence in Canada during which a person would presumably have made some contribution to the economy of the country and thus to its ability to finance social security benefits.

In 1965, it was recognized that there were persons who had spent all or the greater part of their lives in Canada and who might wish to leave the country after retirement and before reaching pensionable age. There are certain qualifying regulations governing people who wish to do this, so perhaps I might spend a moment or two commenting on this aspect. An additional method of fulfilling the residence requirements was therefore added. This provides that the pension may be paid to anyone who has completed a total of 40 years of residence in Canada after age 18, regardless of where he is residing on attaining pensionable age. In computing the 40 years of residence, periods of absence that meet the specific conditions laid down by the legislation are counted. They are counted as years of residence. In addition to absences resulting from employment, a resident of Canada may be absent for temporary periods not exceeding one year or for the purpose of attending a school or university without interrupting his residence.

Originally, the pension could not be paid to anyone outside of Canada. This was changed by an amendment to the legislation in 1960 to permit indefinite payment of the pension outside the country, once the initial requirements had been met and the pension approved, to a pensioner who had resided in Canada for at least 25 years after age 21. In May, 1972, this requirement was reduced to 20 years after the 18th birthday. A pensioner with less residence is entitled to payment for only six months following the month of his departure.

The provision for indefinite payment outside Canada applies only to the basic pension. The guaranteed income supplement may continue for only six months after a pensioner leaves Canada, regardless of his history of residence. The guaranteed income supplement is, of course, the supplementary payment added to the basic pension on the basis of an income test. It was introduced in 1967 to assist those pensioners who had been unable to make adequate provision for later life and who were not in a position to benefit fully or at all from the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, under which benefits are paid in direct relation to contributions made from earnings over a qualifying period. The supplement was originally intended as a transitional measure while the retirement pension programs of the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan were maturing. It was later adopted on a permanent basis. Both the guaranteed income supplement and the basic old age security pension are now escalated quarterly to compensate for the rise in the cost of living.

A pensioner who has qualified for the pension on the basis of having resided in Canada for a total of 40 years, even though a considerable portion of those 40 years was spent outside the country under conditions considered not to have interrupted his residence, would automatically be entitled to indefinite payment of the pension wherever he might choose to live, on the basis of having completed 20 years of residence after age 18. A person who had spent only 10 years immediately preceding pensionable age as a resident of Canada and who had qualified for pension on that basis would, of course, have to complete an additional 10 years of residence before becoming eligible for payment on an indefinite basis outside Canada. In other words, the particular regulation does not apply if a person stays here but only if he goes somewhere else, outside, of Canada.

In the same way, a person who had been absent during the final 10 years and who had qualified on the basis of having had sufficient earlier presence to make up three times the length of those absences might have to complete additional residence after becoming a pensioner to make up the 20 years necessary for entitlement to indefinite payment outside the country. So all of this has to do with receiving pension benefits when you decide to retire outside of Canada.

As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has stated, the old age security regulations provide that certain absences from Canada of a resident shall be deemed not to have interrupted that person's residence in Canada if prescribed conditions are met. Those include absences while a person is employed or engaged by the United Nations, one of its specialized agencies, a Canadian firm or corporation, the federal government, as a member of the Canadian forces pursuant to and in connection with the requirements of his duties, as a missionary or other similar employment or engagement.

It should be noted here that the types of employment covered fall into two specific groups. In the case of a resident of Canda employed outside the country by the United Nations or one of its specialized agencies, by certain other international agencies, or by a Canadian firm or corporation, he must have had in Canada, during his absence, a permanent place of abode to which he intended to return, or have maintained in Canada a self-contained domestic establishment, and he must have returned to Canada at the end of his employment or reached pensionable age while still absent in this capacity. For other types of employment, such as with the government of Canada or a provincial or municipal government, as a member of the armed forces, as a missionary, as a person performing services with a development or assistance program sponsored by the federal or a provincial government or by a non-profit Canadian agency, as a member or an officer of an international charitable organization, and so on, the requirement is simply that the person concerned must have returned to Canada at the end of such employment or reached pensionable age during his absence.

However—and this is the key to the difficulty in which we find ourselves—the regulations do not provide that periods of absence under these circumstances may be deemed not to have interrupted that person's presence in Canada in determing his eligibility under the three-for-one presence requirement. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is faced with this dilemma. He, simply on his own authority, cannot alter the regulations, and so he wants as quickly as possible to bring before the House an amendment to the act that will give him the authority to alter the regulations and to deal with specific cases such as that which the hon. member has brought to the attention of this House concerning a problem which a constituent of his is facing. Therefore, the minister is of the opinion that such periods should be counted as presence in Canada, as he indicated in the House some weeks ago when the matter arose in connection with an application for old age security by a person who had been overseas in the Canadian army during world war II.

In this case, the date on which he became eligible was set back because the period of overseas service could not be counted as presence in Canada. The person in question also had only intermittent residence in Canada. An amendment to the Old Age Security Act is required before a regulation can be made to deem prescribed absences of this kind as not interrupting presence in Canada. This is the dilemma in which the minister finds himself. We have a government, with the desire to help people who have served Canada well, such as the constituent of the hon. member, but because of the way Parliament passes legislation and the way in which regulations are drawn, the minister finds his hands tied. He feels badly about this and wants to do something about it.

I should point out as well that investigation has revealed that the number of cases where a resident of Canada could not qualify for the pension on the normal date of eligibility because he was unable to count an absence from Canada, as a member of the Canadian forces, as presence in Canada was very small and occurred only where there had been extended periods of other absence from Canada. Although the number is small, the government appreciates the difficulty a delay in eligibility for the pension may cause the person concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. He may be allowed to continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Penner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to the members for the courtesy extended to me to continue. I wish to say what the minister plans to do. What is required is an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to authorize the making of a regulation defining presence in Canada, and intervals of absence from Canada that shall be deemed not to have interrupted presence in Canada. If you understand that, Mr. Speaker, I wish you would explain it to the rest of us. However, after some prolonged discussion with very learned officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the front lobby of this House, I can say that I do understand it now. A regulation could then be made whereby absences from Canada of a resident under prescribed circumstances would be deemed not to have interrupted presence in Canada if such a person returned to Canada at the termination of his duties or reached pensionable age while so engaged.

In certain circumstances such a person would be required to have had in Canada a permanent place of abode to which he intended to return or to have maintained in Canada a self-contained domestic establishment during his employment out of Canada. The government intends to introduce an amendment to the Old Age Security Act, and if this is approved by parliament—and I believe there is no doubt that it will—it will allow for appropriate changes to the old age security regulations. The government is anxious to ensure that veterans and all other Canadians receive just and fair treatment under all types of legislation. So we expect that amendment very soon and I am sure it will pass all stages without undue debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) launched into his speech, I felt sorrier for myself than I already did that I have the kind of voice that will not let me speak for my full time today. When I looked at the motion in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker), I realized it related to one very narrow point in the Old Age Security Act and I assumed that the rule of relevancy would require that we confine our remarks to that point. But my good friend from Thunder Bay did me the honour of reciting the whole history of old age pensions in Canada. I say he did me the honour because he started that history from the very day I was born, June 18, 1908. That was the day, these several decades ago, that the Government Annuities Act was given second reading and put through the House of Commons.

I followed with interest the history of the subsequent pension legislation which the hon. member for Thunder Bay recited, and the various changes in the Old Age Security Act and in the regulations thereunder. I was hoping he would carry right on and tell us of the further improvements that are to be made in the near future.

Mr. Whicher: Tell us where we are going to get the money while you are at it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend should not worry about money these days. When three young men can visit Toronto and while there obtain contracts for $1 million each, why worry about money? As I say, I am glad the hon. member for Thunder Bay made clear that the necessary amendment will be introduced, and that it will be in keeping with the resolution of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. However, I was hoping he would tell us at the same time that other changes would be made in respect of old age security. We have come a long way from June 18, 1908, but what we need now is a provision for pensions of at least $200 a month payable at age 60 and, in addition, a few other improvements.

Mr. Whicher: Tell us where we will get the money?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend from Bruce (Mr. Whicher) agrees with me completely. He is one of my publicity agents. He has already drawn attention to the way my clamouring for these things over the years has paid off. I am still clamouring.

Mr. Whicher: Now the public is paying.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Never mind about the fact that the public pays, because it is according to ability to pay. The fact that we have pensions of at least $100 a month, plus quarterly escalation, on a universal basis, means we have provided for our older people a relatively better position in society than was the case 20, 30 or 40 years ago. As we go along with this program on a universal basis, projecting the principle of equality, we make our society that much better. So, Mr. Speaker, I am glad you did not stop my good friend from Thunder Bay in his interesting recital of the 65 years and nine months or so in which I have lived and through which we have had improvements in the pension legislation of this country. I trust that, like the good Liberals they are over there, when we have further gains they will all stand and applaud those further improvements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Good; I hear they are applauding even now. Maybe they would like this parliament to carry on a little longer so they could go to the government and say it should do something in this pension field; that is one way this parliament might be made to last.

I wish to support, without reservation, the request of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. His motion asks that the government give consideration to the introduction of an appropriate amendment. The hon. member for Thunder Bay says such an amendment will be forthcoming. I hope there will be no loss of time in this being done, and that when it is done there will be sufficient retroactivity in the regulations so that my hon. friend's constituent will be covered so far as his pension is concerned.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay sought to explain the situation and was afraid that at times he was confusing it. It can be confused, but I think it is relatively simple. At least, I shall try to make it that way. The point at issue with respect to the constituent of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary comes up only in the case of a person who does not have the last ten years, before age 65, of residence in Canada and has to make up for any shortage of years in that last ten-year period by three times as many years during the period from age 18 to age 55. It just so happens that the act and the regulations, in providing for that shortfall of years between 55 and 65 to be made up by three times the number of years between 18 and 55, require as the legislation now reads, that any of those years between 18 and 55, if used for that make-up purpose, must be years of actual presence in Canada.

It seems to me, in view of the fact that in interpreting other parts of the legislation it has been possible to define residence in Canada in such a way that absence for certain specified purposes did not destroy that residence in Canada, it is grossly unfair that in this one instance it should be ruled that a man who was overseas as a veteran serving in the armed forces cannot count those years for the purpose of making up the shortage between the age of 55 and the age of 65.

The request is obviously one that should be met as quickly as possible. I understand that there are not a great many cases affected, but the law is wrong when it does an obvious injustice even to one person. I think it is particularly wrong when it does an injustice like this to a Canadian veteran, and I hope this matter will be resolved very quickly and that the next time the hon. member for Thunder Bay tells the story of old age pensions since 1908, there will be a few more chapters that will make the story even better.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, these debates are never a waste of time and never without merit because there is no time when we really do not learn something. Today I learned something that I did not realize before. I knew that 1959 was a great vintage year for Bordeaux, and that 1965 was a great year for Burgundy; but I did not realize how great a year 1908 was for Winnipeg North Centre and for the House of Commons as a whole. That was indeed a vintage year because it started us along the right path toward pensions in this country.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I think this is a particularly important afternoon because it is rare that in the House of Commons we come to grips with problems of individual Canadians. I believe we are fortunate as a nation to be so small in the sense that this place is not too big to bring forward the problems of an individual who has suffered injustice. For that we are grateful to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). I am also grateful to my colleague, the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), who stated the case so well and in such detail that he left me with little more to say. However, it matters not if one talks out such a motion; the fact that it has been brought to the floor of the House and that the government is responding, as the minister has indicated, is the important thing, and it will be done with dispatch.

I think it is important that we do not get out of whack with regard to injustices in our society in individual cases. However, it does not mean that our society is wrong. I was sorry to hear the suggestion of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary that this government does not care about veterans. I happen to be a veteran and I came out of the forces after five years of war. I do not know of another nation that has treated its veterans better than ours. As a result, the original legislation and legislation that has been passed recently by this government would indicate that there is no inequity or insensitivity toward veterans nor so far as pensions generally are concerned.

It was this government that brought the veterans legislation up to date and is continuing to do so. That is not insensitivity. It is this government that provided the old age security plan which is second to none anywhere in the world. I do not mean by that that it is enough. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we must do more, and we shall do more, and no one will ever be satisfied in that respect.

In effect, it must be recognized that the government has given to senior citizens a guaranteed income and has given pensions to burnt out veterans—although I do not like the expression and the gratuitous way in which the pension is handled in some respects—and we have escalator clauses built in to protect them at least partially against the ravages of inflation. In none of these instances am I totally satisfied, but it is unfair to take a situation which is really not a normal one and accuse the government of insensitivity. The fact is that this government has not been insensitive, nor have Canadians been insensitive. Had we been insensitive, we would not have been in power as long as we have, certainly not with the support of hon. members opposite who, I am sure, share our concern and our interest in this respect.

There are fine differences between the terms "presence" and "residence" and these can be wildly misconstrued, as my colleague the hon. member for Thunder Bay has said. It is a little frustrating for those of us who are non-lawyers and think in ordinary terms. As for the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, I do not know whether he is a lawyer, an apple-picker or a peach-picker, but I am sure that even if he were a lawyer he would be frustrated by it also, although he might understand it a little better.

We must have reasonable regulations, and I think our regulations are reasonable. As a matter of fact, the amendment that is causing difficulty here was brought in, not by an unfeeling government to squeeze the veterans a little more but it happened to be brought in in 1957. If my recollection is correct, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister at that time. So if it was an insensitive measure, he would be blaming his own party. But that amendment was an improvement on the legislation as it then existed.

We deal with a small number of cases, and when there is an inequity it is cleared up. However, at the same time we as legislators have a responsibility to see that our legislation is not totally open ended so that anybody can come to Canada from anywhere in the world and enjoy all the benefits of our society. Frankly, I hope that day comes; I really do. I think we are living in such a favoured position in the world today—and we are terribly selfish about it at times—that we must think, not in terms of how much more we can get for ourselves but how we will share it with the less favoured people in the world.

Some people do not like that. They are to be found among members opposite as well as in my own party, I am sure, and even in my own constituency. But we have a long way to go, and when I hear complaints that we are overtaxed and we have such immense problems in our own country that we should forget about people overseas, that charity begins at home, it does not go down very well with me. In fact, it goes the opposite way.

I am a businessman in private life. People say that businessmen are being squeezed out of business. Businessmen have a responsibility to be efficient and to make profits. They also have the responsibility to use those profits to help reduce costs, and this is important. That which is not used to reduce prices must go back into society. Our first obligation, of course, is to our own people. We have to keep our own house in order. But we cannot sit in our own pristine white purity in this country and think that the rest of the world does not exist. If we continue in that way, I suggest that the world will continue to exist but we will not, and what exists will not be white. I am sorry to get off on this track when dealing with a fine point of law.

I think it is a ridiculous point of law that we are discussing tonight. The important thing is that the hon. member has moved his motion, asking the minister to give consideration to it. The minister himself so indicated in the House on January 10. We have had reassurances, in which I have every confidence, that legislation will be brought forward. Of course, if I were in the hon. member's position I would be inclined to introduce the same sort of motion. This is what makes our system work. This is what prods government. This is what brings inequities which affect small, ordinary Canadians to the fore. I think it is a good question to be debated by us this evening.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) suggested that the question involved in this point revolved on a matter of interpretation. I think the point has already been made that that really is not so. The minister does not have power, under the act passed by parliament, to interpret that act in a way other than it is being interpreted at the present time. The real question concerns what is involved in "presence" in Canada. Presence, according to the legal advisers to the Crown, means that you have to be in Canada. That is the issue.

What we must do if we are to solve this problem is amend the Old Age Security Act in such a way as to give power to the governor in council to define in fact what is presence in Canada. If that amendment were made, it would be possible for the minister to make recommendations to the governor in council to interpret "presence" in the way that he sees fit, to accommodate the kind of question that has been raised this evening. When replying to a question respecting this matter in the House of Commons on January 10, 1974, as reported at page 9270 of Hansard, the minister indicated that he was very sensitive to the question and that in due course he would be introducing an amendment to solve the problem. I think that is really the long and the short of the matter. That is what we intend to do, and we will do it.

I would now like to turn for a moment to the specific wording of the motion. It contains two elements. The first element talks about the Old Age Security Act being amended to ensure that Canadian veterans with overseas service have such service counted for time in Canada. I think all of us know what the hon. member means, but I think there is a bit of difference with respect to what is said in the motion because the law at present provides for overseas service to be counted as time in Canada in respect of residency. That is "time in Canada" under the law, but not in terms of "presence" in Canada. I think the wording ought to be changed to "presence in Canada."

The second element has not been alluded to in the discussion this evening. At the conclusion of his motion the hon. member indicates that the proposed amendment would cover veterans whether or not they had resided full-time in Canada after their discharge. That is a new element. Even if the period spent overseas as a veteran, or indeed as an employee of the government of Canada, were considered as presence in Canada, this would solve part of the problem but not all of the problem raised by the hon. member because, according to the relevant section of the act, a person has to be in Canada for one year immediately preceding approval of an application for pension. I do not think that aspect of the matter has really been discussed by any of the members who have taken part in this debate, and it should be considered. I am not aware of any decision that the government has made with respect to this question in forthcoming legislation, so I intend to bring it to the minister's attention.

I congratulate the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) on his contribution to this debate. He contributed substantially by reviewing the background of the act and the technicalities involved in this legal problem which affects a small number of individual citizens. Those who take time to read his explanation will understand how these matters have arisen.

At the beginning of his remarks, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) referred to the importance of parliament giving consideration to the consequences of legislation affecting individual citizens. I concur wholeheartedly in his remarks. A matter that has upset me for years, even before I became a parliamentarian, is that when laws are drawn up they often contain inequities with respect to isolated individual circumstances and far too often the response is that nothing can be done because the law is the law. I am delighted that my minister is not responding in that way.

I also agree with the NDP member who indicated that this kind of question is very important. He said that when an injustice is done to one person, to a thousand people or indeed to a million, the number involved does not make any difference but the injustice itself must be corrected. My minister subscribes to that view. Hon. members can rest assured that the kind of question brought to our attention in this motion and in representations from others will certainly be taken into account and legislation will be introduced to correct the matter.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I was interested tonight to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and myself were the first in the chamber. I thought for a moment that we would be discussing this bill in its entirety by ourselves. After the speech of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), I suspect that the Minister of Finance is already getting tired of red keys.

Today we have before us Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the CN system and Air Canada. I had the opportunity to speak on the bill when it was Bill C-164. It has now returned to the House as Bill C-5. The amendments having to do with the deletion of $5.5 million to be spent on hotels and $8.8 million to be spent on the CN tower will be voted on, as well as some amendments having to do with the directors and executive officers. On January 8, 1974, I said the following:

> I have no trouble in supporting these two amendments. Even though CNR has been traditionally involved in hotels, I believe these amendments point out that parliament is concerned about the diversification of the CNR into these many facets. The CNR should have to borrow the money for hotels, TV in hotels and tourist attractions in Toronto from other sources.

During that speech I made reference to the Hotel MacDonald and some of the things I considered were problems of concern to management. Lo and behold, a couple of months ago I had the opportunity of being at the Hotel MacDonald at a convention, and I was not let down. We were supposed to check into the hotel at two o'clock, but most of the guests were lined up until well after eight o'clock before any of them got into their rooms. I say that as an aside and an illustration of many experiences hon. members have had with many CN hotels.

I should now like to refer to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications at page 29:9, where the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to a consulting firm and said:

> This particular consulting firm is doing a tremendous amount of work out of the country. Surely, Mr. Chairman, if the operations of the CN hotel chain are less than profitable, perhaps the committee should go on record as recommending that the hotel engage the services of CANAC to study the hotel operations with a view to upgrading them.

I thought this was an excellent idea. The hon. member went on to say:

> The MacDonald Hotel in Edmonton is situated in a prime location in a very active city. It only generated a profit of $15,000 in 1971, $30,000 in 1972, so there is something obviously wrong.

I might add that there is some $8.3 million invested in that hotel so obviously there is something wrong. The hon. member further said:

> We, as members, should certainly draw this to the attention of the CNR and to the public.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the chairman of the committee, said:

> Mr. Mazankowski, you are an astute businessman and you know that in certain years, expenditures have to be made to renovate, to overhaul, and to modernize your business premises. I think that is what is happening to the MacDonald Hotel now. I know that the enlargement of the hotel will greatly enhance its profitability picture and I expect a better profit picture from the MacDonald Hotel next year.

The following is the point that was made to which I should particularly like to refer. The hon. member for Vegreville then said:

> Mr. Chairman, any good business will generate its own capital to renovate its premises.

The main concern of the CNR should be the improvement of rail transportation, not hotels and real estate. While such mundane considerations as rail safety and improved grain transportation do not equal the CNR tower in glamour and prestige, they are nevertheless of paramount importance.

This bill provides for CNR expenditures on rail property, branch lines, new equipment, etc. This brings me to the comments I wish to make regarding expenditures for 1972-73 and beyond 1974. If you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that we can use this money elsewhere. I suggest that we could use it for boxcars, hopper cars, the upgrading of track and the other things which are necessary if we are to move goods across this country.

The president of the CNR tells us that the $31 million requested in the bill is for the purchase of equipment, cars and locomotives. The CNR ordered 3,400 cars in 1973 and received 3,000. None of these cars, by the admission of Messrs. MacMillan and Hunt, was suitable for transporting grain. In 1973 the railways also repaired 2,500 boxcars of which 1,500 were suitable for the transport of grain. I notice that the number of boxcars used for moving grain fell from 88,000 in 1963 to 42,000 in 1973. This dramatic decrease pushed the government into purchasing, in 1972, 2,000 additional hopper cars. The government wants to contract them out to the CPR and CNR in order to alleviate the problem and give the railways a few years of breathing space.

Recently, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board announced in Estevan that prairie farmers will get 4,000 more hopper cars to move their grain. These 4,000 hopper cars will cost between $100 million and $125 million. The minister also predicted that short-term measures to improve grain transportation will bring a speedy end to current snarls in the system. According to an article in the Financial Times of April 1, 1974—

> Officials in the federal transport department and the grains group under Otto Lang, minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, are relying on the $6.8 million—

That figure, I think, ought to be $3.4 million.

> —government-railway program to repair 2,400 boxcars to pull them through this year's snarl, and also prop them up in the 1974-75 crop year.
> An aide to Mr. Lang emphasized: "It is his objective to have a system that will handle and transport one billion bushels a year. Then we can challenge the producers and marketers to meet this challenge."

I assume that the 4,000 additional boxcars will be useful in removing the grain. This will also be done at the taxpayers' expense. In addition, the Canada Grains Council recently said that between 200 and 300 motive power units are being maintained in western Canada and largely used in the distribution and collection of grain cars from branch lines. These diesels are light, low horsepower units, among the first generation units purchased by the railways. Many of them are approximately 20 years old and are rapidly becoming obsolete. Under present techniques for moving grain, an investment of over $50 million in the next eight to ten years will be required to replace these diesels.

In contrast, the new diesels being purchased are much heavier. This is creating a serious problem as the weight of the engines, combined with the weight of the newest hopper cars, which weight 263,000 pounds fully loaded, are straining to the limit many miles of track and roadbed which are incapable of sustaining such loads. I am told that a conservative estimate of the cost of upgrading such track is $100,000 per mile. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board has said that he will press the railways to upgrade more lines so that they can bear the weight of a 263,000-pound loaded hopper car.

According to a 1971 estimate, only 10,000 miles of present trackage in western Canada can support such a payload, and approximately another 11,000 miles cannot. If it were necessary to upgrade only half of those 11,000 miles, the cost of the improvement would be some $550 million. How far, then, would the $20 million-odd set aside for hotels and the CNR tower go toward the upgrading of this track? It would not go far, but at least if you applied such money to that purpose you would take a step in the right direction.

The CTC railway transport committee has pointed out that the number of derailments caused by track conditions on Canadian National and Canadian Pacific in 1972 is three times that of 1959 and nearly double that of 1969. Because of this continuing increase in derailments to date, it must be concluded that in the future the number of derailments caused by poor track conditions will continue to increase, as will the number of resulting injuries and deaths, unless immediate action is taken. The committee is concerned about roadbeds because of the continuous movement of heavy railway cars over track that is supposedly capable of supporting them. My point is that much of the 10,000 miles of track capable of handling these heavy cars needs rechecking. Perhaps we should apply new technology and upgrade some track. This, again, would add to the costs of the railways.

There also have been announcements regarding cost-revenue squeezes because of inflation, higher fuel and labour costs and increased costs of other equipment necessary in running a railroad. My point is that the costs in future of some subsidiary businesses may also rise and these businesses will compete for the money the railways need. I am referring to hotels, real estate and some of the other businesses in which the CNR and CPR are involved. Recently, at a symposium on Canada's non-renewable resources held in Toronto, F.S. Burbidge, president of Canadian Pacific, said:

> Where the railways are concerned there is no longer any substantial economic advantage to be gained by further increase in the length of unit trains, which operate today at gross weights of up to about 14,000 tons.

His revelation, that the full capacity of transcontinental trains may soon be reached, is most serious. In my address I have not even begun to total the required future expenditures of the rail transportation industry or even taken into consideration the possibility that railways may operate at their full capacity in the near future. I know that putting this right would add up to much more money than is provided in this bill, even if one were to average out the cost over eight or ten years.

I believe I know what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) meant when he told this House on March 11 that we do not have what we can call a real policy for the future. He said that if he stayed at his post, he would surely ask for the authority of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in trying to elaborate this kind of policy so we would know where we were going.

The situation is desperate. We need a policy for the future, and we need it fast. Perhaps the transport committee can help the minister in his deliberations. The freeze on rail line abandonment comes off on January 1, 1975. That concerns western Canada and the minister ought to act in this regard.

After studying all the statistics, can one say that the railway companies have really done everything in their power to help transportation in Canada? Canadian railways are moving money into new rolling stock to meet record traffic demands. In the past year Canadian National Railways has been buying heavily and has placed orders totalling more than $225 million for freight cars and locomotives. CP rail says that since 1970 its orders for new rolling stock have exceeded $215 million, with $20 million on current order and orders for 1975 now totalling $14.3 million, with the probability of more to come. Why is it that every year we are falling behind? When we look at these orders we find that many are not for moving the produce of industries that are falling behind, such as the grain, vegetable and fresh fruit industries. A lot of the cars to be brought into service are to replace ones that have been taken out of service because they are getting old and are no longer functional.

It is a fact that in Canada we have more geographic barriers than any country. Because of this, Canadian producers depend on the railway system more than any other country to meet their transportation needs. Above all else, it is the duty of the government, notwithstanding the hotels, towers and affiliated industries, to ensure that a strong, dependable and prompt transportation system is developed in Canada. The minister says he does not have the power to do this. In a recent speech, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) stated:

> —Jack Pickersgill . . . said the bill contained all the power and authority which the commission wanted . . .
> So if the Minister of Transport, who has the authority, wanted to exercise it, he could say to the Transportation Commission: "I want you to order the railway companies to provide the cars and facilities to carry the freight and to do so diligently and carefully". Having made that order, the commission could include in the order a provision that if they do not do what is ordered a penalty will be imposed.

Although this bill has come forward in the name of the Minister of Finance, surely the Minister of Transport can say to the railways, "provide the cars, or no money for hotels".

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words at the report stage of Bill C-5 which deals with financing Canadian National Railways, and some of the Conservative amendments attached thereto. When we talk about a national transportation policy it is very enlightening, although not unexpected, to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) finally admit that the transportation system as it applies to railways in this country is in a mess. He admitted that competition is not working between the railways and the profit motive is not working because it means phasing out the uneconomical but nonetheless essential lines. It also means that grain, the stable of the western Canadian economy, is not moving. The farmers run the risk of losing half a billion dollars a year. Lumber from the interior of British Columbia is not moving out of the province due to lack of boxcars and necessary transportation facilites.

We see this transportation mess fostered by succeeding Conservative and Liberal governments. We see the Conservative amendments to reduce some of the funding to CNR; they remind me of the Conservative way of giving a patient a band aid when major surgery is needed. It is time we looked at the whole operation of CNR, a supposedly public corporation, a supposedly nationalized corporation. It is time to really nationalize the CNR and its counterpart, the CPR. The Conservative amendments ignore the crux of the matter, that is, developing a viable transportation policy. If we are to have a transportation policy in this country which will promote regional development, equity among the regions and provide service for all Canadians, we must consider the basic way in which the system is run.

Transportation is essential and we must put service before profit. The freight rate structure, which is designed to maximize profits, has resulted not only in lack of service to very remote regions of Canada, which nonetheless need the railways, as well as poor service but it has fostered and perpetuated economic discriminations in various regions of this country. Our freight rate system perpetuates the strength of central Canada as the manufacturing concentration in Canada, to the detriment of developing secondary manufacturing in my area of the country, northern Ontario, as well as the maritimes and the west.

I do not need to go through all the examples. A few will serve to remind us of this discrimination. Because of our freight rate system, it is cheaper to ship steel from Ontario to Vancouver than from Ontario to Calgary. It is this kind of freight rate discrimination that westerners so often cite. In northern Ontario, it is cheaper to ship raw materials out of the north, thereby perpetuating the resource-oriented economy of the north and the lack of jobs compared to manufacturing. It is cheaper to ship iron ore out of the north than to ship manufactured goods. For example, it costs $8.60 a ton to ship iron ore pellets from Copper Cliff in northern Ontario to Pittsburgh in the United States. However, to ship fertilizer from Sudbury to Toronto costs $90.80 per ton. This is only one of many examples of the discrimination that is occurring. It costs a person in Sault Ste. Marie $15 to buy an identical food basket for which a consumer in Toronto would pay only $13. That is not only due to discrimination by the railways but by the trucking companies as well.

We have a so-called public corporation, Canadian National Railways, and a private corporation, Canadian Pacific Railway. Both are heavily subsidized by Canadian taxpayers and neither is fulfilling the objectives of a national transportation policy. Their service is poor and their freight rates are discriminatory. I had hoped the government and the official opposition would tackle that problem, but no: when we look at the amendments, we see it is not approached. This is fiddling with the essential problem. For example, Canadian National Railways, supposedly a publicly-owned corporation, is being run like a private corporation. The CN debt, amounting to about $811 million, is owed to private bondholders. This debt has been outstanding since the government took over the Canadian Northland Railway, the Grand Truck railroad and other uneconomic lines and formed them into the CNR.

The CNR showed an operating surplus in 1972 of $48 million. The company is able to make money but it has not declared an over-all profit since 1956. Why? Because the company pays off its private debts first. The $1 billion debt to the government and the Canadian taxpayers is not being paid back in line with the corporate policy, the private interest policy of paying off bondholders first. On the other hand, the CN management quickly uses its debt as a convenient excuse for withholding raises from hard-working employees. We saw this last August during the railway strike. We in this party argued in favour of paying a decent wage to the employees, but I am sad to say that the Liberal and Conservative members forced those railroad workers back to work with an unjust wage settlement.

To whom are the company's debts being repaid? Who are the private bondholders the CNR has been paying off? This question has been put to the minister responsible and he in turn has directed it to the CNR. But the CNR refused to give members of this House a list of its private bondholders. However, there is sufficient evidence to point a finger at a few of the bondholders who are being paid off first. One of them is the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The predecessors of that bank, the Imperial Bank and the Canadian Bank of Commerce, were the largest shareholders in 1917 when the bankrupt Canadian Northland Railway was taken over by the CNR: and on today's CN board of directors we find directors from the Imperial Bank, the Royal Bank and Royal Trust. This is where the money is going—to the private bondholders. It is not being used to improve the rolling stock or to improve the service.

The amounts mentioned by the Conservatives, a couple of million dollars here and a couple of million there, are a drop in the bucket compared with the amount of debt being paid off to private bondholders. In the bill before us the government is asking parliament to grant $225,500,000 to CNR for new construction and rolling stock. At the same time, I find it ironical that $200 million of the company's bonds should be coming to maturity. Perhaps it is a coincidence, but I have the impression there is more to it than that. If the CNR were not obliged to pay off these private debts, it could be putting hundreds of millions of dollars into improving its service and lowering freight rates.

There is one solution to the perennial difficulties of the CNR, and that is to cancel its debts to private debtors. The private debtors have milked the Canadian public enough in the past. We have formed a railway system which has been uneconomic in the long run, yet they still expect to be paid off. It seems to me the solution is a truly nationalized CNR—to bring it under direct government control, although I do not know whether either the Liberals or the Conservatives would have the willpower to run such an organization in the best interests of Canadians. However, I do know that under a New Democratic government a truly national CNR and CPR would turn this country around in terms of service and would end freight rate discrimination.

As I see it, there is no need to play the games the Tory amendments invite us to play. We must introduce fundamental reforms, perform major surgery to make the CNR and the CPR a public utility run for the best interests of all Canadians and to end freight rate discrimination in northern Ontario, the west and the maritimes. That is the way in which to solve the problems of the railways in this country, and I urge hon. members to consider taking such a course.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few comments to those made by my hon. friends on the amendment to Bill C-5 in the name of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) suggesting the deletion of items amounting to $5 million for hotels and $8 million for a communications tower.

If there is any organization which should be broken up and separated into individual units and be subject to close scrutiny, it is the CN. Why should the people of Canada subsidize communications networks, hotels and the various trucking operations of this company? In the past these operations have been carried out by private enterprise. The people of this nation are being virtually blackmailed by the CN. The CN announces a freight rate increase; one of the provinces objects, so the government intervenes and gives the company a subsidy in consideration for not raising the rate. Then the railway turns around and buys another hotel or adds to one of the hotels it already owns.

The CN announces that it will discontinue passenger service somewhere. Objections are raised by the municipalities concerned. Again the government intervenes and pays a subsidy. Then the CNR builds a telecommunications tower. It threatens to abandon certain railway lines. Again, objections are raised and further subsidies result. Meanwhile, the lines are lying idle and rusted; weeds are growing over the tracks. Certainly, money is not being spent on the maintenance of the rail lines; it is being diverted to other projects, to buy hotel businesses or to build up telecommunications and other interests.

Very often the CN encounters labour difficulties. The company takes a hard position, knowing that if it plays out its hand the government will step in, force a settlement and come up with a subsidy to bail it out. We know the CN cannot move wheat from western Canada in sufficient quantities to meet the needs of our customers. The necessary cars are lacking. After a lot of fanfare, the government buys hopper cars so that the grain can be moved. Two years later the company says it cannot afford to maintain them. So the government kicks in $250 million to maintain the hopper cars. And on it goes. Somewhere along the line it will be necessary to call a halt to this process. There is hardly a municipality in this country with level-crossings in or near a built-up area that has not been brushed off many times by the CNR if they decide to raise the issue of level-crossing problems, stop lights or interconnecting switches. We go on year after year being blackmailed in this way.

How much untold frustration did the rapeseed mess cause western Canada and Canada as a whole? Only after a confrontation with the western premiers did the CNR move to rectify the situation. Only after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) promised that this matter would be straightened out was something done. But what did it cost the people of Canada before this matter was rectified? Surely the Minister of Transport was only joking when he suggested that the CPR should be nationalized. As one of my colleagues said a moment ago, we should nationalize the CPR and sell the CNR because, after all, the CPR does make a profit.

We cannot be expected to stand by and watch the CPR become amalgamated with the CNR and then end up in the same mess as the CNR is in today. All the while we see the CNR going deeper and deeper into communications, hotels and other businesses subsidized by the government and the taxpayer. We have no way of knowing, for instance, whether the money they get by way of subsidy for rail line abandonment is actually used for that program.

On the evening of March 17, a CNR train that is made up in Toronto and which travels daily to Oakville, Dundas, Brantford, London and Windsor passed through Dundas 2½ hours late. About 40 people were waiting to board the train at Dundas. The conductor called for the passengers to go to a car beyond the platform, and a little step was put down to assist them to get into the car. When they got aboard the rail car, the passengers found they were in an unheated railway baggage car. Thinking they would be moved into the passenger section, the passengers waited; the train began to move and the conductor told them to sit on the floor. This is in a central part of Ontario, Mr. Speaker. Just imagine people being asked to sit on the floor of an unheated baggage car. The train arrived at Brantford some time later, when some of the passengers were transferred to a coach. The balance rode in the baggage car to London.

We have before this House a bill to grant the CNR $13.5 million for hotels, communications, and so forth; yet they ask passengers to sit in an unheated baggage car while they transport them a distance of 70 or 80 miles. That sort of thing makes you wonder, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents wrote to me about this and I wrote to the CTC and asked for an investigation. I also asked the president of the CNR to investigate the matter. I have written to the Minister of Transport and asked him to lend the weight of his office to my request.

If the CNR would come before parliament and say, "We are going to electrify a portion of the railway tracks over a period of years and improve interurban transportation systems," we would welcome this. Instead, they come forth and want more money for hotels and communications. If they would come before this House with a plan to eliminate level-crossings, I am sure we would give them our blessing and a good deal of the money required. If they would say, "We have a plan to move western grain to markets in a cheaper and faster way by using new technology and new methods of handling grain", and if they would say, "We will integrate our existing system with provincial and private transportation systems", then I think we would applaud them and assist them in any way we could.

If they would say, "We are going to straighten out some of the curves in the track and improve the mechanical ability of our trains so that we can utilize the unitized train concept to the best advantage", then we would give them a good hearing and our total support. If they were to take any other approach than the one they use, the approach of blackmail or of trading off one segment of their employees against another and then asking the House to rescue them from their dilemma, then I think we would have a different attitude toward them. If they would come before us with a development plan that would be to the benefit of Canada, then I believe we could support them wholeheartedly.

However, I feel I must support the amendment moved by my colleague from Mississauga so we can try to have some measure of control over the CNR through deleting $13.5 million of the amount provided by this bill. The Minister of Transport has said he has no power over the CNR, and if he has no power then what power has the House? What else can we do, Mr. Speaker, but to take this course of action and try to reduce part of their financing in order to bring them to task?

I think a good example of the lack of power that the minister has over the railways was given in my own riding when I approached the Canadian Transport Commission shortly after coming to parliament about a stop light and interconnecting switch in the town where I live. The town officials had written to the CTC and some nine months had elapsed without their receiving acknowledgement of their letter. I contacted CTC officials and was told, "Well, we haven't had an opportunity to review that file".

I reviewed the file in about 15 minutes and told one of the officials that we wanted this interconnecting switch put on the track so that the lights would turn red when the train was approaching and all the traffic would stop. But this did not seem to interest him. The fact that we had had a couple of fatalities at this crossing and that literally hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property damage had been caused did not seem to influence his thinking one way or the other. The result was that we had some pretty bitter words. He told me it would take 18 months to comply, and when I applied some leverage by telling him I would go to see the Minister of Transport, he replied, "That won't do you any good; he has no authority, he has no power, over this situation". So I found out where the minister stands with the Canadian Transport Commission. However, by using some additional leverage we managed to get the switch installed within a short period of time.

These are matters that concern me. I know of municipalities who have had trouble with level-crossings. If the CNR were coming forth with a program costing $25 million to $30 million to eliminate some level-crossings, then I do not think any member of the House would deny them that money. But this is not the case. What we have is the CNR coming forth asking for more money for hotels and communications towers. I assume that they are trying to build up a complex that will in fact absorb some of the CNR's continuing debt.

The Minister of Transport has said that he has no control over the CNR—or over his department, I gather, is what he is really getting at. I know we have had numerous royal commissions over the years investigating the CNR. I suppose if one stacked all the royal commissions, hearings and studies end on end, they would fill quite a bit of filing-cabinet space. So far as I am aware—I have heard nothing to this effect in the House—no studies have been going on in the CNR with a view to changing or improving its situation other than becoming involved in hotels and expanding its communications system across this country.

I have spoken to people engaged in the railway business. I have spoken to people involved in the laying of track. I have been told about the continuous weld and about the problems we have with unitized trains as well as the large curves. I am told that if we straightened out the track between Montreal and Halifax we would save something like 100 miles in trackage. In addition, it is said that the tracks are not parallel. This is one of the problems. When the trains go around these curves, the cars actually bind to the tracks and three, four or five power units are required in the front to pull them around the curves.

There is a good deal of study and engineering work which could be done to sort out these problems. However, instead of this we see large amounts of money being asked for in this bill to further the hotel business, I suppose also the tourist business, and the communications business of the CNR. I think somewhere along the line we must in this parliament have some control over the CNR. If the minister has no control over it, then somewhere along the line this House must have some control over it.

One hon. member, I believe it was the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), asked what the point is in all this business about the communications tower, since the damn thing is already built. In other words, the CNR just goes ahead and does things on its own without being questioned and without being responsible to anyone but itself. A colleague to the far left here is saying that we should nationalize the CNR. Of course, that is where the difficulty is now. It is nationalized and they know that when they get into trouble all they have to do is create a crisis within the country and we will bail them out by giving them more money or another subsidy.

This is why I say somewhere along the line the rules must be changed or modified so that this House in fact will have some control over the spending and planning of the CNR. If we do not do that, then the CNR in fact is not accountable to this House and the people of Canada and I cannot see how the situation could be improved. It would become worse, the railway would become further in debt and we would have a continuous problem year after year.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to add a few comments to this debate, particularly since I have recently been involved in many discussions regarding railways. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency there are large and small industries which are closing their operations. There are massive lay-offs because of lack of service by the national railways.

I also appreciate this opportunity because recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) both in the House of Commons and outside made various interesting statements. He compared the Canadian National Railways with the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said the Canadian National is one of the finest railways in the world. In fact, he said it is the finest railway system in the world. What a statement to make. I wonder what the minister compared it with when he made that statement. Perhaps he looked at the towers and hotels we intend to build. Surely we have the finest hotels in the world. The minister probably wants to compete with the large institutions which build these fine hotels. Perhaps that is the yardstick the minister used. I should like to use other yardsticks to determine what our railways are doing in terms of moving people and goods, getting products to market and maintaining a position for our industries in the markets of the world.

There could not possibly be any industrialized country in the world that does worse than Canada. We make deals all over the world. One year we have a large quantity of products such as wheat in our bins and we go out and sell it at fire-sale prices, only to find out that our railways cannot get it to the market. The next year we do not have anything to sell and, as a consequence, when we do have something to sell again the buyers do not trust Canadian industry. One year we cannot grow it and the next year we cannot ship it.

I should like to compare the Canadian railway system with systems in other countries. We have special problems in Canada because of our great distances and the elements. While I would agree that we cannot build an electric train system throughout Canada, it should also be acknowledged that we cannot compare our railways with those of Germany, England and France which do have electric trains which run in every direction each 15 or 20 minutes. They calculate times by seconds rather than by days and hours as we do in Canada. So what was the minister talking about? He also talks about nationalizing the CPR. I found a paper on my desk, I did not bring it in myself, which reads as follows:

> Government takeover of Canadian Pacific Railway is a possibility, transport minister Jean Marchand said in the Commons March 21 . . .
> He spoke after NDP leader David Lewis urged nationalization of the "entire shebang" of the CPR.
> Mr. Marchand said:
> "I do not say no immediately.
> "I just say that the first thing we have to elaborate is a new (transportation) policy, a corrected or improved policy, to determine national objectives, and after that see by what weapons we can really attain those objectives."
> Then he added:
> "Whatever some people may think I have no vested interest anywhere."

I do have a vested interest in this shebang. I do pay taxes and worry about the $20 million or $25 million we spend to build towers and hotels. I worry about the $25 million in subsidies we pay to run trains from one loan to the next. I worry about the $140 million we spend to subsidize the railways. Since we do not have a transportation policy in this country, it would almost seem that the time has come to work out a policy, not a policy that would compare with anything they run in Germany between Munich and Nuremberg but a policy that would run trains from Winnipeg to Vancouver with some grain, or from Prince George to Vancouver with some lumber, to load on a ship. That kind of policy would have to challenge the imagination of engineers and people who create industries which compete on world markets.

There was such a brainwave at the western resource conference where transportation was one of the main topics. A very imaginative proposal was outlined at that conference by the province of Alberta. There were people there who have vision and who can see the challenges of the twentieth century before us. When looking at all these statistics and the price tags that we have put on subsidies, on the towers and the hotels, I wonder if we could not find enough resources and funds to put to work some imaginative scheme such as the ones outlined at that conference.

Let me go into this matter a little bit. It was proposed that the federal government buy all the railbeds that exist in Canada, whether they belong to the CNR, the CPR, the BCR or the Northern Alberta Railway. We would relieve the railways of the burden of the maintenance and operation of the railbeds, take these over and operate them in the same way that we operate the airways. Where we have air traffic controllers and air terminals, we would have rail traffic controllers and rail terminals. But we would leave the operation of the railways to those people who can do it best, that is, those people who have goods to ship; in other words, private enterprise, people who know how to do something well and make money out of it.

Mr. Oberle: My friends to the left of course would not agree with me. They do not know what private enterprise is all about. They think it is some big deal in which you take part down here because you do not have the guts to do anything by yourself.

The scheme to which I was referring would be a challenge to the imagination. I can see companies losing $15 million in three months because they cannot ship their lumber to the BC coast. They could buy a locomotive with a number of cars and apply to the railway traffic controller or the department that would set up the rail traffic and say, "We are shipping 250 cars a month. We would like to buy a locomotive. Can you allocate us some time on a particular railway to ship our lumber to a particular destination?" To me, that would challenge the imagination of people who realize that we are heading for disaster in Canada.

I imagine that farmers' unions might wish to establish their own co-operatives, buy their own locomotives or trains, new, imaginative carriage facilities, elevators, and so on, to transport grain. In my view, such a scheme would make sense in Canada where our distances are not 75, 100 or 250 miles but 3,000 miles to be covered by trains shipping goods to the market. The minister should really think in terms of whether Canada should not invent its own transportation system which would be responsive to the needs of the country which has very special problems in view of its large distances and climatic conditions.

I should also like to relate some of the minister's statements to some of the things that have happened and some of the things to which we are aspiring in British Columbia. British Columbia is the province on the other side of the mountains. I say that because it is often confused with the rest of western Canada. Although British Columbia is in western Canada, our problems are somewhat different. I wonder who will live in those towers and hotels and who will patronize the cocktail lounges down below. Ever since I have been travelling every week throughout the land—and I consider myself something of an executive and subsidize my own travels—when I go to these places and look around I do not see the man on the street in there. The people I see there mostly are executives or salesmen heading for sales meetings.

I do not see there people who have a hard time supplying their families with everyday necessities. The man who patronizes these places does not really have a need for any of these facilities, because there are many of them everywhere and they are built by people who make a lot of money out of them because they know how to run them and what services to supply. I really do not think that the Canadian people have any business building any more of these hotels or towers.

Now I should like to speak about British Columbia—a wonderful place. We have some very special problems there. One of them is that we are competing with the coast port, that is, Vancouver. As a result, the rest of the province is totally neglected. For instance, we might buy some steel in Hamilton, Ontario, that goes to the west coast and when it gets to Prince George, which is a city 600 miles of rail travel away from Vancouver, even though it travels by direct route to Prince George it costs 60 cents a hundred pounds more than it would if you shipped it to Vancouver, 600 miles farther. Sometimes such things are hard to understand. That was the kind of message we hoped the minister would get from the western opportunities conference, and these were the kind of stories we were telling him.

One would think that in a province the central city of which has more than 100,000 people living in its immediate area, one would establish first of all an industrial park with rail lines. The industrial park that exists in Prince George is right in the middle of the city, of the whole shebang, as the minister and as the leader of the NDP said. The city council said to the railway people, "We would like you to move the rail lines out 15 or 20 miles and establish an industrial park from which you could branch out to tap the resources of the vast hinterland reaching out 800 miles to the Yukon border. You could tie it to the Yukon and bring down the resources from there that at present are being shipped down the American coast and brought back up by some weird design". The railways do not have the money to do any such thing.

In Prince George we would like to see a main line terminus established. It would branch out to the great city of Prince Rupert and from there to Vancouver. We would like to see the city established as a terminal from which the freight rates would be polarized, such as in Edmonton or Calgary: these cities are central and it makes sense to distribute goods from there, but it does not make sense to use one terminal for the whole of British Columbia. It does not make sense to have the only terminal in Vancouver and to establish all freight rates from there even though goods have to travel 600 miles farther than if they are dispatched from Prince George.

There are some of the questions that people in my constituency ask. We see ourselves subsidizing hotels and a big tower in Toronto. People in Prince George or Fort Nelson are not likely to visit that tower in Toronto. How in the heck would they ever get there? They can hardly make it to Fort St. John, 300 miles away, because CP Air charges almost double the fare charged for the same distance between Toronto and Montreal. These people have serious problems and are asking: Why can we not build a rail system through which we can get our products to the market, if we can build hotels and towers in Toronto?

I am looking at the great subsidies that the railways are getting for running their trains. One subsidy totals $25 million for a train running across the continent. It does not go to central or to northern British Columbia; it goes to Vancouver. It runs along the American border. I am also looking at the subsidies paid on trains running between Toronto and Montreal. Compare that with the maintenance of the branch lines that the railways wish to abandon. Maybe the latter expenditure is big when compared with the commuter trains, but surely in the built-up areas we could model ourselves on the European transportation systems. Maybe we could build an electric train to run between Toronto and Montreal, with a stop at Ottawa. We should concentrate on a new, imaginative system that would carry passengers in all weather conditions without great delays.

These are the kinds of things we should be thinking about, not towers reaching into the sky and things that are out of reach of the ordinary citizen. We should be concentrating on transportation in light of the fact that we are paying $150 million a year to subsidize the railways. This totals about half the unemployment insurance subsidies that we are paying. If we could put the railways on a paying basis, we could invite twice the number of people to be unemployed in Canada. That should appeal to hon. members across the floor. We could invite another 50,000 people to go on unemployment insurance.

If our railways were placed on a paying basis, we could pay our senior citizens almost $250 a month. In light of all this, I wonder what people think who are watching the proceedings here when we are asked to support the railways' expenditures on all kinds of things. Do these people really credit us with much sanity? We must reconsider this kind of skullduggery. We have armed the minister with enough power to be able to tell the railways that we are concerned and to tell them what we, the people who have to use the railways, think of this whole deal. The railways must spend this money on things different from those in their present plans.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) is attempting to make a significant point in his two motions, namely, that railroads have slowly but surely tended to move away from their basic principle which, ever since early times in this Canada of ours, has been the movement of goods from east to west or west to east, west to our export markets or east to our export markets. The hon. member seeks to reduce expenditures available to the CNR on projects which are far removed from this basic concept. This intent is well worth noting, because we have a Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who after being in charge of that department for two years has thrown up his hands and said we have no transportation policy. That was an amazing statement for him to make publicly. The minister went to great lengths to blame this on the 1967 National Transportation Act. It suggested that competition should be the guiding factor for transportation within Canada, meaning for the movement of goods between the various parts of Canada and to our export markets.

In 1967 I said that competition would not play a major policing role with respect to our railroads. I said in 1967 that the act was wrong. I found it amazing that the Liberal government of that day pushed the act forward as strongly as it could. In fact, at the beginning of the debate on transportation in 1967, many Conservatives also thought that competition would solve our transportation problems. The competition theory arose out of the Royal Commission on Transportation headed by a westerner by the name of MacPherson. Everybody thought that if a westerner accepted the philosophy that transportation could be policed by competition, surely this would solve all the problems. But, Mr. Speaker, it has not been the solution, because really there has been no competition on the prairies between the various modes of transport during the last five years or, for that matter, during the last 55 years.

In the 1967 debate I likened the railway system to a public utility that must be policed and controlled to some extent by government. I well remember insisting on adding the word "adequate" to section 23 of the act. As originally introduced, it called for a sufficient transportation system. I insisted on adding the word "adequate" because to a prairie farmer that has great scope; it means the adequate movement of his produce to export markets. We did not see that adequate movement this past year, and last year was purely an example of years gone by and of years to come.

There must be a public authority to ensure that railroads perform the service for which they were established. In 1967 I argued at length that the "captive shipper" provision would never be used because it would be very difficult to prove a case. I also remember arguing that the public interest provision would only be utilized if provincial governments co-operated. In recent times we had the rapeseed case in which provincial governments banded together, in conjunction with the grain pools, and won their case before the transportation commission. It was a tremendous breakthrough.

Perhaps the act of 1967 was 20 years ahead of its time. I was amazed that initially it was not dealt with more in the House. It was dealt with at length in committee. It was debated all through the month of December. Prominent Conservatives in my party told me it was a good bill, that it was the best we could expect to get. I told them I did not think so and that they would see me here, eating my Christmas dinner in the House of Commons, because I would not let the bill pass before Christmas.

We adjourned on December 23, returned on January 9, and debated the bill every day from January 9 until January 30, or January 31, when it was finally passed but with several amendments suggested by myself and others. Now the Liberal Party say they have changed. They have changed because their front benches have changed. Surely there should have been some kind of guiding principle that they must have believed in at that time and still believe in today, or is it all just political expediency? Can they just go to the public and apologize for these mistakes, saying they are sorry they made the mistakes and asking for forgiveness? That is not good enough for me. They had all the experts over there and they should have had the foresight to understand the Canadian situation. They formed the government and they had the most members in this House. They should have understood the Canadian situation. They should have been in the position to suggest that competition would not work on the prairies and in the maritimes, but would only work within the province of Ontario where there already exists competition between various modes of transportation.

I think it is appropriate to comment on the Crowsnest pass rates established in the 1967 act. A most amazing thing happened about which the fourth estate did not even comment. In spite of that, it was still a most amazing thing. I remember making a speech at that time and referring to members of the fourth estate as a bunch of vultures who waited on high until they saw someone in trouble before swooping down and feasting upon the bones. In any event, the Crowsnest pass rates were debated at length at that time. We had a standing vote in this House and the government was defeated by a vote of 58 to 57. It was a free vote, and in a sense it was such a free vote that the then hon. member for Medicine Hat, Mr. Olson, who later joined the NDP—

An hon. Member: The Liberals.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, he was a Social Crediter then. That was a slip of the tongue. He was right-wing Social Crediter then. He was so mixed up he just sat in his seat and did not vote. He was on the verge of joining the Liberal Party and did not want to vote against western Canada, so he sat in his seat. He could have made that one of the rare occasions when this House of Commons had a tied voted. Had he voted, it would have been 58 to 58; but he was nervous and just sat in his seat. The issue was the Crownsnest pass rates at that time. I said this was wrong, just as transportation competition was wrong. I suggested that the Crowsnest pass rates represented the Magna Carta of western Canada and should be maintained. I still say that today.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is engaged in a very successful campaign with the railroads in travelling across this country and spreading doubt, in the eyes of the farmers, in respect of the Crowsnest pass rates. There is no doubt about that. He is carrying out a very successful endeavour. But let him go out and issue as a political judgment that the Crowsnest pass rates have to be done away with, and his head will be on the line and the guillotine will not fall at the next election. I predict that will happen if he is brave enough to put that suggestion publicly before the voters of western Canada.

I was elected chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, although that is not a job I particularly favour. Members wanted me to accept the job. I hope I can lend some clarity in the development of new policy. I believe it is my duty to assist members and this country in developing such new policy. Members of the committee on transportation requested its chairman to write to the Minister of Transport and the government House leader suggesting that the committee be given permission to travel in order to study these problems in the general movement of goods.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

We have an excellent port facility at Thunder Bay, but we have only one line on which to move boxcars into the port. We have a conglomeration of lines around the harbour which should be straightened out. There should be easier movement of grain into that port. I think the committee should look into this problem and the inherent difficulties with one line for unloading cars. Farmers suspect that huge costs are paid in demurrage charges. We have never been able to uncover how much. The Wheat Board works for the farmers, but it has never disclosed that cost.

Anyone interested in the operations of the railroads on the prairies knows that there is a question ahead in respect of rail line abandonment that will have to be solved by January 1, 1975. It will have to be decided whether the applications for abandonment should be set over for another year. Some people, particularly in the Manitoba government, advocate that point of view. I really do not agree with them. I have a rail line close to my home that moved 132 cars a week last year and received $132,000 in subsidies. That's pretty good—$1,000 per car. I think I could even move that much with my broken down, old Ford truck. Certainly the question of rail line abandonment will have to be looked into. Is the obvious course to put off rail line abandonment? I suggest that in my area the $132,000 would be better given to the municipality so that it could build a road over which the farmers could haul their grain perhaps to a more central delivery point. In any event, this is a question that should be looked at in order that the transport committee could clarify the situation.

Let me refer to the question of grain movement through the mountains. The tracks were laid in the early 1900s. The Crowsnest pass rates were developed following the laying of the track to what used to be called the old Kootenay Valley line.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Kettle Valley line.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for lending us that bit of wisdom. He has been here nearly as long as I have. That line used to be called the Kettle Valley line which was spoken about so often in this House by a former member from the area. This track was laid 50 or 60 years ago. Surely with the advances we have seen in technology, which have allowed us to move mountains, rock and dirt, we should be able to make some improvements. I suggested in this House a year and a half or two years ago that a line should be built across from Kamloops to the British Columbia railroad at Clinton. I am pleased to learn that some surveys are being carried out in the area.

An hon. Member: That's an example of motherhood.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Someone suggests that is an example of motherhood. But it was not the case two years ago. This should have been done ten years ago. There should have been an avenue for the movement of grain through the mountains other than by way of the Fraser canyon.

I have noted that the government intends to buy another 4,000 hopper cars. I suppose the Liberal Party can use this fact as propaganda. I wonder if hon. members know what the CTC has to say about hopper cars? It has been suggested that they are too heavy to travel on most of the track. It has been suggested by the CTC that the load should be reduced from 80 tons to 70 tons, considering the track in Canada. The real problem lies with the trackage in Canada because it will not stand the load; and the greater the load, the slower the speed. I learned this some time ago from my cousin who is an engineer and moves these cars through the mountains. He told me that whether the hopper cars are filled with wheat or potash, they cannot be moved at faster than 18 miles and hour because on the slightest curve the track will buckle and the cars will tip over into the Fraser canyon. He says he moves them at about 17 miles an hour because he does not want to go into the Fraser canyon with these hopper cars, and I don't blame him.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board may hold out as propaganda during the next election campaign, the fact that the government has bought 2,000 more hopper cars and intends to buy 4,000 more in order to speed up grain movement. If we have to move half as fast as we did before, I wonder how much more grain we are going to be able to carry. I never was very good at math, but I could always hold my own with the average.

Let us consider the Vancouver harbour. The most interesting feature of that facility is that there have been no major changes for years, although we did witness the Roberts Bank development. The Roberts Bank facility, built on 50 acres of land out on a peninsula, is tremendously important for the movement of coal. When asked to build another 50-acre facility like Roberts Bank for the movement of grain, a product more important to the overall economy than coal, the authorities said no. Consequently we move that grain through the congested port of Vancouver.

To be successful, a port must meet two conditions. It must be accessible from the ocean and it must be accessible from land. How does Vancouver stack up? I have put on record figures pertaining to the period between 1967 and 1972. In 1967 this government spent about $8 million on developing Vancouver; in 1972 the expenditure went down to about $2 million. Vancouver handles about 27 per cent of the total tonnage going in and out of this country, but fails to compete with Seattle in the handling of containers and the movement of grain. Why? Because there is a congested track situation on the island side of the port of Vancouver.

What can be done? Additional railway trackage should be built over Indian Arm Inlet on the north shore and over Burrard Inlet. That would facilitate the movement of grain into the Neptune terminals and the Saskatchewan pool elevator terminals. At present it is so difficult to unload unit trains that it is necessary to split them. With additional track they could be handled at the Neptune terminals. Even the Saskatchewan wheat pool has difficulty unloading such trains. They must be broken up into three or four sections before being processed through the wheat pool elevators. This should be looked at. If the government wants to establish a transportation policy, it should tackle such matters as well as looking at the Crowsnest pass rates.

Any talk of Crowsnest pass rates invariably brings up discussion of agreed charges.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member may continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House. I will clarify my point about agreed charges. Agreed charges are much more onerous, under any system of cost analysis, than the Crowsnest pass rates. The Crowsnest pass rates account for about 11 per cent of railroad revenue. Away back in 1954 agreed charges accounted for about 3.5 per cent of total railway revenues. Although I do not have the precise figures, for which I apologize to the House, I suggest that today such charges make up about 30 per cent of railroad revenues. These charges are detrimental to shippers who want to move 100 per cent of their products by rail to any given destination.

A couple of years ago I listened to the secretary of the MacPherson royal commission on transport speaking at a seminar at York University, Toronto. He is far more knowledgeable than I am on this subject. He said that agreed charges are a bigger curse to the railroads and the shipping industry than the Crowsnest pass rates. Agreed charges are outlawed in the European Common Market. They are not allowed in the United States. Yet we allow railroads in this country to offer a shipper a contract for shipping his products by railroad. If a smaller producer comes along and asks for the same rate, he is refused the rate and charged three times what it costs the big shipper to move his goods.

The National Transportation Act suggested that the answer would be found through competition, yet that act did not come to grips with the problem. Agreed charges have been permitted. They have tended to destroy competition. The sections of the act to do with trucking have not yet been proclaimed; consequently, trucks do not provide competition for the railroads. On the prairies, trucks could be the only mode of competition, there being no waterways. So there is much to be done with regard to bringing in a new transportation policy.

I hope that this whole question can be considered during the present session. I certainly hope that the transport committee can assist in helping the government to develop for Canadians a new transportation policy.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, when one talks about the problems in transportation one is really talking of the nuts and bolts of what put this country together, what is helping to keep it together and to keep the economy ticking. It was tragic indeed to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) say that this government has no transportation policy. That was tragic indeed for producers and manufacturers from one side of the country to the other who are compelled by the existing service to agree with the minister. That is the situation in which Canada finds itself.

Perhaps the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) will not object if I say that in many instances the trucking industry is not competitive. The transportation industry should meet Canada's needs. That being so, if the industry is to meet the needs of those who want to move goods across this country, there is a field for trucks and a field for the railroads. Only too rarely are these two modes of transport truly competitive, to the advantage of producers, consumers and manufacturers. Each mode is governed by its own laws. It is tragic indeed to find that the transportation system across Canada has deteriorated to the point at which manufacturers must go into the transportation business, to the point at which they themselves can move according to schedule products which they have produced and, on the return trip, bring back on schedule raw materials they require. At one time the railways performed this service ably. That was the service which helped us to build and develop this country.

If perhaps I repeat some things which were said earlier today, I say them because I think they bear repeating. At one time it was possible in my area to call Montreal at five o'clock in the afternoon Atlantic standard time and obtain supplies or parts for repairs by express, which arrived by noon the next day. This took about 18 hours. Today, I very much doubt if you can get something loaded onto a car in 18 hours, let alone have it transported to a destination 450 miles away. Yet for year after year we have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into our transportation system which abuses this country with the poor service it gives.

There is much talk about building new railway cars. You could build a line of new cars stretching from Vancouver to Sydney, and if you cannot move them on schedule, if you cannot provide service to an industry which needs service, you have wasted your money. I wonder, as the hon. member for Crowfoot wondered, are we not wasting our money by providing cars for the railway system without first imposing on that system an onus for service? They are operating without any regulations, demands or guarantees to provide better service. Our transportation policy is merely a token to the grain producers of this country which in the long range may or may not do them some good. The apple industry in Nova Scotia is forced to buy containers to ship their product with the help of the government of Nova Scotia, yet we hear the Minister of Transport say we have no transportation policy. Every member of this House must say "aye, aye" to that because it is a fact.

We see processors of various goods and services buying their own trucks, delivering their own wares and finding return loads for those trucks in an area in which the rail service has failed utterly to deliver on schedule. Yet we have a bill before us asking to build towers and hotels and buy stock in a railroad—go the full gamut. However, we are not saying to the railroads or the transportation system of Canada, "It is high time you began to deliver." I do not buy the idea that the government does not have any authority over the railroads. One must be compelled to think that when the government has no authority, it does not want any authority and that it would not know how to handle the problem if it had. Otherwise it would have the authority. It took no time at all to impose an export tax on oil, a commodity over which it was presumed we had no control. It took no time to make a decision there would be no refineries built on the east coast of Canada, even though that was within provincial rights. They had authority to do that. I submit the government has the authority but does not know how to use it.

[Mr. McCain.]

It was rather interesting to listen to the report of the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission before the transport committee. One began to wonder whether he should be in the "Ice Capades" or the Winnipeg Ballet. Verbally he has the alacrity to perform in either. Physically he might lack some of the attributes he would require. No answers were forthcoming except that there was no authority, no regulation and the CTC is in fact a completely sterile organization without authority, and Canada suffers along as best it can without control over the transportation system.

We talk about competitive rates. Let us look at some of the rates that exist. Let us look at a product which is moved from Ontario to Quebec, a distance of over 500 miles, for 27 cents per hundredweight. The same product is moved within the province of Nova Scotia, a distance of 210 miles, for 47 cents per hundredweight. We talk about competitive rates. We talk about equality of opportunity in Canada. We talk about equality of opportunity in transportation. It is time we stopped talking and started doing something about this. I can cite another product on which the rates are the same. It involves a haul of something over 750 miles versus a haul of 425 miles. The rates are within one cent per hundredweight. We have no control over or competition in transportation.

I know I am repeating myself, but I wish there were some action. We look at the anomalous situation in which it is cheaper to transport some raw materials in the province of Ontario to the southwest corner of New Brunswick than to transfer them across New Brunswick to the southwest corner. I agree with the minister wholeheartedly that we have no transportation policy. I object to the members of this House being asked to vote money to continue a situation such as this. I have taken up this particular rate in New Brunswick. I get no answers and no satisfaction. There is no reason why it should be cheaper to bring it from Ontario by rail than to haul it across New Brunswick by rail, approximately half the distance.

Let us take a look at the export structure. Until approximately ten years ago it was the policy of the government to encourage trade with other countries and make us more competitive in world markets. However, since the present transportation act came into being, and since competition and supposed profitability of operation on every mile of track came into effect, we are out of competition with the United States on some items which the Atlantic area wishes to export. We are out of competition to the point of something like 25 cents per hundred in farm products. This often means the difference between profit and loss. Why don't we have a policy? Again I repeat myself, but this is a matter which was laid before the House early in the last session.

It is time that, along with the hundreds of millions of dollars we vote year after year for the transportation system of Canada, we said to the railways, "Learn to serve." We should tell that system of computers, modern engines and modern cars, "Move this product on schedule for the service of Canadian citizens." Instead, this product is forced to the roads. The highways are cluttered with trucks which seem to be making money while we subsidize the rail system of this country.

It is a strange thing, but under the act all rates for the rails of Canada must be compensatory. Under certain circumstances, the government of Canada has chosen to pay a subsidy here and there. We have spent money from coast to coast in Canada on subsidies to support the rail structure of this country. I do not particularly quarrel with that, but while the Minister of Transport has no transportation policy CNR runs up one deficit after another. Under the act, every rate in Canada must be compensatory. How can this happen? It is illegal. It cannot happen. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we do not have competition. We are not obeying the law which says rates must be compensatory. We are no longer encouraging our exporters. We are no longer capable of hauling processed products by rail. To a large extent, the rails have yielded this traffic to the highways.

We are no longer able to move apples from the Okanagan Valley eastward or southward. They have to be put on trucks and then on cars on the American railroad line to be moved. Tens of thousands of dollars were spent in each of the last three years because our system cannot get them to the border to put them on the existing United States market. The potato industry in Canada is hamstrung by rates, some of which are anomalous, some of which are non-competitive and some of which are exorbitant. We see an act ignored by the government.

We are asked to vote hundreds of millions of dollars to keep a nationally-owned railroad on the rails at the expense of the people, when that railroad does not observe the law of the land because the government does not have a transportation policy. It is a tragic day when this House, by the very nature of the bill before us, is compelled to pass that bill because the service to Canadian citizens would suffer so badly if it did not. It is high time that the transportation policy of Canada was formed. It should include the ports, airways, railways and roads of Canada. It must be made to serve this country in an economic and competitive way so that service will be the by-word of the transportation industry, not just a slang word which is talked about when they are trying to sell and forgotten about when they have sold.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in discussing CN financing it seeems to me we should take account of policy enunciated by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and by the minister responsible for the administration of the Canadian Wheat Board. I do not know what the minister responsible for the Wheat Board had to do with the abandonment of a hotel in Saskatoon. Incidentally, he shares with me the responsibility of being a member for that city. I do not know how much responsibility the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, who represents half the city of Saskatoon, has for the sale by the CN for a valuable property there at much less than its assessed value.

An hon. Member: He was consulted.

Mr. Gleave: At the same time, the same minister makes commitments on behalf of the government and says what the CN or the railroads shall or shall not do for the movement of grain in Saskatchewan. So he hies himself down to the city of Estevan in southern Saskatchewan and says prairie farmers will get 4,000 more hopper cars to move grain, but they will temporarily lose the use of 1,000 grain elevators.

So apparently there is a kind of trade-off. But the joker in the pack is that the minister who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board had nothing to say whatsoever about how many grain elevators there are to be in western Canada or the province of Saskatchewan. I don't know if the Board of Grain Commissioners has anything to say about how many grain elevators we are to have in the province of Saskatchewan or western Canada. They appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture the other day. They were not even responsible for the bonding or for seeing that the farmers were paid in full for the grain they had delivered, at least in the province of Alberta.

I have real doubt whether either the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to whom the Board of Grain Commissioners is responsible know very much about what is happening in the grain business. The minister says the 4,000 cars are worth between $100 million and $125 million. I am quoting from a statement reported to have been made by him. He said the government was prepared to put out the money forthwith, but whether any part of that money would be repaid by the railways was not to be decided until a new grain transportation policy had been worked out.

In other words, he is going to shovel out the dough, but he has received no commitment from the railways as to how they will use these 4,000 new cars or how they are going to pay for them, or how much. Then he went on to say he would predict that short-term measures to improve grain transport would bring a speedy end to current snarls in the system. That is an excellent objective. He went on to talk about some of the lines that are blocked with snow and over which no trains are moving at the moment. He said the lines taken out of service would be mainly those obstructed by snow or wet conditions, but lines would not necessarily be brought back into service as soon as the snow or the water disappeared. What in the world is this man talking about?

Does the Minister of Transport know what he is talking about? Does the CTC know what he is talking about? Has he any commitment, anyway, to a thorough going, serviceable transportation system? Does he know? Does anybody know? The report goes on the say:

Mr. Lang emphasized that closures do not constitute a first step toward any permanent abandonment program. On the contrary, the minister said he would press the railways to ensure they upgrade more lines to bear the 63,00 pounds of a loaded hopper car.

Well, at least the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has recognized that half the trackage in western Canada will not carry hopper cars. One of the first areas of business is to upgrade the railroad system and the roadbed in western Canada so that grain can effectively be moved. Mr. Speaker, the policy and the service of the railroad leaves something to be desired. I am not referring only to the movement of grain. You pick up the phone in Saskatoon when you want to send a telegram, and do you know, Mr. Speaker, that in a city with a population of 160,000 the guy or the girl who answers will say, "If it is a case of emergency, phone Winnipeg to send the telegram." That is the kind of service we are getting in the city of Saskatoon in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Gleave: I will tell you the rest of the story tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SPORTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMPS TO TRAIN ATHLETES FOR OLYMPICS—SUGGESTED USE OF ABANDONED CANADIAN FORCES BASE AT CLINTON, ONTARIO

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak further to the question directed to the acting minister of national health and welfare on March 21 as reported in Hansard at page 731. I should like to bring it to the attention of the ministry that when consideration was being given to the closure of Canadian forces bases in 1969, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said at that time that it was conceivable that in some areas closure would not have the significant consequences about which the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), I believe it was, was concerned. He went on:

● (2200)

But in cases where there would be significant hardship, as the hon. member says, I can give an undertaking that the government would not proceed with the closure without having considered alternative ways of alleviating that hardship.

It was also suggested by the hon. member for Malpeque that what he had in mind was such areas. In another answer the Prime Minister said:

If that is the case, we would give the type of consideration which the hon. member is suggesting before making any announcement of such closures. We do realize that some bases are not economic units and if any such bases were closed in less developed parts of Canada we hope that they would be linked to some other action by the government to ensure that growth centres spring up in the areas where closure is contemplated.

The area I am speaking about tonight is just such a slow-growth area which was greatly affected by the closure of the Canadian force base at Clinton. I should also like to bring to the attention of the minister some of the facilities that are located at that base. There is accommodation that would practically meet the required needs for living quarters. There are at least 500 rooms available for living accommodation. There are two up to date mess halls at least 200 can be fed at one sitting in each.

There is a tremendous gymnasium of some 20,000 square feet, a swimming pool with adequate changing rooms, and an artificial ice arena available on the same location with year-round ice facilities. There is a wonderful curling rink with all facilities, an indoor and an outdoor 25-yard rifle range, an eight-lane bowling alley and a reasonable amount of housing in the area for families. The base is also within ten miles of excellent sailing facilities on Lake Huron, the cleanest of the Great Lakes. There are also seven golf courses within a 20-mile radius and excellent cross-country skiing facilities in the area. Besides this there are seven or eight other arenas within a 20-mile radius and a 50-acre development area for track and field facilities in the same area as the accommodation. It seems to me that too often there is a tendency to have facilities such as for Olympic athletic training in larger centres rather than smaller centres where more emphasis might be placed on the task at hand.

The present proprietors of this base, the present owners are prepared to finance any necessary changes to suit what is needed for Olympic training provided an adequate contract arrangement is set up. The Ontario Development Corporation has provided the only assistance to date in an endeavour to establish some businesses operating there at the present time. The proprietors have, since purchasing the base, been very active in pursuing uses for the facilities to benefit the surrounding area and also Canada as a whole. In this regard they have been very responsible. I also have a book that outlines all the facilities at the base and I should be glad to pass it on to the minister.

I also recognize that when the minister said on March 17, I believe it was, that Canadian athletes training for the 1976 Montreal Olympics may have use of a national multisport training camp before year's end, he also said that the training camp idea is being given serious consideration by the co-ordinating committee of Game Plan '76. I trust that the minister's representative here this evening will not hide behind this fact. He also said that this was a committee made up of delegates from Sport Canada, the Canada Olympic Association, the Canadian Trust and the provinces.

I wish to advise the ministry that I will have letters going forward to these people tomorrow, and I hope I will get the backing of the Department of National Health and Welfare for what I am asking at this time. Also, many members received a letter from the president and commissioner-general of the Montreal Olympic Games dated December 18, 1972, expressing best wishes and asking for co-operation of all members and leaders in the Canadian community. I replied thanking him for his wishes and asking for his co-operation. I assured him of my co-operation. I mentioned the facilities at the former Canadian forces base at Clinton and asked for his co-operation in recommending to the federal government that it give an undertaking, in respect of providing facilities, to look at this space and in recommendations to the government that it give some thought to using it for training purposes. I did not receive a reply to my letter.

I simply say that in my opinion co-operation in this country is a two-way street and I trust the minister will have a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when this question was raised originally by the hon. member on March 21, I responded indicating that I would bring the question to the attention of the minister. In the passage of time this question has been discussed. I would like to point out that the feasibility of permanent sites for the moment is unlikely because of the difficulty of assembling athletes in any one site for any length of time, and the adaptability of such sites to facilitate the conditions for an Olympic program of some 20 sports.

Up until now our program has used the hosting of multiple sports events such as the PanAmerican Games and the Canada Games to develop facilities of international standards to be used afterwards for training purposes. I should like to point out to the hon. member who suggests Clinton, Ontario, be the site that this is a rather involved question. The decision is not to be taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), but rather by officials of Game Plan '76.

On February 22, 1973, the Minister of National Health and Welfare agreed to the establishment of the co-ordinating committee of Game Plan '76. This committee consists of the Canadian Olympic Association, the Olympic Trust, Sport Canada and some of the provinces and represents the financing agencies concerned with the development of sport and the co-ordination of 1976 Olympic plans. The whole purpose of Game Plan is to give specific thrust to the technical development of sport such as training camps, additional competitive experience, talent identification programs, coaches' training opportunities, sponsorship of national youth teams, sponsoring technical coaches and technical co-ordinators, eventually sport research and two other projects of vital importance.

Game Plan '76 will be seriously exploring for the two winters preceding the Olympics the development of a national multisport training camp. The camp would have access to Olympic class facilities giving our coaches, athletes, sport-medicine and other support people ideal opportunities for working together toward their goal. The decision of Game Plan '76 will be difficult and must take into consideration many things such as the facilities required and climate, to name only two.

PENITENTIARIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE OF PSYCHIATRISTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak briefly on a topic, one might say a critical issue, which concerns not only me but most Canadians. I am referring to the very serious lack of psychiatric treatment available to inmates of federal penitentiaries.

In reply to a question by me to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) on March 21 and again on March 29, the minister admitted that the penitentiary service was not able to attract qualified psychiatrists. I find this to be a deplorable state of affairs in this enlightened age in which we are supposed to be living when one considers three basic points: one, that most inmates suffer from some kind of mental or emotional stress; two, that our federal prisons are the most dehumanizing institutions in the country; and three, that most inmates must some day be released into society without proper treatment and rehabilitation.

No wonder society is outraged when convicted criminals are paroled or released at termination of sentence and commit other heinous crimes such as rape, child molesting or vicious assault, all of which are triggered by deep-rooted personality and psychological defects. What good is it to release these persons if they have not been properly treated while incarcerated? Or, one may also ask, what rehabilitative purpose is served on society's behalf to lock up these convicts if they cannot receive proper medical treatment and their term in prison only serves to make them worse?

It is no excuse for the Solicitor General to simply admit, and I quote him from Hansard of March 29, 1974, at page 986, that—

> It is difficult to attract psychiatrists away from very large, lucrative practices in the private sector.

Surely he and his officials can come up with a better answer than that. Perhaps they should concern themselves with the reasons it is difficult to attract these highly skilled practitioners from the private sector. I consider the answer which the Solicitor General gave to me in the House as a non-answer.

It is true that some inmates are so seriously ill mentally that they should never be released into society. It is also true that psychiatry in the field of criminal psychopathology is sadly lacking in effective treatment due mainly to the reluctance of governments to spend adequate funds for research, and the reluctance of psychiatrists to practice medicine in such gloomy, anti-professional and dehumanizing environments as prisons. This latter reluctance is understandable; the former is inexcusable.

We have only 14 full-time psychiatrists in our federal penitentiary service, and about 45 psychologists, to serve the mental and emotional needs of over 9,000 inmates. This is an utter disgrace. If a son or daughter of a rich father needs psychiatric help, they usually get that help in what the minister terms "the private sector" because money buys that help. The taxpayers of Canada, most of whom are not rich and cannot afford psychiatric help for their own children, pay over $10,000 a year per inmate in taxes to keep our inmates behind bars, only to see them released before they are mentally or emotionally stable enough to be released. This situation is deplorable and society is more than justified in demanding both protection and reform.

I do not accept the faint, half-hearted excuses of the Solicitor General when he says he cannot attract adequate numbers of psychiatrists and psychologists to cope with the problem of proper medical treatment of inmates which has been almost totally neglected for far too long. At the same time, I pay tribute to the few physicians who have the dedication to work under such difficult and demanding circumstances caused by the penitentiary services. It is indeed a sad commentary on our penal system today that hardened criminals with serious mental disorders which have gone untreated are flung back into society before they are mentally fit for society. It is also an inexcusably dangerous practice that threatens the security and safety of our law-abiding citizens.

Those inmates who can respond to psychiatric treatment should be removed from our prisons which only make them worse. They should be kept under close supervision in special psychiatric clinics or hospitals where psychiatrists and psychologists can treat them in a professionally medical atmosphere. These hospitals should be close to university hospitals where specialists and visiting professors can also assist those psychiatrists in the service. In this way the psychiatrist can work in an urban, not remote location close to his peers and in touch with the latest therapeutic techniques and methods. You just cannot attract psychiatrists to work behind prison walls.

Second, I recommend that the entire medical branch of the federal penitentiary service be removed from the authority of the commissioner and his directives and be set up as a separate unit under the supervision of regional medical superintendents with their own budgets. Doctors resent taking orders from non-medical personnel however competent they may be in administering a penitentiary.

Third, I recommend that the Solicitor General, instead of making lame excuses about salaries, raise the incomes of psychiatrists and psychologists in the federal penitentiary service so that competent personnel will be attracted to the service. If only these three recommendations were carried out we would before long notice a very real difference in the way in which those inmates in need of psychiatric treatment respond to rehabilitation. It is time the Solicitor General brought the penal system in Canada out of the dark ages.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for many years there has been a critical shortage of psychiatrists in the Canadian Penitentiary Service. This was one of the several reasons which prompted the formation of the Advisory Board of Psychiatric Consultants whose final report "The General Program for the Development of Psychiatric Services in Federal Correctional Services in Canada" has now been widely distributed. As indicated in that report, a major part of the problem was the siting of many of our institutions in areas remote from large urban or university centres. It is our intention in the department to try to avoid this situation in the future, and this is indicated by the recent agreement with the University of Saskatchewan whereby the penitentiary service will construct a regional medical centre actually on the campus of that university.

It is relevant to note that the regional medical centre in B.C. has a complement of five full-time psychiatrists including the medical director, and that the only vacant position is that of clinical director. In fact applications have been received from additional psychiatrists to work at the centre, but we have been unable to accept these as they were not compatible with the position of clinical director, and other positions were fully staffed. A good relationship exists between this centre and the University of British Columbia. The head of the department of psychiatry and the head of the department of psychology act as consultant psychiatrist and consultant psychologist respectively to that centre.

In the Ontario region two vacant positions exist in the regional medical centre, namely, those of clinical director and staff psychiatrist. An applicant for the latter position is being interviewed this week. In the Quebec region we have presently three full-time psychiatrists and it is not intended to make further appointments until the decision with regard to the extended use of the Philippe Pinel Institute is made. A further proposal from the University of Sherbrooke to provide services to Cowansville institution is under study.

Serious difficulty is experienced in obtaining psychiatrists for an institution such as the Saskatchewan penitentiary for the reasons which I have previously mentioned, namely, its remoteness from large urban or university centres. However, I am pleased to say that a psychiatrist has expressed interest in this position and will be interviewed in the very near future.

The formation of the Advisory Board of Psychiatric Consultants has helped greatly to decrease the image of professional isolation which psychiatrists previously held with regard to the Canadian Penitentiary Service. It is obvious from the patterns established in B.C. and Ontario that the formation of regional medical centres is and will be of further assistance in decreasing this sense of professional isolation and attracting an increasing number of adequately qualified psychiatrists. Continuing efforts have been made by the Public Service Commission to attract applications for these positions and in February of last year the director of medical services and a public Service Commission representative visited the United Kingdom, following advertisements in appropriate journals, to screen applications from interested psychiatrists. While only two of the applicants eventually came to Canada, these were individuals of high professional calibre who are making a good contribution to our efforts to provide psychiatric treatment in the Canadian Penitentiary Service. We are currently in the process of negotiating affiliation agreements with the University of British Columbia, the University of Saskatchewan and Queen's University and the success of these agreements will obviously further assist us in recruiting psychiatrists of good professional standing.

While the situation is still subject to further improvement, I think we have come a long way with the establishment of regional medical centres in Quebec, British Columbia and Ontario and our future plans for the prairie and maritime regions should further help us to ensure that psychiatric services of high quality are available to inmates of the Canadian Penitentiary Service. Needless to say, the problem of recruiting psychiatrists is not unique to the Canadian Penitentiary service but is experienced also by the provincial mental hospitals in many provinces.

BROADCASTING

REFERENCE OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION REPORT TO COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the grave and extensive consequences and implications that the CRTC report entitled "Radio Frequencies Are Public Property" will have on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and broadcasting in Canada in general I move, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras):

That the House should refer the report in question to the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for its full study and recommendations, and that the CBC and CRTC should abstain from implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the report before the committee completes its study and reports to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

GRAIN

MARKETING OF FEED GRAINS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent for a motion which I consider to be urgent and pressing. In view of the opposition of thousands of prairie farmers to the proposed removal of feed grains from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, as well as the concern of their organizations such as the wheat pools and the National Farmers Union, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House support the principle of orderly marketing and instruct the government to maintain the Canadian Wheat Board as the sole marketing agency for feed grains.

THE MINISTRY

ALLEGED COALITION GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That in the interests of the Canadian people being fully informed at all times and in order that historians may accurately record present-day events for the benefit of future generations, this House requests the Prime Minister to make a detailed statement of all arrangements or agreements that may exist between his government and the New Democratic Party which have assisted in creating the present form of coalition government in Canada.

SHIPPING

LEGISLATION ON COASTING TRADE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the significant loss of employment to Canadian seamen due to the delay in implementation of a Canadian coasting trade, outlined in the government's statement of policy on September 24, 1973, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to introduce forthwith the Coasting Trade Act which received cabinet approval on March 14, 1974.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, COMPENSATION FOR OIL IMPORT COSTS, AND REGULATION OF PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-18, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY

SOURCE OF INFORMATION THAT CANADIAN FUEL MARKETERS LIMITED HAD OPTIONS TO PURCHASE HEATING OIL—INDEPENDENT CHECKS BEFORE PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Supply and Services indicating that in the course of meetings of the technical advisory committee that was established to advise the minister and the department about the supply of oil it became known to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited had options to purchase a certain amount of heating fuel on the world market, would the minister tell the House very briefly how this became known and could he table what documentation exists in this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it was through participation of the CFM representatives on the technical advisory committee.

Mr. Stanfield: Since this company, Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited, and its parent, Shell Canada Limited, were both represented on the technical advisory committee, can the minister tell the House what independent checks were made of world markets, what independent checks were undertaken before the Department of Supply and Services was requested to purchase these supplies reported as being available?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, just to correct the Leader of the Opposition, it is my understanding that CFM is a subsidiary of Shell International rather than Shell Canada. My officials made their own check of the international market, the Rotterdam and New York prices which, of course, are publicly posted prices.

PRICE PAID BY GOVERNMENT FOR HEATING OIL PURCHASED FROM ROUMANIA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Since part of the arrangement with Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited evidently involved picking up an existing contract of that company for five million gallons of oil from Roumania, would the minister tell the House what price the government paid for that oil, specifically the Roumanian oil covered by that arrangement for five million gallons?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that figure with me. My recollection is that the Minister of Supply and Services indicated that he would be making public details of the individual options once they were exercised.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the minister tell the House specifically what price the government paid or is due to pay for that oil covered by a contract for five million gallons to be purchased from Roumania?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we paid for Roumanian oil 99½ cents per gallon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Goyer: For Caribbean oil we paid from 60 cents to 86 cents, for an average of 79 cents altogether. I have to explain that if we paid such a high price for the Roumanian oil it was because it was part of the agreement with his company that we could not have any Caribbean oil if we were not ready to pay this price for five million gallons of Roumanian oil.

BROKERAGE FEES PAID TO CANADIAN FUEL MARKETERS ON OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the minister indicate what brokerage fees were paid to Canadian Fuel Marketers as brokers in this particular transaction?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, actually we did not pay any fees to this company for the Caribbean oil. We paid 1½ per cent for the Roumanian oil. The average fee in the trade is 2 per cent, so this was a very good agreement under the then prevailing circumstances.

GASOLINE AND HOME HEATING OIL—INTENTION OF COMPANIES TO RAISE PRICE FOR REASONS OTHER THAN INCREASE IN CRUDE PRICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the fact that some oil companies have announced that they intend to raise the price of gasoline and home heating fuel by two cents a gallon for reasons other than the increase in the price of crude. What companies have informed the minister of their intention in this regard, what amount of increase do they intend to impose on the consuming public, and has the minister concurred in these decisions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not concurred in any decision with regard to any price increase because of other costs. Perhaps I could give the hon. gentleman the details in committee this afternoon. I do not have them with me.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister said last Friday, as recorded on page 980 of Hansard, that it was estimated that any such increase for reasons other than the increase in the price of crude oil ought to be in the neighbourhood of half a cent per gallon, and as the minister has said that the government does not intend to scrutinize these price increases prior to their being imposed, does this mean that the two cents per gallon increase will be permitted and that the government may look into this matter later and decide what action it will take, if any?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will expect to see the facts in this regard from the companies. Of course, if there is an increase beyond that justified by the facts, the companies, in turn, would lose this in the form of compensation for offshore payments.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister frankly whether it is not apparent that, even though last Friday he assured the House that, despite statements by the oil companies that they were going to raise prices west of the Ottawa valley by 10 cents per gallon and east of the Ottawa valley by 5 cents a gallon, the increases would be only 8 cents and 3 cents, actually the increases will be 10 cents and 5 cents except that they are cutting off the dog's tail by inches rather than in one fell swoop?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House what our estimate was. Of course, the companies will have to come forward and establish the facts on which they seek to increase prices.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe and then the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and is supplementary to my leader's question. Can the minister indicate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member wanted to ask a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. In fairness, I think the Chair should recognize first the hon. member for Champlain.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF REVISION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY IN VIEW OF REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the results of the government linguistic policy are hardly satisfactory and since the findings of the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages are rather disappointing, is the Prime Minister considering a review of the government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the first step would be to obtain the support of the Social Credit Party of Canada for that policy. The member is not very well placed to complain about the inefficiency of our measures, because he did not support them in due time.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, who seems to blame us for something, whether he is prepared to discuss our realistic proposals made in the House, but which were not carried out even if they were practical. Since the solutions suggested by the government seem inefficient, is he prepared to consider ours?

ENERGY

TO-DAY'S PRICE FOR FUEL OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT—KNOWLEDGE OF REPRESENTATION OF CANADIAN FUEL MARKETERS ON TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can he indicate what would be today's price for the fuel oil he purchased at 99½ cents, and was he aware at the time of the purchase that Canadian Fuel Marketers were represented on the technical advisory committee?

● (1420)

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question completely, I have to state that by late November Rotterdam prices had reached 89 cents per imperial gallon. Today, Rotterdam prices are averaging 41 cents per imperial gallon. New York cargo buyers—this applies to Caribbean oil—were willing to pay 84 cents per imperial gallon in mid-December. Today, New York import prices are as low as 30 cents per imperial gallon.

Mr. Stevens: Did the Minister of Supply and Services or his department know that Canadian Fuel Marketers were in fact represented on the technical advisory committee which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated were the first to notify that this Roumanian option was available?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer this question because I do not know the answer.

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATION OF GENERAL PIPELINE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES—POSITION OF PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the government of Canada currently negotiating a general pipeline agreement with the United States government? If so, what are the general outlines and objectives of that particular agreement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with United States officials in this regard. At the moment one could not describe them as being so specific as negotiations. The Americans are currently considering their position.

Mr. Ritchie: Will approval for the Gas Arctic pipeline by the respective regulatory agencies of the two countries be contingent on the general pipeline agreement or will it stand by itself as a separate entity?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I really cannot comment with regard to the federal power commission in the United States. With regard to the National Energy Board, as the hon. member knows that is covered by a statute which sets out the conditions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON TWO CANADIANS KIDNAPPED IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister give the House the latest news concerning the fate of two Canadians, Donald Werderfort, from Calgary, and Clifford James, from Walkerton, Ontario, who have been held since Tuesday in Ethiopia by members of the Erythrean Liberation Front?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our embassy in Addis Ababa has been in touch with the company and, of course, with the families of these two Canadians. Our understanding is that negotiations for their release are proceeding. As far as we can learn, they are in good physical condition and we are hopeful they will be released.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECASTS RESPECTING REAL GROWTH

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As today's issue of Statistics Canada advises that average weekly real earnings in Canada are decreasing at an annual rate greater than 7 per cent, will the minister outline what plans he has for reversing this very disturbing trend?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement which is very general in terms and normally should be made on motions. The hon. member might like to ask the question in more specific terms.

Mr. Hees: I will put it in an easier way for the minister to answer. As the organization with by far the best record of economic forecasting in Canada, the conference board, recently forecast a drop in real growth in Canada from 7.1 per cent last year to 4 per cent this year, will the minister advise the House what increase in real growth is predicted by himself and his department this year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ought to remind the hon. member that, despite the high regard I have for the Institute of Qualitative Analysis of the University of Toronto, the only organization which was accurate as to the real growth of the country in 1973 was the federal Department of Finance with seven as against 7.1. As for future forecasts, that would be an appropriate subject for a budgetary speech.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister then admit that he and his department have no idea what the real growth in Canada is likely to be this year or will he make an attempt to advise the Canadian people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member will agree that the question is argumentative.

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF DECISION TO BUILD OIL PIPELINE FROM SARNIA TO MONTREAL

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the proposed Sarnia-Montreal pipeline. Since the extension of the existing Sarnia-Toronto pipeline could meet the immediate needs of the Montreal market and since the first leg, from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal, of the projected all-Canadian route could meet future requirements of the Montreal market, does the minister intend to review and reassess the government's decision to go ahead with the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline? If not, why not?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to repeat to the hon. gentleman answers I have given him twice before, the Sarnia-Montreal extension will provide not only for part of the needs of the Montreal market in 1976 but will provide a strategic ability to expand the pipeline capacity in the event of an interruption in the future. Under those circumstances, the suggestion of the hon. member really advocates less strategic reserve for the immediate future and a delay of a prolonged nature.

Mr. Symes: Since it is estimated that the future Montreal market will involve a demand of some 500,000 barrels a day and since this is not expected to be met in the next two or three years, and since it could be met by an extension of the pipeline from Sault Ste. Marie, does the minister intend to review the whole project?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman is suggesting we should build two pipelines where one would do, and that does not seem to make sense to me.

MEASURES TO DEAL WITH INFLATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Noting that recent statistics suggest that the average weekly earnings of Canadians—the earnings of people who derive most of their income from salaries—are still rising at a substantially lower rate than the rate of increase in the consumer price index, may I ask the Minister of Finance, given the fact that we have not had a budget for 14 months and given the fact that we are not promised a budget very soon, whether he has any ideas or any proposals to present to parliament soon to deal with the underlying problems of inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The government has continually responded to the problems of inflation, specifically by increasing the supply of food, by increasing the capacity of the industrial sector of the country and by protecting those Canadians whose incomes are most vulnerable and who are least able to protect themselves. As to a budgetary response, that will be forthcoming when the budget is presented.

Mr. Gillies: Given the fact that the selective price control program the government is now bringing in, backed by massive subsidies, is not working, I am wondering whether any specific measures will be introduced before the budget is brought down to deal with the problem Canadians are facing in the short run. In the long run, obviously we can cope with it, but in the short run what is the government going to do about this problem which is so serious for so many Canadians at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the rules allowed I could recite once again to the hon. member the series of specific measures already taken in terms of increasing disposable incomes, subsidies, reduction in personal taxes, reduction in commodity taxes and so on. But I know the rules will not allow me to expand on that aspect.

DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LONG-TERM POLICY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the many speeches and statements made by the Minister of Agriculture over the past few months dealing with a long-term dairy policy, an announcement of which was to be made by April 1, and because last Friday's statement by the minister with respect to long-term policy mentioned only a consultation process between the Canadian Dairy Council and producers, is the minister prepared to make a definitive policy statement about long-term policies for the dairy industry and, if so, when may we expect to hear such a statement?

● (1430)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware of the fact that we do believe in consultation, and I am sure he has read the Canadian Federation of Agriculture's brief asking for more consultation. We have a proposal to offer to these people who are concerned with the dairy industry in Canada and we are ready to proceed with it. We have directed the Canadian Dairy Commission to proceed in that fashion and we hope they will very shortly.

Mr. Jarvis: In light of the recommendations made by various agricultural groups for a five-year dairy policy, as long ago as 1970 by the federal task force and most lately by the Food Prices Review Board, for whom I know the minister has the greatest respect, is the minister's only response to these demands to authorize the CDC to consult with producers, or does the minister have parts of a long-term policy that he can reveal to us now?

Oral Questions

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Dairy Commission has instructions to proceed under certain guidelines in regard to developing a policy. I have said to the House that we are going to develop a policy not for five years but for as long as there is need for a dairy industry in Canada, and a day.

GASOLINE AND FUEL OIL—IMPENDING PRICE INCREASES BY COMPANIES—CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Can he tell the House whether the big oil companies, and more specifically Texaco Canada Limited, were in touch with him as regards the coming increase in the price of gasoline and heating oil, which increase is due to take effect as early as this coming weekend?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I did not hear all the hon. member's question; could he repeat it?

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the House whether the big oil companies, and more specifically Texaco Canada Limited, got in touch with him concerning the coming increase in the cost of gasoline and heating oil, which increase is due to take effect as early as this coming weekend?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I had no personal contacts with those companies but the officials of my department have received communications from private companies. In this regard, as the hon. member will have noticed, a few statements were reported in the press to the effect that the companies will have to maintain prices until May 15.

With regard to Texaco in particular, I will have to study the situation with my officials after which I will be glad to report to the hon. member.

Mr. Boisvert: Could the minister say what measures he has in mind to make oil companies abide by the 30-to-45-day moratorium requested by the minister in his telegram to the companies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we shall take the same measures that we have been taking for the past seven months with the addition of a limitation of subsidy payments applicable in eastern Canada if oil companies do not abide by my request.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

INDUSTRY

OBSERVANCE BY UNITED AIRCRAFT OF AGREEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT RESPECTING SUBCONTRACTS

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can he confirm to the House whether the United Aircraft Company, whose 5,000 employees are now on strike, complies with the terms of contracts signed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and that company, so that subcontracts may not be given to foreign firms and that the work be done in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the company has discharged its obligations.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES ON PROGRESS IN IMPLEMENTING AGREEMENT TO CLEAN UP GREAT LAKES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to the agreement signed by the United States and Canada some two years ago, hopefully to clean up the Great Lakes. Now that President Nixon has either impounded or vetoed the funds voted by Congress which would have been of some assistance in this regard, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs considering making representations to Dr. Kissinger or to the President in regard to reviewing the agreement which was signed and which seems to be frustrated at this time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that there will shortly be a meeting to review progress under the Great Lakes agreement, at which time we will make our views known. If I meet Dr. Kissinger before that time, I will express the same views to him.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVEL—SUGGESTIONS BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION RESPECTING CONTROL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. As I understand it, the International Joint Commission, after some 10 years of study and spending some $6 million, came up with two suggestions: one was modification of the locks at Sault Ste. Marie, and the other was a further study of the St. Lawrence River system and how Lake Ontario water levels could be better controlled without flooding Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member ask his question. It would be helpful if questions, and also the replies thereto, were short, as I suggested the other day. I am sure the hon. member has now reached his question.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it is a very important question and I wanted to lay the proper groundwork. Would the minister advise the House whether these suggestions have been accepted by the Canadian government and, if not, why not?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I say that the International Joint Commission is meeting this week and reviewing progress in respect of cleaning up the Great Lakes. In reply to the second question about the control of water levels, this is under active review in my department and also in the relevant departments in the United States.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have one last supplementary with respect to the answer to the last question. Can the minister give the House any indication when he will be able to advise the House that a conclusion has been reached in this regard?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as soon as we receive a recommendation from the International Joint Commission in the latter respect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ENFORCEMENT OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES RESPECTING QUEBEC LUMBERMEN WORKING IN MAINE

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that more than 1,500 lumbermen of the southwestern region of the province of Quebec cross the boundary each year to work in the state of Maine, where they are often poorly accommodated and fed and have no health insurance nor workmen's compensation of any kind, can the minister assure the House that the letters of intent signed in 1942 and 1958 by Canada and the United States are still—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the hon. member for Scarborough West as well as all other hon. members, as I have done a moment ago, to try to put their questions more succinctly. In my opinion, a question as long as this one normally calls for a long answer, and that would be an injustice towards other members who wish to ask questions.

Mr. Harney: I complete my question, Mr. Speaker.

Are these letters still in effect, and if so, what measures are taken to ensure their enforcement?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ascertain whether these letters are still in effect and I will inform the hon. gentleman.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

EDMONTON—REASON FOR REPORTED PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF HOLY REDEEMER COLLEGE

Mr. Dan Hollands (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact the government has reportedly purchased the Holy Redeemer College which lies on the southern outskirts of the city of Edmonton, would the minister tell the House what the government intends to do with this institution?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Hollands: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Pembina rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hollands: Mr. Speaker, my question is related to a matter of urgent necessity. The people in the area have written to me and to the minister's department. I sent the minister notice of the question this morning and I am sure he would want to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister would not mind replying at the time of adjournment. This is a decision that the Chair makes. This is why the rules provide that if a question is urgent it can be considered in priority at the time of adjournment on the very same day.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION IN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES—PRESENT NUMBER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister advise the House whether consideration has been given to lowering the troop strength ceiling of the Canadian forces to 79,000 and whether a decision has been taken? Can he also tell the House what the actual strength of the forces was during the past few weeks?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the present strength is over 81,000. No consideration is being given currently to going down to 79,000.

● (1440)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister advise whether there is applicable generally throughout the forces a six month's deferment of all requests for release by any or all ranks?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not general.

Oral Questions

MULTICULTURALISM

CONSIDERATION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for multiculturalism. Can he tell the House whether he has had an opportunity to study the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which was tabled on January 7, 1974, and whether he has implemented or intends to implement any of the recommendations of that report?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under active consideration by the ministers involved.

STUDY OF APPROPRIATE FORMULA FOR THIRD LANGUAGE BROADCASTING ON CBC TELEVISION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the minister responsible for multiculturalism. Can the minister inform the House whether he intends to initiate a research study in conjunction with the CBC, the CRTC and his colleague, the Secretary of State, in order to determine an appropriate formula for third language broadcasting on CBC television? Has he taken any action whatsoever in this direction?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under active consideration.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSAL BY CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION THAT ADVERTISING BE PHASED OUT—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Since the President of the Treasury Board stated yesterday, after the announcement by the president of the CRTC relating to the phasing-out of advertising on CBC radio and television, that the CBC did not have a high priority in anticipated government spending, what is the official government position in relation to the CRTC proposal?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to correct the interpretation the hon. member has put on the words of the President of the Treasury Board. What I think he said was that the CBC has neither the highest nor the lowest priority. I think that is probably a fair statement of the effect of what he said. I am still reading the CRTC report.

Mr. Grafftey: Did officials of the CRTC consult the government or officials of the CBC about the financial implications of the CRTC proposal prior to it being made public?

Mr. Faulkner: They did not consult me, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Richardson.]

GRAIN

TERMS OF AGREEMENT WITH RAILWAYS IF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the recent statement on the weekend to the effect that the government intends to purchase an additional 4,000 grain hopper cars, will he advise whether these hopper cars will be covered by an agreement similar to the one the government now has with the CNR and CPR which in effect gives 2,000 hopper cars to the railways to use in return for keeping them in repair?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the existing agreement covers only 2,000 hopper cars, and a new agreement will be required for the next set of cars.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Would the minister then admit that the effect of the agreement is to give a subsidy to the railway companies of some $45 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course, that is argument and a question asked in those terms is not in order.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE TAKEOVER OF DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY BY GOVERNMENT—ASSURANCE THAT STOL AIRCRAFT PARTS, INCLUDING ENGINE, WILL BE MANUFACTURED IN CANADA

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the projected takeover of de Havilland Aircraft in Toronto by the department, for which an additional $28.8 million appears in the estimates for 1974-75, will he assure the House that adequate safeguards have been secured to ensure that the various component parts for the STOL aircraft will continue to be manufactured in Canada and, in particular, the PT-6 engine produced solely in Canada by United Aircraft at Longueuil, Quebec?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the option the government has which must be exercised by the end of June of this year. It was taken at the time we entered into a major funding arrangement for the STOL aircraft. For the information of the hon. member and the House, no decision has been taken by the government on whether that option will be exercised.

REPORTED INTENTION OF UNITED AIRCRAFT TO MOVE OPERATIONS TO UNITED STATES—ACTION TO PREVENT LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of recent reports in the Montreal Gazette that United Aircraft is threatening to move its operations to the United States, what action is the minister prepared to take to prevent the loss of jobs to Canadians by the contracting out of the manufacture of various component parts of the engine by United Aircraft of Canada Limited to factories of the parent corporation in the United States?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been in consultation with the company. We are following the events of this regrettable strike very carefully and closely. I have no reason to suppose there is going to be any problem such as the hon. member has suggested.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DOUBLING OF AIR FORCE RESERVES—REQUEST THAT EAST COAST SQUADRONS BE GIVEN SURVEILLANCE ROLE RESPECTING FISHERIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West of the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact the minister indicated there would be a doubling of air force reserves, that they would be given more responsible tasks and that new squadrons would be formed, would he also indicate whether consideration is being given to assigning to them the role of surveillance of our fisheries on the east coast, specifically Newfoundland?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is correct that we are planning to double the strength of the air reserve and we will be creating new air reserve squadrons. The location of the new squadrons will depend to some extent on the availability of experienced ex-service and other personnel who can take part in the air reserve, but certainly there are personnel in that category on the east coast and we will give serious consideration to the establishment of a new squadron there.

ENERGY

PROPOSED TORONTO DISTRICT HEATING STUDY INVOLVING USE OF WASTE—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the announcement yesterday by the mayor of the city of Toronto of a Toronto district heating study on the use of waste to produce energy, will the federal government give prompt consideration to financial aid to this extremely important project for our community?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my department has done an evaluation of the proposal. The initial response is positive and we will do a more fundamental one. I have indicated to my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, that this would be a very good subject for one of the demonstration projects under his new allocation of $100 million.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO MAKE RE-ENTRY INTO CANADA BY DEPORTED PERSONS A CRIMINAL OFFENCE

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the stated desire of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to have steps taken to discourage criminal elements from other countries from carrying on their criminal activities in Canada, when is the minister planning to introduce legislation which will make it a criminal offence for persons who, once deported, re-enter Canada of their own volition?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Very soon, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR LIMITATION OF IMPORTS OF VEAL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Answering a question asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert yesterday as to the amount of beef and veal imported in Canada, the Secretary of State said that we have imported one million pounds of veal a month between July and December 1973. Can the Minister of Agriculture say whether he will meet with his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade, and Commerce, with a view to reducing those importations which I term as dreadful in order to help Canadian meat producers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have in front of me a whole book full of information on imports and exports of beef cattle which I can lend to the hon. member if he wants to read it. He will find that our imports and exports are not that much out of balance as some would like us to believe in comparison with some other years. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind hon. members that we are running short of time. Perhaps the minister might be deemed to have answered the question.

DISCUSSIONS ON POSSIBLE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO SHEEP RAISERS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture. Are he and his officials carrying on active discussions with the sheep farmers of Canada in an attempt to work out an agreement similar to that in respect of the cattle industry in order to assist them in the dire straits they are facing?

● (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the sheep raisers association presented a brief several days ago or a couple of weeks ago asking us to participate in a program to try to encourage greater sheep production in Canada. We are considering that brief and we will be in further consultation with them later.

IMPORTS OF BEEF INTO CANADA IN JANUARY, FEBRUARY AND MARCH, 1974

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture says he has all kinds of statistics in front of him. This question was asked yesterday by me and answered by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It had to do with imports of beef into Canada since last July 1. I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether this answer was true, that the department has no information on imports of beef for January, February and March of this year, or was it a cover-up?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House when the hon. member asked that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a frivolous way of answering the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —or not answering. I am not to be brushed off with that kind of stuff.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will attempt to settle this difficulty with supplementaries from the right hon. member, and questions from——the hon. member for Lotbinière, the hon. member for Richmond; afterwards I will call orders of the day. The hon. member for Prince Albert has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister does not assert that his department is four months behind in statistics respecting imports of beef from the United States and other places. If he does, it is about time that he transferred some of these other officials from other departments in order to have a sufficient number of them to give information to the House. It is a cover-up.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Lotbinière, but the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham rises on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is simply this. The Minister of Agriculture has offered to show this book of speech material which he has at hand to any member who requests it. I am now formally asking him to send the book over so that we can see it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member must have some doubts as to some procedural aspects of the request he is making now. I hope the minister will not attempt to walk across the floor to give the book to the hon. member who is asking for it.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière wants to ask a supplementary. I will recognize him and then call orders of the day.

REFUSAL OF BEEF SUBSIDY ON ANIMALS FROM DAIRY HERDS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that, on the one hand, 622 million pounds of beef have been imported and that, on the other hand, tens of beef producers in Lotbinière constituency have seen their applications for beef production subsidies turned down on a mere legal technicality, this meat coming from dairy herds, can the minister advise the House whether or not he will review this decision and correct this anomaly, so that all Quebecers and other Canadians may be treated as well as foreigners when the time comes to supply the needs of Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that this question has already been asked. However, the hon. minister may care to answer it for a second or a third time.

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, total Canadian exports and imports of beef—I could go on and give all kinds of figures, but I just want to say this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Just send the book over, Gene.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer was false.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this would be a good time to call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Monday, April 1, consideration of Bill C-5, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973 to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke last evening before the time of adjournment I mentioned the matter of telecommunications. I spoke of the availability of service if one wished to send a wire or to communicate with another city by wire out of the city of Saskatoon. My experience, when I wished to send a wire from Saskatoon on a Sunday, was that I was advised by a recording device that I should dial a certain telephone number in Winnipeg. What happens when you get Winnipeg on that particular telephone number I did not bother to find out. I did what seemed to me to be logical, namely, I simply used the long distance telephone. Somebody says that I could have used a carrier pigeon. There was a time when that was a fairly dependable method of communication, but unfortunately now I do not think we have a thoroughly efficient method of communicating. It seems to me that the railroads have reduced their level of efficiency to the point where they no longer adequately serve the public.

Setting up the new telecommunications system was supposed to be a move forward. The two railroads in combination were supposed to set up a joint system which, it was supposed by the public and supposed generally, would be a more effective and cheaper method for Canadians to communicate by wire from one point in Canada to another. This system could be used effectively for a number of services which cannot readily be carried out by wire. The Canadian Transport Commission, which is supposed to oversee these kinds of services, should ensure that they serve Canadians adequately, but I suspect that it is simply not doing its job and not ensuring that the proper service is provided. I think this is the situation in which we find ourselves now.

I hear no declared intention by the government to overhaul the commission and to give it the kind of supervisory role that it should have. Instead, we get apologies for the kind of service that is being given or is not being given. Apparently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) share the responsibility between them, and we hope that in time when this matter is under discussion they will give some indication of whether or not the government intends to discard its responsibility in respect of transport in this country. We must not forget that transport and communications are two of the most vital services in this country. I suppose we will just have to wait and see what the government's attitude in this respect will be. We have been waiting for a long time and we have not seen very much. I hope that some real improvement can be made in communications so that every region of Canada is served as well as are Montreal and Toronto.

It might really help if we could move the head offices of the CNR out of Montreal and locate them in Regina or Calgary. Maybe then they would realize that the people who live there need service. Then they would know there is a northerly part of Canada that needs some service. It would get them out of the attitude which they have now, which is that everything revolves around Montreal and Toronto and the so-called Golden Triangle. Let them find out that there are other parts of Canada that need service, and indeed are willing to pay for it.

It is a shocking thing that the CNR in Saskatoon, in an area which was first served by that railroad, is now attempting to give it as little service as possible which is a rather stingy approach.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I am pleased to speak on the CN financing bill, Mr. Speaker. If anyone ever needed financing, it is certainly the CNR. I am concerned about the area in which they are choosing to spend money. In the west the railroads are being neglected. Evidence of that is the number of accidents on tracks in the west and certainly the number of crews that look after and tend the railways comprise fewer and fewer people all the time.

Many of the problems that have been experienced this winter are the result of the railways not looking after the tracks. Anyone can drive down a highway in Saskatchewan—the highways are parallel to the tracks—and can see that the snow fences have not been repaired for five years. This particular winter the snow has been no worse than a lot of winters we have had, but because the railways have neglected the snow fences, and neglected to cut down the shrubs along the tracks, the problem has been much more acute. These facts will fit seemingly into a plan which the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has for closing a lot of spur lines, saving the railways a lot of money and putting the cost, instead, on the backs of the farmers who are trying to get grain to market.

Another area in which the railways didn't have enough money was to provide double deck cars to the shippers of calves from the prairies. A lot of the buyers in western Canada made arrangements with the railways to equip cars themselves. They took the cars and made double deckers out of them. A plate was placed on each car so it could be used over and over again. The problem again was that it took the railways several days to move the cars from North Battleford to Toronto and took them three weeks to return the empty cars. No records were broken there. It was just another example of the railways not providing service to the west.

Last Saturday in Estevan the minister responsible for the Wheat Board announced the purchase of 4,000 cars. He didn't really announce their purchase—he said the government was prepared to purchase them some time. There was no date given for the expected delivery. No mention was made of any contracts given to build the cars, but some time in the distant future we are going to have some more hopper cars for the delivery of grain. There was no mention of any agreement in regard to maintenance, rental, or any form of reimbursement by the railways. It was just a sort of loose gift to the people who haul grain, in the form of hopper cars.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board prefers to make announcements out in the country. He was asked by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) specifically last Friday what the government's plans were with regard to hopper cars. He didn't know. He preferred not to answer. The next day he received a revelation. I do not know whether he talked to the cabinet or found his notes, but he was able to be much more specific in Estevan. This further shows the minister's contempt for this House and for the members who sit opposite him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member if I interrupt him, but I think I have to remind the hon. member who has the floor, and all hon. members who want to take part in this debate, that there is a rule of relevancy which is essential to parliamentary debate.

We have before us motions Nos. 1 and 2. This bill is not before us on second reading or third reading. We are not considering a general amendment. These are not very general motions, but very specific motions. While I appreciate that hon. members in the course of the debate yesterday did not necessarily follow the rule very closely and strayed considerably from the principle of the motions now before us, I think an effort should be made by hon. members to try to relate their remarks at one point or another to these motions.

I have not intervened until now because the hon. member is entitled to some latitude in that many of his remarks could be considered introductory to what he will say later on, but there is a responsibility on the part of hon. members themselves to remember that they should relate their remarks to the motion before the House. This is elementary. The Chair cannot intervene all the time. It has to rely on the co-operation of hon. members and their respect for a well-established and fundamental rule.

I am sure that eventually the hon. member, after he has completed his general remarks, will allude some time in some way to the question now before us.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bill is related to the financing of CN expenditures, and I was simply pointing out there were a lot of areas in which the CNR should be spending money rather than to build a CN tower in Toronto and other places like that. I was referring to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. He makes direct comment on the money that could be saved in the west. I suppose he would like to spend the money that he wants to save the railways in the west in Toronto, or other places in the east, and I did feel that my remarks were related to the motions before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I want to be fair to the hon. member. I certainly did not want to suggest that he should end his remarks at this point. I was merely suggesting to the hon. member that perhaps he might, after he had continued his introductory remarks, relate them to the motion before us. I think it would be unfair to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley to limit him much more than others have been limited. I am anxious to be fair to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. I hope that he has not misconstrued the words that I spoke a moment ago which related not only to his remarks but to all of the remarks made by hon. members in connection with this debate while we have before us motions Nos. 1 and 2.

[Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley).]

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I was just about to conclude my remarks anyway.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on the amendments to Bill C-5, which deals with Canadian National financing. These amendments, of course, stand in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), suggesting the deletion of some $5 million for hotels and $8 million for a tower in Toronto. By any railway standards these are not large capital expenditures. However, they are very disturbing as they indicate the general direction or thrust of the government's transportation agency, the Canadian National Railways.

● (1510)

In western Canada, we spend all of our time trying to build the economy and we do not like to see things torn down. The roots of our present economic status go as far back as confederation and the building of the railways. Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from the report of the Canadian Transport Commission for 1973. On page 1 of the report this statement appears:

> Payments to the railways in compensation for the uneconomic services they are required to operate in the public interest rose to $125,500,000 from $81,800,000 because of an increase in the number of services qualifying for payment—

On page 2, this statement appears:

> The payment is 100 per cent of the actual loss on branch lines, and up to 80 per cent of the actual loss on passenger train services . . .
> In addition, the commission through a continuing process of verification and further uneconomic findings certified and paid an additional $17 million on 1969-71 claims.

This technique of subsidies is a favourite tool of this government and it has been proven wrong time and again. Subsidies have failed to persuade the subsidized group to act in the public interest. All they have produced have been demands for further subsidies. Subsidization is a weak-minded substitute for rationalization of the area concerned, in this case, transportation. The subsidies are only a delaying tactic. For the minister to say that he lacks power to cope with the transportation problem is hogwash. The federal government has the power to regulate every aspect of interprovincial transport. Statutory freight rates for grain exist, and they will not be changed in spite of what is said by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Nor should they be changed while the railways receive some $1,500 per mile subsidy every year on western branch lines.

Some mention has been made in this debate of the sale of a Canadian National hotel, the Bessborough hotel in Saskatoon, which has been bought by private interests. I think that is a good indication of what happens when private enterprise comes up against public control. I know which of the two I would sooner have running my business.

I wonder if anyone really knows what is going on in our whole transportation system? It seems to me that the government has lost control of everything. They are now talking of purchasing hopper cars but have not told farmers that the Canadian Wheat Board has had to reduce its estimate of return to producers for the 1973 crop year to $4.79 per bushel from $4.93 last September. We all realize that the present selling price is $5.84 at Thunder Bay and $6 at Vancouver and wonder where the missing $1.25 has gone. I suspect that a good part of it has gone to transportation or the lack of it, in the prairies. We are talking about some $13 million, for these two items, a luxury hotel and a 1,000 foot tower. That is a lot of money to the people in my area.

In the subdivision in which I deliver grain there has been an average of one railway tie replaced every 35 miles of track in the last few years. The speed limit is 20 miles an hour, and in certain areas, ten miles an hour. Talk about "holy crow"—about all this track would stand right now is a good sized crow walking down it. We have had cases of the Canadian National abandoning elevators—Burnham to be specific—without permission from the CTC. We find now that there are 23 Canadian National lines out of commission in western Canada because of lack of equipment to clear the tracks properly. Look at the tremendous amounts paid by way of subsidy for the two main line passenger trains, The Canadian and The Supercontinental. It is $140,000 every day of the year. One could charter a jumbo jet and fly people across the country for less than that.

There has not been much mention of various transportation systems around the world, Mr. Speaker. I wish people would look at the Red Arrow which runs from Moscow to Leningrad, a beautiful electrified line; the Tokaido line in Japan which runs more passengers every day from Osaka to Tokyo than we haul in a year; the beautiful TEE trains of Europe and the Blue train of South Africa. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with everything South Africa does, but I can tell you those Dutchmen run a tight ship. They have a law there which decrees that goods cannot be moved more than 25 miles by truck and so they force freight to move by railway. Surely, some of these ideas could be used to improve our transportation system.

The minister says that he has no transportation policy, and I agree. I look at this expenditure of $13 million for luxury hotels and towers in light of the situation that faces my particular area. The last date on which a train ran through our subdivision was February 25, and the next one is expected on June 15! We would like to see a rebuilding program indicating that the government has some confidence in the future of our country rather than being faced with an abandonment program. As transportation needs increase, we see the government allowing railways to decline.

The Globe and Mail today states that freight revenue for the week ending March 21 declined 4.9 per cent from last year; car loadings are down by 2.2 per cent for the whole year and to date both are down by 1.2 per cent. What we need here is some good commonsense. We need to knock a few heads together so this transportation system will get on with the job of moving goods and people, not necessarily in the most efficient manner but certainly in the most effective manner for the general advantage of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly on Bill C-5, an Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and particularly on the motions before us which one might say come directly to grips with the very essence of this bill, that is the method of financing of the Canadian National Railways.

One proposal made in motion No. 1 would seek to change $225 million to $211 million or something very close to that. It is somewhat the same kind of proposition as expressed in motion No. 2.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be aimed precisely at the principle of that method of financing. The federal government through the Department of Transport is still using the same method as used in previous years and introduced a bill to finance the publicly-owned Canadian National Railways. Put in those terms, the question is relatively simple. In principle, one could not object to voting budget items of any amount, even with reference to motion No. 1.

I find it strange, Mr. Speaker, that one cannot oppose the voting of items by this House to finance a national public transportation system in Canada which is a public service intended to serve the interests of the Canadian public for the public weal. On the other hand, from the administrative or financial point of view, the matter is not all that simple. To work with a view to serving the interest of the public weal means not only, for example, providing essential transportation services at all times for the benefit of the people of this country but also that the cost of setting up and maintaining those services should not be too onerous to the point of making it prohibitive in some cases.

That is the situation as I see it now, and it is on that second point that I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues on both sides of the House. The motions before us which will be put to a vote, tackle the very basis of the bill. Bill C-5 says that the Canadian Railways System needs are as follows: road property, a subsidy of $138,978,000; branch lines, $13 million; equipment, $31 million; telecommunications, $25,946,000; and for hotels, $5,679,000, for the C.N. Tower Limited, a sum of $8,800,000 and finally for investment in affiliated companies, $1,200,000, making a total of $225,500,000. This motion aims at reducing this amount to $211,021,000.

Mr. Speaker, what will be changed? What I am concerned about is not the fact that the cost will be $225 million or $211 million, but I am concerned first of all about the principle allowing such an expenditure and then, the service the people are entitled to if we vote this sum of money.

What is still more serious is that since the establishment of the CNR, the same financing procedure exists, that is corporations such as the CNR are financed through subsidies. What is a subsidy? It is the taxpayers' money, the taxes administered by the Department of Finance and voted by the House of Commons for the maintenance and administration of the company.

Moreover, how are the nationalized transportation companies financed. Through the consent granted by the House of Commons and the passage of a bill enabling them to borrow, that is they are granted the power to borrow on the Canadian and foreign markets.

In the bill, no reference is made to the interest rates nor to previous bonds of those companies. We are asked to give them a blank cheque so that they may borrow.

How will those companies reimburse those loans that we shall allow them to make by adopting one or the other of these motions or the bill itself, since in either case there is coercion? These loans will be reimbursed next year by means of a new bill, written in the same style as this one. We shall again vote a subsidy, which will be a bit larger because of the interest to be reimbursed, and once again next year, as two or five years ago, these companies will be allowed to borrow to increase their debt so that they may develop.

Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of socialism adepts in this House. Some are disguised, those of the Liberal government, some are true socialists, those in front of me. The latter say: let us place the railways and transportation companies of Canada under public ownership.

They tell us: once they are under public ownership, we shall be able to control our own destiny in the field of transportation. But they do not say, Mr. Speaker, that we will control our own destiny by borrowing from foreign sources, by putting the Canadian people in debt, and by increasing taxes to reimburse these loans and pay these subsidies to the companies, with the result that we shall not be the ones to control the Canadian transportation system uniting the eastern and western parts of the country, those in control will be the foreigners and those who have financed these companies.

Mr. Speaker, this is a statement of fact. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) are quite unable because of their intellectual integrity to say the opposite. It is easy to use big words and say: We shall be able to control our own destiny, we shall control such a field, we shall place companies under public ownership.

The people who say this, who use these fine words in front of the population, come before Parliament and, as Minister of Finance, Minister of Transport, or leader of the New Democratic Party, tell us: Let us now vote welfare subsidies to control our own destiny, to finance the operation of the companies which we control.

Secondly, let us give them the permission, a kind of blank to borrow and to enable foreigners to systematically control these companies. I feel it is more and more imperative, Mr. Speaker, to control these companies.

Canadians no longer control them. Neither is it Parliament whose only task is to vote subsidies since the minister, finally, because of the Crown companies' constitution, is not really responsible to the House.

Mr. Speaker, we are deluding ourselves if we think that we can endow Canada with a real national transportation system, connecting the two opposite coastlines and enabling Canadians from the east, the west, the Maritimes and central Canada to exchange goods as well as friendly feelings.

Old people in Montreal have been requesting with great publicity and support the privilege of paying less than others because of their insufficient income but they are scoffed at.

Ottawa replies that for that category of people it has no money to make it easier for them to avail themselves of means of transport.

The transportation system has become so expensive in Canada that we must now face a problem of access concerning certain groups of Canadians.

Provincial governments state: "We may not look into this; this is federal jurisdiction". Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, senior citizens will have to keep on waiting before they can benefit from public transportation and other transportation systems under the jurisdiction of the department of Transport. These same citizens, even if they have a small income, will have to keep on paying taxes in order to subsidize these firms which do not belong to us anymore.

Mr. Speaker, those were the only comments that I wished to make on this. I think that it is pointless to enlarge on this subject, to repeat the same thing for the hundredth time. Anyhow, the Minister does not understand anything and he is not even in the House. What matters is that this be recorded, so that the government as well as elected members of the New Democratic Party know that taking over a firm with capital that do not belong to us does not make that firm ours but gives it to the people who have the capital.

Moreover, how can we be proud of the lousy transportation system we have now, a system which operates on crutches because it does not belong to us and because we must subsidize it the way we subsidize people on social welfare.

Finally, we suddenly realize today that the railway system which was built in Canada, supposedly to unite all Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific and foster Canadian unity, is a complete failure. Actually, most railway lines are closed and the railway companies cannot, in an adequate and technically modern way, provide the necessary services and transport products from one place to another. They are unable to transport the wheat which we have in Western Canada to Eastern Canada where it is needed. They are unable to transport the milk which is produced in Eastern Canada to Western Canada and elsewhere where it is needed. Beef which may be in demand in one part of the country is lacking in the other. What is the government doing about this? The minister has not been courageous enough to reply today. That is why they say to Quebec producers: Tighten your belts! They refuse to subsidize them while they import 622 million pounds of beef from foreign countries!

Our transport system which is costing $225 million to the taxpayers will be used for what? To pay the interest on our debt!

In Canada there are still some people who prefer to live with inflation in their small corner of the country. Some people do not feel at home in Canada because they cannot benefit by all the advantages offered by all the regions of the country. For some Canadians it is difficult to use our transport system because it is too costly. For them, it is prohibitive. Some Canadians have to tighten their belt whereas we could produce three times as much as they need, such as wheat, beef, milk and many other products.

And at the same time their belts are being tightened. We are importing from abroad while we are told that we have a national unity, that we have it good in Canada and that we have a good transportation system.

I am revolted by the fact that Canadians facing hardships have in Parliament some allied so little informed on Canadian problems as the Liberals who are maintaining this division system among Canadians to better control them. One of the best ways to unite a country is through a transportation system.

We have one agriculture policy in the West, another one in the central provinces and a third one in the Eastern provinces. In any field we have the same situation. Why? Because the House of Commons has no overall view of the country and even more serious, we are presented with patchwork policies. A small problem is settled in the West, another one in the East and finally we keep on subsidizing, through social welfare benefits, a number of organizations which do not even render human and reasonable services, namely our railway companies.

Mr. Speaker, these same companies do not even respect the concept of bilingualism about which they speak fine words and involved sentences.

Mr. Speaker, I should object to this bill. Indeed, even if I represent only a very small area, I refuse to associate my name to a government which will contribute through such measures to get me and all my fellow citizens deeper into debt and to aggravate Canada's divisions.

● (1530)

I would rather support a measure designed to give us an efficient transportation system in Canada, from which all Canadians can benefit while feeling that we are all brothers in Canada.

Then, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will be proud to finance a railroad because it will give them something. But neither the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) nor the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is in a position to prove, in any way, that Canadians will benefit from this bill. All it will do is enable certain brokers, financiers to put money in their pockets through loans, loan guarantees, subsidies, while maintaining in existence a service that is as inadequate as it was five years ago. Mr. Speaker, I find this absolutely ridiculous. That is why I refuse to take up any more of the time of the House discussing a bill of such secondary importance.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words at this time because of the mess that transportation is in today. The amendment offered by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) is an attempt to point out the frivolous way in which money is being wasted. Parliament and the people of Canada are being asked to finance efforts by CNR management that are not entirely essential. These efforts could best be handled by other organizations. Other people could concentrate on building these hotels, towers and the like. The hon. member's amendment is an attempt to put the railways back on the tracks, so to speak.

One has a tendency to forget the initial intent and purpose of our railways. They were originally intended to serve the needs of our country. The situation is the same in many other areas, such as the Unemployment Insurance Act. Although that act was originally intented to provide insurance for those who may become unemployed, it has become a welfare scheme. The railways suddenly want to be big. They want a status symbol. They want to affix their names to something in bold letters decorated with maple leaves here and there. They want a big CN sign which towers above everything else so that people will point to it and say that is operated by CN. However, what is the price? They have beautiful, plush and expensive hotels, but they are not making money. We have to pay a price for that.

We have to pay a price because transportation is being neglected. This is why I am so saddened by the attempt of management to move into another area. I would be the first to agree with this move if the management people were of such a calibre that they could run a railway system which would bring in some revenue for the people of Canada and not result in the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) throwing up his hands in disgust. The minister says he has no power. If the Minister of Transport does not have the power to run the transportation system of this country, he has no business introducing a bill that will provide money to run a hotel system. No minister should venture into another area if the narrow area to which he is confined is not being looked after.

Among the many difficulties that we have is the fact that the railways are abandoning many small communities through a systematic method. They move a car into a terminal point, then move the freight by truck from that point to its destination. That is the first step in abandonment. They want to get out of this business. If the Department of Transport does not want to deal with transport, then what department of government should deal with it? The department is not dealing with transport. It is in the tourist business. That should be run by another department, perhaps Indian Affairs. Surely, another department or a minister without portfolio should be handling the tourist business.

Parliament is being asked to finance the railway with hard-earned tax dollars. This bill is being presented in April which is income tax time. People are being asked to submit their tax money willingly for something which is of doubtful benefit. It is not as though there would not be any hotels in our cities if CN did not operate them. If any place did not have a hotel, it would not be long until one was built. It is not as though the Canadian public would be without hotel service. However, where do the people in my constituency go to ask for a train that will at least put a car on a siding?

I wish to cite an example. There are a couple of cars which many farmers are hard pressed to get, but they cannot be moved 30 miles from the town of Hudson Bay to Somme to be spotted on a siding. It is too much trouble for the railway to remove the snow from the track. Mr. Speaker, every second house in the city has a snowblower. We could soon clear the track if they don't know how to do it. We all know the CNR could do it if they set their minds to it, but their only purpose is to get out of the railway business except for operating a straight run-through like the trans-continental, in which case, where would the traffic come from?

Instead of concentrating on their proper business, such as supplying cars and locomotive power, officials of the company go about making speeches. They say the Crowsnest Pass Agreement is what is tying them up. How ridiculous! When we look at the figures, we find that despite the terms of the Crowsnest Pass Agreement the years in which most grain was moved were the years in which the CN either made higher profits or incurred smaller losses. Instead of financing hotels, maybe the CN should write off some of the old debts they have been complaining about. I would be far more responsive if the company came up with a proposal for writing off these old debts which burden the balance sheet with interest charges. This would appeal to me more than the idea of voting money which will not produce anything, really, except for one element they think is essential to their own self-elevation, namely, prestige. They like to say: We have bought hotels; we are a big company controlling all kinds of enterprises; we have built a tower—where else in the world can you find a tower like that, and where else in the world do you find such posh hotels?

Just think of the money which is going to be spent on such items as the silly ashtrays in these places. We could spend less and get some of those box cars out of the smaller communities; it would not take much money to move that snow off the tracks. The company is no longer concentrating on its original purpose, and that is what disturbs me. I have before me a brief from the farmers' union including a long list of cars which have been left on sidings for a month at a time. Nobody in management seems to know how to get those cars out, how to move the grain to the west coast.

How much money is involved in all this? I have seen figures estimating the loss to Canada at between $500 million and $700 million. But take the lower figure. It is $500 million that this country could earn, and it is $500 million that these hotels will never earn. The opportunity to earn this money may not come back again. Observe the way in which prices are fluctuating. Take the price of rapeseed. Buyers can no longer place any faith in Canadian deliveries. The transportation system cannot deliver, and if you cannot deliver you cannot sell. The price of rapeseed dropped $2 a bushel last month, and that in itself is bound to affect the Canadian economy.

Why have all these difficulties arisen? It is because one minister after another has been content to pass the buck. I do not know when this Minister of Transport intends to resign, but he had better make up his mind quickly because if he sits around for another six months before resigning we shall have lost another six months. I do not care whether we are trying to move lumber, grain, minerals or anything else. It has to be delivered. Ships will not continue to wait indefinitely in Canadian ports. Why should they? The world is wide, and the world is not idle. There are people who want to work and who are able to produce; they have products to sell, and pretty soon we may find ourselves sitting on a lot of commodities we do not know what to do with. We shall be wondering what hit us, wondering how we shall cope with inflation and the other problems which face us. Maybe we shall try to persuade ourselves that because Canada is such a big country everything will work itself out. I do not believe it. I think we should face up to the difficulties we are discussing this afternoon and, for once, deny some of these grandiose ideas in the hope that the people concerned will decide to concentrate on the matter in hand. I am not convinced they will ever concentrate if we keep giving them money.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

The other day, someone on the CRTC said the CBC could get along with less advertising. That will mean more money to be raised from taxes. Apparently parliament is ever willing to put out this kind of money for entertainment, to make sure that viewers do not have to put up with a break in the movie because a commercial is being shown for a few seconds. Why, then, should we need to worry about money around here, some may ask. I maintain we should put our money into areas which will ensure efficient transportation in order that the whole country may benefit. We should insist that management moves in the direction the country wishes it to take. There is no reason why all these people should have to bug me about boxcars, or why I should have to bug the minister. It cannot be pleasant for the minister. Do you think it is pleasant for him to have to listen to these complaints all the time, Mr. Speaker? It is not. Management finds it very convenient to tell the country: Never mind, it will all work itself out. But will it? It will not, if parliament allows the situation to develop as it has been developing.

I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, that for once we should deny this vote of money to management if only that they might be encouraged to get back to the original intent of parliament, which was to provide transportation in this country, not to inflate their egos.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising today to speak on the amendment put forward by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) in respect of the Canadian National financing bill, I should like to submit to you some of the concerns which relate specifically to my own riding. For a long time now many Canadians have been concerned about the real priorities of the Canadian National Railways and whether those priorities, so far as they relate to the movement of passengers and goods across Canada, can be reconciled with what appear to be the priorities that CN has embarked upon. The public believe the priorities that CN appear to be establishing for itself are not the priorities they thought CN originally had or that they should have today.

● (1550)

For some weeks now we have been viewing on our national television network episodes of "The National Dream", depicting the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is a re-enactment of the opening up of the west, a period that had tremendous impact not only on the people of that day but on Canadians of subsequent generations. There was a dream, a purpose, involved. It caught on—indeed, it caught on in many countries of the world—and it is still a very vital part of the dream that I would say Canadians have today. However, the operation of our rail transportation system, specifically in light of some of the priorities the CNR seems to be pursuing has turned this dream into a nightmare today. This is especially true of the activities of the CNR in eastern Manitoba.

What are some of the very real transportation problems facing Canada today? The first question that comes to mind is: Can the CNR provide a transportation system while, on the other hand, still involving itself in the provision of many ancillary services? To most Canadians the role of the CNR is seen as a second transcontinental railroad, built in the early part of the century to provide transportation in an area where the CPR was not able to provide that service. This area generally was north of the present CPR system.

During the last few weeks the whole concept of the transportation system of Canada has been seriously brought into question because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has stated very candidly that our rail transportation system is in a mess. Having said that, he also seems to have absolved himself from any responsibility or further action. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the transportation system of Canada is in a mess largely as a result of the non-policy of the present minister. In addition, we are in a mess often because of the priorities of the management of the CNR, whose priorities should be to provide transportation—to provide one facility, one service, and to do so well, forgetting all else.

Why do we not have a national transportation policy today? When will we get one, and how will it affect Canadians? The amendments moved by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) are vehicles of protest which we can use to show that the priorities of our transportation system are all mixed up, that the main priorities are not being followed. I mentioned earlier that our national dream can, I think, be described more accurately today as our national nightmare, especially in western Canada. What is the situation in the west? At the present time we are 100 million bushels of grain short in export position. At present world prices we are looking at a loss or potential loss of half a billion dollars.

Let me comment on the block system, and in particular on what is known as Keewatin 61. How can I tell a grain farmer in my riding who wants to move his grain to market, "Hang on; the CNR won't buy any more rolling stock right now but the government will look after you", when at the same time we give the CNR clearance to spend money on hotels? These farmers have been locked into a position throughout the winter, trying to move their grain to plugged elevators. Grain cars have failed to arrive, and when they have arrived it has been because extreme pressure has been put upon the railways. The farmers are then given the word to load the cars because they will be picked up the next day, and as a result they work all night to ready the cars. Then, the following day they see the train go by without picking up these grain cars. For some three weeks loaded cars have been sitting on our sidings waiting to be moved while trains have been going by on open lines.

So again I ask, where are our priorities? How can I explain to farmers with commitments to meet that hotels are more important than boxcars? I think the motions of the hon. member for Mississauga bring that point out very vividly. A protest is welling up in western Canada at our transportation system, and if hon. members do not believe that, all they have to do is to come to my riding. We have had to use every vehicle in an attempt to get the railways to return to their real priorities, the movement of goods and passengers. But the only action we have seen in my riding during the last few weeks was when we were able to convince the railways that we had a potential flood situation along the Red River valley, according to the Manitoba flood forecasting committee, and that grain presently in storage on farms would very likely be damaged or lost. How do you convince the people within the CNR system of the urgency of the situation, and that movement of goods should be their priority, not the building of hotels?

A second aspect of this national nightmare is the so-called disruption of passenger services by the CNR. We now have servo-centres; these are supposed to be the "in thing". For months I have been trying to get the officials of CNR to keep the campers special going in eastern Manitoba, but it always seems that the only way to do so is to apply pressure, to cajole, to use the public media to convince CNR that rail passenger service should also be part of their priorities.

It is very common in western Canada to see the following notice placed on Canadian National public notice boards:

> Application for authority to remove the station agent and building at this location has been filed with the Canadian Transport Commission.

To most disinterested Canadians this notice would not mean too much. But to people living in rural towns who depend on rail service and on jobs, these notices very often spell disaster.

I should like to place on record part of a letter that I received from a constituent of mine concerning this whole question of priorities for the CNR. The letter is dated February 4, 1974 and relates to the movement of passengers by the CNR. It reads, in part:

> Elma is a town of 300-400 people, 50 miles east of Winnipeg on the CNR main line. It is served by rail, and is also linked to several provincial highways. Industry—really none, unless you might call the CNR presence one. Although not special, it is typical of a rural town, which, through government action, is dying, by having its roots severed one by one.
> From an economic sense the railway station probably does not add many dollars to Elma and district, but it still remains a location which provides these services to local and district citizens, no matter how small and inconsequential they may appear . . .

● (1600)

> It seems very ironic that we have provincial and federal policies reputedly to promote decentralization of industry and families, and supposedly stop urban glut and sprawl, while simultaneously we have federal Crown corporations and agencies, actively engaged in policies thwarting such schemes. How can a small rural town, such as Elma, ever hope to become a viable identity, when one of its props is to be removed?
> The closing of the Elma station will certainly not make or break the CNR. In fact, what we may be doing is shifting the responsibility. The chain of events in closing a station, and shifting an agent, eventually means unemployment insurance or welfare payments for someone down the line. Good old John. Q. Public then picks up the tab.
> Is it better to pay a man for not working, by implementation of closure, than to leave rail stations such as Elma open?

That is the question this constituent asks.

In reference to the CN financing bill, and specifically the amendments, what members of this House must impress upon the CN and CTC is the fact that the CN has an obligation to move goods and passengers for the wellbeing of all Canadians, and it should not and must not concentrate on activities which take away from that priority.

I suggest that the management of hotels by the CN has at best been shoddy. They are not competitive, and I am sure that we would have all the hotel space we need if hotel construction had been left to the private entrepreneur. I suggest that CN management should concentrate its efforts on doing one job well rather than expecting the Canadian taxpayers to blindly sign one cheque after another in order that the CN can follow its priorities, which too often seem to be in conflict with the priorities it was set up to follow, and definitely in conflict with the priorities many Canadians have set for the CNR.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate for two reasons. The first is to join with others in focusing attention on the lack of interest being shown by certain officials of the CNR for the people of Canada whom they purport to serve, and the other is to draw attention to the inadequacy of public ownership unless it is accompanied by concern for the people.

To illustrate the first point, I should like to draw to the attention of the House an experience my family and I had just a few weeks ago when travelling by CNR from Toronto to Ottawa. This was at a time when the management of that railway should have been fully aware that there would be a greater demand on their service than ordinarily, as it was a time when there were two major conventions being held in Ottawa and when the annual winter school break in the province of Ontario was beginning. It might well have been anticipated that there would be an extra demand for service. Instead, there was an inadequate supply of cars for the use of passengers wanting to make a journey to such places as Kingston, Montreal and Ottawa, with the result that a considerable number of people had to stand. Indeed, there were so many extra passengers on this train that the conductor had to find accommodation for some of them in the washrooms. I think we should recognize this as simply another illustration of the way in which the railways are not giving priority to the people whom the company was designed to service, the same people who have been supporting the railway.

I think one of the good results of this debate the House has been having, and of this amendment which I hope will carry, is that we are drawing attention to a mistake on which we should focus, namely that the people must come first and the CNR must adopt the policy of making them come first. This is not what the railway has been doing. The railway has to a great extent been giving the impression that it is interested primarily in freight and, to the degree it serves the people at all, it treats them like freight. What we want to say to the management of this railway is that it must start putting the people first. We recognize the concern, efficiency and dedication of the fine staff the railway employs. Indeed, without the calibre of the men and women working at various levels for the railway, the services might not be as good as they are. What we want is direction from the top. What the country needs from this railway is what it needs from the government, and that is leadership from the top which is concerned about the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: The second point I should like to make in my remarks is the fact that the policy manifested by the experience to which I have referred, and indeed emphasized by the many other examples hon. members have cited, illustrates that socialization is not in itself a solution to all the problems of this country. One of the impressions one often gets from speakers for the NDP is that the solution to every problem can be found in the nationalization of an industry or perhaps the appointment of another government board. One really does not get anything from either unless you have leadership, be it in private or public enterprises, which puts the people first. One does not get that simply by providing a government takeover. It is a simplistic, tragic and serious mistake to assume that the government and the people are one and the same, and that if the government engineers a takeover or initiates regulations through a board, then the people will be served. Sometimes it is only the interests of those the government has appointed that are served. Very often they, themselves, have a vested bureaucratic interest which takes priority over the interests of the ordinary people. Therefore, I should like to emphasize that the attitude of the parliament and government of Canada in respect of the CNR as well as other corporations ought to be this: You have been established by the people to serve the people. Make that your priority and get on with it.

We see a particular need for this attitude with regard to the need for rapid public transit in areas surrounding our major urban centres. We see it, for example, in metro Toronto where a great step forward could be taken to serve the transit needs of a large number of commuters, and people making their way to and from work day by day if the railroad lines were used as they could be used in an effective public transit program. I recognize that such a program cannot be undertaken simply by the CNR or the federal government. It certainly involves consultation and co-operation with provincial and local jurisdictions, but the federal government surely has within its powers the ability to show initiative. It certainly has within its rights the opportunity to lead. One result we could see would be the beginning of greater enterprise in utilizing the rights of way leading into the heart of great urban centres such as metro Toronto in such a manner that thousands and thousands of commuters could make their way to the heart of the city day by day on a rapid public transit system free from pollution.

There are various reasons that this proposal must be given priority, one of which has been illustrated in recent months by the so-called energy crisis, much over emphasized and over dramatized by the government through the use of such terms as "crisis", but nonetheless of sufficient proportion to make us all aware of what indeed will happen if we do not take seriously the lesson that has come to us through the events of the last year. Therefore, we have to see the need now to make a major change from dependency on the gasoline operated motor that has become basic to our way of life in the last two generations.

If the government really is leading, then surely it would want to take the lead in consulting provincial and local authorities across the country so that, before it is too late, we can have a comprehensive and socially constructive public transit program based upon the utilization of our railroad lines. If we had a government that put people first, and if that were the attitude of the CNR, then that would be exactly what we would do. We would have in every major urban centre the kind of development that would use these railroad lines and railroad rights-of-way so that rapid commuter public transit services would be employed.

I read recently about the three priorities of the CNR mentioned in a discussion of transport opportunities in the metro Toronto area. The first of these priorities relates to industrial customers—I take this to mean freight—and inter-city passengers going from one region to another. Their next priority is the GO line, that is the commuter service offered by the government of Ontario, and the third is to metropolitan Toronto. Is that what this government wants to say to metro Toronto: you are in first place? Is that what they want to say to the commuters of that vast area comprising within it now in excess of two million people: you are in third place? Are they saying: if there is any consideration to be given when every other matter has been looked after, then we will think of you? Surely, if we are putting people first, if we really care about developing a way of life that can be meaningful and satisfying to the kind of people that keep this country going, then the railway should say to those people: you are in first place and we want to give a high priority to your transit needs.

At the very heart of this problem we need a change of thinking. What we need is not so much to give priorities to various levels of government but to give priority to the people who are represented by those governments, to seek to establish a program that will involve the authority and jurisdiction of all three levels, federal, provincial and metro, all of them seeking in co-operation with one another to represent the interests of their common constituents. There are not three kinds of people that are represented by members of parliament, members of legislative assemblies and municipal councillors—they are the same people. We should get over this notion of thinking that governments have rights and claims of their own, and to recognize that the only excuse any of us have for being in office is to fulfill the aspirations and satisfy the needs of the people whom we commonly represent.

I would hope, therefore, that out of this debate there will come a new attitude to public transit in Canada, a new concern to utilize the CNR and other railroad facilities in the interest of the common people of this country. I think that we should recognize that railroads give us a new opportunity. For a long time it seemed as though the railroads were going to join certain other relics of the past in the antique museums of the country. For a time it seemed as though the railroads were going to be part of the memory of the Canadian people replaced by the jet aircraft and by the high speed automobile as the means by which people would find transportation in an age of rapid movement. But under the combined threat of the energy crisis, and of the pollution crisis, it is now becoming apparent that we had better take another look at our railroads, that railroads offer us a chance to meet the needs of people in a way that does not pollute and does not threaten the energy resources of the country and in a way that can satisfy the needs and hopes of our people.

Let me give another illustration and refer to the experience of the hundreds of thousands of summer residents in the so-called cottage country of southern Ontario. Every weekend the population of the Muskoka and Georgian Bay regions of Ontario are expanded by hundreds of thousands of city dwellers who make their way northward for a few days of surcease from the pressures and pollution of urban life. For years and years the government of the province has been making bigger highways that can transport these multitudes northward on weekends. I suppose that if we went on travelling by car as the population grows we would expect Ontario to construct even more highways. But surely we need to recognize, for the two reasons which I have cited, namely, the threatening shortage of energy and the threatening danger of pollution, that we have a need to move in a contrary direction, that instead of simply building more and more six and eight lane highways to become massive parking lots for cars stalled in traffic jams at the beginning and at the end of each weekend, we will begin to see that we could use our railroad lines as a way of transporting the city dwellers to the cottage country during the vacation season.

In times past railroads were the main method of transportation. If you went to a town such as Gravenhurst and visited the local museum there, you could see pictures of the times when railroad trains came right on the docks. People holidaying were brought from southern Ontario to Gravenhurst and given the opportunity of arriving at the dock, of moving from the train to a steamship which took them to the various points on the lake from which they could get to their own family cottage. That was the style of people two or three generations ago and it served the people who had summer homes in that region. Surely, we could do something as good as that today. Surely, we can think in terms of having a railroad service that would provide the ordinary city dweller with an opportunity to commute each weekend without using his car, and without requiring further highway construction in that district.

I think that one of the things upon which we should all agree is the opportunity that we would have to serve our people if the CNR were, under the direction and influence of the federal government, to initiate that kind of service. I think of the great need that there is for this, not only because of the danger of pollution and of energy shortages but also because of the great danger posed by increasing auto traffic on the highways of our various provinces. One of the things that should concern us is the mounting death toll because of increased auto traffic. Between 5,000 and 6,000 Canadians meet their death in traffic accidents every year. If we were losing that many in military action, if last year we had lost even a tenth of that number in military action or peacekeeping ventures, there would be an outcry on both sides of the House. Somehow we seem to be gripped by a curious and heartless apathy when it comes to the death toll which occurs as a result of traffic accidents in this country. I hope that instead of unintentionally and unwittingly contributing to an expansion of that serious and tragic number of deaths by simply permitting and encouraging the expansion of auto traffic, we will begin to think in terms of expanding our passenger railroad service.

I am thinking of the way in which, at present, everything is done to discourage the ordinary person from taking a train. It is the same with our buses. But let us for the moment focus our attention on trains. If you want to take a passenger train to the cottage country today and take it home again, you have to spend most of the weekend in the train. The service is so slow, so inadequate, that a person has to be going on a really extended vacation even to consider taking a train to that holiday resort country.

Now, if in those bad old days when people were not supposed to be as developed, as up to date and advanced as we are now, it was possible to transport thousands of families to the cottage country holiday resorts by train and comparable public transport, surely we can do it today. And it makes sense. At a time when energy is supposed to be in short supply, at a time when the gasoline motor is supposed to be contributing to pollution, at a time when the threat of death is a constant danger to every car user on the highways in our provinces, surely we can begin to think in terms of a public transport program that will make sense in this age.

I welcome very much the opportunity this debate has given to various members to bring to bear on the government the concern of people across the country that the railroads, which were built to serve people, will do precisely that and once again they will be, even as when they were built, serving the people of Canada.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment briefly on one aspect of the problems connected with transportation in this country, and that is an aspect which is of particular concern to the municipality, part of which I represent here. Through the southern part of Etobicoke runs the main Canadian National line westward from the heart of Toronto. The line is used not only for the railway's freight traffic and such ordinary passenger traffic as there may be, but it also serves the GO Transit, the GO train system. There are located on this line the marshalling yards at Willowbrook. For several years there has been a rumour that these yards, the facilities contained within them, indeed the line itself, will be expanded, particularly if the GO train system itself is expanded. And as the railway facilities now located in and around Union Station are moved out of that area to make room for the Metro Centre development, the politicians and the planners in the borough of Etobicoke—I am sure I am describing a problem which is encountered in other municipalities in Canada—have been trying to ascertain for some time whether or not there is any truth to the rumour of expansion and, if so, specifically what kind of expansion is planned by Canadian National, in what directions, according to what time schedule, and so on. The concern of the borough of Etobicoke is, of course, one prompted by its own plans to proceed with various kinds or urban renewal or development in areas bordering on the right-of-way.

At the present time, I know that the borough of Etobicoke is considering proposals to maximize the use of land in the vicinity of the railway lines for family living, either in the form of housing or by using the land closest to the line for parks. There has been discussion of possible relocation away from this area of industries whose current uses are incompatible with family living. There has been discussion of the reconstruction of streets and arterial roads which intersect, pass underneath, or above, or run parallel to the railway line.

There have been efforts in the past, and there are ongoing efforts, to control noise and noise pollution in the residential areas bordering on the rail line. There is a continuing consideration of development proposals whose location may not be directly adjoining the rail line, but whose eventual approval or otherwise is bound to be affected by the kind of transportation which can be provided by the railway.

The point of my interjection, Mr. Speaker, is simply to say, through the opportunity provided by this debate, that I urge the Canadian National to co-operate more freely and more openly than it has in the past with municipalities whose own plans are so closely tied into and are affected by the plans of the railway. I think it is self-evident that more co-operation with municipalities in integrating plans for rail line development and expansion with plans at the municipal level is helpful and that it can only work to the benefit of both parties. But for some reason there appears to be an over-concern with secrecy on the part of railway officials.

I do not know whether it is because they have plans they are not anxious to divulge, or whether they are in the process of developing plans which have not yet reached the stage of finality, or whether they have not got any plans at all and are embarrassed to admit it. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I believe a greater degree of candor and frankness in dealing with municipal planners, municipal governmental authorities in Canada, would go some way towards improving the quality of life in the areas directly served or intersected by railway lines, particularly major rights-of-way, and would, as I said, work to the benefit of both the railways and the municipalities.

The hon. member who has just spoken has cited the expressed wish of railways to be of service to the community, and he has expressed some doubt as to whether they are fulfilling that objective. I think one way in which railways can be of service to the community, albeit, an indirect way, is to co-operate more freely and more frankly with municipalities in working out a total plan of development for a community which will make it a better place in which to live.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived on division.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Accordingly, as previously stated, disposal of motion No. 1 does at the same time dispose of motion No. 2 appearing in the name of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) and this motion is defeated on division.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): If hon. members have no objection, we might proceed at this time with motion No. 4 which has been announced as acceptable to the Chair. We could leave motions Nos. 3, 5 and 6 to be examined afterwards and perhaps we could have an exchange of views on the procedural acceptability of those three motions then.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga) moved:

Motion No. 4:

That Bill C-5, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in paragraph 7(4)(a) by deleting line 44 on page 5 and substituting therefor the following:

"shall not exceed $133,300,000; and"

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion calls for a reduction of some $6.7 million from the $140 million demanded in clause 7(4)(a) of the bill. The amendment arises from discussions in committee, especially those that took place with Mr. Cochrane from Air Canada. When he was asked why Air Canada needed $140 million, he produced a 1973 revised budget which indicated the moneys required. At this point I might say that while the bill previous to this one, Bill C-164, was introduced in the spring of 1973, it was not determined that Air Canada needed $140 million until August, 1973.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who is here today, is responsible for introducing the bill calling for the payment of $140 million to Air Canada. But at the time the original bill was introduced, Air Canada had no budget to indicate how this money was to be spent and they did not organize a budget until August, 1973. As a member of this House, I find it shocking that the Minister of Finance should introduce a bill calling for an appropriation for a Crown corporation without an examination of the figures that indicate the need for that advance.

We spent some time analysing the statement produced by Mr. Cochrane who attempted to justify a number of items. Rather than go into the depreciation allowances on aircraft and whether the exact deferred charges, interest charges and finance charges as well as the calculations for decrease and increase of working capital were exactly correct, we looked at one particular item, the requirement for this $140 million. We find in the statement produced by Air Canada a request for $6.7 million, not to fix up aeroplanes, not to expand air routes, but to go into a subsidiary business.

This corporation has an obligation to the people of Canada to run an air service and that is why it was incorporated. Like their parent corporation, the Canadian National Railways, they have decided to grow, not in the air field. They are going to become another colossus and have associated with the railway in a consulting service. In addition, they have associated themselves with Commonwealth Holiday Inns, and others in the hotel business. They intend to go into the charter business, and because they cannot run it effectively themselves, by their own admission, they propose to buy a percentage of Wardair Canada Limited. They also intend to go into the manufacture of aircraft and into the aerospace industry in partnership with Comstock Limited.

First of all, let us consider the arrangements made with Wardair. Mr. Max Ward is a pretty competent man. He has built a first class business in the charter field. When giving evidence before the Canadian Transport Commission, Canadian Pacific Airlines indicated that although it owned very few planes, Wardair had 35.6 per cent of the Canadian charter market. Clearly their operation in the charter field is the best in Canada. When Wardair needed some money, the vice-president of Air Canada, Mr. Bond, conferred with Mr. Ward. He examined the statement of Wardair and thought "My goodness, Wardair really knows how to do things; maybe we could learn something from Mr. Ward." Mr. Ward is a good businessman and he said, "Well, I could sell you a piece of my company." The balance sheet shows that Wardair is valued at $3.5 million but Mr. Ward, being a good businessman, arranged to sell to Air Canada 30 per cent of his company—not for 30 per cent of $3.5 million but for $2.7 million. That was a good deal for him.

The proposition then went to the Canadian Transport Commission which was most concerned that the purchase by Air Canada of 30 per cent of Wardair would not reduce competition in Canada. On the basis that the purchase was only for 30 per cent, the commission decided that this would not produce competition and allowed the transaction to be completed. That decision was appealed to the Governor General in Council and that is where the case has been for over six months.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that a motion was made in the hearings on this bill before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, directing the government not to approve the purchase by Air Canada of 30 per cent of Wardair. The motion delivered by that committee to this House was ruled out of order, however, and the matter could not be debated. Nonetheless, the matter is still before us because in this financing bill, $2.7 million of the $6.7 million that is the reduction set out in this amendment to the statute, is for the purpose of completing the Wardair transaction.

Sir, we examined the Wardair balance sheet. Air Canada suggested that the company was really worth $8 million. We found that Wardair, like all air lines, amortizes its commitments to reflect the true life expectancy of its aircraft. So, we also looked at its aircraft. We found, at the time of the transaction, that Wardair owned four twin Otters and a Bristol freighter. According to Mr. Baldwin, past chairman of Air Canada, the Bristol freighter is not of much use. In addition, the company leases other equipment. The Wardair balance sheet, which shows a company value of $3.5 million, reflects the true value of the company's assets; yet Air Canada, in its wisdom—that company really knows how to make deals—will acquire 30 per cent of Wardair for $2.7 million.

We wondered if Air Canada wanted to learn from Wardair how to operate the charter business. If the company hired Mr. Ward to run the Air Canada charter business, that part of the operation might be profitable. But that is not to be the case. The company is acquiring a minority interest in Wardair. Indeed, the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission says that Air Canada is entitled to no more. If Air Canada wants to exercise its option and buy all of Wardair, it will need to go before the CTC again. The company is prepared to invest $2.7 million of public funds in Wardair, out of the $140 million to be advanced under this bill, to acquire a minority interest in the charter air line. That will not extend service for the people of Canada.

This move will do little except provide more holiday accommodation. It will not do anything about the real, social problems of Canada. Air Canada will merely expand its operations. It will become involved in another enterprise. Like some other Crown corporations, it is not satisfied to do the job Parliament entrusts to it. It wants to become bigger and grander. It is time this House called a halt to this, and time the government did, too. If Air Canada cannot provide necessary, regular route services to the various parts of Canada, we should let somebody else do it. We should not permit Air Canada to grow and grow and use money of the taxpayer of Canada to expand into fields not normally related to its business.

It was suggested that Wardair was not a bad buy, that the shares were valued at about $2.50 each. You will find that they are worth $1.60 on the Vancouver market. They are being traded on the basis of 30 times earnings. You will find, also, that the Wardair balance sheet indicates a deficit in working capital. That being so, you wonder, are the directors of Air Canada using sound business judgment when they decide to expand into a business venture that is not related to their main business? That is why this amendment has been brought forward.

By bringing forward the amendment we are not attempting to say that the people who work for Air Canada are incompetent or do a poor job. They do a good job. We have a good air line, but we could have a better air line if the people running it paid more attention to it instead of looking for other investment opportunities. In a moment I shall deal with the Comstock matter.

Speaking of investments, Air Canada incorporated on January 1, 1973, a company known as Econaire Holidays Limited. The company was to be in the charter business. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will be pleased to know that in nine months of operation this new company lost only half a million dollars. The minister can probably lose money more quickly himself. Yet here we go again. The directors of Air Canada wanted to go into another business. They incorporated Econaire Holidays Limited, booked charter flights, provided air line service on the cheap and lost only half a million dollars. That is the kind of thing other Crown corporations have done, as was suggested in the debate on the previous motion to do with Canadian National Railways.

Apparently Air Canada wants to become a colossus in its field. You might not mind if Air Canada were a real profit maker and returned big dividends to the people of Canada. Actually, it returned dividends of about $200,000 a year, or less than 3 per cent on investment or turnover. Indeed, Air Canada seems to be only half as profitable as other airlines in North America, which is a sad reflection. Canadian Pacific is over twice as profitable and Delta two and a half times as profitable. Air Canada would perform better if it were better managed. Certainly, the management should not flit around and invest in subsidiaries.

Let me give you another example of inefficiency. There is in Toronto a certain terminal which was designed for handling people. By a mistake, the Ministry of Transport built a terminal which nobody can stand. It is almost a cattle barn and would be an excellent freight shed. Yet who takes the terminal over, apologizes, and says that it is a wonderful terminal? Who else but Air Canada, even though that terminal, in the year ending December 31, 1973, cost Air Canada in lost revenue at least $1,500,000. That shows what sort of management runs Air Canada.

In speaking of subsidiary ventures, I shall now refer to the Comstock deal, and to the sorts of answers Mr. Pratt, president and chairman of the board of Air Canada, gave to the committee when dealing with the issue in question. If my memory serves me correctly, it is proposed that Air Canada will put up $4 million, that Comstock International will put up $6 million and that the two companies will borrow, interest free, $16 million approximately from the government of Canada. So, the government is really putting up $20 million. The common stock of the new company will be divided in the ratio 60/40, the government-owned corporation owning 40 per cent of the stock although the government will put up a greater percentage of the money. This will happen. The company will go ahead and acquire General Dynamic's position in Canadair and de Havilland's position in the facilities in Toronto. We asked about this. Air Canada, in a paper put out for its employees, set out some parts of this transaction. We found that the company has almost made the deal. It is telling its employees, "By golly, we are going into the aerospace manufacturing business." The proposals are there, we are going ahead with them.

My colleague, the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), asked the president of Air Canada about this transaction. He said that it was just in the talking stage, but they did not know the government's policy so of course were not committed to it. However, they tell their employees, through their own employee news service, that they are going ahead. If they are not committed to it, why is there provision in the estimates for money for this transaction? Why is this bill being pushed on us to provide $6.7 million for further investment in subsidiaries? Why do we get the runaround in committee meetings when questions are asked about the money involved and the profitability of the government of Canada, through Air

Canada, getting involved in the manufacture of aircraft or whatever?

It is time that Air Canada used its efforts and management capabilities to run an airline, to run it well and profitably. Air Canada has no authority from this House to get involved in hotels, manufacturing, subsidiary interests and other charter business. Air Canada is supposed to be our prime national carrier. It has a preferred position in air traffic. With that preferred position, it should be able to generate a significant return to the people of Canada, and at the same time supply them with exceptionally fine service. If we are going to have an airline, let's have an airline. If we are going to have another colossus in the investment field, then let's change the nature of Air Canada and get some good investment people in it. This corporation should not be an investment vehicle. It should be directing its efforts toward what it should be able to do best.

At one time Air Canada had a monopoly on the Vancouver to Victoria route. It also had a monopoly on the Calgary to Edmonton route. Those routes have largely been taken over by another airline which has been able to provide far better service than Air Canada. I ask this House, when will this airline get into the business of supplying air service and quit trying to pretend that it possesses the ability to be a financial colossus?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I had anticipated making a speech, but if we could go ahead with the question, I would be glad to defer because we have been over this many, many times in committee. I would be very happy to waive any participation and go on to the next stage of the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak on the motion that is before us, but in view of the fact it is now three minutes to five, I wonder if I could call it five o'clock.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it appears from the hon. member's remarks that he intends to speak later this evening. If the three minutes are not going to be used to have a vote and if the hon. member intends to speak at eight o'clock,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Perhaps we could call it five o'clock. If the hon. member wishes to seek the floor before five, he can do so and then we can pursue the debate after eight o'clock.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be rather short and to the point. I listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). I think we have mutual respect in this area. We were on the committee together and we went over this issue of the role of Air Canada. I think there is a philosophical difference of opinion as to whether you can run an airline without having access to hotels and charter flights, and whether you can have access to what I think is a very rapidly changing environment for the airline industry.

The airline industry is much more complicated than it was three, five or 10 years ago when it was nothing more than a domestic operation. I can hardly visualize any airline operating without access to hotels and the charter business. For this reason and no other, Air Canada's participation in the charter field and hotel business is not only logical, but it would be very illogical if they were not. Whether they are in it properly and operating efficiently is a matter of opinion. Possibly we even share an opinion on that subject. I should not say we share it because it is a very grey area. It is opinion. However, I think we all agree it is virtually impossible for the national airline of a country, in a very competitive world, to expect to be able to remain competitive in its fight to attract sufficient passengers in the future if it cannot offer a complete service. That complete service must, of course, include access to hard to find hotels in certain parts of the world and an upgrading of expertise in the charter field. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Northern Affairs—Request for reconsideration of decision to permit seismic exploration on Bathurst Island; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes)—Oil pipeline extension to Montreal—Reason for rejection of extension of existing Sarnia-Toronto line; the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Agriculture—Dairying—Request for statement on long-term policy.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

MOTOR VEHICLE AND FARM IMPLEMENT PARTS ACT

MEASURE TO GUARANTEE SUPPLY OF PARTS FOR MOTOR VEHICLES AND FARM IMPLEMENTS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake) moved that Bill C-103, respecting the guarantee of supply of parts for motor vehicles and farm implements imported into Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill, numbered Bill C-103 and cited as the Motor Vehicle and Farm Implements Act appears in my name because I feel there is a problem in this country in obtaining parts for motor vehicles and farm implements. Essentially, this is a simple bill whose main purpose is to make certain that anyone who buys a motor vehicle or farm implement which is manufactured in Canada and conveyed from one province to another, or anyone who buys a motor vehicle or farm tractor which is imported into Canada, shall be guaranteed a supply of parts for a period of ten years. As a result, farm tractors in particular, will not remain idle while the farmer loses money and waits an indeterminable length of time for a part to arrive from abroad. The owner would be able to approach his dealer with confidence and obtain the necessary parts in short order.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the Governor-in-Council to make regulations prescribing that a supply of parts for farm implements and motor vehicles covered by the Act shall be guaranteed for a period of ten years from the date of sale to the user thereof. It also provides that no manufacturer or distributor shall send or convey, or deliver for the purpose of sending or conveying from one province to another a farm implement or a motor vehicle manufactured in Canada unless he complies with the regulations under section three of the Act. It also stipulates that any manufacturer or distributor who violates the act is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $10,000.

I bring this matter to the attention of the House because of a number of situations which have arisen in the area of Saskatchewan that I represent. I am sure similar instances have occurred many times in other parts of Canada. In one instance a farmer was busily combining when a major part broke on his combine. He contacted the local dealer. The dealer did not have the part available and phoned warehouses in the province only to find that parts were not in stock and that the only place where one could be located was Calgary. The distance from the farmer's place to Calgary was 420 miles. He and his son set out on an all-night drive to Calgary, picked up the part and were combining again 24 hours later. They had been put to considerable inconvenience and expense and it would obviously have been far better had the part been available in Saskatoon, Regina or some other major centre in Saskatchewan. After all, we are the leading agricultural province in Canada.

Another farmer was compelled to keep his tractor out of commission for about six months because he could not get a simple repair carried out. When this farmer wrote to me I notified the Agricultural Implements Board in Saskatchewan and the Board was able to see to it that the farmer got his repair work done. In this case there was probably a breadown in communication between the farmer and his dealer.

Another farmer purchased a tractor. He ordered a belt pulley as an extra. He had to wait for eight months before he finally got his pulley. One of the problems arose as a result of a discrepancy in the company's records. The inventory indicated a substantial supply of pulleys on hand, but they had somehow disappeared. Possibly a computer was at fault. Eventually the factory was convinced and a further supply was shipped. The farmer finally obtained his pulley, but not before there had been a long delay. I could give other examples of extreme difficulty encountered by farmers in getting repairs done for their tractors and farm implements. The same applies to farm trucks, snowmobiles or powered toboggans and automobiles. I, personally, had to wait several months for repairs to be carried out to an automobile I owned. It is frequently very difficult to obtain spare parts for farm vehicles or other vehicles, when they are more than six or eight years old. It seems to me as though many companies are pursuing a policy of deliberate obsolescence. They are not interested in a vehicle after it has been in service for seven or eight years.

The constitution is not clear as to whether this whole question of repairs to machinery and motor vehicles is the responsibility of the provincial governments or of the federal government. Many of the provincial governments are doing good work in this field. However, I feel that the federal government cannot shirk its responsibility, especially when the farm implements or motor vehicles concerned cross provincial or international boundaries. At this time, four provinces in Canada have enacted laws which deal with the whole question of farm repairs and farm machinery. I have no knowledge of laws dealing with automobiles and powered toboggans. These provinces are Alberta, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan. It is possible my information may be somewhat out-dated on this point—I got it from the report of the Barber Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. Essentially, the purpose of the acts in those provinces is to protect the farmer in his relations with suppliers of farm machinery. The Barber Royal Commission recommended that all provinces review the legislation passed by the four provinces in this field and consider whether they should not introduce legislation of their own, if they had not already done so.

I shall review very briefly the legislation passed by some of the provinces. In Saskatchewan, the Agricultural Implements Act was passed in 1968 and amendments were added up to, and including, 1973. The act sets up an Agricultural Implements Board and one of its functions under section 6(C)(b) is as follows:

> To take such action as may be necessary to reduce or correct unreasonable delays in the delivery of repairs, and unreasonable charges for them, and to recommend to the minister appropriate action to alleviate such problems.

Section 6(D)(1) stipulates:

> A farmer who feels himself aggrieved or who considers he has incurred a loss due to an unreasonable delay in the availability of a repair or who considers he has incurred a loss due to the vendor or the general provincial distributor not fulfilling the conditions or warranties as set out in a conditional sales contract . . . may apply to the Board for an award of compensation for the damages or loss he has suffered.

Section 6(D)(2) states:

> Upon receipt of an application under subsection (1) the Board may, subject to the regulations with respect to notice of the hearing to interested parties and the conduct of the hearing, dismiss the application or make compensation to the applicant farmer out of the Agricultural Implements Compensation Fund.

Section 8 states:

Every general provincial distributor who has sold or distributed implements, or has implements sold or distributed on his behalf, and those implements are in operation in the province, who fails to maintain in the province an adequate supply of repairs that may be required for those implements is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $500.

That is a broad summary of the legislation in Saskatchewan. But since Saskatchewan really has no authority over machine companies who bring equipment into the province or over machine companies located in Ontario, the authority of the province is somewhat limited. In summary, then, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Agricultural Implements Act in the province of Saskatchewan and the Agricultural Implements Board, which is a creature of the act, is to make sure that any new implement sold in the province is backed by a responsible distributor. Second, its purpose is to give consumer protection through sales contracts, with specific warranties and conditions. Third, it provides for a mediator to assist in disputes with an implement dealer or manufacturer on warranties and contracts. Fourth, it provides protection against costly losses due to negligence by manufacturers or distributors in honouring warranties or providing parts. Fifth, it helps in the location and delivery of parts, and lastly provides compensation payments from a fund to be established in the near future. Farmers may be compensated for losses or damages because of delayed parts delivery or poor warranty service.

In 1967 the province of Alberta passed the farm implement act. Section 7(1) of this act states:

Notwithstanding anything contained in the agreement, every sale agreement of a new farm implement shall be deemed to contain a warranty that a sufficient supply of repair parts for the implement will be made available by the vendor for a period of 10 years from the date of agreement.

(2) Repair parts shall be made available to the purchaser within a reasonable length of time after a request therefor is made to the vendor, but the vendor is not responsible for any delay in delivering a required part that is due to circumstances beyond his control.

With regard to this particular section, Mr. Speaker, I argue that if the vendor is not responsible for delay due to circumstances beyond his control, then there is not much that can be done for a farmer if the delay occurs in a factory in Ontario where the required parts are being manufactured. Therefore, this simply lends credence to the fact that we need a new national act such as the one I am proposing today in order to ensure that all motor vehicles and farm implements are guaranteed a supply of parts for at least 10 years.

I should indicate that this year the province of Saskatchewan is in the process of passing an act entitled "the Agricultural Machinery Institute Act". I believe there is co-operation with the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba in this respect. This institute, by the way, was also recommended by the Barber Royal Commission on Farm Machinery, and I am glad that the federal government is co-operating in this regard. Its main function is to test and appraise under actual or similar working conditions machinery that is sold or is intended for sale, to undertake development work to improve and develop machinery for agricultural use, and to publish reports, pamphlets and bulletins which will be passed on to the farmers regarding the status of certain types of farm machinery. There have been some advances made, but I still feel that we need an act that is national in scope.

In this regard I received a letter from a farmer some time ago who had this to say:

The farmers of western Canada and I am sure the ones in the east have been subjected to more "legal and illegal rustling" by offshore companies than by any other "rustlers".

He is applying this expression to farm machinery companies which he feels have not always met their obligations.

One of the resolutions passed by one of the farmers organizations in the west concerning farm machinery read as follows:

Be it resolved that farm machinery companies and their dealers be held responsible to uphold any warranties or conditions stated in the bill of sale or instruction manual and in default of this responsibility, their license be suspended until all losses incurred by the farmer are paid by them.

I might indicate that this resolution has been partly resolved by some of the provincial acts that I cited earlier.

There were many recommendations in the Barber Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. This government has not acted on too many of the recommendations, though I must say it has acted on a few of them. However, I am particularly interested in the Barber Royal Commission statement in their report on farm machinery parts, which is as follows:

Farmers repeatedly complain about the difficulty frequently encountered in obtaining spare parts to repair farm machinery, particularly when it breaks down in the field during peak seasonal activity. Occasionally a part ordered on a routine basis in the off season may turn into a part needed on an emergency basis because the part is out of stock, and a long delay occurs before it becomes available. All companies should develop some method of dealing with this situation. Farmers also frequently complain of their inability to find out when the required part will arrive. If all companies could provide their dealers with a prompt estimate of how long it would require to fill an out-of-stock emergency order, the farmer involved would be better able to deal with his problem. In some situations he might be able to have a substitute part produced in a local machine shop.

I feel it should be the responsibility of the machine companies as well as the automobile companies to provide a supply of parts for at least 10 years, perhaps I might even say for 20 years if we want to preserve our resources. As I said earlier, it seems to me that we live in a society of deliberate obsolescence. There would be far less waste in our society if the various farm machinery companies and motorized vehicle companies planned to ensure that they had an adequate supply of parts for equipment and implements in every province of Canada in which they do business. I am not sure that this is always the case. In other words, I feel there should be a central warehouse, or several central warehouses, in each province conveniently located, stocked with a good supply of parts which would be available to farmers within a few hours' notice. If they are not, then the companies should be held liable.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in supporting this bill presented to the House by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly). I understand some of the problems that are inherent in our agricultural machinery industry, but I wonder why in the world this kind of bill is introduced in this House of Commons. I do not think there should ever be a need for this kind of legislation. The industry itself must realize that it is not just a question of salesmanship, of being able to sell big machines. It is not simply a question of computerizing and tabulating farm implement sales on a balance sheet at the end of the year and congratulating salesmen on a tremendous job done. The industry has to do more than that. It must understand that in order to gain the confidence of the people it has to be able to earn it, and in this regard I think the industry has, to some extent, been very sadly lacking. In interprovincial transactions, provinces have the right of scrutiny of terms and conditions. I think the same right should apply equally in regard to companies that operate within the province. I do not think that companies that sell equipment, machinery and motorized vehicles in all provinces should be singled out.

The situation outlined by the hon. member is a very common and irritating one. I have personally had countless experiences of this kind. I had one combine which sat idle all fall waiting for a piston cap to arrive, and we had to use only one combine. This kind of situation is ridiculous. I had an experience where another farmer and I were working together and started to harvest very early. One of his machines broke down and he waited about three weeks for a part to arrive. Finally, when I completed my own combining my machine had to work his fields as well, and he was a little disturbed that his machine had to stand idle. He had only recently purchased it, yet he could not get the part required. I told him I would fix that in a hurry and I phoned the company. I had a little difficulty trying to get through in order to explain to them the nature of the problem. Of course, the officials were away and the secretary was just acting as sort of a buffer between those making the complaints and those at fault, so the matter was continually put off.

While I do not like to use my position to bring pressure to bear, I finally had to resort to this. I told them that, as a member of parliament, I was taking the matter up on behalf of one of my constituents, and might have to use other measures to force the company to realize there was a problem. After about half an hour, I finally got a call through. I must say that the dealer was very hard-pressed. He sent off no less than three telegrams and made a phone call. He did everything possible, and I am convinced that he was not to blame. The representative of the company in question said: Okay, what is your problem? I knew the part number and I said: We need these parts immediately. He said: Well, we will look into it, and within two days they did send out the parts.

After I got through to the president, the company unloaded all the parts, in addition to the one we ordered, that the dealer had ordered over the past six months, all send c.o.d. This dealer was probably having difficulties with the company and he had to run all around the countryside to collect enough money to pick up that one c.o.d. which may or may not have contained the part we wanted. In any event, they did send the one part. The following day the dealer had another consignment sent to him c.o.d., and he had to run around the country to all the people who owed him money as well as to all the credit sources he had in order to pay for that one consignment. At one time he went to the fellow at the bus depot and asked him to open up the consignment. That fellow said: I can't do it; you pay for the c.o.d. and I will open it up. The dealer said he did not even know whether the part was in there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All you wanted was one nut.

Mr. Korchinski: That was about the size of it, but that is exactly how ridiculous the situation can be. You can tie up a $15,000 or $18,000 piece of machinery, yet the dealer does not know who is at fault. It may not even be his fault. Dealers have had their financial difficulties and I am very loath to fault the local dealers because of their difficulties.

I have had similar experience with the John Deere Company which is discontinuing machine dealerships all across the country. It does not matter how many machines these dealers have sold in the past, that is not important. The important thing is how many machines the dealer has sold in the last year. I have seen the same situation in respect of other companies such a J. I. Case and International. These companies have forced dealers to move from one part of the country to another and have just caused some of them to go bankrupt. Then, if a dealer has not sold anything in the last year the company tells him he is out.

At the same time I think I should point out one other thing. We are all too ready to lay the blame on the company, but we must recognize that there are people working within those companies. Very often the attitude of those employees is that they could not care less. They do not care whether they drop a part and it breaks or whether it is in proper condition when it is received. Apparently that is not their concern. I suggest that transportation companies adopt the same attitude of not caring. They feel that they have done their job and if the part is broken that is not their fault. They believe it must be somebody else's fault.

I have heard of many cases of people phoning in and not being able to get any response on a Saturday or a Friday after three o'clock. Can we really blame the companies for everything that goes wrong, and assume it is the responsibility of the company? It seems that is what most of us assume? I suggest that the general attitude of our society is not conducive to improving conditions. I think workers employed by those companies must share a part of the blame. It is too easy for most of us to put the blame on the machine companies, but these companies cannot operate without the services of the people who work for them. I think we must recognize that a great deal depends upon the attitude of those within the organization, and it is this attitude that produces good relationships all the way down the line. Surely, the dealer does not want to lose a customer, the machine company does not want to lost the customer, and surely to goodness the people employed by these companies do not want to lose their jobs.

It is too easy for hon. members such as the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) to suggest, as he did a few moments ago, that it is the fault of the companies, because the companies are big and they can take the blame. Some members take this attitude because they must restrict themselves in their criticism. That statement may be a little strong for the NDP, but everyone in this society must realize that we are all at fault. Do we or do we not care enough about what happens to the other man? I have seen this so often, as I am sure every hon. member of the House and of this country has. I have in mind the sloppy work that is so often done, yet people want to earn more and must earn more in order to counteract the effects of inflation. They think that the little bit they do is insignificant, but I suggest everything must be added to the cost of a commodity.

Mr. Paproski: You were referring to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), not the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't heckle your own member.

Mr. Korchinski: Regina-Lake Centre, that is correct. What I said was wrong.

An hon. Member: You might as well put the blame where it belongs.

Mr. Korchinski: I only wanted to say that it is too easy to say somebody else is at fault, and that very often we must all share the responsibility. I agree with the hon. member who suggested that society is geared for planned obsolescence. When you consider the way some of the young fellows drive these vehicles into the ground, I would rather let them drive an old truck than buy them a new one, so long as the old truck was serviceable. That is fine for my purposes. We are not trying to compete with the Joneses out there. Therefore, I think there is a need for this type of legislation, and I think governments at all levels should take a firm stand.

When we consider our limited resources, what use is there in having one scrap pile after another in the farmers' yards just for the sake of a few missing parts? I know many farmers who operate old machines that are just as serviceable and just as handy as the new ones, and they are not making annual trips to the bank to get mortgages in order to buy new machines. In fact, these machines are just not available any more. So what is the alternative? Instead of scrapping the whole thing, perhaps one should adjust some things. All I am saying is that the government should consider this matter very carefully in view of the limited resources in this area. If this is done, perhaps someone in one of the big cities will suddenly take note of the fact instead of just saying that farmers can afford these machines. Someone should pick up the cudgel and say, "Let us provide the parts that are necessary. Let us carry the message not only to the machinery companies but right into the factories. Let us see if we cannot preserve some of the resources which we have, because they are limited".

I have no hesitation in supporting the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) on this occasion, but I want to point out the other side of the story rather than simply blaming the machinery companies. For example, I could say that I think improvements could be made. A telex system could be adopted which would provide instant information. After all, we have the Zenith telephone system. This is an example of the kind of system which I think could be put into operation. I have had unhappy experiences with machines. They are pretty expensive. I do not think one has to go farther than five or ten miles from his own home town to find enough examples to fill a book. I believe the time has come when not only the provincial governments but the federal government must move into this area because of the absolute waste of resources that is occurring.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise this afternoon to discuss Bill C-103 whose purpose is to ensure that anyone who buys a motor vehicle or farm implement which is manufactured in Canada and is conveyed from one province to another, or that anyone who buys a motor vehicle or farm tractor that is imported into Canada shall be guaranteed a supply of parts for a period of ten years.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote here a few survey notes in that respect. In its public hearings, the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery was struck by the number and the firmness of the complaints made by all farm organizations about the difficulties encountered by farmers in finding efficient and reliable parts service. It seems to be felt generally speaking that manufacturers should be in a position to provide better service than now, particularly by stocking more parts with their dealers and branches. That is of prime importance for the farmer because a delay of a few days in getting a major piece of farm machinery going during a difficult harvest could result in very serious losses.

To better appreciate the nature and the extent of that problem, the commission made two surveys. The first one in November 1967 was limited to four provinces—Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—and urged farmers to point out any particular problem they had encountered in obtaining parts or maintenance for their implements in the period after April 1, 1966.

The second survey in January 1968 included the distribution of a shorter questionnaire to a specifically selected sample group of farmers across Canada. The purpose of the questionnaire was to provide an overall assessment of the extent and the seriousness of the problems encountered by farmers with respect to parts and maintenance.

During the first survey, some 50,000 questionnaires were distributed. Out of that number, 7,259 or about 15 per cent were returned. About 22 per cent of the forms returned mentioned a problem of spare parts or maintenance. The complaints dealt with 78 various kinds of material, but the ground of a great number of grievances, that is about 43 per cent, was tractors. Comparing the number of complaints and each kind of implements on the farms, it became clear that as far as the number in use was concerned, the combine gave more trouble then any other equipment, perhaps due to the complexity of the machine and the large number of working parts.

In a more thorough follow-up of the survey 20 typical complaints were selected for each of the four provinces and an interviewer met with the farmers, the suppliers and eventually the staff of the companies in order to determine the circumstances of each complaint. They were all provincial residents who had a good farming experience and had at least completed two years of agronomy or agricultural engineering at the university.

● (1740)

The talks with farmers took place immediately after the crops, when those surveyed had the time to discuss their problems with the facts still fresh in their memory.

Of the 80 cases reviewed in detail, the great majority of those surveyed complained that they could not immediately find spare parts when they needed them. The most significant findings of this study in depth were, I believe, that the dealer was wholly or partly responsible in about half the cases.

The typical remark of the interviewer in this case was that the parts ordered by the dealer were not the right ones; that the dealer had not ordered the parts or had been slow in ordering them; that the dealer had not advised the farmer when he received the part.

In 5 of the 80 cases reviewed, it was found that the farmer has no cause for complaint. In 7 other cases, the farmer was found partly responsible. Of the 69,000 questionaires sent across the country over 55 per cent were returned, which is a wide response for a postal survey.

Besides, about 48 per cent of those who answered complained of having had much difficulty in obtaining parts in the past two years. As regards the manufacturer's problem, it seems at the present time that all big factories have to keep in stock a number of various parts most of which account eventually for few sales every year.

Massey-Ferguson pointed out that the number of various parts in stock in North America had increased from about 68,000 in 1958 to more than 100,000 in 1967. Out of that total, 30,000 parts had not been bought even once in 1966. Of the 54,000 parts for International-Harvester farm implements kept in stock in Canada, almost half had been ordered only once or not at all during the previous year.

The International Co. pointed out that about 60 per cent of the parts in stock were for machines not manufactured any more. Massey-Ferguson pointed out that tractors' and combines' parts remained in stock at least 15 years after the company had stopped manufacturing the machine and that spare parts were still available for many machines not manufactured for 20 years. Considering the particular problem spare parts posed for manufacturers, the tremendous number of parts to be kept in stock, the very small number off sales in a year, the high storage costs and the unpredictable fluctuations of the demand for such parts, it is obviously hard for the companies to decide how many parts should be kept in stock and where.

For instance, should Massey-Ferguson double its stock of all parts of which fewer than 50 were sold in 1966, they would have to increase by $7.2 million their total inventory of spare parts. Considering the estimated 15 per cent in interest, storage and maintenance charges, annual costs would amount to about $1 million.

While this figure exceeds only slightly 4 per cent of the total number of parts sold by the company, it would represent 55 per cent of the annual sales of that type of parts.

[Mr. Corriveau.]

Of course, each firm must set up the best way of distributing costs for surplus stocks according to the advantage they would gain if they were able to supply spare parts as required. Since farmers insist on the possibility of getting maintenance parts as required, all firms are interested, from a competitive viewpoint in satisfying this demand.

According to testimonies before the commission, most if not all major manufacturers of farm implements have been making a concerted effort for the past few years in order to improve the quality of their spare parts service.

Almost everywhere now, computers are used to set up a careful list of available parts so as to ensure that new parts are ordered as soon as stock for a given part begins to decrease more rapidly than expected.

Moreover, several farm implement manufacturers are trying to improve the level of parts services in their agencies. Agents are individual businessmen and take their own responsibilities concerning the quantity of parts to stock. However, manufacturing firms can exercise a strong influence on these decisions, which they have done so far apparently. A number of firms have given some details on the direction that they give their agents regarding the systematic stock control and forms to use in the stocking of parts.

Moreover, most firms offer their dealers special premiums to push them into storing fast-selling parts before the so-called use period. Several firms suggested the establishment of special arrangements for the return of parts, in order to lessen the risks for the dealer who stocks parts never requested. In spite of these efforts, the commission's report clearly indicated that the dealers' quality and competence often leave much to be desired. It seems in the best interest of the firms to reduce the number of marginal or ineffective dealers, and intensify their efforts to improve the quality of service provided by the remaining ones.

A number of farmers and farm organizations have submitted a proposal that dealers should stock a larger number of parts. Such a proposal does not seem promising as a means to solve the part-stocking problem. We need only look at the data supplied by Massey-Ferguson on the trade of parts in North America. In 1966, this company had 2,643 dealers on this continent. It was keeping in stock a little under 99,000 various parts, but out of this number only 1,561 parts sold more than 3,000 units a year. So, if the individual dealers were keeping in stock all the parts for which the average sales in a year amounted to 1.1 unit or more per dealer, the company would stock only these 1,561 parts, that is less than 2 per cent for all the various parts figuring in the inventory. On the other hand, when a dealer keeps in stock parts whose annual sale amounts to one unit or less, he runs the risk of having some of these becoming obsolete and left on his hands. On the whole, the stocking and distribution costs of spare parts would be much higher.

With regard to seldom required parts, the analysis suggests that the most profitable formula would be to stock parts in a central place and to rely on the swiftness of transportation and communications for their delivery to those farmers who need them. With the development of dealerships, each dealer will be able to stock a greater supply of parts. On the debit side, the longer trips required of the farmer to obtain parts must be taken into account. However, some farmers have said in briefs or before the commission that they are ready to travel greater distances to get parts provided they are sure that the dealer will have them on the spot.

I humbly suggest, Mr. Speaker, that common supply points would be one the best solutions put forward up to now.

According to this evaluation of the problem, what conclusions should be drawn regarding the resolution that companies set up central parts depot? In the opinion of the commission, any advantage of such a system is strongly overcome by its disadvantages. Under the present arrangements, whereby each company is responsible for its parts distribution, it is very easily determined who is held liable for any supply shortage. Since the reputation of each company depends partly on its capacity to offer a quick and reliable parts service, it is entirely to its advantage to develop and maintain a good service.

If the parts were provided through a central co-operative stock, the areas of responsibilities would be much less well defined. It is at least possible that the service would worsen under such an arrangement. Moreover, the service now provided by each company is an integral part of the parent company's parts business in North America. If all the central stocks of Canadian companies were placed under the same roof, we could sever the direct communication and responsibility links which now exist. I am thinking about problems beyond the influence of manufacturers.

Since the very nature of the repair parts problem makes the stocking of a great number of parts in regional and central stockrooms inevitable, the existence of an efficient and quick emergency service requires prompt communication of the farmers' needs, and immediate action by the company to ensure that the farmer's order is filled and delivery of the part will be made as soon as possible. Even though we now live in an era where the rapidity and efficiency of communications and transportation have improved, there are many obstacles to the emergency distribution of spare parts to the farmers.

From a technical standpoint, communications have made a lot of progress. Since all the parts are now registered on computers, some companies pretend that they can find a part anywhere in North America in only a few hours, even if only a few copies exist. The dealers often communicate with the branches by telex. The communication problem seems to lie most often at the human level. The farmer does not say to the dealer that his need is urgent, or else the dealer does not follow the procedure prescribed by the company so that the urgent nature of the order is not recognized at the branch level. The commission's investigation suggests that such errors are more common among smaller and less efficient dealers. Their frequency should diminish as farm machinery companies continue to upgrade the level of their dealerships and to reduce their number.

Even when the spare part is in stock at the branch or central warehouse, there can be, for many reasons, considerable delay in delivery to the farmer. The farmers in remote areas must often rely on trucking, bus or express services to get their parts. Trucking companies and express offices do not usually operate on Sunday. At times, bus companies are not too eager to transport huge or awkward parts nor to deliver them to remote spots lacking staff.

Four Canadian provinces, namely Alberta, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan have passed laws on farm equipment to regulate and moderate the relations between the three parties interested in the purchase and use of farm equipment: the company, the dealer and the farmer. One of the prime objectives of these acts would seem to be protection of the interests of the farmer in his relations with the suppliers of farm machinery. The dealers are eventually subjected to a licensing system to allow the adoption and the maintenance of minimal standards of production. On the other hand, attempts are being made to guarantee—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry I have to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired. Of course, he may continue his remarks with unanimous consent of the House.

[English]

Is there consent?

Mr. Knight: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I regret my refusal to extend the time of the hon. parliamentary secretary, but I am sure he is aware that this debate will be over at six o'clock and with his great interest in the problem he would not want to prevent my speaking on the subject and allowing the bill then to be referred to committee.

I rise merely to say a few words. In presenting this bill to parliament, the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) did a notable job of outlining the problems of farmers in all parts of Canada who face a serious situation when farm machinery parts are not available. The hon. member for Meadow Lake, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) are to be commended for their contributions which show that this question goes beyond mere partisanship. I hope we can end the debate before six o'clock and send the bill to committee so that the whole subject may be investigated and the government enabled to bring forth legislation for this House to consider.

If any hon. member should follow me in this debate he would be doing a disservice to the farmers of Canada by killing the bill and sending it to the bottom of the order paper. I usually speak for much longer than I shall now, but I will curtail my remarks so that the House may allow the bill to go to committee. I hope no other member will speak, and so allow this most important subject to be referred to the committee on agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak on this bill this afternoon. There can be no question that this matter is of great concern to the farmers of this country, so I congratulate the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) for bringing it before the House. If I had time, I would go into some detail as to whether this problem is more properly dealt with by the federal government or by the provincial governments.

This bill seeks to guarantee a supply of farm machinery parts for a period of ten years. This is an important aspect of the whole problem of spare parts for farm machinery, but equally important is the problem of servicing and providing those parts on a speedy basis when breakdowns occur. Many of us go to farm meetings and hear about the problem of being unable to get spare parts almost on demand, especially during the harvest season when there are many machinery breakdowns and there is a regional or provincial problem in obtaining speedy delivery of spare parts.

At the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture held last February in Saskatoon, the following resolution was passed concerning farm machinery repairs:

(a) That retailers keep a sufficient parts inventory to make possible the quick repair of farm machinery, especially during rush periods.

(b) That farm machinery parts and repair services be offered to farmers during the weekends deemed necessary and during lunch hours.

(c) That there be more standardization of parts in the farm machinery industry.

(d) That individual machinery repair parts be made available rather than having to purchase an entire unit.

In addition, a farm machinery committee was established. Its terms of reference include the development of a comparative evaluation of machinery manufacturers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate that the hon. member was making a most interesting speech, but it is six o'clock and the Chair must advise the House that the time assigned for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, just before the supper break I rose to participate briefly in the debate. I propose to comment on this bill and on some of the observations of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). Passage of Bill C-5 has been delayed for some time. Members of the House have the right to delay passage of a bill; nonetheless, this has proved to be an embarrassment both to the CNR and to Air Canada because, no matter what some members may think, these companies are entitled to funds for financing. Members, of course, may question that financing.

It seems to me that we were given ample opportunity in committee, under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), to investigate these matters and question officials of the CNR and Air Canada on various aspects of the operations of both corporations. I do not want to debate with the hon. member the Air Canada-Wardair transaction which he mentioned this afternoon—whether Air Canada is paying too much or not enough for 30 per cent of Wardair shares, or whether they should pay 30 times, 15 times, or 10 times earnings. It boils down to how one defines earnings. Do we mean earnings after depreciation, or before; earnings declared for income tax, or for the purpose of corporate tax?

I think the hon. gentleman would agree that this is not the real issue. Unintentionally, I am sure, the hon. gentleman implied that Air Canada agreed to pay to Wardair considerably more than it had to pay. Perhaps I read more into the hon. gentleman's speech than he intended. He is an able debater and I am sure he did not mean to intimate that, even unintentionally.

The fundamental question is, should Air Canada be buying into Wardair at all? What may not have been said—I do not know, since I have not listened to or read every speech made in this debate—is that before entering into this financial arrangement with Wardair, Air Canada obtained the best possible advice from acknowledged experts in the field. Certainly this was mentioned forcefully in the standing committee when this matter was considered during the last session.

The question is, what is Air Canada receiving in return for its investment in Wardair? It is not whether Air Canada paid a fair price. A fair price is a matter of opinion. According to observers and consultants in the aeronautical industry, Air Canada offered a fair price. The question is, is this transaction unique, is it unusual, is Air Canada breaking new ground in acquiring part of the business of another airline? Further, what was its motive, and what will it get in return for its money?

The hon. gentleman said this afternoon, and I agree, that if Air Canada bought into Wardair simply to acquire equipment, the deal was not lucrative since Wardair equipment is limited, much of it being leased. Some of its equipment is useful in fulfilling contracts in the northern territories. Fundamentally, I do not think Air Canada bought Wardair shares in order to acquire more equipment, as it would be better to buy or lease equipment directly from the manufacturer. The intriguing question is, what would Air Canada want with Wardair in the first place?

I should emphasize that other airlines tried to acquire Wardair and failed. The owners of the business, the family group, would not give up their control of the airline business despite the cyclical nature of the industry which has made Wardair and other airlines conscious of the need for liquidity. If you look at the balance-sheet objectively you will see that Wardair improved its financial position consistent with the financial trends in that particular industry.

The significant thing is not so much the evidence that came forward at our committee hearings, but it did whet my curiosity to the point that I obtained transcripts of all the Canadian Transport Commission hearings, which are available. Let us presume, for the moment, I was persuaded by members of the standing committee that it was a terrible deal for Air Canada and a bad deal for the taxpayers that Air Canada, a Crown corporation, pay more than it should for the purchase of shares of this particular firm.

I was rather intrigued. I wondered why all these other corporations such as CP Air, Nordair, and Pacific Western were so publicly minded that they would go to the Canadian Transport Commission hearings and oppose the purchase of 30 per cent of the shares of Wardair by Air Canada. Was this a wonderful gesture on the part of these particular airlines to protect the Canadian people from Air Canada's alleged foolishness? It is nice to know private industry cares so much about the taxpayer that they would go to the Canadian Transport Commission and say they opposed the purchase by Air Canada of 30 per cent of the shares of Wardair. I am naive by nature, but I am not quite that naive. I just could not visualize large corporations such as CP Air, Nordair and two other firms hiring the best legal counsel in Ottawa, Toronto and out west for weeks of hearings simply to protect the Canadian taxpayer against a foolish gesture by Air Canada.

It seemed, there ought to be something a little deeper behind it all than just protecting the average taxpayer from the foolishness of Air Canada. It would be nice to believe this is the reason; however, when you read the testimony you find it is very incidental and not the main purpose at all for the opposition by these carriers to the proposed purchase of Wardair shares by Air Canada. Their opposition to the proposed purchase was legitimate. Certainly CP Air is a very legitimate organization: it has provided the very best in competition for Air Canada, and continues to do so. In case members opposite have any illusions, I tell them to make no mistake about CP Air. I have travelled CP Air as much as the next person, and I have enjoyed it as much as travelling Air Canada. If anything, I find their competition has improved the situation across Canada.

I am not so naive as to think CP Air would appear before the Canadian Transport Commission simply to protect the taxpayers' dollars when Air Canada proposed to buy 30 per cent of Wardair shares. When you read the five or six volumes of the hearings, it becomes very obvious that the fear of CP Air, Nordair and Pacific Western was that collectively Air Canada and Wardair could very well become a monopoly of the air charter business. The affinity group concept is disappearing, or has disappeared, and the shape of things to come is pretty well known in the airline industry. The traveller today wants some kind of package deal, if not for the sake of money at least for convenience. It is recognized there is very little use travelling half way around the world by any airline if you cannot have decent accommodation when you get there.

It is obvious that Air Canada, CP Air and other large competitive airlines realize that in the future they must be able to offer more to the travelling public, especially those who travel in the tourist rather than the business area. They want more than just air travel; they want a complete package.

It is obvious from the testimony given before the Canadian Transport Commission that the concerns, legitimate or otherwise, of CP Air and Nordair are that in the future Wardair-Air Canada as a package would wield a virtual monopoly over this type of operation in the Canadian air industry. This may be a very legitimate concern but it is an entirely different one from whether Air Canada is paying too much for the purchase of 30 per cent of the Wardair company.

I am not a lawyer, but I read the arguments placed before the Canadian Transport Commission with a great degree of envy because each and every company was more than ably represented by counsel: they were obviously specialists in this particular field. However, what decided the Canadian Transport Commission to approve in principle the purchase by Air Canada of 30 per cent of Wardair was the realization that unless this type of merger was made, the Canadian airline industry collectively was in danger of losing a greater and greater percentage of this type of business.

Statistics show that of the 450,000 charter flight passengers—I think that is how you designate these people—who travelled to and from Canada and the United Kingdom, 52 per cent travelled by foreign carriers. That is a considerably higher percentage than in previous years. Of the 48 per cent carried by Canadian carriers, Wardair carried 24 per cent, Air Canada 13 per cent, CP Air 7 per cent and Pacific Western 4 per cent. British Caledonia and BOAC carried 23 per cent.

So it was proven so far as the CTC was concerned that the relationship between Wardair and Air Canada was desirable from a domestic point of view, if not necessarily desirable from the point of view of CPA, Pacific Western or some other Canadian airline. The relationship was desirable from the standpoint of improving our ability to compete against foreign-owned airlines. Therefore it seems to me it was either a good deal, in which case Nordair and CPA were quite logical in their opposition, or it was a bad deal. And if it was a bad deal, I cannot see them wasting their money opposing the Air Canada-Wardair deal in the first place.

Much as I appreciate CPA, Nordair and those other companies in whose aircraft we travel from time to time, my gullibility does not extend to the point that I believe they would spend many thousands of dollars in hearings before the CTC to protect a competitor against a bad investment. The reason, as stated at the CTC hearing, was simply that they feared what might happen in the course of time. It was not brought out during the committee proceedings, though it could have been—it had already been made public at the CTC hearings—that if and when the Ward family sells more of its shares, those shares will be sold to Air Canada. So in time, with the permission of the CTC, Air Canada could conceivably assume majority control of Wardair.

I suspect some understanding was reached at the time that Air Canada will eventually own more than 30 per cent of the shares and use its option to take up sufficient shares to be clearly identified as the majority shareholder in the Wardair operation. Without passing judgment on whether such monopolies are good, I would think the CTC was certainly apprised of all facets of Air Canada's proposed transaction with Wardair, the one which is now before cabinet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Unanimous consent of the House is needed for the hon. member to continue. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: I do not wish to take up the time of the House unduly; I simply wish to summarize what I have said. There is really a question of accounting methods involved here. The hon. member for Mississauga and I have debated this matter before—whether Air Canada offered 30 times the earnings of Wardair. It depends on how those earnings are assessed. But this is really incidental to the question whether or not Air Canada and Wardair should be linked.

Incidentally, and in conclusion, I wish to point out that a relationship between a national carrier and another operator is not unusual. We find that with BOAC, KLM, Swissair, Scandinavian Airlines—virtually every nationally-owned airline in the world. The objection raised to what Air Canada proposes was logical and understandable in light of the competitive situation, but the CTC based its decision upon the fact that unless such a relationship was permitted, year by year, as evidence showed, the Canadian airline industry would lose more and more Canadian business.

The commission ruled, not in the light of whether Air Canada would improve its position vis-à-vis CPA but whether the Canadian airline industry as a whole would be able to retain at least 50 per cent of the charter business operating to Europe. Indications are that as a result of this proposed merger, if it is approved by cabinet, Air Canada will be in a position to meet successfully the erosion of its revenue by the charter business which has been going on steadily for the last couple of years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) because I think members of this House have little choice but to speak up when we feel there has been a wrong done to the House of Commons. I am referring to the fact that through trickery an amount was voted here last Tuesday night—the sum of $28.8 million—which was passed under the Appropriation Act in a few minutes but which should not have been passed.

Mr. Benjamin: Explain.

Mr. Stevens: In the course of my remarks I shall outline a complete pattern of failure to disclose certain information to members of the House and to the Canadian public who should be entitled to the facts.

Mr. Benjamin: Explain the last remark you made.

Mr. Stevens: I am referring to the fact that there is an option outstanding with respect to the purchase of up to 32 per cent of the outstanding shares of de Havilland of Canada Limited in the amount of $28.8 million. We have endeavoured in committee and elsewhere to determine whether it is the intention of the government to go ahead with this project, and on each occasion we have been told the question is still not decided. At the last meeting of the finance committee, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) insisted that the estimate be considered, yet he positively declined to give the committee the opportunity to look at the financial statement of de Havilland of Canada Limited. I think this is most unfortunate. Financial statements concerning de Havilland are available to us though they are not up to date. We know the company has sales valued at $35 million and that it is marginally profitable. We were absolutely startled to find the government seriously considering exercising an option to purchase all of the outstanding shares of that company for an amount that it estimates to be between $28.8 million and $38.8 million.

Let us put the matter in perspective. I am referring to a company with sales of $35 million and marginal profitability which the government is seriously considering purchasing for between $28.8 million and $38.8 million. Yet the parent of that company, the Hawker Siddeley group in England, have another subsidiary in Canada called Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited. I find it relevant to note that this subsidiary has sales of $200 million and a profitability after taxation of $3 million. This company is selling on the Toronto Stock Exchange today for $50 million. In short, it would be possible for the government of Canada, if it is serious about buying into the aerospace field, to purchase virtually all the stock of a profitable, ongoing company six times the size of de Havilland of Canada for very little more money than it is proposing to put into de Havilland of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: They should buy it.

Mr. Stevens: My hon. friend to my left says we should buy it. I am sure the NDP would buy anything if it meant state ownership in this country. They lust for power. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in particular should note that these members will buy anything sight unseen. When we attempted to have the estimate with respect to de Havilland reduced in committee, government members, joined by their allies in the NDP, said, "We don't care what the statement of de Havilland looks like. We don't care whether or not it is earning money. We want that estimate to go through".

That is a broad outline of what I should like to deal with tonight when considering the motion before the House. However, the story is bigger that I have indicated, because de Havilland is only one company which the government is proposing to purchase. There is a second company, Canadair, owned by General Dynamics, which happens to have its main plant in Canada in the riding of Dollard. Whether that has any connection with the fact that the riding of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) is Dollard is not for me to say. However, the minister indicated today that he was willing to pay a dollar for a gallon of oil that one can buy for 25 or 30 cents, so if he has had any input into the purchase of Canadair we as members of this House should be highly suspect of any such purchase.

Let me deal with a few specifics, Mr. Speaker. In the transport committee in December we attempted to explore a deal which was prepared by Air Canada and Comstock International entitled "Proposal for rationalization of the Canadian aerospace industry". This proposal dealt with the possible merger of de Havilland with Canadair to which I have referred. The proposal is nicely bound within glossy covers, sets out pro forma balance-sheets and indicates that generally speaking the government is expected to pay for practically everything yet will not necessarily end up with even 50 per cent of the equity ownership.

This came to us, as Mr. Pratte, the president of Air Canada, pointed out, through a leak. He was highly disturbed that this proposal had been, as he said, leaked to the opposition benches. While during the committee hearings Mr. Pratte and the newly elected president at that time, Mr. Vaughn, were quick to point out that we should not take this document too seriously, that it was only a working paper which they would not necessarily follow, they forgot that they had already written a letter dated October 29, 1973, addressed to Mr. C. D. Arthur of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in which they had this to say:

> We . . . look forward to the opportunity of working closely with your department to bring (our proposal) to fruition.

I am referring to this merger of de Havilland and Canadair. I note that when discussing the anticipated results of the proposal—and undoubtedly NDP members will rejoice on hearing this—it was stated that one of the advantages would be to bring about a closer liaison with government officials, with the head office being located in Ottawa. I make reference to this, Mr. Speaker, because in our questioning we tried to get from Mr. Pratte an understanding of why the government would seriously consider paying $22 million for Canadair and $25 million for de Havilland. Any time we referred to a total purchase of $47 million we were told by Mr. Pratte and Mr. Vaughn that the document was nothing more than a preliminary proposal.

I point out that in their financial statements it was indicated that if these two companies were joined together, it was thought that by 1980 they would have a combined sales volume of $120 million to $150 million, and that Canadair would make 2.7 per cent to 3.7 per cent profit during the next ten-year period of investment. With inflation at the present time running, thanks to our Minister of Finance, at 9 per cent to 10 per cent, the government is seriously considering an investment that it thinks will yield 2.7 per cent to 3.7 per cent in a ten-year period.

I am not going to take up hon. members' time to read all the conditions attaching to the proposal, but if all conditions are met it is stated that it is felt the company would be viable and profitable. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is natural that they would take that attitude, because they know that the two companies they are attempting to merge will find it extremely difficult to make money in the highly competitive, energy short era in which we now live so far as the manufacture of aircraft is concerned.

They project that this $47 million investment will yield a sales potential in the year 1980 of $150 million, presumably totally ignoring the fact that they can buy Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited for $50 million, a company already having sales of $200 million and yielding a $3 million profit. I suggest that this is the irrational type of behaviour with which we are having to live so far as certain Crown corporations and the government of this country are concerned.

I now come to the main reason for feeling I had a duty tonight to put before this House and the public of Canada some hard facts. I see no reason why taxpayers' dollars should be channelled into an investment unless those who wish to do the channelling accept the responsibility of putting statements on their proposed investment before the House so that members can review them and make up their own minds whether the investment that is proposed is worth while. Again, I am pleased to see the Minister of Finance here tonight, since it may well well be that he does not know what kind of deals are being made under his skirts as far as certain departments of this government are concerned.

Let us come to some of the specifics. When he appeared on December 17 before the transport committee, I asked Mr. Pratte whether he could furnish the committee with the statements of Canadair and de Havilland. At that time Mr. Pratte said—I emphasize this—that he would supply these to us through the chairman as soon as he got back to Montreal. That was the commitment by Mr. Pratte of Air Canada. He promised us statements for de Havilland and Canadair, but these statements have not been forthcoming: the chairman of the committee has heard nothing further from Mr. Pratte in this respect.

Mr. Pratte, when we attempted to get some justification for proposing to pay $47 million for these new companies, suggested that after all this was only a working document and he felt we should not be pressing as though this transaction was a fait accompli. When we indicated that the natural thing to do was to get an assurance from Mr. Pratte and Mr. Vaughn that in the meantime, between that committee meeting and June 30, 1974, they would not buy the shares of de Havilland or Canadair, leaving us with no opportunity to review the deal, the president of Air Canada gave us this commitment. I asked him the following:

—what assurance can you give us that by June 30, 1974, you will not become obligated with respect to the purchase of Canadair or de Havilland as set out in this proposal?

MR. PRATTE: I have offered at the last meeting to give that assurance to you, sir, and to members of the committee.

He went on to say:

—I can certainly give you the assurance that there will be no commitment to subscribe or to permit any money for the purchase of any interest in Canadair or in de Havilland or in any company that would have any interest in de Havilland or Canadair.

I said:

I am relieved to hear that.

When I pressed Mr. Pratte, he went on to say that they might have to spend half an hour or so actively pursuing the deal if they were requested to do so. I asked him if he would also give assurance that he would not press the deal further, and he said:

However, in terms of committing money, or committing ourselves to go into that proposition having to do with de Havilland or Canadair, I am prepared to give a commitment at any time.

I repeat, "half an hour or so"; and that is the way it was left at the committee meeting. We pressed him for further assurances and we were left with what I regarded as a clear undertaking that there would be no commitment on the part of the government of Canada or any Crown agency of the government to purchase the shares of de Havilland or Canadair between that date and June 30. That is why I believe hon. members will understand my surprise when I found in the main estimates tabled in this House by the minister responsible for Treasury Board an estimate in the amount of $28.8 million, being vote L20, for the payment in current and subsequent fiscal years in accordance with the terms and conditions approved by the governor in council for the purchase of shares of the capital stock of de Havilland of Canada Limited.

We had a commitment from the president of Air Canada that between that date and June they would not purchase the shares of de Havilland. Then we had an estimate tabled in this House and, as I said earlier, this question came up for review before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. At that time I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he would be good enough to give us the statements concerning de Havilland so that we as members of the committee could decide whether this $28.8 million was an appropriate amount to pay for de Havilland. We were told flatly that this was a confidential document and would not be turned over to us. I refer to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee for March 26, page 2:26, when I asked the following:

Mr. Chairman, could the minister then furnish the committee, so that we may tell whether the $28 million figure is a fair new estimate, with de Havilland's statements for the past five years showing balance-sheets, profit and loss picture for this company?

MR. GILLESPIE: I believe that is private to the company itself, Mr. Stevens. I cannot give you that undertaking.

Keeping in mind that we had the president of Air Canada assure us he would deliver the statements, that under no circumstances would they be committed to buying this stock but that in the interval they might have to spend half an hour discussing it, the minister went on to state:

A good deal of work is being done by my department to assess the potential of the firm.

Again I asked whether we could have the financial statements for this company and the minister replied:

Those are confidential to the firm.

I then asked:

Have you requested de Havilland or the Hawker Siddeley people if they have any objection to making these statements public so that they can be properly reviewed at this committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. However, he may continue his speech if there is unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister went on to state that he would make the statements available at the appropriate time. I suggested that the appropriate time was then and there, if he wished the estimates to be passed. And this is what I regard as sheer trickery: unknown to me, there was placed on the order paper of this House a notice that it was proposed to pass item 25 of the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, vote L20, in the amount of $19,731,000. I was not aware of that until Tuesday evening when we were furnished with an appropriation bill in which I noticed a reference to de Havilland and the amount of $28.8 million. I suggest that no member of this House had the opportunity to debate that amount. We had only a fleeting moment to realize that the amount was being passed by the parliament of Canada.

Let us take a clear look at this matter. The statements of the Hawker Siddeley group of England are quite clear as to their investment in de Havilland. They spell it out much more fully than did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. These statements point out that there is an option outstanding in the name of the government of Canada to purchase shares in de Havilland on or before June 28, 1974. At the committee hearing the minister admitted that the government wanted the estimates passed in order to meet the deadline of June 28, 1974.

In what position does that put the members of this House when in committee we have a firm undertaking from the president of Air Canada that under no circumstances will he buy de Havilland shares for any price, and we have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce telling us that he must have an estimate cleared and who, through trickery, gets it cleared through the Appropriation Act knowing that he has to make the deal by June 28 and he will do it or the deal is lost? Surely that is not being fair to the members of this House or to the public of Canada. What are they hiding in this de Havilland deal? For what reason will they not table the relevant documents and statements and in some way try to gain the confidence of this House which I sincerely believe they have lost? They need to gain the confidence of the House in the method they are using with respect to the purchase of these companies.

It may be that de Havilland is a good purchase and it may be that Canadair is a good purchase, but it would take a lot to convince me. But at least the people of Canada are entitled to see the profit and loss statements of these companies before we have this irresponsible trickery on the part of a minister who feels he is entitled to the confidence of the House.

Those are the reasons for which I have risen to speak on the motion before us. I believe that the CN financing bill is one which we have no alternative but to scrutinize closely, particularly when we are treated in the way I have indicated with regard to the purchase of a new Crown corporation by this government. How can one have confidence when one looks at these companies and finds that, while there is a nominal profit in relation to capital in Air Canada of $17 million before taxes, there is a deficit of $17.8 million in the CNR? Then one is told to go ahead and pass the CN financing legislation when we know that in all likelihood some of the silliest imaginable deals will be made unless someone in the House calls it for what it is. We were "had" on the oil purchase last November, and we are going to be "had" on the purchase of shares in June, or before if members of the House do not realize what is going on.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to debate the motion before us I wish to speak about Air Canada operations. It is ironic that Air Canada celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary yesterday and in a news release from the Department of Transport the minister's message reads:

> Air Canada today enjoys a reputation second to none in world aviation for flight safety and good service.

I cannot agree with that statement at all. I would suggest that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) consult the employees of Air Canada, speak to the general public and to members of parliament. I also suggest that he review the Hansard index, when he will see how many times Air Canada has been the subject of criticism in the House. Also, I suggest that he read the 70-page document which contained condemning criticism of Air Canada from A to Z. Of course, we all know the number of strikes that Air Canada has had over the past number of years, and I bring that fact also to the attention of the minister.

One aspect which I would like to discuss this evening is air safety in Air Canada. Last fall, Air Canada stated that a safety study had been undertaken in conjunction with the unions, and the committee on transport and communications was told that everything was O.K. The committee was informed by Mr. Pratte that air safety was controlled by employees filing union grievances. We were told that unions had no safety complaints. I would like to quote from a newspaper article which reads as follows:

> —Yves Pratte, chairman of the airline, told the committee the allegations were not based on any facts since employees "who have any doubt about any safety feature, have an obligation to report their doubts to their union safety officer and have it processed as a grievance."
> However, no worker had reported any safety preoccupations of any kind in the past year, so that the allegations could not possibly be founded.

I will prove otherwise as I have documents that were submitted to Air Canada on safety infractions at Dorval. In the latest airline lodge news there appears a complaint from the employees at Dorval which I would like to read into the record. It states:

> Unfortunately, the shop stewards in customer service have to deal with first level Air Canada supervisors that are not interested in resolving grievances or applying the collective agreement. The supervisors' only concern is trying to run a schedule operation at all costs. The result of this attitude causes one of our largest problems and most frequent violation of the collective agreement, i.e. 'SAFETY'. The collective agreement is quite clear in that management is specifically charged with the duty of initiating and monitoring all practices necessary to ensure the safety and health of employees as well as ensuring the safety of all equipment.
> Because of the attitude of first level supervision and their refusal to initiate safety, the shop committee is presently handling the problem at the second level of the grievance procedure which is the regional vice-president or his designated representative.

Last fall I read into the record a complaint from a lady in Vancouver who stated:

> On November 23, 1973, I boarded Air Canada's flight 280 to attend an archaelogical symposium at the University of Calgary. Within twenty minutes of take-off, I experienced that sense of continuous "ear popping" (for want of a proper medical term). The aircraft became instantly chilled and to my horror, the oxygen cabinets opened and we were instructed to use the orange masks. You can well imagine the anxiety especially among the more aged passengers. In addition, not all the masks produced oxygen. the man sitting next to me tried in vain to operate his, but without success.
> Now if Air Canada's flights are so well supervised during maintenance and repair, why was this overlooked?

Apparently the problem still exists in Air Canada. You would think they would take immediate action to rectify it. Last Tuesday, March 26, an Air Canada flight out of Quebec City while climbing at 14,000 feet lost cabin pressure. Of the masks deployed, only 40 per cent supplied oxygen. So the problem is still with us. Last fall, eight employees at Dorval submitted a document to the maintenance quality supervisor of Air Canada. This was signed by four former Manitobans and four Quebeckers. I should like to read some of their comments into the record as follows:

> It is our opinion that the quality audit program has not been thoroughly and adequately developed. Many managers, lead mechanics, mechanics and others are not fully aware of the quality audit program and its objectives. It is not sufficient just to have an 862 Maintenance Quality Manual; shop personnel must be made aware of the basics of the inspection function. Either 901 Manual instructions or other means to inform personnel is considered necessary.
> In our opinion the quality audit program is not working as it was designed to do. In one or two areas it is receiving token acceptance but no efforts are made to prevent discrepancies from reoccurring, e.g., errors reported are given attention but that is all that is done. In some areas, virtually no attention is given to audit reports—as evidenced by quality audit annual summaries.

We feel that the quality inspection department cannot function properly without regular meetings for the purpose of evaluating the inspection program, keeping aware of organizational, administrative and policy changes, general information, beefs, etc. For example, we learn of staff changes and other relative information via the grapevine.

We have never been asked but our collective experience suggests that a program of direct inspection (with proper ratios of inspectors to production personnel in all required areas) followed up with audits at suitable intervals would be of greater benefit and have a better chance of meeting the prescribed standards of the 862 Maintenance Quality Manual.

I would like to point out that it is not the union grievance that are raised with regard to air safety standards, but that these standards are laid out in the 862 Maintenance Quality Manual. They go on to explain the ratio of inspectors to mechanics in the various areas, and these are far below standard. The grievance continues:

Presently there exists two inspection formats, i.e., audits and direct physical type methods. Some inspectors are totally involved in audit reports only; other inspectors apparently are not involved in audit report writing and only do direct inspection. Some work areas, e.g., radio, process and paint shops do not have either type of inspection. Unit and support shop inspectors feel the above is inequitable and disregards the intent of the inspection function.

This certainly challenges Mr. Pratte's statements to the transport committee.

The change from direct inspection to the audit report methods has resulted in many changes for unit and support shop inspectors. Previously the inspection function did not necessitate the following:

Presentation of discrepancies in written form. Constant adjustment to a program which has seen many changes in the methods of presentation and which involves a very high degree of verbal instructions.

Investigative work outside the immediate shop area. Development of forms to suit the distinct areas (pioneering of audit program).

Responsibilities to discuss and explain audit findings at the general foreman level.

The above changes have taken place without benefit of any monetary adjustments or company consideration of the difficulties arising from the new inspection format. Of particular concern is the requirement to submit written evidence of our fellow unionists' errors or discrepancies.

Erosion of the status of shop inspectors is considered to have taken place in recent years. Shop inspectors do not have the same respect they formerly had. Most managers have never accepted the audit program, as evidenced by the lack of action and lack of answers to the audit reports.

It seems ironic and unjust that unit and support shop inspectors, the group within Air Canada which has pioneered and developed the audit program, should be so low in the esteem of management that we have lost our full-time stenographic support and indeed some of our identity by the integration of our employee pay roster into the paint shop.

It is difficult to understand the logic of having unit and support shops under the supervision of the power plant organization, which is remote and presently believed to be functionally different. Since the relocation of the P.P. shop, unit and support shop inspectors rarely have any contact with the superintendent of quality inspection.

Interpretation and general understanding of the 862 Manual is apparently left to the discretion of the individual inspector. Unfortunately not all inspectors are in possession of an 862 Manual. Four only out of the eight inspectors in this formation have these manuals.

It is no wonder the oxygen masks are not working on Air Canada planes.

It is a source of embarrassment to be an inspector submitting written reports of area discrepancies and at the same time knowing that many areas of 901 Forms and Report Manual Instructions are incomplete and out of date. Instructions in these areas require a complete examination to revise (update) and rectify the many and varied discrepancies. Simple procedural instructions for certain applications appear never to have been completely formulated or finalized, e.g., modification instructions are incomplete in that the location within the shop area for filing modification instructions is undesignated.

Revisions that are made to the forms and reports section of the 901 Instruction Manual, which are of important significance to shop inspectors, are not forwarded to them. Policy changes, standards revisions etc. are made without any notification being provided to shop inspectors. This condition also applies to 911 Manual Instructions. A current example is the "release permit" now in use but for which there is no information provided to the shop inspector.

There exists a number of areas where an inspector is not able to find concrete policies and is left without any information to guide or direct him. Some examples:

Reference the MOT letter of approval, the terms "standards acceptable" is not defined. (MOT inspection information is not readily available.

Required measuring or testing equipment is unavailable and reported in audits. If action is not undertaken, what is the appropriate procedure, when and by whom?

To what degree is it allowed for maintenance engineering to deviate from manufacturer's specifications e.g. allowing units to have a visual check only, due to test equipment not being available, deletion of specified tests from the vendor's manual for the same reason?

Is the procedure to audit inspect supplier and subcontractors being followed; is it an MOT requirement? If so, who is responsible to ensure its compliance?

Why is there no formal contact between shop inspectors and MOT regional staff inspectors?

In the interest of highest possible standards we seek to know why FAA representatives' visits are preannounced allowing abnormal cover-ups to be carried out.

Unit serialization policy, shelf life expired units policy, modifications etc. are considered to be unclearly defined and in need of attention.

We feel that the work responsibilities and skills of shop inspectors involved in quality audits are equal to, if not greater than those of shop foremen, engineering technicians, planners etc. However, to our knowledge, no meaningful consideration has been given to this matter by management.

Unit and support shop inspectors believe that they are limited in opportunities unjustifiably, both within the inspection department and the shops where they have originated. Promotional opportunities and even relief assignment experience in the respective shop areas are generally non-exitent. No consideration is given for shop advancement to shop inspectors; in other words, to become a shop inspector is to be ignored within your own area for any advancements. Considering the kind of experience gained in this category, this condition is considered a disadvantage to the inspectors and to the company. In general, promotional opportunities within the inspection department are few and the practice has been to award positions above foreman to personnel from outside the inspection department. This too, we feel, is a disadvantage not only to the inspectors and the company but also to the individual who has not had actual inspection and audit report experience.

The major and underlying reason for the creation of this submission was and is the existing low morale and the fact that all eight inspectors are planning in one way or another to leave the inspection department.

There are many workers with Air Canada who cannot wait to get away from the place and take early retirement at age 55. They go on to explain in this submission:

One inspector is currently bidding on another position. One other is on loan and hoping to become a permanent instructor. Two are awaiting lead mechanic bulletins (one of which is expected to be actioned by November, 1973). The remaining four are contemplating early retirement.

We realize that this is a very critical submission but must emphasize that its purpose is in the interest of creating a better maintenance quality product. It has been compiled and endorsed by all eight unit and support shop inspectors in this formation.

It is no wonder the vice-president in charge of maintenance at Dorval has been replaced. But I do not think that is enough.

Mr. Blaker: He has not.

● (2110)

Mr. McKenzie: I am quoting from the Toronto Sun of March 24, 1974, where the following appears in Doug Fisher's column:

Meantime, over in the head office world of Air Canada, Yves Pratte, the chairman, has reached into the U.S. to hire a boss of maintenance for the national carrier, apparently in a determination to get costs down in this aspect of the company's spending. It's a sad commentary on the ability of our airline industry to produce capable administrators.

If this statement is wrong, as the hon. member has stated, we will know when I check it out tomorrow; but it is my information that the vice-president of maintenance has been replaced.

With these statements, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Minister of Transport that he launch an immediate investigation in to the whole Air Canada operation, their morale problems and air safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nobody said yes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They said on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the said proposal is negatived on division?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We now proceed to motions Nos. 3, 5 and 6. It is my understanding that points of order will be raised with regard to Nos. 3 and 5 standing in the name of hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). It is the feeling of the Chair, as was indicated earlier, that these are perhaps out of order. I understand that the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) is prepared to do battle on behalf of his colleague, and I call upon him to defend the motions. The hon. member for Mississauga on the point of order raised by the Chair.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern of the Chair, but the motions really only require an addition and do not reduce the amount of the loan or in any fashion affect the position of Her Majesty in making a recommendation to the House. All that happens is that they direct that the financial statements filed by the railway and by Air Canada in connection with the advances contain the information that would normally be given to any lending institution when an advance is made. Considered in that vein, there seems to be no reason that these amendments should not be in order.

It has been suggested to me that if they alter the terms of Her Majesty's recommendation, then perhaps they are out of order. But they do not. All they do is require the detail of expenses that would normally be given to any other corporation in accordance with regular corporate practice. All they do is insist upon disclosure. They are not amendments that in any way reduce the amount of the advance. All they do is ask for particulars from the corporations as to the detail of the advances and as to the conflicts of interest and expenses that might be incurred as a result.

The amendments are not of a nature that would interfere whatsoever with Her Majesty's recommendation. Indeed, they are the kind of thing that should have been in the bill in the first place. In a sense, they are housekeeping measures and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should be prepared to go along with them. They are not the kind of thing that indicate there is any restriction on the advance of funds. They really require, as a condition of a loan, that a report be available. Surely that is a normal condition.

They do not in any way affect the royal recommendation but merely add provisions in connection with information that would normally be available in any case. I say that these are housekeeping measures and are therefore quite in order. In my opinion Motions Nos. 3 and 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) should be put to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on the same point of order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect to motions Nos. 3 and 5, I submit that requiring as a precondition of a loan the annual report of Air Canada in one instance, and the Canadian National Railways system in the other, and submission of a list of the remunerations and expenses paid to the directors and executive officers of the companies is out of order in each case. First, because they are irrelevant to the aspect of financing set forth in the bill; second, because they are beyond the scope of the bill; third, because they are beyond the scope of the act to which the bill refers. They are quasi-amendments in the respect that there are no conditions of this sort in the underlying statute governing both the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada. For these reasons, on the grounds of irrelevancy and scope, I would submit to Your Honour that the amendments are beyond the competence of the House at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for their contributions on the point of order that originally was raised yesterday by the Chair with regard to the relevancy of motions Nos. 3 and 5.

Both of these motions would attach conditions to the proposed guarantees and introduce certain requirements which, in the opinion of the Chair, would be foreign to the substance of the bill and would relate to the context and form of the company's annual report. The hon. member for Mississauga has argued that such conditions should have been in the bill in the first place, and I suppose they could. The hon. member also argued that they do not affect the royal recommendation, and that they are housekeeping measures. But the fact is that they would form a substantial departure from the measure that we have before us as it was approved by the House on second reading. I think they are foreign to the substance of the bill. I would quote from May's eighteenth edition, page 508, paragraph (1) as follows:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill—

For that reason I would have to say that motions Nos. 3 and 5 as they stand at the report stage cannot be presented to the House.

Perhaps I should put the motions on the record. The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), for the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), moved motions Nos. 3 and 5 as follows:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in clause 7 by inserting therein, next after line 6 on page 5, the following:

"(3) It shall be a condition to which a loan made under subsection (1) is subject that the annual report of Air Canada, first made after the ending of the period referred to in that subsection, shall include, in respect of each of the directors and executive officers of Air Canada, the amount paid to him by way of salary, other remuneration and expenses, the terms of his tenure of office, and the duties of his office."

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in Clause 9 by inserting therein, next after line 14 on page 7, the following:

"(2) It shall be a condition to which a loan made under subsection (1) is subject that the annual report of the National Company for the calendar year 1973 shall include, in respect of each of the directors and executive officers of the National Company, the amount paid to him by way of salary, other remuneration and expenses, the terms of his tenure of office, and the duties of his office."

and by renumbering subsequent subclauses accordingly.

● (2120)

We now turn to the point of order in connection with motion No. 6, in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova but moved by the hon. member for Mississauga, which reads as follows:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-5, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in Clause 13 by deleting line 6 on page 9 and substituting therefor the following:

"the 1972 fiscal year of the Na-".

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

As I have indicated, the Chair has certain reservations concerning the relevancy and admissibility of motion No. 6. I gather that the hon. member for Mississauga is prepared to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 6 is different from Motions 3 and 5 on which Your Honour just ruled. It was suggested that motion No. 6 might be defective in that it is consonant neither with the provisions of the recommendation accompanying the bill nor the title of the bill. First, I maintain that there is no difficulty whatsoever with respect to the title of the bill. Clause 13 refers to the purchase by the government of CNR preferred stock. This is mentioned nowhere in the title of the bill, therefore the title applies verbatim whether the amendment is passed or not. In addition, I draw your attention to citation 409 which points out that the title of a bill can be amended and if such an amendment were necessary it would be done on the motion for final passage. I do not think that the title matters in this case.

The first point made was that the amendment might not be consonant with the terms of the royal recommendation which specifically mentions the authorization by Her Majesty to purchase preferred stock up until December 31, 1973. It is important to note that the recommendation is for the purchase of preferred stock up until December 31, 1973. The key citation in Beauchesne's referring to the financial initiative of the Crown, citation 246(3), reads:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

This citation, which is a direct quote from May's, comes under the heading "The royal demand or recommendation fixes the limits of the charge". The citation sets out very clearly the limits which are placed on the ability of a member to move for increases in expenditure beyond the royal recommendation. In short, any amendment which in any way increases the financial obligation of the Crown is not permissible. The royal recommendation sets out precisely the upper limit of what can be spent and to what purpose it can be allocated.

However, this citation does not refer at all to the member's ability to reduce the amount to be paid out, which is what the amendment submitted is all about. In other words, there is nothing wrong with a member moving an amendment to reduce an amount of expenditure. That is perfectly proper. It is only when the expenditure is to be increased or extended that it is beyond the competence of a member to move an amendment.

Beauchesne's does not deal specifically with reducing the amount recommended, but May's does. In the eighteenth edition, at page 744, under the heading "Provisions involving the reduction of charges", May says:

No special form of procedure applies to proposals to reduce existing charges, and they may be moved in the House or in committee without the royal recommendation.

This is clearly the practice we follow, the practice accepted by the Chair's acceptance of motion No. 1 which also reduces the amount to be spent. May goes on to make it clear what sort of amendments for reductions are in order. He says:

A proposed reduction of a charge may consist in reducing its amount, or restricting its objects or inserting limiting conditions, or shortening the period of its operation.

Clearly, this is what is being done in this particular amendment. The amendment seeks to remove reference to the year 1973. We are saying that the advance for the purchase of preferred stock in the Canadian National system can only be made with respect to the year 1972, not 1973. The amendment would drop one year. It seeks to reduce the amount of money which can be advanced to the national system.

I suggest that this is acceptable as the royal recommendation sets the upper limit on expenditure in this House. In no way does the royal recommendation insist, nor can it be so construed, on setting both a minimum and a maximum. Here we are talking about reducing the upper limit, about the purchase of stock on the basis of the 1973 year-end statement of the Canadian National system.

I will refer to one example of an instance in which the Chair allowed an amendment which, if passed, would have rendered inoperative the precise wording of the royal recommendation. The House will recall the lengthy debate on Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses. The royal recommendation for Bill C-203 read in part:

His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons a measure to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses; upon receipt of the prescribed certificate of the Chief Electoral Officer, to provide for the reimbursement to candidates who are elected or who obtain a number of votes equal to 20 per cent of the number of votes cast in the appropriate electoral district to the extent of sixteen cents for each of the first twenty-five thousand names appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for their electoral districts and fourteen cents for each additional name—

And so on. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the bill was amended. The percentage of subsidies was raised to 20 per cent, even though this was in excess of the royal recommendation. That amendment was allowed.

In the amendment before the House we are asking for a reduction in the amount of money which can be advanced for the purchase of preferred stock in the Canadian National system. There are many reasons for this. In one sense, the financial statement for the year ending December 31, 1973, has not been available to this House, yet the royal recommendation now before the House calls for the pruchase of capital stock up to and including the period ending December 31, 1973. In a sense, the provision we are now seeking to amend is out of line with the royal recommendation because the amount of capital stock which can be purchased cannot be computed until we receive the financial statement for the Canadian National system for the year ending December 31, 1973. The stock would have to be purchased before December 31, 1973, and it would have to be on the basis of statements received before the year even ended. In a sense, the present bill is therefore beyond the royal recommendation.

All we are attempting to do is to reduce the provision in the bill for the purchase of capital stock back to the royal recommendation. Therefore, I suggest that this amendment is clearly in order. Indeed, it is probably more in order because of the royal recommendation than in spite of it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to make three submissions to Your Honour to the effect that this amendment is out of order. First, the amendment would render the bill inconsistent with the royal recommendation; second, the bill in its own terms provides for a continuous style of financing over an 18-month period; that this financing hangs together by way of borrowing authorization of the two companies or by authority given to the companies to purchase preferred shares. By eliminating the words "and the 1973 fiscal year" the amendment really negates the bill, interrupts and destroys it. It goes to the heart of the bill and negatives it. In other words, the hon. member has the more legitimate alternative, if he wishes to make an amendment, to negative the bill by voting against the bill in its entirety.

My third submission is that the amendment indirectly affects the balance of ways and means, caused by depriving the national company of accepting preferred stock during the 1973 year which would force the national company to seek financing in the commercial sector, with the result that CN would have to pay interest at commercial rates. The results for the year would be worse than if they were able to get more favourable financing through preferred shares from investment by the government of Canada. That being so, a subsequent bill would have to reflect this in the further financing necessary for the CNR upon the authority of the government, thereby imbalancing ways and means.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for discussing this point of order. It is indeed helpful to the Chair. The point that must now be considered by the Chair is whether the point of order originally raised by the Chair is correct. The point of order is whether the bill should be amended in clause 13 by deleting line 6 on page 9 and substituting therefor "the 1972 fiscal year".

I think it is clear and accepted by all hon. members that there is a right to take particular provisions in a bill as they relate to proposed expenditures and seek to reduce them. I do not think there can be any question but that hon. members have a right to do that. However, I do not think that is the question that has to be determined by myself at this time.

The bill as it was approved on second reading provided for the provision of money to meet certain expenditures for a period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to guarantee certain securities to provide for these moneys. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and argued on his behalf by the hon. member for Mississauga would, in the opinion of the Chair, negative the principle of the bill as determined by this House on second reading. I would quote to the hon. member for Mississauga paragraph 5 of May's eighteenth edition, page 509, wherein it is stated:

> An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to on the second reading, is not admissible.

In my opinion, the substitution of one particular year for another particular period of time is fatal to the admissibility of the amendment, and I therefore have to declare it out of order.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-5, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinley: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise again on the same bill, but it should have been withdrawn by this government and not pressed forward, especially in view of statements made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in this House in the past two weeks in connection with national transportation problems.

This bill pumps millions of dollars of money of the people of Canada into Crown corporations running our transportation system. The Minister of Transport clearly said in this House that he is not satisfied, that he cannot control the transportation companies that he is responsible to supervise, and that there is nothing he can do about transportation. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says, "O.K. fellow; I don't mind that. Here is some more money for the railway company and for the airline. They need the money. Let them have it. We have no control over these companies." The Minister of Transport said he cannot control the companies, yet the Minister of Finance is prepared to finance them. The minister responsible does not know what is going on and has no transportation policy. That is an amazing situation, yet it is the one we are faced with today with this government.

There is no question that the companies probably need some financial support. In the debate today, yesterday and previously we mentioned our concern about the management of the companies. Clearly, the Minister of Transport must have this concern. We are surprised he has not been here for this debate. He is the person who admitted this government has some very serious concerns about the management of transportation in this nation.

The Minister of Finance says the companies need the money, they are going to get it, here it comes and they can have it. Air Canada can go into new ventures without explaining them to the people of Canada and to this House. The railways can spend money on hotels and towers without the Minister of Transport being concerned about whether the money is being properly or sensibly invested. The Minister of Finance does not understand what is going on in transport. He says he only looks at things in the global view.

The Minister of Transport says he doesn't even look at things, he doesn't understand what is going on, he doesn't even have a transportation policy. Yet here we have a bill before the House, now at third reading, supported by the government and supported, of course, by the New Democratic Party. They don't care about the money of the people of Canada either. They say, "Let's pass this bill and let's give this corporation more money, because the government doesn't have a policy for transportation so we might as well support their policy to pour out money."

I was indeed suprised that the Minister of Finance in the matter of the amendment that he argued was out of order, and which Your Honour ruled was out of order on the basis of previous citations, should suggest that this bill and the royal recommendation is correct and that the government is entitled to subscribe for shares in the Canadian National Railways on the basis of the gross revenue of the company for the year ending December 31, 1973; to buy the 4 per cent preferred shares of the company, even on the basis that they haven't got a statement for the year ending December 31, 1973, at the present time.

So we have an open-ended bill allowing the advance of funds, the purchase of capital stock in the Canadian National Railways, a bill that organizes the purchase of that capital stock, how much we don't know, when we don't know, on the basis of what financial statement and what gross revenue we don't know. And the Minister of Finance does not know. Yet the Minister of Finance was prepared to argue that procedurally this was in order, that he had the right to spend the money, that the Crown authorizes him to spend money. He doesn't know how much money, he doesn't know why so much money, he hasn't any real idea of what is going on in transportation, but let's spend some money—because that is the attitude of this administration.

Let us consider for a moment these 4 per cent noncumulative preferred shares. They were first set up in the provisions for the refinancing of the Canadian National Railways in the bill of 1952. In that statute there was provision made for the conversion of the debt of Canadian National into preferred shares. The preferred shares bear a dividend if, as and when there are dividends to be declared. Naturally, they never declare a dividend, so the preferred shares never offer any return on investment.

On the basis of the 1972 statement the government is proposing to invest $43 million in preferred shares in the Canadian National Railways. On the basis of the 1973 statement—and we will never know when the 1973 statement will be available—the government may invest another $43 million or another $45 million or perhaps another $50 million. Who knows? But they are prepared to invest in more shares of the Canadian National Railways.

The Minister of Finance does not even know what he is going to invest further in these 4 per cent, never pay, no dividend, no profit shares of the Canadian National system. And that is what the bill says and this is what we have before us for consideration. It is an impossible situation when you have a Crown corporation and a government which is prepared to shovel out money without coming to grips with the transportation problems faced by the nation, without coming to grips with the commuter problem spoken about this afternoon by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), and without coming to grips with the grain transportation difficulties spoken about so eloquently by hon. members from the west, without coming to grips with the situation concerning rail line abandonment, without coming to grips with the situation in which trains do not move along some lines even though those lines are not among those which have been abandoned.

A member of parliament tells the House that the last train that went through on his line was in February and the next train is scheduled to go through maybe in June, July, or maybe never. This is the kind of government that says it is running this country, and this is the kind of transportation policy we have. Yet here we have the Minister of Finance in this House prepared to say that he is entitled to subscribe to more capital stock in the Canadian National system based on 3 per cent of the gross earnings of that system in the year ending December 31, 1973, when he hasn't even got a financial statement for the year ending December 31, 1973. If he does have such a statement, he hasn't tabled it before this House.

Here we have an open-ended contract to pour money into a system without looking at that system and without coming to grips with the reality of the financial facts in the country. We are neither getting the service required by the people of Canada, nor are we getting the kind of performance and policy in transportation that the people of Canada demand. Even the Minister of Transport is unhappy. Yet the Minister of Finance is prepared to shovel out the money with the support of the New Democratic Party, because they really don't care about economics—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Blenkarn: —and they really don't care about transportation. All they want to do is make sure that Crown corporations have more and more money, and they don't want to worry about performance. That may be their attitude toward their constituents. It certainly is not the attitude that my constituents would buy. The taxpayers of this country should certainly not be subjected to being continually asked to supply money without any real accountability of the management of Canadian National and Air Canada. These corporations have not necessarily served us well as has been admitted even by the Minister of Transport. He admits he has problems with these corporations. Yet we continue to have bills presented before this House to refinance Air Canada and the CNR.

What are we doing? We are taking public funds which could be put into housing, which could be put into commuter services, which are needed in many other areas, and we are pouring them in without any control of how these companies operate. These companies have clearly demonstrated that they are prepared to go into new fancy deals, buy up a piece of de Havilland, buy Canadian, get into the Wardair deal, run a company called Econair Holidays Limited. Yes, and build a tower in Toronto, and ask for money to put into a losing hotel chain. This is the kind of proposal we hear from the government and this is the kind of proposal the bill means. The bill means that the government has abandoned its responsibility to closely scrutinize the activities of the Crown corporations for which it is responsible, and the passage of this bill is an indictment of both the government and its helpers who are left.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Blenkarn: The bill is a travesty. It is improper at the present time. The government should hold it back until it has made a thorough investigation of the national railway system and Air Canada. It should review the direction management is taking and then refinance this Crown corporation properly. Until now it has not been operated properly. The Minister of Finance should listen to his colleague, the Minister of Transport, in connection with transport policy, and say, "When you have got it organized, come and tell me and we will refinance it properly and make sure it is all right, and we shall all be with you."

There are a number of things which must be done in this country, but the bill before us does not require the CN or Air Canada to conduct their affairs properly and in the best interests of the public. It just shovels money out, money which they have proven in the past they are incapable of handling in a sensible fashion.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this late hour and I look across to my neighbour, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), with some sympathy, recalling that today, yesterday and earlier in this parliament he has sat here patiently listening to debate on a matter which really is only peripheral to him, a matter which in terms of responsibility should have been attended to by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

The fact that the minister has had to sit here is an indication—indeed, perhaps an indictment but certainly an indication—of the decrepitude to which transportation matters in this country have fallen. It is perhaps an indication, as well, of the truth of the statement made by the Minister of Transport that his department is indeed in a mess; that he found it in a mess when he took over the department. Certainly all of us know he has done nothing to clean up that mess since he has been there.

So my first words are words of sympathy to my neighbour, the Minister of Finance, for having to shoulder this responsibility. We all know he has tremendous responsibilities in the Department of Finance. Although we have divided opinions as to how he is carrying out his responsibilities, I think it is unfair to load on to his young shoulders the ineptitude of his colleagues.

The question with which we really have to deal, and what is really the essence of all the speeches that we have heard on this bill, is that there are not simply problems with transportation in Canada—there are new challenges to meet. The long and the short of it is that as an operating railroad the CNR has not met those challenges. In a day when our cities are becoming overfilled with people, when there is a requirement to build new towns in my part of Ontario, indeed in all metropolitan areas of Canada, when we are putting more and more people into smaller and smaller areas, we are not developing in this country a transportation capability that will make a viable new towns concept, as proposed by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), really workable.

If we choose to slow the increase in the rate of population in our urban areas, there will be no foundation for this very worth-while program. The key to the success of that program will not merely be the provision of land, sewers and water, but the assurance to the people who will make a commitment to new areas which we are trying to establish, and which we hope will be established in this country some day, that they will have a transportation system that is speedy, efficient and inexpensive to operate.

There is no provision in this bill to give anybody any encouragement that the railroad companies, the CNR in particular, are being armed to meet this new challenge. We need only consider what has happened to the rail service in this country over the past few years, regardless of the admitted inability of the Minister of Transport. The railroads in this country have operated in such a way that they are attempting perhaps to do indirectly what they might better have done directly, namely, to drive passengers away from the railroads and to other modes of transportation.

It seems to me that while we must admit that the railroads, and perhaps Air Canada as well, need funding, there is no direction given either in the bill or in any government policy to assure the people of Canada that the transportation system of this country will be able to meet the challenges—a favoured word of hon. members opposite—of the seventies. Each of these challenges is being short-changed in terms of government policy.

I am about to sit down, Mr. Speaker, but I just wanted to express my personal sympathy, as well as the sympathy of all members on this side of the House, regarding the burdens that the Minister of Finance must carry. I hope he will take a very active part in the review of the transportation policy of this country, a policy that a senior minister of the government has admitted is chaotic, to be charitable, and is in a mess, to be honest.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. I am under the impression that another hon. member might speak. We could end this debate tonight, with the consent of the House. It would not be long.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I will have a few words to say tomorrow. I know that one of my colleagues also wants to speak on certain problems peculiar to his constituency and regarding companies under government jurisdiction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): As I understand it, the House agrees that we now call it ten o'clock.

Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO PERMIT SEISMIC EXPLORATION ON BATHURST ISLAND

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, on April 1 I put some questions to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) in connection with whether or not the authority that he had given for exploration on Bathurst Island had been subject to the environmental impact policy which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) had recently announced to the House. The minister replied in words that I can only say avoided the question. I quote his reply for Hansard for April 1, as reported at page 1024:

> Mr. Speaker, there is in fact considerable co-operation between my department and that of the environment. We consult each other every time we are up against a problem, but decisions were taken, as they should, by my department and the Department of the Environment expressed no opposition.

In answer to a further question the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I make the decisions. Naturally, when problems come up, we have consultations with the Department of the Environment, and in this case that department had no major objection to the work under progress.

Those answers, of course, beg the question that was put to the minister, but I think it is of considerable importance that this House learn tonight whether or not the federal environmental assessment policy, which was recently put before the House and has been criticized not only by my party but by other parties, actually works. I was extremely critical at the time the Minister of the Environment put forward his environmental impact statement. I said, among other things, that the environmental impact policy that the government was putting forward was, first of all, secretive and, secondly, was not mandatory and that as a consequence the public could not be assured that in all cases that required it a mandatory environmental impact assessment would be made.

It is of interest to note that in the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee publication "Northern Perspectives" of December-January, 1974, Professor A. R. Lucas of the law school of the University of British Columbia had this to say:

There are two very basic difficulties with the Davis proposal. First, it is apparent that the proposed assessment procedure will be implemented through administrative changes only. There will be no new legislation. Review of assessments will be done wholly within the Department of the Environment, according to departmental guidelines. Thus, the entire process will be in-house and subject to political pressure and bureaucratic self-interest and inertia. This approach was taken despite a recommendation in a report by a Department of the Environment task force composed of senior officials and based on some five months of research, that an independent environmental review board be established by statute outside the department to require and review environmental impact assessments. Mr. Davis himself has admitted that there will be a "natural resistance in the bureaucracy to another set of checks and balances".

● (2200)

My concern is that it is all very well to talk about natural resistance within the bureaucracy, but I think unless there is a very satisfactory explanation given to the House tonight a great deal of the resistance is not within the bureaucracy at all but, rather, is within the cabinet. In his statement the Minister of the Environment said, and I quote from Hansard of March 14, 1974:

Federal departments, Crown agencies and private companies with government contracts, grants and loans will have to prepare environmental impact statements. These statements will be screened by a panel of experts in my department.

In this way you do not get before the public the actual environmental impact statements at all; you get the government's own screening of the impact statements and, as a consequence, you get the government's own interpretation of what it wants you to hear; and I said this on March 14. The minister went on to say:

Recommendations for action, that is, for approval, for modification or for denial, will be made to the Minister of the Environment. Final dispositions will, of course, have to be worked out in consultation with other ministers of the Crown.

What does this really mean, and what does it mean in view of the answers given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) yesterday? Apparently it means, if you take the answers of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at face value, that within the department, in spite of this policy that has been set down, every department is going to assert a certain sovereignty in opposition to the very policy which the Minister of the Environment presented to the House the other day.

It is interesting to note that in view of whatever advice the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had to proceed with the drilling over the opposition of the Eskimo people who said this would drive the game upon which they depended from their traditional hunting grounds, Professor Milton Freeman of the department of sociology and anthropology of McMaster University said on March 25:

—I can only conclude that Mr. Chrétien has been very badly advised to allow this work to proceed in ignorance of much of the pertinent information available, and with so much of a critical nature still unknown.

It is incumbent upon the government tonight to answer certain questions. I think it is fair to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in view of the answer to the question whether this environmental policy has any influence in the north—and certainly it was not followed in this instance—to tell us just exactly what is going on.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes at my disposal tonight I am sure I cannot deal with all the points raised by the hon. member, but I will consider his representations and send him a report a little later in respect of those points with which I cannot deal.

I want to assure the hon. member that the Department of Indian affairs and other people concerned with the development of the north are paying a great deal of attention to the recommendations of the Department of the Environment and, indeed, a great deal of attention to the environment whether in the case of ecological disturbance or environmental disturbance.

The minister has stopped seismic operations in two cases in point—in the open waters off Southampton Island where seismic work was stopped because of fears of disturbing walrus herds in that area, and on the Bathurst peninsula where no seismic work has taken place for three years because of the fear of disturbing the cariboo herds in that area. In the particular case about which the member is talking, the matter of the Bathurst Island seismic operations came before the advisory committee on January 9 and January 30 and received approval to proceed.

This followed the normal procedure adopted for the processing of all land use applications. The Northwest Territories land use advisory committee is made up of officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development together with representatives from several other federal agencies, including the Department of the Environment—wildlife services, fisheries and marine service, and environmental protection service. The NWT government is also represented on the committee by the territorial game management division. There was also communication between the minister and Mr. Tagat Curley, president of the Inuit Tapirisat, on this proposal. The community of Resolute Bay was advised of the application and its subsequent approval.

On the recommendation of the various experts consulted, and from previous experience with similar seismic operations in other areas of the Arctic, it was the consensus that the operation could take place with minimal disturbance to the environment.

ENERGY—OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REASON FOR REJECTION OF EXTENSION OF EXISTING SARNIA-TORONTO LINE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pursue a question which I raised last Friday and subsequently to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) concerning the construction of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline. I asked the minister why, in light of the fact that there already exists a pipeline from Sarnia to Toronto, the government did not plan to merely extend the Toronto pipeline to Montreal, thereby saving construction time, saving money and avoiding the disruption of farmland in southwestern Ontario.

In view of the replies I have received from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I can only conclude that he has misled Canadians and members of the House as to the original reasons for which this pipeline was necessary and that, more than that, he is guilty of perpetrating a hoax on the Canadian public about the building of an all-Canadian pipeline.

The minister's arguments for the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline are many and varied and seem to be changing daily. At first when this proposal was advanced, he said the reason for it was time, that we had to get oil to Montreal as quickly as possible. Members of parliament accepted that reason. Now there is clear evidence that the Sarnia-Toronto pipeline has the capacity to fulfil the initial requirements of 250,000 barrels a day of the Montreal market. When I pointed this out to the minister, he then switched his argument by raising a number of red herrings. First of all, he said the Toronto extension was not possible because to get that capacity to the Montreal market would require cutting off three U.S. refineries. The minister knows that these refineries are on a monthly contract, that they can find oil elsewhere in the U.S., and there would be no immediate cut off because it could be phased-in during the construction of the Toronto extension.

He then changed his argument to one of capacity, saying that although the Toronto extension would provide initial requirements of the Montreal market, it could not fulfil future requirements of up to 500,000 barrels a day. I propose to the minister that the future requirements of the Montreal market might easily be met by, first of all, developing the all-Canadian pipeline in phases: phase one from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal, hooking up with the existing pipeline in Michigan; phase two from Winnipeg to Sault Ste. Marie, thereby completing an all-Canadian route.

Upon hearing this argument, the minister brought out further obstructionist arguments saying there would be problems in getting right-of-way through Michigan up to Sault Ste. Marie, some 80 miles. There already exists a natural gas pipeline through Michigan in the same area. The minister then said, "Well, there are all the objections from the U.S. environmentalists which would delay such an application". This is still pure conjecture and I fail to see how any time would be saved by the proposed Sarnia-Montreal pipeline when there are some 4,000 farmers ready to object to the disputed overland rights-of-way in that area.

Then today he brought out another argument, saying that we cannot have the Toronto extension because it will not be reversible. Of course it will not be reversible. What is the point of having a reversible pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal? What are we going to reverse through it? To date there are no great oil finds off the east coast. The existing crude oil coming into the eastern market is from Venezuela, not the Middle East. It has characteristics different from western crude and the refineries in southern Ontario are not capable of handling this offshore crude.

My conclusion has to be that the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline is not just an interim solution and that the government's announcement of an all-Canadian route through northern Ontario is a hoax. Both these arguments put forward by the minister seem to indicate to me that there will never be an all-Canadian route, because of the very nature of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline and the minister's expectation of its upgrading and expansion. Because we will not have an all-Canadian route, this will only perpetuate the government's discrimination against northern Ontario and its hoped-for development in the form of refineries and subsidiary industries. Further, Mr. Speaker, we will not have security of supply if we do not get the northern route.

The minister is continuing to play into the hands of the oil companies to the detriment of a truly Canadian oil delivery system for the benefit of all Canadians. I call on him to reassess the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline, and I challenge him to give a definite commitment on the date when an all-Canadian pipeline will be built.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the only hoax involved here is that perpetrated by the hon. member who is trying to fabricate an issue. Once more I will repeat to him the cumulative reasons for the decision to build the Montreal-Sarnia line. As I say, they are cumulative, but I have no expectation that they will make any impression on him. First, the additional capacity in the line from Sarnia to Toronto would be 250,000 barrels a day if indeed the export to Buffalo were cut off. It may be that in time the export to Buffalo would be cut off, but I do not share his enthusiasm for the bad relations with the United States that would be engendered by cutting off these 135,000 barrels a day. New demand in Toronto for refineries now under construction in the Sarnia-Toronto area totals 130,000 barrels a day. That means, instead of having the capacity mentioned by the hon. member there is a balance of only 120,000 barrels a day. So to accept the hon. gentleman's argument one would have to lay a new pipe. So much for his argument about the suggested capacity, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, what we have done is to propose a 500,000 barrels per day capacity, one that will be financed initially by a Montreal throughput of 250,000 barrels a day, with the strategic opportunity of increasing that to 500,000 barrels. The hon. gentleman referred to Sault Ste. Marie construction. It is clearly on the records of this House that this would take six months longer. What is more, there is a further incalculable period—neither I nor any other person can calculate it—for administrative delay in the United States. We are concerned about the Montreal market and getting oil to it at the earliest possible date. This is why we picked this route, Mr. Speaker.

Is it reversible? Yes; and that is to take care of the possibility of Atlantic offshore oil being brought into Canadian refineries. It is only an option. There is no certainty that we will develop that capacity, but it certainly would not be available to us with the Sault Ste. Marie route. Further, that would not be a route for an all-Canadian pipeline. It would undoubtedly be a route which would parallel the existing TransCanada pipeline which follows up through the Canadian clay belt. In that sense, the Sault Ste. Marie route is really not an option because it would be dependent upon passage through the United States, passage which we cannot guarantee.

These cumulative reasons I have given before. I have repeated them for the hon. gentleman this evening, but I have no expectation that we will not hear further from the hon. gentleman as he tries to think up new arguments for his proposal.

AGRICULTURE—DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LONG-TERM POLICY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my question earlier today was to determine if, in fact, the government does have a long-term dairy policy. I suppose this could be extended by asking whether the government intends at some future date to formulate such a policy. For our purposes this evening, however, I will accept at face value the assurances of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that he does intend to have a long-term policy. One must be concerned, nevertheless, with the difference between the minister's intentions and cabinet's acceptance of those intentions, because we have had ample evidence in this parliament that, while the minister is rushing around giving great speeches, usually well received by the agricultural community, his cabinet colleagues are the last to listen to him, let alone concur in his recommendations.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, let us trace the recent unhappy history of a long-term dairy policy for Canada. For years agricultural groups, associations and individual producers have suggested, recommended and demanded a five-year program. Today, in reply to my question, the minister indicated that a five-year plan was too short. Possibly he is suggesting a ten-year plan is twice as good as a five-year one. If such is the case, one can only assume that the minister claims an expertise and knowledge of the industry that is superior to the Federation of Agriculture, the dairy farmers of Canada, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, the Food Prices Review Board, the federal task force on agriculture and heaven only knows who else.

But let us even ignore this. The minister, on March 22, 1974, in this House had this to say as reported at page 783 of Hansard:

> I have told the farmers and have said publicly that we are working on a long-term dairy policy. Announcements will be made by April 1 according to the legislation.

Later he said:

> —we have been working on it for three months as hard as we can. We have worked very closely with the dairy industry. I do not think another Minister of Agriculture has worked as closely as I have with the dairy industry.

Again, for our purposes tonight I will accept the minister's assurance at face value. I and many other members of the House waited, along with all Canadian dairy producers, with great expectations for the minister's statement of a long-term dairy policy when he rose to make his announcement last Friday. It is to be regretted, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did not make his statement on Monday, April 1, because then it could be excused as a poor April fool's joke in so far as a long-term dairy policy is concerned. Last Friday the minister made his long awaited announcement. It took 36 lines in the official report, of which but 14 were about long-term policy. And what is this policy? I quote from the minister's words of last Friday, at page 978:

> The Canadian Dairy Commission has been authorized to enter immediately into discussions with producers and other groups—

The only action the Department of Agriculture will take is to authorize discussions. This is from a minister who claimed just over a week ago, "We have been working on it for three months as hard as we can". This is from a minister who says, "I do not think another minister of agriculture has worked as closely as I have with the dairy industry." The sole result of these so-called three months of work and the so-called close association with the industry is to authorize discussions. I ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, the following: What is his long-term policy to solve low financial returns? What is his long-term policy to solve lower production? What is his long-term policy regarding the 700,000-pound limit on subsidy eligibility quotas? What is his long-term policy regarding fluid milk producers who from time to time provide industrial milk?

Then I ask: What is his long-term policy to save the farm separated cream industry, except to import more and more creamery butter, an increase in imports of 362 per cent in 1973 over 1972—an increase of 362 per cent in one year alone. What is the minister's long-term policy on skilled farm labour for the producer? What is his long-term policy regarding the merger of market sharing and subsidy eligibility quotas? What is his long-term policy about a market price of products? Are subsidies permanent, or will the consumer be asked to pay the cost plus a reasonable return to the dairy producer? What is the minister's long-term policy regarding government service programs? What is his long-term policy to maintain a proper milk feed ratio?

There are other questions to be asked, Mr. Speaker, but I pose these to prompt some response, any response, from the minister. I appreciate, and sympathize with, the minister's difficulties in convincing cabinet that there even is a Canadian dairy industry, let alone convincing them that a long-term policy is essential. I hasten to assure the minister that we in this party will co-operate and assist in developing this policy, as we have in other agricultural problems which have faced Canadian farmers. I urge the minister not to accept a watered-down, do-nothing policy from his cabinet colleagues; and I am very concerned, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the minister's answer to my question today, that this is what is happening in cabinet.

Earlier today I asked the minister to make a definitive statement of his long-term policies for the dairy industry. In his reply he emphasized the need for consultation with the producers. I agree with this need. I regret that such consultation has not been going on on a regular basis as requested repeatedly over the years by the Federation of Agriculture, the dairy farmers of Canada and others. The minister then indicated that the government was ready to make a proposal to the industry and had instructed the Canadian Dairy Commission accordingly. What I fail to understand, Mr. Speaker, is what the commission is supposed to do now. Are they to consult with dairy producers, are they to negotiate with dairy producers, or are they to dictate terms to dairy producers? The minister then went on to say that the Canadian Dairy Commission has instructions to proceed along certain unnamed guidelines. Are these a secret? If the minister wants constructive suggestions from producers, let him tell this House the guidelines so that producers will have removed from their livelihoods this shroud of secrecy.

I have here in my hand ten speeches by the Minister of Agriculture given between February 13 and March 22 of this year. All of them discuss the need for a dairy policy. Through you, sir, I say to the minister that the time has come for him to talk for the dairy producer, not to him. On March 22, as recorded at page 783 of Hansard, the minister said:

> It is obvious that we must make our dairy industry capable of supplying every product we need.

I agree. But I submit, sir, that this is impossible unless the government gives long-term policy commitments. On behalf of every dairy producer of Canada, I say to this government and to the minister: the time to give such commitments is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised that the hon. member of the opposition should choose to discuss this topic on motion for adjournment. In his remarks, he certainly expressed no doubt that dairy producers wish to be consulted on a matter of such importance to their livelihood as a long term dairy policy.

Not so long ago, the Dairy Farmers of Canada presented a brief to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) which dealt in detail with a long term dairy policy. The minister gave very special attention to that brief and is now endeavouring to formulate a long term dairy policy in the best interest of dairy farmers and consequently in the best interest of all Canadians.

Considerable work has already been done on the formulation of a policy. Still, it is of vital interest that the minister be made aware of the views of dairy farmers before this policy is finalized.

The Canadian Dairy Commission has been dared to consult the industry, and if the brief of the Dairy Farmers of Canada recently received by the minister is any indication, such consultation would certainly be very welcome.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

GEORGES POMPIDOU

TRIBUTES ON DEATH OF PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we were deeply grieved to learn of the death of Mr. Georges Pompidou, President of the French Republic.

The range of his talents, the variety of his careers had made him known to Canadians much before his accession to the presidency of the Republic. A man of letters, high official, financier and politician, success had become rightly familiar to him. President of the Republic since 1969, he had won renown for his particularly intense activities in the field of international relations as well as on the national scene. Thus the influence of his action expanded beyond the French borders.

Tried by illness, he recently gave to all of us the example of a sense of duty which brought out the stamp of his character.

[English]

President Pompidou's death will be regretted by Canadians. His moderation and realism, qualities which he owes as much to his origins as to his wide and worldly experience, have been reflected in relations between France and Canada. Under President Pompidou our relations have developed within a framework of concrete co-operation. I am sure that this House and the Canadian people join me in offering our deepest sympathy to the family of President Pompidou, to the government of France and to the French people—a people to whom we are closely linked by language, by culture and, above all, by friendship.

I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, that on behalf of the government and the people of Canada I shall be attending the funeral ceremonies in Paris. At this time I should also like to apologize to those Canadians in Saskatchewan and in Ottawa who will be forced to see me postpone events in which I was to partake with them.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, France is mourning today the loss of its president. Mr. Georges Pompidou was a great statesman. He devoted most of his life to the service of his country playing an important role within the European Community.

[English]

His contribution to the construction of a better world equilibrium will often be cited as an example to be followed. President Pompidou never rejected great challenges; on the contrary, when he was called to serve he always responded, well aware of his duty to work for the welfare of his fellow citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that man will go down in history as having been the man of great times, the wise man who always sought negotiation rather than confrontation, the man of the happy medium, the man of détente and conciliation.

Mr. Speaker, we all know in this House how difficult it is for the political man to resist the wear and tear of time. Still, Mr. Georges Pompidou managed to keep the high esteem of everyone, thanks to the deep sense of honesty and devotion which characterized him throughout his life.

On my own behalf and on behalf of my party, I therefore wish to pay a last homage to Mr. Georges Pompidou who always pursued his task with the greatest respect for the individual and deepest love for political institutions.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the warm relations between Canada and France are deeply-rooted in Canadian history. It is therefore with special sorrow that Canadians learned of the death of President Pompidou.

He was a statesman whose greatness extended beyond the boundaries of his country as far as the European Economic Community and the world. He was a man who left the imprint of his character and ideas on his times.

On behalf of my colleagues, I extend our deepest condolences to the French people, Madame Pompidou and his family.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, one is always stricken by the death of a famous man, especially when he was head of state.

The death of French President Pompidou is all the more impressive and particularly afflicting for us because of the historical, linguistic and cultural links between our two countries.

His predecessor, one of the greatest statesmen of the century, passed on to Mr. Pompidou the delicate responsibility of making more harmonious the relations between the Canadian and French governments. In spite of some susceptible dispositions of the Prime Minister of our country towards France, after the now famous events of 1967, we must admit, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Pompidou showed magnanimity in the circumstances and we must recognize that his actions made possible good and sound relations between our two countries.

For these reasons, the death of the President of the Republic of France afflicts us deeply.

On behalf of all my colleagues and as a French-speaking member from Quebec, I extend to the family of Mr. Pompidou and to all of France my most sincere condolences.

NEWFOUNDLAND

ABSENCE OF PRIME MINISTER FROM CELEBRATION OF TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF UNION WITH CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek permission of the House to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of considerable importance not only to the people of Newfoundland but to this country as a whole.

As the House is aware, on April 1 the province of Newfoundland celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its union with Canada. Notably absent from the ceremonies that were held in the province commemorating the occasion was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the House regrets the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada did not see fit to attend the celebration and that his absence in no way represents the true feelings of this House or the government and people of this country toward the importance of the occasion and the great benefits that have accrued to Canada as a result of its confederation with Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO WIDEN SCOPE OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-270, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act (arbitration awards).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE REDEMPTION OF MORTGAGES BY MORTGAGORS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-271, to amend the Interest Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable a mortgagor to redeem the mortgage by paying the amount of principal and interest then due, plus three months further interest. In this way, unscrupulous mortgages will be deterred from introducing excessively severe penalty clauses in the small print of the contract.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 28—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount at credit in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at (a) March 31, 1971 (b) March 31, 1972 (c) March 31, 1973?

2. What rate of interest has the government paid for the use of this money during the fiscal years ending on the dates noted above?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1971 (b) March 31, 1972 (c) March 31, 1973?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1971 (b) March 31, 1972 (c) March 31, 1973?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1, 3 and 4. This information is tabled in the House of Commons annually in accordance with Revised Statutes, and also appears annually in the Public Accounts.

2. (a) Rates of Interest for: 1973/71, Quarter ending June 30, 1970, 1.3174 per cent; Quarter ending September 30, 1970, 1.3262 per cent; Quarter ending December 31, 1970, 1.3427 per cent; Quarter ending March 31, 1971, 1.3597 per cent. (b) 1971/72, Quarter ending June 30, 1971, 1.3838 per cent; Quarter ending September 30, 1971, 1.3896 per cent; Quarter ending December 31, 1971, 1.4004 per cent; Quarter ending March 31, 1972, 1.4157 per cent. (c) 1972/73, Quarter ending June 30, 1972, 1.4601 per cent; Quarter ending September 30, 1972, 1.4659 per cent; Quarter ending December 31, 1972, 1.4778 per cent; Quarter ending March 31, 1973, 1.4931 per cent.

WINTER CAPITAL PROJECTS FUND

Question No. 136—Mr. Laprise:

Within the Winter Works Investment Program announced by the Minister of Finance on December 6, 1972 (a) which provinces participated in the program to date (b) how many projects were there and what was the amount involved in each case?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): (a) All the provinces are participating in the program. (b) To the end of February 1974 the number of projects and the amounts involved were as follows:

Province	Number of Projects Approved*	Total Approved Loans ($ thousands)	Advances ($ thousands)
Newfoundland	103	11,663	8,500
Prince Edward Island	30	2,105	1,493
Nova Scotia	86	13,953	—

Saskatchewan	120	13,442	479
Alberta	100	14,950	4,291
British Columbia	64	24,371	6,632
Yukon	—	—	—
Northwest Territories	1	400	400
	1,075	279,043	116,936

*Excludes cancelled projects,
Includes loan commitment revisions.

GOVERNMENT FOREIGN BORROWING

Question No. 230—Mr. Stevens:

1. Is the government planning to reduce its reliance on CSB's in 1974 and to enter the domestic long bond market?

2. Does the government plan to borrow abroad so as to share with the provinces some of the exchange rate risks of foreign borrowing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. The extent to which the government will tap the capital markets in 1974 for net new funds and the type of obligations chosen will depend upon government cash requirements, alternative sources of financing and prevailing market circumstances.

2. No.

Order Paper Questions

*ECONOMIC TARGETS FOR 1974

Question No. 231—Mr. Stevens:

What are the economic targets of the government for 1974 in terms of real economic growth, employment, real wages (before and after income taxes) and prices?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the government will be seeking to guide the economy to as high a real growth rate and level of employment as the economy can achieve without inducing further inflation. It is the conviction of the government that high employment and production will make the best contribution to dampening inflation and the retarding effect of inflation on the growth of real incomes.

It is the intention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to review the government's policies and the prospective achievement of the economy in 1974 in his budget address.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 428—Mr. Reynolds:

As the Department of National Health and Welfare requires that a warning be put on every cigarette package advising of danger to health, will the Minister of Finance put a like notice on all Canada Savings Bonds which advises that danger to the health of the pocket book increases with the purchase of Canada Savings Bonds?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No.

COST OF BREAKWATER AT TURKEY POINT AND MARY TOD ISLAND, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 482—Mr. McKinnon:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,966 of the First Session of the 29th Parliament concerning the total cost of the breakwater between Turkey Point and Mary Tod Island near Victoria, what is the expenditure by year?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Fiscal year: 1959-60, $298,968; 1962-63, $6,634; 1963-64, $1,114; 1968-69, $9,132; 1969-70, $22,970; 1970-71, $15,580; 1972-73, $173,501.

DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF ADDRESS MADE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE IN LETHBRIDGE

Question No. 506—Mr. Cossitt:

Was a political address made by the Minister of Agriculture to the meeting of the Lethbridge Liberal Association, Lethbridge, Alberta on Tuesday, March 12, 1974 reprinted at public expense and, if so (a) how many copies were printed (b) how many copies were distributed (c) what specific individual authorized this expenditure of public funds?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No. (a) to (c) not applicable.

Order Paper Questions

*IRVING CASE—LEGAL FEES

Question No. 545—Mr. Howie:

As of March 15, 1974, what and to whom was the total amount paid for prosecution of the Irving interests under the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, here are the particulars on the cost of New Brunswick newspapers prosecution in the Irving case, but they do not include travelling expenses and time of Department of Justice personnel and of officers on the staff of the Director of Investigation and Research. William L. Hoyt, Q.C., Hoyt, Mockler, Allen, Dixon & Godin, Fredericton, N.B., (Crown Counsel): Legal Fees, $88,021; disbursements, $23,587. T. Joseph Scanlon, Dean of the School of Journalism, Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario, (Special Assistant to Crown Counsel—Consultant): Fees, $9,100; disbursements, $3,367. Winnifred Johnston, Saint John, N.B., (Witness): Cost, $630. Total: $124,705.

"SAFARI KIT"

Question No. 591—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Under whose authority was the "Safari Kit" issued?

2. What is the purpose of this kit and of what does it consist?

3. How many copies of this kit were prepared (a) in English (b) in French?

4. What is the present distribution of the kit and the anticipated distribution for the future?

5. What was (a) the cost to date (b) the projected cost of this kit?

6. Was a contract given out for (a) the preparation (b) the production (c) the distribution of this kit and, if so (i) by whom (ii) to whom?

7. What are the names and addresses of the directors of the company which received this contract?

8. Was the contract open to tender and, if so (a) how many firms tendered and what were the names in each case (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a Minister. Questions may be put to him directly.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PROFITS OF AND SUBSIDIES TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 236—Mr. Olaussen:

1. What were the amounts, in dollars and as a percentage of total after tax profits, of dividends paid by Canadian corporations to foreign parents and affiliates and of profits paid by unincorporated branches of foreign corporations operating in Canada in each of the years 1965 to 1972, by each of the 37 industry groups and by asset size (a) less than $1 million (b) $1 million to $4,999,999 (c) $5 million to $9,999,999 (d) $10 million to $24,999,999 (e) $25 million and over?

2. What were the total amounts of subsidies given to foreign-owned companies in each of the years 1965 to 1972, cross-classified by industrial group and asset size?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had a question on the order paper for the past five or six months with regard to positions and salaries of women in the Public Service. It is question No. 319. There must be some reason why the government is refusing to answer. Maybe they have no women on salary over the $15,000 mark or maybe they just do not care about women.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INTENTION RESPECTING MODERATION OF RATE OF INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES IN VIEW OF RATE OF INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister relating to the continued high rate of inflation in the country and the fact that the estimates of federal government spending tabled for the current year are some 40 per cent higher than the corresponding estimates of federal spending tabled only two years ago. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any firm intention of moderating the rate of increase in the expenditures of his government as part of a fight against domestically-induced inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We shall certainly do our best, particularly in the area of bringing to an end programs which have run their time, and we hope we can count on the support of the opposition parties in bringing such programs to an end.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the position of the government, and particularly of the Prime Minister, that the growth in the estimated expenditures of the government, amounting to 40 per cent over a near two-year period, is appropriate in light of the current inflationary pressures in the country?

Mr. Trudeau: When we are talking of global figures it is good to remember the individual programs which form part of those increasing expenditures, and once again I call all members of the House to support the government in trying to cut back on some of these programs.

An hon. Member: What government?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Ask them in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: Whenever my hon. friend wants to test the water in Nova Scotia federally, we will be ready.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Or anywhere else, even Quebec.

Mr. Hees: How would you like to test us in Ontario and New Brunswick? We are willing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are like corpses over there.

Mr. Crouse: Sitting right there is the only member from Nova Scotia you will ever have, and you are not going to hold him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might have order. I believe the Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary question.

Mr. Stanfield: My supplementary is quite specific. In view of the intense inflationary pressures in the country and the very sharp escalation in the rate of expenditures by the government, does the Prime Minister propose to bring before the House in the near future any firm plan to moderate the rate of increase in the expenditures of his government?

Mr. Trudeau: If I might comment on the noise which accompanied the Leader of the Opposition's talk—

Mr. Hees: That is not what you were asked to do. We are sorry, but you cannot.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he should not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE INCREASES BY ASPHALT ROOFING MANUFACTURERS AND POSSIBLE CREATION OF ARTIFICIAL SHORTAGE OF BUILDING MATERIALS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the reported price increase of 10 per cent imposed on April 1 by all three manufacturers of asphalt roofing—Building Products Limited, Canadian Gypsum, and Domtar Limited—and having in mind that during 1973 the price of asphalt roofing rose by almost 20 per cent over the price in 1972, will the minister instruct the director of investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to find out whether there is a conspiracy on the part of this cartel to fix prices?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to draw this matter to the attention of the combines investigation branch.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): In view of the past record of this cartel in the matter of price fixing, will the minister instruct the director of investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to determine whether this cartel has deliberately brought about an artificial shortage of building materials through restriction of trade, thus contributing to the soaring costs of new housing and housing repairs?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the director in carrying out an inquiry to look into all aspects in order to determine whether or not there has been an offence against the act.

AIR CANADA

TRANSFER FROM MONTREAL TO WINNIPEG OF MAINTENANCE OPERATIONS FOR BOEING 727 AIRCRAFT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the answer that he gave in the House on Friday, March 22, 1974, following a question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, has he had any further contact with Air Canada concerning the closing of the overhaul base for Boeing 727's and its transfer to Winnipeg?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no contact on this specific point. Ongoing discussions are taking place with Air Canada. No decision has been made yet, to my knowledge, by Air Canada and the situation is exactly as before. Anyhow, for the information of the hon. member for Champlain, I will say that our relations with Air Canada are as good as those with France.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

How long does he think it will be before Air Canada is in a position to inform the minister of its decision on this important matter?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member knows about the status of Air Canada. The decision must be made by that corporation, and as soon as I am told about it, I shall be pleased to inform the hon. member for Shefford.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES AND NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS—INQUIRY WHETHER GUIDELINES ISSUED TO DEPARTMENTS RESPECTING RESTRAINT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to my leader's question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the undoubted inflationary effect of these massive increases in government expenditures and in the number of public servants employed by the federal government, can the minister tell us whether there have already been guidelines issued to the various departments in respect of restraint on government expenditures and the employment of people in the public service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, no specific arbitrary guidelines have been issued. However, there has been a clear indication that restraint will be exercised during the course of the current fiscal year.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact that in 1969 the Prime Minister pledged that a freeze would be placed on the growth of the public service—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Order. That is argumentative.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a good argument.

Mr. Lawrence: —and that is has grown massively since that time, has there been any specific reference regarding growth of the public service itself, or will there be in the near future, from the President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Drury: As I indicated, there will be, as there have been to some degree in the past, restraints on increases. The justifications for further growth will be more severely tested. But I would point out that over the past four years the increase in the federal government's expenditures for goods and services, including salaries, has been at a rate less than the growth of the gross national product.

INFLATION—ACTION TO RESTORE PURCHASING POWER OF WORKERS' PAY CHEQUES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As the figures released yesterday by Statistics Canada show that average weekly earnings are running more than 2 per cent below the current rate of inflation, will the minister advise the House when he intends to take steps to restore to par the purchasing power of the pay cheques of the workers of Canada?

● (1430)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, those statistics also show that the ratio between wages and the cost of living has been returning in the direction of wages. To answer more fully, I would direct the hon. gentleman to statistics of Statistics Canada which reflect that personal disposable income, that is, the income left in the hands of the average Canadian, increased more than 6 per cent last year.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Hees: As the minister knows very well that the figure of real disposable income contains many factors that do not in any way benefit the average working man or woman, when does he intend to stop trying to mislead the workers of this country into believing that they are not losing out very badly on every pay cheque they receive?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Up, up, up! Don't try a Trudeau on me. Get up and try to answer.

ENERGY

AUDIT OF GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF HEATING OIL FROM ROUMANIA TO DETERMINE WHETHER THERE WAS CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Has the minister conducted an internal audit inquiry into the purchase of oil on the open market by the Department of Supply and Services and, if so, is he satisfied that the purchase of Roumanian oil did not involve a conflict of interest?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there has been no specific inquiry into or no specific audit of this particular transaction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Drury: I might add I have no reason to believe there was any conflict of interest.

Mr. Andre: In view of the fact the Department of Supply and Services did purchase an option from its own adviser, has the minister at least requested the Auditor General to investigate further government expenditures on heating oil by the Department of Supply and Services?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the premise of the question is incorrect. The Department of Supply and Services did not purchase oil from any of its advisers.

POSITION OF CONTRACT FOR PURCHASE OF HEATING OIL BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact the oil purchased at such a high price was surplus to requirements, can the minister inform the House whether the government got out of the contract for the supply of oil and, if they got out, at what cost?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not understand the question. I will have to read it in Hansard. The government did not get out of any contract to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Stanfield: That's right, it got hooked.

DISPOSITION OF HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can he inform the House what he intends to do with this oil which was purchased and is not really required by Canadians?

An hon. Member: Send it to Korea.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we will use the oil to heat the federal buildings in eastern Canada, from now on.

HEALTH

INCIDENCE OF SILICOSIS AMONG URANIUM WORKERS—ACTION BY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the minister has jurisdiction over the health and safety of uranium workers under Clause 10 of the regulations entitled, "Canada Dangerous Substances Regulations", and in view of the fact 10 per cent of the present work force in the Elliot Lake mines are affected to varying degrees by silicosis, will the minister inform the House what steps have been taken by him or what steps he intends to take to protect the workers in the Elliot Lake mine?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that he is not correct. It is not within my jurisdiction. Had the author of that comment in the north country bothered to check he could easily have found out that was not the case. The jurisdiction falls under the Atomic Energy Control Board and certain activities are undertaken by the radiation division of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I know that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has seen the parties involved and perhaps can give the hon. member a more adequate report. That department is involved and, as I say, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, not the Department of Labour.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have in my possession the regulations entitled "Canada Dangerous Substances Regulations", and under Clause 10 it specifically states that it is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order; it is a point of debate.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not believe an inaccuracy should be allowed to remain on the record. When I said that jurisdiction did not rest with the Department of Labour, that was quite correct. Other regulations in respect of uranium and radiation clearly state that they supersede any legislative responsibility I have in terms of safety standards. If the hon. member will check, he will find out that he is incorrect.

PURCHASE OF HEATING OIL BY GOVERNMENT—POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question that is supplementary to one asked a few minutes ago about conflict of interest. The President of the Treasury Board said that the Department of Supply and Services did not purchase this oil from an adviser to the department and therefore there was no conflict of interest. Will the President of the Treasury Board not agree that the oil was purchased from a company with representation on the advisory committee to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which recommended to the Minister of Supply and Services that this oil should be purchased? If that does not constitute a conflict of interest, perhaps the minister could describe what conflict of interest would consist of?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the facts as outlined by the Leader of the Opposition are quite correct. He has established the facts and he is as capable of determining whether there is a conflict of interest, without further inquiry, as is anyone else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the great many projects submitted for the Opportunities for Youth Program, can the minister tell us if he has recommended to the cabinet that the sum of $25 million be increased for the year 1974?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

Could the minister tell us if he intends to make such a recommendation to the cabinet to allow for the implementation of a larger number of projects proposed by the youth. They have gone through the trouble of submitting them and those projects should be approved by the Opportunities for Youth Program.

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think the earlier comment by the Prime Minister in response to a question by the hon. Leader of the Opposition would apply here in terms of allocating more funds. May I also add that we are seeking assistance of the private sector in doing everything possible to expedite the connection between young people seeking jobs and those employers who have vacancies, with more special emphasis this year than in the past.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ADJUSTMENT OF ALLOCATIONS TO EASTERN PROVINCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to the original allocations circulated roughly a month or five weeks ago. In view of considerable representations from some of the eastern provinces which have been severely cut on a relative basis over last year, will the minister indicate whether reconsideration has been given to the allocations and whether any readjustment of allocations has subsequently been made?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, I believe, we were going to make a final adjustment based on more current information on job availability versus youth population in various parts of the country, based on February figures which were updated from the ones on which we based our original allocations. The net result of all this is that there will be increases in the allocations to the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, and I believe one other province, but at the moment I cannot remember which one it is.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REVIEW OF CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES—CLEARING OF SNOW FROM TRACKS TO EXPEDITE GRAIN MOVEMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Is it a fact that a review is now taking place in government circles, in particular in his own department, concerning the Crowsnest Pass freight rates, and that the feeling within the department is that they should be altered and that the Crowsnest Pass agreement can no longer be kept in effect?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Surely not, to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. Stanfield: Does Joe know anything about that?

● (1440)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, possibly the minister might look into that and find out because there is a press report by a most reliable press man, Mr. Nick Hills—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure in what way the right hon. gentleman wishes to ask the supplementary question but he knows it is not regular to ask a minister to confirm or deny a press report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know, Mr. Speaker, when the government does not know what is going on in its own departments, sometimes it is helpful for an opposition member to draw their attention to the facts. I would also ask the amiable minister whether or not he will get in touch with Canadian National Railways in order to ensure that the railway tracks will be cleared of snow, some of which recently were covered completely. Dayliners operate on these tracks. Would he see to this because this is a very serious matter in Saskatchewan, where it is anticipated that flooding will be worse than in previous years, so that as much wheat as possible will be moved before the break-up?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on account of the presentation of the right hon. gentleman I can tell him that I intend to meet with the president of the CNR this afternoon at 3.30 and this is the first question I will raise.

REPORTED INCREASE IN FARM LOAN INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of reports that farm credit loan interest rates have now gone up to 8¼ per cent from 7 per cent, and in light of the fact that the minister's request for an increase in the total loan fund has not been approved by his cabinet colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, is the minister now prepared to make a statement on motions on this matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Farm Credit Corporation is operating in a normal manner. It is operating at capacity. There has been no slowdown in the handling of applications. The corporation has the funds with which to operate and it will continue to do so.

Mr. Frank: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the minister has been travelling back and forth across Canada expounding on the necessity of encouraging young people to enter agriculture, or of at least maintaining those now so engaged, is this action by the minister of raising the interest rates not contradictory?

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO ASSIST CAPTAIN OF "GREENPEACE III" TO OBTAIN DAMAGES FROM FRANCE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could engage the attention of the Prime Minister for a moment. Has the government yet come to a decision on how it might assist Captain David McTaggart in pressing his damage claim against the government of France over the illegal boarding of the Canadian vessel, Greenpeace III, in the South Pacific last summer? If a decision has been reached can the Prime Minister tell us what method of assisting Captain McTaggart has been selected by the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has discussed this matter with me several times over the past few months. I do not find myself in a position to indicate to the hon. member what specific methods have been agreed upon at this time. I do want to say that we feel modest progress is being made and will be made. If the hon. member would permit, I will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to report to the House as soon as he feels he is in a position to do so.

GRAIN

PLANS TO MOVE GRAIN FROM AREAS THAT MAY BE FLOODED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, supplementary to that asked by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. In view of possible flooding in the Red River and Roseau River valleys, a situation which the Manitoba flood forecasting committee rates as a distinct possibility, can the minister indicate what emergency plans are ready to put into place to move grain from these areas to prevent the spoiling of grain now in farm storage?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, following the various planning meetings of several weeks ago, an operational committee is now in existence under the chairmanship of a commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board in Winnipeg to examine the whole question of what trucking is available and what means can be used to move grain in addition to the grain that can be moved on the rail lines that are open. These particular questions, therefore, are brought to the attention of this committee and the Canadian Wheat Board and what can be done is done to move grain from sensitive areas. Obviously, with snow conditions across the prairies being extremely serious in many places, not all of the movement of grain that would be desirable in the next few weeks can be accomplished.

COMBINES

ALLEGATION THAT CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION INDUCED INFORMATION CANADA TO ADOPT SUGGESTED RETAIL PRICES FOR CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but as he has stepped behind the curtain perhaps I can address it to the Minister of Justice in his absence. In view of the evidence presented to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts on March 21 by Mr. Beauchamp of Information Canada to the effect that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had induced Information Canada to adopt a suggested retail price for certain publications in contravention of section 38(2) of the Combines Investigation Act, will the minister lay charges against the CBC?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have a look at the suggestion and the allegations, but of course I would not indicate in advance a decision concerning charges.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State. Would the Secretary of State undertake to bring this case to the official notice of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation so that programs like "As it Happens" and "Market Place" will have an opportunity to air it thoroughly before it becomes sub judice?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I will look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

ALBERTA PROPOSAL TO ADMINISTER COLLECTION OF PROVINCIAL TAX ON CORPORATIONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister inform the House what communication he has had with the government of Alberta concerning a proposal that Alberta administer the collection of its own corporation income tax?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am in constant communication with the province of Alberta and Mr. Gordon Miniely, the minister of finance for Alberta, who called me before the announcement was made by Premier Lougheed. I told him that I understood the priorities of the province to diversify industry beyond a merely primary resource economy into a secondary and tertiary industry economy with particular attention to the small businessman. I thanked him for this advance notice and told him I am looking forward to consulting with him as to how to achieve those objectives without destroying the essential harmony of the tax system across the country.

MANPOWER

DENIAL OF RELOCATION ASSISTANCE UNDER MOBILITY PROGRAM TO POTENTIAL EMPLOYEES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of relocation assistance available under the Canada Manpower Mobility Program and in view of the fact that such assistance is denied potential employees of Crown corporations, can the minister explain what steps are being taken or will be taken to prevent such discrimination?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and respond to the hon. member at the earliest possible opportunity.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS TO MEET WITH PEOPLE ASKED TO LEAVE PROPERTIES BY END OF JULY

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding the airport planning process now going on between the federal government and the airport community planning association of Richmond. Can the minister advise the House why Mr. Bill Inglis, the airport manager, and Mr. Lenahan, the regional administrator of the Department of Transport refused to meet with the people who are being asked to leave their properties by the end of July?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that question could be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency it could be given priority for consideration at the time of adjournment.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES AND OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAMS—STEPS TO ASSURE MONEY PROPERLY SPENT AND ACCOUNTED FOR

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the minister responsible for the operation of the Local Initiatives and Opportunities for Youth programs. In view of the very serious observations the Auditor General made in his last report that both these programs have had serious weaknesses in their administration, a lack of accounting records, and in some cases fraudulent and irregular procedures, what steps is the minister taking to make sure that the Canadian taxpayers' money is going to be spent properly and will be properly accounted for?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have read carefully the comments of the Auditor General. I note that we would probably have some disagreement with some of his comments but we recognize the validity of others. We note also that the incidence of administrative weakness, or in some cases the possibility of improper practices, is very small indeed, particularly in relation to programs of this nature, something which is pleasing to us. Nevertheless we are going to take all possible steps to follow the advice of the Auditor General and will continue to improve our monitoring and auditing approach.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF AGRICULTURAL FOOD PRODUCT INDUSTRY IN SAINT-HYACINTHE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the master agreement entered into by Ottawa and Quebec, and the fact that Saint-Hyacinthe has now been recognized as a designated area for incentives purposes, does the minister intend to confer with the Minister of Agriculture and their Quebec counterparts with a view to establishing a strong agricultural food product industry in Saint-Hyacinthe?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes, and those discussions are already under way.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS BY GOVERNMENT TO OBTAIN RELEASE OF TWO CANADIANS HELD CAPTIVE BY ERITREAN LIBERATION FRONT IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question pertains to external affairs and I must direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. It involves another strange anomaly of potential conflict of interest. Has the government made representations to the guerilla force known as the Eritrean Liberation Front, in or near Ethiopia, asking for the liberation of two Canadian taxpaying citizens, Donald Werderfort and Clifford James, now held captive by this guerilla group?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt with this matter two days ago.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Can the Prime Minister inform the House as to the amount of money in the form of a grant that was obtained from the government by the above-named Eritrean Liberation Front which is now holding these two Canadians captive?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for statistical information. That part of the question should be placed on the order paper.

REPORT OF CORPORATE TAX MEASURES REVIEW COMMITTEE—NAMES OF CORPORATIONS TO WHICH QUESTIONNAIRE SENT AND THOSE THAT REPLIED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. No doubt he will recall that on Monday, in reply to a request by me that he table the names of the 1,088 corporations to which the questionnaire resulting in the report on the corporate tax measures was sent, and in response to related questions, he said he saw no reason why that could not be done. May I now ask the minister whether we can expect that information to be tabled, and when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The House may expect that, sir, and as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO PREVENT IMPORTATION AND SALE OF MEAT IMPLANTED WITH DES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. What steps is his department taking to assure Canadian consumers that no meat entering Canada to be sold in Canada is actually implanted with DES?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I reported to the House previously that there will be a meeting in Washington between officials of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and our people, and that we have had meetings in Ottawa. There should be an announcement made shortly on what arrangements have been made between the two nations for certification that meat coming into Canada has neither been implanted with DES nor that the food consumed by animals has had the DES supplement added to it.

ENERGY

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT—AMOUNT PAID BY CANADIAN FUEL MARKETERS FOR OPTIONS

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Having regard to the answer given to my leader that Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited were in fact technical advisers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, having regard to the fact that this heating oil was bought by the government at 99 cents a gallon, and having regard to the fact that Canadian Fuel Marketers is a subsidiary of Shell International, did the minister take it upon himself to find out what Canadian Fuel Marketers paid for their options before he bought this fuel from them and, if not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to see that the government is being urged, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, to meddle with the private affairs of corporations, and I wonder with what authority the corporation concerned obtained options on an international market which, as everyone knows, is very much open to competition.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Morgan: My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Having said that the information he obtained came from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, did the Minister of Supply and Services take into consideration the fact that they were being advised by the very people from whom they purchased this oil?

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT—ROTTERDAM PRICE AT TIME OF TRANSACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services who yesterday told the House that at the time he paid 99 cents for each of these five million gallons of oil the Rotterdam price was 89 cents. Would the minister disclose the source of his information about Rotterdam oil prices at that time, since the Oil Buyers' Guide shows that the Rotterdam price at no time went above 74 cents all winter?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The tar baby is in trouble.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I obtained my information from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Goyer: —and I will certainly check whether the question of the hon. member, as stated, is according to the facts.

THREAT OF GRASSHOPPER INFESTATION IN WESTERN CANADA THIS SPRING—ACTION TO CONTROL

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that this year western Canada will face the severest outbreak of grasshoppers it has faced in decades, and in view of the fact this will affect prime farm land, can the minister inform the House what action he is taking to assist in the fight against grasshoppers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the hon. member that we are offering to the provinces to set up control centres, with equipment and insecticides, and people who are willing to staff these centres, to make sure we are in a better position than we have ever been to control grasshoppers.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a quick supplementary to the minister who has shown great interest in the nutrition and diet of people not only in Canada but throughout the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knight: Can the minister inform the House if his department, through its marketing agencies, is looking into the possibility of taking this high protein insect, which is a delicacy in many parts of the world, and turning it into a marketable commodity?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gather that this is a representation.

Mr. Knight: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, although this may appear to be a preposterous question, I want to inform the House that grasshoppers are selling at $3.10 a pound in Japan today.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Maybe Goyer will buy them!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM TO PEOPLE ON RESERVES

Mr. Frank Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In light of the recent announcement of his rural and native housing policy, for which my colleagues and myself have developed a degree of appreciation, I would like to ask him if he has had any discussions with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Resources to extend this policy to native people living on reserves?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there have been some discussions at the official level. We amended the National Housing Act last session to provide that the programs under it could apply on Indian reserves. But the responsibility is essentially that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the building and provision of native housing on reserves. We have been having some discussions on the application of the new policy to reserves.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Rimouski.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What steps is the minister taking to prepare the native community on the reservations to take advantage of this policy that would certainly establish a brand new philosophy of housing ownership and pride of ownership? What steps has the minister taken to inform the natives of the policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, discussions have started with the Indians, as my assistant deputy minister indicated in committee yesterday morning, and we have submitted concrete proposals to the Indian Council of Vancouver Island concerning a pilot project which combines the housing programs of my department with those of the Urban Affairs Ministry. We will have shortly a formal meeting with the representatives of the Indian Association of Canada to discuss a new housing policy for Indians living on reserves.

POSSIBLE ORGANIZATION BY PARLIAMENT OF RECEPTION FOR ANGOLESE DELEGATION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but since he is absent, I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

The Canada University Service Overseas (CUSO) has hinted that an Angolese delegation will be in Canada from April 22 to April 30 and wants to organize an official reception for this delegation in the Parliament of Canada. CUSO is reported to have submitted a request to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a few weeks ago. Can the Prime minister tell us whether such a request has been received, whether he intends to answer or has answered it? If so, what was his answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If this is really urgent, the hon. member can raise the matter again at the time of adjournment.

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR NEXT CROP YEAR—ROLE OF CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Since the minister has outlined at some length details of the governments feed grains proposals for August 1, 1974, the start of the new crop year, is it the government's intention to implement the proposals contained in the document that has been distributed which is entitled, "The Domestic Feed Grain Market"?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I believe the document to which the hon. member refers is a working paper on the technical implications of putting into effect the type of proposals we outlined last August 3 for the long term. We are working on the final decision as to the kind of policy we ought to have without having confirmed that we will go the route of the August 3 proposals. We did want to be sure of our technical grounds and the workability of that proposal and the alternatives we are looking at. This is a document on the technical feasibility of the August 3 proposals and does not indicate a final decision by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Lisgar might be allowed a supplementary question, following which the Chair will call orders of the day.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I will ask my supplementary question in two parts. I should like to know whether it is the intention of the government that the Canadian Livestock Feed Board will play a more prominent role in determining supply and demand for domestic grain sold in Canada. Also, will the government be prepared to announce its policy by the end of this month, well in advance of the start of the new crop year so that all may have a good look at the proposals?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we had hoped to be able to announce the new policy by the end of the month, but it may well be early May or mid-May before we manage to do so. The role of the Livestock Feed Board is being studied and, while no firm decision has been made on that, I think it is fairly obvious that the board will play a more active role in assessing the need for feed grains in Canada and informing the producers as well as the consumers of grain about the way in which sales of grain are progressing and grain is moving.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 2, debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that Bill C-5, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply to say that there have been some multiparty discussions and I think you will find there is general agreement for a special order providing that the remaining speeches at the third reading stage of this bill be limited to 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, Bill C-5 intituled: "An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada" is evidence that some changes have occurred during the year. In the bill introduced in former years, a very significant word was recurring fairly often and that was the word "deficit". In this bill, Mr. Speaker, this term has been replaced by another, namely, "securities to be repaid". This is fairly more sophisticated and seems rather successful.

Mr. Speaker, although the president of our Crown corporation is always very well paid and several officials have chosen for themselves important positions and applied the planning formula, the results are the same, that is we are virtually facing a fiasco as a result of the incompetence and irresponsibility of the management. And we can always expect the same results. For instance, when it comes to planning, we always find the same incompetence in the field of agriculture and transport as well as in the St. Lawrence Seaway Administration or the Canadian National. Following advanced planning, our country which was a major producer and exporter of goods sought throughout the world has become an importer.

The government planned the system. If fixed quotas and, to be consistent with its plans, went so far as paying western farmers not to produce. This same government even penalized eastern farmers for producing too much. It even mobilized inspectors to visit farms and keep an eye on farmers. In my opinion, the shortcomings in planning result from the very fact that most people responsible for planning are "yes-men".

We all know that, in the private sector, one must not be satisfied with following but must lead the way.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I think he is being interrupted by some of the conversations that usually accompany the end of the question period. If he would like to rest a moment whilst the House settles down, this period would not be subtracted from his time.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: In private enterprise, as I said, we all know that administration officers develop ideas and put them into practice. Anyone anxious to know the difference between private enterprise and public enterprise does not need to go out of the country, or even to get into a new field, he can stay on the same "track". One has only to compare the balance sheets of the CN and the CP. The CN operates at loss while the CP shows profits.

In 1973, the CN came before the government begging for credits to plug the $17 million hole. The same year, the Canadian Pacific's balance sheet showed $125 million profit. In the February 12 edition of Le Soleil, one could read the following:

> The Canadian Pacific company announced yesterday an unaudited net revenue of $125 million for 1973, including extraordinary items of $6 million.
> That is a $29 million increase over 1972.

Mr. Speaker, in 1971 for instance, the CN came before us again with a deficit of $29 million.

In 1968, the CN had tampered with their employees' superannuation fund, had written off a $371 million debt and in spite of all that it still showed a deficit.

During the 60's, the CN tampered and meddled again with the employees' pension fund. They loaned themselves $675 million at 4 per cent interest for 60 years.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit members say that the Canadian National, like many other Crown corporations, should be financed through new credits at a low rate of interest. However, we maintain that savings deserve a reward and that the best reward that can be made at the present time is the payment of interests at the market rate.

Moreover, by lending themselves $675 million at 4 per cent, the CN saved $40 million a year, but those savings are at the expense of retired employees and I think that is an abnormal state of things.

If all that tampering gave results, it would be really encouraging but we know the situation remains the same because by financing its operations in a fraudulent way as it does, the CNR remains constantly in the red.

On the pretense of saving, Mr. Speaker, the CNR lays off personnel, neglects the maintenance of its cars and tracks, and trains derail.

A paper tabled in the House earlier this year and submitted by the Canadian Transport Commission indicates, for example, that in the year 1970 the CPR had 60 derailments, and the CNR 193. In 1971, the CPR had 52 derailments, the CNR 192. In 1972, since the figures for 1973 were not available, the CPR registered 80 derailments while the CNR managed to beat its own records with a total of 230 derailments.

All this to say, Mr. Speaker, that those figures prove that there is always room for improvement at the CNR.

In 1973, CNR authorities forgot to order cars. Officials always on holidays forgot that you have to have cars to move things.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, a dairy producer who would forget to have his cows inseminated.

Imagine a corner-store owner who would forget to renew his inventories.

Imagine a gardener who would forget to sow or a taxi company who would go into business without cars.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Regardless of the business involved, it is obvious that inadequate and irresponsible administration would give the same results.

As a matter of fact, regardless of the business in which they were involved, those businesses would be doomed to bankruptcy unless they managed to obtain a grant as the CNR does every year.

Mr. Speaker, the car shortage is nothing new. The Canadian National authorities have long been aware of it, as was shown to us in previous years.

At that time, the Canadian National invited members of Parliament to information sessions to tell us for instance about the new customer service.

According to the information agents of that time, the service would be greatly improved through the use of a new electronic system.

Since all movement would be directed by the system, they said it would be very easy to control trains and cars.

Simply by glancing at the reports given out by the computers, it would be possible to tell the movement of trains and the numbers of cars in Canada and even in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the lack of results, we must conclude that the members of this House have simply been had by jokers since, in spite of all the nice promises, there is still a car shortage.

We still give the iron from our mines to the Americans, we export hard wood for Japan's bowling alleys, and, in our own country, we forget to build railway cars.

At the present time, there are not enough cars to move western grain to the east, to move paper and all other kinds of perishable goods in our country. That is the situation. All this simply because we did not think, we did not get the necessary equipment, we did not organize to meet the transport companies' demands in relation with agriculture, trade and industry throughout the country. That is the situation.

Mr. Speaker, this shows a lack of service but it also shows a waste of money. We could prove at any time that the Canadian National spends money for all types of material which is never delivered.

The CN pays for oil to paint bridges which have not been painted in 20 years. But it still receives oil bills and labour bills.

I am quite ready to admit that the railway companies are a public utility and that they should be maintained and improved.

However, I am not willing to admit that we should nationalize the private enterprise to get better service.

In the transportation area, we can also observe how Air Canada and some airports operate.

Last fall, we heard about the way a contract was awarded for snow removal at the Quebec City airport.

● (1520)

Last fall, in November and December 1973, public calls for tenders were issued: four contractors submitted tenders. This invitation to bid involved a three-year contract. The tenders received by the authorities responsible for snow removal at the Quebec City airport were as follows: $265,696, $288,880, $292,129 and $305,623. Although there was a difference of $40,000 between the lowest and the highest bids the authorities of the Montreal regional agency, which were apparently responsible for this contract, managed to grant the contract to the highest bidder. And among the people interested in this contract, there was a contractor from Sainte-Foy in the riding of Louis-Hébert. At that time, this contractor tried to draw his member's attention to what was going on. He also got in touch with the secretary of the Minister of Transport in Quebec City. Personally, I made several phone calls to the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in Parliament because I thought he was one of those who could help us. I supplied him with the figures I just mentioned. But apparently he could do nothing. As the minister stated in the House and elsewhere, he has lost control. Is it true or not? In any event, we know that to make profits certain things should be done and others avoided.

We all know that if an honest business calls for tenders, it is in the intention of making a sensible choice to its advantage. It is as simple as that and to date nobody has proved to me that paying the highest price was the most economical principle.

And contrary to our NDP friends, who say that the government should nationalize the CPR, I would rather be in favour of merging the CNR and the CPR. Most of the companies doing business in this country and which are successful in business have often merged. Obviously, some positions in the Canadian National management, starting with that of the president, would disappear. However, in my mind, the benefits drawn from an equitable management of the Canadian Pacific will perhaps lead us to consider the implementation of this practice for other Crown agencies.

Since such a merger policy cannot be realized in one day, Mr. Speaker, we may perhaps attempt some other method, which is that the top management of the Canadian National, including the president, be paid a commission.

Because set salaries are the reason for a stupid and losing administration, I think it would be appropriate to implement our suggestions, as members of parliament, so that government succeeds in instilling awareness and motivation in some management officials and in giving them the guts to do a good job in their companies. I believe this country is prosperous enough to support these transport corporations. In my opinion, if stricter measures were applied, the Crown transportation companies could make their services more profitable and efficient and Parliament would be spared the voting of funds which, until this day, we can only compare to welfare payments. I think the situation is most abnormal in a country that prides itself on being rich, prosperous and well administered. Mr. Speaker, to prove ourselves and show that the country is prosperous, that the administration is honest, we will have to go into action without any delay.

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, this bill has been around for quite some time, almost a year. It is not my intention to unduly delay the progress of it, but I think this situation clearly illustrates the haphazard manner in which the government is managing the affairs of this country. This bill is a bit of a joke because the money provided by it has already been spent. Therefore, it is redundant.

Perhaps we might consider some of the reasons the bill has been around so long. One reason is it has had very low priority on the government's legislative timetable. It has been nothing more than filler legislation. As I said before, the money has already been spent. Members on both sides in committee and in the House expressed reservation about this particular exercise.

The second reason the bill has been around so long is that, for the first time members of the House and the committee have scrutinized this particular piece of legislation. I am not sure whether it is the first time in history, but for the first time since I have been a member of this House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) appeared before the committee to explain the bill. That was very useful. It gave members a better understanding of the financial structure of these two Crown corporations.

Throughout the committee hearings, it was obvious that a number of the committee members were not satisfied with the financial arrangements that exist for these two major Crown corporations. I believe the Minister of Finance alluded to the fact he would like to see some changes made in the overall financial structure of these two corporations. This suggestion has also been made by previous Ministers of Transport. It is a position which meets with general agreement among the committee members who took part in the debate in the House as well as the extensive committee proceedings that were carried out.

A good number of the committee members were not satisfied with the answers they received from the officials of these two Crown corporations. They were not satisfied with the explanations nor with the fact that on many occasions the officials of these two major corporations refused to give information which committee members were attempting to elicit. The committee members were also concerned about the fact that these two Crown corporations were not utilizing their resources in the proper fashion and discharging the mandate given to them, namely to provide safe, efficient and effective transportation service by air and rail.

We found that these two corporations were engaged in many exotic, collateral ventures which really have no relationship to the matter of transportation services in this country. For this reason, the amendments were proposed at the report stage. We wanted to focus attention on the fact that these two major Crown corporations are not totally discharging the mandate given to them by the people of Canada.

Another major concern of the committee members is the feeling that parliament has no control over these corporations. This feeling came about because in many instances the officials refused to give the kind of information that was being solicited. It was the general feeling throughout the hearings that parliament has no effective control over these corporations.

With regard to Air Canada, the service and profit picture in relation to the number of benefits Air Canada enjoys in terms of the monopoly it has in this country certainly is not satisfactory to many committee members. Service standards, labour relations within the company, the fiasco at terminal two, sales promotion expenditure and the whole question of administration within that corporation are questions that were not answered satisfactorily when committee members cross-examined the officials. We were not satisfied with the fact that Air Canada seems to be very intent on branching out into allied ventures, such as Comstock. Here again their reluctance to give committee members certain information created an aura of suspicion.

If these corporations are going to be responsible and prepared to effectively discharge their mandate, they must be accountable to parliament and the people of Canada. Otherwise, it is nothing but contempt of parliament. There was precisely that feeling in Committee that the officials were somewhat contemptuous of the committee members.

I could say basically the same about CNR. We certainly gained the impression that the railways are not interested to the degree they should be in discharging their mandate of safe, efficient and effective railroad transportation to the country. Here again we witnessed the fact that they are involved in many allied ventures, ventures which really have no relationship to the business of transportation. It is our belief that CNR should epitomize an effective and futuristic railroad transportation system. If it cannot do that, how in the name of God are we going to create an effective national transportation system by nationalizing another railroad? The government certainly has an obligation to hold these Crown corporations to their responsibilities, to force them to discharge the mandate they were given. If these corporations fail to discharge that mandate they should be answerable to parliament.

This leads me to another point which involves the minister. We have the distinct feeling that parliament is exercising no effective control over these corporations. But the minister is suggesting that he, on behalf of the government, has no control. He says, in effect, that the CTC is an all-powerful, autonomous group which has handicapped him in his activities to a great extent. He also implies he has no control over the railways and goes on to suggest further that in these circumstances the only solution to the crisis in transportation, the only way to overhaul the system, is by nationalizing the Canadian Pacific.

There are a number of myths associated with that assumption. One of them seems obvious to me—it is that the people who favour nationalizing the CP are of the opinion that civil servants can do the job of running a railroad much more effectively than those who are employed by private enterprise. It has certainly not been proven to me that a nationalized concern can offer rates below those offered by a private corporation, and unless supporting facts are brought to the surface, what we have here is nothing more than a simplistic, socialistic solution to a complex major problem.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

The minister tells us that transportation is in a mess, and that the policy of the government has been wrong. Indeed, he suggests now that the government really has no policy. This is surprising, because only a year ago the same minister was stoutly defending his so-called policy. In a speech made in this House on June 19, as reported at page 4902 of Hansard, the hon. gentleman is reported as saying: "It must not be said we have not established a policy; we have." Then, he went on to outline the provisions of the National Transportation Act and the role played by the CTC. At the Western Economic Conference held in Calgary last July, he indicated that our transportation system as a whole was one of the best in the world, if not the best. Then, on March 7, as reported at page 268, the same minister stated:

> Something we do not have is a rail policy and I hope that sooner rather than later it will be possible to have such a policy.

That is quite an admission. It is really an admission of failure. It is an admission that the past policy of the government has been a failure, an admission that if indeed, there was a policy it has not been effectively administered.

Since this parliament began back in January, 1973, we have been greatly disappointed by the attitude of the minister and by the attitude of the government with respect to discharging their responsibilities in the area of transportation. The minister's answers in the House have been flippant, evasive, confusing. And now we find they are conflicting, because the interpretation he places upon the role of the CTC is diametrically opposed to the interpretation placed upon it by the president of the commission. Only yesterday, in committee, Mr. Benson indicated that the minister has all the power he needs to over-rule the CTC. In these circumstances, I maintain that parliament ought not to put up with this kind of nonsense any longer. The minister certainly has the necessary powers. Whether he wants to exercise them or not is a matter for him to decide, but if he does not wish to exercise them then perhaps Marchand had better march along.

With regard to the minister's power vis-à-vis the Canadian Transport Commission, it might be worthwhile placing on record in categorical terms the authority the minister possesses. Section 64 of the National Transportation Act states:

> The Governor in Council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the Commission, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order that the Governor-in-Council may make with respect thereto is binding upon the Commission and upon all parties.

That is pretty clear. The minister suggests that this power can only be used in certain circumstances. Yet he has never told us either in the House or in the committee just what those circumstances are.

He also indicates he has no power over the railroads. It is my opinion that the provisions of the Railway Act do give the minister sufficient authority to enable him to compel the railways to discharge their mandate. Subsection 100(1) of the Railway Act provides that whenever the minister is aware that a railway company which has received construction subsidies out of public funds cannot be safely and efficiently operated, he may apply to the Commission for an order that the railway and its equipment, or both, shall be put in a safe and efficient condition. The Commission is authorized to make such an order. The order may direct what repairs, improvements or additions are to be made to the railways, equipment, or both, and stipulate time limits for commencement and completion.

Section 262(1)(c) embodies the standards which an efficient railway must meet. This particular section requires that a railway company shall, according to its powers, without delay, and with due care and diligence, receive, carry and deliver all traffic offered for carriage upon the railway.

Subsections 235(1) and (2) require that a railway company shall, according to its powers, afford to all persons and companies all reasonable and proper facilities for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of traffic. These requirements are mandatory. If a railway does not meet them, it is derelict in its duty and, therefore, not efficient.

Section 3 of the National Transportation Act embodies a policy statement. It declares that an efficient transportation system is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation, and to maintain the economic wellbeing and growth of Canada. This section states in no uncertain terms that the efficiency of the national transportation system is to be judged by its efficiency in serving the private interests of users of the transportation system and in serving the general public interest, that is, both the private interests of the public and the public interest. The various private interests of the component parts of the transportation system are, obviously, not a factor upon which the efficiency of the system is to be judged.

We could go on. In his various statements made both inside and outside the House, the minister has clearly indicated that the railways are inefficient, that they are not interested in renovating their rolling stock, that the rails are deteriorating, what some of the bridges, even, are falling down. This is not a situation in which one can expect an effective passenger service to be provided. Certainly that, in itself, is an admission, a recognition of the fact that the railways are not functioning efficiently.

I could also refer to section 48 of the National Transportation Act, as well sections 50 and 51. These sections of policy, which is the National Transportation Act and the Railway Act, clearly and unequivocally define the powers of the minister. Evidently the minister has failed to exercise these powers in such a way as to compel the railways to discharge their mandate.

The minister also has the power of the purse, the power to grant money, such as the moneys provided by this particular bill. I suggest that funds could be earmarked for a specific purpose, such as to upgrade the road bed, to upgrade the availability of rolling stock, or to upgrade various pieces of equipment required.

Let me simply say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion he has failed to discharge his responsibilities as Minister of Transport. He has failed to discharge his responsibilities to the people of Canada and to this parliament. I suggest that, rather than hide behind the CTC and the National Transportation Act, he get on with the job of working with the CTC and the railways so that this country can start moving again.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the CNR financing bill gives the House an opportunity to analyse the way the CNR is spending money. The way the CNR spends money is very important to the people of my riding. In my riding there is a huge railway centre in the city of Melville. I also represent a riding that produces a lot of grain and livestock, as well as potash. Therefore, the movement of these commodities is a very important part of our economy.

This afternoon I want to deal particularly with one or two matters of real concern to the people who work on the railway in my riding. I refer to rail safety, a matter the members of this House should really be concerned about, as well as the condition of the tracks that the men have to work on and the branch lines across the prairies.

Over the weekend an extremely unfortunate incident occurred in my riding. A young man who had just started work on the railways was killed when working on a train. He was a member of a crew the CNR were experimenting with, called a survey crew, in an effort to cut down on the number of men from four to three. As a result of this, and due to the track conditions at the time, this young man was the unfortunate victim in a dreadful accident, one that should be investigated by the minister, the CNR and the CTC. The train in question was backing in to hook up to some grain cars when it jumped the rails and caught this man between a railway car and a bin that held some fertilizer.

This incident has caused great concern among railroaders in my riding, as it will among those right across the country. They are concerned about the CNR's handling of matters such as safety, as well as the condition of rail tracks across this country. In my riding on Sunday I met some union officials employed by the CNR who told me that in the previous 30 hour period there were four derailments in the area serviced by the men working out of Melville, largely caused by the condition of the tracks.

I suggest that in examining the financing of the CNR, we should look at some of the problems experienced by the workers and at the dangers to which they are subjected. We all know winter conditions in the prairies, the large amount of snowfall this year, and we all know the condition of the tracks. At the same time, the CNR picks this period to conduct an experimental survey to cut down on the number of men in a crew. The railroaders in Melville and all across western Canada, I understand, are very concerned by this kind of action on the part of CNR officials and management.

I want to take this opportunity to ask the minister and CNR officials to investigate this accident to which I have referred. A person has died because of what appears to me to be negligence, to be a lack of concern about the safety of men and the conditions under which they have to work. The morale of CNR workers is hitting, in my opinion, a level that is probably lower than it has been for many a year. This is due to some of the matters I have already mentioned. When you combine this with the fact that we are now witnessing more difficulty in moving grain than we have ever had in this country, then you wonder why the CNR does not examine its methods and policies from one end to the other.

I can very well understand and sympathize with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) when he says that transportation is in a real mess. This real mess includes the running of the CNR, or at least many aspects of the CNR's affairs across this country. The railway men in my constituency tell me that many safety regulations are overlooked by CNR officials. They are told to do things that are clearly against the safety regulations, and they feel that this jeopardizes their lives, their health and physical safety. I think it is about time we examined some of the matters that affect the day to day lives of people working on the railways, something of great importance to them. And not only to them, Mr. Speaker; it is important to the country to keep the economy moving, to keep commodities like grain, potash, lumber, iron ore and so on moving to our factories and markets.

Another matter of deep concern to the people of my riding is the low priority placed by the CNR on maintaining their trackage, not their main line tracks but their branch line tracks in particular, tracks that serve the small towns, villages and hamlets of Saskatchewan along which grain and other commodities are transported. The CNR seems to be forgetting about these tracks. It also seems to be forgetting about what I think is the mandate of the CNR, which is to serve the public of this country regardless where they live, be it in a city like Toronto or a small village, town or hamlet in rural Saskatchewan. The mandate of the CNR is to serve all people equally efficiently; its mandate is not necessarily to serve only those industries or areas of Canada from which they derive a profit. This is a facet on which I wish to put heavy stress.

I have already referred to movement of grain. At the present time we are several thousand boxcars behind meeting our export commitments, particularly on the west coast. These commitments have at stake, I suppose, the reputation of Canada as a grain exporting nation. Also at stake are the incomes of many farmers in the prairies. We are not behind in our deliveries simply because of heavy snowfall; other things enter into the picture, such as the morale of the men, the conditions under which they work, the conditions of the tracks, and the low priority that both CNR and CPR place on the movement of grain across this country. This is a situation that must be changed, and changed very quickly.

One of the other concerns I have spoken about on behalf of the ordinary citizen of my riding is the intention of the railways in this country to abandon many of their branch lines. There may be some lines that could be abandoned, but I think the railway companies are trying to abandon far too many of them, lines that serve a lot of people in rural communities which should not be abandoned. If these lines are abandoned it will mean a real loss both in economics and services to the farmers, small towns and the people living in those areas, so I think the railways should take a serious look at their intention to abandon rail branch lines in this country.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Another concern is the phasing out of station agencies. Many have been phased out in the last few years and many more will be phased out in 1974 and 1975. I will give you one ludicrous example, in my opinion, of a station agency that is to be phased out in my riding. I refer to the town of Ituna, a town of perhaps 1,500 to 1,700 people, which is a good size in terms of the people it serves. I have in mind not only the town itself but the communities surrounding that town which will be affected if the station agency is removed, not only this year, but next year and the year after. This is not a small town of 200, 300 or 400 people, but a place of 1,500 to 1,700 people which serves perhaps an additional 700 people beyond those who live in the town. I see no reason for phasing out a station agency in a place of that size. It is on the main line of the CNR which has some passenger service and over which a lot of goods are transported, so there is no reason for phasing out an agency in a town on a line such as that. This action will not save the CNR much money, but it will create much hardship for the community and the people who live around that community of Ituna. This is but one example of many that we on the prairies and, indeed others in other parts of Canada, could give the CNR, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Those are some of the things that concern my constituents in their day-to-day lives as they consider the operations of the CNR and CPR across the country. I think the Minister of Transport was right when he said that transportation is in a real mess. I think the CNR, in terms of the way it is managed and handled across this country, is also in a real mess. We need some new management and controls on the Canadian National in this country as well as on the CPR.

In conclusion, I would say that in this country we indeed need a new transportation policy that removes freight inequities, which will nationalize the CPR and integrate it with the CNR into one transportation system with new management. Then perhaps we would have a system which could efficiently serve the people of this country regardless of where they live. We need a new transportation system that would be integrated and have service as its motto rather than the making of profit or moving into areas that are more easily handled. It seems to me that the people who work for the CNR usually follow the lead of the CPR. If the CPR is not doing something then the CNR will use that as an excuse, or if the CPR is moving in a new direction the CNR again follows that lead. That seems to have been the pattern that has developed over the last few years. I suggest an amalgamation of the two railway companies, putting them both under public ownership and control, running them efficiently on behalf of the people of this country whether they live in Toronto or in a small town in my riding on the prairies.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, a very basic philosophical difference between my position and that of the last speaker. I see very little justification, on the basis of past performance, for the nationalization of any additional industry in any facet of our society by this or any other government or by any particular Crown corporation that may presently exist.

Perhaps it is not so much from the point of view of opposition to the financing of the CNR and the Air Canada structure that this bill should be discussed in this House, but rather from the point of view that the behaviour of those in charge of this socialized structure is such that members have been denied the opportunity to express opinions, let alone be part of the decision making process. We have been denied the right to express an opinion prior to the time a deal has become a fait accompli and then presented as part of the financing bill for the CNR and Air Canada.

Parliament is thus denied its proper right, and the public at large their right to know what is becoming of federal money, and how it is being spent. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) outlined this in great detail. I think his remarks should be considered almost classic and referred to frequently by members of this House who have any concern whatsoever for the expenditure of our public moneys and the knowledge that the public is entitled to prior to such expenditure. This has been denied to the House.

The committee which has met in respect of this bill is another mockery of the opportunity for a member elected by the public to participate in the economic structure of this country. When one has an hour and a half or perhaps two hours twice a week over a three or four week period to discuss an item of the significance of this one, certainly that is virtually no opportunity at all to get an intelligent idea as to how one should express himself on behalf of his constituency in particular, and Canada in general. Yet, this is just another example of how the committee procedure of this House conceals from the public the knowledge of their own affairs.

The transportation system, under the public ownership structure, has been subjected to pressures of a political nature. This has made it virtually impossible for the system to either serve the Canadian people or make a profit on their behalf. It has been compelled, perhaps at some expense, to build the hotels which have been criticized. It has been compelled by the public and political pressures to render services which were not economic. The House is further compelled, as a result of these political pressures, to annually underwrite the losses which the public ownership vehicle has accrued over the years. At no time has there been any directive, publicly noted, from the government saying to this publicly owned structure: It is your responsibility to both serve and to make a profit; it is your responsibility to at least render service to Canada at a minimal cost and prove that you have exercised proper efficiency in your managerial practices on behalf of the Canadian public. It has been some time since there has been any indication that the government has directed the transportation system of this country to give consideration to the necessary national requirements in respect of development, the basic reason for the initial construction of our present transportation system. The challenge of that responsibility has not been met.

At a recent transport committee meeting which did not deal with this particular bill we found ourselves almost completely frustrated in an effort to obtain information in respect of the operation of the railroads, in respect of the function played by the Canadian Transport Commission, and in respect of the authority that can and should be exercised by the minister. We found we were in a virtually helpless position with ineffective legislation and less effective administration, and the combination of the two spells out the death knell of any long-term transportation policy in Canada's best interests.

We find that in this bill continuing evidence to support our belief that there is proliferation of the infringement upon the private world by public ownership. There seems to be no justification given by the Department of Transport for authorizing the railway to invest in de Havilland or in any other industry as it may desire or for authorizing Air Canada to invest in the aerospace industry without an examination of the long-term profitability or the long-term advantage to the Canadian population by virtue of this participation. These are the things which give me great cause for concern as this bill is about to become law by virtue of the vote that will be taken. There is no way this House can deny the funds which have been spent. They must be granted, but it is with great regret I say this when I see the infringement of the parliamentary right of members of this House to participate in the structure of the nationally owned transportation system we have.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) does not seem to have any grave concern about the development of the port structure of this country. Whether you are from Vancouver or from Saint John, whether you are in a fishing port or on the St. Lawrence seaway, it seems that Port development is allowed to coast. Its relationship to national development is not given proper consideration. We might consider, for instance, the opportunity we have to develop the port of Saint John and the opportunity Canada has to develop with it. With its railroad connections, the port of Saint John could be developed as a container and other type of port for the benefit of the whole Canadian economy. This has not been considered by the Minister of Transport. Apparently no money is to be made available for a major development in this area. Are we to be served on the Atlantic coast by another domain merely because our government fails to recognize the value of this port to Canada and to the whole east coast of North America.

This House and the Department of Transport will dilly-dally until we learn that somewhere along the coast someone chose to build an island to create a port to service the east coast of the North American continent. With a little initiative on the part of this government such development could be created at the port of Saint John for the benefit of all Canada. It would provide service to all the people of the east coast of this continent. This plan, however, is not forthcoming. The view of the government today is land locked. The government looks inward at development in the main metropolitan areas of Canada and cannot see the relative value of the periphery of this country as it plans its policies in respect of transportation or anything else.

I am very much concerned about the basic operation, for instance, of Air Canada. At one of the meetings of the transportation committee we heard a great song and dance about the capability of Air Canada to handle air freight and its intention to develop this business. We heard how it had pioneered in this business and had sought it from one coast to the other in Canada to serve the world. The lobster industry of the province of New Brunswick took up the challenge. It expanded its market opportunities. It sent its salesmen throughout the world. It developed markets. The result was a very major increase in the income, particularly of the lobster fishermen on the Atlantic seaboard. Now, we find there is no possibility of any guaranteed space in the Air Canada freight structure. We find that the lobster industry has become so thoroughly disgruntled with the service rendered by Air Canada that it is seriously considering moving its base of operations to the Boston area so that it may obtain service from foreign carriers for Atlantic provinces' products because this service cannot be obtained otherwise.

I wish the Minister of Transport were here. He has been noticably absent from this House during the entire debate to the detriment of transportation and his portfolio. Bear in mind that this market to which I referred was developed because Air Canada, in the promotion of air freight, offered an opportunity to an industry on the Atlantic coast which has virtually been withdrawn because the service offered cannot be maintained. Remember the lobster industry shaped itself for the benefit of Air Canada's freight operations. We are asked to pass this bill while an engineering fiasco is taking place in the harbour of Saint John. I shall not go into this in great detail. However, it is virtually a fiasco. The government of Canada failed to undertake its responsibility in respect of harbour development at Saint John, but insisted upon laying on the engineering structure under which the province of New Brunswick would pay the bills. Perhaps the Minister of Transport should make an all-inclusive statement to this House in respect of the fiasco which has developed.

We are being asked to pay the bill while in my constituency a branch line of one of the railways is being considered for closure. This branch line happens to serve an area in which a new fish plant has been built, where a paper mill is being expanded and where a confectionery industry needs the transportation facilities. I think there is some discussion under way about the closing of this branch line. Apparently a branch line closure can take place at the whim of the railway. The Canadian Transportation Commission has made no comment in this regard. There is merely a rumour that this is to take place, but no suggestion has been made that hearings will be held concerning the needs of the area served and the transportation situation generally there. Neither the commission nor the minister appear to have authority. So, we pour hundreds of million of dollars into a system which the people of the country own but over which the public has no control.

Yes, the money must be voted, but we should not allow this organization to run helter-skelter through our dollars while it continues to do what it sees fit without any control being exercised over it by the House of Commons or the people of Canada. We see the socialistic tendencies and the bureaucratic attitudes which exist. We have the aerospace industry. There is plenty of money for that, although it could very well come from the private enterprise sector. The same situation exists in respect of the business of providing shelter. However, when services are needed for national development, we are denied the moneys required for this by this government and the province of New Brunswick loses faith in the loyalty of the government to its people and the members from this area.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on Bill C-5, the CNR financing bill. Although I spoke during second reading, I feel there are a few additional comments I should make so far as a transportation policy for Canada is concerned. We are presented with a bill like this every year, and members have an opportunity to discuss the transportation problems which effect not only their own ridings but various other parts of the country. Yet during the period that I have been a member of this House I have not seen too much progress made in updating and upgrading our national transportation system. In fact, the minister expressed this rather ably not too long ago when he said transportation policy in general was in a mess.

There are a few points I would like to make. I believe other hon. members have raised them, but I think we should again request that action be taken along certain lines. One of the points repeatedly brought to my attention by railway workers in my area concerns the need for better railway line maintenance. The lack of proper maintenance has led to a number of derailments, not only in Kootenay West but in other areas across Canada. There is growing concern on the part of railway workers that the situation in becoming worse.

Just the other day hon. members received copies of a very interesting brief submitted by the Canadian Railway Labour Association, stressing the need for something to be done with respect to safety on our railway systems. It is a matter that has appeared in numerous reports. The railway workers are requesting that something be done to ensure that we examine the safety factor in a much more critical way than we have in the past.

I am convinced that the Canadian Transport Commission should be doing a lot more to ensure that safety measures are carried out, particularly measures respecting maintenance. I wish to read several paragraphs from the railway workers' brief because they outline the problem very clearly.

> There is a growing concern about the number of derailments and other accidents which occur on railways. One aspect of this problem is the fact that railways are not required by law to make public the reports of its officers concerning the cause of accidents. Section 225 of the Railway Act requires that railway companies and certain of their employees report to the Canadian Transport Commission in respect of certain kinds of accidents and their causes.
> The law also provides that the Commission may, by regulation, declare the manner and form in which such information will be given, the class of accident to which the law applies and that information given in compliance with the law may be declared privileged.
> The Commission (Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada) gave effect to this law by promulgating General Order 0-1. In addition to setting forth the details about the making of reports the Order contains Section (6) which reads as follows:
> Every accident report, or information respecting the same, furnished the Board by any railway company pursuant to the provisions of the Railway Act and of this Order and the report of any person appointed by the Board to inquire into and report upon any accident or casualty occurring on any such railway is declared to be privileged and shall only be made public or given out by Order of the Board.

The Canadian Railway Labour Association takes exception to section 225 and General Order 0-1 on the grounds that the law and regulations effectively prevent our Association from determining the reported cause of certain railway accidents and efforts to assure that adequate steps are taken to prevent a recurrence . . .

We do suggest, however, that the Minister of Transport should take an active interest in the problem to ensure that changes are made which will meet the public need for information concerning the cause of railway accidents while protecting the legitimate interests of the railways.

The point being made is that the railway unions have difficulty in obtaining reports on the causes of accidents. As a result they are not in a position to effectively deal with the railway companies, or the government, by having certain methods of operation improved. This is a very serious matter. People working on the railways whose lives are endangered are entitled to this information. In this way the unions can seek to protect their members. I know that in some cases this may be privileged information, and that some of it may have to be held back, but basically there is nothing wrong with the general public, and in particular the men who man the trains, receiving this information and taking up with management the question of changes that should be made to ensure that more accidents do not take place.

Just the other day before boarding the plane to return to my riding I received a telephone call from one of the railway unions at Nelson in connection with an accident. Several cars had gone off the rail line. I was told there was not too much traffic on this particular line, and that the railway company was not interested in having the repair work carried out for a couple of weeks. At the top end of that line, Mr. Speaker, there is a mill which ships lumber and chips to market by rail. As a result, the jobs of a number of workers were at stake. Such an attitude on the part of big railway companies is not good. The Transport Commission should check on problems like that to make sure the railway companies no longer get away with the things that they have been able to pull over the past few years. I hope that over the next few months the minister, the government, and the CTC will take action with respect to safety in the maintenance of tracks.

There is another point that I have been pressing for a number of years, and on which I feel we should have an amendment to the Railway Act. It deals with the transportation of natural resources from Canada. I raise this so that when general transportation policies come up for discussion, these things will be brought to the attention of the minister and the government in the hope that some changes can be made.

A number of years ago in British Columbia, a provincial railway was granted a charter by a previous provincial government. It was called the Kootenay and Elk Railway and it was a phony, if you want to put it that way, because it had no rolling stock of its own, no engine, caboose or cars. It was incorporated for one reason only, to take the coal from the east Kootenay region of British Columbia down to the American border where it hooked up with an American railway line for connection with the Pacific coast. Fortunately, the present NDP government in British Columbia stopped this railway by a simple process. While it had a charter and could have built line, it was not allowed to go through Crown lands.

I have spoken many times in an effort to have the government take action to stop the building of this Kootenay and Elk line from the coal fields to the American border because of the loss of 600 or 700 jobs. The same thing could happen in any part of Canada, for instance on the prairies, where they could haul wheat to one of the U.S. rail lines to be transported to the Pacific coast. They could take potash or any other raw material. It is my position that when we have national rail lines in Canada our goods, wherever possible, should be hauled on them. This should be the objective of our national transportation policy. The act needs to be amended to make certain that the same situation does not take place in some other part of Canada as that which was attempted with the Kootenay and Elk Railway. I am going to suggest to the minister that he look into the possibility of amending the legislation to ensure that we never get into this bind again.

I have just one further point to make before I sit down, Mr. Speaker. When we talk about national transportation, we mean not only rail transportation but air and every other type of transportation. It seems to me that over the past years very little has been done by our national rail lines in the area of passenger transportation and I do not think they receive much encouragement from the Department of Transport or the Canadian Transport Commission. In my area, the Kettle Valley line runs through the southern part of British Columbia to the coast. Some sections have practically been abandoned and passenger traffic is non-existent. This has happened all over the country, of course.

When we look around at other nations like Japan and some countries in Europe, we find that the transportation systems are being upgraded and great numbers of people are using the trains. A similar policy has to be adopted in our own country. We are facing an energy shortage and there is no doubt that a great deal can be done and could be done if the two large railway companies were prodded by a government that was really interested in improving passenger service. To subsidize an inefficient line whose trains travel a few miles per hour is a sure way of killing passenger traffic in Canada. In many instances this is deliberate and the railways make it so awkward to get a meal or a berth on their trains, and journeys take so long, that people have stopped using them. We should insist that facilities be upgraded.

I have just one more point in closing, Mr. Speaker. We have heard a great deal about raw materials coming to southern Canada from the north and there has been talk of rail systems and of studies being made. I would suggest again that the appropriate committee of this House thoroughly check the possibility of rail connections with the north. We can bring oil, gas and minerals from the north with an efficient rail system and goods could be transported to the north much more cheaply by air.

I urge that this House and the appropriate department conduct an investigation along these lines very soon. I am not going to say anything more except that I hope we are going to see some action regarding the safety and upgrading of our railway lines. I should like to see a start made this year.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it appears that I may be the last or the next to last speaker in this debate on third reading of the CNR financing bill. I wanted to make a few remarks about the railway's operations and the kind of financing that is being done. It is my opinion that the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and his colleagues early in this debate were designed to hinder if not destroy a Crown corporation. They complain about Air Canada buying 30 per cent of Wardair, but I doubt if the same people would have objected if Canadian Pacific had been buying instead of Air Canada.

The hon. member for Vegreville complained about the CNR and Air Canada not fulfilling their mandate and meeting the transportation requirements of Canadians. I agree with him. I think he is perfectly right and that both of our national railways have failed, since World War II, to keep up with the growing transportation needs of the country. The growth in the movement of goods and people has not been met by the railway systems, private or public. I should like to say more about that in a few moments, and I hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will be back in his seat by then because I should like to have his comments.

The hon. member for Vegreville says that the CNR and Air Canada are not fulfilling their mandate, and I agree with him, but I want to say that the reason for this is perfectly understandable and logical. I would have thought that he would have realized that, with the kind of transportation policies we have had under successive national governments and the kind of transportation act that we have, Canadian National Railways and Air Canada do not operate any differently from Canadian Pacific Railway and CPAir. All operate within the same framework and on the same ground rules, that is on the basis of competition and profitability. There is little difference between their methods of operation. This makes me sad, because the CNR is not operating as a publicly owned and controlled corporation should operate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let's denationalize it.

Mr. Benjamin: Unless the National Transportation Act is changed, and unless the policies of government change, you will not see much difference between the operations of the CNR and Air Canada on the one hand, and the privately owned CPR and CPAir on the other. These two systems are supposed to be competitive. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has agreed that competition in this field does not work in Canada. We have been saying that for years. My party has said it since 1933. So long as the railways merely want to make profits, they cannot possibly meet the transportation needs of Canadians.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You haven't said anything new since 1933.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member for Vegreville believes that the idea of nationalizing the CPR is simplistic and socialistic. I repeat: transportation is an essential public service. The field is a natural monopoly, and therefore must be classed as a public utility. A transport system operates best in the public interest when it is publicly owned and controlled. Another hon. member on my right complained earlier about parliament and the government not having control over our publicly-owned railway and air carrier. Indirectly, he was trying to say what I am trying to say. A publicly-owned and operated transport system must be under public control. This has been the experience of other governments of the world, conservative, liberal, communist, socialist or what have you. Rail and air transport systems in most countries, regardless of political stripe, are publicly-owned, operated and controlled.

I want to say a word about some moves made by our sort of supernumerary minister of transport, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. He announced a program for the emergency movement of grain. My goodness, the CPR was even to run four more trains in an attempt to meet targets. I do not know if the minister in charge of the Wheat Board consulted the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) or the Canadian Transport Commission before giving his blessing to something both railways have been doing since Christmas, namely, abandoning branch lines in western Canada which were blocked with snow. I am not aware of any permission given by the Canadian Transport Commission for the railways to abandon such lines. Some branch lines have not had trains on them for weeks and weeks, some not even since the new year. There are thousands of country elevators on those branch lines which are full of grain. What did the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board do? He gave his blessing to the railways, allowed them to abandon those branch lines, and told farmers that they are to undertake longer hauls, which means that they will need to go to alternate delivery points or further, to main line shipping points.

The problem with that kind of plan is that starting this week or next week, municipal and provincial officials will place bans on the use of our municipal roads and highways for certain purposes, so farmers will not be able to haul grain to the nearest delivery point, let alone to the alternate delivery point. Again, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is doing things backwards. The Minister of Transport, or some CTC official, or even railway officials, should point out to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board what is likely to happen. The railroads should be instructed to make extra efforts to clear these branch lines of snow and empty the elevators of grain, because if this does not happen the farmers will be in trouble. They will not be able to haul away their grain. I hope that my good friends on the other side of the House will point out these facts to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and put a stop to the nonsensical program he initiated a few days ago.

As the Minister of Finance is present, I want to talk about the subject matter of the bill. This is last year's CNR financing bill. No doubt another financing bill to cover this year will be brought in shortly when the government House Leader needs a bill to fill in time. These financing bills are pretty well identical, although the money amounts may vary. There is little evidence to show that money is to be spent on different priorities. The Minister of Finance may recall that I asked him in the House a number of weeks ago if consideration was being given to the problem of handling the Canadian National debt, and whether consideration was being given to its refinancing. Paraphrasing his answer, he said that this matter was being looked at again. I should appreciate it if he could elaborate on that answer today.

Since the Second World War both our national railways have not placed enough emphasis on spending money on the improvement of roadbed, track, the acquisition of rolling stock, and on locomotives, with the result that events have caught up with them. It will take several hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditures to update and improve to a good standard thousands of miles of roadbed and track and to acquire thousands of pieces of rolling stock, by which I mean not just boxcars, but also refrigerator cars, livestock cars and so on. In addition, they must buy enough locomotives to meet demand at all times of year. In committee, I asked the former president of Canadian National, Mr. MacMillan, just before he took his well-earned retirement, if he would ask the board of directors and management of CNR to look again at priorities and examine again projected needs for rolling stock and locomotive power for the years ahead. Obviously, the railway has allowed its stock of rolling stock and locomotives to fall below what it ought to be, and this fact has caught up with it.

Before bringing in the CNR financing bill for 1974-75, I wonder if the Minister of Finance would meet with the Minister of Transport as well as the managements and boards of Canadian National and Air Canada, and discuss all these things. Let him see if he can get from the railway a commitment to put a higher priority on doing those things I have mentioned, as our transport facilities need updating and enlarging. Even though this may involve an expenditure of another couple of hundred million dollars in next year's financing bill for improving track, buying new rolling stock and locomotives and improving yards in Vancouver and Thunder Bay and for improving track at Churchill and Prince Rupert, it will be well worth it. At least we shall do something to put right the errors which the railways have committed during the last 20 years. I hope the minister agrees that my request is reasonable. Surely, the railroad should place a higher priority on meeting its operating requirements than on the acquisition of real estate or other esoteric projects.

If this is not done, we will still be in the same mess this year, next year and in years thereafter, and the Minister of Transport, poor man whoever he may be, will still get up and talk about the confusion and inadequacy of our transport policy and our National Transportation Act. If the minister asks the managements and boards of CNR and Air Canada to place higher priority on the purchase of new equipment which will improve service, I think, when this sort of bill is debated next time round, he will receive a much more sympathetic hearing from all sides of the House and the bill will be given speedier passage.

I am sure the minister is probably tired, as are many other members, of hearing the same complaints every year. The CNR financing bill would be an excellent mechanism to begin to redirect the priorities of the railway and Air Canada. It may then lessen some of the complaints, so the next financing bill would get more support and an enthusiastic welcome from members, particularly those on this side of the House. I know the minister would miss hearing the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and myself making railway speeches every year. That will only come about if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brings in a much better and, if necessary, larger financing bill in the next few weeks.

In closing, I want to repeat my main point. We cannot meet Canada's transportation needs until our major modes of transportation, rail and air, are returned to public democratic ownership and control. I emphasize the word "control" for the benefit of the hon. member for Vegreville. They should be operated as any public utility is operated. We must forget about the nineteenth century railroad baron-profit way of running a railroad.

It is illogical to think you can properly operate a transportation system with competition and profit as the objectives. It is an essential public service. It is just as illogical as attempting to operate two competing sewer and water systems running under a main street or two competing highways. If one were to follow the argument of the hon. members to my right to a logical conclusion, we would return to the 1830's and have competing toll roads, owned and operated by private enterprise. If anyone suggested that, they would be laughed out of town. They would certainly be laughed out of this House.

The time has come to integrate our rail and air transportation system with other modes of transportation, including bus and water transportation. When we do that, we will be on the road to a transportation system suitable for a country as large as ours, with a northern climate and thinly scattered population. We will be able to do something about equalized or subsidized or a combination of both, passenger fares and freight rates. We will be able to put an end to discrimination against some people because of where they happen to be located in this country. We might be able to arrange it so that someone can fly from Toronto to Inuvik for the same price as someone flying from Toronto to Winnipeg. It might be possible to purchase a quart of milk in Yellowknife at the same price as in Regina. Over half the price of milk in the north is the cost of transportation.

In this way low and middle income families in the north will be able to purchase the quantity of an essential food which they should be purchasing. With a system of equalized and subsidized rates for essential food and other commodities, people all over the country will be treated much more fairly and equitably. This would do as much for national unity as anything else which members on the government side talk about repeatedly. This has continually been a sore point among people in Atlantic, western and northern Canada.

I am not suggesting that what we in the New Democratic Party propose would be 100 per cent right, but I am suggesting it is the only alternative left. We can no longer tinker with a little bit of public enterprise here, private enterprise there and a combination of both somewhere else. Surely, we have learned our lesson by now. What we have is not working as it should be. The only alternative is a publicly-owned, operated and controlled public utility for our rail and transportation system in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly defer to the hon. member for Crowfoot. I am not certain whether he wants to speak first. If he does and with Your Honour's permission, I will gladly let him go first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): If the House agrees, the Chair is willing to recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, that is on the understanding that the hon. member for Central Nova will still have an opportunity to speak on third reading.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I do not think that is the understanding of Mr. Speaker. Am I correct that in rising now with the generous offer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In that case, it would be better for the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Central Nova.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I thought you would need a little more time to recuperate after that election.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that, in recognition of the serious problem that has now beset my province, I am wearing my black suit.

Mr. Foster: It is a serious problem for the Tories.

Mr. MacKay: It is a serious problem for the province. In any event, I apologize to Your Honour for the momentary confusion about me deferring or not deferring to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Because of the tangled history of this particular piece of legislation, it was to be expected this confusion would arise, even at this point in time.

Bill C-5 has been an interesting focal point for many months for opposition members to show how inept and generally incompetent this government has been in such a routine matter as financing our two main Crown corporations. I do not intend, as some members opposite have suggested, to filibuster at this point, but I wish to make a few remarks that may be relevant. If nothing else, the proceedings to this point in time have shown the curious reluctance of not only the people who make the policies for our Crown corporations, but the management of Air Canada and CNR to be frank and honest with members of parliament from all parties who are attempting to find out their policy guidelines and what their key officials are doing.

Some members feel it is a pity that our terms of reference did not include the power to have officials of CPR appear before our committee. I certainly agree with that contention. I notice, for example, that the earnings of CP have shown a considerable increase in the past year. May I quote from a newspaper article to illustrate this point:

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The company said record earnings for Canadian Pacific Investments, substantial increase in income from the Soo Line Railroad and marginal raises in CP Telecommunications income were "more than enough to offset the lower earnings of rail, highway transport and containership operations, attributable, in varying degrees, to the effects of the strike of Associated Non-Operating Railway Unions".

We on this side have suggested it would be beneficial if CNR would get back into its primary role of moving goods and people cheaply and efficiently, and forget about some of their more esoteric roles like building hotels, getting into the aerospace business and getting their finances mixed up with Air Canada. I think it is only fair to suggest it would be a good thing if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) would have a serious look at encouraging or directing CP to divest itself or well, to some extent at least, of those associated enterprises which might distract it from its primary role of moving goods and people efficiently. It seems to me the reluctance to disclose precisely what the railways and Air Canada are doing is carried over into other areas beside the area of management responsibility.

For example, last November a study was released indicating that rail costs in connection with moving Alberta coal into Ontario markets were much less than those quoted by Canada's two major railroads. The Ontario minister of transport and communications told the legislature the study indicated that computed unit train costs—I do not know whether this is the correct way of putting it—were at least 35 per cent lower than the rates quoted by CN and CP rail. Surprised by this information, the minister said that Alberta coal was substantially more competitive in the Ontario market than had been previously believed. He went on to say that if CN and CP did not disclose unit train costs he would press the Minister of Transport to conduct an inquiry. To my knowledge, though, the information in question has not yet been disclosed. It is still being awaited by those government officials and by the Canadian public. This is symptomatic of the lack of control exercised by the Minister of Transport over the railway companies and other transport agencies.

Since this bill was introduced the minister has stated very frankly that he does not possess either the authority or the overall policies which would enable him to do his job properly. If the minister really believes he lacks authority, a view which is apparently not shared by the President of the CTC, let the government bring forward amendments to the legislation, and do so quickly. I see no reason why the support of most members of the House should not be expected.

As to the financial aspect of Bill C-5, I should like to stress the apparent lack of leadership forthcoming from the government over the last several years. When he appeared before the committee, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) addressed himself to some extent to the question whether it would be advisable to separate the financing of Air Canada from the financing of the CNR. He stated that while he himself was not close to this particular issue he could tell the committee that it had not come before cabinet in any concrete form. He added "I could not tell you what the policy dispute is. All I am saying to you is that if there were a reasonable proposition to split the capital structure, I think it would be a good idea." Well, that seems to be a straightforward statement by the minister and one with which I happen to agree.

The President of the CNR takes an opposite view, and while he is entitled to do so the question does arise: Who is running the financing of the CN and Air Canada? Is it the government of Canada, as I think most Canadians would like to believe, or is it being run at the whim of the executive officials concerned? Mr. MacMillan made an interesting comment when he was asked to define the primary role of the CN. The discussion had centred on whether the CN was paying sufficient attention to moving people and to moving commodities. He stated in the course of his most recent appearance before the Committee on Transport and Communications:

> I think it would be quite wrong for us to restrict ourselves to rail movement because in that way the public is not properly served. The future, I think,.will go even further into the intermodal methodology of handling business.

"Intermodal methodology"; that is a very interesting term and we would like to know exactly what it means. Unfortunately, so far, we have not been able to find out either from the President of CN or from the President of Air Canada what they consider their basic guidelines to be. Mr. Pratte is on record as saying on several occasions that he is not certain what the primary role of Air Canada should be and it appears that Mr. MacMillan is also confused to some extent. Perhaps not, but that is the way it appeared to me, as a member of the committee.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) stated quite clearly in his speech today that he felt the Minister of Transport does have sufficient authority to direct the affairs of the nation's carriers to the extent he feels they should be directed. In support of his argument, my hon. friend quoted from the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act and gave examples of what could be done. For some reason, the minister has been reluctant to crack the whip and assert the authority he possesses by virtue of existing legislation.

I conclude by saying that, if in fact the minister honestly feels he needs more authority in order to expedite a solution of Canada's transportation problems he should, without delay, bring forward the necessary amendments to the National Transportation Act. It is not as though this were a new situation. It is not as though the government has not had time in which to act. It is not as though this were not a matter of great importance to Canada. As I mentioned earlier, the lack of a transportation policy at federal level has tremendous implications for the future of our regional development programs, particularly in eastern Canada, since in the absence of an efficient and comprehensive transportation policy any meaningful efforts to reduce regional disparity are doomed to encounter needless complication and expense.

Once more, I ask the minister and his cabinet colleagues to remedy the situation which they themselves have caused, and to bring forward quickly any legislative changes which they feel would help to bring Canada back into the forefront as far as transportation generally, is concerned. We do not stack up too badly when it comes to certain aspects of moving commodities but judging from the complaints which come across my desk, as far as moving particular commodities is concerned, it appears we are getting into as bad a situation with regard to moving timber, potash, wheat and apples as we have been in for years when it comes to transporting people. This situation must change before it deteriorates any further, because if the present rate of decline is allowed to continue the effect on our economic development will be very serious.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the other night when the amendments to Bill C-5 were up for discussion I dealt mainly with the question of rail transportation. On third reading I should like to deal briefly with some of my thoughts about the lack of an air policy in this country of ours.

I listened to my socialist friends to my left speak of nationalization, and this reminded me of our study of this particular bill in committee last year when the question of the government, through Air Canada, acquiring Wardair was being discussed. I tend to think a fabulous price was being asked for a 30 per cent ownership in Wardair. Wardair did not have any planes of its own. It ended up owning one DC-9 and an old Bristol freighter, leasing the remainder of its aircraft. But what the committee study boiled down to in regard to Air Canada buying Wardair was: What did Air Canada really want from Wardair? The answer given by the president of Air Canada to the committee was: "Charter flight know-how".

Never before have I seen a Crown corporation admitting it did not have all the answers and was prepared to go to private industry to buy know-how. To me this is a prime example of why nationalization and socialism will eventually fail. It will fail because it will fail to stimulate and germinate any new thoughts. Approaches become narrower and narrower. To me this was a great admission that nationalization and socialism is not the answer, no matter whether it be in regard to air operations, rail operations, industry or what have you. Eventually, it will have to be admitted that socialism stifles initiative.

One might ask, how has initiative been stifled in Air Canada? Some time ago I spoke in this House about Air Canada owning Viscounts and flying them for 22 years when no other airline could afford to fly them. They were nice, safe little planes. I felt secure when I flew in them. But their fuel costs were astonishing. Today a 747 can fly just as cheaply as a Viscount, yet Air Canada flew them for 22 years. I suggest that is narrow thinking on the part of a Crown corporation. They should have gone out and bought know-how far sooner than they did when they thought of purchasing Wardair.

What else is wrong with our air policy? The other evening I pointed out that the National Transportation Act of 1967 was deficient, and I said so at that time. I roundly debated it with the then Minister of Transport, Mr. Pickersgill, and I still think the act is deficient. But Mr. Pickersgill did create the CTC, and a job for himself. In all fairness to Mr. Pickersgill, in 1966 he did produce a workable solution to part of our air policy when he brought in what is commonly referred to as our regional air policy.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

Our two main line carriers are Air Canada and CPAir. CPAir has about one-fifth the number of planes Air Canada has, yet it turns in a profit. This particular measure is to cover debts incurred by Air Canada of $140 million and a recurring debt of $13 million to pay for engines for the Lockheed 1011—and I will be dealing with that in a moment.

Our second largest carrier, as I say, is CPAir, with very limited routes in Canada. A year after we gave Alitalia the right to fly into Toronto from Rome and Naples, the government finally made up its mind to give CPAir the right to fly into Milan. That year of delay and indecision on the part of the government without a doubt cost CPAir quite a bit of traffic from Italy to Toronto, and from Toronto to Italy for that matter. Delays cost private industry money. Delays caused by government, whose tentacles reach out into every corner of private industry, cost private industry a huge amount of money.

Today we have our two major carriers and five regional carriers, and as I said in 1966 the regional air policy is a workable one. The five regional carriers are relatively sound. Air Canada had the bulk of the routes and could fly into any city in Canada, but declared it was losing money on short hauls. It claimed they were too expensive to operate and that they should be given to some of the regional carriers. The regional carriers took them up and made money from them. Pacific Western has grown to the point where it will soon join the big two. Transair, Nordair, Quebecair and Eastern Provincial are all doing very nicely. I have a question I should like to ask my socialist friends to my left. If a nationalized Air Canada cannot make money flying short hauls to the small cities of Canada, how can private enterprise prosper from the same routes? I think my friends to my left should analyze that situation.

Let me move one step further in our air policy. There are something like 125 different carriers smaller than the regionals operating in Canada. The regionals now have grown so big they all use DC-9,s or the equivalent 737's. But they either cannot or do not want to fly to some of these small towns, particularly in northern British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, Yukon, some parts of northern Quebec and so on, and these 125 carriers are begging the government to make a decision on a third line carrier policy. The third line carriers are hamstrung today by government regulations, and they want the government to make a decision so they will be allowed to operate services which are very much required. In the committee the other day Mr. Benson, president of the Canadian Transport Commission, was asked what was the government's policy on third line carriers. He replied that it was not for him to develop government policy, but he had been asked by the minister to assist in developing such a policy. I say that is not good enough. There will be continued delay. This government body is trying to grant licences and make rules under a policy that does not exist.

Only recently a third line carrier was granted permission to fly into Grande Prairie, Alberta. This third line carrier would have been very happy with this decision, but the CTC placed so many regulations on the operation that it has made it practically impossible for this third line carrier to operate that particular route. I am referring to Time Air, a small third line carrier that flies from Medicine Hat-Lethbridge-Calgary-Red Deer-Edmonton and which wants to extend its service into the Peace River area. It is a worth-while enterprise that does not make any large amount of money but provides a needed service to smaller cities in Alberta. Since the Canadian Transport Commission under Mr. Benson does not know what licensing policy to apply, it gives Air Canada the right to fly into Grande Prairie, but ties it up so badly with regulations that in fact it cannot fly into Grande Prairie. This is why we need an air policy that will work.

This lack of a policy is causing financial harm to 125 smaller carriers which are providing necessary service in our northland, or what you might call our hinterland, no matter what part of Canada that may be, in the Maritimes, Labrador, Quebec, Northern Ontario, the northern part of western Canada or the Northwest Territories. We must have a policy statement from the minister saying that the third line carriers will be allowed to serve these areas. The regional carriers are now so strong that the third line carriers could not compete with them even if they had the desire. That is all the third line carriers are suggesting. They are suggesting that if they can provide the service into a place like Grande Prairie, a service which the regional carrier is now providing, it should be given the opportunity to do so. They are not going to fly in with a DC-9 as Canadian Pacific or Pacific Western is now doing, they will fly in with a smaller plane perhaps a little more often than the regional carrier would do.

This indecision on the part of the government is causing the Canadian taxpayers to provide this service to the small consumers at a cost of thousands upon thousands of dollars. It is all right to say that by 1980 or the year 2000 we will all be living in 11 cities in Canada. That may be nice, and many experts have propounded that theory, but I do not believe it. I believe there will be lots of Canadians who will want to live in smaller regions throughout Canada rather than in 11 major cities. These smaller communities need the service, and in some instances to an even larger degree than do the larger cities. For example, how do you get to Inuvik or Yellowknife unless you go in by air? How do you get to some of the smaller centres in British Columbia unless you go in by air?

These third line carriers are being hamstrung by regulation upon regulation. Some of these regulations can not even be cleared away by the Canadian Transport Commission. Mr. Benson the other day made a lengthy statement about his concern for the airline carriers, but he said he could not do anything for them because he did not know what government policy is and it was not his job to devise it. Mr. Benson and I have always been cordial with one another, but I have never been a great admirer of his thinking. However, in respect of that statement I go along with him. It is not his job to devise policy, it is the job of the government and the minister. This minister is bogged down with problems of grain transportation and it is the government's responsibility to help him out. He should be moved to some other portfolio which he can handle, or he should be given a smart executive assistant or a smart parliamentary secretary who can devise policy for him.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Give him a sabbatical leave.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Give him a sabbatical leave, that would not be a bad idea. Surely, the government must face up to the responsibility that it is it's job to devise air policy which will coincide with the development of this great country of ours. We should not have a policy that will tie up CPA on the Milan route for a year and not tie up the regional carriers which are fairly successful. They should be given some bilateral agreements in respect of Canada and the United States. Eastern Provincial should be allowed to fly to Boston and some other areas in the eastern United States, and Pacific Western should be able to fly into Los Angeles and other areas in the western United States.

The third line carriers should be allowed to provide service to any of these smaller centres; that is not asking too much. The minister shakes his head and says he has no transportation policy, and he is right. We have no transportation policy, we have no rail policy and we have no air policy, yet this Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) asks the House to pass this bill. It is only effective to July 1, 1974 so out of pity I suppose it will be passed, but it would not be passed if it were handled by the Department of Transport. If this bill were being presented by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) I think it would be a sin to pass it. He admits he does not know what he is doing with the money and does not know where he is going.

Air Canada is buying up the aircraft manufacturing business. It will buy out de Havilland and tie itself down to one type of aircraft. The Minister of Finance knows very well that this idea of STOL aircraft will not work. This scheme to operate STOL aircraft between Montreal and Ottawa is not a workable scheme. There is some suggestion that we should build another airport just north of Montreal. We do not need another airport in downtown Montreal and we do not need another one in downtown Ottawa. It is only a 20-minute drive between the present airport in Ottawa and Parliament Hill, traffic permitting, and we certainly do not need another airport here.

When you come right down to it, with fuel costs going up in the world the way they have been it is cheaper to move poeple by train over relatively short distances. I think the cost of moving people by air versus train is about 15 to 1. We are spending millions of dollars deciding whether or not we need a new airport at Pickering. Mr. MacMillan has suggested that if we give him the $800 million required to build this airport at Pickering, he will build straight track between Montreal and Toronto and beat the airlines all the way in moving people. I believe he could do so.

We have been caught up with this air transport idea. We have said to heck with the railways, we must give Air Canada all the money it wants for all the expensive aircraft it needs. I am not particularly impressed by the new 1011. Many reports have suggested that this aircraft is not going to prove workable. I read about one the other day flying into Calgary two and a half hours late. I suggest in fact this aircraft has flown into Calgary late more often than on time. What the problem is I really do not know, but I question this expenditure for the purchase of the 1011 type aircraft. This is a new type and Air Canada felt it had to have it, so it put in an order for a lot of them. I suggest that the most popular type of aircraft in the United States for years is a type that Air Canada is just now beginning to buy. It has just placed orders for this type, so it is behind the times. Again I have the idea that socialism stifles thinking; it does not expand it. Socialism will never have the capability that free enterprise possesses given an equal opportunity. Certainly, it will never have the capability of free enterprise as long as we have governments that cannot make up their minds.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) announced, I think in 1972, that the government intended to purchase 30 per cent of the de Havilland company in relation to this STOL scheme. I think this was an election announcement. I saw that at the time as an election gimmick designed for the voters of Montreal, and I saw it as a wrong step. He and I normally agree on most things.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Now we know where you stand Flora.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —but this was a wrong step for the government to be taking, and I said at the time that the STOL aircraft program was wrong, was unworkable and that the government would end up owning de Havilland. That is exactly what is going to happen.

The STOL scheme will certainly not work between Ottawa and Montreal or, for that matter, between any other cities of comparable size, because over a distance of 300 or 400 miles the cheapest way to move passengers today, with fuel costs going up, is by rail. We have to take a new look at this idea of building new track, even in eastern Canada. When I speak of fuel costs, let me point out that Air Canada is implementing an 11 per cent increase in fares to cover the additional cost of fuel. Officials of Air Canada told the committee that fuel costs amount to 11 per cent of its expenditures. I see the Speaker just waiting to get to his feet, so I will finish just this one sentence.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let him finish the sentence.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to complete the point I was about to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I appreciate the generosity of the House, Mr. Speaker. The point I was making was that representatives of Air Canada told the committee that of its total cost the fuel costs amounted to 11 per cent. If fuel costs increase or if they should double, this does not necessarily mean that Air Canada must increase its fares by 11 per cent. If so, there must be something wrong with their mathematics. They must be using some new method of mathematics. It is impossible for Air Canada's costs to increase by 11 per cent because of this, if its total cost attributed to fuel is only 11 per cent.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what I want the government to do is so clear and straightforward I can say it in a very few minutes. I suspect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) knows what I am about to say. In fact, he told me a while ago he could make the speech himself. My answer to him is I hope he will go out and make the speech to the Canadian National and also to the Canadian Pacific. Mr. Speaker, this is the third day of April. Here we are into the fourth month of 1974 and there has not yet been any 1974 cost of living escalation in respect of the pensions of retired railway workers either Canadian National or Canadian Pacific. Almost all pensioners whose pension plans are under the aegis of the federal government are now receiving cost of living escalation benefits and in all cases where those benefits are paid they no longer are limited to 2 per cent per year but are made equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living.

The Canadian National is an emanation of this government. We are now in the process of voting the Canadian National a rather large sum of money. I contend it is time for the government to tell the Canadian National to get in step with other government operations. It is also my view and that of my party that the Canadian Pacific Railway, although it is called a private company, is at work in the public domain, exists because of public support, and should be told likewise. In other words my request, my insistence, is that the government use its authority, its muscle if necessary, on behalf of the retired railway workers both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific and any others such as those who draw their benefits from the old provident fund or who were employed by some of the companies scattered around the country.

I am aware of the fact that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on several occasions promised the appointment of a commissioner to examine into all aspects of railway pensions having in mind both the pension provisions for those still working and the pensions of those retired. That is good. I want to see that implemented just as soon as possible and when the commissioner goes to work he can deal with such questions as the formula for calculating railway pensions, which ought to be on the basis of 2 per cent for each year of service. He can also deal with the question of the amount of pension that is payable to a widow and other such changes as need to be made.

But, Mr. Speaker, we do not need to wait for a commissioner for the word to be delivered to these two major railways systems that the railway pensioners should not be asked to wait any longer for a 1974 cost of living escalation. The word I get—you know, we sometimes get word which is correct or may not be totally correct—is that the Canadian National is ready to provide a cost of living escalation and is prepared to do so in accordance with the rise in the cost of living and not just 2 per cent. However, for some reason or other the Canadian National is holding back. One speculative reason is that the CPR does not want to go along. I do not think the CNR should wait for the CPR. On the other hand, I think the government should talk to both of them. I plead very strongly, as I have on other occasions over the past several decades, for the rights of our railway pensioners.

We thought we had won the battle for the right of an annual escalation of pensions. This is happening now with a great many cases. I think it is completely unfair, extremely wrong and a case of a miscarriage of justice, if you will, that these retired persons, widows and others have to wait for the escalation of their pensions. I plead therefore with the government not just that the Minister of Finance can say he knew what I was going to say but that he use his muscle as Minister of Finance when he delivers to the Canadian National this money we are voting and say to Norman MacMillan and the CNR, "Increase the pensions of your retired employees in accordance with the rise in the cost of living; we want no monkey work and no delay".

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I gave an undertaking to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) that I would make a few comments. I have listened to most of the debate and have read it all. I think the two carriers concerned, the Canadian National Railways and the CPR, will get the message contained in what members of this House are saying about the service and prospects of these two carriers. I was asked by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre about my views concerning the recapitalization of the CNR and Air Canada. I am stating now my own personal views because the government has not really had an opportunity to focus on this. However, I should like to see both Air Canada and the CNR recapitalized and I would like to see their structure separated, getting down once again to my personal views as I gave them to the committee sometime ago.

My responsibility under this bill of course is merely global in the sense that I have responsibility to the government, and to the people, to try to reconcile the various charges on the public purse in terms of direct expenditures and authority for loans. Within the general priorities of the railroad or Air Canada, yes, I have some responsibility. With regard to the direct transportation aspects, the policy of transportation and so on, under the statute, that responsibility lies with the Minister of Transport. I will convey what I have heard to him and thank the House for its usual stimulus.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to ask the minister, in the areas of the CNR financing bill for which he is responsible, if he would be good enough to make representation to the management and boards of directors of both corporations that they should change their priorities for expenditures to areas such as rolling stock, locomotives and improvements to trackage. This money is not needed for hotels and needles rising up into the sky.

● (1730)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will suggest to them in the strongest terms that they read not only what the hon. member has said, but what other members of the House have said their priorities ought to be.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With the unanimous consent of the House, I would like to ask a question of our very knowledgeable Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Bill C-5 provides the Canadian National Railway Company with an authorization to raise a loan. Can the minister tell the House under what conditions these loans have been raised by the company last year, since he does not know about this year? Particularly, what was the interest rate, over how many years is the reimbursement spread and what are the general conditions of repayment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of this bill is to allow Air Canada and the Canadian National Railway Company to borrow from the government at interest rates much lower than the commercial ones. In fact, they borrow from the government at an interest rate equivalent to the one paid by the government on Treasury bills, plus a provision for administration costs.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, since these loans are indeed granted by the Department of Finance, I imagine that the minister knows the rate at which the government grants loans to Crown corporations in general, and it is precisely that rate that I would like to know, if possible, for last year, for instance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there were variations from 6 to 8 per cent in the interest rate for 1973 Treasury bills.

Mr. Fortin: I would like to make a comment, Mr. Speaker. Since Bill C-5 provides that the Canadian Parliament shall vote an amount of $225,000,000 to meet operating expenditures of the company and since, on the other hand, it is public funds that we are going to vote, that the Canadian government lends public money to that company and that company reimburses the government with public money, I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he does not find it ridiculous that Canadians lend money at a prohibitive interest rate while they could do so at an administrative rate, because the Minister of Finance would not lend money to himself at such a high interest rate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the theory which the hon. member knows quite well, but I will say in any case that there is a legal difference between the Canadian National Railways and the government.

In short, I do not lend the money myself, I am the trustee of the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If legally, the government, as stated by the Minister of Finance, is empowered to lend at 6, 7 or 8 per cent, I would ask the minister, in all honesty, why is he not entitled to lend at 1½ or 2 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because it is provided in the legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fortin: We are here to amend the law.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has again raised the problem of pensions which are currently under negotiation, a problem which is causing a great deal of concern. However, I presume that this matter will be satisfactorily settled.

The manner in which we have carried out this financing of Canadian National and Air Canada over the years really does not seem to be in the interests of developing an adequate transportation system. In this piece of legislation we are repeating the sins of 30 years ago. We are allowing Air Canada to go into commerce an investment portfolio. If ever there was anything which loused up transportation and ended Pierre Burton's dream it was when the railway companies ceased to be railway companies and became investors in everything from land to hotels, to the point where today we do not have adequate rail service to meet our needs, either from the CNR, the CPR, or from both of them in combination.

Now, we are going to allow Air Canada to open its own investment portfolio, and we will lend it the money to do so. It seems idiotic that we should repeat the mistake that we made with the railroads, and that we should not learn from our history in that regard. It might be advantageous for the minister himself to set up another Comstock company, or to manufacture airplanes, but I certainly hope he will not allow Air Canada to do this. Air Canada will never go back to using either the single engine or twin engine Otter, and therefore I do not see any reason why it should become involved in the manufacture of such planes.

I also suggest that if Air Canada is not able to make money on the charter business itself, then the least it should do is buy Wardair out, particularly if Wardair has all the expertise in that field. Why have Air Canada just invested in that company? Why not buy it out completely? Most people believe Air Canada was established and financed by the government to provide service by flying airplanes on behalf of the Canadian people. It was not really set up to make a profit. I repeat that it was set up to provide service to people, but with every day that goes by it is drifting further and further away from that objective.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who represents a rural area somewhat similar to mine, is well aware of the problem we face in air transportation. Really, the government has no air transport policy. It has established an air committee which decides on who gets the licenses. Under the Canadian Transport Act, the minister has the right to override such decisions, and occasionally does so, although so far as I am concerned this is not necessarily done in the interests of the public but for rather obscure reasons.

Air Canada and all other major carriers are well supervised, but this does not hold true with respect to the lower categories. For years Air Canada had to fly from the west through Kapuskasing, North Bay, through to Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, but for a number of years it has not had a connecting route from Northern Ontario to western Canada. The only exception was a route between Toronto and Montreal going through the northland of Quebec and Ontario. But it was interesting when a third class carrier made an application, and that application was granted, little support was given by Air Canada to see that that carrier received the same assistance that is provided to a national carrier in an integrated system.

In my part of Ontario we make our air reservations through a Zenith number, using Air Canada. Air Canada can make an arrangement for reservations with Nor-OntAir which is a wholly owned subsidiary of Northland Transportation, and therefore of the Ontario government. For the other carrier operating between Sudbury, North Bay and Ottawa, Air Canada connot and will not make arrangements for connections. One has to make reservations from northern Ontario via Sudbury and Toronto to Ottawa. This may add to statistics but it does not do anything to transport people in northern Ontario. If a service were available through the national carrier who is already part of the intervention in the transfer of passengers, the people of the north would use it.

Several months ago in committee we heard the president of Air Canada speak about this, and he said that it would not pay to put a service between Montreal, Ottawa and Sudbury. Nordair, the regional carrier is an integral part of our system and should be given the same kind of treatment which would allow them to fulfil a role in an organized and orderly fashion. When Air Canada said they were not prepared to provide the service, Nordair made an application and now we understand that Air Canada is going to apply as well and probably will put in a service from Montreal, Ottawa, Sudbury, Thunder Bay and on to Winnipeg via a northern route.

We have provided Air Canada with money and cushy jobs on the board of directors, although the president does not seem to really know what they do. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should have all these vice-presidents removed rather than provide $3 million to buy expertise from Max Ward. If we really need the knowledge that Wardair has in order to run a charter system for Air Canada, let us hire Mr. Ward and some others and make them vice-presidents or even the president of Air Canada. If we have a subsidiary, let us make it possible for it to make more money than it is making now or we will just be using it to provide Air Canada with a class of traffic that it is not able to carry now.

After next June, the minister will be introducing another CNR financing bill. We have probably been involved in this exercise three times in 1973-74 and hon. members would be interested in knowing how the financing is being used. Hon. members will agree that railways in Canada should be operated for the service of Canadians, whether with passenger service or freight and other services normally provided by a railroad. But now we are building all kinds of assets for the Canadian National Railways such as this needle that has been mentioned. Now, it may be that with a mast on top it will provide a new public communications system but, Mr. Speaker, that is not running a railroad. In the early days, telephone lines were laid along the railways and therefore the railways got into the communications field. There may be some merit in this, but I think they spend more time on it than they do on developing their services.

[Mr. Peters.]

One of these days the railroads will be nationalized as public utilities. They will operate trains and probably have stations and maintain track. This bill will not accomplish any of those things but is going to create for Air Canada the same problems that were created for the Canadian National Railways. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I am opposed to the passage of this bill. Probably it is a necessary bill although there was a three-year period when the railways operated without the bill being passed and seemed to manage quite well. I suggest to hon. members that if we examine the operation of our railways and national air service, we will find many deficiencies in the service. It is not so much the money involved in paying for the transportation that concerns us but what we get for that money. We have not received much for it over the last 20 years. If we allow Air Canada to have an investment portfolio they, too, will fritter away whatever small brain power there is at the top of the organization through developing things not connected with air transportation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which reads as follows:

Government House
Ottawa, April 3, 1974

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that The Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., LL.M., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, April 3, 1974, at 5:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier-General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

● (1750)

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of the honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1800)

And being returned:

Royal Assent

Mr. Deputy Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act—Chapter 3

Bill C-264, an Act respecting the Eastern Canada Synod of the Lutheran Church in America.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 6:07 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 4, 1974

The House met at 2 p.m.

INTERNATIONAL PROFESSIONAL RUGBY FOOTBALL CONTROL ACT

PROVISION THAT FIFTY PER CENT OF PLAYERS ON CANADIAN ENTRIES IN INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE MUST BE CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-272, respecting domestic control of Canadian entries in international professional rugby football.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the eventuality of a Canadian entry in an international professional football league by requiring that 50 per cent of the playing members of any such entry be Canadian citizens.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

On the order: Introduction of bills:

April 1, 1974—The Minister of National Health and Welfare—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan".

Mr. Speaker: It is the understanding of the Chair that the recommendation appearing under the notice of introduction of the bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan contains a provision that makes it necessary to obtain a new recommendation. With leave of the House, it is suggested that the present recommendation be replaced by a new recommendation, to be printed in tomorrow's order paper. Meanwhile, the notice of introduction of the bill will be allowed to stand until tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ALIMONY AND MAINTENANCE ORDER ENFORCEMENT ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGENCY OF CROWN TO ENFORCE ORDERS

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-273, respecting the interprovincial enforcement of alimony and maintenance orders.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a mechanism for the security of alimony payments in an estranged marriage, thus removing much of the anguish suffered primarily by mothers who frequently must spend time and money pursuing defaulting husbands and who often resort to welfare at immense cost in human terms as well as some $1 million daily in welfare costs. The mechanism would be an agency of the Crown from which alimony awards would automatically be paid and to which the husband, or wife where applicable, would make payments. The agency would have responsibility for enforcement.

Motion agreed to, bill read first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY

PROPOSED HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT AT GREAT BEAR LAKE—JUSTIFICATION FOR FEASIBILITY STUDIES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the government's proposal to build a massive hydroelectric project at Great Bear Lake to supply power for Canadian Arctic gas companies, can the Prime Minister advise why thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money have now been spent on feasibility studies for this project when the project is dependent on the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline which has not yet even been approved by the National Energy Board?

• (1410)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly take notice of the question. The minister is due in the House in a very short while.

Mr. Fraser: Can the Prime Minister advise why the taxpayers' money should be spent to build this proposed project when it would exist practically for the sole purpose of assisting the private corporations which wish to build the gas pipeline and market the gas?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would be very delighted to bring this supplementary and any other supplementaries that might be written down there to the minister's attention.

Mr. Fraser: Can the Prime Minister advise who will make the decision whether this great Canadian lake is to be spoiled by flooding of its shoreline and whether the project will be subject to the environmental impact assessment policy set out by the Minister of the Environment on March 14?

Mr. Trudeau: As I indicated, all these supplementaries which are in front of the hon. member will be conveyed to the minister on his behalf.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for York South. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not trying to assume your role, Mr. Speaker, but since we had asked one question I assumed you would be turning to the New Democratic Party for a question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DEGREE OF SUCCESS UNDER NEW LAW IN PREVENTING TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES BY FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): I hope I can remember the question, Mr. Speaker. My question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact it is now over four months since the passage of the Foreign Investment Review Act, and in view of the fact there are still no legal ways to prevent takeovers that come within the ambit of that act, has the minister been successful in either delaying or freezing the completion of any takeover transactions which are reviewable? If so, how many takeovers has he prevented?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the two takeovers that have been of particular interest, the Masco takeover of Emco and the Reynolds takeover of Macdonald, have been under very considerable discussion. Neither was prevented because they both went through quite legally. However, both companies have given undertakings. In the case of Reynolds Tobacco, they are substantial undertakings and I think they substantially meet the significant benefit test. In the case of the Masco takeover of Emco, I am not yet satisfied that the undertakings given by that company, which are entirely voluntary, meet the significant benefit test. I have been told by senior officials of Masco that they will resubmit undertakings to us.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the fact the Financial Times has reported up to 14 takeovers since the passage of the act, will the minister advise if he has any monitoring operation under way on an ongoing basis to check the actual number of takeovers taking place across the country in order to at least have control of the situation that has developed since the act was passed by the House?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have no special or legal monitoring system. Our sources of information are rather similar to the hon. member's. There is no legal obligation at the present moment for those involved in takeovers to advise the government of their intentions. I can say, however, that a large number of firms, maybe as many as 20, have come forward in conformity with the request I made last December to make us aware of their intentions, if they were contemplating a take-over, and to discuss the transaction with us.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCREASE IN PENSIONS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since he stated on the CTV network that inflation is caused in part by higher social security expenditures, such as old age security and family allowances increments, and that the government was forced to grant those increases because of pressures from the opposition, what measures would the right hon. Prime Minister take to reduce inflation if the opposition did not exist?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is highly hypothetical.

ENERGY

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to the contract to purchase Roumanian oil at 99 cents. I should like to ask the minister whether the technical advisory committee to his department, consisting of representatives of the oil companies, recommended to the minister or to the government that this oil should be purchased, that the government ought to acquire the option of Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited and exercise it on behalf of the government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the committee recommended no specific purchase from any particular contracting party but it did say that a shortfall in supplies in Canada was anticipated, and in the course of a committee meeting one of the importers in particular indicated the contracts his company would not be taking up. Various members of the oil industry, both before and after that particular meeting and in that same time frame, indicated that while the Canadian refineries could cover their requirements some of the importers would not be in a position to do so, and that action would need to be taken. It was on this basis the decision was made by my department, specifically by myself, that it was necessary to acquire the refined product to ensure the security of the Canadian market.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister indicate to the House what expert advice he received, if any, as to the appropriateness of exercising this option to acquire this Roumanian oil, and also what efforts, if any, the government made to determine what oil might be available from other sources and at what prices?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The decision was made on the advice of officials of my own department who have had extensive experience in the international oil trade.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am advised that in the case of very many of the offers which were made to the government at that time, and, indeed, in the case of these particular transactions, these officials made checks with international oil traders for the purpose of determining the available market and the various terms. In each case, I understand, they made more than one check to determine the market and scrutinize the transaction.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister regard it as appropriate for the government of Canada to do business on this scale with an advisor to the government? In other words, does the minister consider it as coming within the framework of conflict of interest as laid down by the Prime Minister that the government of Canada should do any business at all, let alone business on this scale, with a representative of a firm purporting to give the government disinterested advice?

● (1420)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition may be misunderstanding the nature of the technical advisory group. All of the eastern Canadian refiners and the major importers of oil into eastern Canada were represented on that body, for the obvious reason that the committee was an important source of information for the government in regard to supply of oil to the eastern Canadian market and the demand that could be anticipated. All of the Eastern Canadian industry was involved in the discussions in this process and, in fact, if the government had not been pursuing this particular course of action to protect Canadians, there would have been no one else to deal with under these circumstances. The decision was made by myself on the advice of my officials. At no time was there a decision of the technical advisory group to enter into any specific transaction. They provided information and informed comment on the market. The decision was ours.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary Centre on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands also on a supplementary.

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA—ALTERNATIVE BIDS—NECESSITY FOR PURCHASE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Do I understand the minister to say that no alternative bids were either solicited or received in terms of heating oil requirements? In addition, was the minister convinced that it was necessary for the Department of Supply and Services to purchase the high-priced Roumanian oil in order to obtain supplies from the Caribbean area as well?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I said there were a great many other bids scrutinized at that time and the opinion of international oil dealers was taken, with regard to the market. With regard to the Roumanian oil, we were concerned at that time about maintaining an alternative source of supply of refined oil for the eastern Canadian market, and it was deemed to be important to keep that source open by the exercise of this particular contract.

Mr. Andre: In order to clarify the matter, in view of the denial by the President of the Treasury Board yesterday of the request for an inquiry, would the minister be willing to table, either in the House or in the committee on national resources, all contracts, correspondence, examples of bids and information passed between the technical advisory committee and the Department of Supply and Services and the minister's own department during this period so this matter can be sorted out to the satisfaction of the House?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, competitive and commercial information would certainly be involved here. I would be glad to see to what extent I can meet the request without, in effect, disadvantaging those who dealt with the government and thereby making it difficult in the future to get the co-operation of the industry in the case of another emergency.

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT—AVAILABILITY FROM OTHER SOURCES—PRICE PAID FOR ROUMANIAN OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this question. When he made the recommendation for the purchase of this 26 million gallons of home heating oil, was he aware that the technical advisory committee which was advising him was made up in part of two firms, Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited and Shell Oil of Canada, both of which are owned by Shell International which has been the main beneficiary in this transaction? In light of those circumstances, did the minister take any action himself to make sure that no other suppliers were available?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, the technical advisory committee was made up of all the major firms engaged in the oil business in eastern Canada so that we would have a full spectrum of information on supply of and demand for oil in this part of the Canadian market that was threatened. I was aware, of course, that Shell Canada and CFM were participants in this, and obviously it made sense that they should be.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a further supplementary followed by the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Douglas: When the minister made the recommendation to the government that these transactions should be concluded, was he aware of the fact that in order to get the 20 million gallons of Caribbean oil the government was going to have to pay 99½ cents per gallon for the Roumanian oil, which was 10 cents above the Rotterdam price and 20 cents a gallon above the Caribbean price?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, at the time the contract was exercised it was exercised on the basis of the Rotterdam price. I think it is fair to say that at the time of acquiring the options the Rotterdam price was not known, so it would be in accordance with whatever the commercial going price was at the time the contract was to be exercised.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will return to those hon. members who want to ask supplementary questions on this subject, but for the moment the Chair will see the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister said it was on the Rotterdam price but the Minister of Supply and Services said yesterday that the Rotterdam price at that time was 89 cents and the oil was purchased by the Canadian government at 99½ cents, so it seems to me that the two ministers ought to get together on what kind of evidence they are going to give to the House.

Mr. Goyer: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that the Rotterdam price at the time of delivery was 89 cents and the Leader of the Opposition mentioned yesterday that the then price was 74 cents, and I would like on a point of clarification to say that the 74 cents was for—

An hon. Member: You better straighten it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The minister will appreciate that there is no such thing in our rules as a point of clarification, so he rises on a question of privilege. I would suggest to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that this is really an exchange of questions and answers. I indicated a moment ago that I would return to this interesting subject after I had given an opportunity to the hon. member for Champlain to ask his question or questions.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect—

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to—

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Champlain, but the minister rises again on a question of privilege.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to point out the fact that it was indicated in this House that I have said that we paid 99½ cents a gallon and that throws some confusion in the debate. The truth will never come out if I am not allowed to clarify what I have said and set the record straight. For this reason, I believe that in rising on a question of privilege I could very well inform the House by stating exactly what I have said.

Mr. Speaker: This can be done by the minister, as by any other hon. member or by any other member of the government, by making a statement on motions. In any case, I must suggest to the minister that other questions may be put shortly that will give him the opportunity to clarify the situation. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Champlain.

THE ARTS

REMISSION TO QUEBEC OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR CULTURAL AID

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

Would he say, before the Canadian Arts Conference starts, whether he is acquainted with the claims of the province of Quebec concerning the remission to Quebec of all federal funds for cultural assistance, and how he feels this conference will start this evening?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there is no connection between the two events. I understand there will be a statement made in the legislative assembly this afternoon and I will read it after it has been made.

ENERGY

PURCHASES OF OIL BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can he advise the House whether he has any other outstanding deals like the Roumanian oil deal coming up in the near future and, if he has, has he an estimate as to just how much it will cost the Canadian taxpayer to put those deals through?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the minister does not want to answer I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South is waiting for an opportunity to return to the questions he put earlier.

PROPOSED HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT AT GREAT BEAR LAKE—JUSTIFICATION FOR FEASIBILITY STUDIES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which I directed to the Prime Minister earlier and I thank you for the privilege of asking it now. In view of the government's proposal to build a massive hydroelectric power project at Great Bear Lake to supply power to Canadian Arctic gas companies, can the minister advise why thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money have now been spent on feasibility studies for this project when the project is dependent upon the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline which has not yet been approved by the National Energy Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, no decision has yet been made in this regard. The department is responsible for identifying the resources we have in the Canadian north and obviously among them we have considerable hydroelectric potential. In the light of present plans for the north, it is quite normal for us to study the possibility of developing hydroelectric power perhaps to use it for the pumping stations of an eventual pipeline. We are now doing preliminary studies but no decision has yet been reached in this regard.

● (1430)

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Perhaps the minister can advise why the taxpayers' money should be spent to build this proposed project when it would exist primarily for the sole purpose of assisting private corporations which wish to build a gas pipeline and market the gas?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, just as usual, the opposition does not realize that there are people living in northern Canada and that the government will have taken a very wise step if it can provide the Mackenzie Valley Indians with cheap electric power.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows perfectly well it is not going to be built for the Indians. Can the minister advise who will make the decision whether this great Canadian lake is to be spoiled by flooding of its shoreline, and will the project be subject to the environmental impact assessment policy set out by the Minister of the Environment on March 14, or is this to be another case of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development making the decision on his own?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is not very well informed. It is possible to harness the Great Bear River without raising its level in any considerable way. Before any decision is taken on this matter by the government, environmental impact studies will be made. Besides, as I have always said in this House, there is excellent co-operation between my department and the Department of the Environment.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AGREEMENT WITH SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STEEL PLANT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It has to do with an announcement made by high level government sources in Regina. I ask whether or not an agreement has already been signed by the government of Saskatchewan and is to be signed by the federal government whereby the federal government will provide $35 million in direct aid to set up steel facilities, plus $25 million in loans and loan guarantees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman will refer to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Regional Development of a week ago today he will realize high level government sources in the federal government, namely, myself, made that announcement last Thursday in the committee. It was not in fact disclosed to the committee last Thursday in as much detail as the right hon. member has exposed today, but essentially the fact is that an agreement in principle has been signed by Saskatchewan and we have concurred in it. I am not sure whether it has actually been signed, but in any event we are proceeding with negotiations along the lines the right hon. member has outlined.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I brought up this matter because I wanted to get the facts. I might direct this question to the Minister of Justice. Did he say yesterday or the day before that the question of such an agreement was a political leak by Premier Blakeney and of which apparently he knew nothing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the right hon. gentleman may be an interesting one and the minister seems anxious to reply, but I am sure the right hon. member appreciates that questions can be asked of ministers only in relation to their administrative responsibilities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I entirely agree, Mr. Speaker, but when the one minister from Saskatchewan does not know what is going on it is time for parliament to look into the matter because apparently there is an hiatus in the ministry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South. The minister rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I find it is necessary to rise on a question of privilege when in asking an unauthorized or improper question the right hon. gentleman makes a completely false assertion about anything I said. I knew full well what was going on with regard to the development of a steel industry in Saskatchewan. Indeed, the first indication of that development was contained in regional expansion papers in April, 1973, and the federal government has been working hard on this project ever since. My regret about what Mr. Blakeney did was that once again he showed no concern at all for what the government of Canada was doing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the last of those words of wisdom. It concerns me that the minister would object to an NDP government saying anything after the wonderful alliance here in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

RETAIL PRICES OF BEEF, PORK AND TURKEYS IN LIGHT OF DECREASES IN WHOLESALE PRICES—MONITORING OF STORES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Premier of Saskatchewan could have a more renowned counsel for defence than the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. Now that everybody's favourite minister is in, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the wholesale price of beef cattle has fallen steadily since about mid-February and the wholesale prices of hogs and turkeys have also fallen, is the minister satisfied that there has been an equivalent reduction in the retail prices to consumers of the meats I have mentioned?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate a compliment from such a distinguished parliamentary observer.

An hon. Member: And colleague.

Mr. Gray: The Food Prices Review Board in its March 22 quarterly report stated that Statistics Canada beef price figures for March will not be available for a few weeks. However, information available to the board for the Toronto and Winnipeg markets shows the fall in cattle prices being mirrored in both the wholesale price of dressed beef carcasses and in the price of beef being charged by retailers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members I was, of course, aware of what the Food Prices Review Board said in its last quarterly report. I want to ask the minister whether his department or the Food Prices Review Board does regular monitoring of the retail stores in this country and, if so, in what locations?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I understand that in respect of beef prices the Food Prices Review Board does keep the prices under review and in fact it has under way, as I have already indicated to the House, a special survey of retail beef price margins. I understand the report will be available in the next couple of weeks. I also understand that as part of its general mandate it keeps in touch with food prices at all levels generally.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for another supplementary, but I have to remind hon. members that we are not moving too quickly. We are still receiving questions from those in the first row and I hope we can move back in a moment. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the reports of the Food Prices Review Board may be of value if they are published in time, and in view of the obvious fact that to have a report every three months is hardly of value to the consumers of Canada even if there are occasional special reports, may I ask the minister whether any consideration has been given to requiring the Food Prices Review Board to publish weekly or fortnightly reports on its monitoring of food prices in areas where it does such monitoring so that consumers may be advised at such a time that it would be of value to them!

● (1440)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, this is certainly something that could be considered.

JUSTIFICATION FOR FINGERPRINTING PERSON WHOSE SOCIAL SECURITY CARD STOLEN IN ORDER TO BE CLEARED OF CHARGES FOR OFFENCES COMMITTED BY ANOTHER

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have risen several times and written numerous letters to clear the name of a constituent of mine. I will direct this question to the Solicitor General or the Acting Solicitor General. Is it necessary for a Canadian citizen to be fingerprinted in order that charges standing in his name for offences committed by another person may be cleared from the RCMP files, and is this not tantamount to saying: you are guilty until you prove to the RCMP that you are innocent?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that this is a request for a legal opinion I think it may have been wrongly directed to the Solicitor General. If it is directed to me, of course it would not be proper for me to answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General or the Acting Solicitor General. Does the Solicitor General really expect a member of parliament to recommend to a constituent in the circumstances surrounding this matter that he submit to fingerprinting as suggested by the minister in the letter with fingerprint forms that he sent to me?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA—REASON FOR PURCHASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to ask him which minister, if either, is giving the correct version, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who said a few moments ago that the Roumanian oil was purchased in order to provide an alternative source of supply, or the Minister of Supply and Services who said on April 2:

I have to explain that if we paid such a high price for the Roumanian oil it was because it was part of the agreement with this company that we could not have any Caribbean oil if we were not ready to pay this price for five million gallons of Roumanian oil.

Can the Prime Minister tell us which of these ministers, if either, is giving the correct explanation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the opposition party does not seem to be too interested in giving the Minister of Supply and Services an occasion to give the explanation which would be of interest to the opposition. I am told that part of the confusion that exists in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition is due to the fact that he is talking about U.S. gallons and the minister is talking about Imperial gallons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: How did you think that one up?

An hon. Member: The best improvisation of the week.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Supply and Services attempted earlier to clarify another point. I ask the Prime Minister not to evade the question and to say which of these ministers has given the correct explanation as to why the option to buy Roumanian oil was exercised, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who said it was done in order to provide an alternative source of oil, or the Minister of Supply and Services who said that it had been exercised in order to enable us to obtain Caribbean oil? Will the Prime Minister tell us which of these ministers is giving the correct explanation?

Mr. Trudeau: Both, Mr. Speaker. The replies are complementary, not contradictory.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Pretty weak.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is time for an investigation.

An hon. Member: You need that trip to France.

HEALTH

SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL MANPOWER—POSSIBILITY OF TAX INCENTIVES OR FORGIVABLE STUDENT LOANS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that many areas in Canada are suffering from severe shortages of medical manpower and as the future of the national health plan depends on giving something approaching equality of health care, I should like to ask the minister if consideration has been given to tax incentive cards for those areas or forgivable medical student loans for periods of service in those areas?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this proposal has not been discussed or raised but I am sure it is one that my provincial colleagues will want to consider. I will make a point of letting them know the hon. member's view in this respect.

Mr. Rynard: With reference to the second part of my question, has consideration been given to student loans that would be forgivable upon agreement to serve in such areas for a certain period?

Mr. Lalonde: As the hon. member knows very well, these are matters that the provinces have to decide since the regional allocation of medical services is a matter of provincial responsibility. It is the type of matter I would certainly like to refer to my provincial colleagues for examination.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the minister that this is now being done in other departments of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POLICY RESPECTING PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANTS TO NEWSPAPERMEN

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED BY CORPORATE TAX CONCESSIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware of the fact that the National Liberal Federation has sent out circulars to every weekly newspaper in Canada stating that "111,000 new manufacturing jobs were created last year by the federal government's two-year writeoff"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member can ask his question without making specific reference to documents of this nature. I think the hon. member can ask the question directly without quoting documents in the way that he is doing now.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I would be delighted to do so. Did the minister tell the House that 111,000 new jobs were created in Canada last year due to the federal government's concessions to business?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said that last year, 1973, there were 111,000 new manufacturing jobs, which was 8,000 more than the increase of the six previous years put together.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In view of the fact it is apparent from the minister's answer that he was not attributing it simply to the corporate tax concessions he made to industry in last year's budget, may I ask him what steps he intends to take to ensure that the National Liberal Federation clears up the misrepresentation which they made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST THAT TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INQUIRY BE AMENDED TO COVER ALL FACTS INVOLVED IN ORIGINAL DECISION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the Pickering airport inquiry has, true to prediction, been rendered a virtual sham because of the very restrictive terms of reference imposed by the government, will the minister consider at this late date amending the terms of reference to permit a full and meaningful inquiry into all the facts upon which the original decision was taken and not just new evidence, and thereby permit Toronto area residents a fair shake?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Atkey: Now that the Liberal Party of Ontario has wisely decided to come out in opposition to the Pickering airport, would the federal government, which has the ultimate constitutional responsibility to make airport decisions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. I suggest to hon. members that they are not helping the situation by asking questions of this nature. The hon. member can obtain information, which may be very important and relevant, by asking his question directly. I will recognize him for that purpose.

[Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin Waterloo).]

Mr. Atkey: In view of the information I have just given to the minister, I wonder whether he and his party would agree to listen to their own rank and file in the Toronto region and cancel this expensive and unnecessary project?

● (1450)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have been listening to our own members, Mr. Speaker, because all the steps we have taken were under the pressure of our own members in the region of Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Oh, you don't pay attention to anybody else. Oh boy, you have really fixed yourself now.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not want to play politics—

Mr. Hees: Take a look at Pierre's face.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, come on, shut up now.

Mr. Hees: Take a look at it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister wishes to complete his answer he will be recognized, but we are coming to the end of the question period.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Because we had doubt in our minds, the inquiry was instituted. I think it is normal that we wait until we have the recommendation of the inquiry. If we are to talk about the attitude of the Liberals in Toronto, I would be interested to know the attitude of the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

REQUEST THAT FEED GRAINS BE MARKETED BY WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact thousands of prairie farmers are very much upset and opposed to the proposed changes in the marketing of feed grains, will the minister reconsider his position and will he guarantee to the House and to the farmers that feed grains will be marketed under the authority of the Wheat Board and the Wheat Board only?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the reaction of farmers across the country has been very much in favour of the basic principles underlying the feed grains proposals, namely, that we move to a similar price basis all across the country and therefore have freedom of movement and trade as a one-market unit. The government is considering the reactions to and comments on the proposals we put forward on August 3 for the long-term solution of the feed grains situation. We propose to consider those in a final way before very long and to announce then what the details of the proposal will be for the future.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville for a supplementary, then the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will not give us a guarantee that feed grains will not be removed from the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board, will the Prime Minister intervene and act in accordance with the wishes of the farmers of the prairies and maintain the Wheat Board as the sole marketing agency for feed grains?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the premise of the question, that the hon. member is a spokesman for the farmers any more than the minister, or the farmers themselves speaking through a plebiscite.

RIGHT OF GRAND JURIES TO INSPECT FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Justice which calls for a yes or no answer. Is it government policy to deny that grand juries in Ontario have jurisdiction to inspect and report on federal government institutions?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when such an issue arises we consider the technical and legal questions involved and decide on the basis of those facts.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, that certainly was not a yes or no. May I ask the minister if Mr. John Hollies, counsel for the government, was expressing ministerial policy last Friday in Napanee, Ontario, when he allegedly informed Mr. Justice Lloyd Holden of the Supreme Court of Ontario that he was prepared to argue the constitutional validity of the jurisdiction of the grand jury to inspect the federal institution at Millhaven, Ontario?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, he was acting fully within the scope of his instructions.

Mr. Lawrence: That is a shameful attitude.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader a question. Although there was some doubt expressed in the corridors this morning as to how long we are going to be here, if we do get into next week what will the business be?

National Parks Act

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot foresee any circumstances that would prevent us from sitting next week and, indeed, well into the summer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I would advise my hon. friend that today we will continue with the parks bill. If that is completed, we will take the export development bill for the remainder of the day. Regardless of the progress made, tomorrow we would begin with the Fisheries Development Act, to be followed by the adjustments to the three guaranteed loans acts. On Monday, regardless of what progress is made, we would begin consideration of the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

An hon. Member: Where is the football bill?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Victoria rises on a point of order.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I asked a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He either did not hear me or heard and chose not to answer. I wonder if it could be indicated which was the case.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did not answer because the hon. member directed a question to me that did not relate to my department. Perhaps he might clarify the connection between his question and the expected answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the connection might be clarified in another way than by an exchange on a point of order. I think the Chair should call orders of the day.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT DELINEATING GOVERNMENT'S POWERS IN DISPOSING OF PUBLIC LANDS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-6 to amend the National Parks Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have order for a moment. I believe the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) might be interested in the motion which is now coming before us. The minister and hon. members have looked at the motions before us, of course. I should like to suggest to hon. members that, at least at first sight, motions Nos. 1 and 2 would appear to be irrelevant and go beyond the scope of Bill C-6. I appreciate that there may have been discussion between hon. members as to what might be done on these two motions, but unless the Chair is convinced otherwise the motions will have to be ruled out of order.

National Parks Act

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on these two motions there is agreement among all parties that the amendments could be accepted by consent. Because of an oversight in one of the clauses there was some discrimination vis-à-vis the Indian Lands. This was discovered in committee, and all members of the committee agreed that I should introduce, for the unanimous consent of the House, this motion to take care of that designation of Indian Lands.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair might inquire whether there is unanimous consent in relation to motion No. 2, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), that is unanimous consent that both motions should be put to the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw on a point of order.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to give unanimous consent to the putting of motion No. 1.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that there is unanimous consent in connection with motion No. 2. I wonder whether we might have the advice of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni on that point.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, if there is unanimous consent to acceptability of motion No. 1, which stands in the name of the minister, I would be quite happy at this point to have motion No. 2 withdrawn. They are almost in the same language; at least they both have the same objective. On the understanding that we consent to motion No. 1, I am quite prepared to leave aside motion No. 2.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

● (1500)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-6, An Act to amend the National Parks Act, be amended by adding thereto immediately after line 6 on page 3 the following Clause:

"2.1 Subsection 6(3) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(3) The Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to purchase, expropriate or otherwise acquire any lands or interests therein for the purposes of a park.".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not have many remarks to make. As I said earlier when I asked for the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion, we are doing it because section 6 of the act refers to Indian Lands and because we must establish a special procedure to expropriate Indian lands. I do not think Indian lands should be considered differently from others in Canada, and this is why, the committee members having recognized this anomaly, we have decided to refrain from mentioning Indians when we negotiate the purchase of lands for national parks.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the minister has expressed a view to which we subscribe, namely that the discrimination appearing in the original act relating to Indian lands should be removed. As I say, we agree. I should like to take this opportunity, in speaking on Motion No. 1, to make some general comments regarding Bill C-6 now before us.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think there should be some understanding on the part of hon. members as to whether it is possible at this stage to engage in a second reading debate or a third reading debate. Hon. members will agree, I think, that the rules of the House are clear. Motion No. 1 is now before the House and debate, as much as possible, should be relevant to that motion. The rules do not provide for general debate simply because a particular motion known as Motion No. 1 is before the House. Perhaps the hon. member could reserve his general comments for third reading or for some motion moved later which may lend itself to general debate.

Having said this, of course, I hasten to add that members are masters of their own procedure. I am here to help and serve members. I thought I should mention, however, that perhaps this may not be the point for general debate on the bill itself. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) may wish to give my remarks some thought.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly abide by your ruling relating to Motion No. 1 and will not make extended remarks at this stage on aspects which are dealt with in other amendments. I merely wish to add that we, on my side, are concerned that the minister is using procedures which may undermine and reverse the work done in committee. I will elaborate on this further when a later motion is moved.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word or two on this motion. I am happy to see that the House agrees unanimously to extend too the terms of the original act. I raised this question initially in committee; at that point the minister indicated that if there were procedural difficulties he would move the motion for me. This amendment to the National Parks Act is significant in that it removes from the act the sort of special references to Indian lands which date back over a lengthy period in our history. At one time, Indian lands were regarded as lands belonging to the Crown and held in trust for the Indian people, but not as lands which belonged to them. That concept of Indian lands is increasingly becoming obsolete. Hopefully, it will be removed altogether from the Statutes of Canada. That is why I am happy that the House is willing to consent to this amendment to the National Parks Act, even though the amendment in some ways is symbolic. Nevertheless, this amendment is important when viewed in the context of our relations today with the Indian people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Motion No. 2—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has already been agreed that the motion has been dropped. That is to say, the House agreed to the hon. member's request for this motion to be withdrawn. The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motions Nos. 3 and 4. I suggest that perhaps these motions might be grouped together for consideration, that a division on Motion No. 3 will also be a division on Motion No. 4 and that there be only one debate on those two motions. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I will now put Motions Nos. 3 and 4.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-6, an act to amend the National Parks Act, be amended in Clause 10:

(a) by striking outlines 6 and 7 on page 5 and substituting the following:

"10.(1) Subject to subsection (2) the Governor in Council may,"

(b) by striking out lines 20 to 46 on page 6.

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-6, an act to amend the National Parks Act, be amended in Clause 11:

(a) by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 7 and substituting the following:

He said: Mr. Speaker, these amendments are proposed because in committee there was elaborate consideration of a system of public hearings relative to the establishment of parks which have already been agreed upon with the provinces. I do not think it is advisable for members of parliament to create a situation in which they are likely to question the judgment of a provincial government, when a provincial government has decided to turn land over to the federal government for the establishment of a national park.

Members should be aware how parks are established, and how Crown lands in provinces which are available to provincial governments are turned over to the federal government so that national parks can be established within provinces. We must go to the provincial government and ask if it wants a national park in that province. If it does, the provincial government is responsible for assembling the land and transferring it to the federal government. Only then does the federal government step in. If a provincial government must expropriate lands, generally speaking we offer to pay 50 per cent of the cost of expropriation. The provincial government must decide if it wishes to place these lands in the hands of the federal government.

If we were to establish an onerous system of public hearings by which the judgment of provincial authorities could be questioned, we could jeopardize in many cases opportunities for Canadians to acquire more national parks. Of course, negotiations are entered into before land is turned over to the federal government. Agreement in principle is reached between the two governments. A system of public hearings in connection with a province's decision to establish a national park could force provincial authorities to reconsider their decision. I do not think it is up to us to question the decision of provincial authorities if they have decided to turn over lands to the federal government for the establishment of a national park. If we question their wisdom, I and any successor in my portfolio, might just as well forget about establishing national parks.

We have had a difficult experience in Nova Scotia. The public did not understand what was involved. It was decided at the provincial level that a national park should not be established if the public were against it. I do not think that the way the provincial government disposed of Crown lands was constitutionally proper. A case in Nova Scotia established very clearly that the system we have followed so far permits enough flexibility for a provincial government to change its mind before turning over land to the federal government. In the ship harbour case, there was agreement in principle between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia to establish a national park in the Ship Harbour area. Apparently some people were not happy with that. I strongly disagree with the decision of the provincial government, and I stated this in strong words, to withdraw from that project because they feel it is not the best thing to do. I think the system has worked well. If we were to include in the act a provision to force the provincial governments to hold public hearings into all parks that have already been agreed upon, then what would the situation be?

We have 10 new national parks in Canada, seven of which were established in the provinces. The provinces are in the process of turning over or have already turned over these lands to the federal government. There is the case of the Pacific Rim National Park in British Columbia, Forillon and La Mauricie in Quebec, Gros Morne in Newfoundland, Kouchibouguac in New Brunswick and so on. The provinces have already acted on them and have turned over the land to the federal government. It would be most unwise at this time to have public hearings in order to question the wisdom of the provincial governments in deciding to establish these parks. I am quite at ease with the way things are now because there is no political coloration when dealing with the provinces about establishing parks. I have dealt with governments of all shades in the political spectrum of Canada.

When I negotiated for the Pacific Rim National Park, it was with a Social Credit government. In Ontario, I deal with a Tory government; in New Brunswick with a Conservative government and in Quebec with a Liberal government. In Newfoundland, I started negotiating with a Liberal government and now I am dealing with a Conservative government. In Nova Scotia, I deal with a Liberal government. I am now having discussions with regard to new national parks with the NDP governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

I do not want to cause any problems. I just want a proper mechanism that will protect something that is very important in Canada, the preservation of more acres of land for conservation purposes only. This is why I do not think it would be advisable to impose in clause 10 the mechanism of clauses 4 to 7 for parks already agreed upon by the federal and provincial governments. I think it would make it more difficult for any minister in this portfolio to create new national parks.

I would like to be precise and state the case. The members of my party have not agreed to these amendments. I think they are self-defeating for the purpose of establishing national parks. Clauses 4 to 7 have been included at the request of the official opposition and with the support of other members, but not from my party. I would like the people of Canada to know that we did not like clauses 4 to 7, but we accepted them because they were recommended by the committee. I would like to give a warning to anyone who is in favour of national parks in Canada that this mechanism would make it difficult for any minister to be as efficient as this government has been in establishing new national parks in Canada, 10 new national parks in four years when there were only four new national parks in the previous four years.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a few comments to this particular motion. The motion refers to striking out clauses 4 to 7 of the amendments put in during the committee hearings. Our party appreciates that this particular clause refers to parks which have been set aside and which, in effect, are a fait accompli. It is not our intention to put any obstacles in the way of the development of these parks. Far from it. Our sole purpose in moving the amendments in committee was to make the point that, with regard to any new parks that might be developed in the future, public hearings should be held to determine the feelings of the people, not only in the vicinity of the park but across Canada.

I appreciate that in most cases parks are developed by agreement between the provincial and federal governments. The provincial governments do a lot of soul searching. They have a lot of discussion before agreeing to turn over the land to the federal government to develop a park. We feel, and this matter was discussed in committee, that possibly an amendment should be made to the act to grant a public hearing with regard to the development of a park in instances where the provincial government sets land aside without having a public hearing. Our point is simply that we believe that, in connection with the development of any new park, there should be a procedure for full and complete public hearings.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the minister has tried to throw a red herring across the path of this House with his suggestion that this would somehow interfere with federal-provincial agreement on the creation of national parks. It was not the intention, nor will it be the effect of the amendment, that was accepted by the majority of the committee to question provincial judgment on matters respecting national parks.

The establishment of national parks in Canada is an important matter. The minister if asking this House to trust the judgment of two governments without any opportunity for citizenship participation, without any opportunity for individual people of Canada, whether they are affected directly, whether they are members of the national and provincial parks association of Canada or whether they have any other reason to be interested, to make their views known relative to the boundaries, sites and related matters of new national parks that might be established.

I was amused to hear the minister suggest that the recent case in Nova Scotia somehow indicates there is an opportunity for individual Canadians to change decisions that are made in secret and in private by two levels of government. The best I can say for the minister's argument is that he is trying to make the best out of a very bad case. He knows as well as anyone else interested in parks in Canada that what happened in the case of Nova Scotia was a very exceptional and sad case in the history of the development of national parks in Canada. The reason the Liberal government of Nova Scotia caved in on the Ship Harbour national park was that there had been allowed to develop a substantial suspicion about it, a suspicion that was engendered precisely because there was no opportunity at the time when changes could have been made for the people directly affected to themselves make a case, express their concern and have some influence on the decision before it was made.

What the amendments accepted by the committee achieved is assurance that citizens will have a right to review decisions respecting national parks before they are a fait accompli. That is what was done. It was an attempt to assure to individual Canadians the right to question and perhaps improve upon decisions taken in secret by two levels of government. The amendment put before the committee, and accepted by the committee, would not have resulted in protracted discussion or debate which would have delayed interminably the establishment of new national parks. Provision was made for a limited period during which public hearings would be held. What the minister is concerned about here is simply an invasion upon the preserve which he and his officials have enjoyed exclusively for far too long. They have become accustomed to making these decisions in isolation without reference to the people of Canada, either those particulary interested because they live in areas where parks might be established, or those who might be concerned because of their particular interest in conservation.

The minister did make a concession. He allowed an amendment which would provide for a public hearing at such time or times as he, the minister, considered appropriate. Anyone who is experienced in this field knows that such an undertaking is virtually useless. It means that hearings will be held after the decisions have been taken. We have all had experience with that sort of thing. What the minister is offering in the amendment which he introduced, and which he has allowed to stand, is simply an opportunity for individual citizens to express their opinions, not to effect any changes.

Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of public hearings. There is the public hearing which is designed to acquaint people with what has been done—that is a public relations hearing—and there is the public hearing which is allowed to influence what is going to be done. That is participation, and it is a useful kind of hearing. What the minister is trying to prevent, in the amendment now before us, is participation. He is all in favour of a public relations hearing which would allow citizens to become involved when there is no point in their being involved. No opportunity would be afforded to conservationists or other interested groups to affect decisions which concern the location of national parks.

In testimony before the committee the minister was quite explicit on this point. He left no doubt as to his intention to shut the people of Canada out when it came to decisions on these matters. Of course, the original decisions have to be taken in private between the federal government and the province concerned, or between the federal government and the territory. But after the decisions have been taken, there should be an open public hearing. There are two reasons why this should be so. One is based on principle: there is a legitimate public interest in public business. The second reason is that continued privacy does not work. The system which the minister and his officials wish to perpetuate has created problems which public hearings could have avoided.

The best evidence of this concerns the proposed new park in the Yukon, Kluane. When the standing committee was in Whitehorse, we heard two concerns expressed by people who, before the arrival of the committee, had been given no public opportunity to discuss these matters arising from the establishment of a major new national park in their territory. The first concern was that no adequate survey of resources had been carried out, and that this failure to make an adequate survey might lead, later, to the disruption of the park. The second point was that there had been an inadequate explanation of the reasons which led the minister, after a discussion with mining companies, apparently in secret, to exclude 2,000 square miles of land originally scheduled for inclusion in the park. There was also the question of native rights, a question which had not been publicly aired prior to the arrival in Whitehorse of the standing committee.

I should like to put this question to the minister and to all Canadians who are concerned about national parks: whose interest is served when the size of a park is cut in secret by a minister meeting with representatives of mining interests in the north? Is the interest of the National and Provincial Parks Association served by a secret decision of this kind arrived at in the course of a meeting between a politician and representatives of mining interests? Is the general interest of the public served? Are the interests of the people of the Yukon served? Of course not. All these interests would be much better served if there were public hearings along the lines of the amendment we were able to introduce, and which was carried in the committee—an amendment which the minister is now trying to strike down.

I ask again: whose interest is served when a park is established without any serious effort being made to determine the hydro or resource potential which exists within its limits? I ask you to assume for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that a later generation happens to find a bonanza within the area of Kluane National Park, a bonanza similar to that which might have already been found had adequate surveys been carried out. If this bill stands and the minister's way prevails, mining interests in that later generation might also hold secret meetings with a future minister, meetings of the kind the hon. gentleman opposite has held with developers, and such meetings might result in a reduction of the land set aside in Kluane. More than the situation at Kluane would be affected, because once the process of excision begins in one park, no national park is safe. Parks would be endangered not only in the Yukon, but in all the provinces and territories of Canada. This is an aspect which all hon. members should consider before they cast their votes today on the minister's attempt to secure an amendment which would preserve this right to make secret decisions in areas of public business.

To return to the example the minister gave. Whose interest was served by so much secrecy and high-handedness in connection with Ship Harbour National Park, circumstances which led to the proposal for that park being cancelled and withdrawn? The secret procedures followed by the minister led to a situation in which Nova Scotia is without a national park at Ship Harbour. It was the purpose of myself and my colleagues on the committee to establish a procedure applicable to future parks, as well, but we were advised that an amendment along those lines would have gone beyond the ambit of the bill, that the unanimous consent of the House would have been necessary if it were to be accepted. And having looked at the minister's track record, we anticipated that the minister would not have agreed. So, in the circumstances, we sought to establish this principle in the case of the parks designated in the schedule to the bill, as well as those at Kluane, Nahanni, and on Baffin Island.

Certain valuable effects would follow if the House were able to uphold the judgment of the all-party standing committee and defeat the minister's attempt to undo the work of that committee. In future, when national parks are to be established or enlarged, a period of 90 days would be used for the purpose of determining whether special circumstances exist and, if there are problems, how serious they are likely to be. We would then be able to proceed on the basis of knowledge. The minister prefers to proceed as he did at Kluane, without holding public hearings and without telling anybody why 2,000 square miles were cut away. The minister did not even bother to find out what resource potential there might be which at a future time might mean a further large acreage being cut away from the park, setting a precedent which would endanger all national parks in Canada.

That is one result that would follow if we used the public hearings procedure. A second result that would follow is that it would provide a forum for the defenders of national parks, either of a park in that particular location or of national parks generally, to allay fears that might naturally develop. Had that been done at Ship Harbour, I venture to say that we would have had a new national park in Nova Scotia now. But we lost it because of the secrecy practised by the minister, which he now attempts to enshrine in legislation by these amendments today.

A third result that would follow is that we would inform more people about the importance of national parks. If the minister believes that his case for national parks in Canada has been won, that there is now a majority who in a given situation would prefer park development as opposed to resource development, then he is naive. Those of us who believe in national parks in Canada have a great selling job to do, and public hearings, as has been demonstrated on other occasions, can provide us with an opportunity to do that job.

A fourth effect of public hearings of the kind we are proposing, and which the minister is now trying to undo, is that we would establish the principle that our national parks are public business, that the government trusts the people enough to heed their voice in regard to where parks should be established and where their boundaries should be.

I, myself, proposed in the committee one procedure for public hearings, a procedure drawn from federal practice. The members of the committee felt that the procedure I proposed was too cumbersome, and I did not argue with that because I was interested in the principle of public hearings, not in their particular form. I was interested in their having an effect at a time that would allow people to have some influence on what was going to be done, instead of simply casting a useless vote yea or nay. I did not dig in on the question of the particular form of the public hearings I proposed. Instead, I accepted the language that had been proposed by my colleague from the NDP, the hon. member from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), language which the minister now proposes to strike down.

By their nature, national parks interest a minority of Canadians, although they are people who are genuinely concerned about our parks. They care deeply about the preservation of wild and natural places, and about the safety and protection of rare species and places. Those Canadians who want new national parks want these parks deeply. So, I believe, do the majority of the members of this House of all parties. The members of my party want them so much that we did literally everything in our power to have this bill passed in January rather than April. Before we agreed to an adjournment of this House, we insisted as a condition of that agreement that this bill be brought back at this stage so we could proceed immediately to pass it.

The minister disagreed and delayed the bill. The reason he did so, on the evidence of his amendments, is that the minister wants more than parks. This minister wants parks, the absolute control of which rests with him and his advisers, his bureaucrats. The difference between us on this bill and these amendments is that the minister wants authoritarian control over the parks. We want parks established by democratic procedures. The minister does not want to be bothered with parliament or with public hearings. He does not want to be bothered with territorial governments or with the National and Provincial Parks Association. He is, of course, prepared to consult with them, on his own terms and in his own time, but he is not prepared to give parliament or the public the right to participate, in an effective way, in a decision about where parks should be established, or how, or even why.

When this bill was first introduced in the other place, it did not even contain a requirement for public notice. It allowed the government to negotiate in secret any additions to parks and then to proclaim them without notice. It proposed to give to government the power to shut out of the process people whose land and lives might be affected, the conservation groups who might be interested and, of course, to shut out the parliamentary process. But that provision was too strong even for the other place. There is a greater sense of democracy in the Senate than in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so far as parks are concerned, because the other place amended the original bill and wrote in the requirement for a 90-day notice and publication in the Canada Gazette. That was the first change toward democratizing the procedure for setting up parks, and was a change that was forced on the minister.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Then, in the standing committee, other changes were proposed and passed to ensure that the public, from the poorest native with a trap line to the most sophisticated conservationist, would not be shut out of the process of establishing national parks. In particular, the committee required that the notice be published in various popular media, not buried in the fine print of the Canada Gazette. It established a process to guarantee public hearings at a period when proposals could still be changed, not hearings after the fact, as has been the practice of the minister, and as is his desire in the amendments that he is putting before the House today.

The committee voted deliberately to ensure that when parks are created in the two northern territories, the elected representatives of those territories would have a power stronger than the power of a mere rubber stamp. While our party initiated that idea, the amendment which carried was proposed by my colleague from Comox-Alberni, the hon. member of the NDP, and we will look forward when the voting comes to his support for the measure he proposed.

Throughout its deliberations the committee voted and acted against secrecy. It voted and acted to establish a system of parks by a democratic process. The amendments of the minister are designed to strike down those advances and to return to a situation where parks policy is decided by a select and secret few without any apparent trust in the people. That is a most alarming suggestion on the part of the minister and a most dangerous amendment. It places us back in the days when it was felt by governments, of all stripes perhaps, that the public had no rights. We believe that the public does have rights on questions of importance, such as the establishment of national parks, and consequently we intend to oppose the amendments moved by the minister which would deny the public the opportunity of playing a role in deciding questions concerning national parks while there was still a chance to influence those decisions.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), with his usual eloquence, was discussing amendments 3 and 4, and since we are going to be voting on them together, I presume he was in order in doing so. It is not my intention to defend the minister from any of the attacks made upon his desire for extreme secrecy. I am sure the minister is capable of presenting his own case on that score. Nor is it my intention to try to go around and around again on some of the matters which went around and around for some time in the committee.

May I say at once that in my view the committee that dealt with this bill devoted itself with a great deal of diligence to trying to examine and to sort out a good many complex issues that are inherent in this particular bill. I think it is fair to say that at the outset, when the bill was introduced in the other place, the minister, and probably his departmental officials, hoped the bill would be treated somewhat as a kind of housekeeping measure, to tidy up the situation and to put the final seal of parliamentary approval on the establishment of certain new national parks. Despite some of his criticisms about what happened at Ship Harbour, I think the hon. member for Rocky Mountain would not be averse to agreeing, at least to some extent, that the minister has devoted himself with some diligence to widening the national parks system in Canada. While there are many matters on which I may be in disagreement with the minister at this and other times, I am certainly quite prepared to give him some marks for his effort in this regard.

As I see it, there are essentially three important aspects to this bill, two of which are referred to in the two report stage amendments we are discussing in respect of Clauses 10 and 11 of the bill, and a third, which is not up for discussion at this time, covering provisions in Clause 2 of the bill for the governor in council to take steps leading to the addition of lands to existing parks. If you have noted the reprint of the bill you will have observed that there are certain additions to the original draft of the bill, incorporated in Clause 2, which apparently are not under debate or question at this time because no report stage amendments have been submitted to them. In point of fact the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) made some reference to these additions in Clause 2, in part at least. If I may say as an aside, they do represent what I consider to be an interesting development inasmuch as there is some automatic provision in that proposal for consideration by the standing committee and for action forthwith by the House on the report by the committee.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain spent most of his time talking about this question of public hearings, and I think quite rightly said his party put certain proposals forward in respect of public hearings which have not emerged in the bill as reported from the committee. He was quite right when he said that. The additions to Clause 10, with which the report stage amendment proposes to deal, are in terms which I proposed originally on Clause 2 as accepted by the committee. I fully admit that at the point in time when this particular matter was under consideration, it was with the tacit agreement of members of the NDP who were on the committee that this addition be made to Clause 10 and part of it to Clause 11.

One of the important constitutional issues involved in Clause 10, and I think this fact should not be lost on this House in light of the remarks by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, is the question of transfer of jurisdiction of lands within the provinces to the Crown in the right of Canada. Under the terms of the national parks trust, unless some future parliament undoes what parliament does at a given time, those lands remain forever in the status which parliament has assigned to them as national parks for the enjoyment of future generations of Canadians in unimpaired condition.

I do not quarrel too much with the argument put forward by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, and also put forward very eloquently in the committee by his colleague the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), about the desirability of public hearings into the question of the establishment of parks. I hope his eloquent remarks today, and during some of the discussions that took place before the committee, will not fall on deaf ears so far as the governments of the provinces are concerned. As I said, if I recall correctly the lengthy discussions we had in trying to sort this thing out, at the point in time an approach is made by the federal government to a province for certain lands to be put into national parks, and at the point of time when a provincial government is prepared seriously to consider that proposal, or if indeed the provincial government were to decide to take some initiative to offer certain land to national parks, it would be very desirable that the government of the province initiate and hold the kind of hearings to which the hon. member for Rocky Mountain referred. It is very unfortunate that the government of Nova Scotia did not see fit to take that kind of action in respect of the Ship Harbour proposal at an earlier stage than the point in time at which it apparently decided to abandon it.

In the matter of the establishment of new parks in the provinces, that is the point in time, and I agree strongly with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, that public hearings should be held into the advisability of there being created within that provinces, and from the lands of that province, a national park which would be surrendered to the people of Canada forever for that specific purpose. There is no way in which we in this House or this parliament can impose a provision of that kind upon the governments of the provinces. I do not have any regret that the hon. member for Rocky Mountain and his colleagues in the committee stressed this question of the need for public hearings so vigorously. But when one attempts to sort out all the complex issues involved, and I say this in spite of the fact that I was a party to this becoming part of the bill reported back to the House, then I must say I am now prepared to support the minister's report stage amendment.

I am not regretful in any way that we are having this report stage debate on this subject, and I am not regretful in any way that the minister was pushed to the point where he has to lay this kind of issue on the table, because hopefully the minister, in negotiating with the provinces, will pass on to them some of the views which are apparent among members of the House of Commons from all provinces regarding this matter of public hearings. My reaction might have been different under other circumstances, but I am glad the minister is not in his report stage amendment seeking to delete sub-clause (3). He is, as a result of the initiative of members of the Conservative party at the committee, leaving in that provision which requires the minister—and it says "shall"—to hold hearings on the question of how the park is to be used once it is officially established. I consider that to be a major improvement to the legislation as it was introduced. I think that in the context of the committee debates it should be apparent that the credit for initiating that particular idea during the committee proceedings rests with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain and his colleagues.

The situation with reference to clause 11, which deals with the parks in the Territories, is of course quite different constitutionally to that which applies to the provinces because there the land is held in the right of the federal Crown. Normally, for administrative purposes, this land is under the authority of the Territorial Lands Act which act, in addition to the National Parks Act, I think is one which gives the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) responsibility. So, in the case of the Northwest Territories, the minister simply is saying that, as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, he wishes to take that land from his jurisdiction under the Territorial Lands Act and propose that it be put under the National Parks Act. I think the minister can be cited for a lack of adequate public hearings on the question of advisability of establishing those parks. This is a matter of debate. However, all that clause 11 does is propose that three specific parks be added to the schedule of the National Parks Act.

So far as I know, the only public hearings that were held on the question in the sense the term is being used by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain were the public hearings held by the committee. That was one reason I strongly supported the idea of the committee going to Whitehorse, so we could at least learn the views of the people of the Yukon Territory. We had before the committee in Ottawa spokesmen interested in the various aspects of the proposed parks in the Northwest Territories. That process has taken place. There is information contained in the records of the committee which satisfies me that the councils of the two Territories had in fact approved the idea of these parks and that there is agreement on all questions except that of the rights of the aboriginal inhabitants of the area. Although there are other aspects of the territories in the north which will come up under one of the other report stage amendments, which I shall not go into at this point, it seems to me that this idea of having further committee hearings, which the deletion of the proposed section would call for, would be really rather redundant at this point in respect of the three specific parks proposed for the two territories.

So far as I am concerned this is not something which should really concern us too much. The minister at this point in effect is saying that we do not need committee hearings to examine these three particular parks in the territories. I really wish that the clauses of the bill which have to do with additions to existing parks had referred to the establishment of new parks. This relates to something the hon. member for Rocky Mountain said. This is beyond the scope of the bill but if that proposal had been included, along with the proposed committee amendments to clause 2 of the bill, then we would have had the other side of the coin. If there were a proposal to establish, either in the territories or in the provinces, a new national park, the standing committee of this House could examine the merit of the proposal, hopefully concurrent with public hearings held under arrangements made by the provinces or in the case of the territories hopefully through some arrangements made by the standing committee with the territorial councils. I think the status of the territories is a matter being discussed not very far away from this chamber this afternoon by the committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I might have something to say about this later on when we come to one of the other report stage amendments, but so far as I am concerned the really important improvements that it was possible for the committee to make will be retained if the report stage amendments as introduced today are accepted by the House. I hope that, without too lengthy discussion by other members of the House, it may be possible for us to achieve the purpose that has been referred to by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain so eloquently; that is, a desire to have these particular parks which are to be finally established by this bill come into being for the benefit and use of the people of Canada.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, right at the outset I wish to indicate I am disappointed the minister has assumed this posture this afternoon. He has been in charge of the national parks program for a number of years. I think that anyone who has the privilege of this responsibility learns as his first lesson in the area of national parks administration that the essence of wisdom is communion with public opinion and having close rapport with the needs of the people of Canada. This is the reason, following the deliberations of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the amendments were first proposed that there be close consultation with the people in all respects and this is why the amendments were approved at that time. I am sure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) who just concluded his remarks, and who was with us in this viewpoint at that time, if he reconsidered the statements he has made, would come to the conclusion that his original wisdom was the correct approach.

The minister, in his statement this afternoon, has spoken once again about the marvellous developments that have taken place in the Canada national parks system in the past few years. I would remind the hon. gentleman that it has taken an unconscionably long time to achieve this breakthrough in the development and expansion of our national parks system. The amazing thing is that the public pressure for national parks has been growing, and under an atmosphere of that kind it should be relatively easy to have fairly substantial tracts of land reserved in order to meet the rising demand for recreational facilities and for the conservation and preservation of areas of particular interest in Canada. Notwithstanding the growing demand in the face of population pressures, in the face of more leisure time and also more disposable income, it has taken almost 20 years to make a major breakthrough in the development of national parks.

The bill that is before us now is the climax of negotiations that have been going on ever since the department of northern affairs and national resources was established in 1953. The minister at that time was the Hon. Jean Lesage, and he immediately began negotiations for the expansion of the national park system which has been carried on by succeeding governments. There had been hardly any development in the conservation area for a couple of decades previous to that time. The war, of course, interfered with developments at this time, and it was not until a department was established that was specifically dedicated to the proposition of northern and resource development that we began to move in a positive direction.

Therefore, I am disappointed that the minister who has the responsibility for the department at the moment is reversing the approach that has gradually unfolded as the sensitive negotiations that have been going on for this long period have made it possible now to legislate some specific park areas into being.

I know that the initial breakthrough came in the latter 1950's and early 1960's with Terra Nova in Newfoundland, and also with a new national park in the province of Nova Scotia. The Maritimes have always been more responsive to national park development because long ago they recognized that one of their major assets was the natural beauty with which they are endowed. It was, therefore, fairly easy to persuade the Maritime provinces, particulary Nova Scotia when it was under the leadership of the hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), to co-operate in the national parks development. He had a great sensitivity to the prospects of national park development in the interests of the general economy. Let me state as an aside that it was also in Nova Scotia that one of the major historic park developments was negotiated between the federal and the provincial governments, namely the complete restoration of the historic Fort Louisbourg which is now almost completed. That was also in the time of the provincial leadership of the hon. gentleman who is now leading the opposition in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: Other than the Maritimes, it has always been difficult to get provincial approval for a national park development. For example, when the first minister of the department of northern affairs and national resources, the Hon. Jean Lesage, became premier of the province of Quebec he became interested immediately in making available large tracts of land in that province which would become a part of the national parks system.

The two great areas of underdevelopment in the national parks system have been in the two major provinces—Ontario and Quebec. They preferred to develop their own provincial park systems rather than to work under the umbrella of the national parks system. I know from my own experience that one of the reasons they were so sensitive to federal intrusion was Ottawa's refusal to consult and negotiate in public, which is the posture that the minister is reverting to under the amendments which are before the House this afternoon. Unfortunately, the negotiations with the province of Quebec were delayed because of the "quiet revolution" that took place when the matter of federal-provincial jurisdiction became one of the major political concerns in the decade of the 1960's. Quebec has now established some national parks; Ontario still has a long way to go.

I suggest to the minister, who is not here at the moment—I trust that he will read my remarks—that he will not help to persuade Ontario to become an enthusiastic supporter of the national parks system if he reverses the trend that has been under way, particularly since the Resources for Tomorrow Conference, since the establishment of the Federal-Provincial Parks Association, and particularly since the establishment of the Resource Ministers Council which brought a new era of mutual understanding and concern in the conservation area. The refusal to consult in public, both with the governments and the people concerned, will hamper to a substantial degree the improved atmosphere that I am sure still prevails and the more positive attitude that prevails in the province of Ontario.

The proposal that is being made here this afternoon in the minister's amendments will make it extremely difficult to negotiate in the north. The new department of northern affairs and national resources for the first time brought that huge northern expanse of territory into the Canadian body politic in the early 1950's. Immediately negotiations got under way with a view to establishing a park in each of the territorial areas, in the Yukon territory, and in the western and eastern parts of the Northwest Territories. Ottawa, of course, had complete jurisdiction over the land area in the territory north of the 60th parallel, so the government of Canada could take quite an arbitrary approach in setting aside lands for the establishment of national parks.

Northerners are a very independent breed of frontiersmen and pioneers, and they made it quite clear that they wanted to have a say in how the land area of northern Canada should be used. Proposals have been under discussion with the various interests in the territories for a considerable number of years, and now they are coming before the House as legislation. They are still not finalized. The amendment before the House flies in the face of the experience of the committee when it met in the Yukon last December to consult with the local people with respect to the establishment of Kluane National Park. It was as a result of the direct contact of the members of the committee with vox populi as we discovered it during the two days of hearings at Whitehorse, that amendments were introduced to the legislation and approved by the committee. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) certainly felt, after hearing the expression of public opinion, that it was absolutely necessary that the process of consultation be extended. As a result, following the hearings in the Yukon, the committee approved these amendments.

Mr. Speaker, it is not going to ease the situation to reverse ourselves in this respect; indeed, I hope parliament will not do that and I hope that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni will stay with his original viewpoint. It was fresh in his mind when he first supported the amendment to broaden consultation. I guess after two or three months he has forgotten the forcefulness of public opinion in the territories on this matter. I suggest that he present himself to the committee that is now meeting in another part of parliament hill and listen to the representations by the spokesmen of the territorial governments.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says he would be there if he did not have to listen to me. I do not order the business of this House, and I think it is unfortunate that members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development are occupied with this debate this afternoon when they should be listening to the representations of members of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Councils who are in the city. My point is that if the hon. gentleman would listen to that voice once again and get tuned in to it he would not reverse himself as he indicated he was going to do in supporting the amendment proposed by the minister.

I understand the problem of the minister and the conflict of interest that is built into his portfolio. Northern development is actually opposed to the conservation interests. This conflict has always existed in the department, even when it was called northern affairs and resources. There were two aspects of that portfolio that had to be administered by the one minister. He had to assure development of the north and, at the same time, he had the conservationist responsibility under the resources aspect of his portfolio. The dichotomy is even more severe today and more difficult to reconcile because the department now emphasizes northern development which accentuates areas of economic development responsibility. It used to be merely northern affairs and this did not imply any particular emphasis. I am sure this problem cannot be reconciled until the minister is relieved of his responsibility in the area of resource conversation, and particularly in the area of administration of national parks.

I believe that national parks, in all their various manifestations, should come under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Environment. I trust that one of the major changes that will be made in the set-up of government departments will be in this area. I am sure that in the ministry of environment, the minister responsible will be only too pleased to consult with the people of Canada because no conservation program can be successful until it has the broad support of public opinion.

The vast majority of Canadians are now strongly in favour of wise management and multiple use of our renewable resources. National parks are in the area of renewable resources and, as the National Parks Act says, they should be kept in their original unspoiled state for the use of succeeding generations.

When it comes to consultation, the minister blows hot and cold, particularly in regard to national parks in western Canada which, like northern Canada, originally had the greatest acreage dedicated to the perpetual use of the people. That was because of the constitutional situation, of course, which provided that western lands areas were originally under the jurisdiction of the federal Crown, even as the northern land areas are under the jurisdiction of the federal Crown up to the present day. But national parks in western Canada increasingly have had to meet growing demands for multiuse of land areas in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but I have to interrupt him because his time has expired. He can pursue his remarks, of course, with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the motion before the House, motions Nos. 3 and 4, there was an agreement that a decision on No. 3 would apply to motion No. 4.

On motion No. 3 (Mr. Chrétien). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to on division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to on division.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 5:

That Bill C-6, An Act to amend the National Parks Act, be amended in Clause 11:

(a) by striking out line 3 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"after consultation with the Council of the Yukon"

(b) by striking out line 19 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"the consultation referred to in subsection"

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief because I only want to explain the purpose of this amendment.

I think there were lengthy discussions in committee to determine the kind of consultation that should take place both with the Council of the Yukon and the Council of the Northwest Territories with respect to the establishment of national parks in the north. After major discussions on the meaning of the words and the interpretation of the Department of Justice, I find I must ask the House to replace the words "approval by the Council" by the words "consultation with the Council" because the term "approval" actually means laying out a right for the Council of the Northwest Territories and the Council of the Yukon, or some sort of a right of veto over the administration of Crown lands in the north and it is not appropriate to discuss that matter here in this House when dealing with parks. If hon. members want to transfer the control of northern resources to the elected representatives of northern Canada, it will have to be done under another piece of legislation introduced before the House and now being considered in committee, the bill on the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories Administration.

With respect to clause 11, it would not be appropriate to change the very nature of Crown relations regarding land north of the 60th parallel. That is why we decided to put back in the words "after consultation" because I think it is a question of eligibility since "approval" would give the elected representatives of the Northwest Territories constitutional powers not provided for under the Northwest Territories and Yukon legislation.

● (1620)

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the government decided to re-establish the word "consultation" and if hon. members wish to submit the control of Canada's northern resources to the approval of the representatives of the Territories, they should do it before the committee or during the consideration of the bill on the constitutional status of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, seconded by my colleague from Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), I move that Motion No. 5 be adopted by the House.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not take much of the time of the House. The minister is proposing a return to the original language of the bill, language which in the considered judgment of the committee was inappropriate, language which the committee acted to strike out, to amend. The original language would have written into law a statutory double standard. It provided that if you wanted to establish a national park in Quebec, you must ask the local government; if you wanted to establish a national park in Ontario, you must ask the local government; but if you wanted to establish a national park in the Yukon or Northwest Territories, you tell the local government. Provisions like that make a mockery of any claim of belief in more self-government for the territories. We, in my party, do not propose to pass a mockery into law.

The minister has made the point that this matter can be discussed in committee during study of another bill. The point remains. There is language in the bill before the House today with which we, as a parliament, must deal today, in considering this bill. It is language in this bill, not in any other, which expresses the attitude of the House of Commons of Canada on the status and potential of governments in the territories of the north. You cannot get around this by saying that it should be dealt with in another bill. If this should be discussed during the consideration of another bill, the minister should not have introduced the word "consultation" into the present bill. He did. It is that with which we are dealing. A principle is involved which, although it might arise on other occasions and in other bills, has arisen here and cannot be blinked away.

Actually, it is known to members of the committee that there has been agreement by the councils for the particular parks established. There is no threat to them. What we are doing is establishing the attitude of parliament, the view of parliament, that there should be an increase in the powers of self-government existing in the northern territories. We also think that this bill would set a precedent for the establishment of future parks, so that if more parks are to be established in the north there must be approval by the elected representatives of the people and not merely some kind of consultation.

We, in the Progressive Conservative party, introduced an amendment which would, for the limited and special purposes of establishing national parks, give the people of the territories the same rights as the people of Ontario, Quebec and other parts of Canada, an amendment which would treat them as citizens not as subjects. Instead of consultations, we proposed that there must be the agreement of the elected councils of the territories before any large part of a territory could be taken away and used as a national park.

My colleague from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), a member of the NDP, preferred a gentler word than agreement. He preferred "approval", an amendment requiring that the elected territorial councils approve of any proposal to permanently remove lands from an area that will soon be a province. We accepted his softer language. It expressed the principle that democracy means something in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. So, the amendment approved in committee is an amendment in the language of the NDP, and it is that which the minister proposes to strike down today. We oppose that action by the minister, that strike against democracy, and will look forward, when the voting comes, to having the support of the NDP in sustaining an improvement which the NDP itself proposed.

It is apparent to me, sir, that the minister and his advisers find it inconvenient to treat the people of the territories as though they are citizens. The minister and his advisers concocted a phony argument in committee, that to give the councils of the territories a say on whether a national park is to be established in this region is somehow to give them absolute control over all the natural resources of the north. That, sir, is an absurd argument, which ignores the very special nature of national parks. I, as the representative of a constituency with national parks in it, have every reason to know that when a national park is created, all manner of administrative problems are created too: Native rights are affected; normal jurisdiction over municipal highway and other matters is suspended or changed; planning becomes very difficult. That is evident in Alberta and wherever else national parks exist. The establishment of a national park very much alters and affects the future of the region in which the park lies. The word "consultation" would mean that the territories concerned would have no right to influence that territory's future direction. "Approval" would at least allow for a chance to shape that future.

Sir, the larger question of resources is not affected at all. Elected spokesmen of the territories have made it clear that the status they want is a status—I quote Ken MacKinnon of the Yukon Territorial Council, in testimony to the standing committee in Whitehorse in December:

> Without the immediate control of natural resources, the reason being that we think we have to prove to the people of Canada and to the government of Canada that we are as capable of dealing with the resources of the province as any other area of Canada.

So, there is no question at all about control of resources.

There is, however, sir, a basic question which must be faced, the question as to whether we are going to trust the judgment of Canadians who happen to live in the two territories. Are we going to say that when it comes to establishing parks we trust the premier of Quebec more than we trust the elected representatives of the Yukon; that we trust the premier of Ontario more than the elected representatives of the Northwest Territories; that we trust the premier of Nova Scotia more than the duly elected representatives of the north? That is what it comes down to. Perhaps it is a hard question, because so much land is involved. I remind the House that there is also a lot of land in the north of several provinces, and while it might be inconvenient for the minister and his advisers to have to deal with elected representatives in the province before taking land away forever and creating a national park, we put up with that inconvenience because we are a democratic state. The amendment here, by the minister and his advisers, would have democracy stop at the border of the territories, so far as national parks are concerned.

The real question facing us is: Are we prepared to endorse that double standard and write it into law, or will we extend to the citizens of the territories the same trust on the limited question of national parks that we extend to the citizens of the rest of Canada.

● (1630)

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on my position on this matter. I wish to make it clear that my position is not influenced by the semantics of the minister or the rhetoric of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). As the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) stated, an amendment was proposed in committee to substitute the words "consultation with" by the words "agreement had been reached with". We got into quite a discussion about what was involved in the legal meaning of the word "agreement". As the hon. member for Rocky Mountain said, I suggested that the words that might be used would be "following approval by".

The minister still maintains the position that somehow or other this would give the council of the territories legal power over the resources of the north. I am not going to argue that point with him now, but I would like to state briefly to the House my view of the position. We are looking at the text of a bill which is hopefully moving toward becoming the law of Canada. In this clause we are dealing with a proposal to establish three parks in the Northwest Territories. I stated in committee, and I still maintain at this time in history, that regardless of what should be done about changing the constitutional position of the two territories, under the bill that is being considered today, national parks should not be established in the Northwest Territories without the approval of the council.

According to the records of the committee, and the testimony given by people in Whitehorse with regard to these three specific parks, the territorial councils have given their approval by resolution of the territorial council of the Yukon and, I understand, by consensus of members of the territorial council of the Northwest Territories. That is the situation with regard to these parks. If this legislation is passed, these areas will become parks within the provisions of the act as it emerges from this House. As far as I can understand this amendment, if we adopt it, the minister will be obliged to consult with the councils of the territories with regard to how he goes about developing those parks. In this regard, I submit that the councils of the territories will, in fact, be on all fours with the legislatures and governments of the provinces.

Even though the law does not state that the minister has to consult with the provincial authorities, this kind of consultation does take place. In effect, what we are doing is tying the minister down to consulting with the territorial councils on the development of those parks. That is what I understand the law will mean when it is passed. The present minister, or any future minister responsible for the establishment of national parks, in Canada, would be stupid to establish a park in either of the territories without the prior approval of the two councils. In fact, I would be happy if it were possible to have that provision in the law. When arguing the bill in the other place, the minister almost invited us to consider this aspect of the matter. It will be interesting to hear his views in committee on the bill to amend the territorial act. We can discuss that question there. Obviously, we cannot at this time tie down the question of prior approval in the parks act.

Having tried to consider what the law will mean, I am satisfied at this point that if it means the withdrawal of the proposal I made in committee, I am prepared to accept this proposal that the consultation that will be required in the development of those parks is really what is essential. However, I am not in any way retracting anything I said in committee about the need for the approval of the territorial councils to be obtained in the establishment of the parks.

In point of fact, the minister did obtain that approval, even though I might agree with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain that some of the proper hearings that should have taken place with regard to those proposals did not take place. Nevertheless, the council did approve the establishment of these parks. In that sense, let me close by saying there is some validity to the argument that the words "approval of" would be redundant in connection with this particular clause of the bill.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GRANT LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO CANDIDATE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East) moved that Bill C-105, to amend the Canada Elections Act (leave of absence) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the aim of this bill is simply to make every Canadian eligible to be a candidate for election to Parliament to a degree not presently enjoyed. It is true that every Canadian citizen has the legal right to stand for parliament and, if elected, to serve in it. However, it is not true that every Canadian has the economic possibility of doing so because there are many Canadians who are prevented by the conditions of their work from utilizing to the full the opportunity which they are given in political theory. The purport of this bill is to make it possible for any Canadian who is working for a corporation, an institution, or is employed in some other way, to be eligible to stand for parliament and to serve in it without jeopardizing his own and his family's economic future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: The need for this provision, and the practicality of it, has been illustrated in the report of an organization called The Conference Board, an American group which recently did a study on policies on leaves for political and social action. They took a survey of 800 of the 1,000 companies studied by Fortune magazine. To this survey, 34 per cent responded, of which 28 per cent indicated they had formal policies on leaves of absence. In the report that they published they indicated the following reasons for having such a policy of providing leaves of absence so that employees might be elected to public office or in another way serve the community: first, to demonstrate corporate responsibility. A company and an institution have a certain kind of citizenship and they can be either responsible or irresponsible corporate citizens. A company that wants to indicate that it is taking a responsible part in the life of the country will surely make it possible for its employees to have the freedom to be candidates and to be members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: The second reason was that the corporation recognized that democracy does not function well unless all segments of the population are represented. It is, therefore, desirable that the widest possible representation of the labour force be found in the House of Commons. Third, it was recognized by the companies which have this kind of leaves of absence policy that, to a large degree, the well-being of business depends upon the kind of government that a nation has. It was said once by a corporate leader in the United States that what is good for business is good for the nation. But I think that increasingly we recognize that what is good for the nation is also good fur business.

Finally, the point was made that an opportunity for employees to participate in the political life of the country is in itself a form of job enrichment, that today we are seeing we must have a wider definition of work. Work includes not only that for which we are paid; it includes also opportunities for serving society, and one ought to see the opportunity of serving in parliament as an extension of his daily work.

I hope that it will be possible for parliament to give second reading to this bill, and to send it to committee, so that we might think in terms of it becoming the practice in Canada that all employers will be required to give to their employees a leave of absence if they become candidates for parliament, and a leave of absence should the person be elected, so that the person might then be free to serve without economic anxiety.

I could suggest to you, sir, certain precise advantages to the employee affected were this to become the common practice in Canada. First of all, it guarantees to him the record of continuous service which is necessary for most pension plans and other benefit programs. Second, and more important, it would provide the employee with job security. One of the things that we need to make it possible for working people to seek public office is to remove the financial anxiety which now haunts so many political candidates, to make it possible for a candidate to stand for office and to serve a term here knowing that if, at the end of that term, he decides to return to industry or business or if he is defeated in the next election, at least he has a job to which to return.

There are many members in this parliament who, because of the nature of their work, are self-employed. They are able, as it were, to suspend many of their activities and their self-employment through their profession or privately owned business. They know they can go back to that activity and they enter into politics with a sense of security and family responsibility. But let us think of the large number of people who are prevented from offering themselves for public service simply because they lack that security. Can we not by this simple action make it possible to open the door of opportunity to serve in public service to a much larger number of Canadians?

I think the need for this is illustrated in the very membership of the House of Commons. I think it is fair to say that more than 50 per cent of members of parliament are self employed. As I look over the number of occupations represented in parliament I am impressed, not only by the rich diversity, but also by the way in which certain occupations are much more largely represented than others. There are 20 businessmen, two contractors, one druggist, 18 farmers, 5 industrialists, 63 lawyers, 13 merchants, 1 notary, 1 osteopath, 2 ranchers, 7 doctors, 2 veterinarians and 3 publishers, for a total of 148.

Probably most members of parliament are self-employed or in occupations and professions in which they would find it relatively easy to become self employed. I do not mean that their businesses or professions are in any way easy but it is certainly easy to become self employed if you are a member of a profession or experienced in business.

So I put it to you that we should think more in terms of parliament representing Canada as it is, and Canada is certainly not a country where 50 per cent of the people are self employed but rather, most Canadians are working for a corporation, a small business or an institution. I think that if most Canadians are to have a chance to stand for parliament and seek public office, they must have this kind of opportunity.

I think there are two important precedents that give support to the bill before us. The first of these was legislation passed in 1942 by the parliament of Canada called the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act. It was a forward looking measure that anticipated the economic insecurity forced upon a large number of Canadians who had volunteered for armed service and who, in many instances, had no guarantee that when they came back from service overseas or from another part of Canada they would have a job to return to.

Some companies, in a spirit of patriotism and social responsibility, had made that kind of guarantee, but not all employers had made it. So in 1942 parliament passed the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act which required all employers to reinstate in employment any member of His Majesty's forces who was employed before going on active service. If we could do that for armed service, in time of war, why can we not do it for public service in time of peace? If it was right then, it is right now. We could do it then, so let us do it now.

The second precedent that gives support to my proposal is the Quebec Elections Act which in two instances accepts the principle that this bill, C-105, enunciates. I think the national assembly of Quebec has taken a forward step in this regard. The Quebec Elections Act requires, in respect to election officers, that an employer is required to allow any employee to be an election officer and to give him time off from work, and is forbidden to dismiss him on that account. Section 142a of the same act provides that every employer whose employee is a candidate must allow the employee to absent himself until the day following polling day; the employer is forbidden to dismiss him on that account, and does not have to pay him. The act provides penalties for any employer in the province of Quebec who does not comply with this provision; he must make it possible for an employee to be an elections officer or a candidate, if the employee has requested time off from his duties, without jeopardizing his future. If we extend that principle to cover the time off work that would be required for persons to serve at least one term in parliament, then we would achieve an objective which, I submit, would be welcomed across the country, one that would make it possible for Canadians to realize their aspirations.

We do not need to have any serious apprehensions about creating difficulty for an employer. For one thing, if this bill were enacted it would affect only those Canadians who are seeking public office, and that number is never enormous. In any case, it would affect most of all those who become candidates for the major political parties; consequently, we are only thinking of about 1,000 candidates every four years or so. As well, we are thinking in terms of a fraction of the 264 persons elected to parliament because there would always be a significant number of members who would be self-employed. We are thinking of a small and manageable number who would be able to contribute to the well-being of their country.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would refer hon. members to "The Great Canadian Stampede", by Alan Heisey. I think we can take his words very seriously in light of this problem. A little more than ten years ago the writer considered offering himself as a candidate for parliament and was challenged by his employer. He had to make a snap decision whether he would go ahead with his ambition to serve the people of Canada, and jeopardize his future and risk his family's security, or back off. At page 104 of his book he writes:

> Before citizens can play larger roles in the political process there needs to be a clearer authority for such activities. Large corporations often discourage their employees from taking an interest in public life...
> ... we need ... clarification in every jurisdiction of the right to elected office. Only if you have been faced with a weekend to decide between withdrawing from a commitment to public office or facing instant dismissal from your employer, can you fully share the sense of need.

That is one voice from a fellow citizen outside this chamber. Let us listen to that voice, let us recognize realistically that his view is shared by a large number of people, and let us do something about it. This bill gives us such an opportunity, and I hope members from all parties will join in making it possible for the bill to stay alive in order that it may go to committee for further study and, hopefully, at a later date become part of the law and the practice of this land.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to speak on this bill this afternoon, because it is not a bill that we would look at in a partisan way but one that should concern us all as individual parliamentarians or citizens. I am sure there are few of us who did not have a great deal of concern, when we decided to seek public office at the federal level, about giving up a profession or a job often in the most productive years, to devote ourselves full-time to being an MP. We must all have wondered what would happen when we tried to re-establish ourselves in our professions or jobs after a period of time.

I compliment the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) for bringing forward Bill C-105 to amend the Canada Elections Act. The bill introduced by the hon. member and given first reading on March 18, 1974, proposes to provide to employees to whom the Canada Labour Code, part III, is applicable, leave of absence, with or without pay, to seek nomination. It would also require an employer to grant an employee elected as a member of the House of Commons leave of absence, without pay, for up to and including five years.

In any democratic jurisdiction it is recognized that it is the duty of every qualified citizen to participate in the political process of the nation and, should he aspire to being a candidate for election, that the restrictions of his employment should, in so far as reasonably possible, be removed to permit him to exercise this civic duty. This, in essence, is the provision of section 23(14) of the Canada Elections Act and is reflected for the public sector employment in section 32(3) of the Public Service Employment Act, recognizing that such action by the employee should not prejudice his continued usefulness to the public service. This provision is a natural consequence of protecting employees who wish not to sever their public service employment in the event they are unsuccessful in being elected and to ensure that the public service retains its politically neutral character.

Under the PSEA a public servant, if elected, ceases to be an employee of the public service. Bill C-105 would require employers to grant leave of absence, without pay, to an employee elected to the House of Commons, for up to five years. The rationale of this provision is to provide security to the employee to return to his former employment, should he so elect, after one tour of duty as it were, in the House of Commons.

The motives behind this provision are commendable, to a point. While the number of persons taking advantage of such a provision would no doubt be small, the impact on the employer either in the public or the private sector should be examined to determine whether such a provision is fair to an employer. It should be noted, of course, that in most cases federal jurisdiction in labour matters relates to large corporations: banks, railways, shipping companies, airlines and other national corporations. Usually we are not considering the small employer, the employer who hires two or three people. I think that the heavy financial burden involved in this proposal would weigh heavily upon an employer who is without considerable financial means. In addition, we should consider the possible effects on the employee if he should wish to take advantage of such a provision were this amendment to become a reality.

In the past, such provisions have been brought in on a fairly large scale, in the event of a major conflict, as an incentive to providing the necessary manpower to achieve mobilization plans. Employers undertook to respect the spirit as well as the letter of such provisions as their contribution to the nation at a time when its existence was threatened. This aspect of employment security has not been considered necessary at times other than of national emergency. This bill seeks, for a very small group, special provisions for such security up to five years. Such security has been recognized to a degree by providing legislation to ensure a pension to any member of the House who has served in more than two parliaments.

One must consider the position of the employer in the private sector who would be required to rehire the employee, without notice, at any time up to the five-year anniversary date. The bill does not refer to the type of employment or level which upon return the employee would expect. In certain cases his seniority might be respected, whereas in others, especially where the absence had been for some time, one can anticipate that circumstances would have altered to the point that the rehiring would cause embarrassment to both employer and employee.

Turning to the public sector—as I see it, this provision would apply to Crown corporations—similar embarrassment could result for both employer and employee. As mentioned earlier, the Public Service Employment Act makes no such provision for extended leave of absence, and we believe that none should be considered if it is intended that we continue to respect the character of a politically neutral public service. I believe the committee must examine this aspect of the question. If someone has been active in the House of Commons in a partisan way—and we must be partisan if we are properly to carry out our function—can that person, if he is again employed in the public service, assume the degree of political neutrality which we expect of our public servants?

We must also remember that this legislation would affect only a small part of the labour force. I do not say that we should not pass this bill because it affects only a small number of people, but we must recognize that only about 6 per cent of all employees in the nation are covered by federal jurisdiction respecting employment. Those coming under provincial jurisdiction would not be included. As I understand it, this measure would not apply to persons of federal civil service status. This is another aspect which we must examine.

Is it desirable for people to play a politically partisan role and at the end of five years return to the public service: would not the political neutrality of such a person be destroyed? I think most members will recall the case which arose a couple of years ago of the public servant who wished to be nominated. The request was refused. In the case in question the public servant played a special role requiring a high degree of independence. We must consider the many aspects of this bill. We are all concerned about the heavy responsibilities members of parliament must assume personally, and about the loss they must suffer through not following their careers or professions during time spent in the service of the House.

I want this bill to be examined by the committee. Let it be examined objectively by members of parliament who could be much affected by it. We must be cognizant of the heavy workload of the committee in connection with the electoral boundaries readjustment references now before it. Although that work must be done, I am confident that this bill will receive some consideration in the committee. Having said those few words, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down and allow other hon. members to speak.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of saying a few words on the bill before us. I am pleased, also, the party opposite will allow this bill to go to committee. I hope it will not be held up for long in committee. My party has always believed in giving individuals the freedom to run for political office. Quite a few provincial governments support the concept of leave of absence for persons who want to run for political office at the federal, provincial or municipal level. I myself was fortunate in being granted leave of absence on a year to year basis for as long as I need it. Mine is a very broadminded school board. I know of other teachers who have become members of this House but who were not able to obtain leave of absence. Clearly, there is no equality of opportunity for people to become members of this House.

I support the principle of this bill and would go even further than it does and extend the term contemplated to ten years or even for an indefinite time. Some employers are already doing this. I know that in the past some employers have harassed employees of a different political stripe who wanted to stand for nomination. A couple of years ago a story appeared in the daily newspapers of my home province concerning a chap in Vancouver who wanted to run for the NDP. His employer, obviously of a different political stripe, denied the employee, who was an executive in a small corporation, the right to be nominated. In the end, bowing to pressure exerted on him the would-be candidate withdrew. That does not speak well of our democracy.

When I was first nominated in 1968 I applied for leave of absence. My school board granted me eight weeks leave of absence without pay. Several weeks later I heard that my school board had been called by some political hatchet man who had asked, "Can Nesdoly remain as school principal if he loses the election, in view of his political beliefs?" This is the sort of thing that people in my party and, I am sure, those in other parties have had to face on occasion.

If we really believe in practising democracy we should bring forth legislation that will protect the rights of people who run for office, if they so desire. On that note I will resume my seat and give other members a chance to say a few words. Or perhaps we could give this bill second reading now.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the parliamentary secretary for the position he has taken on behalf of his party. I think the principle of this bill is worthy of consideration. The parliamentary secretary dealt with one matter with which I somewhat disagree, namely, the position of the public servant. I do not think a public servant, or any other person who has sat in this House, is tainted for the purpose of resuming his employment. We have examples of such men in Mr. Justice Abbott, the Hon. Davie Fulton, now a judge, Judge Clunis, and Judge Honey. Should such men be disqualified, because of service in the House of Commons, from sitting on the bench? Being a member of the House may be a broadening experience; in fact, it may make them better judges because there is an element of judgment and discretion which a member has to exercise and with which he learns to deal. I dare say the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would agree that sitting in this House should not even disqualify one from sitting in the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I really rose on behalf of public servants, to put forward that caveat and to congratulate the parliamentary secretary for the position he has taken, because we are dealing with a very important principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could call it six o'clock, it being almost that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With the mood the House is in, maybe we could pass another bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the excellent suggestion of the parliamentary secretary. Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock and the time allotted for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT DELINEATING GOVERNMENT'S POWERS IN DISPOSING OF PUBLIC LANDS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-6, to amend the National Parks Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are considering motions Nos. 6, 7 and 8 which should be grouped for the purpose of debate as has already been indicated. Motion No. 6 might be voted upon separately. It is also suggested by the Chair that the vote on motion No. 7 should also dispose of motion No. 8. Unless hon. members quarrel with this thinking, this is the way in which the Chair suggests we should proceed.

Mr. Barnett: As Your Honour is aware, the three motions deal with the same subject matter. Two are in my name and one is in the name of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). I think you will find that motion No. 7 embraces in its subject matter my motions No. 6 and No. 8. If it were agreeable to the House, I would be willing to agree that we discuss and reach a decision on motion No. 7. If that motion were to pass, it would become the text of the bill as amended and then, in the circumstances, it would be acceptable to me if I were permitted to drop my two motions. Thus, I suggest we debate motion No. 7 which stands in the name of the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that we consider motion 6, 7 and 8, but that instead of putting motion No. 6, the Chair should put motion No. 7, and that the disposition of that motion would determine the other two. The hon. member has raised a good point of order. Perhaps I could hear other hon. members thereon.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, since the motions concern the same subject matter we are agreeable to dealing with them at the same time and the debate taking place on motion No. 7.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of motions 6 and 8 is included in my own motion No. 7, and if we were to dispose of motion No. 7 we would be disposing of motions 6 and 8 in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). However, I would not want to take the credit away from the hon. member for Comox-Alberni: it is really his motion, anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that it is agreed, and it is so ordered. For the record, I shall put the three motions and we shall consider them as a package on the understanding that the fate of the other two motions will be determined by the disposition of motion No. 7.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) moves:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-6, an act to amend the National Parks Act, be amended in subclause 11(1) by deleting lines 6 to 17 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"mation, set aside as a reserve for a national park of Canada, pending settlement of any right, title or interest of the people of native origin therein, the lands described in part I, II or III of schedule V to this act or any lands within the boundaries of the lands described in part I, II or III of that schedule, and upon the issue of a proclamation under this section, notwithstanding any other act of the parliament of Canada, and save for the exercise therein by the people of native origin of the Yukon or Northwest Territories of traditional hunting, fishing and trapping activities, the National Parks Act applies to the reserve so set aside."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Who seconds the motion?

Mr. Chrétien: I will second it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) moves:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-6, an act to amend the National Parks Act be amended in clause 11:

(a) by striking out lines 6 to 17 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"mation, set aside as a reserve for a national park of Canada, pending a settlement in respect of any right, title or interest of the people of native origin therein, the lands described in Part I, II or III of schedule V to this act or any lands within the boundaries of the lands described in part I, II or III of that schedule, and upon the issue of a proclamation under this subsection, notwithstanding any other act of the parliament of Canada, and save for the exercise therein by the people of native origin of the Yukon Territory or Northwest Territories of traditional hunting, fishing and trapping activities, the National Parks Act applies to the reserve so set aside as it applies to a park as therein defined."

(b) by striking out lines 40 to 45 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"Further proclamation" (3) Following a settlement in respect of any right, title or interest of the people of native origin in lands set aside as a reserve by proclamation issued under subsection (1), the governor in council may, by further proclamation, set aside such lands, or any portion thereof, as a national park of Canada, and upon the issue of a proclamation under this subsection, notwithstanding any other act of the parliament of Canada but subject to the terms of any such settlement, the National Parks Act applies to the national park of Canada so set aside as it applies to a park as therein defined:"

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni moves:

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-6, to amend the National Parks Act be amended by deleting lines 40 to 45 inclusive at page 7, being subclause 11(3), and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Following settlement of any right, title or interest of the people of native origin in the lands designated in subsection (1), and subject to the terms of any such settlement, the governor in council may, by further proclamation, set aside such lands, or any portions thereof, as a national park of Canada."

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have been a member of this House for a number of years, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and to my recollection this is the first occasion on which any motion of mine has been seconded by a minister of either this government or a previous government of any political stripe.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: It shows you who is running the coalition.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a high-water mark.

Mr. Barnett: Some of us might call it a low-water mark.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It shows that even the government can be right once in a while.

Mr. Barnett: I wish to say seriously, however, that I am pleased the minister has agreed, in effect, to endorse this proposal of mine. In some respects I consider it to be the most significant of the changes which are being made in the original draft of the bill which, as hon. members will recall, we received from the other place. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, after much discussion in the committee I feel that a proper recognition of the rights of the Indian and other native peoples of Canada to be able, with some degree of equality, to negotiate a settlement is as well embodied in this amendment as in any measure that has come before this House.

● (2010)

As hon. members know, there are certain parts of Canada where no settlement by treaty or in any other form has yet been reached regarding what is sometimes referred to as native title. One of the areas of Canada where this is true to a great degree is the province of British Columbia, from which I come as a member of this House. But the same is also true of almost the entire area of the two territories. This is a situation that I think it is incumbent upon the House to consider, particularly in view of the existing constitutional structure which, for the time being at least, leaves the entire authority vested in the Crown, being the responsibility in this instance of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien).

To me, Mr. Speaker, this amendment and its passage have an importance in the context of our situation in Canada today which overrides almost any other consideration in relation to the withdrawal from normal exploitation of any lands in the territories. The amendment was originally proposed by myself in committee but was not, like certain other of my amendments, accepted. I therefore put it on the order paper, originally in the last session, for debate at the report stage without any foreknowledge whether it would receive support from any quarter of the House other than the caucus of which I am a member. I am hopeful that it will receive the unanimous endorsation of the House despite the fact that it replaces, in effect, an amendment which was moved before the committee by members of the official opposition and which, I may say at once, I did support in the form in which it was presented because at that point, as I have often had to do, I took the position that a half a loaf or a quarter of a loaf was better than none.

In view of some references, oblique and otherwise, that have been made during the course of this report stage discussion as to whether or not I have changed my mind on certain matters, I think I should take a moment to outline the situation that has led up to our dealing with this amendment in this particular form tonight. As members of the House will recall, the committee travelled to the capital of the Yukon territory, Whitehorse, not under an order of reference dealing with this bill but under a reference of the annual report of the department. The committee heard representations in Whitehorse from quite a large number of the citizens of the Yukon territory on a variety of subjects. Because this bill was technically in the hands of the committee at that point, many of the representations that we received tended to centre upon this bill and its implications.

I think it is fair to say that as we listened to the representations that were made in Whitehorse great interest was shown about the Kluane park in the Yukon territory. While there was not what I would call unanimous support for the establishment of the park, I think there was general endorsation of the idea of a national park in the Yukon territory. In fact, as far as there was a representative voice of the Yukon in the form of its territorial council, that council made it clear to the members of the committee that they did endorse the establishment of Kluane park.

There were some serious questions raised about what this park might do to potential hydro development. Questions were also raised about what it would do in the elimination of possible mining development. But generally speaking I think it is fair to say that the people of the Yukon were interested in, and rather excited about, the possibility of a park in that vast, rugged area of mountain wilderness that runs along the easterly side of the coastal range. I think it is fair to say that that approach was acceptable to the Indian people of the Yukon territory, both those who are registered Indians and those who are sometimes referred to as non-status Indians. But they did have one very important reservation regarding their acceptance of the idea of a park, and that was that they did not want any hard and fast boundaries drawn—in fact, they said they did not want a park established—until they had completed the negotiations which are currently in progress on their land rights.

The amendment put forward to the committee in an informal way while it was in Whitehorse contained the provision that any establishment of a park should be without prejudice to the right, title or interest of the Indian people. As far as I am concerned, the idea of that amendment was sound enough, except that in law, so far as I could see, it did not effectively protect the rights of the Indian people to negotiate. However, I initially supported the amendment even though I felt it was somewhat inadequate in its actual terms. That feeling was borne out by the representations received from the president of the Yukon Indian Brotherhood. He made very clear his concern that establishment of this park as proposed would, in effect, effectively block any possibility of Indian negotiation regarding any of the lands, right or interest that they may have within the boundaries of such a park.

The basic effect of the proposal, at least as I saw it, was that the park having been established and its boundaries set, if later on it was recognized in negotiations that even as much as one acre of land within the boundaries of the park was land that remained Indian land, then this would have meant a special act of parliament would be required to remove that one acre of land from within the boundaries of the park. This was a conundrum with which I wrestled because I was very anxious that this rather unique piece of land should receive as soon as possible the kind of protection the National Parks Act provides for certain parts of the territories in Canada. At the same time, I did not want to be a party in any way to weakening the ability of the Indian people to negotiate a fair and complete settlement.

When listening carefully to the representations put to the committee by the spokesman for the Kluane park, I became more convinced that they had some real claims that should be considered in relation to the area involved. That is why I endeavoured to present to the committee an amendment which would clearly have established the intent of parliament that this area should be included in a park reserve, while at the same time putting it under the jurisdiction of the National Parks Act rather than having it remain in a park reserve in respect of which the minister has authority at any time to change his mind and decide to pull it out of the reserve. There is nothing to prevent that.

In fact, this was the position which had existed for some time in reference to Kluane, having in mind the fact that it was not in a park reserve, but a game reserve. In attempting a reasonable reconciliation with what to me were two important considerations, I felt this proposal offered a fair solution. For that reason I am pleased that the minister has agreed to lend his support to this idea. I hope all hon. members of the House will do so. I do not think it will do any substantial damage in respect of the desires of anyone concerned with the preservation of wilderness areas in Canada, particularly the unique ones, to make them part of our parks heritage.

As one individual who spoke to the committee at Whitehorse very aptly observed, if you are thinking in terms of a wilderness park, as long as you do not do anything to it, it will not go away. Having that concept in mind, I thought that was one of the wisest things I listened to in the Yukon, and I believe the proposal before us will ensure that Kluane park is preserved as part of our wilderness heritage. I may say that similar ideas have been put forward in written representations by the Indian and Innuit peoples of the Northwest Territories in respect of the Nahanni and Baffin Island park proposals.

I have here communications from organizations of the Innuit people and the Northwest Territories Indian Brotherhood that they agree with the soundness of the proposal we are discussing in this report stage amendment. I shall not take up the time of the House to detail them for the record, but I feel I should take a few minutes to draw to the attention of hon. members what I consider to be the basic importance of this report stage amendment. While I may have views that range from lukewarm to strong about some of the other issues we have been discussing, I feel the issues involved in this amendment are the most important in relation to what in all fairness we should or should not do at this point about setting aside lands which have not been surrendered by the Indian people to the national parks system of Canada.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): I should like to say a few words in connection with the three motions, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), and I gather he has changed his mind. He suggested that from the submission made to our committee the public generally in Whitehorse approved of the parks in principle, but I understood from what he said at various committee meetings that he and members of his party were concerned about public hearings in respect of parks. After listening to him tonight, I take it he feels there is no need for public hearings in respect of these parks in the territories.

Motions Nos. 6 and 8 put forth by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni have the same effect as motion No. 7, and after reading the motions I cannot help wondering why they were put forward in the first instance. Rather than setting aside lands for the Kluane and Nahanni parks, these motions would put the lands into reserves. Bill C-9, as amended in the committee, would set aside the lands as national parks, yet the effect of these three motions would simply reserve the lands. Perhaps this is a matter of semantics, but in both cases—in the original bill and in the motions as filed—the interests of the native people would be protected and in both cases the provisions of the National Parks Act would apply.

By virtue of the three amendments, the lands would be set aside simply as a reserve. In speaking on clause 10 earlier today I said that the establishment of these parks was really a fait accompli and that the matter did not require a public hearing. The parks we are concerned about, namely, Baffin Island, Kluane and Nahanni, fall into a different category than those under clause 10. In effect, the amendments put forward by the minister and by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would preclude the possibility of public hearings in respect of these parks. I had the opportunity of attending the committee meetings at Whitehorse last fall when we heard numerous representations from people in the area in respect of Kluane park. I felt there was some opposition to the park. There were suggestions concerning alteration of the boundaries, and so on. It seemed to me there should be, under these circumstances, public hearings in order to give all interested persons an opportunity to provide input to either the committee or to the department with regard to the park.

Also during the course of our committee hearings we heard from the Innuit and native Indian association with regard to Baffin Island park. It is my opinion that in the case of the parks with which we are concerned this evening there should be public hearings and public input. It is interesting to note that under clause 10 there is reference to the Pacific Rim and four other parks. When the minister moved his motion to amend the bill he retained subclause (3) which provides:

> The minister shall, at such time or times as he considers appropriate in the development of national parks in the areas described in subsection (1), hold public hearings in relation to the plans for the development of those parks.

[Mr. Barnett.]

When he came to the amendment contained in clause 11, he ignored the possibility of having public hearings with regard to the development of these three parks above the sixtieth parallel. I hope this was an oversight by the minister and I suggest that at some time in the future he bring in an amendment to the effect that when it comes to the development of these three parks above the sixtieth parallel he follow the procedure set forth under clause 10 regarding the Pacific Rim and other parks and hold public hearings to determine the feelings of the people concerning the development of the parks.

I also wonder, in respect of clause 11 which provides for 90 days' notice and publication in the Canada Gazette, why the minister retained the provision for publication in both official languages in various newspapers in Canada for four consecutive weeks, if there is no provision for public hearings to be held. I should like to know why the government would advertise in the newspapers for four consecutive weeks the intention to proclaim a park unless there were some provision to allow interested persons to provide an input. If there is no such provision, then it seems to me we are just wasting the taxpayers' money because there would not seem to be any purpose in advertising in the newspapers and saying we are proclaiming a park, if the public is to have no input. It would seem to me that if the newspapers learned that a park was to be developed, they would be happy to publish this information as a news release.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister, in respect of this particular clause, to consider in the immediate future bringing in amendments to the act so that clause 11 will be in accordance with clause 10 and will provide for public hearings on the development of parks.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the amendment before us. I wish to congratulate the minister and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) for bringing in amendments that are very similar. I understand that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has withdrawn his amendment because the two amendments aim at the same objective, which is the recognition and, hopefully, the settlement of aboriginal claims in the north. It seems to me that this is a forward step.

I suggest to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that similar action should be taken with respect to other lands not within park areas. Surely if we can deal with the rights of the native people in northern Canada within the confines of a national park, it makes sense that other lands should also receive similar treatment especially in view of the recent application by a consortium of 27 companies to build the Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

It would seem to me that a great many problems could be solved by the government of Canada if it would tackle the problem in a manner similar to that provided in the amendments before us tonight. I realize, as I believe every member of this House realizes, that this amendment is turning new ground so far as government is concerned. I do not think we need be too apprehensive. The natives in northern Canada have claims. These have been resisted by federal governments over the years and finally, within the last few months, we have witnessed a decision by government to recognize that some of these claims are valid and at least should be discussed on the basis of what the natives in these areas should receive. I said earlier that is one of the reasons I certainly endorse these amendments and intend to vote for them.

While we are on the matter of national parks in the north and the rights of the native people in respect of areas which might be covered by them, there are one or two more comments I should like to make. There is no doubt that national parks, or their establishment, have been neglected over the years. National parks represent a heritage we in 1974 can leave to those who come after us. While the setting aside of great chunks of the northern territories for national park sites might seem to be excessive in light of the small number of people living in the area, nevertheless we must realize that as time goes on these will become areas of great importance. They will be wilderness parks where 50 or 100 years from now people will find out what Canada was really like. I regret deeply that more land in the southern section of Canada was not set aside for similar purposes over the years, for as time goes on we are losing some of the choicest sections of our country. Some of the rights within these areas of course have to be negotiated, whether it is north of the sixtieth parallel or in national parks' sites within the established provinces.

● (2040)

I do not think there is much more that I wish to say about this question, but I again urge the minister to deal with the Canadian territory north of the sixtieth degree of latitude, and I point out to him that there are other areas outside national parks which should receive attention similar to that which I hope we will take through this amendment to the National Parks Act. Again, I tell the minister that he is moving in the right direction. Although we would like to see him go a little further, we intend to support this amendment because it is good for Canada and it will, I hope, resolve one of the most serious problems facing us in the settlement of aboriginal rights in the northern part of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to my understanding, we are now dealing with motions Nos. 6, 7 and 8 and it is agreed that a vote on motion No. 7 would also dispose of motions Nos. 6 and 8. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the proposed amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Chrétien) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement that was reached earlier, this also disposes of motions Nos. 6 and 8.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-6, to amend the National Parks Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on Bill C-6, particularly with regard to a very unique area, namely, the short grass area in the southern prairies. This area is unique and fragile. It is disappearing, and it offers a challenge to those who would like to see it made into a national park. Of course, the question is whether it is possible to preserve the prime ecological features of the area and still have a park for all. I must say that in my heart I have great sympathy for the minister and his endeavours in this regard. The requirements must be specific. Government authorities, federal and provincial, must operate in such a way as to keep the residents of the area closely informed of the negotiations and the consequences of those negotiations so that the full support of the people in the area may be obtained if a park is established.

There has been much opposition to the park in my area and most of the questions concerning the area between Val Marie and Killdeer in southern Saskatchewan have arisen because of the failure to make known to the ranchers in the area and to the general public answers to questions such as, why establish a park at all, and the pros and cons of establishing a national or a provincial park. People would like to know more about the actual proposed boundaries of the park and the consequences to the local inhabitants, as well as the park's attraction to the general public.

It seems only reasonable that the public, including the residents of the area, can make a wise decision on what they actually want only when they are given the factual information on which to base a decision. The government's answers that the information is confidential or that no decision has been reached have become not only frustrating but unacceptable. In his speech to the 1973 annual meeting ot the Saskatchewan Natural History Society, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) met some of the conditions required when he stated that a new national park in this or any other part of Canada must not be established to the disadvantage of local residents whose way of life depends on their traditional use of the land. So I am glad to say that if these conditions are met, there would be much less opposition to the parks, and certainly the assurance that there will be no expropriation of ranches for this Grasslands park is a "must".

The minister further stated that there will be no compulsion on ranch owners within the ultimate boundary to move. The right of the owner to pass on his land, or the right to his land to his heirs would be undisturbed, and if and when a rancher chose to sell his property, the government would be prepared to buy it at a fair market price and to offer its services to assist the rancher to relocate.

It should be possible for some historical events, such as Sitting Bull's famous rendezvous at Pinto Butte, to serve as the focus for dramatic productions, for nowhere is the campfire more characteristic than in the pages of prairie history, and campfires are always welcome focal points for visiting, relaxing and learning.

Now I would like to list a short summary of negotiations between the provincial government, the federal government and municipal governments in an attempt to establish this Grasslands park in the southern area of Saskatchewan. It spans a period of over 16 years. Progress has been very slow but I think we are moving toward the establishment of a park. I must say that I was very pleased yesterday to receive a letter from the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, dated April 2, in which he said:

This is further to our previous correspondence about the proposed Grasslands national park in Saskatchewan.

You will be interested to know that we have recently had meetings about this on a senior level with the Saskatchewan Department of Natural Resources, and I understand that the Saskatchewan government will make a decision shortly.

I suppose it really all started in my area back in 1957 when the Saskatchewan Natural History Society introduced the idea of a Grasslands national park. Later on, in 1959, the same Saskatchewan Natural History Society passed a resolution urging the Saskatchewan government to set up a national grasslands preserve. In 1964, once again the Saskatchewan Natural History Society put forth an actual proposal for a Grasslands national park in Canada comprising some 25 townships immediately north of the U.S. border and extending from Killdeer on the east to Val Marie on the west. This area includes a diversity of habitats and scenery and contains a minimum of roads, fences and farm or ranch buildings.

Later on, in December, 1964, the Saskatchewan Stockgrowers at their annual meeting discussed the possibility of a Grasslands park and expressed the hope that grazing would be allowed. This was the point which was to become a major stumbling-block over the next few years. In 1965 there was an announcement by the federal government that an attempt would be made to establish the park in Saskatchewan and once more, in April, an announcement was made by the federal government that a search for suitable areas in southern Saskatchewan was to be carried out during the summer.

The federal government, in 1966, after consideration of the previous summer's investigation, concluded that the Val Marie area appeared most suitable for the park. Some of the other areas considered were Lost Mountain Lake, Qu'Appelle Valley, Moose Mountain and Estevan. Later on, in 1966, the first sour note was revealed in a letter from Saskatchewan's public works minister who opposed the proposal. In 1967, more concern was expressed by Saskatchewan members of the legislature. The suggestions were that the prairie park be established in a province other than Saskatchewan. Then we move to 1969, with an announcement of a stalemate in negotiations between the two governments. This was the first of several that blocked progress toward the Grassland national park.

In 1970, active negotiations were reopened between the provincial and federal governments. Later on, in 1970, the federal government released a statement which said that the signing of the park agreement was little more than a formality now. They stated that all major difficulties appeared to have been overcome. However, the provincial government replied stating that details had yet to be worked out, and the signing of the agreement was still quite far away. Still later on, in 1970, a guarantee that the grazing rights would be left or there would be no park was the crux of a statement issued by the premier of Saskatchewan. Later still, in December, a letter from the minister in Ottawa and Regina had been resolved. In 1971, the first direct contact with the ranchers occurred when members of the provincial government in Saskatchewan held a meeting in Fir Mountain, and it was here that the ranchers expressed concern over a park policy which did not allow grazing within the park.

I should like to digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and say that it is less than 100 years ago that a Minniconjou Sioux war party arrived in my area of southern Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact, in 1876 several lodges of Minniconjou Sioux, led by White Eagle, arrived at Wood Mountain. These Sioux had fled from Minnesota following violent conflicts with the whites over land rights. The situation grew worse when in June of the same year the Sioux, under the leadership of Crazy Horse and Sitting Bull, gathered at Little Big Horn to completely annihilate Colonel Custer and his 212 troops. The Sioux became a people on the run, turning to Canada and the Wood Mountain district for the protection of the Great White Mother. We know the rest of that story, Mr. Speaker.

Later in 1971, a liaison committee of ranchers was formed to help communications between ranchers and the government. Early in 1972, it was pointed out in Regina that if the federal government did not soon create a park, the provincial government would proceed in establishing a provincial Grasslands park. Then in May, 1972, negotiations were terminated by the provincial government when the conditions they set out appeared to be unacceptable to the federal government. In October, 1973, the federal minister announced that the federal government was willing to allow grazing rights within the park but that mineral rights would not be given up. It appeared that the federal government was willing to go halfway.

The premier of Saskatchewan stated that if grazing rights were allowed, mineral rights would be negotiable, so although there now seems to be no real obstacle to the establishment of a national Grasslands park in the Canadian plains, we cannot as yet be sure that negotiations will be completed. Developments to date have been extremely slow, but I believe that people are increasingly aware of the need for preserving samples of natural areas.

I conclude by saying that the vast grasslands are gone for ever and neither this generation nor generations to come can ever hope to replace them. But in the sparsely inhabited lands between Killdeer and Val Marie there exists a part of this vanishing legacy. I only hope that we realize in time the value of this prairie heritage, before all that remains would be the scars of technology.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) on his remarks in this third reading debate on the amendment to the National Parks Act, and for bringing again to the attention of the House a subject which is of great concern to the southern area of Saskatchewan. This Grasslands national park, as outlined by the hon. member, has become a controversial issue in southern Saskatchewan and I should like to touch upon some aspects of that tonight, particularly the manner in which negotiations have taken place to date.

The problem with the operation of government departments is that often one department does one thing and no other department knows what is being done. I say this to my hon. friend because while the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is seeking to establish Grasslands national park in the corner between my hon. friend's constituency and my own for the preservation of national heritage, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has signed a general agreement with the province of Saskatchewan for regional and industrial development. What kind of development do they have in mind, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and I have been interested in the development on one side of the southern Saskatchewan area of a large inland lake running between Weyburn and Estevan in order to create an industrial base. Mr. Speaker, that is not entirely congruent with the development of the tourist industry.

At the other end of the constituency running into Coronach in the area where they are attempting to put the Grasslands national park, the Saskatchewan Power Corporation is carrying out an examination of the possibility of building a large hydroelectric power project. This would employ hundreds of people and maybe reduce some of the unemployment for the people of areas like Moose Jaw. That kind of development is not entirely congruent with the establishment of the Grasslands national park. There is general agreement between the province of Saskatchewan and the government of Canada. Under this agreement the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has the right to sign a subsidiary agreement. I suggest that they should do this and establish an over-all game plan for this development in southern Saskatchewan.

It is often assumed that the tourists are dragged into northern Saskatchewan where there is already a national park with lots of land, lakes, trees, etc. I submit that in southern Saskatchewan, running from Moose Mountain park through to Cypress Hills, there is real scope for the development of an alternative route to the Trans-Canada highway. If people were routed through Kenosee Lake down to Highway 13 and through the southern part of Saskatchewan, perhaps the Grasslands park could be developed without disrupting the livelihood of the people. We would be able to develop other aspects of the tourist industry in the area of my hon. friend, the member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, and in Assiniboia. A considerable number of French communities have settled there and have developed their culture. For instance, in the community of Willowbunch you will find a bilingual museum, some of which was built with OFY grants. You will find evidence of a marvellous history, of which most people travelling through Saskatchewan are not aware.

● (2100)

In the community of Flintoft you will find, unless it is torn down, evidence of the Roumanian culture of the people who settled in the area. If your game plan is to develop routes through southern Saskatchewan, you could develop an alternate route which would include cities like Moose Jaw, the areas of Swift Current-Maple Creek, Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain—to show I am not partisan—and Assiniboia.

An hon. Member: That is highly unlikely.

Mr. Knight: The hon. member thinks that my lack of partisanship is highly unusual. Speaking of the tourist business, the hon. member mentioned Sitting Bull and referred to the Sioux, the tribe which went back to the United States where many were slaughtered. Some of those people stayed in the Wood Mountain country. The Big Muddy is where the outlaws operating in the Dakotas and Montana used to hide in days when U.S. marshals wanted to bring them to law. This could be developed into a tourist attraction.

I am trying to convey to members of the House the tremendous potential there is for developing the tourist industry in southern Saskatchewan if only the correct game plan is followed. Of course, it will be difficult to develop the tourist industry if, less than 50 miles from an attraction, you allow a strip mining operation to deface the land. If strip mining is carried on, I do not care whether under a Conservative, Liberal, Socialist or Social Credit government, you had better institute a program to reclaim land. Do not leave those ugly hills, which were left in Estevan, over which when I was a kid I used to scramble. What happened was a terrible example of misuse of land after it had been strip mined. Strip mining is still going on. It is not a pretty sight. I know that water basins are formed with a view to creating an interest in fishing. I suspect that local residents mainly do the fishing. Many have been interested in seeing grassland parks established. The former member for Regina East and I have studied documents which came from the government two years ago dealing with matters which the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek dealt with in his remarks.

On the basis of recent statements made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in Regina, I think there is a new willingness to accommodate the wishes of people who live in the south country and who are interested in preserving grassland. If the governments at Regina and Ottawa could keep open avenues of communication, I suspect the situation could improve. It will not improve if there is bungling on the part of civil servants, if one group says one thing and another something else. The main thing is that they should be interested in establishing communication.

I think hon. members of the House are interested in seeing national parks established in places like southern Saskatchewan in a way that will not be detrimental to the people of the area. There is a long history of national parks being established in a way that does not take into account the interests of local people. For instance, a national park was established in Newfoundland and the interests of the fishermen in the outports was not taken into account. Much bitterness arose as a result. Sometimes local people are bitter when young people from other parts of the country come to their national park in summer and get employment. There is bitterness when locals have not been able to obtain employment. These remarks apply to Prince Albert national park. I do not think there was any difficulty when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, but there has been a lot of trouble since then.

If you want to establish a national park anywhere, you must be flexible in your approach. This government speaks of communications, of retaining the rights of farmers and ranchers to grazing, and of trying to accommodate the wishes of local communities. These things must be done if you want to establish a national park. After all, the preservation of our heritage is in the public interest; therefore, you must heed the interests of local people. They want to learn what is happening. Do not establish the park in such a way as to create suspicion and mystery. Let people know what is involved. The government must communicate, accommodate and consult if it is to meet some of the grievances of those who are affected by the establishment of national parks.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) involved in this debate. He anticipated some of the remarks I intended to make on third reading of the bill, particularly the emphasis I would place on the necessity for consultation. I do not know if the hon. member was in the House earlier today when his party reversed itself on this issue. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not speak earlier because, knowing his eloquence, I am sure he would have persuaded some of his wavering colleagues of the error of their ways. I refer particularly to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). I agree that we can only meet the rapid increase in demand for national park facilities if the minister, the government as a whole and departmental officials are willing to meet with provincial governments and then take part in meaningful consultation with the people who are involved in the area.

Our purpose in establishing a national park is not suddenly, overnight, to create a new situation. Unfortunately, in most areas of Canada that opportunity no longer exists. Our purpose is to place the natural areas of Canada, which have now been clearly designated, under the federal government's national parks branch with a view to developing these areas over a reasonable period of time as typical specimens of national beauty or, in the case of an historic site, restoring its significance as an historic site.

Several members today have spoken about the prairie Grasslands park. This particular topic has been thrown about for the past 15 years. The tragedy is that, as expressed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), the opportunity that existed 10 or 15 years ago has now passed. There has been development in that area which makes it impossible to establish a prairie park along the lines of the initial concept. In the early negotiations for this park it was hoped that by meaningful consultation with the provinces and the people who are settled in the area it would be possible to reach agreement whereby we could have a grasslands park that would straddle the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary. It is difficult enough when Ottawa is negotiating with one province, but when you get a second province into the act you need to have the wisdom of Solomon and the sensitivity of a most polished diplomat.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Chrétien: We will get one.

Mr. Dinsdale: Unfortunately, as I have viewed the activies of the government in this regard during recent years, they seem to lack these qualities.

Mr. Chrétien: We have created ten new parks.

Mr. Dinsdale: For example, the Suffield military reserve became available. It is already Crown land. If a proper approach had been made, it could have become the initial part of this greatly to be desired grasslands park area. It would have at least established a beginning for an area that is far too rapidly coming under the influence of commercial development.

This afternoon we were hoping to get the support of our friends in the New Democratic Party to re-emphasize once again the need for continuing consultation in the establishment of national parks. Unfortunately, that hope has now passed. In the vote earlier today at committee stage we were unable to convince NDP members in this regard.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), but I wish he would check what happened this afternoon and read the motion. It called for consultation, which is what we voted for and he voted against.

Mr. Chrétien: Good point. They are against consultation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. This is more debate than a point of order. I should take this opportunity to point out to hon. members that we do not achieve very much by trying to pass judgment on previous votes. The debate will progress more rapidly if the hon. member will come to his point.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can understand the hon. member's sensitivity on this point.

Mr. Chrétien: Tell the truth: you are not for consultation.

Mr. Dinsdale: Hon. members have been swallowing themselves so consistently recently that I notice even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has a slight tendency toward corpulence. As I understand what took place this afternoon, we had worked together—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is still discussing the vote of this afternoon. That is against the rules of this House. I would also like to say that his party voted against consultation. But if I am not permitted to do that, the hon. member should not be permitted to comment on this afternoon's vote. He does not have the right to discuss the vote of this afternoon.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please, I am sure the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development does not want to decide for the Chair, that he has confidence in the person who is sitting in the Chair and that in due time we will see to—

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I can understand why the minister is somewhat confused about this matter.

Mr. Knight: I think I know who is confused.

Mr. Chrétien: You are confused. You are against consultation.

Mr. Dinsdale: At the moment we are running a two ring circus in northern affairs. A committee is meeting on another part of the Hill with members who are interested in northern affairs, particularly the very important question of local government and autonomy for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I would like to be there. I am sure the minister would like to be there tonight. In fact, I just came from that committee meeting. Because the minister was not able to be present tonight, his parliamentary secretary suggested that we have an extraordinary meeting tomorrow morning so that the minister will have the opportunity of consulting, if I may use that word, the members of the committee. A situation has developed because members of parliament were able to meet with the elected representatives of both the northern territories in order to get the local viewpoint on the question of autonomy.

I shall not pursue the question of consultation and whether the vote this afternoon was for or against consultation. However, I want to make the point that as a result of the visit of the parliamentary committee to the national parks last August and again in December, members of the opposition came to the conclusion that the bill now before us does not make provision for consultation and deliberation with the people concerned in areas where national parks are proposed.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who concurred in our viewpoint in this regard and supported our amendments, which were reversed by the amendment introduced by the government, would agree that what we heard at Banff, Jasper, in the Northwest Territories and Whitehorse in the Yukon had a strong influence on the attitude members of the committee took in subsequent discussions on the legislation that is still before parliament. In those deliberations we discovered we were fighting a strawman with regard to the idea that the public is against the conservation, reservation or designation of representative, substantial areas of land that would preserve our natural heritage. We discovered that the people, particularly in Banff and in the national parks which were established initially, are entirely in sympathy with the concept of the wise management of these national resources and their multiple use.

However, a problem arises when the minister refuses to listen to the legitimate requests put forward by these people and when his officials refuse to listen to legitimate representations. Some of the officials were with us, and I am sure we all came to the conclusion that as far as the support of the public is concerned, the battle has been won. This is the feeling which emerged from the friendly conversations and discussions in which we engaged.

We are now considering this bill on third reading. There is not much we can do, unless we get support from the New Democratic Party, to move the government in the direction of public consultation, but I trust that when shaping future national parks hon. gentlemen opposite will think in terms of a more diversified program. National parks fall into only one of the categories required to meet the leisure time needs of a growing Canadian population. We need wilderness parks, certainly—unspoiled heritage. But we also need multipurpose parks. In addition, we need to preserve historic sites, many of which are being lost.

I remember the opposition we encountered from the party which now sits on the treasury benches when the Conservative Party had responsibility for these matters. In particular, I remember their vitriolic opposition to establishing a national park in the Yukon territory to commemorate one of the most romantic periods in Canadian history—the gold rush and the trail of '98. We faced tremendous opposition simply because we were spending comparatively small sums of money, when viewed in the light of the astronomic expenditures of the present government, in preserving historic sites which are being lost all too rapidly. That particular project is now being resurrected. However, I do not think there is one building in the Yukon which has been preserved in the interim, other than the old theatre. So we need to move rapidly.

I shall not prolong my remarks, because there are others who wish to speak and time is limited. However, I believe that in the interests of developing our parks' program I should once again say to the minister that consultation is the name of the game. He still has not been able to persuade Ontario to make available the necessary land for national park purposes. He still has to negotiate some of the master plans which have been under consideration for the past 14 years and which would restore excellence to some of the western parks such as Banff, Jasper, Prince Albert and Riding Mountain. These have developed in a diversified manner to meet a multiplicity of demands.

When these master plans are finally placed before the people in the respective provinces, I trust adequate opportunity will be given for an expression of opinion and that the wishes of those concerned are taken into account. If the minister is willing to engage in consultation at this level, I hope we can convince him that the only way in which he can move rapidly toward the establishment of the number of parks we need is by encouraging this process of consultation right across the board.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the bill to amend the National Parks Act which is now before parliament for third reading. It is important we should note the tremendous progress which has been made in the last five years. During that period, the number of national parks has grown from 18 to 28 and the amount of acreage has doubled. Only four new national parks had been created in the previous 40 years. I know that all members, those in the official opposition and in other parties, would wish to extend congratulations to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who has carried out this magnificent program of expansion.

Provinces such as Quebec and Ontario, which had not co-operated previously in establishing national parks, have now done so. Not long ago there were no national parks in Quebec: now there are two. In Ontario there were three small national parks, all of which had been established on federally-owned land. But during those five years the Pukaskwa national park was established in the area west of Wawa on the shore of Lake Superior. It is one of the most magnificent national parks anywhere in the country; its rugged grandeur should appeal to almost any eye. I had the opportunity to go there with the initial inventory team. It took us three hours to fly over this park twice, using a Twin Otter. The Trans-Canada Highway gives access to this new park. In addition, I understand three new national parks were established in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories during that five-year period.

I turn for a moment to the subject of national parks in the province of Ontario and the need for further parks in that province. The establishment of Pukaskwa park represented a real breakthrough and is greatly to the credit not only of the minister but of the Hon. René Brunelle who was provincial minister at that time. I should like to speak tonight about the opportunity which exists for the establishment of the next national park in Ontario. I believe it should be established on Manitoulin Island, which happens to be in the federal riding of Algoma. This is the largest fresh water island in the world. It is some 100 miles long and varies in width between four and 40 miles. It has dozens and dozens of inland lakes and is a magnificent part of this country. Recreational land opportunities there are spectacular.

It happens that on Manitoulin Island there is a large amount of property owned by the Ontario Paper Company. They have shown interest in selling it for several years. Both I and the provincial member of parliament have been trying to encourage the two levels of government to co-operate together in purchasing it. The land is owned, in the final analysis, by American interests and would therefore be a natural piece of property to repatriate and to be owned by Canada. Manitoulin Island would be a natural place to establish the next national park in Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: I note with encouragement that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) applauds my words. This tract of land comprises 78,718 acres. There are about 57 miles of lakeshore on Lake Huron and the north channel of Lake Huron. Besides this there are miles of inland waterfront property, all of it located in Dawson and Robertson townships which are at the extreme westerly end of Manitoulin Island. There is also a great deal of property on Cockburn Island which is located about two miles west of Manitoulin Island. The largest percentage of the land on Cockburn Island is also owned by this paper company. The land was previously used for pulp and paper purposes but it is not used as much now for forestry.

[Mr. Foster.]

One of the spectacular features of this proposal is on the north shore of Manitoulin Island, which is on the north channel of Lake Huron. It is considered the best boating area for cruising vessels in North America. People from all over eastern Canada and the United States go there to cruise. There are good boating facilities at the ports of Gore Bay, Little Current, Kagawong, and Meldrum Bay. The islands located in the north channel are often compared in beauty to those of the Greek Islands.

As I mentioned, this property has an estimated value of $5 million. but when you consider the value of the lakeshore and the recreational land available today, I think it would be a good move for the provincial and federal governments to co-operate in acquiring this property and establishing a national park. In a way they would be buying back an important, beautiful and valuable piece of Canada from foreign owners.

Access to Manitoulin Island, which would be very important to any new national park, is readily available from the Trans-Canada Highway, No. 17, utilizing Highway 68 from Espanola to Little Current. This coming summer, in the month of July, a new ferry service will be established plying between Tobermory on the Bruce peninsula to South Baymouth, Manitoulin Island. This new ferry service will cost over $9 million and represents another joint federal-provincial co-operative venture. Space for 110 cars will be available and the ferry will carry people rapidly to and from Manitoulin Island, providing much better access to central parts of southern Ontario. Likewise, there are good facilities for people coming by vessel to Manitoulin as well as by aeroplane to Gore Bay-Manitoulin federal airport. A new ferry service is being proposed from Meldrum Bay to De Tour, Michigan, which will provide ready access for visitors from the states of Ohio and Michigan who come in large numbers every summer. This access would be very important to any proposal for a new national park.

Support for the proposal to use the Ontario Paper Company property for park purposes has come from the Manitoulin Municipal Association, the Western Manitoulin Board of Trade, from the town of Gore Bay and from the economic development committee of Meldrum Bay. Recently we have received support from other members of parliament, such as the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson). He has indicated there is real support among members from the Toronto area for more park and public recreational land easily accessible to this growing metropolitan area. This proposal would certainly be the best hedge against future needs for parkland for both central Ontario and northern Ontario. It would have important economic advantages for western Manitoulin. This area, which was at one time active in agriculture, logging and fishing, has declined in population in recent years although the opportunity for recreation there has never been better.

Therefore, I should like to compliment the minister on the progress he has made during the past five years on a national parks system. I hope he will take to heart this advice to locate a new national park on Manitoulin Island and that he will see it as an opportunity to establish an excellent new national park to serve not only the people of north and south Ontario but the rest of Canada.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, because this bill vitally affects the two northern territories in the establishment of one park in the Yukon and two parks in the Northwest Territories, I choose to speak this evening. I draw the attention of the members of the House to the fact that all afternoon and evening the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been considering Bill C-9, which is the principal reason that I and many other members who have been attending those committee sessions have been unable to participate in this debate. This is one more reason why standing committees should not be sitting while the House is sitting, particularly when the subject matter of a bill such as the one presently before the House conflicts directly with a kindred subject matter in a standing committee. There is no way members can split themselves into many different parts and attend to matters that vitally affect their constituencies, when this kind of programming occurs.

The first matter I want to deal with relates to the number of representations that have been received by members of the standing committee, and I presume by members of the House, from conservation and environmental organizations respecting the stance that this party took on the amendment that in committee stood in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), requiring that before the establishment of any park occurred in the two northern territories, the approval of each of the two northern councils had to be sought.

Clause 2 of the bill makes it mandatory for the government not simply to seek the approval of but to seek the formal agreement of the provincial governments before any park is established or any boundaries are set. We in the two northern territories took the position that simple consultation was not enough. In 1970 when the Yukon Act was amended, the standing committee, when dealing with a provision which enabled the governor in council to dissolve the councils of the two territories prior to the expiration of the full term of four years, introduced an amendment which changed the situation of the governor in council consulting the two councils before such dissolution. Even that was distorted because the standing committee report to the House, and I can quote it almost precisely, said "where such consultation is deemed necessary or advisable". That kind of weasling wording means nothing. Now when we see a phrase such as that in clause 11 which obliges the governor in council to consult, we know it does not oblige the governor in council to do anything, such as seeking a formal agreement, so that the parks may be established in the north or altered after this so-called "consultation with".

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni and his colleagues in the committee quite rightly supported the position we took that that was not enough because it did not oblige the government to do anything of a concrete nature. What does consultation mean to tnis government? Surely my friends to the left have sufficient experience with the phrase "participatory democracy" as it was mouthed in 1968 to know that that kind of language means nothing. Surely they know that that kind of phrase is meaningless. The Indian people across this country have had enough experience, as a result of this participatory democracy, to realize that a phrase such as "after consultation with" means that there is a decision by the government and then they are told what the decision is. That is the process of consultation! It is in effect a fait accompli. The phrase "after consultation with" does not mean a damn thing.

Therefore, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, his colleagues and members of this party on the standing committee, realizing the failure of the government to go through this process of consultation, decided to put some teeth into this bill. We deleted the phrase "after consultation with" and required the government to seek the approval of the elected representatives of the people in our two northern territories.

That brings me to another point and I will deal with the somersault of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I am greatly disappointed by the completeness with which that hon. member is able to swallow himself on many occasions.

Mr. Baker: He would rather switch than fight.

Mr. Nielsen: He was a strong advocate of the views of the committee that Canadians above the sixtieth parallel should be on an equal basis with Canadians below the sixtieth parallel. But now he has made a complete turnabout, going along with the government in order to get his own amendment accepted. He has been able to swallow himself in respect of that principle which he supported in the committee.

Mr. Baker: Sold out for a mess of potage.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member just what he has in mind in respect of the rights of the Indians and whether it is important to protect their rights, in view of the fact that the Yukon council has already indicated its approval for the establishment of the park.

Mr. Nielsen: That has nothing to do with it. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the minister can drag red herrings back and forth across the trail as often as they please, but they cannot justify what the hon. member has done in reversing himself in respect of protecting these rights. Both he and the minister know that when the committee visited Whitehorse an amendment was introduced that protected these native rights which the minister has omitted from the bill, and that amendment was accepted unanimously by the committee.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the record should be set straight in that regard. Before we introduced the bill in the House we had the wisdom to seek the opinion of the elected members of the council of the Yukon, who voted in favour of the bill. The hon. member is now attempting to catch up after history has already been written.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I would suggest that these remarks are more in the form of debate than a question of privilege.

Mr. Barnett: While I recognize the situation the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) described when he began to speak, and I sympathize with his frustration in trying to be in two places at once, I feel I must take part in this question of privilege, as a member of this House, by drawing to your attention that the hon. member offends the privileges of this House by distorting our rules. I would draw to your attention that the privileges of members are being affected under Standing Order 35, which states in part that no member should reflect upon a vote of the House except for the purpose of moving that such a vote be rescinded.

Mr. Chrétien: You know the rules; you are supposed to be the master.

Mr. Barnett: If the hon. member wishes to consult with his colleagues and then move that the decision be rescinded, he might be in order. But when he tries to re-debate something which has already been decided, he is overstepping the provisions of the Standing Order and I have a right to rise on a question of privilege.

In resuming my seat I might say that at the proper time and in the proper place I will be prepared to re-debate the matter with the hon. member for Yukon, because I know he is away off base when talking about consultation. There was consultation with the Indian people before this decision by the Yukon council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I suppose the hon. member may carry on with his speech now.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni doth protest too much. He knows he is caught with his principles down, and he cannot stand being confronted. He, like other members of his party during this as well as the last session, has constantly been caught in that position. He should be the last one to speak about trying to be in two places at one time, because most of the members of that party are past masters at the art of getting into bed with the party which is now occupying the treasury benches in an attempt to justify—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: They are sucking and blowing at the same time.

● (2150)

Mr. Nielsen: That is precisely what I was speaking about, sir. I think these unco-ordinated people to my left would find it extremely difficult to walk and chew gum at the same time. They are paragons of virtue. Sir, they have betrayed their own principles.

Mr. Baker: They left their principles in the bed.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister speaks of consultation. I know it is improper for me to comment on evidence given before the standing committee today and I certainly do not want to bend the rules in that regard. I do not intend to do so. However, the minister stands in his place and says we had the views of the territorial council in the affirmative before we passed the bill. They never even saw the bill until it was tabled in the House.

Mr. Chrétien: They were consulted on the subject.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Nielsen: Consulted on the subject! I put it to the minister that clause 11 was never the subject matter of consultation with the territorial council two years ago, which is the time of which he speaks. The council, I can assure you, agreed wholeheartedly that their approval should be sought.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): They approved the parks.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo says that the council approved the bill before. He is deliberately distorting what happened. What happened was that the minister obtained an order in council freezing the boundaries of the parks as they are now described in the bill, and two years later a bill came forward. It was in the intervening time, before any member of the council of either territory had any opportunity to see the bill, that those conversations took place. No one can suggest to me that that is a process of consultation with regard to the provisions of the bill. That is consultation in hypothesis, in limbo.

Another thing I must say before I resume my seat, sir, is that I believe the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) should be standing in this House espousing the rights of the elected members of the Northwest Territories council. His conduct today in rejecting the proposal made by himself and the members of his party before the standing committee, when he and his party went along with the reversal that the minister and the government forced upon them, does nothing but a disservice to the people he is supposed to be representing.

I do not hear the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. L'Heureux) and I would not want him to smuggle words on to Hansard which might go unanswered. If he has something to say, perhaps he would make a statement so that it would appear on the record.

Mr. L'Heureux: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a question. Will he put on the record now that what he has been talking about is that in his opinion there should be a veto on the part of the councils of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory over the formation of national parks in those two territories? Is that what he stands for? I think the Canadian people would like to know. Is that what his party stands for?

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member is either ignorant or has deliberately distorted what he has been hearing from me and others on this side over and over again. I invite the hon. member to look at clause 2 of this bill. Has the hon. member looked at clause 2? I do not think so, because it says that the federal government must come to an agreement with the provinces before it establishes a park; and all we are asking in clause 11 is that there be, not a formal agreement but that the government come to the elected representatives in the two territories and seek informal approval. I do not know how that could amount to a veto.

If the hon. member is correct in describing our position as a veto, then he must also say that clause 2 in effect gives the provinces the same kind of veto he is describing. I do not read the bill in that way. All we are doing is asking the minister, who is supposed to be the champion of the rights of northern Canadians, to give those of us who live above the sixtieth parallel the same kind of voice as any other Canadian. The minister refuses to do it now. He has refused ever since he has been in that portfolio, and his predecessor refused to do it. So long as he occupies that post and so long as this government stays in office, we in the north will be regarded as colonials and second class citizens of Canada.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill is to go through tonight, and only a minute or two remain. I should like to make one or two comments. We have seen an attack on two members of our party by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I want to tell this House and the people of Canada that these members have worked more for the ecological situation and parks in Canada than any member of the Tory party. The new member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has done a better job for the native people during his short time in this House of Commons than the member for Yukon in the entire period he has been here. There can be no doubt about that.

There is one point I should like to make to the minister before this debate closes. In speaking of national parks there is one more thing I wish to draw to his attention. I refer to the establishment of a very large number of ecological reserves from one end of Canada to the other. He knows about the activity which is going on in this field and I hope he will assist in the establishment of these reserves which could be used for research purposes in the years to come.

I see it is ten o'clock. There are other things I should like to say, but we will abide by the commitment to let the bill pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears that the House might be ready for the question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—CONTINUITY OF CNR FERRY SERVICE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND IN THE EVENT OF FUTURE LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question, which I am raising again this evening, relates to a question that was asked on March 14, as recorded at page 505 of Hansard, with respect to the hoped for final solution with regard to the increasing frequency of disruptive rail ferry tie-ups primarily between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick and also, of course, since the time of confederation with respect to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

Hon. members will recall that in August of last year, during the latter part of the month, we were called back to Ottawa in order to pass legislation that would end the rail strike at that time. It is undoubtedly true that the strike created considerable difficulties for people all across Canada, but I think we must admit at the outset that there were two provinces that were more disastrously affected than any others, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

At the time of the debate, hon. members may also recall that I sought an assurance, and I think received one, from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) that some mechanism would be established after the resolution of that strike in order that we might have a permanent means of ensuring continuity of service, as guaranteed under confederation, between these two island provinces and the mainland. Some hon. members may be aware, as well, that following the passage of that legislation in September and October I addressed correspondence to the responsible Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as well as to the premiers of the two island provinces. In the first letter, dated September 14, I merely laid out the facts again and re-emphasized what had been said during the debate on August 31, that the departments of labour and transport must come to grips with the CNR, in this instance, and with the respective unions in order to work out a format that would be acceptable to all parties.

On October 9 I laid out a specific alternative, quite a radical one and one that received a fair amount of public discussion at the time. Therefore, on March 14 I concluded, after passage of more than half a year that it was quite likely that either the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour would be able to report on satisfactory progress. I was shocked to discover from the answer that I received initially from the Minister of Transport that there was a protest being carried out with respect to this problem. That was a pretty vague answer to the important question that was before him. Even later, the Minister of Labour said that officials from his department had been meeting with officials of appropriate unions in an endeavour to work out some acceptable arrangements to make sure there would not be a work stoppage in the future.

You can imagine my shock to see across my desk two or three days ago a press release from the Minister of Labour indicating that he was pleased with the results of his first meeting with Canada's top rail union leaders to discuss alternatives to confrontation during forthcoming negotiations for new contracts in the railway industry. What has the minister being doing for the last six months? Why, in spite of the correspondence not only from myself but, I am sure, from other concerned members from these two island provinces and from provincial officials, has literally nothing taken place?

We are told the following in this press release of March 27:

> The thrust of the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall . . . as well as the alternatives suggested by labour minister Munro were examined in detail—

We are not given any indication of what the minister's alternatives were. Finally, in this release we are told that the meeting "resulted from an exchange of letters last February between Mr. Munro and Mr. McGregor". I think it is absolutely intolerable that a minister of the Crown who accepts responsibility for labour harmony and the reconciliation of difficult labour questions in this country should, having gone through the experience of August, 1973, have let lapse a considerable number of months before beginning to come to terms with this most difficult problem. The premier of P.E.I. suggested the alternative of a separate Crown corporation. Other members of the House have suggested the establishment of a special authority under the Ministry of Transport.

My own proposal which is recorded in Hansard of October 26, 1973, at page 7266, spells out what I will refer to as a double penalty, military alternative for maintaining continuity of service. I will not go into the details here. One thing is certain, with which I hope the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport will agree, that we are dealing with a vital service which was guaranteed and binding under the pact of confederation entered into by these two island provinces.

I find it shocking and unacceptable that to this date, some six or seven months later, we have not progressed. There is no indication that we will have this problem resolved shortly. What is most terrifying of all is that a comment appears in the minister's press release as follows:

> The fact that we are sitting down together, looking ahead to some nine months from now, indicates we are all aware of the public's concern if the next round of railway bargaining should end in a strike.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Which minister?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The Minister of Labour. Is this an indication that we are on the path of another disruption of transportation between the two island provinces? Is this the kind of responsible action taken by this minister and the Minister of Transport to provide an acceptable solution? I hope that tonight the parliamentary secretary can give us much more information than we have had to date. The people of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island are fed up with this lack of responsibility toward this vital question.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my responsibility this evening is to answer on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). If the hon. member has some questions for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), I am sure he knows the way to approach that problem. In regard to the question he referred to, the Minister of Transport recognizes the problems created by the disruption of service between Borden and Cape Tormentine as part of the Canadian National Railways' railway strike in 1973 and is anxious to find solutions. However, since there are alternative means of moving surface traffic to and from Prince Edward Island, he does not believe that he would be justified in taking any action which would interfere with the right to strike enjoyed by many Canadian workers.

We are hopeful that a partial solution might lie in the logical separation of railway and ferry matters, and to this end the east coast marine and ferry service was set up in late 1973 as a separate body within the CN organization to manage and operate the ferries and coastal service entrusted to CNR by the Ministry of Transport. In an effort to eliminate the possibility of any recurrence of the problems encountered as a result of the 1973 railway strike, the east coast marine and ferry service has entered into discussions with the various unions involved and we are optimistic that a mutually acceptable solution will be found.

AGRICULTURE—ACTION TO ENSURE PACKING PLANTS PASS ON BEEF SUBSIDY TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on March 29 of this year I raised a question with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on the subsidy which he announced, pointing out that it goes directly to the packer and not to the producer. I asked the minister to inform the House and the beef producers of Canada of any move to assure the producers that they will be gaining a subsidy and the packers will not. The minister gave no definite assurance to the producers of this country that they would receive that subsidy. I think this is a most serious situation, Mr. Speaker.

When the government announced a seven cents subsidy on certain grades of wheat, a number of factors were involved which pointed up that the subsidy would not go to the producer, and the consumers of Canada ought to know this. Number one, the payment of the subsidy is not made to the producer in any manner; it is made to the packer. Number two, when the subsidy was announced, the price on the Canadian market fell by an amount at least equal to the subsidy, so that the only beneficiary of the subsidy will be the packing industry.

The problem with the subsidy stems from the manner in which it is paid to the packer. There is no assurance for the consumer of this country that price will go down. There is no assurance, in other words, that although the price on the market has gone down in the last week, the saving will be passed on to the consumer. There is no evidence of any mechanism in the Department of Agriculture to make sure that any price reduction in the marketplace will be passed on to the consumer. So we have created the situation in which packers in this country can rip off the government and Canadian taxpayers. They can pay reduced prices to producers but not pass on the savings to the consumer. That is a bonanza for the middleman, I hope this problem will be dealt with in the answer given this evening.

At this point in time, because of concern expressed by cattle associations in Canada, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association in particular, over the influx of American beef into Canada there is support for a system of tariffs which could drive a wedge into the North American market. Because the associations demanded such action, the government acted. To keep prices down, the government paid a subsidy. I submit that by paying a subsidy to packers, who are to pass it on to producers, the government created a situation which allowed the packers to drive down the market price to the level of the American market. This has happened in the last few weeks.

If I as a member of parliament am critical of the manner in which the subsidy is paid, it is also my responsibility to suggest alternative courses. First, if you are to interfere with the market place you ought to establish a guaranteed price to the producer. The difference between the actual going price and the guaranteed price ought to be paid directly to the producer. Second, although not all grades were covered in the initial announcement, I commend the government for moving in the direction of covering all grades. That was a good move. Third, you must allow the North American market as a whole over the long term to establish a balance between supply and demand. The government cannot afford to create a strictly Canadian market. We are a country of only 22 million people. The beef producers of this country are interested in the Canadian market as well as in the international market. In that sense, I submit we should only act after consultation and negotiation with the Americans. We can ill-afford to cut ourselves off from a market of 240 million people. The beef industry needs the North American market as a whole.

Fourth, as we have learned, any attempt to freeze the price of a commodity such as beef is totally unrealistic. You cannot apply such a freeze to the beef industry. Attempts to freeze prices per se lead to disaster, as has been demonstrated. In short, you will meet the problem of the importation of American beef to Canada through a joint agreement between the two countries and not by putting up barriers and tariff walls to which I am basically opposed. You must move in the direction of a reciprocal, two-way quota system which will operate between the two countries in the direction of an overall agreement which will allow so many head of American cattle to come to Canada and so many head of Canadian cattle to go to the American market. The agreement must be based on the share of the market which each country's industry has enjoyed in the last five years.

Finally, I predict that if the American cattle industry again uses DES in the rearing of cattle, the government will restrict importation; it will go almost as far as closing the border. This will drive up the price on the Canadian market. That will happen within the next six weeks. It is a whole new kettle of fish for the government. They ought to attempt in every possible way to get the American government to outlaw the use of DES in the United States, or within the next six weeks the government will be outlawing so many American cattle that it will have closed off the Canadian border.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the beef program is designed to improve the returns of beef producers which have been too low due in large measure to government action in the United States. The results of this action are still being felt by producers in this country. With the subsidy now in effect, Canadian producers marketing A, B and C cattle are receiving market price plus five cents per pound. On the basis of today's prices, Canadian producers are receiving a price about $10 per hundredweight above the price prevailing in the United States. With respect to the producer, the payment of subsidy is quite simple. The producer receives the subsidy at the time of sale, either in the sale price or added to the price, if the sale price does not include the premium.

The changes the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced last weekend have improved the situation considerably, and the strengthening of market prices this week reflect this improvement. The hon. member opposite will be pleased to note that the number of cattle entering Canada from the United States has dropped off dramatically since the introduction of this much needed program. The producer has always had to decide whether or not he was satisfied with the price he was being offered for his animals. There is no difference now. The producer simply has to satisfy himself that he is getting the $5 per hundredweight on his eligible cattle.

In conclusion, if the hon. member opposite or any hon. member has any evidence of anyone misusing or trying to take advantage of this program, the Minister of Agriculture would appreciate its being brought to his attention at once.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—EDMONTON—REASON FOR REPORTED PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF HOLY REDEEMER COLLEGE

Mr. Dan Hollands (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last, April 2, I put the following question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), as reported at page 1069 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact the government has reportedly purchased the Holy Redeemer College which lies on the southern outskirts of the city of Edmonton, would the minister tell the House what the government intends to do with this institution?

Your Honour saw fit to rule the question out of order at that time but was gracious enough to suggest that it be raised at the time of adjournment. This matter was first made known to the people of the area by way of a newspaper article some two weeks ago in the city of Edmonton. That report stated that the Holy Redeemer College was to be used as a minimum security institution. Needless to say, the residents of the area were deeply concerned by this report, particularly as they had no previous knowledge of such an intention and had been given no opportunity to make their views or wishes known.

The location of this college is among some of the finest residences and is a totally residential community adjacent to the city of Edmonton. Many of the residents have purchased or built homes of very substantial value, and in my opinion they have cause to be concerned by the appearance of a report such as I have described. The value of properties in the area would obviously be adversely affected and the quiet way of life the residents enjoy would be jeopardized.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, a very disturbing aspect of this question came to my attention only yesterday. I had every intention of raising this matter on Tuesday, April 2, the day on which I put the question and the day on which Your Honour advised me that it might be raised at the time of adjournment. The reason I did not raise it on Tuesday night was simply that the minister advised me it would be better for me to delay my question because he was unable to obtain the necessary information at such short order. Yesterday, however, the Edmonton Journal carried a report containing some of the information I had sought in my question. Since the minister had stated he was unable to assist me because of lack of information, I am forced to wonder how it is that he could assist the press. Perhaps he would be good enough to explain this in his reply.

Tonight I am seeking to obtain from the minister a simple undertaking. I am asking him to give the residents of the area his word that there will be no prisoners housed in the institution either in the period immediately ahead or at any time in the future and, further, that if he should at any time decide to adapt facilities which have been used for other purposes with the intention of housing prisoners therein, he will make this intention known to the residents of the areas affected and arrange that public meetings will be held accordingly.

It is my opinion, strongly held, that a law-abiding citizen should enjoy the right to select a site, build a home and raise his family in an atmosphere of security. Residential areas should be maintained in the character intended and home owners should not be faced with the insecurity resulting from penal institutions being placed in their midst.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Hollands) and in response to his question, may I say the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) would like to make it clear at the outset that while an option has been taken on this property in order to protect the potential interests of the Canadian Penitentiary Service related to its possible needs, no final purchase has as yet been made. The Solicitor General wishes to add that the Canadian Penitentiary Service is interested in the possibility of employing the Holy Redeemer College facilities as a staff training college for the Service in the prairie region.

Discussions are now going on with the government of Alberta with a view to determining our respective needs in the area. The Solicitor General would like to assure the House that no final action will be taken on this matter in the absence of the fullest consultation with the province of Alberta.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

An hon. Member: He is not there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: In the absence of both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and—

An hon. Member: Here is the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps Your Honour would like to return to the hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Speaker: It might be more orderly to proceed in that way. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Regina East.

OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA AND CARIBBEAN—NECESSITY OF FURTHER REFINING—COST

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Will the minister confirm or deny that most, if not all, of the Roumanian and Caribbean oil stocks must be re-refined if they are to be useful and, if so, what will be the cost?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is a purely technical question that concerns the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA AND CARIBBEAN—INQUIRY AS TO ATTEMPTS TO SELL

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Is it correct that the Department of Supply and Services is attempting to resell these oil stocks and, if so, what is the best offer it has received?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not very well informed. I said repeatedly in committee and before this House that we were going to use the oil immediately in federal buildings in eastern Canada. I think it is clear enough.

[English]

Mr. Balfour: Perhaps the minister did not hear my question. It was simply this: Has the hon. gentleman's department attempted to resell these oil stocks and, if so, what was the best offer received? Does the minister deny that this has taken place?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my words have been misinterpreted, but I think I clearly said that we were going to use this oil to heat federal buildings.

[English]

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister can give a simple yes or no answer to the question.

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA—REASON FOR PURCHASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Why did Shell International insist that in order to purchase the Caribbean oil the minister must accept five million gallons of Roumanian oil? May I ask the minister whether the reason was that, in spite of the fact there was a world shortage, Shell International could not get rid of that oil at the exorbitant price they were asking until they found the two gold dust twins to act as suckers?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, we are not dealing with Shell Canada Limited but with Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited. During our negotiations, that company wanted us to buy all the Roumanian oil but we finally obtained a two thirds reduction of that purchase. Therefore, we bought only a third of that oil. We have also reduced their commission from 2 to 1½ per cent and we entirely eliminated the commission on the Carribbean oil. Under the circumstances, I believe it was the best bargaining that we could make.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that when that oil was purchased, no official from my department was a member of the technical committee established by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF OPTION AND CONTRACT TO BUY ROUMANIAN OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canadian Fuel Marketers is owned by Shell International, may I ask the minister whether he is prepared to place on the table of the House a copy of the option which Canadian Fuel Marketers had with the Roumanian export trading company and also a copy of the contract which the minister entered into relative to this transaction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I would be pleased to table immediately the contract concluded between the federal government and Canadian Fuel Marketers Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

[English]

HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA—REASON FOR PURCHASE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the fact the explanation given by the minister to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands regarding the Roumanian purchase is at odds with the explanation given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his officials yesterday in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, can the minister explain the basis for this difference, and is he assured that the explanation that he has given is correct and the explanation given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is incorrect?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not know at all. I have not read my colleague's comments, but I think that what I said surely sticks to the facts.

[English]

PRICE AGREED ON BY FIRST MINISTERS FOR CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—ADDITIONAL INCREASE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister relating to the story that the average price of $6.50, which the House was informed was agreed upon by the meeting of first ministers, may not be the average price but that some of the oil may have to be paid for at a higher price. Can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House exactly what agreement was reached at that meeting? No doubt the cabinet was informed by the Prime Minister as to exactly what happened.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the price that was agreed upon during the discussions at the meeting of first ministers was $6.50 at the wellhead.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, even though the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not as expert in the field as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I am sure he knows there are various prices for various ranges of oil. May I ask him what ranges of oil the $6.50 was intended to cover? Was it merely conventional oil or was it to be an average price for all oil bought domestically from Alberta?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the only price that was discussed during the meeting of the first ministers was a wellhead price of $6.50 plus transportation costs. There was no discussion during the first minister's meeting of any differentials.

Mr. Lewis: In view of what appears to be the fact, that the average price of a barrel of oil at the wellhead during the frozen price period was about $3.85 rather than $4, taking into account the lower price for conventional and the higher price for unconventional, can we have an assurance from the government that it will not agree to any further increase per barrel at the wellhead and that $6.50 is to be the average price for all oil shipped out of the producing provinces?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, after the meetings were concluded the province of Alberta decided unilaterally that there should be some small increases for certain special kinds of oil. This was not discussed during the first ministers' meeting. The average increase in price is so small, however, that the government is not disposed to question this action of the government of Alberta.

Mr. Lewis: Do I gather from the Acting Prime Minister that a decision has already been made for increased prices for certain types of oil, or is this still a matter of discussion between the federal government and the Alberta government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is not an issue that we think would justify the reassembly of the first ministers to discuss this question. Basically, agreement was reached at $6.50. The province of Alberta has, as I have said, unilaterally decided to allow certain premiums for certain special types of oil. This was not discussed with any of the prime ministers, including the Prime Minister of Canada, at that time. I repeat what I have said, that in comparison, of course, with the $10.50 external price, this is a very small margin and we are not disposed to fight with the province of Alberta over such a small amount.

SETTING OF PRICE FOR OIL PRODUCED FROM TAR SANDS OR EXTRACTED FROM NATURAL GAS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister for the purpose of clarification. What is the position, specifically, with reference to synthetic crude produced from the tar sands and oil extracted from natural gas? Is it the position of the government that the prices for such oil will be set by the provincial government of Alberta without any further suggestions from the federal government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta has issued a price list which does include some premiums of this kind. This is a decision that is, of course, within the right of the province of Alberta. The figures are so close and involve such relatively small amounts that, as I have said, we are not disposed to make it a great issue.

DAIRYING—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the expected increase in the cost of milk early this summer, which will bring its retail cost up to 43 cents a quart, can the minister say whether the cabinet is studying the possibility of increasing the 5-cent a quart subsidy that already applies?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not considering this question at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Can the minister say whether the cabinet is now studying the possibility of granting a milk subsidy, not to the producers or distributors, but to the consumers?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the subsidy that the Canadian government has paid, which is very substantial and is helping keep down the price of milk, does go to the producer.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary.

Can the minister say whether the cabinet has looked into the possibility of granting a compensated discount on food retail costs?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of this representation.

FEDERAL MILK SUBSIDY—APPLICATION TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for either the Minister of Agriculture or his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the milk subsidy of the federal government is, I understand, now applicable to all ten provinces, when is the government going to apply that subsidy to the remainder of Canadians living above the sixtieth parallel?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the hon. member means the five cents a quart subsidy.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Mr. Whelan: I was not aware they were not getting the advantage of that in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I am given to understand that most of their milk supply is shipped in, that the five cents subsidy is included, and that milk would be five cents a quart higher there if it were not. I understand this has been taken into consideration because most of the milk now comes from outside the area.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the Minister of Agriculture consult with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in order to assure northern Canadians that they are getting the benefit of that subsidy?

AIRPORTS

CLOSING OF VANCOUVER AIRPORT BECAUSE OF WITHDRAWAL OF SERVICES BY FIREFIGHTERS—ACTION TO REOPEN

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport with regard to Vancouver international airport which is closed down this morning because of the withdrawal of the services of the firefighters. In view of the fact the Department of Labour has been ordered not to touch this situation, and in view of the fact the President of the Treasury Board refuses to negotiate, can the minister advise the House what action he plans to take in respect of the fireman at Vancouver international airport to make sure they go back to work so that the Vancouver international airport will be reopened?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a sorry situation. I think the hon. member should have given the whole picture. We are in communication with the firefighters and Treasury Board is in communication with the firefighters. Even the Public Service Alliance has some problems in communicating with its own members. The firefighters refuse to follow the route they have accepted—arbitration. This is the whole situation. I do not put blame on anybody, but do not try to exploit the situation in that way. We are doing all we can to open the airport.

Mr. Reynolds: Is it not a fact that negotiations broke off last night at midnight and that the firefighters cannot get anywhere with this government and that you just refuse to talk to them?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the only fact that is true is that the firefighters at Vancouver are bound to go to arbitration when they have a grievance. They are bound by the law. This is the route they have chosen and they have decided to withdraw from this route and have notified that they are withdrawing from work this morning. These are the facts. Notwithstanding that, we are trying to see how we can solve the problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PUBLICATION OF BROCHURE BY CANADIAN CULTURAL CENTRE IN PARIS WITH MAP INDICATING THAT LABRADOR IS PART OF QUEBEC

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have given him notice. It concerns a brochure published under the direction of the Canadian cultural centre in Paris, which has been widely circulated in certain European countries and in which there is a deliberate and offensive misrepresentation of Canadian political boundaries affecting eastern Canada in that the territory of Labrador is shown in the brochure as belonging to Quebec when it in fact belongs to Newfoundland. Can the minister explain to the House how this happened and what steps he has taken to withdraw this brochure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman. This is a most inaccurate and most offensive change in the boundaries of Canada. I have ordered that the map be withdrawn.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISQUALIFICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN CITIZEN BORN IN NEWFOUNDLAND ON BASIS OF CITIZENSHIP

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary may I ask the Solicitor General to explain to the House how it is possible for a Canadian citizen born in the province of Newfoundland to be disqualified, in this our twenty-fifth anniversary year as a province of Canada, by one of his officials on the basis of citizenship in respect of employment with the federal government?

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that question is not supplementary to the first question. It may be related. However, the question has been asked and the minister may reply.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I just learned about this case a few minutes ago from the hon. member and I will be pleased to find out. I must agree with him. I do not know how they can disqualify the person either.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—NUMBER OF FIREFIGHTERS ON DUTY

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact there have been only eight men on duty at a given time responsible for operating the firefighting equipment at the Vancouver airport, thus leaving no one actually to carry on the removal of passengers, I would ask the minister if this is not one of the reasons they walked out and what he is going to do about it?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. If the House wants me to discuss the problem, I can do it.

An hon. Member: Just keep the airport open.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Just bring back the fire-fighters? Why don't you do that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION TO LOWER RETAIL PRICES OF SO-CALLED CHEAP CUTS OF BEEF—FREQUENCY OF REPORTS BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it arises from reports that retail beef prices, particularly those of the formerly least expensive cuts of beef, have risen to an alarmingly high level. Is the minister satisfied that the increase in the prices of these so-called cheap cuts of beef is justified, and is he planning any discussions with the packers to see whether this trend can be reversed?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that what we need is the kind of definitive information that I expect will be coming from the Food Prices Review Board study of beef price margins very shortly. It is on the basis of that that we will decide what further action is necessary.

Mr. Grier: In view of the minister's reliance on the Food Prices Review Board for statistical information on the movement of food prices, I should like to ask him whether consideration is being given to altering the instructions to that board to ensure that their reports on the movement of food prices are issued more frequently than once every three months—say once a week.

Mr. Gray: It is my understanding of their present terms of reference that, in addition to the quarterly reports on trends in food prices, the most recent of which was issued on March 22 and which indicated on the basis of information currently available to them that consumer prices for beef seemed to be going downward, the board has the authority to issue reports as frequently as it sees fit on any subject pertaining to food prices.

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS OF EMPLOYEES BY GENERAL INSTRUMENT CORPORATION, SYDNEY, N.S.—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and he is very familiar with the subject matter. We have discussed it in the House and outside it. It concerns the disastrous lay-offs of employees at the Sydney plant of General Instrument Corporation which have reduced the number of employees from approximately 1,000 to less than 400, and the meetings that were held by officials of his department, Industrial Estates Limited and General Instrument Corporation in Boston. Has he any progress report or anything to report with regard to doing something to correct these disastrous lay-offs and have people rehired?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can report any major progress. There have been discussions with both the parent corporation and the corporation mentioned by the hon. member. The reason for the lay-offs, as I understand it, is twofold: first, the company has suffered multimillion dollar losses in recent years and, second, the United States automobile market is in a depressed state. My department has been meeting with officials with respect to seeing whether GAAP, the General Adjustment Assistance Program, might be of use to the company in these circumstances.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the minister have his officials investigate this very serious situation and ascertain whether he as Minister of Regional Economic Expansion can do something in the area to develop that region?

Mr. Gillespie: We are most concerned about this situation and we will do everything we can to assist the company to become viable so that those on lay-off can be returned to their jobs.

Mr. Muir: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and will then return to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore who I believe has a supplementary to his previous question and supplementary.

Mr. Muir: I thank the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for his further interest but my question was directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since he is in charge of the very specific problem of regional development and as the work force of the company has been reduced disastrously, what is the minister prepared to do to develop the region that is affected by this lay-off?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have already been advised and have been in touch with officials of the province and also officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the viability of the existing operation. As my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has said, in so far as alternative forms of employment or alternative utilization of the plant are concerned, we will be happy to look into that if it is determined that something along those lines might be possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore, but we are coming closer and closer to the end of the question period. I would hope we could reduce the number of supplementaries.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FREQUENCY OF REPORTS BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary arises from the answer given by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I should like to ask him whether consideration is being given by his department to altering the terms of reference of the Food Prices Review Board to instruct it to produce regular weekly or bi-weekly retail food price studies?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Any change in the terms of reference would be up to the government as a whole because they are created by order in council under the Inquiries Act. This is a matter that certainly could be considered. However, I should again say that it is my impression of the terms of reference that they are sufficiently broad to allow the board to carry on this type of activity at present at the pace suggested by the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

CONTINUITY OF CNR FERRY SERVICE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND IN THE EVENT OF FUTURE LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the concern we have had since late last summer regarding the establishment of a permanent means of transportation or continuity of the ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and the answer by the minister's parliamentary secretary last night indicating that as a partial solution there has been a separation of the east coast marine and ferry services. Can the minister indicate whether in that separation some guarantee has been received from the director or from the various participating labour unions with respect to continuity of service during any kind of national or regional industrial dispute, which is really the crux of the matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said not many months ago in the House, I believe, that I was going to try to establish contact with the unions to see how we could solve this problem. It is normal that I proceed through the Department of Labour which is the department that deals with such problems. I know that some meetings are going to take place on the matter of continuity of service, but there is also the problem of the acquired rights of these workers and we will want to see what will become of those rights before we make any move. We are in the process of trying to solve this problem on a voluntary basis with the unions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Could the minister indicate whether either he or the Minister of Labour has advanced any specific alternatives to the unions involved that they are now considering in order that the problem can be resolved, because within a few months we may be faced with another difficult time arising from labour problems on the railways?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I regret that the Minister of Labour is not in the House. I would like to have a report on what has been going on recently, but at the beginning of next week perhaps I can complete a report here in the House.

DAIRYING—ESTABLISHMENT OF REASONABLE PRICE FOR QUEBEC PRODUCERS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that an agreement was reached at a federal-provincial conference to ensure a most reasonable price of $6.50 a barrel to the multinational oil producers, does the minister intend to convene the provincial ministers of agriculture to set up a price ensuring Quebec milk producers reasonable profits comparable to those granted the oil industry?

● (1140)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed stabilizing the total agricultural industry with the provincial ministers of agriculture. SPORTS

FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION RESPECTING WORLD FOOTBALL LEAGUE—EFFECT OF PROVISIONS OF COMPETITION BILL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the imminent legislation proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding the World Football League—incidentally I am happy that my ideas for Canadianizing football in Canada are being considered—and in view of existing government policy as outlined by the minister's own department in the competition bill regarding the outlawing of monopolistic practices in Canada in order to stimulate free enterprise and competition, can the minister advise the House whether this government policy will be seriously considered in the forthcoming legislation, or does the minister intend to try to amend Bill C-7 somewhat so as not to have further obvious contradictions within the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply to the question briefly, but the hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is irregular. Hon. members should be able to ask questions without making arguments or speeches.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the ultimate objective of Bill C-7 is to serve the interests of individual Canadians. It is part of our policy, if parliament decides that a bill like that to be proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be adopted, that on behalf of the Canadian people we have taken a measure consistent with the interests of individual Canadians.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because of the fact that about three or four weeks ago the minister promised legislation regarding the World Football League within two weeks, can the minister assure the House that we can expect the legislation to be introduced next week, or has the cabinet not agreed on the matter yet?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in my original statement on this subject I said that in fact I hoped it would come about in the following two or three weeks, but I had clearly indicated that delays were possible. One of these has been caused by the preparation of the important legislation introduced today concerning the Canada Pension Plan, which will be of benefit to all Canadians. I also mentioned that the bill would be introduced before the Easter recess and I am confident that that will be sometime next week.

HALIFAX AND DARTMOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INCENTIVES CORPORATION—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I ask it against the background of concern about the undue delay in the appointment of a chairman of the Metropolitan Area Growth Incentives Corporation in the metropolitan area of Halifax. Has there been any communication with the province of Nova Scotia, particularly in light of the fact they now have Mr. Scott McNutt to assume that position? If there has been some communication, is the minister now in a position to indicate when that job will be filled?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there has not been any communication in recent weeks. The government of Nova Scotia was otherwise engaged—and successfully engaged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mr. Jamieson: During that time there was no further correspondence and there has not been anything since Tuesday.

GRAIN

REQUEST THAT RAILWAYS OPEN SNOWBOUND BRANCH LINES AND MOVE GRAIN IN LIGHT OF SASKATCHEWAN HIGHWAY LOAD RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of the announcement he made recently regarding emergency movement of grain and the closure of several railway branch lines, with farmers being asked to haul grain to main or secondary main lines, and in view of the fact that, if they have not already done so, within the next few days the provincial government of Saskatchewan and municipalities in that province will be imposing road bans which will effectively prevent farmers from hauling grain to alternative delivery points, will the minister now call on the railways to open the closed branch lines and empty the elevators which are full of grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course spring conditions will affect the highway system and the grid roads in the prairie region just as they do rail lines, and the farmers will have to haul grain consistent with whatever provincial and municipal rules are in place. We hope there will be a quick response by the province and the municipalities to this situation and that the bans will be as limited as is necessary to preserve the roads.

The fact is that there are large quantities of grain available on the main lines that will be served by trains, and it would not particularly be to the advantage of farmers to delay the hauling of that grain by trying to send trains on to lines that are impassable, or where it would simply require too much locomotive power to plow them. We will therefore continue to offer farmers the opportunity, whenever conditions permit them to do so, to deliver to lines that are open.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to inquire and report to the hon. gentleman.

PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of speculation that the government favours the purchase of 4,000 more hopper cars, can the minister say whether any orders have been placed and, if so, when will they be delivered and ready for use?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have more than favoured the purchase. We intend to purchase, and we have decided to purchase 4,000 hopper cars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The question is now being pursued about what rate of delivery we ought to anticipate in order that the appropriate tender calls can be issued and contracts can be placed at as early a date as possible.

FEED GRAINS—REQUEST THAT PROVINCIAL PLEBISCITE FAVOURING MARKETING BY WHEAT BOARD BE CONSIDERED IN FORMULATING POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact the Prime Minister, in answering a question yesterday, indicated that a plebiscite in regard to feed grain marketing would be considered of great importance to the government, may I ask the minister whether in formulating feed grain policy he will take into account the fact that 93 per cent of the farmers in Manitoba who answered a plebiscite sent out by the provincial government voted in favour of retaining the marketing of feed grains within the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that plebiscite was so misleading that anyone in favour of any type of feed grain proposal might have voted affirmatively, indeed, including myself without contradiction with the August 3 proposals, I do not think great attention should be paid to that kind of political venture. I think the kind of plebiscite the Prime Minister had in mind was the one held in connection with rapeseed when producers were given a fair opportunity to present their views in a clear and impartial manner.

Mr. Gleave: Do I take it that the minister intends to ignore the expressed wishes of those farmers and base his policy largely on the wishes of the private grain trade?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the government, in considering finally the question of the feed grain policy for Canada, will be taking into consideration the interests of all Canadian producers and consumers of grain, and will produce a policy which is equitable and allows for the development of agriculture in this country according to the natural advantages and opportunities that exist.

ARMOURED CORPS—INTENTION OF MINISTER RESPECTING RE-EQUIPMENT AND ROLE FOLLOWING RETIREMENT OF CENTURION TANK

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The minister has announced that the main battle tank of the armed forces will be phased out and apparently not replaced. Can the minister tell us whether he plans to re-equip the armoured corps with some other type of armoured fighting vehicle such as armoured cars, does he intend to change the role of the armoured corps, or does he intend to disband the corps?

Mr. Nielsen: Equip them with skidoos.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have stated several times that the decision will be announced before 1976, which is the date to which the service of the Centurion tank has been extended.

Mr. McKinnon: As this decision affects the lives of thousands of servicemen and their dependants, I hope the minister can come up with some better answer than that within the next two years so they will have an opportunity to plan their future.

MONTREAL—ACTION TO PREVENT BUYERS HAVING TO PAY HIGHER PRICE THAN FIRST AGREED UPON

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the minister responsible for consumer protection, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Does the minister intend to make representations to his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, in order to prevent greater Montreal contractors from demanding a price higher than the one the buyer had accepted when he took an option?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and I are already aware of these difficulties and we want to do our best to find a solution to problems of federal jurisdiction. But I think, of course, that this is mainly a matter under provincial jurisdiction; we will nevertheless do all we can to solve the problem.

INDUSTRY

SHORTAGE OF CORRUGATED CONTAINERS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA FOOD PROCESSORS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he been made aware of the serious shortage of corrugated containers facing the food processing industry in British Columbia? If so, has any action been taken to assure supplies adequate to meet the needs of the industry?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the problems that have arisen in this industry from time to time. Generally, I think that the initiatives we have taken and the actions the industry have taken have settled the problem. I will be pleased to look into this particular question on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Patterson: As an over-all shortage of 800,000 containers is predicted for this year and a shortage of 200,000 within the next three months in one plant alone in my riding, will the minister give this problem immediate attention to ensure that remedial action is taken?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation.

ENERGY

PRICE AGREED ON BY FIRST MINISTERS FOR CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—EFFECT OF CERTAIN ADDITIONAL INCREASES ON CONSUMER PRICES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to put a further question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Acting Prime Minister today that the actual agreement of the first ministers was for $6.50 per barrel, is he aware of the telex sent by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stating that the agreement provided for an increase of $2.50 per barrel in Canadian crude oil prices and it did not specifically refer to a $6.50 price at the wellhead?

[Mr. McKinnon.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the first ministers' meeting there was no doubt whatever that there was general agreement on a $6.50 price, plus transportation costs, and no other agreement of any kind was reached.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, and perhaps we will have time for two more quick questions before calling orders of the day.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I again direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Noting that there are some apparent differences in the interpretation of the March 27 agreement and the possible effect on retail prices of the new, increased, wellhead rate, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House, in light of the revelation that an extra charge may be allowed on unconventional oils, which make up about 12 per cent of total domestic production, whether that extra charge will be added to the consumer price and raise prices substantially above the 8.5 cents and 3.5 cent limits specified earlier by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking me to enter into an arithmetical calculation in the House of Commons. I believe that it was a very considerable achievement to have reached agreement on a wellhead price of $6.50, a single price across Canada. The minor changes Alberta has made unilaterally and not by agreement are not such as to cause us to bring the whole agreement into question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a further supplementary. I will recognize him and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister confirm if the retail price will be at least slightly higher than was originally anticipated?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman can do arithmetic too. I think questions of this kind should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will be here at the beginning of next week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Supply and Services on a point of order.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer the question put by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) as regards the sulphur content of Roumanian oil.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister can answer a question after the oral question period only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, tests were made at Golden Eagle Canada Limited where the oil obtained from Roumania is stored and the results showed that the sulphur content is .14 and .16. This means that the oil can be used as is, for it has a very low sulphur ratio.

[English]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West is rising on a point of order but my understanding is that since the minister was replying to a question asked by the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member has risen on a point of order, his point of order must be on the same subject. After that I will hear all points of order that hon. members may wish to submit for the consideration of the Chair.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to an answer given by the Minister of Supply and Services a question was asked in respect of Roumanian and Caribbean oil, and the minister did not confirm that the Caribbean oil does not contain sulphur in excess of Canadian clean air requirements. The reason for this is very simple. The contract supplied by his department does not contain any grade requirement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is an interesting point of order but I find it difficult to relate that point of order to the Standing Order. It seems to me that this is debate. Perhaps the minister and the hon. member might like to pursue the matter on Monday, or outside the House in the meantime. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO ASSIST CAPTAIN OF "GREENPEACE III" TO OBTAIN DAMAGES FROM FRANCE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I will not try your patience unduly. I have noted that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been attempting since Wednesday to reply to a question I addressed to the Prime Minister on Tuesday. I wonder whether the minister might be permitted, with the agreement of the House, to reply to my question?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question which was put to me by the hon. gentleman related to the Greenpeace and the action that the Canadian government has taken. I would inform him that on March 26 I wrote to the solicitor for Mr. McTaggart and informed him that the Canadian ambassador in Paris is making representations to the appropriate French authorities with a view to attempting once again to settle Mr. McTaggart's claim. Should discussions between representatives of our two governments fail to materialize or fail to bring about a reasonable settlement, subject to Mr. McTaggart's wishes the Canadian government will then formally espouse the claims arising out of both the 1972 and the 1973 Greenpeace III incidents.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENTS FOR MODIFICATION AND CONVERSION OF VESSELS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Fisheries Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am moving the second reading motion on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) who is unavoidably absent from the House today. I am pleased to have the opportunity to make the second reading speech because there is an extensive fishery in my own electoral district. There are many communities that are almost wholly dependent upon a flourishing fishing industry.

● (1200)

Hon. members will recall that the substance of this amendment was discussed in the standing committee in the last session. It was only by inadvertence that the amendment that was agreed upon in the committee was not made in the House when the bill itself was approved. The purpose of this bill is really to do a good deed that was wanted to be done in the last session. Its purpose is to give authority to the government to provide financial support for the conversion and modification of fishing vessels.

As far as the legislation itself is concerned, the amendment is very short and consists of only a few words. However, the effect of the amendment on the fishery could be considerable. Under the existing fishing vessel construction program now administered by the Department of the Environment, through its Fisheries and Marine Service, subsidies may only be paid for new vessel construction. The purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Fisheries and Marine Service to make additional payments under the Fisheries Development Act to owners of small or intermediate size vessels to assist with the cost of an authorized conversion or modification. The change that is being sought in this amendment does, in a sense, reflect the changing pattern of Canada's fisheries.

There is every reason to believe we are on the threshold of a most important era in the development of Canada's fisheries. There are several factors which point to that conclusion. First, as a government and as a country, we are pushing very hard to expand our limits much farther seaward in order to gain greater control over the harvesting, protection and development of our marine resources off our coasts. It is also evident that Canada is achieving greater recognition as a coastal state. I believe that is evidenced by the increased catch quotas granted to this country by the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries. It is the conclusion of the Minister of Fisheries and his department that fish are there to be taken by Canadians, but in some ways, probably many ways, our fishermen do not have the right kind of vessels or the right kind of equipment to enable them to go out and harvest the fishery resources. The purpose of this amendment is to change this to some extent by making funds available to owners of existing vessels so that they can make the necessary modifications or conversions to enable them to operate more efficiently and profitably.

I will not go further into the development of an explanation, except to say that in the administration of the subsidy and its application to modifications or conversions, the same criteria which are presently being used by the Fisheries and Marine Service in approving subsidies for new vessel construction will be applied to modifications and conversions. The Fisheries and Marine Service will be selected in approving any boat for conversion. It will want to assure itself that any conversion will result in a marked improvement in the harvesting capability of the vessel. The department will look thoroughly into the sustainable yield of resources by species and area where the vessel will be operating. Market demands will be assessed and technical and economic efficiency will be examined before any approvals are given or decisions are made.

That is the gist of the proposed amendment. I am satisfied it will get the support of hon. members of the House.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-2, to amend the Fisheries Development Act. I first wish to say that I regret the inability of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) to be with us today, but I realize that at times his duties require him to be outside the House. As a Nova Scotian, I welcome the comments of a fellow Nova Scotian, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

This is a very short bill. As stated in the explanatory note, when the bill is passed the minister will have the authority to make payment, not only for the construction of an equipment for fishing vessels, but also their modification and conversion.

This bill provides us with an opportunity to review the Fisheries Development Act which was first introduced by the then Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. H. J. Robichaud, on March 6, 1966. At this time I must express my regret, and I believe the sincere regret of many fishermen on the Atlantic coast, the west coast and in central Canada, that we do not have today a minister entitled the Minister of Fisheries whose sole responsibility would be to develop and implement policy for this important primary industry. However, the decision to place the responsibility for our environment as well as fisheries on the shoulders of one minister was a decision that was taken by the present government. It is one for which they will have to give an accounting to the fishermen, at least in Atlantic Canada, at some future date.

The origin of the act may be traced back to a 1964 federal-provincial fisheries conference which was attended by representatives of all the fisheries administrations, as well as the federal fisheries service. At that time the representatives agreed there should be a national fisheries development program emphasizing development of, rather than research into, fisheries matters. Passage of the Fisheries Development Act empowered the fisheries service to take initiatives in all aspects of fisheries development. It is worth noting that prior to the introduction of this act, programs of assistance to the fishing industry were implemented through specific appropriations and not under a specific piece of fisheries legislation.

The Fisheries Development Act as originally passed permits the Minister of the Environment to undertake projects of basically three different types. This act is all encompassing as far as the fishing industry is concerned. It might well be called the fishing industry's bible. First, it is concerned with projects designed to implement more efficient exploitation of fishery resources and exploration for and development of new fishery resources and new fisheries, second, projects for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new types of fishing vessels, equipment and techniques; third, projects for the development of new fishery products, as well as projects for the improvement of the handling, processing and distribution of fishery products.

The act also permits the minister to enter into agreements with the provinces for the joint undertaking of authorized projects and, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to provide for the payment to the province of contributions in respect of the cost of authorized projects.

In the formulation and assessment of fisheries development projects, the federal government may undertake economic studies either alone, or jointly with provincial agencies, universities, educational institutions or private individuals. The minister is also permitted to enter into agreements with any person for the joint undertaking of any authorized project, and to make payments to any such person or make a contribution in respect of the cost of any such project undertaken by that person. The minister is required to make use of the services and facilities of other federal departments or agencies wherever possible in carrying out any authorized project or economic study under the Act.

The minister, subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, may make payments for the construction and equipment of commercial cold storage facilities or commercial bait freezing facilities equipped with mechanical refrigeration which are suitable for the preservation of fishery products, the modification of such facilities in order to make such facilities suitable for the preservation of fishery products, and the construction and equipment of fishing vessels. The Act also outlines certain provisions which are to be included in agreements with respect to projects undertaken with a province and payments to a province.

The establishment of advisory committees and the remuneration and expenses of members of such committees are also covered by the act in addition to general requirements. It should be noted that the act allows the Governor in Council to make regulations prescribing the person to whom payments may be made, the maximum amount of each payment and the terms and conditions attached to such payments. The minister is also required to submit a report to parliament covering the operations for each fiscal year under the act and covering agreements made under the Act as soon as possible after the termination of each fiscal year.

In June of 1973, the Minister of the Environment summarized the original Fisheries Development Act as follows:

> The Act provides for the exploration and development of known fisheries and of entirely new fishery resources, the introduction and demonstration of new and improved fishing vessels and fishing techniques, the development of new fish products and the improvement of product handling, processing and distribution, and a wide range of development programs, including assistance for the construction and equipment of fishing vessels. Various cost-sharing projects were made possible by this legislation which was passed initially in 1966. In short, we now have legislation which enables us to introduce measures to develop the fishery.

An Act to amend the Fisheries Development Act was passed by the House of Commons on July 20, 1973. Under the amendment, payments for the construction, equipment and modification of commercial cold storage and commercial bait freezing facilities were expanded to include payments for the construction and equipment of commercial icemaking and ice-storing facilities or commercial fish-chilling facilities which would contribute to increased productivity in commercial fishing operations.

Speaking on the amendment in committee, the Minister of the Environment stated that the additional grants would relate to both the cost of constructing and equipping icemaking, ice-storing and fish-chilling facilities ashore and the capital costs, excluding the cost of installation, of sea-water refrigerating units in fishing vessels. At that time it was stated the amendment would enable the government to make grants equal to 50 per cent of the cost of such facilities but not exceeding $25,000 to any one applicant in any one part or location. At this point I cannot help wondering what happened to this proposal. I should like the minister or his parliamentary secretary to tell the House later just how many fish-chilling facilities have been built since July 20, 1973.

Announcing this policy, the government estimated that more than 100 million pounds of fish were rejected annually in Canada as being unfit for human consumption largely due to inadequate chilling between the time the fish were caught and the time they were delivered to market or to a processing plant. Obviously there was a need for icemaking and ice-storage facilities. The minister stated in support of his 1973 amendments:

> The economic loss to the fishing industry because of fish rejected as unfit for human consumption and because of a reduction in quality of fish still sold for human use is estimated to amount to more than $25 million annually at the present time. These heavy losses are directly attributable to spoilage of fish aboard fishing vessels and during transport to the processing plants. The spoilage occurs because of the almost total lack of ice available to in-shore fishermen in Canada. The magnitude can be appreciated when we realise there are approximately 45,000 in-shore fishing boats operated on our two coasts.
> A recent survey has shown that $9 million worth of additional equipment capable of producing a total of 2,600 tons of ice per day is required across Canada to satisfy fully the needs of these in-shore fishermen. Some 370 locations have been identified as requiring additional facilities of this kind with the Provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia heading the list.

My hon. friends from Newfoundland will, later in this debate, put on record any developments which have taken place in that province. But it was estimated that Nova Sctoia needed something like four ice making machines having a capacity of two tons of ice per day, 10 with a capacity of between 2 and 5 tons a day, 17 having a capacity of between 5 and 10 tons a day, 14 machines with a capacity of between 10 and 15 tons and 7 with a capacity of 15 to 20 tons.

Mr. Speaker, there has been almost complete silence from the Department of Fisheries with regard to this project. What has been accomplished since July, 1973 with regard to the establishment of these icemaking plants? As far as I know there are none at Peggy's Cove or West Dover, none at Mill Cove, Blandford, Ironbound, Big or Little Tancook, or at other fishing ports in Lunenburg County, Queens County or Shelburne County.

This amendment was discussed at considerable length during the meeting of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry which took place on June 19, 1973. There was a brief exchange of views concerning the shortening of contract time for fish-chilling facilities from ten to five years from the date of application. There was considerable discussion arising from the fact that certain major ports were excluded from the fish-chilling program under the draft regulations. Additional comments centred on the adequacy or otherwise of the supply of fresh water to smaller ports in Nova Scotia. Nothing has been done in this area since then; one of the major ports of Nova Scotia namely, Riverport is still suffering from an inadequate supply of fresh water. Lengthy discussions took place with regard to a possible connection between regulations governing the inspection of vessels and regulations covering the amendment to the Act concerning fish-chilling.

Members of the committee questioned government officials as to the criteria used in determining the number of locations at which additional icemaking facilities might be established. Subsequent discussion concerned the price at which ice should be available to fishermen and the co-ordination of the fish-chilling program with activities under the small harbours program. There were brief comments relating to the distance a local fisherman would be required to travel in order to obtain ice, and representations that such considerations should be borne in mind when determining the precise locations for fish-chilling and icemaking facilities. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, our fears at that time were justified, because the implementation of this program has been long delayed. I believe we have a right to know what progress has been made in these matters.

There was a lengthy discussion on the requirement in the original act that the minister submit an annual report on activities authorized under the act during the fiscal year. The minister and department officals pointed out that reports on such activities had always been included in the annual reports of the department under the activities of the industrial development branch of the fisheries service. Further discussion took place as to the connection between vessel inspection regulations to be implemented in April, 1975 and regulations under the proposed fish-chilling program. Government officials pointed out that there was some confusion between the two sets of regulations. The suggestion was made that modification of vessels might be necessary in order to permit the installation of refrigerated sea-water units in fishing vessels. As one member of the committee put it: "Where does modification leave off and new installation begin?" The minister replied that it was his intention to discuss modifications and conversion of fishing vessels at a later date, but that if a fisherman were faced not only with adding ice chilling facilities but with conversion of the vessel itself, he could apply under two separate programs. It is now nearly a year later, Mr. Speaker, but to date the minister has not replied or given the fisheries committee or individual members the information that he promised at that time.

● (1220)

In the act as originally passed in 1966-1967, the minister is allowed to make payments, subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council, "for the construction and equipping of fishing vessels". An act to amend this section was given first reading in this House on March 4, 1974. The proposed amendment, by adding the words "modification" and "conversion" to the paragraph that I have just quoted, essentially permits the fisheries service to make payments to vessel owners or to shipyards in the amount of 35 per cent of the cost of an authorized conversion or modification to an existing vessel. The act as originally passed allowed subsidies only for new vessel construction. New keels had, in fact, to be laid before grants or subsidies could be paid.

With reference to this particular amendment the Minister of the Environment said this last year:

> The existing assistance program envisages a subsidy of 35 per cent of the approved construction cost for vessels from 35 feet upward to 75 feet in length. A subsidy at the same rate is also available for the construction of vessels of more than 75 feet in length. This latter subsidy is, however, administered by the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.
> Prior to granting the subsidy, the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce requires an authorization from the fisheries service to the effect that the vessel is indeed needed in the fishery. So the fisheries service does have control both over the vessels which it helps finance of a size between 35 and 75 feet, and by individual approvals over the larger vessels of more than 75 feet in length, the subsidy of which comes out of a vote under Industry, Trade and Commerce.
> The purpose of the proposed addition to the program is to enable small fishermen to improve their vessels, for example, to replace open boats with larger and more mobile craft. Subsidy applications have to meet requirements as to suitability, safety, and construction specifications, in all cases set by the fisheries service.

The minister went on to add that, while subsidies on new vessel construction make a very important contribution to the modernization of Canadian fisheries, there is now evidence that assistance in the conversion or modification of existing craft is also required. At this time he further stated:

> I am now proposing the introduction of an amendment to the Fisheries Development Act, which will allow the government to pay financial assistance for conversions of and modifications to existing fishing vessels. In the implementation of this program the same criteria will apply to new vessel construction and to conversion and modifications.

[Mr. Crouse.]

The basic criterion is that the vessel must show promise of a marked improvement in its economic or operating efficiency as a result of the conversion or modification. This, I submit, is very difficult to do in light of the declining resource on our continental shelf.

The proposed vessel conversion and modification amendment was discussed in detail at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on June 21, 1973. A major portion of the discussion at that time involved the difference between the 35 per cent figure for construction, equipment, modification or conversion of vessels and the 50 per cent figure for icemaking, ice-storing and fish-chilling facilities. The view was expressed that the 35 per cent figure would be inadequate in the light of current costs to fishermen, and this is a view that we on this side of the House still share.

At that time there was also some discussion on the inter-relationship between the application of the Fisheries Development Act as proposed, and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, loans can be made for the purchase or construction of fishing vessels and major repair or overhaul of the fishing vessel or its hull, superstructure or engine. The minister stated that a fisherman owning a vessel who wished to modify the vessel under the Fisheries Development Act as proposed could obtain 35 per cent assistance and, in addition, get a loan from a bank to help finance the remaining 65 per cent of the cost of conversion or modification under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

In light of present day costs, the 35 per cent subsidy is definitely inadequate. This percentage rate should be revised and reconsidered by the minister and his staff. For example, we had a 9 per cent erosion of the purchasing power of our dollar only last year. This year it is estimated that there will be a further erosion of 10 per cent. This means that over a two-year period we face an erosion of something like 20 per cent of the purchasing power of our money, yet the government still says to the fishermen and fishing companies: "You must modernize your ships and all that we will pay toward this modernization is a subsidy of 35 per cent". We believe that this subsidy is inadequate.

On November 14, 1973, the Minister of the Environment announced the lifting of the freeze on subsidies for new fishing vessels on the Atlantic coast which was imposed on August 13, 1973. According to the minister, the freeze was introduced in order to slow down a boom in fishing vessel construction which threatened to over-capitalize a fleet which was already large. In announcing the lifting of the freeze, the minister stressed that the accent in the future would be placed on modernization and that replacements and conversions of existing vessels would be encouraged.

In the same statement the minister then made the following announcement:

> Accordingly and effective immediately:
>
> (a) All commercial fishing vessels, traps and other catching units will be registered by the Fisheries and Marine Service;
> (b) all vessels, shippers and operators will be licensed;
>
> (c) only Canadian citizens and landed immigrants will be eligible;
> (d) all craft, shippers, crews and other operators which have a history in the industry will continue, automatically, to have the right to fish;

(e) new entrants will be limited, in the case of lobsters, scallops, salmon, herring and snow crab to replacements.

These fisheries in the main are already limited in size. New vessel registrations in the groundfish fishery will be encouraged for under-exploited species and areas. As for those that are fully exploited, the moratorium on new vessel registrations will be continued for a further nine-month period. This time is required for further consultations with fishermen, companies and provincial authorities as to the future of that sector of the industry;

(f) special committees will be set up in our principal fishing areas in order to advise the government as to the manner in which this program should be administered; and

(g) local fishermen and local company representatives will have a voice in the management of the fishery in this way.

Registration of vessels and the issuance of operators' licences will begin early in the new year, and will start with large vessels and the fleets which are already limited in size.

The vessels are now being examined but they are not being licensed, since they cannot pass the requirements set out by the department. This applies to boats which in some cases are only one year old. I ask the government, what is to happen to these particular ships and their owners? The owners have already mortgaged their homes in many cases in order to secure the down payment. The owners of the boats have a large loan from the provincial loan boards in the provinces of Atlantic Canada. They are now faced with a new set of regulations calling for a conversion for which they have no money and for which they will be required to go even deeper into debt.

The minister said that fishermen and ships must be licensed in order to know who are bona fide fishermen and who are not. It was stressed that the government needed the licensing data in order to upgrade the fishery, in order to develop a sound system of catch insurance. In reply to the statement, we pointed out at that time that fisheries inspection officers were unable to secure the signatures of captains and owners after inspecting the inshore and off-shore fleets. They were not going to sign the inspection certificates, some of which I have before me, because, in the words of one captain, "I would be signing my own death warrant".

We further pointed out that the moratorium or freeze on new vessel registration for an additional nine-month period for fully exploited species and areas in the ground-fish fishery would definitely be harmful to the over-all expansion of the fishing industry. We also expressed concern about the fact that vessels already fishing, or for which firm commitments were made, would only be granted licences provided they met existing regulations. We also pointed out that if the government enforces the new regulations strictly before licences are issued, then it should also pay a larger improvement construction grant in order to enable the fishermen to upgrade their vessels in compliance with the new regulations. However, to date no action has been taken on our recommendations, which sometimes makes me wonder, Mr. Speaker, about the futility of debate in the House and in committee. Surely, some of these recommendations could have been adopted.

What are some of the new regulations, Mr. Speaker? On March 22 the minister sent out new guidelines concerning new inspection requirements for our new fishing vessels, and these are as follows. I am not going to read all of them, Mr. Speaker, because some of them are acceptable, but the guidelines concerning inspection requirements for fishing vessels as laid out by the minister and his department state:

● (1230)

(a) Protection from sun and weather

All containers for storage of fish, such as hold and deck containers, shall be provided with rigid, non-absorbant, close fitting covers;

Mr. Speaker, if this were strictly enforced, it could spell the death knell of the small boat fishery in Atlantic Canada. On page 2, item 2 of the guidelines reads:

Fish processing equipment and all surfaces, which come in contact with fish, shall be made of non-corrodible material, other than wood, shall be constructed to facilitate proper cleaning and have all joints on such surface smooth and watertight.

Mr. Speaker, wooden ships are the backbone of the fishing industry, or at least the inshore fishing industry, in Atlantic Canada and are still important in the offshore industry. Item 2(b) of the guidelines reads:

Fish holds, penboard shelving, fish boxes, refrigerated seawater tanks, cold storage areas, etc., shall be constructed of durable, non-corrodible, smooth and impervious material, such as FRF, coated ferrocement, approved high density plastics and seawater-resistant aluminium alloys, wood-coated with non-durable materials, such as paints, is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but ask, why? If fibreglass is used to line the hold of a wooden ship or if ferro cement is used to line the hold of a wooden ship, when that ship is in a 50 or 60 mile an hour gale in the north Atlantic, the working of the ship will cause the fibreglass or ferrocement to crack. Then, the offal from fish is bound to get in the cracks and between the ferrocement or fibreglass lining and the hold. This will create odours and a condition which certainly will not be acceptable. Even if the lining were sufficiently tight that there was no leakage it would bring about a condition of dry rot. We experienced that with Bluenose II which required expensive repairs.

In my opinion, and the opinion of fishermen and the shipbuilding industry, there is no reason why epoxy coated wood, if kept clean, would not be as satisfactory as fibreglass or ferro cement as an antibacterial material for the fish hold and the stanchions, which would satisfy the fishermen and the industry. There is, in fact, no substitute for large quantities of ice and this is why I deplore the lack of action on the icemaking, storing, and distributing facilities. Packing fish against ice is the only way to assure good quality when the product is landed.

It is interesting to note the reaction of the fishermen and the industry generally to some of the minister's proposals. It could be summed up as "too much interest" in the industry by the government, as new regulations affecting specific fisheries, licensing, packaging and inspection rules are promulgated. Perhaps the main problem is the feeling of many people in the industry which parallels that of our early colonists in America toward the rulings made by others in far away England who did not really understand the colonists' problems. As in that day, many of our fishermen look upon Ottawa and the federal government as a far-off dictatorship, anxious to control everything through building up its own bureaucratic empire in the industry, without knowing or understanding its problems.

I realize that this is a rather harsh indictment of the present Department of the Environment and its minister, but unfortunately it represents the truth of the situation as it presently exists in Atlantic Canada. It was this unrest among fishermen, this frustration and despair and mounting criticism which caused Environment Canada to arrange meetings with fishermen and industry representatives when consultation took place over such matters as Canada's Law of the Sea proposal, licensing regulations and ship inspection laws. Just how effective such meetings really are in overcoming Ottawa's dictatorial image is open to question, since the meetings are planned by Ottawa, are run according to the ground rules of the department and are packed with high-ranking bureaucrats.

After these meetings a lot of fishermen have told me that they were over-awed by the well-educated, well-dressed officials and by the obvious power which these men wield. I have attended these meetings and can appreciate their concern. These fishermen are invited to come and express their views, but when they go home they realize their opinions may as well have been written on the winds, or on the sands! It is like baling water from a boat whose seams have opened below the waterline. It is an exercise in futility, in the opinion of the fishermen. Many of them know that the Minister of the Environment is trying to do something but they are not too sure whether his efforts are designed to help them or the foreign fishermen who roam our banks and pillage and plunder our resources. Obviously, the lines of communication between the minister and the fishermen who are the backbone of the fishing industry, are down and they must be repaired.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, throughout the discussions relating to the Fisheries Development Act, it has not been made clear exactly how the regulations governing grants and subsidies with respect to new vessel construction and equipment, vessel modification and conversion, ice-making and fish-chilling facilities and regulations governing the registration of vessels and licensing of operators, are interrelated. There appears to be a close connection between the regulations for registration of new vessels and those for subsidies for new vessel construction. There also appears to be a close relationship, in some cases, between regulations governing the subsidies for refrigerated sea-water units on board vessels and regulations governing subsidies for modification and conversion of vessels. Regulations governing the quality of fish handling, processing and distribution appear to be closely related and, in many cases, dependent upon the regulations in the areas I have mentioned.

We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, are not opposed to the changes that have been proposed in this bill. We feel that the 35 per cent subsidy is inadequate, however, and in the light of present day costs the government should consider increasing this to at least 50 per cent. We believe that it would be helpful if the government made every effort to communicate with the fishermen so that those engaged in the industry would be alerted to its plans and, hopefully, improve upon them.

With all the staff that the minister has I think he should have one more person and that is a "gofor"—someone who can go for the information the fishermen and the wooden shipbuilders need. I am sure this gofor would be helpful to the minister in finally planning and carrying out policies and programs which would have some input from the fishermen and have a more meaningful bearing on the future of their livelihood.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), many of which were pertinent to the situation in eastern Canada, and I listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Both of these gentlemen are Nova Scotians, and in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland the fishing industry is of major importance. The hon. member for South Shore talked about the importance of the fishery on the east coast, the Atlantic coast and in central Canada. When he said that, I felt just a wee bit insulted because there is a fairly significant freshwater fishery in the northern prairies and the Northwest Territories. The area which I represent in Saskatchewan produces quite a few million pounds of freshwater fish each year. Our fishermen have problems, too, although we may not hear about them too often in this House.

I sympathize with the problems of the hon. member for South Shore in regard to icemaking and fish-chilling facilities. I know that is a problem on the east coast but our problem is that our whole north country is an ice house for about eight months of the year. All we need is enough ice houses which we can fill in the wintertime and then we have no problem with fish-chilling facilities. Our problems are of a slightly different nature.

As I understand Bill C-2, it proposes a minor amendment which simply adds two words. The words are "modification, conversion and equipment of fishing vessels". Up to this time, I believe there have been government grants or assistance in respect of the construction of new vessels used in the fishing industry. This amendment will provide for modification and conversion of fishing vessels. I think this is an amendment worthy of the support of all members of this House. I know it will be supported by members of the party I represent. I only hope that when this amendment comes into effect its provisions will be available not only for the modification and conversion of vessels along our coasts, but also will be available to the freshwater fishermen in the prairies.

Earlier today I was speaking to some members who suggested that all we have are a bunch of potholes in Saskatchewan. I want to point out to some hon. members that the ninth largest lake in Canada, Lake Athabasca, is in my constituency. It is about 80 miles long by 40 miles wide and when a storm blows up, it is pretty fierce. I have been out on the lake. I think it is important to have some funds available to the fishermen in order that they may be able to improve or convert the vessels they have, because this would help them maintain the standard of the fishery.

Last year there were some minor amendments to the Fisheries Development Act which, as the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) pointed out, covered icemaking and ice-storing facilities. I think that was commendable. It is perhaps unfortunate this amendment was not included last year, but as the President of the Privy Council (Mr.

MacEachen) said it was an oversight and we all have our human weaknesses. In the prairies, the province of Manitoba produces up to 21 million pounds of fresh water fish per year, Saskatchewan produces up to 15 or 16 million pounds per year and northern Alberta produces up to three million or four million pounds a year. The Northwest Territories as well, produces several million pounds.

I should like to emphasize one thing for the benefit of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), the minister in charge of fisheries; that is, fishermen in northern Saskatchewan have often complained that they have experienced extreme difficulty in obtaining financing under this act. Sometimes they have had the feeling that the department was not too interested in this freshwater fishery.

A major reason for my participation today is to impress on the minister that there is a freshwater fishery in this country, and that even though it is not the most significant or important occupation in the west it does provide a livelihood for quite a few hundred people. I think when these people ask for grants or help in order to modify or build fishing boats this help should be made available to them. Certainly, I realize that the bulk of the financing will go to the Pacific and Atlantic coasts where the great fisheries are, but we must also take into consideration those people who earn their livelihood from fishing on the northern prairies.

I wish to commend the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) who last year gave assistance—because we could not obtain it through the fisheries act—in the form of financing to the Athabasca Fishery Co-operative which wished to buy seven or eight lake boats. These are old boats, and I hope that perhaps this amendment will now make it possible for these fishermen to obtain some grants for the purpose of upgrading their boats to a proper standard.

Another thing I wish to mention is that fish farming is becoming increasingly popular on the prairies. Certainly, I know of a number of people within my riding who are becoming involved in fish farming. My colleague tells me this is the case in Assiniboia. I know a farmer who had a 20-acre lake with water depth ranging up to 20 feet. This was useless, except that the cattle drank the water which meant that there was no need to pump it. He started experimenting. He put trout fingerlings in the lake. It has been found out that it is possible to produce a fair amount of fish by stocking a lake with fingerlings in the spring and harvesting them in the fall. This fish farmer has a market for the fish in Regina and other cities. As these potholes and ponds become more and more productive, I hope some of these people will be eligible for assistance not in respect of fishing vessels but in respect of perhaps ice making and storing equipment. Some farmers have asked me about this. I said that if they have a fairly significant fish farming operation they might be able to obtain some assistance in respect of providing ice making and ice-storing facilities. This is the type of assistance which might be of benefit to them.

In closing I wish to mention that in northern Saskatchewan it is the native and Métis people to whom fishing is a very significant occupation. Some of them have done very well at it. Some of them have encountered problems because the fishing equipment they have is old and requires updating. Perhaps some of their methods of fishing should be updated as well. I hope this measure in some small way will help the people in northern Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba obtain a greater degree of self-sufficiency because after all this is what they want. They want to be able to hold up their heads with pride and dignity and be able to earn their own living without being dependent on government aid, either through social security or other measures.

Another matter that has bothered the people of the north and the west involves the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. There have been problems concerning the price this corporation pays to the fishermen and so on. Before the fisheries committee last year the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) and I introduced a motion requesting an investigation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, but the minister has never taken any action on this. I hope he will do so in the not too distant future. I realize I am getting slightly off the topic, Mr. Speaker. I would simply like to conclude by saying that this is a commendable amendment and I hope it can go through all stages today and be passed without too much delay.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I would thank the minister and congratulate him for introducing this bill. Although it is rather brief, it is still very important because, as we know, its purpose is to qualify the modification and the conversion of fishing boats so as to be eligible for departmental subsidies. It was mentioned earlier that it was regrettable that the fisheries service was part of the Department of Environment. It depends on the points of view, Mr. Speaker. It is not sure that government structure would profit by the creation of small departments.

Since the incorporation of the fisheries service in the Department of Environment, we have seen many improvements to the fishing industry, to fishermen, to the regulations, of which this is an example. There is also the creation of the small craft harbours branch through which the Department of Environment budgets building and maintenance programs for port facilities, particularly when they concern fisheries.

So it all depends on points of view. In my opinion, there may be some advantages to the fisheries service being incorporated in a larger department and considering the benefits that accrued from the situation, we could say the change was a good one. Of course, the fishing industry and the protection of the environment are two very closely related activities, because in many aspects fisheries will depend in the future on the way we will protect our environment.

As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, fishing is a very important activity in my riding. I have not recently taken the time to make an economic evaluation of the fishing industry in relation to others. There are other important industries in my riding such as mining, lumber and, to a small degree, agriculture but in view of the number of people engaged in fishing or working in fish packing plants, fisheries are certainly the most socially important industry in my electoral district.

Thus, in 1969, 17 per cent of fish catches in Canada were produced in my riding. A percentage of 17 is a lot, Mr. Speaker, even for a Nova Scotia member. I am proud of this achievement, and that explains why fishing is not only a part of our economy, but a part of our culture. In fact, for several coastal settlements, the end of fishing would mean a great cultural, social, and economic loss.

The amendments introduced by the minister today will be very profitable, Mr. Speaker, since, for many years, the fishing industry has been overdeveloped. When one type of fishing becomes overdeveloped, the fisherman must abandon his boat because all his equipment is aimed at this particular industry. He finds himself at a disadvantage since the only way he can benefit from the subsidy is to abandon his old boat or sell it or have another one built. I think this bill will rectify this situation.

Not only will the bill help fishermen in such a situation, but it will also make positive improvements. We must urge the fishermen to go into types of fishing that will be more profitable. If today, for instance, a fisherman is herring-fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence or the Chaleurs Bay, because I am a native of this area, one that you know very well Mr. Speaker, or if he is herring-fishing offshore or even inshore, I think that he should be encouraged to convert his fishing to another species. This bill will enable the fisherman to qualify for subsidies to pay for his expenses when transforming his boat.

Not only is this a remedy or an improvement for the fisherman, since fishing is overdeveloped and no longer profitable, but it is also an encouragement, a stimulus for the fisherman. He will be able to determine whether his type of fishing is really the most profitable or whether he should not go into another type.

Mr. Speaker, the supply aspect of fishing is not the only one to determine if a fisherman should continue to fish one particular species; there is also the market situation to consider. Today, prices are good for Atlantic crab. For certain species there might be less fish so prices are in a state of depression. Fishermen could perhaps be encouraged to go into those resources whose market is more responsive and consequently more profitable.

I mentioned potential conversion or encouraging fishermen to convert when the market is perhaps not so good or when the resource is not there. Mr. Speaker, there are still in the sea species which are not sufficiently fished. For example, there is the small crab known as the rock crab and means have not yet really been found to handle it for market purposes. Incidentally, a company in my riding has filed an application with DREE to build a plant which will buy the small rock crab. Its name is not yet common currency but people familiar with fishing will know what I am talking about. They will be able to handle and market it. And fishermen will have to know in advance that that fish is marketable. They will have to buy equipment and in certain cases convert their vessels.

That fishing operation is usually done with multipurpose vessels, small vessels used to fish lobster or herring near the coasts, or even the larger crab, the Atlantic crab.

Some minor or major alterations might have to be done to the vessels. Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned at one o'clock, I was in the process of explaining that Bill C-2 is not only a piece of legislation to help people being disadvantaged owing to the fact that the species of fish they are seeking to capture does not exist anymore or is threatened with extinction or that the market is not good. This bill incorporates many good features.

The positive aspect of this measure is as follows: The government, being responsible for that, will from now on encourage fishermen to look for the more profitable species of fish. Governments have the responsibility to make sure that Canadians get the maximum profit especially in the fishing area.

A way of ensuring that we are getting maximum earnings is to see that fishermen fish for a profitable resource, either, because the market is good or because the resource is sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, even if that has nothing to do directly with this bill, I should like to mention a few needs of the fishing industry in my area. Obviously, one must distinguish between deep-sea fishing and inshore fishing, as deep-sea fishing is much more a trade, an important business, economy-wise, than inshore fishing.

As I said before one o'clock, inshore fishing not only has an economical value but it also has undoubtedly a social and even a cultural value because people at home and everywhere in the Maritime provinces are proud of having settled along the shores on a community basis.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that, contrary to what many people think, the fishing boat building subsidy program is not necessarily a subsidy program for the fishing industry. I find it most important to explain that fact. For example, in the case of smaller boats, that may be subsidizing the fishing industry but in the case of larger boats, traditionally, grants have been paid not necessarily because the fishing industry needed them but to maintain the Canadian shipyards.

The fishermen, and mainly those needing bigger boats, were and probably still are able to buy their boats abroad at a significantly lower cost than in Canada. The purpose of the program was first to subsidize the shipbuilding industry rather than the fishing industry.

I would like to mention a few needs of the fishing industry. Of course the most urgent one is the improvement of port facilities. We are all happy about the fact that the Department of Fisheries is now responsible for planning the construction of port facilities related to fishing.

But, Mr. Speaker, the national budget has been so much neglected for the past ten years or so that catching up with this negligence will be very costly and the government will have to maintain the national budget at a very high level.

The subcommittee of the committee on national resources and public works recommended last year that capital investments should be of the order of $30 million a year. In view of the fact that many facilities have been neglected in the past, even a $30 million budget is not too high and, of course, account taken of inflation, the government should keep this national budget at a much higher level than $30 million because funds spent in improving our port facilities are far from being wasted money.

If we consider the other economic contributions of those facilities, with the exception of commercial fisheries, I think that they provide many advantages.

I refer here to those facilities used not only for fishing but also for recreation. It is quite important to have coastal a harbour installations which can accommodate and assist Canadian boats.

I merely wish to say in conclusion that the improvement of harbour installations deeply concerns fishermen, local authorities, unions, fishermen's associations, industrialists and civic leaders, because they want, as I said a while ago, to make good and have harbour installations governed by adequate standards.

Mr. Speaker, even if it does not directly affect the bill, I would like to discuss the question of unemployment insurance for fishermen.

I think that many people still say that it is a social subsidy. It is no more a social subsidy for fishermen than it is for construction workers.

In many regions of this country, the construction industry is paralysed in the wintertime and consequently workers live on unemployment insurance.

What is unemployment insurance in these instances? It is a subsidy to the construction industry. To grant a social subsidy in the fishing sector is not worse than in the other sectors.

To my mind, there is some injustice in the way fishermen are treated under the unemployment insurance program. I have not the time today during this debate on a bill which concerns mainly subsidies for the modifications of boats, to discuss this problem in depth. However, I will simply say that after several meetings with groups of fishermen in my constituency, I realize that there are some obvious injustices and I hope the government will correct them as soon as possible.

It seems to me two things should be done. First of all, something similar to crop insurance should be set up, a type of catch insurance that would compensate fishermen for their losses in times of disasters and bad storms. This would help stabilize the fishermen's income.

But catch insurance, Mr. Speaker, would not suffice to give the fishermen social benefits comparable to those the unemployed get. There is no reason why fishermen should not get the same benefits as other workers. And what is worse, in several cases, the fishermen is subjected to special regulations under which he gets less benefit, less unemployment insurance when his son or daughter or even his wife worked in a fish factory, and after eight, ten or 12 weeks of contributions, depending on the area of the country, and this happens in my riding, they are granted benefits for about 40 weeks.

When this special program was established in 1972, at the same time as the new unemployment insurance program, I think it was expected that a catch insurance program might be implemented to replace unemployment insurance for fishermen.

It is obviously impossible to do so, because the government contribution to the unemployment insurance fund is too high.

In order to be put on the same footing as other workers, the fishermen would have to pay much higher contributions, way too much as compared with that of other workers.

I merely want to say this at this point, Mr. Speaker, because it is an area that deeply concerns the fishermen of my riding.

By way of a conclusion, I shall say that the bill the hon. minister has brought forward today is a good one, not only because it aims at helping fishermen in difficult circumstances due to a poor market, the scarcity or overexploitation of a number of fish species, but also because it is an incentive. In fact, this positive legislation will encourage fishermen to consider and analyse in minute details the true benefits of fishing such and such species, and maybe convert their equipment and fishing vessels accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate and to support some of the propositions put forward before the luncheon break by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). I am happy to see this amendment to the Fisheries Development Act. Many fishermen in my constituency have been anxiously waiting for passage of this legislation because they want to avail themselves of some of the funds which will be available under this act. I have certain reservations as to how accessible this fund will be to fishermen.

I have figures before me showing the disposition of funds made available under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act since its inception in 1955. As an Atlantic Canadian, I am not overly impressed with the amount of money which has been lent in my part of the country under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. I am not at all against British Columbia getting all the funds it can under that act. I see, according to the statistics which have been given to me, that Pacific coast fishermen received two-thirds of all money lent under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act since its inception in 1955, and that little more than one-quarter of total funds went to Atlantic Canada.

One must bear in mind, too, that in 1971 Atlantic coast fishermen landed 2.1 billion pounds of fish and shellfish, whereas in the same period fishermen on the Pacific coast landed 229 million pounds of fish. This indicates to me clearly that there is greater need for assisting fishermen on the Atlantic coast than for assisting those on the Pacific coast. In 1971, Pacific coast fishermen borrowed $2.5 million under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. In the four Atlantic provinces, slightly less than $700,000 was distributed under the act. I do not wish to in any way begrudge the amount of money that has gone into other parts of Canada as opposed to the amount that has gone into the Atlantic region, but these figures must indicate there is a great need for communication with the fishermen on the east coast of Canada. These funds and benefits under the act must be made more accessible to them.

In many cases the chartered banks to which the fishermen must apply to get these funds under the government guarantee have not been willing to co-operate. In fact, in many cases they have discouraged fishermen from availing themselves of the funds under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Instead, they try to direct them into getting funds through other plans which the banks have. By doing this, the fishermen are being denied such benefits under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act as lower interest rates. Because of the reluctance of the banks, and I am not condemning all banks, to explain the act to the fishermen and to make funds available to them under the act, these fishermen in many cases are being forced into the clutches of the loan sharks. In many cases, they are paying interest rates far in excess of those available under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Consequently, they are paying more for their money to buy property and gear.

I wish to impress upon the minister and the House the need to develop better liaison with the fishermen, particularly those in remote parts of the country. For example, in my province it involves considerable hardship and expense for some fishermen to travel to the chartered banks in order to apply for a loan under this act. I ask that some thought be given to the problems these people encounter with regard to inaccessibility of banking services. I strongly recommend to the minister and the government that some form of mobile loan service be provided, either by the banks or the Department of Fisheries. This would eliminate the need for fishermen to make often expensive and long journeys to centres where credit institutions are located.

As I said earlier, the fact that a large number of fishermen are not taking advantage of loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act indicated they are unable to communicate with the banks. In many cases, the banks have expressed an unwillingness to lend money, even with the government guarantee.

An example of this occurred in my constituency not too many days ago. A very successful fisherman went to a local chartered bank to apply for a loan under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The bank imposed restrictions on that person that were not consistent with the restrictions imposed by the Department of Fisheries under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Certain requirements were made of that fisherman which were not consistent with the provisions in the act. Consequently, this man was refused a loan. Fortunately, after having made representations to the bank manager and the fisheries people in the province, that fisherman eventually got his loan. However, had he not been able to contact me or some other official in the province, more than likely he would have been driven to a finance company where he would have had to pay interest charges perhaps three or four times in excess of those charged on loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

That is an example of a chartered bank discouraging someone from making a loan under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The reason is obvious. Banks are in business to make money. If the banks can convince fishermen to make loans through their regular plans, they can charge more interest than they are permitted to charge under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. This is obviously the reason they are encouraging fishermen to apply for conventional loans rather than loans under the act.

There are a number of questions that remain unanswered. I am sorry the minister is not here. Possibly before this debate is concluded, he will be able to shed some light on a few questions which not only interest me, but many fishermen in this country. For example, the purpose of this amendment is to assist fishermen who want to modify and improve their fishing boats. However, there is no mention of providing new engines for boats. In many cases, the fishermen are expected to improve their fishing capability. They should be able to get assistance from the government for the purpose of purchasing more powerful engines.

Another question that comes to mind is the limit that will be placed on the modifications by this amendment. I have the impression, rightly or wrongly, that there will be a floor of $5,000. For example, if a fisherman is going to make certain changes, alterations or modifications to his boat at a cost which does not exceed $5,000, he will not qualify for the 35 per cent subsidy provided for in the amendment. I would like the minister or somebody on the government side to explain these two aspects of the amendments.

Like my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore, I have very strong reservations about the wisdom of only allowing 35 per cent of the cost of these modifications. Surely, the government can see fit to increase that to 50 per cent. In many cases the changes that must be made to these fishing boats, especially in view of the new licensing program being initiated by the Department of Fisheries and the inspection program, will be substantial. Consequently, not too many more people will be able to avail themselves of the benefits of the act. This will be because of the limitation on the amount of money they can receive. I strongly recommend to the minister and the government that this 35 per cent be increased to at least 50 per cent.

There are a number of other matters pertaining to fisheries that could be discussed. They may not be directly related to the amendment we are now debating. Certainly, the matter of licensing is very important. On November 14, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) announced in the House a rather extensive licensing program. A great many people in my constituency have objected to this proposed licensing program on the ground, among other things, that they had been given insufficient information, or in some cases no information, as to the possible effects of this policy on their traditional way of life. After the minister had made that statement, I took it upon myself to hold several public meetings in the fishing communities in my riding at which I outlined in some detail what I thought the policy would mean for the future of the fishing industry. I could not find one person attending these meetings who had any idea what the possible effect of these new regulations might be on his traditional way of earning a living. I have reason to believe that today, two or three months later, the fishermen are no further ahead in their understanding of what is happening than they were when the minister made his statement on November 14.

I understand the minister has visited the province and held a few meetings, but I am at a loss to understand why he would go to Newfoundland and hold meetings for fishermen in communities which in many instances are probably 50 miles from the nearest fishing port. I have a feeling that the minister has developed an aversion to salt water, and to judge from some of the comments I have heard in the last few months his feelings in this respect are understandable, because in a great many areas fishermen are confused and unaware of what is happening. They are unable to obtain sufficient information from the minister and from the department. I hope the minister has more success in communicating the benefits of the amendment we are now debating, thereby enabling fishermen to take advantage of it, than he has had in communicating the effects and possible implications of the ship licensing program he announced in November.

When we talk about ships and modifications to fishing vessels, we must, of course, bear in mind that ships need good harbour facilities. This is another area in which the government has been sadly lacking in eastern Canada. I refer to the establishment of better and more modern harbour facilities. This year, approximately $4.5 million will be spent in Newfoundland to improve harbours and related facilities. This is only a drop in the bucket. In St. John's West alone we could use three times that amount to provide proper landing facilities for fishermen. It is strange that, though the government can find money for almost anything else—vast sums for the provision of bigger and better public buildings in Ottawa, for bigger and better underground parking structures in Hull, for the provision of multimillion dollar television transmission facilities in Toronto—it cannot find the funds necessary to provide the basic requirements of the Atlantic area.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Carter: Some members may ask why they hear so much from representatives of the Atlantic area, particularly from Newfoundland, about the need for these facilities. We get up time after time to draw attention to the frustration of our fishermen. Is it any wonder that our fishermen feel this way or that they should have formed the impression that the government has written off the fishing industry and is content to throw crumbs to it, as it were, rather than embark on a program which would enable the industry to develop to its full potential?

Is it any wonder that our fishermen have expressed reservations with respect to the position Canada is to take at the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference? Can you blame the fishermen, Mr. Speaker, for having certain reservations as to the suitability of the minister who is to lead our delegation at that conference, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp)? They are aware of certain statements made by this minister during his career as a politician, and they are aware of his dislike for or indifference toward the fishing industry. This is why many of our fishermen are very skeptical as to the possible outcome of the conference.

My hon. friend from New Brunswick mentioned the need for a more comprehensive, more suitable plan of unemployment insurance for fishermen. We have been asking for such a program for a long time. The present program is unsatisfactory as far as we are concerned. There is no reason fishermen should be treated differently from people working in fish plants, or in any other walk of life, when it comes to unemployment insurance. I have consistently brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and of his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). We have consistently called attention to the inequities of the present scheme as it applies to fishermen, but unfortunately our pleas have fallen on deaf ears.

In concluding my remarks, let me say once again I support the position taken by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). I support the bill but I regret that the amount of the subsidy should be 35 per cent rather than 50 per cent, at least. I strongly urge the government and the ministry to do everything possible by way of advertising and better liaison methods to make sure that every fisherman who needs some of this money, and who is eligible to receive it, will be in a position to apply for a loan or a subsidy and, all things being equal, to receive it. Based on our experience with respect to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act only a small percentage of the available money will trickle into the areas where it is so badly needed. There is a great need for a better system of communication with the fishermen. I hope the minister will accept some of our recommendations in this regard and make sure that every fisherman will have access to this fund, and to the banks which will be handling the matter for the government.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the bill before the House, Bill C-2, to amend the Fisheries Development Act. I should like to remind the minister responsible for the bill of some of the problems that are faced especially by the freshwater fishermen of the Northwest Territories.

Most of the fishermen of the Northwest Territories have to work under winter conditions and, as a result, this bill is not of much benefit to them. I hope the minister will bear this fact in mind and will not exclude fishermen of the Northwest Territories from its provisions. We have a number of fishermen in the Great Slave Lake and Great Bear Lake areas, as well as the Mackenzie, the inland lakes and the char fishery, people along the Arctic coast. Most of their operations take place in the wintertime and, therefore, transportation plays an important part. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Board has not been of much help to the fishermen in that area.

Another point that must be kept in mind is that DREE is not effective either in that part of the country. Funds to expand operations are not readily available to fishermen of the Northwest Territories. They are not making big money due to the high cost of transportation and the very long distances over which their product must be shipped. I encourage the minister responsible for the bill not to forget these fishermen who must make a living. It is important to the fishermen in the areas I have mentioned that funds be available if they wish to improve transportation facilities, their equipment, Bombardiers, toboggans and that sort of thing. As most hon. members know, these fishermen operate from October to May, much of their fishing being done through the ice. I close by saying once again that I hope the minister will not forget these inland fishermen.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to take part in this debate on Bill C-2. As a west coaster I sometimes feel that the rest of the country does not realize that anything happens beyond the Rocky Mountains, but I can assure them it does. Therefore, it is with somewhat mixed feelings that I heard the second last speaker refer to the amount of financial assistance given to our fishing fleet. I do not want to compare figures. I simply hope the money will be distributed on the basis of need and usefulness on either coast. I expect that probably the west coast got the lion's share, because at that particular time we were in the market for a lot of new fishing vessels of modern design, and the funds made available have gone a considerable way to stimulating fishing vessel construction.

In this respect I point out that payments made to small shipyards in some cases have been lamentably late, and in one case at Victoria very nearly resulted in a local firm going bankrupt. I hope the minister will ensure that this does not happen in the future. These small shipyards are not giant organizations and are based on a rather precarious financial structure between contracts.

The lateness of this amendment is about the only thing I can criticize. This bill is before us today, April 5, and the fishing fleet in the southern part of Vancouver Island goes to sea next week. It is much too late for them to take advantage of the provisions of the bill in the immediate future, so they will have to wait until the next season. The bill could just as well have been brought in last fall. Then, during the winter season when the boats were laid up the necessary conversions and modifications could have been made. It is necessary that these conversions and modifications be made, particularly to the trolling vessels on the west coast, whose operators find they are forced to turn their boats into dual purpose boats. More and more want this year to turn their boats into netting and trolling vessels.

To understand the fishing industry at all on the west coast, Mr. Speaker, you have to understand the make-up of the industry and that is not simple. There are many conflicting interests in fishing on the west coast. The waters of the Straits of Juan de Fuca, the Gulf of Georgia, the west coast of Vancouver Island, the Queen Charlotte area and Prince Rupert are divided up between United States and Canadian interests, as well as other interests such as Japan and Russia. Then there is a further division of conflicting interests within the Canadian fishery. The netting vessels are generally manned by members of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union. Then, we have the Pacific Trolling Association, whose members are owners of their own boats and put to sea with a small crew. The third conflicting interest is the sports fisherman who is of commercial importance largely because of the number and what he does for the tourist industry.

To start with the United States interests in Pacific coast fishing, there are two factors that we must consider first of all. They consider it is their right to fish the Fraser River run. At present they are taking one-half of the sockeye run in the Fraser River, and they claim they are justified in doing so because back in the 1930's at the time of the Hell's Gate slide in the Fraser River repairs were made with a certain amount of U.S. money. They put $750,000 into building fish ladders in the Hell's Gate, and since that time they claim they are entitled in perpetuity to half of the sockeye salmon that spawn upriver. This results in their taking out something of the nature of four times their original investment every year, according to figures compiled on the basis of fish landed. We and the Americans are continuing to meet to determine how many fish each side has caught and how many each side is entitled to catch.

There are other difficulties with the United States. We divide the Straits of Juan de Fuca right down the middle along the international boundary. Fish, not knowing for sure whether they are Canadians or Americans, come into the western entrance to the straits and generally follow the Canadian shoreline for a distance, then bear right and go over to the American side and along the American shore. Canadians are the first to catch these fish because some 22 years ago we started netting them at the entrance to the straits on our side of the border. Netting there is not the most efficient way for us to reap the harvest, but at the present time it is a good arguing point with the United States. We have been doing it, as I say, for 22 years now and it is beginning to become a traditional right of ours. However, it would be more efficient, should we have the nets moved back toward the river mouth. This would, of course, alleviate the problem of the sports fishermen who generally fish behind the net in the area of Victoria and the Gulf Islands at Vancouver.

The Americans and Canadians are bargaining about this and if they could agree that it would be in the best interests of both countries, then we could move our nets back and take the fish harvest in a logical sequence. This would give the sports fishermen a crack at the fish before they get to the nets. The trollermen who fish in the open sea on the west coast of Vancouver Island are not concerned about the net fishing behind them except in terms of what it might do to production over the years.

For the coming year, rumoured restrictions on trolling catches for coho, are 1,900,000 fish for Canadians, to be caught by about 1,000 boats. That sounds like a lot of fish, Mr. Speaker. Incidentally, that word coho is c-o-h-o; it does not have an "e" on it and I would appreciate it if Hansard would spell it this way. I come from the area where coho is spawned, caught and canned and it is coho. This limitation of 1,900,000 coho for trollermen this year will mean that they must make do with some other kind of fishing, so they are going into netting as well.

I am sure that the Canadian case for a better deal with the Americans could be made if we were united ourselves. On the one side, we have the very strong United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union working for fishing companies which are in many cases merely subsidiaries of American fishing companies. This is a strong, tough union that has done a lot for its members. Also on the Canadian side we have the Pacific Troller's Association which is the epitome of what members of this House like to refer to as the small businessman. They own their own boats, earn their own living, work hard, and make good money. I have never met a fisherman in either of these conflicting camps that I did not like. There is something about fishing, I believe, that brings out the best in men and they are all good Canadians but it is like saying that the Catholics and the Protestants in Ireland are all good Irishmen, but you cannot bring them together. Until the day comes when the trollermen and the Allied Workers Union can find a way to work together there will be difficulties when working with the Americans. I see no hope of agreement in the near future. The leadership and the psychology of these two organizations is simply too dissimilar.

As to the future of fishing on the west coast, I think we are going to have to catch more of other species than salmon. The salmon is a wonderful fish for eating but we have been forced to realize that there are other fish in the sea, those that are referred to as groundfish on the east coast and as bottomfish on the west coast. This will require changes in our fishing fleet. While the modification and conversion is welcome I hope it will not cut down on the amount of construction permitted under the Fisheries Development Act.

We expect to do more fishing in the open seas off the west coast of Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlottes. In this regard it might be of interest to delineate my party's policy. We believe that other states may only fish within our territorial limits with Canada's permission. We would, if elected, expand the coastguard and increase its mandate. In co-operation with the Department of Fisheries, it could provide adequate surveillance over marine resource areas. This would be aimed at protecting the rights of our fishermen and others at sea in Canadian waters.

I do not want to take up a great deal of time, Mr. Speaker, as I know other members wish to speak on this subject. I am pleased to see an amendment, late as it is, which will help us on the west coast. To that degree, I am thankful for it and hope we will be able to make good use of it in the near future.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate on a bill which will provide subsidies to fishermen for the conversion and modification of fishing vessels. No one can quarrel with the merits of the bill because it should allow fishermen to diversify their activity, to take advantage of other species and, hopefully, it should increase their income.

I say "should", Mr. Speaker, because over the past few years we have had to introduce many amendments to programs which could be of benefit to fishermen but, I am sorry to say, while the over-all particular policy sounds good, the small print in the regulations never reaches the fisherman until he applies for the subsidy. As is usual, with many good programs, it confuses and discourages him that he cannot meet the criteria, nor can he afford it. This new program permits the fisheries service to make payments to vessel owners in the amount of 35 per cent of the cost of an authorized conversion or modification to an existing vessel. This is fine, but we should look at what can happen and note the lack of co-ordination of fisheries policy. Even though it is well intentioned, it is a helter skelter of ad hoc policy which confuses the fishermen and everyone interested in it.

For example, on June 22, the minister announced a reduction in the size of vessels on which subsidies would be given from 45 feet to 35 feet. Naturally, this was welcome news but the announcement went on to say that the program was in response to increased demand for new fishing vessels suitable for inshore fishermen. The minister announced that more than $100 million would be invested over the next two years. That was in June, 1973. He indicated that about 50 large offshore craft and more than 500 boats under 75 feet were being planned or projected and approximately 150 fishing boats between 35 feet and 45 feet were expected to be built under the extended subsidy plan. With even greater fanfare, the minister announced that this unprecedented investment in fishing vessels reflected the strong optimism of the Canadian industry in the future of our fisheries, and that everything pointed to expansion of our fish catches. He was inviting fishermen to go out and catch all the fish available, because the price was better and the government was going to provide the subsidies.

What happened less than two months later, Mr. Speaker? The minister announced a three-months freeze on construction subsidies available for craft of 35 feet to 75 feet. Apparently current applications for vessels already exceeded the funds allocated for the purpose. They had to control the development of the fleets and avoid short term over-capitalization which would dilute the benefits that the fishermen would otherwise have gained from increased catches. This occurred just two months after this announcement of $100 million, which was never touched. After announcing that he wanted everyone to build boats, and, after altering the subsidy to include vessels of 35 feet, just two months later he put a freeze on it. I say "only two months" but, on the one hand, the minister says they are prepared to spend $35 million in subsidies to get more boats in the water, while on the other hand he puts a freeze on the subsidies because there are too many boats and the fishery must be controlled. This is what is referred to as the left hand not knowing what the right hand is doing!

Three months later the minister announced a new fishing fleet development policy to match fleet size to fish stocks by introducing a more selective subsidy program for vessel construction. He was now to consult with the industry, the provincial governments and the fishermen to establish a new licensing control program. In other words, now he has decided he will have to license boats so there will not be too many fishing in the various areas. This is fine, but we should not confuse the fishermen who do not hear about these wonderful announcements until the poor member of parliament has to go to the region and make excuses for their not knowing about it.

There have been three announcements within a period of five months, each contradicting the others. I took it upon myself to travel the length of my riding, a distance of 400 miles, to check with the fishermen. Only one community that I visited had been consulted. Not one fisherman knew what I was talking about, because there was no communication except with those they say they are communicating with and to whom they wish to provide explanations concerning what they are doing. But the fishermen do not know what is going on.

Many other good programs have been announced since I have been here. There is a program, for example, to provide 50 per cent forgiveness grants for the provision of ice-making facilities and boats. This is a good program, but I still have not seen any results nor have I heard from any of the fishermen about it with the exception of the ones I met to tell them about the program. I do not know of anyone who has received benefits from this program. I hope the minister will see that information about the program is passed on to the fishermen.

The statistics in respect of this program to provide ice-making facilities show that $9 million worth of additional equipment is required across Canada and that some 370 locations have been identified. I am wondering if anyone thought about the type of facilities that are already provided in which to house ice-making facilities which are so badly required. Everybody realizes that the fish and its classification deteriorates without ice facilities. I am sure everybody realizes that this is a good program. But where is it? Who is it directed to? It certainly is not directed to my district of the province of Newfoundland. I would be very glad if somebody could tell me that it has been directed there, if my information should be incorrect. I would like to know, as my colleague the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) asked, how much money has been directed toward this end. I am sure the minister can provide that information for us.

Another contradiction relates to the particular program we are talking about today, subsidies for conversion and modification of boats. Almost at the same time as the announcement for the subsidy was made, another announcement came from the minister's office indicating there is a new program to improve fish quality and the vessels of the inshore and midshore fisheries. So all he is doing is providing a subsidy, on the one hand, of 35 per cent and at the same time contradicting the policy, and hurting the fishermen who want to take advantage of it, by issuing instructions under the fish inspection regulations, which take up about 13 pages and seven schedules, effective April 1, 1975. The fishermen will have to comply with all these regulations. In other words, what he is saying is that all the boats built before the direction from the Department of Fisheries will have to be built all over again, so the 35 per cent subsidy is not enough.

The fisherman will be further discouraged and will not be able to take advantage of this subsidy. As two of my colleagues said, the subsidy either will have to be increased to 50 per cent or there will have to be immediate consultation with the provinces in an effort to have them add to the subsidy, as they do now under the fishing boat building program. I hope this will be treated as a reasonable request. We all agree that the fishermen need programs, but for some reason or other the government forgets where the priorities are. There is no point in a fisherman improving his boat or improving the facilities unless he has a proper place to house his boat, proper harbour facilities and a place where he has protection for his crew and his real estate—which, of course, is his boat.

In the six years I have been here I have made many requests in respect of harbour facilities. I am sure all members representing the fishery were happy when the minister announced that he was taking over the responsibility for small craft harbours from the Department of Public Works. We were happy about this announcement because the Department of Fisheries is more closely allied to the fishery activity itself and has a larger budget for this purpose. Every time we made a request of the Department of Public Works for a harbour facility we received the familiar "thank you for your interest" letter. The department would send out an investigation team. It would do this about 12 times a year, at 12 places. Then a letter would come back saying, "Thank you for your interest. We have investigated the matter, but unfortunately we do not have enough funds available and therefore we must defer the project for another year."

We thought our frustration in this regard had been overcome, but now when we apply to the Department of the Environment the story is the same; we are told there is a lack of funds and that the project must be deferred for another year. The department does not seem to realize that the fishing industry will never get a proper start unless the fishing vessels are protected. I hesitate to mention parochial names, but there are many areas in my district which have been investigated, at a cost of thousands of dollars, for the purpose of opening up the whole area to make available its marine resources. The end result in each case, however, has been studies, task forces, reviews and resource studies, again to the frustration of the fishermen until they threaten now to open harbours themselves, to the detriment of Canada. This is the type of attitude which prevails. The government pays only lip service to these problems of the fishermen in the form of putting something on paper to the effect that the fishermen will be consulted and that an advisory committee will be set up, but the people who form the advisory committee never see anybody from that time on.

One of the fundamental bases of freedom of the fisheries is the need for protection from foreign draggers. Until this famous Law of the Sea conference comes about—I am sure everybody has heard about this so often that there is much frustration about it—Canada must provide an adequate surveillance and rescue capability. This is available through the Department of National Defence. This is another very important and basic phase of the fishing operation. Before we can introduce programs and permit the fishermen to take advantage of them, they must have a boat and they must have protection from the foreign draggers which are allowed to come in, rape our shores and take away the livelihood our fishermen have depended upon for hundreds of years.

The other day I made a representation to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson). I was very pleased that he announced to the air reserve squadron of Canada that he would give it a more important role in becoming more allied with the duties of the regular force. He would double the force. He would provide them with regular force equipment and planes, and they would take a more active role in the Canadian forces. I can see no better way of implementing an increase in the strength of that force than by the formation of a squadron in eastern Canada with part of it located in Newfoundland which has all the hardware, hangars, fuel tank capability and is a good source of recruitment so that members of the force could take part in the air surveillance which is so badly required. He said, in answer to my question, that he would seriously consider this, and I hope it will be a decision which will help the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

I should like to point out to hon. members the presence in the gallery of the new chairman of the saltfish corporation, Mr. Bradbury, who has been with the Department of Fisheries and has helped in every possible way. Another thing the minister should realize is that in view of the high price of saltfish and the lack of attention paid by fishermen to salting fish, fishermen could be encouraged to take a more active part in this industry which could give them a good livelihood. This points out the need for basic facilities which they do not have at present. By salting fresh fish, fishermen can get rid of their catch quicker and thus avoid spoilage. I hope that when Mr. Bradbury takes over his duties, if he has not already done so, he will recognize this fact and will provide the necessary funds and the proper processing facilities to salt fish, a product which Newfoundlanders know better than anyone else and which could bring them an advantage in fisheries.

Another problem which exists now with the change in government is the lack of co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments. I wish you could see, Mr. Speaker, some of the letters that I receive. I could give you an example. It took me seven months to find out from both levels of government which of them was responsible in a certain case. This would make you frustrated, too. There were seven months of correspondence and inspections, of delegating responsibility to another level of government, and then that level of government after investigating the case hands the problem back and says it is not a provincial but a federal matter.

I should like to refer to the time when there was a Liberal government in Newfoundland and the then premier advised all fishermen to burn their boats. This was probably the poorest advice ever given to any citizens of Canada, as far as I have heard or read. Here we are, with the fishing industry at its peak, the price of fish never having been as high and the income derived from fishing never better—but it is the basic needs of fishermen that must be met to allow them to take advantage of the improved situation after years of hardship when prices were at 3.5 cents to 4 cents.

The minister should stop announcing programs every few days. Instead, he should try to consolidate the existing programs. There is the fisheries improvement loans program under which fishermen who have prospects can go to the bank and obtain a loan. The various levels of government should get together and define their responsibilities with a view to establishing a simple policy that fishermen could understand and that would be to their benefit.

I have no quarrel with the bill as introduced. As I said earlier, the new legislation should provide fishermen with some benefits, if dealt with properly and in a common sense manner. I have no hesitation in indicating my support for the bill before us.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we are about to give second reading to a bill entitled an act to amend the Fisheries Development Act which stands in the name of the Minister of Fisheries for Canada (Mr. Davis). I suppose the very obvious question to ask is: Where is the Minister of Fisheries for Canada? I am asking that question because he is not in his seat at present. My next question is: Where is the minister's parliamentary secretary? Quite frankly, as I look across the chamber I cannot see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. I assume that someone over there is getting ready to wind up this debate on second reading, whenever it comes to that point.

I am very pleased to see that we have on the government side such leading authorities on fisheries as the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). I see he is very busy taking notes over there, so perhaps he is getting ready to reply. Or could it be that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who is a leading authority on a number of subjects, so that it would not be too difficult for him to move from wheat to fish, will be the minister to wind up the debate? I thought for a little while that it might be the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) who would speak at the end of the debate. He has been in the House for part of the time and, as all members of the House are aware, he has recently been branching out and becoming a leading authority and spokesman for the government on such diverse matters as the storage and purchase of oil. I was rather hoping he would be the one to wind up this debate.

I also see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) sitting over there, smiling. I do not know whether he considers himself to be an authority on fisheries in Canada. Sometimes he appears to be aware of some of the financial problems of fishermen, and since this bill involves money I can say quite honestly that I am glad to see he is here. Perhaps he will respond on behalf of the absent Minister of Fisheries to close the debate.

The program that has been the subject matter of most of the discussion by members who have participated in this debate, namely, the program of grants for the construction of smaller fishing vessels, has not been of great consequence on the west coast of Canada. Some hon. members will recall that for a number of years we had a program which provided assistance for the construction of small fishing vessels without the benefit of the Fisheries Development Act. It was operated under authority granted to the government through the provision of certain funds in the estimates. But a few years ago—not all that long ago—the Minister of Fisheries announced with great fanfare that he thought the program should have a proper statutory framework, and that in order to regularize it and expand the scope of the department's activities and the financial backing of the government to assist in the development of the fisheries industry we should have a Fisheries Development Act.

Members who were on the committee will recall that we broadened the program to include things other than the construction of fishing-vessels. Not very long before that we had expanded the act so that it would include ice-making plants, fish-chilling facilities, and so on. I am happy to report that there is some interest on the Pacific coast in that new aspect of the act. I think applications are in the course of development for construction of additional ice-making equipment and storage equipment, which may assist in having our fishery's catch landed, processed and delivered to the consumers' tables in better condition than has occasionally been the case in the past. That is all to the good, Mr. Speaker; but as some hon. members have pointed out, every so often we are asked to give our blessing to a proposal, in statutory form, for some great new program. Sometimes we accept proposals with considerable enthusiasm.

My recollection is that members representing Atlantic coast constituencies were enthusiastic about the announcement concerning the Fisheries Development Act. They said it had particular implications for their inshore and mid water fishermen. Yet today we heard reports which indicate that when we get right down to the place where the fishermen are, not very much has happened as yet and the fishermen are still living in hope of seeing some practical developments flow out of the legislation that we passed.

Now we are being asked to expand the Fisheries Development Act to cover programs to assist in modifying and converting existing fishing vessels. On the face of it, I have no hesitation at all in saying that I am prepared to support this concept in the legislation because it is necessary, if the minister is going to move, particularly on the Atlantic coast, to require higher construction standards for fishing vessels so that there be some enabling legislation whereby the regulations which he is so freely tossing out do not become increasingly impossible for the fishermen to live with.

So far as the Pacific coast is concerned, I have said that this program up until now has been of very little practical consequence. The simple explanation for this is that our really major fishery on the Pacific coast is the salmon fishing industry. From the outset of the small fishing vessel assistance program, the salmon fishing industry of British Columbia has been ruled ineligible to participate in it on the ground that we had too many salmon fishing vessels in the water and it would not be proper for the parliament of Canada to take steps to encourage the construction of more. It may be pertinent at this point to remind the House that, far from having special programs to assist in the construction of fishing vessels for the salmon industry, in effect we have had a program to buy out fishing vessels, something which is a complete reversal of the import of this legislation. We have had what is known as the buy-back program.

While on the one hand we have been putting money into grants to assist in the construction of fishing vessels, on the other hand, in my part of the world primarily, we have been putting money into the pot to get fishing vessels out of the fishing industry. Both these developments may be necessary, and in some respects desirable—although the salmon fishermen of British Columbia would tell you that most of the money for the buy-back program comes out of their pockets. It is a sort of subsidy in reverse. In effect, they are subsidizing themselves to get fishermen out of the industry. This is worth mentioning in light of the experience that has just been recounted to us, where shortly after we passed legislation expanding the program for fishing vessel construction on the Atlantic coast the minister announced a freeze on the granting of moneys until a complete review was undertaken of the approach that was planned.

The fact is that every so often the Minister of Fisheries talks about great, unexploited fisheries which we are not utilizing to the full on a sustained yield basis. Then he suddenly discovers that with the kind of technology available to Canadian fishermen or, as is more frequently the case, available to foreign fishermen on the Atlantic coast, the fishery that has been underexploited becomes overexploited. I would agree that there must be some flexible application of various programs in the light of certain circumstances, but it is pretty difficult for individual fishermen to make rational plans to commit funds for the construction, improvement or conversion of a fishing vessel, funds which may be the principal investment of their lifetime, when they do not know from one week to the next whether a new edict will come out saying they can no longer participate in that particular fishery. For that reason alone, fishermen have every right to be concerned that when we pass a law there will be a realistic application of it. I hope that kind of application will be given to the present proposal to extend assistance with respect to the modification and conversion of fishing vessels.

One question in my mind that ought to be answered concerns whether this part of the program will be open to the west coast salmon industry. I have already indicated that west coast salmon fishing vessels have never been eligible for grants under this program. I am not basically quarrelling with that, but just as is the case on the east coast, so also on the west coast increasing emphasis is being placed upon having the type of vessels which will ensure that catches arrive at shore in good condition. This has a particular application in respect of our west coast salmon fishing industry. Some of the developments that have taken place recently require quite expensive installations in a modern salmon fishing vessel to preserve the quality of the fish and to increase the efficiency of the fishermen by installing proper refrigeration so he can stay out longer before returning to port with his catch.

That really is the only direct question in relation to the west coast fishery that comes to my mind. The questions which were asked by other hon. members from the Atlantic coast certainly deserve to be answered also. Perhaps I should also say that the questions raised by my colleagues, the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) and the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) about the application of this program to the freshwater fisheries of Canada are also particularly relevant.

As I recall from our committee discussions, the Minister of Fisheries has said that these programs are available to those engaged in the inland fisheries. This question was raised partly because jurisdiction over fisheries management on the prairies, in Ontario and in the territories has not been vested directly in the Department of Fisheries but has been delegated to provincial authorities for purposes of administration. For a long time I have thought that because of that particular administrative arrangement the federal Department of Fisheries has not paid as much attention to the potential development of our inland fisheries as it might have done.

One of the main considerations which must be borne in mind when one thinks of the potential of the fisheries industry in Canada is this: because of our geographic extent and because many parts of the country are far from the sea where fishing is traditionally carried on, it is difficult to transport fish to places far from where it is caught and to make sure it arrives in good condition. Fish, unlike beef, does not improve with hanging: if it is not handled carefully it deteriorates quickly. Thus, in the interest of providing quality, attractive, high protein food for Canadian consumers, fisheries resources should be developed as closely as possible to centres of population.

What I have to say in this connection has particular application to the freshwater inland fisheries of Canada. This problem was given major attention at the federal-provincial fisheries conference held in Ottawa in 1964. The governments of the three prairie provinces showed their interest by attending the conference. Ministers of those three governments were prepared to come to grips with the policy issues involved. The result of the conference was the establishment of the Freshwater Fisheries Marketing Board. That board, unfortunately, got off to a bad start. I do not know if our fisheries committee has received the answer as to how and why this happened, but it became very apparent that poor management people were put in charge of the board in its initial stages. The resulting setback was most unfortunate for the welfare of fishermen of inland areas. Hopefully, steps are under way to rectify that situation. From my assessment, I still think the idea was sound; I say this on the basis of facts which were brought forward when the formal proposal was made to establish this marketing board.

There is a fair potential for developing a freshwater fish market domestically and in the central parts of the country to the south. There is a fair potential, therefore, for an export market. For these reasons, I feel that the Minister of Fisheries should pay attention to the development of the industry so that it meets its potential. This bill is important in connection with assistance for the construction and modification of existing vessels, that is to say, existing vessels which must be improved and brought up to standard. It is also important for providing vessels with equipment which will enable them to preserve fish. The minister should also see how the program can best be applied to the development of fisheries in the freshwater fishing areas of Canada. I think I have said what needs to be said on this bill on second reading. I await with interest the response of the government when this debate is to close.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I hope to speak no longer than thirty seconds.

The purpose of the bill we are studying is to amend the Fisheries Development Act. The whole problem is to add four words to the existing act. This has been suggested last fall, when we were studying Bill C-4 during the first session of the 29th Parliament.

What we have said since eleven o'clock this morning is 90 per cent repetition of the debates we have had in committee on the 1974-75 estimates and during the study of this bill, during the first session.

As all other members, I would like to see this bill adopted by the House today, to allow the fishermen from Gaspésie and from all over the country to take advantage of the amendment, this summer.

For this very reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be referred immediately to the Committee of the Whole so that it may be adopted after third reading and submitted to the Senate.

[English]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am not usually loquacious, nor is it usual for me to take part in a debate unless I feel I have something important to say. I presume, therefore, that when I resume my seat the House will be in the position to give this bill second reading. Perhaps hon. members may then be inclined to proceed to private members' hour.

As the previous speaker said, this is a small amendment to the act which was amended about a year ago. The act relates to the provision of grants for cold storage and other facilities which would preserve the quality of fish products and would improve the harvesting of the living resources of the sea. This bill is a further small amendment, to assist in the modification of fishing vessels as well as in their construction. Simple amendments such as this reflect fairly important trends in the industry. For example, it is now recognized that fish stocks, fishery resources, are no longer limitless. They never were. Until fairly recently many thought that such resources were limitless, that no matter how many fish you took from the sea, there were always more. Now we realize that fish stocks are limited. Some of them are overexploited while others have potential which is not being exploited at the present time.

In situations of that sort, in some cases it is necessary and desirable that fishing vessels which have been designed for a particular type of fishery be modified to take part in the exploitation of a different resource. This happens from time to time. There is also the necessity of modernizing fishing boats so that the catch can be preserved more efficiently and to eliminate the rather large waste experienced in the fishing industry through the quality of the catch deteriorating before landing. This is another important recognition. We must exploit our resources in a way that is not wasteful. We must develop methods of catching and processing stocks of fish used for human food.

We in North America have been very slow to move away from the original pioneer attitude where it was thought that the bounty of nature was almost unlimited and we could be very prodigal and wasteful in its exploitation. We are now learning, none too soon, that that is not the case. We must exploit these living resources carefully in order to maximize their use and minimize damage to them so there will be a continuous resource. Our renewable resources must be husbanded and harvested in the best possible way.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the fisheries on the east coast are chiefly carried on by people who settled there historically for the purpose of making their living in that way. There is an important sociological aspect to this question. The Department of Fisheries should be extremely careful in administering this and other acts so that the good sense of the fishermen can be part of the input into every new course of action taken by the government. In this connection there is dire need for improvement to small boat harbours, especially those in eastern Canada. I and many inshore fishermen are rather disappointed at the snail's pace at which this is taking place, because small boat harbours have been starved of funds for a number of years. This situation should be rectified as speedily as possible.

I have only one further comment to make, Mr. Speaker. I hope that when this amendment is being administered, it will be administered jointly with the provincial governments concerned in the hope that they will augment the grants made to the fishermen concerned. When one is modifying a boat rather than building a new one, he can invest quite a lot of money without increasing the boat's capital worth. Therefore, I think it is necessary for the aid to apply to a higher percentage of such cost. As far as I can see, no provision is made for such a percentage increase in this bill, but I hope that jointly with the provincial governments a way can be found to increase where necessary the assistance as a percentage of the over-all cost so that the fisherman's share will not be so high. Otherwise, I doubt whether desirable modifications will ever be made to some fishing craft.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) in connection with this bill. Hon. members may have forgotten—this brings me back to an old pastime, rather than breaking completely new ground—that some five years ago I had the responsibility of piloting through the House the bill which created the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; so I am at least back in the business once again.

I was a little disappointed to hear the comments of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) regarding the absence of the minister and his parliamentary secretary. As hon. members know, quite often the business before the House on a particular afternoon—and I think it is true in this case—is as much arranged to suit the convenience and wishes of members of other parties as it is to suit the wishes of the government. That is sometimes done even though the minister is not available, if the opposition have strong wishes in this regard. It is only fair to observe that this is often the case. Therefore, remarks about absences of members are a little ill-received. In this particular case the Minister of Fisheries is on his way to address the Pipeline Contractors' Association, and the parliamentary secretary is representing his minister at the third international environment conference in Kenya. As hon. members will realize, they are properly about the business of the Department of the Environment and Fisheries and for that reason cannot be here.

I will try very briefly to answer at least a few of the relevant questions raised by hon. members who roamed a little over other subjects in the field of fisheries. In answer to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the department is moving forward with its quality improvement programs. In the 1974-75 estimates there is provision for a program for fish-chilling and icing which is national in scope. It is, therefore, part of the over-all program. I am happy to tell the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that if a British Columbia fisherman has a vessel which can be converted for use in an area of fisheries that is underutilized, he can presumably qualify for assistance under this program.

The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) raised a couple of questions about the nature of the program. Basically, the answer is that the regulations which will be established under the act will allow for some of the matters about which he is concerned, such as improving the engines of fishing craft. The hon. member for St. John's West also mentioned an upper limit. While at this point in time no upper limit has been set, this likely will be done in connection with the regulations which are being drafted. It is probably undesirable to make this an open-ended program, but that matter has not been finally determined: the regulations have not yet been drafted.

I was very pleased to hear the suggestion of the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) that we might now proceed with second reading of this bill and speed its progress through the House so that this amendment, with its own important significance, can become a part of our law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House is ready for the question, the Chair will proceed to put it. Earlier today the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) suggested, on a point of order, that the bill be considered in committee of the whole rather than being referred to the standing committee. This, of course, would require unaminous consent. If there were unanimous consent, the motion would be varied.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, speaking for the official opposition, we would be agreeable to that. We are anxious to see the matter finalized as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, if the bill is put to the committee of the whole and given third reading I assume it will be done on the basis that we have had all the debate necessary and it will be passed right through the House.

● (1550)

Mr. Crouse: Having led off the debate for the official opposition on this measure, may I say we are prepared to give the bill third reading at this time in order that the benefits which could accrue to fishermen and processors in Canada might be received at an earlier date than would be the case if passage were delayed.

Mr. Lang: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say I am very pleased with the co-operation shown and the welcome given to this change in the law.

Mr. Barnett: The Minister of Justice having closed the debate in such a capable fashion, may I say we shall be pleased to see it done in this way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the order be varied accordingly and the bill referred to committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I was about to suggest that we adjourn. I simply say that this shows what we can do, through co-operation, in passing legislation when certain members of parliament are not here to mess things up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather it is the wish of the House that the Chair should call it four o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the next 60 minutes we shall proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper. The understanding of the Chair is that Bill No. C-107, standing in the name of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) is the measure we shall proceed with for the next 60 minutes. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION TO APPOINT COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE COMPLAINTS OF VIOLATION OF ACT

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain) moved that Bill C-107, to amend the Canada Elections Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the spirit of co-operation which is so evident in the chamber will be continued through the remaining 57 minutes and allow this bill to make satisfactory progress. Bill C-107 proposes to clear up or to add force to one of the provisions in Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and various other pieces of legislation.

Bill C-203, the House will remember, was passed by this House and adopted on January 4 after an extensive amount of work in committee by members of all parties. I think all of us who had the opportunity to work on this bill at the committee stage and take part in the discussions in the House recognized that the bill which was produced, Bill C-203, is an imperfect bill although much less imperfect than the law it replaced and much less imperfect than the bill as originally put forward. There are, however, some very clear faults in the election expenses legislation which was adopted by the House earlier this year. For example, in the provision for contributions to constituency associations there is no $100 limit, which means, in effect, that there would have to be an accounting for every membership which is purchased and for every raffle ticket which is sold by a constituency association—for every dollar or 50-cent expenditure of that kind. I do not think this is what parliament intended, but that is in the law.

Parties are required to specify days on which they intend to advertise via the electronic media some months or even years in advance of the election date. This presents an obvious difficulty. The fiscal year to be followed by the various parties is not spelled out. This will create difficulty when comparing periods which should be comparable. The requirement that candidates should break down the expenditures they incur is probably insufficient. The language of the bill is so broad that a number of interpretations could be placed upon it. All these shortcomings could cause difficulty later for individual members of this House and for the parties to which they belong.

However, in my opinion, the major failing of Bill C-203 is its failure to include effective provision for enforcement. There has clearly been a substantial change in the approach to the regulation of election campaigns. Certain limits have been imposed. Publication of contributions and expenditures has been required, real reforms have been undertaken. The major shortcoming is this: there is no provision in the bill as it stands for enforcement, no way to guarantee that the reforms we have written into law will be honoured. Substantial penalties have been established, but those penalties will be useless unless we are determined to enforce them. We have incorporated sharp teeth into the measure but no political party, no candidate, will fear sharp teeth if they know that the jaws will never snap, that the teeth will never bite.

In the absence of the fear of penalties and rigid enforcement, in the absence of any fear that fines will actually be assessed and that punishment in the courts will actually ensue whenever offences are committed, we might as well have no bill at all. If there is no enforcement, then we have acted in vain. If there is no enforcement, then in effect we have no reform of electoral practices in this country.

● (1600)

I think a situation that would undermine entirely the purposes of the election expenses bill, which was laboured over so mightily by so many members in this House last year, would be where one party observed the law rigidly and another did not, and the party that did not observe the law suffered no penalty and the provisions that were written into the act were not enforced. If that were to happen once we would be well along the way to a situation where, in effect, there was no regulation of election practices, where in effect there was no electoral reform.

I think we have to be realists here and recognize that political parties and political candidates do not operate entirely on the basis of good will. We are in elections to win, and it is important, at least to our peace of mind, to know that the other side is limited by certain provisions and penalties. Just like other mortals, politicians and political parties need incentives to obey the law. We are not going to do so out of sheer belief that the law is good; we need incentives to obey the law. The problem with the legislation that we have passed is that as it now stands there is no such incentive.

When we were in committee, Madame Speaker, I attempted to introduce an amendment that would have built in an enforcement procedure making use of the office of the Auditor General, an office that is already well established as an effective watchdog over the procedures and expenditures of the House of Commons. This particular proposal was ruled out procedurally because it went beyond the original scope of the legislation which had been brought before the House and consequently was not a matter that we could entertain properly as an amendment at that time.

When it was ruled out, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) of the New Democratic Party introduced an amendment of his own, an amendment that was subsequently accepted and which created a commissioner who is subject to and appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer. The language in the bill reads precisely thus:

> The Chief Electoral Officer shall appoint a commissioner whose duties, under the supervision of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall be to ensure that the provisions of this act in regard to election expenses are complied with and enforced.

That was the best we could do in committee and it was the best latitude that the procedures of the House of Commons would allow. The procedures did not allow recourse to the Auditor General. The procedures did not allow recourse to the kind of independent commissioner that I am proposing in Bill C-107 before the House today. I think because we had spent a long time in the committee and had undertaken and achieved a number of changes, and because we were conscious that there was a certain public pressure to introduce these reforms to our electoral law quickly, most of us were prepared to accept the commissioner amendment as the best we could do to meet the problem of enforcement. But on reflection I, and I believe other members of the House in other parties, fear that it is not good enough simply to have a commissioner who is the creature of and is responsible to the Chief Electoral Officer. We carried the amendment with the design of creating an enforcement mechanism, but in fact we did not achieve what we set out to achieve since there is not an adequate enforcement mechanism.

I should like to bring to the attention of the House the concerns I have about the enforcement mechanism that was approved in the committee and which is in the bill. In effect, the provision to establish a commissioner as incorporated in Bill C-203 is simply a writing into the law of the existing practice. It already is, and it was before the passage of this most recent electoral reform, the duty of the Chief Electoral Officer to ensure that the provisions of the previous election law are carried out. In practice, Madam Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer, the incumbent now and the Chief Electoral Officers who preceded him, is and were not able, for reasons I will not go into, effectively to carry out that enforcement function.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

I think we are being naive if we believe that the mere designation of a person, the mere writing of that silent function into the law, is going to change the practice. We have to bear in mind that the function of the Chief Electoral Officer is primarily administrative. The function of the commissioner is an investigative one. It is very difficult to mix the job of administration, the primary task of the Chief Electoral Officer, with the investigative job that must be done if we are going to have effective enforcement of electoral reform legislation in this country.

Just in the nature of things, work that must be carried out in investigation is bound to jeopardize the reputation for non-partisanship that is essential to the effective functioning of the administrative job of the Chief Electoral Officer. That office works only because all parties in the House and all parties in a campaign believe that the electoral officer is fair to all and beholden to no particular party. There is a very real danger that if he follows, or influences his commissioner to follow, the investigative work too rigorously, then the requirement of non-partisanship will suffer so seriously that he will not be able to carry out his administrative job. I think that by trying to answer this very real need for an enforcement mechanism we have inadvertently imposed upon the Chief Electoral Officer a burden that could well be crippling in the carrying out of his administrative functions, which are the essential functions that he has to perform.

Another reason that we have inadvertently created a major problem here is that the Chief Electoral officer is now simply overworked during election periods when offences, in the nature of things, are most likely to be committed. I think we must realize that while the functions of an investigative officer, of a commissioner, are to continue between elections as well as during an election period, the time when the need will be most acute will be when an election campaign is in progress. I suggest it is simply unrealistic for us to expect the Chief Electoral Officer to be able to devote the time, the attention or the staff to carrying out the investigative function during the period it is most required. So we are left with no particular improvement.

If I might, Madame Speaker, I should like to quote extensively, so there will be no fear that these notions about the dangers of enforcement are only mine, from a very considered and considerable brief presented to the standing committee by Professor Hugh Thorburn who is a recognized and independent Canadian authority on electoral processes and is a professor at Queen's University. I quote Professor Thorburn:

> My major criticism of the bill—

That is Bill C-203 in draft form.

> —as it stands is that it lacks an effective provision for its enforcement. If we consider the elections act in its many forms through the years, its major shortcoming has been the fact that many of its provisions have remained a virtual dead-letter. If we survey the record we will find that "on no occasion has a member of an established party initiated action against a candidate from another established party".

● (1610)

We find that he quotes the party practice. I emphasize that on no occasion has the function been carried out in the past. Professor Thorburn goes on to say:

> Since no enforcement provision was included in the act, and established parties naturally feared retaliation if they or their members should bring an action or lay an information against a member of the other party or parties, virtually nothing was done to compel obedience to the law, and the prohibitions in the act remained essentially unenforced. In addition, since private citizens are not likely to take the trouble and incur the cost of contesting an election suit, this means of initiating an action is virtually inoperative. Also, we have not had any effective organized non-political groups to undertake the responsibility of scrutinizing election activities with a view to initiating legal action in cases of infractions. Finally, no public agency has felt itself responsible nor has been made responsible for prosecuting candidates or others who violate the law on election expenses.
> Under such conditions it makes relatively little difference what provisions are made in the law to require scrupulous behaviour of all participants in the election process. If nothing is done to compel obedience to the law, the law is quickly brought into contempt and serves merely as a form of window-dressing to cover a situation which could not be approved of.

Madame Speaker, I think that draws our attention, from a perspective of academic objectivity, to the very serious break in the law which we have not yet been able to reform satisfactorily. So unless we adopt this measure that I propose in Bill C-107, or some similar measure, we could be left without having achieved electoral reform at all, despite our labours.

I recognize the problems of operating an independent commission, problems of additional staff, problems of whether that office or officer will be busy between elections, although I think it would be helpful to have that kind scrutiny occurring between elections as well as problems of extra costs. But as a parliament I think we have to face the larger problem, if parliament has laboured to pass a reform bill which will not work and if we have an instrument which will not work because it is not likely to be enforced.

As active politicians, all of us go to schools to meet with young people and we are aware of the developing cynicism in the country toward the political process. All of us who care about the future of our political institutions, and indeed about the future of our country, know that our greatest enemy is not another party in this House but it is the simple cynicism that is growing daily, fed perhaps by the forces of Watergate but also by a feeling among Canadians of all ages, that parliament does not mean what it says. When we pass laws designed to achieve reform, we do not go that extra step to ensure that it will be achieved.

I think we have to be conscious of that and of the fact that a great deal of attention has been paid by the public generally, and particularly by the young people of Canada, to Bill C-203 to reform electoral practices which was passed in January. If we have not in fact achieved reform, we are going to be accused of engaging in an empty gesture and of having made a pretense of reform when we knew that what we were writing into the law would not be enforced and therefore there would be no change.

Madame Speaker, I have no particular pride of authorship in Bill C-107. There are provisions in it that perhaps would fall of their own weight.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Thank you, Madame Speaker. I hope that the unanimous consent expressed here will be repeated later in the day.

I have no pride of authorship in this bill. My intention was simply to draw the attention of parliament again to the very serious problem which faces us of not having devised effective enforcement procedures to make sure that reforms introduced in the fall of last year will be practiced in future. If there is a disposition in the House to have the subject matter of this bill considered, I will believe that the work I have been trying to do in introducing the bill has been worth while.

In thanking the House for its generosity in giving me these extra few moments, may I express the hope that serious attention will be given by members on all sides of the House to the problem of amending Bill C-203 in respect of election expenses in order to make sure that we have legislation which achieves the reforms that all members wanted and that we have the essential instruments of enforcement to do this.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Madame Speaker, may I join the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) in expressing the pleasure not only of myself but, I am sure, of all hon. members present in the House at seeing such a remarkable change in the occupant of the Speaker's chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: In supporting Bill C-107, introduced by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, I could perhaps quote him verbatim. I could not find myself more in agreement with anything I have heard in the many debates and the discussions at the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections than with what I heard the hon. member say today. After paying such a compliment it is customary to add the word "but"—and I shall proceed to do that, unfortunately—but with all due respect to the hon. member's intentions, although the recommendations set forth and the proposals made in Bill C-17 are certainly much in order, the sections relating to the electoral districts are rather unfair and contradict one another.

Hon. members interested in pursuing the subject will find that the definition of an "electoral district agent" in section 2 is somewhat contradictory to that referred to in subsection 13.1(4) of the act, which again is contradicted in subsection 13.1(2)(b), so there can be no doubt that the amendment is absolutely necessary. The difficulty is, however, that there are a number of other amendments which one would think will have to be considered. Before going on to that, and in order to make more sense of the problems that I foresee which will require amendments and which I think might be referred to as the need for an omnibus amendment bill on this particular act, we might briefly review some of the provisions of the act and what they were intended to do. We should then look at some other problems raised in Bill C-107 which could possibly be brought before the House by reference to the committee or by presentation of motions.

The bill requires, with respect to political parties, that they must disclose the source and application of their funds or, in more usual terminology, must indicate the source and amounts of all donations where the amounts are in excess of $100, and must indicate their expenses on an annual basis whether they be expenses for an election year or a non-election year. Furthermore, with respect to political parties we have ascertained a limit of 30 cents per voter which would mean that the four major political parties in Canada cannot spend in excess of approximately $4 million each per election. That is a very considerable restriction in view of the kind of expenditures we are familiar with in regard to some of the elections conducted by our neighbour to the south.

Secondly, we have attempted in this bill, and to a large extent have succeeded, although there are more problems to which I should like to refer later, to give the average individual citizen an opportunity to participate in federal politics in a manner never before available to him. If he chooses to make a donation of $100 or less, he will remain anonymous and, in addition, $75 of the $100 will be deductible from his taxes owing. It is not a tax deduction in the usual sense. It is actually a tax credit. It is a direct contribution, if you like, to the federal government system and to parliamentary democracy.

Thirdly, we have to some measure made great strides in restricting expenses of candidates, although the point made by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain is that perhaps we have not gone far enough. I tend to favour a commissioner in the ridings. I suppose that means a policeman, although perhaps that is a nasty word. Whatever we may think of the matter, there certainly is no shortage of members of this House who are familiar with candidates who run some rather strange campaigns. Perhaps it would be a nice idea if we were all subject to the same scrutiny by a well organized commissioner.

We have succeeded in limiting expenditures to $1 for each of the first 15,000 names on the voters' list, 50 cents for each of the next 10,000 names and, finally, 25 cents for every name after those first 25,000. In an average riding this would mean something in the order of $25,000 or $26,000 which the candidate can expend for election purposes. In addition to that—again I will refer back to these sections because there are more problems here—we have created a system by which such a candidate, so long as he obtains 15 per cent of the vote in his riding, will be compensated by the people's money through the federal government to the extent of something like eight cents for the first 25,000 names on the list and six cents for those thereafter. So we are looking, in an average riding of about 50,000 people, at something in the order of $7,500 going back to the candidate who has succeeded in attracting at least 15 per cent of the population.

[Mr. Blaker.]

I might add the personal note that I think 15 per cent is still far too low. It should be higher because it seems to indicate the possibility of candidates who are attracted by the compensation factors of this act. It seems to me there is a very distinct possibility that some candidates may find it financially desirable to put their names on the list only to find themselves with, hopefully, 15 per cent of the vote having spent as little as $5,000 and then to find themselves compensated by the federal government for $7,000 or $8,000 simply because they obtained the required percentage of the vote. For those who win, there are enough financial penalties in becoming a member of parliament without making it particularly attractive to candidates who lose to not win—if that grammar can be used.

In addition, we have provided for the facilities of an auditor. There are more problems in that section in respect of an auditor. I do not think we have defined this properly. However, the act does provide that the liabilities are to be shown. The whole subject of voluntary labour is brought under consideration in the sense that there has been a tendency in the past to use individuals, I think, on a form for compensation but without actually referring to them in the election returns and in the setting forth of the costs of the candidate's election.

There is the whole matter of commercial value. That is another problem which I think may require amendment as well, because there are the different features relating to the cost of an article or its commercial value which raises the matter of wholesale, retail, and so on. We have supplied a whole group of agents who come under the titles of chief agent, electoral district agent, registered agent, and official agent. I suggest that the public will become as confused as most members after they get through with the flock of agents who have been provided. But there they are, and presumably between the official agent for the candidate and the registered agent for the party there is some hope that disclosure of income and expenses can be enforced and, hopefully, we should be able to provide the Canadian public with a much better idea of who is running their elections, and why.

Perhaps at this time I might affirm again to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain the co-operation which existed in the committee during the meetings for hours on end and the picking away at one clause after another. If today the hon. member for Rocky Mountain were to find that his bill in fact is not referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, I certainly would want him to understand that it is with nothing but the greatest respect for the draftsmanship and intentions of his bill that this might happen. It is by coincidence that there seem to be so many other problems that it may be better procedurally to go by way of an omnibus amendment for many of the other areas about which we and others are concerned or, conversely, there may be a reference to the committee on privileges and elections and we can get back at the whole thing again, although I think most members of the committee would not be entirely delighted with that proposition.

I should like to refer simply, for the sake of the record, lest some of these thoughts get lost, to other areas which I think require reconsideration. On the question of the appointment of auditors, both sections 13.3(1) and 62.1(1) define an auditor as a person who normally carries out the duties of an auditor in a province or the province in which the electoral district of the candidate is located. There is, of course, different provincial legislation which defines the practice of accountancy in Canada throughout the various provinces. The expression "who normally carries on the duties of an auditor" leaves much room for disagreement. As the hon. member for Rocky Mountain mentioned earlier, it seems a shame to go to all this trouble to have a workable act only to find that we are not enforcing it properly, and one of the most important sections is that which refers to the auditor and his report. So we might want to look at the question of amending the act in terms of the auditor and his function.

Also under sections 13.3 and 62.1 the requirement of an auditor is to report whether in his opinion the return presents fairly the information contained in the accounting records on which the return is based. In other words, he is saying he has read the records, and the records and the return look similar. But what we would really like the auditor to do, I think, is verify that the candidate or the party has complied with the provisions of the entire elections act. We do not want him simply to read a group of receipts and say, in effect, that the total reads the same as what is shown on the election returns. We want him to go further and say that the candidate has behaved properly, as we expect him to do under the provisions of this act.

Another problem—and this has been discussed up and down the House of Commons, in committee and elsewhere—is that of contributions made directly to a party or to a candidate. This refers to section 13.4 and section 63(2) where there is a requirement in the act for disclosure of the names of the donor where the amount is over $100. The difficulty here is that if one party association makes a contribution, this contribution presumably is the accumulation of all kinds of large and small contributions which have been brought in from the communities. The intention of this act is to provide anonymity to donors, but in the event that the association has made a contribution of an accumulation of small donations, the act would appear to read that the requirement of the candidate is that he ascertain the names of those individuals who made small donations to their party association and make those names public. That was never our intention. In fact, quite the reverse was the case. We wanted to guaranteee the anonymity of people who choose to involve themselves financially in the system of parliamentary democracy.

Another problem—I am not quite sure how we missed this one, because it is so obvious—is that under section 63(1) the candidate must, within two months following the election, submit his returns respecting election expenses. A section in the act immediately preceding 63, that is, section 62(12), provides that all expenses incurred by a candidate in respect of the conduct or management of the election must be paid within 50 days. So we manage to allow a near contradiction to get in, and we should ensure that the report time and the payment time are the same.

In terms of the publication of the auditor's report and the summary of candidates' returns respecting election expenses, members of the committee will remember that it was very much their opinion that candidates' expenses should be published in the local newspapers. In fact, what has happened is that the law now reads that the candidate, presumably at his own expense—which one would tend to think he would consider an election expense—shall publish his election expenses, and then we provide that the returning officer shall do the same. So unfortunately we have a system in which both the candidate and the returning officer are duplicating one another's expenses and we have not made it perfectly clear whether or not the candidate can deduct the cost of advertising of his election expenses or, rather, make it part of his election expenses bills. I will not go on because there is no end to these problems. However, another area is the question of the destruction of records. We seem to indicate in the act that records can be destroyed, but under the Income Tax Act we say that records must not be destroyed. So there is a conflict in that sense.

In view of all those problems, I wonder whether the hon. member for Rocky Mountain will agree with me that if we do this piecemeal, one private member's bill at a time, we shall be well into the next election—which I understand is very soon, anyway—before we have the bill in good enough shape to run an election. Therefore, it would appear preferable, I suggest with respect, that we gather up all these difficulties and consider them. As hon. members know, various discussions are even now going on with major parties and with the electoral officer with a view to having a look at the act and these problems. Therefore, as I said earlier, I suggest that we hold off reference of Bill C-107 in order that we can bring all these topics together either in one reference to the committee, for discussion, or in one omnibus amendment to be presented.

I will sit down with the repetition of one thought, that I think I speak on behalf of all members on our side who worked on that committee when I say it was very much an all-party effort. To see the hon. member for Rocky Mountain back with a private member's bill so obviously intended to further the spirit of the work that we did is a high commendation to him personally, and a pleasure to those of us on this side who had the opportunity to work with him on the committee. It is with regret that I cannot agree with the hon. member that we should refer this bill today to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words to express some of my thoughts on this most important matter of the Election Expenses Act and the possibility of abuse which is to be controlled. As hon. members know, the whole idea of an Election Expenses Act was thought for many years to be an impossibility. In fact, in many countries it was considered impossible or very difficult, and I suppose that the reason we brought it to fruition in Canada was the experience in the country to the south of us where they certainly have problems with election expenses the likes of which I do not really think we have in this country.

I think that Bill C-203 is a major piece of reform legislation and the result of a great contribution by the members of the committee of which I was proud to be a member. To give some indication of the complexities with which we had to deal, it is only necessary to note that members of the committee who worked so hard for so many months thought even at the end of their deliberations that the committee would not be able to come up with a piece of legislation. We dealt with more than 160 amendments to the original bill with which we were presented, and I believe we held nearly fifty meetings.

It is, of course, evident to anyone in the House that putting a group of parliamentarians around a table to try to come up with a piece of legislation to effectively control election expenses is a difficult task to say the least. It is like having a lot of backroom lawyers sitting around, each of whom considers himself to be an absolute authority on election expenses. Because, of course, they all had to go through an election successfully and somehow by hook, but not by crook, raise the money to present themselves as candidates.

As one who wound up after the last election owing a great deal of money to the bank, and having found himself to be his largest personal contributor—somebody had to have some confidence in me—I found myself wondering a little when we started our meetings who was going to control the money which I was going to contribute to my own campaign or, should I say, go into debt for, because I am still paying for some of those expenses. I am sure that members of this House can understand why it took us this enormous number of meetings, and, imagine, 160 amendments, some of them so arcane that many of us actually became very knowledgeable about one section of this bill, but there were other parts with which we simply could not keep up because to understand the complexity of this whole piece of legislation was very difficult.

With reference to the suggestion in the bill of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, I would like to bring to the attention of the House that we considered at length the idea of having a special commissioner to occupy himself with abuses of the Election Expenses Act. I think there is a great deal to be said for that. Frankly, the reasoning—and I think it has a great deal of merit—is the same kind of reasoning that worked in the committee. You see, we have all of these members who for the moment at any rate are successful politicians, watching each other, knowing how the tricks can be done and all of them, as I said, experts on the subject of raising money. I think it was felt that the most effective kind of watchdog you could have in an election campaign, where you could risk having a fairly severe sentence and possibly have your election contested, would be the other candidates who were running against you.

● (1640)

Rather than set up another bureaucracy, another agent of parliament, it was felt—although I am inclined to feel still that the suggestion has a great deal of merit—that the most effective watchdogs keeping an eye on candidates in an election, abusing or running afoul of the Election Expenses Act, would be their opponents. One would presume that they would be watching very carefully for this sort of thing. That rests as a most effective method of enforcing the law. We also recognized when we worked on this act that it would have to do for one election, and that after an election was operated with the legislation there undoubtedly would be need for amendments and reform of it. After seeing how it worked out in action, under fire, we knew there would undoubtedly be things that would have to be done to make it more effective. But we were faced, and I think are still faced in terms of another agent of parliament, with the problem that it would be premature. We were faced with the fact that we had to get something on paper to work with, and having done that we would then go through an election, find out what did not work in the act and the next parliament would make amendments. I think that was one of the really essential pillars in our thinking and also one of the reasons why we were in fact able to come up with a piece of legislation.

[Mr. Stollery.]

After we settle down to address ourselves to this problem, it was foremost in our minds that we would have to do it again, but at least that we must have something constructive, something to work with that members of parliament in the succeeding parliament would be able to analyze and would listen to the Chief Electoral Officer on how effective it was, having him really as the senior person checking and controlling.

It is for that reason that although I see merit in Bill C-107, I think it would be premature for us at this moment to consider enacting something that would only complicate a matter already so arcane that it took us nearly 50 meetings, dealing with over 160 amendments, to enact a piece of legislation. I think the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, who had a very positive attitude and who worked very hard in that committee, should be complimented on bringing this bill forward, but I think he is being a little premature.

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): I must say "sorry" to hon. members opposite. Perhaps they will have an opportunity to call "question" in a moment or two, but I hope I will be allowed to carry on for a little while.

Mr. Baker: Is that an undertaking?

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): I wish I could give that undertaking, but perhaps there are other hon. members who wish to follow me. However, I will attempt to be brief. By way of general preamble I wish to pay a sincere compliment to the sponsor of the bill for his excellent dissertation in support of Bill C-107. I think the same commentary could be made with respect to the speakers following him, the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) and the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery).

I have what I believe to be a number of relevant comments to put on the record. At least, I hope they will be relevant. I am really not aware of any particular requirement as to the drying out period for printed ink work, nevertheless I would not be surprised if that period in this instance had not yet passed in respect of the Election Expenses Act, chapter 51, Statutes of Canada 1973-74 which, as all hon. members know, was given royal assent on January 14 of this year. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we now have a bill before us which in effect proposes an amendment to section 7 of that act which contains new section 61.1 of the Canada Elections Act. I must suggest, however, with due respect, that the existing new section 61.1 of the Canada Elections Act is much more clear and comprehensible than that proposed in Bill C-107. Of course, there are a number of good reasons why I say this, and if hon. members will bear with me I will attempt to elucidate.

At the outset may I say it is unfortunate that backbench MPs do not have available to them the plethora of experienced draftsmen who are available in government departments. And because we do not, Mr. Speaker, and because our other responsibilities as representatives of the people are indeed onerous, oftentimes we as members understandably fall short in our draftsmanship of other than government bills. To say this is not to do other than commend the hon. member for Rocky Mountain for his valiant attempts to present us with a text which is in all respects relevant.

Having thus complimented the sponsor of the bill, I must nevertheless submit that in considering it I have some difficulty in grasping clearly and concisely what the bill is about and how, if passed, other sections of the act to be amended may be affected. That is to day, our deliberations this afternoon require our concentrated focus on an orderly arrangement of the proposed amendments and demand that we should take into account those consequential amendments to the act as well as the main proposed amended section.

In the present case, in the bill before us I note that the existing new section 61.1 of the Canada Elections Act falls under a new division heading of "Election expenses, official agent and auditor of candidates." The foregoing is consistent with the subsequent sections of the Canada Elections Act and leaves no doubt but that new section 61.1 relates only to the subject of that division. However, the bill before us introduces, in draft proposed 61.1, an entirely new subsection (1) which purports to go far beyond matters dealing only with "Election expenses, official agent and auditor of candidates." Quite apart from the foregoing, the intended subsection, in my submission, deals with matters already contained in other parts of the Canada Elections Act as amended by the Election Expenses Act. Further, proposed new paragraph 61.1(1)(b) has no bearing whatsoever on any of the other subject matters contemplated in new section 61.1.

● (1650)

What I have said so far, Mr. Speaker, all with the greatest respect, relates to a weakness in the orderly drafting and arrangement of the subject matter of the proposal. I reiterate, however, that in the present case—

Mr. Yewchuk: Filibuster.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): I might have some part of my speech left over. There is much that is important which can be said another day. If I may to return to serious and relevant comments, in the present case the matter is vital as it leaves this reader in doubt as to the limits of the matter covered, and raises conflicts with other existing provisions of the Canada Elections Act as amended by the Election Expenses Act.

May I now refer to the subject matter covered by the amendments proposed in the bill. The obvious first point is that new subsection 70(4.1) of the Canada Elections Act as contained in section 11 of the Election Expenses Act already allows a provision for the Chief Electoral Officer to——appoint a commissioner whose duties, under the supervision of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall be to ensure that the provisions of this act in regard to election expenses are complied with and enforced.

Are we, then, to have two commissioners, one appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer and one appointed on the nomination of Mr. Speaker? If the answer is affirmative, then surely imponderable conflicts would arise as to the duties of the respective commissioners. The second point which stands out and requires clarification is the fact that a commissioner will be appointed——whose duties will be to see to the administration of this act.

The first point which arises is that the existing provisions of subsection 4(1) of the Canada Elections Act lay out the duties of the Chief Electoral Officer. I think it pertinent to quote that subsection, which reads:

(1) The Chief Electoral Officer shall

(a) exercise general direction and supervision over the administrative conduct of elections and enforce on the part of all election officers fairness, impartiality and compliance with the provisions of this act;

(b) issue to election officers such instructions as from time to time he may deem necessary—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Earlier the Chair had indicated that for the following 60 minutes we would proceed with private members' business even though we were to begin private members' hour a few minutes ahead of the time provided under the Standing Order. Is it agreed that we consider private members' hour to have expired?

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker. My understanding of the order which you made was that the hour might begin prior to four o'clock, but there was nothing said about termination. I would not want to miss hearing the prepared research notes presently being read into the record in order to talk out a sound bill. I think the hon. member should be permitted to carry on for just a few more minutes reading into the record notes prepared by the research department of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I recall it, the expression I used was "for the next 60 minutes." However, I will be happy to hear the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Stewart) continuing until five o'clock, the regular time of adjournment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the remorse of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). If the hon. gentleman wishes to hear me out, I will give him full opportunity. Certainly I would not dispute any ruling of the Chair. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I spent hours in the preparation of this technical presentation. I ask the forebearance of my colleagues. If the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton wishes to hear me—

Mr. Baker: I do. We want to listen.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): —I will continue, if the House is disposed so to allow me.

Mr. Baker: Absolutely.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Thank you very much.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The hon. member was dealing with a very serious point.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): My colleague from Rocky Mountain—this is not related to the subject matter before us—has national parks in his riding which are second in rank only to those in my riding, the great parks of Yoho, Glacier, Mount Revelstoke and Kootenay.

Returning to the topic before us, I believe I was reciting to hon. members subsection 4(1) of the Canada Elections Act. Perhaps I could refer members to it for their own edification. They can find it in the Revised Statutes. They will note, no doubt, that there is a direct conflict between the duties of the commissioner, who must see to the administration of this act, and the statutory responsibility now imposed on the Chief Electoral Officer, who exercises general direction and supervision over the administrative conduct of elections.

Admittedly, it might be argued that the duties proposed for the commissioner to see to the administration of this act are broader and encompass more than the Chief Electoral Officer's supervision over the administrative conduct of elections. However, I suggest to members that the obvious answer to the argument regarding the conduct of elections is what the Canada Elections Act is all about. Then I wish to point out to hon. members—

Some hon. Members: Seven more seconds to go. Six more.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): —that a very serious conflict arises—

Some hon. Members: Four seconds. Three seconds.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): —in respect of proposed new clauses—

Some hon. Members: Two seconds. One second.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour and five minutes provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, this House accordingly stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CLOSING OF AIRPORTS BY FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that the closing of all airports in British Columbia due to the strike by the firefighters is having serious ramifications for the economic and transport sectors of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the House instruct the Minister of Transport or the President of Treasury Board or their senior officials to travel to Vancouver to meet with the firefighters with a view to settling their grievances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DISRUPTION OF SERVICE BY AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS' STRIKE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my motion is similar to that moved by my hon. friend. It touches a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I will try a somewhat different approach. Since aircraft service to central and northern British Columbia has become a lifeline indispensable to health and social services, industry and commerce, and since this service has been totally disrupted by an illegal strike of emergency service employees at all airports in British Columbia, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That the government take the necessary steps to utilize manpower and, if necessary, equipment maintained by the Armed Forces to firstly allow for time for immediate and meaningful negotiations and to immediately restore services.

Mr. Speaker: Again, this motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion therefore cannot be put.

AGRICULTURE

DIFFICULTIES OF PORK PRODUCERS IN EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert):

That this House study without delay the financial difficulties experienced by eastern pork producers as a result of profit losses because of lower pork prices and the constant increase in the cost of feed, and that immediate solutions be found that this group of producers be better protected.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENSURE THAT APPLICANTS FOR GRANTS USE ACCURATE INFORMATION AND DATA

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-274, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that applicants for federal grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act use accurate information and data which are subject to public scrutiny. This arises out of the fact that several grants, for example, in the Lanark region, have been misused in the past.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO ENSURE PROPER EVALUATION OF EFFECTIVENESS OF DISBURSEMENTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-275, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that the effectiveness of disbursements from the public purse is properly evaluated, and that improvements in the grants system can be made promptly on the basis of such evaluation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE MONTHLY REPORTS GIVING AMOUNTS OF GRANTS AND NAMES OF COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-276, to amend the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to explain the bill?

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for taking the time of the House, but in view of the importance of the bill I do wish to explain it. The purpose of the bill is to require the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) to make monthly reports on the operation of the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, indicating the names of the companies and the amounts of the grants, in the same way that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) is supposed to make reports under section 16 of the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—ADVERTISING CONTRACTS

Question No. 101—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names and addresses of all advertising agencies used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration since the present Minister assumed his portfolio?

2. (a) What are the amounts of all advertising contracts given such agencies during this period of time, what are the dates such contracts were awarded and in each case, were tenders or competitive presentations of any kind requested and, if not, who authorized in each case the expenditure of public funds without such tenders or competitive presentations (b) in each case, what was the general subject matter of the advertising contract?

3. What are the names and addresses of all advertising agencies used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration during the term of the Minister's immediate predecessor and if any of these agencies has not been used since then, for what reason and on whose decision were changes made?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Vickers & Benson Ltd., 980 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ontario, M4W 2J8.

2. (a) Vickers & Benson, $270,785.42—Jan. 11, 1973; Vickers & Benson, $1,038,110.41—Aug. 2, 1973; Vickers & Benson, $426,677.05—Sept. 12, 1973. Tenders or competitive presentations were not requested. Authorization for these expenditures without tender or competitive presentations was given by Treasury Board on recommendation of the Department. (b) Summer Student Employment Program, Immigration Adjustment of Status Program, Local Initiatives Program.

3. (a) Vickers & Benson Ltd., 980 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ontario. (b) Gordon Hill Advertising, 1470 Place du Canada, Montreal, P.Q. (c) Omnicom Advertising Agency, 1110 Sherbrooke W., Montreal, P.Q. The minister decided not to use two of the advertising agencies mentioned above in order to reduce the amount of time required by departmental officials in briefing the different agencies on current activities and new policies of the department.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—INCREASE IN PAY FOR RESERVISTS

Question No. 109—Mr. Hees:

Does the statement of the Minister of National Defence to the Association of Canadian Defence Associations, reported in Newspapers on January 18, 1974 to the effect that there will be an increase in pay for the Reserves, mean that there will be an increase in the establishments for units or the total pay available to units so as to provide (a) more pay for fewer soldiers (b) more pay for the same number of soldiers (c) more pay for more soldiers?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The announced increase in pay is an increase in the rate of pay for reservists individually, and bears no relationship to the current or future size of the reserve forces.

CPR—SCRAPPING OF RAIL CARS

Question No. 130—Mr. Gleave:

1. How many rail cars of a type used for carrying grain have been scrapped by the Canadian Pacific Railway during (a) the past 12 months (b) the previous 12 months?

2. How many rail cars capable of being repaired to carry grain have been scrapped by the Canadian Pacific Railway during (a) the past 12 months (b) the previous 12 months?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. (a) For the calendar year 1973, 1253 cars. (b) For the calendar year 1972, 1228 cars.

2. (a) and (b) In the Judgment of the railway, none. The practice of the railway is to inspect the condition of every car, and the decision to scrap a car is taken on the basis of the economic feasibility of repairing it.

GOVERNMENT STRATEGY—WIDESPREAD COMMODITY AND MATERIAL SHORTAGES

Question No. 226—Mr. Stevens:

Does the government have a strategy to deal with widespread commodity and materials shortages within Canada which threaten the nation's growth potential for 1974 and, if so, what is the strategy?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: Canada moves into the year 1974 after a year of extraordinary high real growth. The world economy, including Canada, has enjoyed three decades of extremely rapid growth by historical standards. Both in a short and rather longerterm sense it is not, therefore, surprising that evidence of specific commodity and material shortages would form a part of the problem of economic management. The tightness of world supply of some commodities and materials has, of course, been exacerbated by the recent major disruptions in petroleum supply. It is anticipated that both material and demand shortages outside of Canada will have a larger influence on Canadian real growth in 1974 than any internal shortages. The government is, however, examining intensively the possibility of strategic shortages particularly in the context of staging major Canadian capital developments over the next decade in a manner which will lead to sustainable growth and minimal dislocation. In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are fully aware of current and developing situations to do with widespread commodity and materials shortages within Canada. These situations are examined and reviewed regularly on a commodity basis, and options are considered at a time when shortages or future shortages become apparent. The specific action depends on the nature of the commodity and the related industry characteristics. The government is prepared to take whatever steps are required to ensure that Canadians do not suffer unduly as a result of material shortages. In so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned: The government strategy with respect to ensuring adequate commodity and material supplies was outlined in the throne speech.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—ANNUAL BUDGET

Question No. 300—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier):

1. What is the annual budget of the Canadian Film Development Corporation?

2. What part of the budget comes from federal subsidies?

3. Do contracts between the Canadian Film Development Corporation and distributing companies include certain clauses to guarantee the distribution of films financed entirely or in part by the Corporation to minority official language groups which, through provincial cultural bodies or local film clubs, would want to rent films from the distributing agency and (a) if so, what clauses apply between the Canadian Film Development Corporation, France Films and Cinepix of Toronto for the film "Kamouraska" (b) if not, does the Corporation intend to provide clauses in its contracts to guarantee to minority official language groups their right to obtain, in the language of their choice, films financed by the Corporation at reasonable prices and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. The 1973-74 budget of the corporation is $3.9 million (including administration) representing its share of a total feature film budget of $9.75 million.

2. $3.3 million derives from an appropriation authorized under section 18 (1) of the CFDC Act. $600,000 comes from returns on the corporation's investments and loans.

3. No. Contracts now existing between the producers assisted by the corporation and Canadian distributors stipulate that the distributors must use their best efforts to distribute the films as widely as possible and under the best possible terms to maximize the revenues for the CFDC and other investors. Provincial cultural bodies and local film clubs have access through such distributors to all CFDC-financed films. (a) See above. (b) No. The corporation is of the opinion that under existing arrangements distributors can and do provide films partially financed by the corporation to minority official language groups, without undue delay and on the best possible terms.

AIR CANADA—COMPUTERIZED RESERVATIONS

Question No. 324—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What was the cost of the new reservations computer installed by Air Canada?

2. Do companies other than Air Canada use the computer and, if so, which ones?

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. In 1973 Air Canada spent approximately $1.1 million on new computer equipment for its ReserVec II reservations system. Of this amount, $1 million was for capital expenditures for new mass storage and high speed storage units; $100,000 represented the rental of a third UNIVAC 1108 processor.

2. Other companies using Air Canada's ReserVec II system as of March 1, 1974 were Pacific Western Airlines and Air Jamaica.

3. Average use is as follows: (a) Air Canada, 90, 94 percent; (b) Others, 10, 6 percent; (c) None.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—GEOGRAPHIC DIVISION OF EXPENDITURES AND EMPLOYEES

Question No. 364—Mr. Nystrom:

1. For the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73 what amount of the total expenditures for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce were spent (a) outside of Canada (b) within Canada (c) in each of the 10 provinces, the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

2. (a) What was the total number of employees in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as of March 31, 1973 (b) how many of those employees would be considered employees of the headquarters and are employed on the (i) Quebec side of the national capital (ii) Ontario side of the national capital (c) how many employees does the Department have in each of the 10 provinces, the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce):

(In Thousands of Dollars)

	1971/72	1972/73
(a) Total expenditures outside Canada	178	142
(b) Total expenditures within Canada	235,692	285,253
(c) Total expenditures by Province:
Newfoundland	—	1,319
Nova Scotia	2,248	4,407
New Brunswick	2,524	4,920
Prince Edward Island	371	188
Quebec	33,324	42,248
Ontario	42,496	53,340
Manitoba	5,345	1,963
Saskatchewan	32	79
Alberta	1,839	1,329
British Columbia	5,205	9,072

2. (a) 2,513 (includes Locally-Engaged abroad). (b) (i) None. (ii) 2,058. (c) As of January 1974, the department had the following number of employees in each of the provinces and territories, exclusive of the National Capital Region: Alberta, 10; British Columbia, 10; Manitoba, 10; New Brunswick, 5; Newfoundland, 2; Northwest Territories, 0; Nova Scotia, 6; Ontario, 13; Prince Edward Island, 0; Quebec, 10; Saskatchewan, 6; Yukon Territory, 0.

CBC—AMOUNT PAID BY "LE JOUR" FOR PUBLICITY

Question No. 376—Mr. Herbert:

How much was paid by the newspaper Le Jour to CBC for publicity?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The CBC considered the arrival on the competitive Montreal newspaper scene of a new daily newspaper as an event of legitimate public interest. The significance of Le Jour and its administration and style were such that its inauguration received extensive coverage and comment not only by other Montreal newspapers and broadcasting stations but also on programs of the English and French radio and television stations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Montreal. Payment to the CBC by a newspaper or any individuals, groups of individuals, companies or organizations in connection with the discussion of, or reference to them, in the CBC's programs in contrary to the established policies of the CBC and was, therefore, not involved in the case of the newspaper Le Jour.

CBC—PIERRE BRISSON INTERVIEW

Question No. 394—Mr. Herbert:

Was Pierre Brisson paid by CBC for the interview he granted to the said Corporation?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Pierre Brisson received a fee from the CBC for the interview he granted to the said corporation.

PARLIAMENT HILL—DISPOSITION OF PAPER WASTE

Question No. 411—Mr. Haliburton:

1. Who hauls away the paper waste from Parliament Hill?
2. What is the cost of removal?
3. How many tons of paper are involved (a) per month (b) per year?
4. Is paper waste separated from other garbage?
5. Is such waste (a) recycled (b) incinerated (c) used as land fill?
6. What was the volume of waste removed from Parliament Hill in (a) 1965 (b) 1967 (c) 1969 (d) 1971 (e) 1973?
7. If it is incinerated, what is the cost of incineration?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Tri-Cil Waste Management Limited (City of Ottawa Garbage Contractor).

2. Approximately $609 per month. During 1973 a total of 370,370 cubic feet of waste was removed at a cost of $7,306.

3. Paper is not weighed.

4. No.

5. (c) Used as land fill.

6.

Garbage	Waste Pater
(a) 1965, 66,612 cubic feet	Disposed by C.A.D.C.
(b) 1967, 101,192 cubic feet	Disposed by C.A.D.C.
(c) 1969, 111,754 cubic feet	Disposed by C.A.D.C.
(d) 1971, 110,292 cubic feet	Disposed by C.A.D.C.
(e) 1973, 370,370 cubic feet	Included in garbage

7. The waste is not incinerated.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—POSITIONS ADVERTISED

Question No. 421—Mr. Stollery:

1. For the years 1971, 1972 and 1973, how many Public Service positions that were advertised in newspapers by the Public Service Commission were subsequently filled from within the ranks of the Public Service?

2. What was the total cost of advertising positions by the Public Service Commission in Canadian newspapers for each of these years?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. During 1971, 1972 and 1973 the Public Service Commission made the following appointments:

	1971	1972	1973
To the Public Service	7,226	7,992	8,650
From within the Public Service	10,100	11,920	13,800
Departments made the following appointments under delegated authority:
To the Public Service	20,480	30,576	30,329
From within the Public Service	28,869	37,996	45,736

The computerized and manual report systems of the Public Service Commission are not programmed in such a way as to permit us to say how many of the appointments from within the Public Service were related to vacancies originally advertised in open competitions or how many of the appointments to the Public Service resulted from advertising.

2. 1971-72, $306,172.89; 1972-73, $739,585.92; 1973-74 (To January 31/74), $627,069.23. The figures include costs of advertising in newspapers and periodicals, some of which would lead to appointments by departments, under delegated staffing activity.

APPLICATION FOR PERMITS FOR EXPORT TO CUBA

Question No. 440—Mr. Harney:

For each year 1969 to 1973 (a) what was the number of applications for permits for export to Cuba (b) what was the number of permits granted under the Export and Import Permits Act?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The answers to the above-noted questions are contained in the following table.

Year	Export Permit Applications Received	Export Permits Issued	Export Permit Applications withdrawn at Request of Applicant or on basis of no permit required	Export Permit Applications Refused
1969	85	71	7	7
1970	169	137	27	5
1971	127	103	13	11
1972	113	94	15	4
1973	81	40	34	7

CBC—PERMISSION FROM THE MUSICIANS' UNION FOR THE APPEARANCE OF RCMP BAND

Question No. 442—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For what reason must permission from the Musicians' Union be secured for the RCMP Band as was stated to be the case when the Band appeared over CBC on January 10, 1974?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: For many years, the CBC has recognized the American Federation of Musicians as the exclusive bargaining agent for musicians appearing on its radio and television programs. The RCMP Band, and military type bands, in the course of regular duties, may be broadcast on radio or television without any need for permission from the Musicians' Union. On the CBC English television network program of January 10, 1974, however, the members of the RCMP Band performed in a capacity similar to that of musicians in an orchestra working as the featured musical performers in a television entertainment program.

COST OF SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL—NEW BRUNSWICK, 1973-74

Question No. 458—Mr. Howie:

From March 31, 1973 to March 31, 1974, how much money was paid by the government for the protection of New Brunswick forests by aerial spraying to prevent and control the effects of spruce budworm and other insects and is the government continuing this programme beyond March 31, 1974?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): The cost of the federal share of the spruce budworm control operation in New Brunswick in 1973-74 was $631,200. In 1974-75 the government will again share in the cost of control operations in New Brunswick to the extent that funds are available within a limited budget.

*CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION—APPLICATIONS

Question No. 481—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many applications from veterans for pensions and allowances await decision by the Pension Commission?

2. In how many of these cases has there been a delay of (a) six months (b) 12 months (c) 18 months in processing the applications and making a decision?

3. How many (a) World War I veterans (b) World War II veterans have made their first application for pensions during the past year?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. As of 24 February 1974, there were 7,360 applications for pension awaiting decision by the Canadian Pension Commission.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

2. Statistics on outstanding claims are not available for the precise period indicated in the question; however, following are figures for closely related periods as of February 24, 1974: Applications five months or more old, 7,360; Applications twelve months or more old, 5,006; Applications eighteen months or more old, 243.

3. Most World War I veterans and many World War II veterans for whom decisions on pension application are pending first made unsuccessful applications and exhausted their appeal rights many years ago and before the Pension Act was amended in 1971. With the amendments of 1971, all veterans, regardless of their period of service, were granted the right to make new applications based on the amended legislation and many have exercised this right. In addition there have been a considerable number of applications from veterans with disabilities that manifested or worsened during recent years and which they consider are attributable to their war service.

The total number of applications received in 1973, including first time and repeat applications was 8,731. This includes applications relating to World War I, World War II, Regular Force, Special Force and other service. The Commission does not record the period of service as a statistic at the time of receipt of applications.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DISABILITY PENSION, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 485—Mr. Howie:

On March 1, 1974, how many veterans were known to be waiting for a Board hearing in respect to their disability pensions, pension increases or adjustments and, of these, how many were from New Brunswick?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As of March 1, 1974, there were 2,973 applications (including 193 from New Brunswick) for an Entitlement Board or a hearing as to quantum of pension, which had not yet been considered. Of this number, 1,542 (including 77 from New Brunswick) are in the course of having a Statement of Case prepared in the manner and form required by the Pension Act for an Entitlement Board, or are being prepared for a hearing as to quantum. A Statement of Case or other necessary documentation has been prepared for each of the remaining 1,431 applications and referred to the applicant, usually through his advocate, to determine if he is satisfied with the Statement of Case or other documentation and to certify that he is ready to proceed with the hearing. Of this number 534 cases (including 22 from New Brunswick) have been certified by the applicants and are ready for hearing and 897 (including 94 from New Brunswick) are awaiting certification of readiness to proceed.

WILLIAM HEAD PENITENTIARY—CONSTRUCTION OF FENCE

Question No. 491—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Has the contract been awarded to construct the new fence at William Head Penitentiary to convert that institution from a minimum to a maximum security institution?

2. Was it awarded through open competition and, if not (a) for what reason (b) if so (i) in what journals was the competition advertised (ii) how many bids were received?

3. Was the bid accepted the lowest bid offered and, if not, for what reason?

4. (a) To what company was the contract awarded (b) what was the amount of the contract?

5. What elements, beyond the 1,500 feet of fencing on the land perimeter, are included in the contract?

6. What provisions are made for security on the sea perimeter?

7. Were the estimates submitted by all bidders verified by the Public Works Quantity Surveyor?

8. (a) Does the contract include enlarging the parking lot and whose area is being reduced by the new fencing (b) what plans are there for enlarging the parking lot and the garden area?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, a contract was awarded for a standard fence to parallel existing so that the institution can be used for medium security inmates.

2. (a) Award was made as a result of selected invitation method in order to meet an urgent need to provide more secure accommodation as established by T.B. Minute No. 723554. (b) (i) There was no advertising in journals. (ii) One bid was received (five invited to tender).

3. The only bid offered was accepted.

4. (a) The contract was awarded to K.C. Johnson Ltd., Victoria, British Columbia (b) The amount of the contract was $115,826.

5. The elements are: Fence length about 1,000 feet, about 40 feet of sea wall, land levelling and grading (rock blasting) for fence construction.

6. For further security on the sea ends of the fence and land connection, raised guard posts are slated to be contracted soon to overlook the ends of the fence. Elsewhere, vehicle and foot patrols will guard the sea perimeter of the peninsula.

7. The bid was in line with Public Works estimate.

8. (a) The contract does not include enlarging of the parking lot which is being reduced because of the land need for the fence. (b) The institution, with its own labour force, will enlarge the parking lot and garden.

TRANSPORT—CHARTER OF LIBERIAN REGISTERED VESSEL "MESIS"

Question No. 492—Mr. Rose:

1. Where and for how long was the Liberian Registered Vessel Mesis out of service before it was charted to haul grain?

2. Who chartered the vessel, for what destination and at what price?

3. What was the usual cargo of the Mesis before it was chartered for grain?

4. Who paid for the cleanup and grain refit of the Mesis?

5. What was the contract cost of cleanup and repair?

6. What is the usual contract price of vessel for equivalent cargo?

7. Was the Mesis the vessel required to post a $50,000 bond as a result of a bunker oil spill at Vancouver's Lynn Terminals, February 14, 1974?

8. What was the reason for the Mesis being at Lynn Terminals, a lumber terminal, when its cargo is expected to be grain, and for how long is it expected to remain at Lynn?

9. What are the daily docking charges at Lynn Terminals?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. S.T.S. Mesis was out of service from January 18, 1974, until March 6, 1974. The vessel arrived at Vancouver at 15:30 on January 30, 1974 and commenced loading grain at 08:20 on March 6, 1974.

2. The S.T.S. Mesis is owned by Transports Intermares Armadora S.A. of Liberia and is on a time charter to Embiricos Shipping Agency Ltd. of London England. The vessel was chartered by the Bangladesh Shipping Corporation on January 18, 1974, through their agents, R.G. Shaw Ltd., London England from Embiricos Shipping Agency Ltd. to carry 33,000 metric tons of grain, 5 percent up or down, purchased by the Bangladesh Government from the Canadian Wheat Board, at a charter rate of U.S. $34 per metric ton, for discharge in Chittagong and/or Chandler.

3. Normal cargo is bulk heavy oil.

4. All costs paid by Embiricos Shipping Agency Ltd., London, England.

5. Canadian agents, Empire Shipping Ltd., are unaware of the contract cost because the contract was handled directly by Embiricos Shipping Agency Ltd.

6. The usual contract price of cleanup and repair varies according to the degree of sediment, scale and general condition of the compartments. The price usually ranges from $10,000. to $15,000. but has been known to go as high as $125,000.

7. S.T.S. Mesis was charged in court on March 19, 1974, and posted two bonds, $25,000. for the criminal charge and $11,000. for the civil charge.

8. The vessel was moored at the lay by berth for cleaning tanks and fitting for the carriage of grain. Vessel commenced loading grain at 08:20 on March 6, 1974, and sailed at 14:00 on March 19, 1974.

9. The maximum daily docking charge is 60 cents per foot per 24-hour day.

NUMBER OF MILES OF TRACKS OWNED BY RAILWAY COMPANIES

Question No. 515—Mr. Boisvert:

How many miles of track do the railway companies own in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) 44,025; (b) 5,324.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Question No. 520—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. How many landed immigrants were admitted to Canada in each year 1973, 1972 and 1971?

2. What was the breakdown by origin of country for each such year?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2. The information requested is contained in "Immigration Statistics" which is published annually and available from Information Canada or the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It is also published on a quarterly basis and available from the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PENSIONS IN EXCESS OF 48 PER CENT

Question No. 521—Mr. Dick (Supplementary):

1. What percentage of the veterans receiving a disability pension have been getting more than 48 per cent?

2. How many of that percentage have been called in by the Canadian Pension Commission and had their pension reviewed and increased?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 19.69 per cent.

2. Statistics on the numbers of veterans called in for pension medical examinations are not kept in accordance with the percentage of disability pensions awarded to the veterans concerned.

SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL, NEW BRUNSWICK, 1974-75

Question No. 538—Mr. Howie:

To what extent will the government's participation in spraying to control and eradicate the spruce budworm in New Brunswick forests be limited in terms of (a) financial contribution (b) area being sprayed (c) field operations during the spraying season?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): (a) The Department of the Environment appropriation in Main Estimates 1974-75, to meet costs for the federal share of funding forest pest control operations in Canada, is $2.6 million (Vote 30). Both Quebec and New Brunswick have applied for financial assistance in 1974. (b) The area treated will be independent of the level of federal financial assistance. It is a provincial decision. (c) The Maritimes Forest Research Centre of the Department of the Environment will, as in past years, carry out pre-control and post-control surveys and provide technical and advisory services during the spraying season.

OFY FUNDS TO CONSTITUENCIES REPRESENTED BY LIBERAL AND PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 589—Mr. Cossitt:

1. For what reason did it take a period of 50 days from September 11, 1973 to October 31, 1973 for the Secretary of State to reply to Question No. 2,671 of the First Session of the 29th Parliament that it was not possible to answer questions as to the total amount of OFY funds allocated in 1972-73 to constituencies represented in the House of Commons by (a) Members of the Liberal Party (b) Members of the Progressive Conservative Party?

2. If a record of OFY funds is not kept according to electoral districts, how was it possible for the Secretary of State to send Members of Parliament representing specific electoral districts copies of all OFY applications received for each individual electoral district?

3. What was the total amount of funds allocated in 1972-73 to constituencies represented in the House of Commons by (a) Members of the Liberal Party (b) Members of the Progressive Conservative Party?

4. What is the name of each Cabinet Minister, the name of the constituency he represents and the total of OFY funds allocated to each such constituency for 1972-73?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. During the period involved, officials of the Secretary of State Department undertook a study to examine ways and means of providing the information requested. The findings of the study were that a new computerized structure would be required to provide information by constituency, and that an inordinate amount of time and expense would be involved in establishing such a structure. For managerial, technical and administrative reasons, the Opportunities for Youth Program and records were built on a regional and subregional basis which did not take into account and did not generally correspond to the actual limits of federal or provincial constituencies. The five regions were Atlantic, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies and Northwest Territories, and British Columbia and the Yukon.

2. At the urging of a number of Members of Parliament who had indicated a desire to be consulted on submissions from their own constituencies, the office of the Secretary of State at the beginning of the 1973 program undertook to sort the applications as best it could by federal constituencies. The consultation of April, 1973 did not represent an allocation by constituency, but rather a consultation process by which the Secretary of State gathered information prior to making decisions on projects. In view of the fact that the youth applying for projects were not restricted to being from or operating within one constituency, in multiple-riding urban areas more than one constituency was affected by some proposals. Hence, in many cases, more than one Member of Parliament was consulted. This exercise, arising out of the constituency demand, was not reflected in OFY selection records which are classified by region and subregion. This explains why the 600-page report listing Opportunities for Youth projects for 1973 is classified by provinces, municipalities and localities and in alphabetical order. This document enables a reader who is familiar with the limits of a given constituency to establish a list of those projects which were carried out within that constituency.

3 and 4. It is not possible to answer these questions, since the allocation of the funds of the OFY program was done within a framework of regions and subregions, and not within the framework of electoral constituencies.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the strike by firefighters is still continuing at Vancouver airport and that his regional officials have had very little success in solving the dispute, will the minister personally go to Vancouver and talk to the people on strike to see if he can end it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, two minutes ago I was told of the arrival in Vancouver of two senior officials of the department who flew there to try to settle the conflict as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Just two minutes ago I was talking with the strikers in British Columbia who informed me that unless either the Minister of Transport or the President of the Treasury Board is willing to go to Vancouver they are not willing to talk to the minister's officials. It is time the minister did his job and went there and talked to these people.

● (1420)

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question on the same matter. Since negotiations with the firefighters in British Columbia are six months behind and since this serious strike also affects the lives and safety of every person outside the city of Vancouver, is the minister prepared to do something today by going there and settling this strike or, if not, employing the armed services to provide emergency protection to the air carriers?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, anybody can play politics with anything, but I tell you this situation in Vancouver is very serious. I have here copies of wires from the union asking their men to go back to work. Possibly you represent them better than their union, but I do not believe it.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the minister, who is a renowned labour leader. Why can he not settle a strike involving 100 people in British Columbia and what is he doing about the prospective strike of air traffic controllers? Has he got that under control as well?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been here a little longer he would know there is something in government called the Department of Labour. A report will be made to the Department of Labour and after that I will be informed and we will see what we can do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking supplementaries of the minister. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to complete the first round of questioning and then return to this important matter starting with the hon. member for Vancouver South. As I indicated, I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby in an attempt to complete the first round of questioning.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—CANADIAN DEFICIT IN AUTO PARTS—MONITORING OF COMPANIES' PURCHASING PATTERNS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact there was a deficit of over $1 billion in trade in automotive parts between Canada and the United States last year as a result of something like a 20 per cent increase in the purchase of parts by Canadian assembly plants in the United States, can the minister inform the House whether or nor the government is monitoring the purchasing patterns of General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, particularly under the auspices of the DISC's which have they set up?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a specific answer to the question of the DISC's to which the hon. member has referred, but we are certainly monitoring the over-all situation so far as parts imports and parts exports are concerned. More than that, we are trying to develop new markets for Canadian parts manufacturers. There have been missions recently to three major trading areas of the world. On the last trip to Mexico I took representatives of the Canadian automobile parts manufacturers with me.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that, whatever increased sales we may expect to get in other countries, the fact remains that the United States market is of overriding importance, can the minister inform the House whether or not he has attempted and, if so whether he has made any progress in this regard, to seek assurance from the assembly plant operators in Canada that they will purchase more parts for their assembling of automobiles from Canadian parts producers?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think the assembly operators are interested in purchasing just as many parts as they can. This is largely conditioned, as the hon. member knows, by the state of the United States market at the present time.

INDUSTRY

MANUFACTURE BY GENERAL MOTORS OF NEW VEHICLE AT STE. THÉRÈSE IN PLACE OF VEGA—ASSURANCE THAT NUMBER EMPLOYED WILL NOT BE REDUCED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Considering the fact that General Motors Corporation has decided to transfer its production of the small Vega from Ste. Thérèse, Quebec, to the United States and to replace it with a new vehicle, the sales potential of which is unknown, would the minister inform the House whether he has obtained assurance from that company that the numbers employed at Ste. Thérèse will not be below what they are at the present time?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken with the president of General Motors of Canada with respect to this particular item. He has assured me that the automobile that will go into the Ste. Thérèse plant will be a comparable vehicle in terms of a small car with a very comparable potential. He has gone further and said that he sees no reason to expect any reduction in employment.

INCOME TAX

PERMISSION TO COMPANIES TO DEFER PAYMENT—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION TO INDIVIDUALS WITH LOW INCOMES

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

In 1973, the government granted an interest free loan of $774 million to Canadian corporations in allowing them to defer their fiscal payments. Can the minister tell whether he intends to give to low-income taxpayers that same privilege through which multimillionnaire corporations use tax moneys without paying any interest?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not share the opinions expressed in the article the hon. member quoted. In any case, one must take into account jobs created not only in Quebec but also in the whole of Canada through grants or rather tax reductions granted to these corporations.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary?

Could the minister tell whether he considers it normal that low-income taxpayers should be penalized when they do not pay their taxes before April 30 whereas corporations that make millions of dollars of benefits can defer their tax payments and thus use government money without paying interest?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is more of an argument than a supplementary question.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—SUGGESTED USE OF ARBITRATION TO SETTLE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's invitation to the opposition on Friday to settle the strike, would the minister consider a special arbitrator or arbitrators and include my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, who obviously is well informed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: No one from British Columbia is trying to exploit the situation, as the minister suggested on Friday.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at the situation as it is. I think there are some very important values at stake in Vancouver. I know that the alliance has taken a very serious stand concerning these firefighters. This is not a normal dispute but we are trying to solve the problem by normal means. I do not see what would be achieved by forming a committee of the House.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell the House why he rejects an independent arbitrator as a means to bringing the union, the firefighters involved and the government together so that negotiations can continue, particularly as the minister said, that the circumstances are special?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, for a reason which is very simple. We have a certain number of laws in this country which regulate labour relations between employees and employers. You have the Public Service Alliance of Canada which is certified to represent this group, and Treasury Board is negotiating with the certified agent. Treasury Board cannot negotiate with anybody else because this is an exclusive bargaining right.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REGIONAL PAY DIFFERENTIALS—POSITION OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the current serious problems involving the firemen at Vancouver airport and similar problems in the recent past with regard to nurses and dockyard workers under federal jurisdiction, will the President of the Treasury Board now concede that his concept regarding regional pay differentials for Treasury Board employees is inequitable and unworkable and contributes to labour problems—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that is debate rather than a question.

Mr. MacKay: May I rephrase my supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The first question was hardly a supplementary. Perhaps the hon. member has a supplementary question to ask now.

Mr. MacKay: Perhaps I can rephrase the question. Since the policies of the President of the Treasury Board appear to some of us to be inconsistent in that many employees under Treasury Board jurisdiction do not receive equal pay for equal work across the nation and, on the other hand, as in the case of the Vancouver firefighters, they do not receive comparable pay to that in the private sector, when do the minister and the government intend to phase out this particular approach which appears to be causing difficulties?

● (1430)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): If the hon. gentleman will discuss the matter with his colleague from Vancouver, the one thing he will see is that the issue here is a conflict between a resolution of the Public Service Alliance convention calling for national pay rates and the refusal of the local in Vancouver to accept that resolution. The problem is to reconcile the quite natural demands of the Vancouver firefighters for some comparability of pay with people in Vancouver rather than with some national average.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—DISCUSSIONS TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I appreciate that the union has asked the men to return to work, but what I would like to ask him is whether there are discussions going on today in Ottawa with his department, and what is the nature of these discussions, so far as he can tell the House, between Treasury Board and the union affected with a view to settling this crippling work stoppage?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Transport, as the Minister of Transport has indicated, has sent a special team to Vancouver to talk directly to the departmental employees. In the meantime, urgent discussions are continuing at the national level here in Ottawa between the bargaining agent and Treasury Board.

OVERSHOOTING OF HALIFAX AIRPORT RUNWAY BY AIR CANADA DC-8—SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT BODY TO INVESTIGATE ALL TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question related in a sense to airports to direct to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of concern about public safety. What can he tell the House today about the regrettable incident involving a DC-8 overshooting a runway at Halifax? Has an investigation been launched and, if so, will the details be made public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that it was a regrettable incident. A team of inquiry from my department is in Halifax right now trying to find out exactly what happened.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question goes from the specific to the general. In light of the current circumstances that surround transportation accidents in Canada, the growing number of such accidents, their relevance to the general public and their direct relevance to the travelling public, does the minister not think it is time to remove from the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport responsibility for the investigation of accidents affecting all modes of transport and establish an independent body so that the general public will not be confused by the apparent conflicts of interest?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in the House a few weeks ago I think I mentioned that I would favour an independent board in such cases, and that whenever a new policy was introduced this would be part of it.

GRAIN

ESTIMATED SHORTFALL IN WHEAT EXPORTS BECAUSE OF TRANSPORTATION DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Has the minister made any estimate of the shortfall in wheat exports that the present transportation difficulties will cause by the end of the crop year and, if so, what is that figure?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is no specific figure available because of the speculative features that are involved in any such calculations. The Wheat Board certainly would have liked to make additional sales in certain circumstances and will still want to do so if the special measures now being taken allow more grain to be moved to export position than had earlier been anticipated.

Mr. Ritchie: In view of the special arrangements, is the Wheat Board considering paying farmers for trucking wheat from branch lines at present inoperative to main line points that are open?

Mr. Lang: I know that this is a matter they have at least been examining, but to this point they certainly have not made a decision to do that.

IMMIGRATION

CHILEAN REFUGEES—REPRESENTATIONS BY CHURCHES FOR CHANGES IN PROCEDURES—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Did the minister receive a deputation of leading churchmen last week who pointed out that there was a continuing emergency in the Chilean refugee situation, particularly in Peru and Argentina, and urging procedural reforms in handling these cases? If so, what was his response to the representations of the delegation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is correct. I met with a delegation from the Canadian Council of Churches, along with my colleague, the Solicitor General. We discussed the whole range of the matter of the Chilean movement. They made certain valuable and constructive suggestions to us, based on their information, which we have passed along to our people, particularly with regard to procedures in Peru and Argentina.

Mr. Brewin: Has the minister made or is he contemplating making any changes to deal with the problem that exists in the new humanitarian spirit which he has announced guides the government in this field?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the delegation, the situation in Chile itself seems to have changed, and we have reduced the number of people we had temporarily sent there. But it is an ongoing operation, both to deal with normal applications from Chile in the normal manner and to be prepared to handle, with special consideration, any remaining refugee cases that are brought to light.

INDUSTRY

CONSTRUCTION IN SARNIA-LAMBTON OF PLANT TO PRODUCE FEEDSTOCK FOR PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Was he made aware of the welcome announcement today that a $250 million world scale plant to produce feedstock for the petrochemical industry will be constructed in Sarnia-Lambton?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been made aware of a favourable decision—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: —on a project which has been championed by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: —which has been assisted by the corporate tax cuts—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether the minister wishes to return to motions for the purpose of making a statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUPPLY—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF OPPOSITION DAY IN WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 22

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government House leader. Would the hon. gentleman be prepared to designate one of the sitting days of the week beginning April 22 as an opposition day?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to do that. I would be happy to consult with my colleagues, but in the normal course the designation of opposition days is a matter for decision—

Mr. Hees: Between you and Stanley Knowles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —by the government because such days come under the business of supply. So the answer is that I am not prepared at the moment to designate any day.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE MEET BEFORE EASTER RECESS TO ARRANGE TIMETABLE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the government House leader on the matter of unfinished business before the Easter recess. Would he check into the possibility of the Public Accounts Committee having a meeting before Easter so it could arrange its timetable? I understand that the Auditor General worked hard to get his report going and everybody is anxious to get started, but the nod has not come from somebody.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, a reference has been given by the House to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts at the request of the Chairman, and if a nod is required from me I will be glad to give it now.

SPORTS

PROSPECTIVE LEGISLATION RESPECTING WORLD FOOTBALL LEAGUE—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT AS TO FREE VOTE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the bill in connection with barring the World Football League from Canada. When that bill comes before the House, is it the intention of the government to permit a free vote in order to calm and quieten Liberal members from Toronto and elsewhere who are very frightened by its terms?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what decision will be made by the various parties as to whether the whips will be off, but I do not think this is a matter that goes to the roots of our policy.

● (1440)

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a matter that goes to the roots of the survival of some of the seats of Liberals. Was the minister speaking for the government at Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto a couple of days ago when he said that the federal government may permit a free vote?

Asked if party discipline would be enforced when the matter came to a vote, he said, "I wouldn't think so". Was that expressing government policy or just his own personal fears?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I first thank the right hon. gentleman for his solicitude on behalf of our party. It is rather rare to hear it expressed. I did not make any such statement, Mr. Speaker. I was asked whether there would be a free vote and I said that there will be a government bill which I will support and I did not know whether the whips would be on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a revised version.

PURCHASE PRICE OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS TO FACILITATE MOVEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF RAILWAYS SHARING COST

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister tell the House the total purchase price of the 4,000 hopper cars and will the CPR and the CNR be requested to assume a portion of the cost?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government has made the decision to purchase these cars but the tender call has not yet been made. Therefore there is no confirmed purchase price at this point. The order will be placed by the government.

Mr. Towers: Would the minister not consider it to be in the best interests of the Canadian people to ask both these corporations to assume the cost and the administration of this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that is a representation. The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS TO FACILITATE MOVEMENT—ADEQUACY OF RAIL BEDS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of reports about the 4,000 boxcars recently ordered by the federal government being too heavy for the rail beds and that they could thus cause further deterioration of railway equipment? If so, will he guarantee to the House that the 4,000 boxcars are the correct size and weight for the rail beds?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I presume that if some hopper cars are built they will be built according to the capacity of the rails, and if the rails have to be upgraded they will be upgraded.

AGREEMENT WITH RAILWAYS ON MAINTENANCE OF HOPPER CARS ALREADY IN USE

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I may add that the Minister of Transport will have a lot of investing to do if he is to upgrade all lines in western Canada in view of how they have been allowed to run down. In view of the fact the government is calling for tenders for the building of another 4,000 hopper cars, can the minister inform the House whether the railways have yet come to an agreement on paying for maintenance of the first 2,000 cars the government purchased?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the agreement between the Canadian Wheat Board, which is trustee for the government for these cars, and the railways is a completed agreement and is available to members. When we announced the decision to order these additional 4,000 cars in accordance with the request from the Canadian Wheat Board and many other organizations like the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, we did so knowing exactly how many miles of track can handle 263,000 pound loaded hopper cars and knowing we would want to continue putting pressure on the railways to add more miles of trackage in that category by the time the hopper cars are available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking supplementaries and we will be running short of time. Perhaps the Chair might recognize the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and then try to go to the next question.

ACTION TO MAKE USE OF BOXCARS AT PRESENT INOPERATIVE ON BRANCH LINES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): In view of the fact the minister, in announcing the 4,000 hopper cars, said there would be a closing of branch lines throughout western Canada, and at least 70 per cent of these lines are in Saskatchewan, and in view of the fact they involve in the neighbourhood of 1,000 elevator delivery points, can the minister inform the House what action the government is going to take to have the railways bring into operation all the boxcars which are now on those branch lines, some of which could be in operation with some effort on the part of the railways?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the purchase of the hopper cars was not in any way related to any announcement about elevators being temporarily closed. Canadian National Railways did indicate that some of its branch lines would not be opened for a certain period of time because of the snow conditions. I think that may involve as many as 500 elevators. I certainly agree with the wisdom of the thought that you do not send more locomotives into snowbanks after cars when they are badly needed to move grain that is available on the main lines and get it to Vancouver where ships are waiting. That is the essence of the position at the moment. It is true you get a faster turnaround of rail equipment by using these main lines. Accordingly, the Canadian Wheat Board is giving additional delivery opportunities to all farmers whose elevators are temporarily closed so they can deliver their grain, road conditions permitting, to lines that are presently open.

TRANSPORT

INTENTION OF RAILWAYS TO ABANDON CERTAIN BRANCH LINES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Several years ago the railways presented the country with a list of lines that they intended to abandon. The government at that time stepped in and guaranteed that these lines would be operated until January 1, 1975. Has the minister authorized these lines to be abandoned at this time or are the railways proceeding on their own initiative?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. The only policy at this time is that all these branch lines are frozen. We do not know exactly what is going to happen in the future.

Mr. Korchinski: In view of the fact that some of these lines are operational and rail liners are going through on these lines, why is it that boxcars are left sitting on sidings and carloads of fertilizer, lumber and oil are not brought in by rail but by truck transport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think we will have a perfect opportunity on Wednesday next, when I will meet in a national conference the railways, the shippers, all those who are users of railways and the truckers, to get to know exactly what is happening and to ask the railways what we want to ask them. We have invited the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and he will surely attend the meeting.

REQUEST THAT CONTROL OF RAILWAY AND AIR TRANSPORT, HARBOURS BOARD AND MARITIME COMMISSION BE RETURNED TO DEPARTMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the minister has clearly indicated in recent speeches that much of the difficulty in transportation matters today is caused by lack of control over these matters by the government, is the minister giving consideration to bringing back into his department the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board, the National Harbours Board and the Canadian Maritime Commission, and by so doing once again give the government the control it needs over these important matters, thereby greatly improving transportation of Canadian goods?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the question. I think I have already partly answered it by saying that I hope shortly to be in a position to produce a policy paper for the cabinet on the revisions I think should be made in the department. At that time I will be happy to discuss it with members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize a further supplementary to the previous question. I recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville for a supplementary, then the hon. member for Champlain and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Transport. Some time ago the minister referred to the appointment of a boxcar controller to allocate boxcars. When is he going to act upon his own suggestion and make the appointment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned to the House that we would try to monitor the distribution of boxcars in Canada. A man has been hired and will be presented at the meeting on Wednesday.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REPORT THAT CERTAIN QUEBEC OIL COMPANIES DID NOT PAY FEDERAL INCOME TAX LAST YEAR

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance.

Can he say whether what happened in Quebec—seven oil companies not paying any tax in that province—also happened at the federal level or did any Canadian oil company have no federal tax to pay during the last financial year?

Mr. Speaker: I feel that such a general question could be placed on the order paper. It is so general that I wonder if the minister would be ready to answer. It should be placed on the order paper. If there is some urgency, I will be pleased to grant priority to this question on the adjournment motion.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ALLEGED REJECTION OF SOME APPLICATIONS BEFORE ASKING MEMBERS FOR RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it a fact that a number of applications for Opportunities for Youth grants were actually rejected by the minister's department before he went through the motion a week ago of asking members of parliament for their recommendations on applications received this year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, unless there was the odd application that was obviously in the wrong form or something like that. I will look into the matter, but to my knowledge this is not so.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, in view of the possibility of an imminent federal election—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: —will the minister assure the House that in selecting or passing on applications this year it will be done on the basis supposedly laid down and not with any political considerations in mind?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation. The hon. member has to assume his representation will be taken into account.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MEASURES TO MAINTAIN EARNINGS OF WORKERS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact the Steel Company of Canada, the largest steel producer in Canada, recently announced wage increases due its employees August 1, 1974, and an additional cost of living allowance of 15 cents an hour will be paid from August 1, 1974, in order to relieve the effects of inflation on the living standards of its employees, does the minister have any further measures to sustain the average weekly earnings of workers which have been seriously eroded by inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make on the action of the Steel Company of Canada.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Maybe the minister will have some comment on my supplementary. In addition to the Stelco raise, the second largest steel company in the country, Dominion Foundries and Steel Company, also found it necessary to increase wages. What further evidence does this government need that its inflationary policies are not working, and what steps is the minister taking to keep real wages in line with inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will agree his question is hardly in order when it contains argument. Perhaps the second part of the question might be in order and the minister might be prepared to reply to it on motions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CADET CORPS—AMENDMENT OF ACT TO PERMIT RECRUITMENT OF FEMALES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-Ste. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. At a conference of the Army Cadet League of Canada on the weekend, great concern was expressed about the lack of government action in amending the National Defence Act to permit the recruiting of females. Will the minister indicate what progress is being made in this regard?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I intend to recommend to the House a number of amendments to the National Defence Act. One amendment which I will recommend will allow the cadet corps to be open equally to girls as well as boys.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR SUPPORT PRICES FOR HOG AND BEEF PRODUCERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the government of British Columbia has announced a subsidy payment of $4.50 per hundredweight to hog producers in that province and that previously Saskatchewan and Alberta announced subsidy payments, can the minister advise if it is the intention of the federal government to institute an adequate support price for hogs, or is it its intention to abdicate entirely its responsibility with regard to supporting the hog industry in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the first national approach to hog production and the problems the producers are having with the low prices of pork products will be tomorrow when I meet the national pork producers organization in my office.

Mr. Gleave: Since the market price of fat cattle has fallen by an amount greater than the five cents a pound subsidy now being paid, is it the intention of the government to bring in a price support program for beef cattle that will have some relationship to the cost of production?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, at the present time there are many people in the beef production industry in Canada who are telling us we should withdraw the program we have at the present time. This is a very disorganized group of people, probably the most disorganized group of producers in Canada. They have many different opinions about what should be done with regard to the beef industry. Therefore it is very difficult to solve the problem.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES—ACTION TO PREVENT FLOODING AND CLEAN UP POLLUTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact the International Joint Commission announced last week that it is unable to stop any future flooding of the Great Lakes, as well as the unfortunate fact that the United States in admittedly falling sadly behind schedule in its clean-up campaign, what action does the government intend to take regarding this very serious matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised two separate questions. The first deals with flooding on the Great Lakes. Both sides in the International Joint Commission had to recognize that it is very difficult to do much about excessive rainfalls. The water all has to pass through the St. Lawrence. Therefore it is impossible to deal with that problem except by regulating the level of the water in the various lakes. With regard to the second question, I was talking today to the chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission who gave me an account of the talks. While the Canadian government is not altogether satisfied with the progress being made by the United States in cleaning up the Great Lakes, at least progress is being made and there is good will on both sides.

[Later:]

Mr. Jelinek: My supplementary is to the Acting Prime Minister. On October 17, 1973, I asked the Minister of the Environment if adequate staffing and funding would immediately be provided for the proposed cleanup and control of flood levels of the Great Lakes, to which he gave this House his assurance. According to spokesmen in two different International Joint Commission offices in Ontario, this has not been the case. I therefore ask whether the government is still planning to take immediate action, as promised by the minister, or if in fact it is thinking of nullifying the Great Lakes water quality agreement?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as far as I understand the situation, Canada is fully up to date in carrying out the agreement with the United States. The United States is having some difficulty in funding its operation. I do not think it is lack of staff on the part of Canada that is causing any of these difficulties.

COMMEMORATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF EVENTS TO HONOUR MACKENZIE KING, ARTHUR MEIGHEN AND J. S. WOODSWORTH

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I will direct my question to the acting minister. Considering that this year, 1974, marks the centenary of the birth of three outstanding statesmen and leaders of three historic parties, Right Hon. Mackenzie King, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen and Reverend J. S. Woodsworth, can the acting minister advise if the government has in mind any commemorative events honouring the careers of these distinguished Canadians who brought honour and distinction to this House and much greatness and credit to this country?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression this question might have been placed on the order paper, but perhaps the minister might reply briefly.

PENITENTIARIES

POLICY RESPECTING VISITS BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hide and cover attitude of the government regarding Ontario grand juries, as expressed last week, may I ask the Solicitor General if he has issued instructions or if there is a government policy which would prevent individual members of parliament on their own initiative from entering into and inspecting federal government institutions?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. It is the policy of the penitentiary service and my department to permit entry of members of parliament during regular periods. However, when there are disturbances we have to regulate this because we cannot have an extremely large number of people, whether it be press or members of parliament. But in usual periods of time we permit members of parliament at any time.

ENERGY

SUBMISSION OF BILL C-18 TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS FOR APPROVAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question that may help us in the debate on Bill C-18 which is to commence today. Was this bill presented to the provincial premiers and governments for their approval? This bill, of course, arises from the agreement between the federal and provincial governments. Has the federal government received the total approval of the ten provincial governments with regard to all the terms and conditions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, the general principles involved in the bill were the subject of an agreement between the first ministers on March 27. As the hon. member also knows, it is not in accordance with the practice of the House to circulate a bill outside the Privy Council before it receives first reading in the House.

● (1500)

Mr. Woolliams: I have one supplementary question arising from the fact that this bill is the result of an agreement between the federal government and the provincial governments concerning the export tax and setting the price of crude petroleum and its by-products. Am I to understand from the minister's answer that neither he nor the government have made any attempt to obtain from the provinces an acknowledgment that the bill embodies the terms and conditions of the agreement made at that time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The terms and conditions reached as a result of that conference have been incorporated in this bill. The bill is a public document for the first ministers examination and as far as I know no exception has been taken to its terms.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE SUBSIDY—SUGGESTION FOR PAYMENT TO FARMERS SELLING CATTLE AT COMMUNITY SALES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that no premiums are being paid to farmers selling at community sales, would the department give consideration to the stabilization board supplying and attaching tags to slaughter cattle for sale so that the rebate can be paid to the farmer rather than the money all going to the packing plants?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I think we have given consideration to just about every means of making sure that these premiums are paid to those who are entitled to them, that is, to the producers of the beef. We shall certainly look into the hon. member's suggestion although I am sure it has been considered. It is very difficult to administer because many of these commodities change hands as many as ten times before they actually get to the packing firm.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF ASPHALT AS RESULT OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF CRUDE OIL—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF SALES TAX

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance concerning the increase in the price of oil by-products as a result of the increase in the wellhead price of oil. For example, the price of asphalt has risen by almost 100 per cent. Would the minister tell us whether he took this into account at the time the wellhead price of oil was increased?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Without accepting the full implications of the preamble, may I say we also took account of the fact that the price in Canada is about $4 below the world price.

Mr. Darling: In view of the fact that the price of asphalt has doubled in the last few months and is expected to increase still further, would the minister consider reducing the 12 per cent federal sales tax on asphalt to ease the burden on builders and other users of asphalt such as municipalities and provincial governments?

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is a representation for consideration by the minister. Orders of the day.

Mr. MacKay: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I shall be brief. I would not want to try to sneak an argumentative point past Your Honour. But it relates to a statement made by the President of the Treasury Board on March 25, reported at page 852 of Hansard. It is also relevant to what was said today with respect to the situation at Vancouver. On March 25 the President of the Treasury Board said:

In the case of regional pay policy, the government for years has taken the position that it would not be a leader in matters of pay and salary but would follow the pattern set by what is generally known in this country as the private sector.

It is plain, and it is on the record of this House, that there is a differential of at least $3,000 in Vancouver between what the firefighters at the airport are receiving and what firefighters in the private sector are receiving, so I believe it is incumbent upon the minister to set the record straight and tell us whether or not he intends to follow the principle he stated in the House.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member will have an opportunity on another occasion to become involved in a debate with the minister on this matter.

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, COMPENSATION FOR OIL IMPORT COSTS, AND REGULATION OF PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-18, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill to enact the Petroleum Administration Act provides legislative support for three major themes of government petroleum policy as set forth in the Prime Minister's statement of last December 6 and as put before the first ministers' conference on energy in late January. The agreement which was reached among first ministers on Wednesday, March 27, represented the achievement of a broad consensus among the provinces and the federal government that these themes represent three essential constituents of a national oil policy.

Government policy has developed in response to the major disruptions of world oil markets over the past several months. These disruptions took the form of both temporary restrictions in world supplies of crude oil, and perhaps more importantly in a massive upward movement of world oil prices as producing countries began to exercise monopoly control over world prices.

In response to these forces, government policy has been to articulate three principles: First, that the price of Canadian crude oil should move upward to encourage exploration and development in Canada and thereby ensure further availability of our own resources, which will necessarily be more costly because they are both physically and technically less accessible, and also to ensure a continuing capacity for self-sufficiency. There is no reason why Canadian crude oil must move to international levels which no longer represent any fundamental reconciliation of supply and demand in world markets. Second, the approximate one-half of Canadian crude oil production that is exported should be sold at a fair and reasonable opportunity price in United States markets, that is, at a price consistent with the price which the U.S. is paying for other imported oil. Third, the proceeds from the sale of oil in the U.S. at a price higher than the domestic Canadian price should be employed to reduce the exposure of consumers in eastern Canada who would have otherwise had to pay full international prices for oil and oil products. We have described this third principle as embracing a single basic crude oil price to all Canadians except for transportation differentials.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

These three themes or principles which, as I have said, have the support of all of the provinces are embodied in this legislation, for which we seek the approval of this House. Part I of this act deals with petroleum export charges, Parts II and III with domestic oil price restraint and Part IV with petroleum import cost compensation.

I believe that by this time the House understands well, Mr. Speaker, the background to the development of this policy. The nationwide address by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on December 6, the statement by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to this House in moving second reading of the Export Tax Act in early January, and the analysis and statements put before first ministers at the energy conference in late January, are all important and comprehensive expressions of both government policy and the reasons for it. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, while we would make no particular claim for prescience with respect to the rapidly altering world oil scene over the past few months, the record will show that we have been entirely consistent in our view of the policies which Canada would have to adopt in adjusting to these developments.

I would like to review very briefly the major events in this development commencing with September 4 last year. On September 4 the Prime Minister called upon the oil industry, among others, to support a program of voluntary price restraint. This request was part of a general anti-inflationary program and was addressed to the oil industry, where crude oil prices had increased by some 95 cents over the previous nine-month period.

It is fair to say that 95 cents looked at the time as a very significant price advance, particularly since world and Canadian crude oil prices prior to these advances had remained relatively stable for more than a decade. Ninety-five cents was, of course, a very modest herald of what was to come. It did nonetheless represent an increase of crude oil price of almost one-third and brought the average price of crude oil and equivalents in western Canada to approximately $3.80 to $3.85 at the wellhead or $4 at Edmonton.

The government's request to the oil industry on September 4 of last year was voluntarily to maintain this average price of crude oil in western Canada and hence the prices of products produced from this crude oil. At that time the government acknowledged that for those refiners dependent on imported oil no such over-all restraint would be possible, and that they would be allowed to pass on documented and approved crude cost increases in the form of higher prices.

When the freeze was instituted, product prices immediately east of the Ottawa Valley line were one cent and two cents lower than those in the west. Eastern gasoline and heating oil prices were permitted to rise by an average of two cents on November 1 and an additional average of five cents on December 1 for which the major tax increases of October 16 in the Middle East and November 1 in Venezuela were principally responsible. These product price movements led to a five cent to six cent differential which has existed in markets served by imported oil since December 1 and will continue to exist until approximately May 15. I will return at a future stage to the events that will occur on or about that date.

Having frozen domestic crude oil prices at $4 at Edmonton, the government was next advised by the National Energy Board in mid-September that continuing increases in international oil prices implied that sales of Canadian crude oil on a $4 basis in United States markets would no longer be just and reasonable nor in the Canadian interest. Rather than permit the industry in Canada to attempt to manage a two-price system from which the benefits would flow exclusively to the industry, the government's immediate response was to give notice that it would seek the approval of this House to levy an export tax equal to the difference between the value of Canadian crude oil delivered in the United States and the average price of all imported oil prevailing in these markets. The export tax, the manner of its imposition and the disposition of its proceeds are now, I am sure, sufficiently well understood, at least as that regime has operated until March 31 of this year, that I need not dwell on it further for the moment.

Nor will I dwell at any length on other developments through this period except to note that government thinking and policy took two broad directions as a result of the exposure of one-half of our country to the increasing difficulties of international oil supply and pricing. The first of these directions was to carry on a very intensive and searching review of Canadian policy with respect to all energy sources. This review led to a series of federal positions which were laid before the first ministers' conference on energy and which have resulted in a continuing and fruitful interchange with provincial authorities in the development of major initiatives in nuclear energy, coal and hydro-electric development and transmission. The second direction was to focus on Canada's oil and gas systems which led, through extensive federal-provincial consultation and the first ministers' conference on energy in January, to the final agreement reached by the first ministers on March 27.

I have already described the origins of the export tax. The imposition of an additional $4 in tax by OPEC countries on January 1, 1974 led quickly to the major decision not to pursue international prices as the pricing norm for Canada. This in turn led to the recognition that, if eastern Canada were to be cushioned from these international prices, then a cost compensation program would be necessary. Finally, the combination of an independent Canadian price and a willingness to pay cost compensation demanded the establishment of a one-price policy country-wide and the eventual elimination of the price differentials that had come to exist between eastern and western Canada.

The most essential element in the establishment of these policies was to settle upon a rational crude oil pricing policy for Canada that would be equitable to both producing and consuming interests and, in the longer term, in the best interest of Canadians. The federal government's central position has been that this price must be such as to ensure the development of Canada's further potential resources, whether in tar sands or frontier areas. We have recognized that the notion of a price which would continue to encourage these developments was conceptually clear but that such a price was and is in fact determined by a host of interdependent factors, many and perhaps most of which are difficult to assess with precision.

We recognized from the outset that reasonable men would differ in their estimate of this price and that a consensus about it would only emerge from an intensive process of analysis and discussion. We recognized, of course, also that the level of this price had major implications for producing provinces and their right to a return from this depleting resource to ensure their continuing development and prosperity. At the same time a very substantive upward movement in price would represent a very major transfer of income from consumers of Canadian oil. We have always been mindful as well of the consequences for the Canadian economy of a sharp advance in the price of crude oil and the structural readjustments and inflationary problems it would pose.

In retrospect, while the differences that have emerged in this consultative process have occasionally seemed sharp and irreconcilable, I would like to join with the Prime Minister in asserting that federalism triumphed in reaching a solution to a problem which was at its heart a matter of relative equities and sharing within our country.

An hon. Member: Thank God for Alberta.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank God for Alberta, sir, and for the other nine provinces. My presentation to the first ministers' conference in January and the table of a possible distribution of costs and benefits which I presented at that time have in fact set the pattern within which this solution was reached. That pattern assures a restrained price to consumers, an increase in return to producing provinces, a limitation on increase in general equalization payments which would otherwise have fallen on the general taxpayer, and a specialized kind of equalization; that is, the oil-cost cushion for the benefit of eastern Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

● (1520)

Let me now move to the agreements which were reached among the first ministers on March 27 and, in the process, I hope, clear up any misunderstandings which may yet remain in respect of the policy which will be followed in this country over the next 12 to 15-month period.

In a matter as technically complex as oil which flows from many origins and in many qualities it is always risky to speak of averages. Averages may be struck at various times and various places and produce very different results. In continuously speaking of the frozen price of western crude as having an average value of $4 we have always tried to be clear that this average was struck with regard to oil at Edmonton. Embraced within this definition of oil is conventional crude, synthetic crude oil and two naptha-like liquids called condensate and pentanes plus which are most frequently blended in the crude stream which flows from Edmonton.

We have always tried also to be clear that this average if struck at the well-head broadly defined and not at Edmonton would approximate $3.85. The difference between these two figures represents the average gathering charges to move oil from its source to its major gathering points.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his statement to the press on the evening of March 27, and in his statement to this House on March 28, made it quite clear that the agreement specified a $6.50 average well-head price. A further explanation of the details to the House generally was interrupted by hon. members, but the Prime Minister explained these to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

On March 28 Premier Lougheed announced his understanding of a $6.50 well-head price as involving an increase of $2.70, apparently basing his calculations on conventional crude prices alone. I regret that there was no consultation with us because quite frankly our own estimate of the amount needed to be added on to achieve a $6.50 average well-head price was $2.65. We recognize that a precise measure of this average is difficult to arrive at for the reasons I have already mentioned, though we would have liked an opportunity to consult further with Alberta officials in order to remove all misunderstanding. We have, however, acknowledged in this House that the difference between $2.70 and $2.65 arises from a misunderstanding, but it is not a point fundamental to the major policy understanding accepted by the premiers on March 27 last and, therefore, not an issue which we wish to press further at this time.

In summary then, all western crude and equivalent prices rose by $2.70 on April 1, leading to an average price of $6.70 based on Edmonton and $7.20 delivered in Toronto. Given our intention to zone the major markets in Toronto and Montreal for crude pricing purposes when the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline is in place, we are also employing $7.20 as the basic price in Montreal on which cost compensation will be paid. As the House is aware, I have asked the industry to refrain from passing on these higher crude costs in higher product prices until a substantial proportion of their lower cost inventories have been worked off. In 45 days, however, product prices may be expected to rise by approximately eight cents west of the old Ottawa Valley line and three cents east of that line to establish approximate product price equality in Montreal and Toronto on that date.

First ministers also agreed that the federal government should receive all of the proceeds from export charges on oil in order to permit it to provide the substantial amount of cost compensation which will be required in eastern Canada to maintain the one-price concept. In committee, I shall provide this House with estimates of the sums involved.

I would note at this time that the petroleum export charge section of the legislation before us today proposes the levy of an export charge on both the broad definition of crude oil as defined under the Export Tax Act and on oil products to be specified by regulation. The absence of a charge on products has meant that exports in that form have not borne their share of taxation. Now that an agreement has been reached for 12 to 15 months and the major principles of a national oil policy have been laid in place it is important to move to close this possible loophole of tax avoidance.

Finally, I should like to give the House notice that I shall be moving in committee to amend the $4.20 export charge for April to read $4. The $4.20 recorded in the legislation was arrived at when we were basing our calculations on the averaged price for oil at Edmonton. These calculations will now be made on an averaged well-head price which does not include transportation charges for delivery to Edmonton.

Part II of this act entitled "Domestic Oil Price Restraint" legislates a federal authority over crude oil pricing in interprovincial and export trade and provides the mechanism by which the agreement reached with the provinces can be ratified by the federal government.

Part III of the act, which we do not intend to proclaim at this time, provides a solely federal mechanism for maintaining control of crude prices in interprovincial and export trade should it at some time be required. This could happen if challenges to provincial legislation by private litigants, like those now in the courts, are successful or in other ways such as the failure of agreement on prices in the future. In these or similar eventualities it will be essential to have a federal mechanism which can take the place of provisions under Part II.

Parts IV and V set forth the terms, conditions and measures by which the Energy Supplies Allocation Board will act as the government's agent in administering the import cost compensation program. As the House is aware, shipments of crude oil eligible for compensation into early March have been covered by supplementary vote in the fiscal year 1973-74 and the program is being administered by my department. The legislation before the House today provides a transitional mechanism to permit the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to assume obligations arising out of the first quarter but not covered by the supplementary vote.

The governor in council will this week approve regulations with regard to the earlier period which will limit the amount of compensation that will be paid for identifiable increases in post-government taxes, increased bunker costs of transport and a provision for retroactive increases in cost which may occur as a result of increasing host government ownership of the producing companies.

It is the government's intention, as will be clear from the legislation, to embody this same set of principles in providing compensation after April 1. I would remind the House that at the present time the federal government has no power, nor does it intend to seek power, to control product prices down to the retail level. Several provinces have already acted to cushion the effect on consumers at the retail level. Nonetheless, extensive monitoring and auditing provisions are provided under this legislation to ensure that refiners who receive compensation are following wholesale pricing practices which are consistent with this compensation.

I would only conclude by saying that this is a very important piece of legislation in the evolution of national oil policy. It provides the legislative support which will be required to maintain these national policies, national policies which as I have said have received the concurrence of all the provinces and, I believe, of the Canadian people generally.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I join with the minister at the outset of my remarks in saying how glad we were to see the first ministers arrive at some form of consensus. That does not mean necessarily that we approve of everything in that consensus. I believe this is one of the few occasions when the first ministers did get together and work out a form of agreement, but what bludgeons, what blackmail, what advantages, what favours or what anaesthetics were administered during that meeting I do not know. At least it was a meeting which resulted in some decisions being arrived at, and I am glad for that reason.

I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, to members of this House that it is our view, and certainly it is mine, that merely because the provincial and federal governments arrived at a decision is no reason that this House, this parliament and certainly not this party should rubber-stamp and accept without challenge, without examination and without the closest possible legal study, the results which were arrived at. We must ensure that the results which were in fact arrived at at that meeting are implemented in this legislation.

● (1530)

The minister quite glibly told us that everything in this bill is the result of the federal-provincial conference. We are not so sure about that. My friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) asked a very searching question today. As I think was his duty, not knowing what the answer would be, he asked the minister whether there had been discussions with the provinces following the first ministers' conference and whether this bill in fact represents the views they have considering what should be in the bill as a result of their discussions. The minister did not answer that question. He could not answer it. In fact he said that they decided in cabinet what would be done, implemented it in legislative form, brought it down and gave it first reading. Now, it is up to the provinces to look at it and decide. As a result, it will be our intention to make very certain during the committee meetings before this bill receives final approval, and certainly before it receives third reading, that there is ample opportunity for the provincial representatives and others to examine the legislation to make certain it in fact contains the arrangement arrived at at this first minister's conference.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member a question? Is he suggesting, as the hon. member for Calgary North suggested, that we ought to have departed from the long standing practice in this House and shown the bill to the governments outside the House before we gave it first reading.

Mr. Baldwin: My hon. friend has been around here long enough to know that I, and the members of this party, have too great a regard for the rules and traditions of this House to do anything like that, although it might appeal to him and his friends.

I am suggesting that before this bill was brought in for second reading and debate it was the minister's duty to have been in touch with the provincial representatives to ascertain their opinion. He could have told them that this is the bill and before it was brought in for debate he wished to know whether or not they were satisfied that this, in fact, represents in its context the terms of the agreement made. The minister already has indicated that he intends to bring in one amendment at the committee stage. It would have been quite simple for him to have said that he had been in touch with representatives of the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Prince Edward Island and so on and they had given him their opinions about the bill. Perhaps he might have been told that in respect of certain aspects of the legislation there was a variance between what the bill says and what the agreement was, so he might have said it was his intention, having studied it and discussed it with his colleagues, to move certain amendments. That is, I suggest, what the minister should have done.

This is the situation and the minister can drag all the red herrings he wants to into it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Will you answer the question now, please.

Mr. Baldwin: I have answered the question. The minister knows the answer as well as I do. He has been afraid to submit the bill to the provinces to secure their reaction to it before he brought it in for second reading. I want to serve notice on the minister now that it will be a different ball game than it was last winter when he piloted through the House the bill dealing with energy allocation. At that time the minister introduced at the committee stage a very pernicious document which we did not accept then but which, having expressed our disapproval, we did not challenge as we should have to the point of not letting the bill go through the committee. What was employed at that time was the doctrine I call the Macdonald doctrine in respect of committee hearings. Witnesses who appear before any committee who are related to the department and who are, in any sense, advisory to the minister can give only such evidence as may be approved by the minister. They must be under the minister's control while giving evidence.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What about ministerial responsibility?

Mr. Baldwin: In the case of this minister, it is ministerial irresponsibility. He is the most irresponsible minister in this government and that is saying a good deal. I say through you, Mr. Speaker, that this minister will not get away with that. It is our intention, because of the nuances contained in this bill and the measures proposed in it, to make sure at the committee stage that it receives a most thorough and searching scrutiny. This is our duty. This is the reason we are here. All the thumping and screaming by the minister will not deter us one iota from responding to our duty. We will ensure that this bill receives this kind of scrutiny. It will be our intention to make sure that witnesses are called who are essential and that when the departmental witnesses are called for the purpose of finding out facts about the bill they will not hide behind the apron of the minister.

Now, I should like to come back to the point I was making when I was so rudely interrupted by the minister. I was dealing with the question of the federal-provincial conference. I think such conferences are good. They are a vital part of our life. However, I think this House, this Parliament, has a responsibility not to be a rubber-stamp for the decisions of 11 heads of state who gather together like sultans and emperors to decide the destiny of Canada. I appreciate their coming together. I think this is an essential part of the process of government in this country. We must remember, however, that some of these 11 leaders have either just come out of elections or are headed into elections. Since this federal provincial first minister's conference was held there has been one election.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): A successful one.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes. It was a successful election for Mr. Regan and I congratulate him. He was a very distinguished member of this House. Unlike some of the rubber stamps sitting opposite, he was not afraid to get up and challenge the Liberal government when he believed it was wrong. I am sorry that some of the backbenchers of the Liberal Party do not take the lead of the Premier of Nova Scotia, since they know that the government is often wrong.

The point is that one government has had an election and another government plans to hold an election on the 29th of this month. The federal government stands across the way shivering, shaking and trembling in the fear that it will be forced into an election before too long by some unnamed parties in this House which I will not mention at this time. There is nothing wrong with this, but we must remember that when the leaders or the 11 heads of government get together to consider what they propose to do they take into consideration in their calculations what the benefits are to their governments in the prosecution of an election. I think for that and other reasons it is incumbent upon this House, despite the fact that there has been the seal of approval placed upon the agreement, not necessarily upon this bill, to ascertain that the bill does in fact conform with what was agreed upon and then even if it does to consider whether it is good for all parts of Canada. That is our duty and I do not intend to be intimidated by the minister from the exercise of that duty and responsibility.

Let us make a quick analysis of the bill, because I do not think I need to take too long to deal with it. Unlike other bills, it is divided into five parts instead of three. The first part, as the minister told us, deals with the question of the tax or charge. He calls it a petroleum export charge. I do not think the name matters a great deal; it smells just as sweet by any name. Then, parts II and III complement each other and deal with price fixing mechanisms for petroleum and petroleum products in Canada. Part IV deals with the compensation to importers to provide some cushion for consumers in eastern Canada as a result of the high prices which they have had to pay for oil coming in from overseas. Part V, of course, is a procedural section.

I want to say that when you look at all the clauses in the bill you find that some very far-reaching powers and authorities are granted in it to the federal government, powers which I do not think have ever been granted in peacetime to a federal government. I went through the bill and I found that it contains 66 clauses of which two or three are purely functional but 22 give complete discretion to either the government, the governor in council, boards or the minister. In other words, more than one third of the clauses vest in the government substantial uncontrolled discretionary powers. In addition to that, there are four regulation granting clauses which in 24 instances grant the power to the governor in council to act by regulation and order in council. This indicates the very substantial extent to which we are being asked in the bill to trust this government with its sorry and chequered history of starts and stops, reverses, mistakes and errors with regard to the whole problem of petroleum products going years back from the time when this government was asked by members of this party and members of the NDP to look to the future and build a pipeline from western Canada to Montreal. This plea was rejected with laughter and scorn by the Liberal government right up to the most recent mess, the great mystery about the Roumanian oil which has yet to be solved in the House in which the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer)—otherwise known as the minister of everything else—and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) got this country into a pretty sorry pickle as a result of which we will lose some $30 million, $40 million or $50 million dollars.

This is the government which is asking us to calmly and confidently vest in it all these extraordinary powers which are contained and itemized in this bill. This is the government which, in the words of the minister a few minutes ago, had such great prescience in anticipating all the problems with regard to the oil and petroleum industry. What a farce, what a sham for this minister to have the unmitigated gall to rise in the House and say that he and the government have been able to anticipate the twistings, turnings and problems with regard to the petroleum industry in Canada. I think it is shameful for the minister to take that position. As a matter of fact, although I do not have much time, I will go through some of the items because I suspect that the minister would appropriate to himself this degree of perfection in connection with his dealings with petroleum products.

I find the following item in the Toronto Star of May 7 of 1973: "Prime Minister says Ottawa should not control our energy prices". Only a year ago this great Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this great government had the supernatural powers to anticipate what will happen!

I find here another interesting item in the Globe and Mail of November 5, 1973 which reads: "Macdonald denies urging cabinet to buy oil firm". We know all of the comings, goings and leakings which went on at that time about the government wanting to buy one of the great multinational oil firms, taking it over and operating it.

First it was so, then it was not so, and then a statement was issued on Saturday which read as follows:

In a statement issued on Saturday, Mr. Macdonald described as "entirely erroneous" a Globe and Mail report that the cabinet had rejected his proposal to buy either Shell Canada Limited or Gulf Oil Canada Limited. He said no such proposal was placed before cabinet.

There is a different story behind that, I believe.

Then, we have the following item: "Secret cabinet order waters down plans for energy policy". That was the leaked cabinet order by which we learned the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources ascertained that his proposals had been watered down by the federal cabinet and that what he had proposed was not going to be brought about at all.

Then, he was over in Venezuela, and here I have the March 9, 1974 issue of the Winnipeg Free Press in which the following item appears: "Is Ottawa about to copy the Corporacion Venezolana de Petroleo . . ." Perhaps the minister will correct my Spanish. I hope he is better in Spanish than he is on petroleum. It goes on to read:

Energy Minister Donald S. Macdonald, here last October on a whirlwind visit, says definitely no.

They are not going to have a petroleum corporation, he said.

The cabinet discussed the idea before the energy crisis took hold, says our energy minister, and before the Canadian government started to worry about supplies of Venezuelan crude oil going to eastern Canada.

Then we had the great Kafuffle. When the minister comes to the committee, we will let him give evidence. In the light of his record, we will ask him to take an oath before he gives evidence so we will have him tied to the oath in any event.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): More falsehoods from Baldwin.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not know what newspaper the following item is from. I believe it is from the Gazette, and it reads: "Macdonald may be exaggerating to get government projects across".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You wrote it out yourself.

Mr. Baldwin: This must be more than his usual type of exaggeration. The item reads:

Energy Minister Donald Macdonald's sudden focus on Arab threats to eastern Canada's oil supplies may constitute an exaggeration aimed at promoting some of the federal government's favourite petroleum plans.

Perhaps, we should call him the Minister of Energy, Mines, Resources and Exaggeration. The article goes on to read:

The speech, filled with references to "potential crisis" and "possible dangers", had the effect of suggesting two federal government proposals—the removal of the Borden Energy line and formation of a national petroleum corporation may be necessary to avert threats to and preserve Canadian oil imports.

● (1550)

The minister has been the busiest little talking minister except for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Then, we had the great situation about a crisis in eastern Canada, about the short fall in oil coming into the country. The minister pounced on the force majeur clause. He blamed the multinational corporations, and said they were using force majeur. Mr. Speaker, what was it we were looking at then—a 200,000 barrels a day short fall or a 300,000 barrels a day short fall? Of course the minister had not taken the Shaheen refinery into consideration. He was simply interested in generating a head of steam, in making exaggerations and providing distortions so that he could get away with his legislation. That is what he was saying on November 23, 1973, but suddenly he was faced with a telegram sent by J. A. Armstrong, President of Imperial Oil, as follows:

We are disturbed by the implications of your statements in the House of Commons on force majeur as reported in the news media.

Imperial has had no cut-back in its deliveries of crude oil from Venezuelan suppliers nor have we been advised of any cut-back.

Force majeur is a standard clause in supply contracts within Canada and abroad.

In the case of our supply contracts for Venezuelan crude oil we are not aware of any occurrences which would justify a cut-back or re-allocation of our supplies.

Of course, Mr. Armstrong was a witness who appeared before the committee. He praised the bill which the government introduced. He was the government's white haired boy because he and the government got on well at that time—I may say he and some other members—with regard to the deletion of the combines investigation clauses which were then an issue. But then Mr. Armstrong completely cut the feet from under the minister with regard to his statements on force majeur.

I have dozens and dozens of these little billet-doux, Mr. Speaker, but I am not going to take up the time of the House reading them. The fact remains that we in this party on this side of the House are justified, by the track record of the government, in saying that the government is not entitled to be trusted. It must make out a very strong case in order to receive the powers which it is seeking. Its track record of indiscretion, distortion and deception is so substantial that we have come to the stage where we cannot take for granted any statements made by this minister with regard to petroleum problems.

All that will enter into our calculations when we consider what our actions will be with regard to this bill. Now, having disposed of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —I would now like to deal with some aspects of the legislation. Members on the other side may applaud, but I consider those factors to be a vital and integral part of this legislation. Whenever I look at this legislation and see that the minister will have the power to do this and the discretion to do that, and I see the minister in effect sitting in the centre of the bill, with his record for false dealing, his incapacity and inability to deal with what happened, the deceptions he has practiced, albeit quite involuntary, more from ignorance than anything else, I say that we cannot separate this minister from this bill in our approach to it, nor do we intend to do so.

An hon. Member: He should resign.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not think the minister should resign. I think he should be compelled to live with the mess he is creating. I think that would serve him right.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): And your colleagues are compelled to live with you.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I may have to ask you to protect me from the minister's remarks.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Tell us why you were fired from your job.

Mr. Baldwin: I would have preferred if the minister had introduced Parts I and IV of the bill dealing with the imposition of the charge and compensation payments. So far as we are concerned they could be passed fairly rapidly, submitted to committee of the whole, and completed. They have been the subject of practice and precedent. If my recollection is correct the minister and the government have engaged in the imposition of the charge for four months without benefit of legislation, and for several months the government has paid the subsidy without benefit of legislation. With some scrutiny, some changes and some recommendations, Parts I and IV might have gone through rapidly if they had been separated from the rest of the legislation. However, the government has not seen fit to do so. That is its practice, and of course it has that right. But the other parts of the bill warrant far more detailed study in the House and, so far as we in this party are concerned, we will see they get that.

Now, dealing with Part I, this export tax or charge is a comparatively recent phenomenon, at least to the large extent to which it is being engaged in presently by this country and other countries. We are not going to challenge it. We are not going to vote against it. However, I think I would be wrong if I did not call attention to some of the potential dangers regarding a charge of this kind, and if I did not speak about the entire philosophy of the export tax, its morality, and its being a double edged sword. Where does it stop?

All over the world we hear talk of other countries, producing commodities which are in short supply, feeling free to engage in a form of international arrangement, such as the OPEC countries have, denying the world a full, assured supply of those commodities. The Arab OPEC countries were the first to raise this question. Maybe they had a point. I could understand them when they said that all the civilized countries of the world were gripped in inflation, and they would meet that inflation by imposing higher charges for petroleum products from their countries, petroleum which was in decreasing supply and which cannot be self-perpetuating. The Arab countries said to the western world, "Search yourselves. Find ways and means of dealing with inflation. Then, we will give some thought to reducing the cost of our petroleum products." I think that needed to be said, but we have to be aware of the effect on international inflation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) shrug their shoulders and say, "We cannot deal with inflation in Canada. It is worldwide in scope." That may be true enough in part, but there are substantial elements of it within Canadian control, just as there are substantial elements within the control of OPEC countries and within the control of other countries.

If all the countries of the world took the same position as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and said, "This is worldwide. We cannot touch it," that would constitute a very serious admission that inflation lies entirely outside the control of mankind. I do not think that is right. I think man has the capacity and ability on a co-operative basis, both nationally and internationally, to deal with the problem of inflation. I am not going to take exception to what is being done here, but I do say that at the time of passage of this particular part of the bill we should give serious concern to what could happen to the world with a series of export charges levied by producing countries, the combined effect of which could be felt not only in Canada directly but in an indirect way through the cost of the products which ultimately come to this country.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker, I like to think that neither I nor my party have any quarrel with the principle that sudden, unexpected and unusual, windfall profits which accrue to companies should be shared by society. However, that statement has to be taken in conjunction with our belief in free, private initiative and enterprise as the best way to develop this country. We believe that such charges must take into calculation the need to provide for continuation of these companies in business and to provide them with adequate funds to carry on exploration, development, refining and marketing of their product. It then becomes a question of sharing those windfall profits but to the extent that they constitute an unearned increment, then I think the state is entitled to share in them. For that reason this party will not challenge this aspect of the legislation. The whole question of unearned income has not been given enough thought in this regard or in regard to a number of other things.

We are in a desperate position in this country with regard to the sale of land because we have allowed such sales without taking into account that there are substantial unearned increments involved which should belong to the state. But certainly you must give, and in doing so it must be contemporaneous with giving to the private sector, the tools and weapons to do the work that they can do better than the public or government. I refer to the things which attract them and, in this particular aspect context, I refer to the exploration, the development, refining and marketing of petroleum products. We have no objection to that. We are concerned to some extent with the way the clauses are drawn which give effect to that proposal.

Part of the clauses I refer to give very wide and vast powers of discretion to the government in dealing with exemption from this charge. For example, clause 11 in Part I provides that the Governor in Council can, on being advised by the board that it is in the public interest to do so, either generally or in respect of a single transaction, exempt any exportation of oil from the charge imposed thereon in respect of any month. Now, by Part I, after the month of April has elapsed, we are giving to the government the power to impose a charge of up to $8 per barrel, solely within the discretion of the government flowing from rudimentary and wide terms of reference. At the same time we are giving the government the power to exempt imposition of that export charge.

I recognize that it is neither possible, feasible nor wise, to bring back legislation of this kind and have it dealt with two or three times per year, but I am going to suggest that when we are forced to give that kind of discretionary power to a government, including the right to give exemptions, there should be an accounting to this House. It is not good enough that once a year the minister brings in a report which may come 1½ years after the event. I would like to think that during the committee hearing our party would propose an amendment whereby the boards involved in this legislation, and the minister, will be required to account to a committee of this House charged with a special responsibility with regard to legislation of this kind. This would permit the people of Canada, acting through members of this House, by a committee, to examine, for example, why charges have been fixed at a certain rate; and, if the government sees fit to give exemption of one company or one type of petroleum product for a substantial sum, why this was done. I am not saying that the government would act illegally or unwisely but I suggest that it is a far, far better thing for a government to know that it will be subject to close and searching examination by a committee of this House from time to time as to the use of the uncontrolled, discretionary powers of this House.

The same generally applies to Part IV of this bill, the import cost compensation. This is a discretionary amount and is covered in clauses 51, 52 and 53. Clause 51 says that the import cost compensation may be paid to an eligible importer. He is defined as a person who at a certain stage has voluntarily maintained a level of prices for petroleum products obtained from imported petroleum at the level suggested in prescribed manner, and so on. Clause 54 goes on to say that there may be special cases where in the discretion of the board which has been indicated to the government of Canada that:

> . . . the board may, if it is of the opinion, that it is in the public interest to do so, recommend to the government of Canada that an additional amount of compensation be authorized for the importer in respect of that petroleum.

There may be some cases where that is justified, but I would think that where you give to any government the power to impose a tax at a fixed rate, but a flexible tax, at its discretion, a tax which may vary from month to month and at the same time give to that government the right to exempt certain people from the effect of that tax, then the House should retain some form of supervision over what is done.

Let me deal briefly with Parts II and III of the bill, Mr. Speaker. Those are the parts which constitute the price fixing mechanism. The government and the minister may call it what they want, but there is no doubt that this is a mechanism for fixing prices in Canada with regard to petroleum products. It is set out quite clearly in clause 20 as follows:

> The purpose of this part is to provide legislative authority for measures that will, so far as may be practicable, enable the government of Canada
> (a) to achieve a uniform price,—

That is a laudable objective. I am not quarrelling with it and I am not going to challenge it on a constitutional ground but I point out to the minister, to the government and to members of this House that there are very grave doubts about how far a federal government may go in establishing, through these means, a price fixing mechanism in this country. This House is not the forum for dealing with constitutional cases and I do not want to do so, but it is possible that those aspects of the bill may be challenged at some time. It seems to me, however, and this is purely a private opinion, that there were other mechanisms which might have been adopted.

Price fixing lies exclusively within provincial jurisdiction. Just thinking out loud, for the life of me I cannot see why the consuming provinces do not take upon themselves the responsibility of establishing a price which they consider to be, in effect, the price fixed by the agreement. The agreement was made; they arrived at a price. Say the $6.70 which the minister referred to was a reasonable price, now the minister and the government have seen fit to introduce federal legislation of some doubtful constitutional character. I think there were other means by which it could have been done. Certainly, the province could have done it and it could not have been challenged. It is certainly in the interests of the consuming provinces to implement the federal-provincial agreement in a legislative form or, if they desire, in another form. There are suggestions in this bill. Clauses 21 and 22 state an agreement can be arrived at between the federal and provincial governments. It goes on to state that agreement will be implemented.

It is well-known constitutional law that one government cannot delegate authority to another government. That was held in one case in particular dealing with a marketing board in Prince Edward Island. Dickens said the law is an ass. Probably it is at times. However, the Supreme Court went on to say you can delegate to a Crown corporation or an emanation of the government. If the federal government and the provincial governments arrived at a reasonable arrangement which they found acceptable, if they arrived at a mechanism whereby they did not see fit to consider the establishment of a Crown corporation, an emanation or a board, it would have the right to receive from both federal and provincial authorities the jurisdiction it requires to exercise this price fixing mechanism. I point that out as I go through and look at these sections.

There is someone else complaining about the government.

An hon. Member: They are complaining about your speech.

Mr. Baldwin: Even the young ones know enough to cry about this minister.

Mr. Lefebvre: You either put them to sleep or make them cry.

Mr. Baldwin: Unless the Prime Minister acquires enough courage overseas to send us about other business when he comes back, I suggest that during the Easter recess hon. members look at clauses 22, 23, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41 and 42.

In interpreting legislation, you take the whole context of the bill to see exactly what it is designed to do. If I were asked to argue this in a constitutional court, it would be my opinion that there would be grave reasons to believe that the act would fall short of being what it ought to be constitutionally. However, we are not going to challenge it on that ground. This is not the place or the time. We will look at it in committee. We will ask that witnesses be brought before the committee. We hope there will be witnesses from the Department of Justice. We hope there will be representatives from the provinces as well as other people who are involved in this. The consumers are vitally interested and the taxpayers are interested.

This bill deserves the most searching and closest scrutiny before being passed. It is our intention to ensure that before the legislation gets through the committee, it will have that kind of study. We feel we will not have discharged our duty if we do not make sure we take the lead in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this measure, Bill C-18, is very complex. As hon. members have stated, it consists of five parts. Part I deals with the imposition of the export charge. Part II gives statutory expression to the agreement which was reached at the first ministers conference on Wednesday, March 27.

Part III is to be the sword of Damocles which will hang over the heads of the oil-producing provinces. If they do not reach a voluntary agreement by June 30, 1975, Part III can be proclaimed and the federal government will have the power to set the price for oil. I think that ultimately the federal government must have such power. Whether passing such a provision now is going to create the most friendly atmosphere in which negotiations can be carried on, I very much doubt.

Part IV provides for compensation to the companies for oil imported into eastern Canada. Part V is merely a general section dealing with inspection and penalties for non-compliance. Actually, Part I of this bill is a tax act. The other parts have to do with price fixing and a basis for payments of compensation.

I hope that the minister and the House will give some thought whether or not the whole bill should be treated as a tax bill. If I understood the speaker correctly when he was proposing the bill, he said it would go to committee of the whole. This will preclude the calling of witnesses. It will preclude a detailed examination by a committee which will have more time than the committee of the whole. Therefore, I hope the government and the House will give consideration to sending this bill to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

One can only examine this bill if one does so within the framework of a national oil policy. We have been waiting for a long time for a statement from the government on a national oil policy. We have been promised it for a long time. Last June we finally got the first volume of a national policy. It was an analysis, not containing recommendations with respect to an oil policy. We have had great difficulty knowing what is the government's oil policy.

I want to make clear that as far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, we have stated in this House and have presented resolutions to the House setting forth what we think ought to be the major planks in a national oil policy.

As early as January 9, 1973, we were pressing the government for export controls on crude oil. On Monday, May 28, I introduced a motion on behalf of the New Democratic Party. In that motion and the debate that followed, we asked the government to place export controls on crude oil and petroleum products. We asked for the establishment of a two-price system for crude oil and petroleum products. We asked for an export tax which would take into the public treasury of the federal and provincial governments the difference between the domestic price and the export price. We called for the removal of the Borden Line through the Ottawa Valley.

On October 25, another allotted day, I moved on behalf of this party a resolution calling for a national petroleum company that would be the sole purchaser of both domestically produced oil and imported oil. We pressed for the extension of the oil pipeline to eastern Canada and the bringing of the Interprovincial Pipeline under federal ownership. We also pressed the federal government to enter into negotiations with the government of oil producing provinces with a view to developing, if agreeable, the oil sands under a joint federal-provincial Crown corporation.

The first thing I want to say about this bill is that it is a very firm commitment to a two-price system for oil. While one may disagree with some of the methods proposed—and I certainly disagree with some of the means by which the government proposes to implement this agreement—I think the government is to be commended for taking these steps, which began on November 4, 1973 to implement a two-price system in Canada.

This raises the whole question as to why a two-price system is not to be applied to other Canadian resource materials whose prices are also being escalated by world demand. I think most people in western Canada support the principle of a two-price system. But surely they have some justification when they complain that the only two commodities which are subject to a two-price system are oil and wheat, the two commodities upon which they depend for a very large part of their income.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Copper.

Mr. Douglas: The minister says, copper. Yes, I think there is some restriction applied to copper but as I recollect there is no export tax to take up the price differential, so it does not help very much.

We have talked a great deal in this House about inflation. Inflation is undoubtedly a major problem affecting every country in the world. No nation has been able to develop an antibiotic which will cure this contagious infection but some nations have been able to cushion the shock of rising prices better than others. We all recognize we cannot control the prices of goods imported into this country, goods we do not produce here—citrus fruits, bauxite, coffee, natural rubber and so on. But we can protect Canadian consumers against the escalating prices of materials produced in this country, particularly those goods in respect of which world demand is pushing prices far beyond a reasonable return to those who produce them.

One of the reasons I differ from hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party when they talk about a price freeze across the board, is this: if you freeze the price of lumber the main result will be that Canadians will not get any lumber, because if the world price is higher than the price you have fixed the lumber will go out of the country. If we intend to grapple with inflation in this country we should be prepared to treat a number of other commodities in the same way as we propose to treat oil under the legislation before us, that is to impose export controls, fix a domestic price, sell at the world price and pick up for the public treasury the differential between the two prices.

The second matter I wish to discuss arising from this legislation is the pricing policy established in parts of II and III of the bill. The position of the New Democratic Party has been that there is absolutely no justification for giving the oil companies returns higher than those they are now receiving. Prior to the price freeze on September 4 last, the oil companies had already increased their price by approximately one dollar a barrel. This brought them additional revenue amounting to more than $700 million a year. That they are not suffering is shown by the fact that in 1973 they increased their profits by approximately 46 per cent as compared with 1972. One company, for instance, Shell Oil, increased its profits by 58 per cent. Throughout this discussion the NDP has emphasized that the only justification for increasing oil prices is the need to provide funds to federal and provincial governments to enable them to develop new sources of oil so as to ensure adequate supplies when our present proven reserves are exhausted. We believe consumers would not mind being called upon to pay a little more for gasoline and home heating oil if by doing so they could be assured of future supplies at reasonable prices, and knowing they would not be left at the tender mercies of the oil exporting countries and the multinational corporations. But there is nothing in the legislation before us to ensure that the additional funds being received from Canadians will be used for the development of our resources by Canadians, for Canadians.

Reading some newspaper editorials one gathers the impression that the increase of $2.50 a barrel proposed as a result of the first ministers conference constitutes a rip-off on the part of the oil producing provinces. Let me point out that the oil producing provinces will be no better off under the pricing system proposed in this bill than they were under the voluntary agreement which expired on March 31. For instance, Saskatchewan was getting $5 a barrel. In addition, the province was receiving 50 per cent of the export tax, which worked out at approximately $1.60 averaged over their entire production. This gave the province $6.60 a barrel. Now, they are to get $6.50 a barrel. The government of Saskatchewan has set up a petroleum company which purchases the oil from the producers. It is going to pay the oil companies $3.38 a barrel. The difference between that amount and the $6.50 will go into the treasury to give the government the necessary capital for the development of oil supplies which have not yet been fully exploited, and for exploration to discover new sources.

The Province of Alberta was getting $4 a barrel for its oil. It received $1.60 as its share of the export tax, which brought the price up to $5.60. It would now get $6.50. But the Province of Alberta is sharing the $2.50 increase with the oil companies, the government taking 65 per cent and the oil companies 35 per cent. In other words, the oil companies will get 88 cents and the government of Alberta will get $1.62. This will mean an increase in revenue for the oil companies in Alberta of approximately $525 million a year, not counting some of the additional concessions which the minister now appears to be giving them.

On March 27, announcing that this agreement had been reached, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said: "This is a great day for Canadian federalism". I suggest it was a great day for the multinational oil companies. They are going to do very well out of this agreement.

● (1630)

Today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that there has been a good deal of confusion as to what the price would be under this agreement. I do not know anybody who has been more confused than the minister. When the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) met the press at a press conference on March 27, the following question by the press, which I take from the transcript, was asked:

—what does this mean in terms of domestic price increases for home heating oil and also for gasoline at the gas station?

The minister replied:

—basically in terms of feedstock, we're talking 7 cents west of the Ottawa Valley line and I would think the price should probably remain flat in Montreal and in the east.

It did not remain flat for very long, Mr. Speaker. The next day the minister announced that the price increase would be seven cents per gallon west of the Ottawa Valley and three cents a gallon east of the Ottawa Valley. At the same time the minister sent out a Telex to the oil industry in which he told them that the government was prepared to allow them to raise their retail prices to cover any increased cost of refining, etc.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Wholesale prices.

Mr. Douglas: I am sorry, wholesale prices, which of course would be reflected in the retail prices. The oil companies then began talking about increasing their price by two cents a gallon for gasoline and home heating oil, despite the fact that the minister said that the estimate of his department was that all the increase that would be warranted would be one-half cent per gallon.

On being questioned in the House the minister went on to say that the government did not propose to scrutinize these price increases in advance but would require the oil companies to justify them. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what that means. If the oil companies decide that their increased costs warrant an increase of two cents per gallon for gasoline and home heating oil and the minister asks them to justify it, they are very good at justifying increases. They can confuse the minister and the National Energy Board, and they have done so many times. But even if it is found that the increase was not justified, and if after long examination they are told that that two cents per gallon was too much, what good does this do the consumer who has already paid the increase in the price of gasoline and home heating oil?

To make the picture even more confused, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources admits that it omitted in its calculations to include non-conventional oil and the gathering charges that must be added. Already Alberta is selling its oil at $6.70 basis Edmonton. This means that the price in Vancouver, in Toronto and Montreal will be approximately $7.20, not the $7 that the minister was talking about on March 28. In other words, when the present feedstocks are exhausted, the consumers of this country are going to experience an increase in the price of gasoline and home heating fuel of anywhere from 10 cents to 12 cents a gallon west of the Ottawa Valley and five cents to seven cents a gallon east of the Ottawa Valley.

One of the strange things about this pricing mechanism is that we are being asked to approve it although there is no written agreement. Clause 21 of the bill makes reference to an agreement, but goes on to provide that the agreement need not be expressed in any formal document, that the agreement can be contained in reciprocal orders in council. We can discuss this matter later, but I want to point out now that neither this House nor any committee of this House should be asked to pass legislation giving authority to the government to impose a price mechanism on the basis of an agreement that we have not seen and of reciprocal orders in council that have not been tabled. This I hope the minister will do before this bill is dealt with any further.

The fact is that the oil provinces have not gained by this increase of $2.50 per barrel. As I have said, the province of Saskatchewan will be getting slightly less than it was getting before. I believe the government could have kept the price of gasoline and home heating fuels down for the consumers of Canada by giving to the producing provinces a lower price and part of the revenue received from the export charge. The government could quite easily set the price at $5 per barrel, which would have meant an increase of only three cents a gallon for gasoline and home heating fuel, and given the provinces a share of the export tax. Of course, had the government done this it would have meant less revenue for the federal government and a good deal less revenue for the multinational oil companies that control over 90 per cent of the oil business in this country.

The third matter I want to turn to is Part IV of the bill which provides for payments to the oil industry to compensate them for the cost of oil imported into eastern Canada. The New Democratic Party has all along favoured an equalized price across Canada, plus transportation costs, but I must say I have very serious reservations about the manner in which the government is seeking to do this. I do not believe that the burden for equalizing prices should be placed entirely upon the oil consumers, especially where the price of oil enters into the cost of production of farmers, fishermen, the trucking industry and many other groups.

[Mr. Douglas.]

This tax to compensate the oil companies bears no relationship whatsoever to ability to pay. The mere fact that farmers consume per capita more petroleum products than any other group in the country, that fishermen have to buy large quantities of oil, that men in my constituency have to drive 50 to 60 miles to logging camps and sawmills every day, that dock workers have to buy gasoline to enable them to move from port to port, has no relationship to the ability of these workers to pay. The burden of financing compensation in order to have an equalized price across Canada should not fall on any single class of person or on any specific region of Canada but ought to be spread across all of Canada and based upon the ability to pay. The purpose of this provision is to enable the government to pay the oil companies for imported oil which, of course, will be much more expensive than the $6.50 price being fixed by this legislation. The minister says it will cost $1.4 billion.

● (1640)

It is interesting to see how the oil companies are to be compensated. They are to be compensated first of all for increased costs attributable to increased taxes or royalties imposed by producing oil countries. Secondly, they are to be compensated for increased costs attributable to increased participation costs imposed by producing countries and, finally, they are to be compensated for increased tanker costs.

What this parliament is being asked to do is undertake to pay the oil industry for increased costs that are completely beyond Canadian control and, even more seriously, completely beyond our ability to inspect, the books of the foreign companies, to find out whether these costs are genuine or fictitious. This legislation could be an open invitation to oil producing countries to raise their royalties and impose participation costs. Many of the oil companies own their own tankers, and this could be an invitation to raise, on their books at least, the transportation costs. In my opinion this provision could prove to be the greatest rip-off since the CPR went on government welfare. When I consider the business acumen which has been displayed by the Gold Dust twins in negotiating the purchase of home heating oil I shudder to think of the fleecing which the Canadian taxpayer could receive from an industry that is already bloated with the profits it has made out of this so-called oil crisis.

The NDP has constantly advocated the setting up of a national petroleum company to be the sole purchaser of both domestic and imported oil. We have urged the government to enter into bilateral agreements with oil producing countries so as to avoid the kind of rip-off which all too apparently could be possible under this legislation.

The government is being compelled to raise the price of oil for all Canadian consumers so as to compensate the oil companies for standardizing prices in eastern Canada. The consumers of this country are being asked to pay for the mistakes of succeeding governments in following a policy for years of exporting half of our oil to the United States and leaving eastern Canada without an assured supply of oil, completely at the tender mercies of the oil producing countries and the multinational oil corporations. The chickens have come home to roost and it is the Canadian consumer who is now going to be asked to feed them.

In conclusion, let me say that there is nothing in this legislation which will prepare Canada for the real oil crisis that we will face within the next decade. We are dealing with a diminishing asset whose life index is only 10 or 12 years. We want to know in this setup as envisaged in Bill C-18 what role there is for the national petroleum company the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced on December 6 last. Will it have any role in marketing? Will it have any role in developing south of the 60th parallel, or is it to be restricted to birddogging for the multi-national oil companies by using tax dollars for research and for exploration, turning its findings over to the oil industry? From the minister's explanation so far one gathers that the national petroleum company, if it sees the light of day, will be largely peripheral and will have no really effective role to play in the oil policy this government is evolving on a hit-and-miss basis.

What is the government's policy for developing the oil sands and heavy oil in western Canada? The amount of money being made available to the oil producing provinces under this legislation will not enable those provinces to develop those oil sands. How do we propose to develop them? Is it proposed that we develop them in the same way we developed the conventional oil fields, allowing the multi-national companies to come in and take the oil so that we lose control of it, or has the government some other plan in mind? I am told that last fall Mr. Herman Kahn of the Hudson Institute had at least one or two meetings with government to sell his idea of borrowing $20 billion in foreign capital to build 10 plants in the Athabasca oil sands, and to pay back that $20 billion, plus interest, I assume, in oil. This means that we are proposing out of the Athabasca oil sands to earmark between $20 billion and $30 billion worth of oil to foreign countries without any regard to our own needs or the future needs of our children.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Right on.

Mr. Douglas: At first, of course, we did not take this very seriously because one is used to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) having more enthusiasm than he can properly manage, but when the Prime Minister stands up and says he has authorized the minister of odds and ends to investigate and look into this proposal, then I become very much concerned. In the meantime, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), who knows more about the subject than either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Supply and Services, sits back in embarrassed silence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Take a bow.

Mr. Douglas: I want to express my concern and the concern of this party for the future oil development of this country. At the same time the government is being inexplicably silent about the development of the oil sands, who is going to develop them, under whose auspices and under what control, it is speaking out most forthrightly about building the Mackenzie gas pipeline.

The minister says we have not made up their minds and it will depend on the report of the National Energy Board, but the fact remains that two emanations of the Crown, the Canadian National Railway system and the Canada Development Corporation are financially involved. Are they financially involved unless there is already some commitment within the government, and what is this commitment; to build a pipeline that will cost $5.7 billion, and probably more, in order to take Alaskan and Canadian gas to the United States, not because we need gas at the present time. If that is not a continental energy policy, then it is suspiciously like one, and I think this House and this country should be warned that we are the trustees of the vast petroleum and gas resources of this country which have been entrusted to our care. The average citizen has no power to control what can be done with their resources. Parliament can give them away. Parliament and legislatures have given them away in the past. If we serve posterity by following the kind of policies now being proposed, in respect of oil and gas, then we will deserve the condemnation of generations yet to come.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): When dealing with this bill, Mr. Speaker, we must take into account a number of factors and make a number of reserves. Actually, this bill must be seen from a definite point of view, for without the so-called energy crisis, repeat, the so-called energy crisis, this bill would not be before us today.

As it has been demonstrated that this energy crisis was no crisis at all, we are justified in asking whether the government is not rushing us a little into drafting control acts, for this is a factor which must be taken into account. It is always dangerous to increase government control over the activities of a country, whether these activities are being carried out on the economic, financial, industrial or merely human level, and we must always proceed with care.

We understand that the government has a role to play and that it should play it. We understand quite well the good intentions of the government and the minister in particular with respect to this bill. However, the goal to reach for is a single price across Canada. Various pieces of legislation are brought in to do that. One should wonder if that equality in prices is nothing more than a pretence to do something else.

In all that business of the energy crisis, the oil crisis in particular, it seems we can now conclude that the great benefiters, if not the only ones, are multinational oil companies that managed to increase their prices in an entirely artificial way—and I stress, Mr. Speaker, in an entirely artificial way. It is a well known fact that the situation created by Arab countries in particular was entirely fabricated. That could only be temporary because sooner or later those countries would be interested in selling their oil. For some of those countries that natural resource is their single and only source of income.

In view of the situation a bill of this kind must be considered in a critical, and also positive, way. Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to know exactly where we stand so that if he has any amendments to bring in he can do it himself so as to make things easier. I have learned since I have been a member of this House of Commons that it is very difficult to introduce amendments to a bill and that it would seem that it should come from the minister himself.

So I hope those remarks will help improve this bill so there can be no adverse effects for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, the division of this bill in four parts calls for a lot of consideration, of course, and it is warranted.

However, before examining each part of Bill C-18 and before drawing my own conclusions, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)—Air Transport—Strike by firefighters at Vancouver airport—Request that minister intervene; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Finance—Result of court action against person discounting government cheques—Possible amendment of Small Loans Act; the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre)—Energy—Heating oil purchased by government from Roumania—Reason for purchase.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, Notices of Motions and Public Bills. Is there agreement concerning the notice of motion to be dealt with?

Mr. Lefebvre: Notice of Motion No. 4, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN FARE STRUCTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reducing the present passenger-car fare and freight rate structure of the North Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Port-aux-Basques and Argentia, Newfoundland ferry service to better conform with the cost of travelling a comparable distance on the Trans-Canada highway system as a more economic link between the province and the mainland of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be given the opportunity to present this motion. Indeed, I might say that the subject matter of the motion is by no means new to this chamber nor was it new to the last Parliament. On November 1, 1968 during my maiden speech in the House of Commons, I requested that the government consider the advisability of reducing the present passenger car fare and freight rate structure of the North Sydney-Port-aux-Basques-Argentia ferry service to better conform with the cost of travelling a comparable distance on the trans-Canada highway system.

Today, almost six years later, I am still doing the same thing. Needless to say, Sir, it becomes extremely frustrating to speak about the same problem time and time again, make the same request year after year and have governments treat the problem with their usual complete lack of interest and total indifference. The province of Newfoundland, with the exception of Labrador, is an island province. The ferry service to which I have referred is the only link it has with the mainland of Canada except, of course, by two airline services operating in and out of the province. I think Your Honour will appreciate the importance of my motion in that it stands to reason the 90 miles of water separating this province from the rest of Canada is to us what the trans-Canada highway system is to people living in the other nine provinces. I contend that, for purposes of a passenger-car and freight rate structure, we should not be treated any differently from the other provinces.

In 1949, Newfoundland elected to become a province of Canada. In so doing we brought to this country a wealth of people and a wealth of resources. As a result of our union, Canada became one of the largest land masses in the world joined from sea to sea. Ironically enough, our geographic position, the fact that we enabled Canada to round out confederation and to become a nation stretching from one sea to another, has been the greatest contributing factor in our ability, or perhaps I should say in our inability, to achieve our full potential and to make confederation really meaningful to a large segment of our population.

As part of the terms of union between our two countries, it was agreed that Canada would take over certain services and from that date relieve the province of Newfoundland of the cost incurred in respect of these services, including the then Newfoundland railway which of course included the coastal fleet and other marine services in the province. Twenty years later, in 1969 or 1970, we saw the Canadian government abolish our rail passenger service and commence its deliberate plan to downgrade and, I suspect, eventually phase out altogether certain other marine services, including the coastal fleet. Of course, this was done by the Canadian National Railways with the concurrence of the Canadian Transport Commission and that of the federal government. Having said that, the question arises: How long can we expect to have a ferry service? That question is not as far fetched as it might sound, because who would have thought, back in 1949—including the people who negotiated our terms of union—that 20 years from that date the Canadian government and CNR would abandon our rail passenger service? Could any of us in those days have imagined that one day our coastal fleet would be reduced to a mere fraction of what it was at the time of union?

I will not repeat the story of the rail passenger service in our province, which has been abandoned. We have mentioned this on numerous occasions. My colleagues from Newfoundland and I have brought this matter to the attention of the House and of the government, but unfortunately our pleas have fallen on deaf ears. Suffice it to say that the service was abandoned with the full knowledge of the CNR and the concurrence of the federal government and its agency the Canadian Transport Commission. We might ask ourselves what changes are contemplated by the new organization which was recently established to administer the ferry service in eastern Canada. Will they follow the example of Canadian National Railways and be more concerned with balance-sheets, profit, losses and subsidies than they will with providing this essential service to our people?

I know that we will hear from members on the other side about the substantial subsidies that are granted by the Canadian government for the operation of the ferry service. We will be told by some hon. members opposite that services costing "X" numbers of dollars have been subsidized every year to the tune of so many millions of dollars. Surely that cannot be the criterion used by this government for the provision of an essential and fundamental public service to our province. I do not think that the government should be any more concerned with the cost of subsidizing that service than with the cost of constructing or maintaining a comparable stretch of the Trans-Canada Highway in the determination of the value of that highway to any of the other nine provinces.

It is my contention—and I am sure it is shared by most reasonable Canadians—that the government of Canada has a serious moral and legal obligation to provide the people of Newfoundland with a modern and equitable transportation service. It has an obligation to ensure that the people in our province are not unduly penalized because we happen to be an island, as indeed we are at present. In 1949, when Canada and Newfoundland agreed to the terms of union, Newfoundland was separated by 90 miles of water from the mainland of Canada. Today we are still separated by the same 90 miles, and surely the Fathers of Confederation, the people who negotiated our terms, must have accepted at the time the proposition that by virtue of the fact that we were joining Canada and becoming a province of Canada, we should be treated equitably and equally with respect to transportation having regard to the 90 miles of water separating our province from the mainland.

I refuse to accept the proposition that it should cost a family of five or six travelling from Newfoundland to the Canadian mainland, or from the Canadian mainland to Newfoundland, any more than it would cost a family of the same size to travel the same distance between any other two provinces by way of surface transportation. If confederation is to be meaningful to our people and to, for example, the people of Prince Edward Island, I do not see why it should cost people travelling between the island provinces and the mainland any more than it would cost an upper Canadian to travel from Ottawa to Montreal by way of surface transportation.

The intent of my motion is to ask the government to consider the advisability of reducing the passenger car fare and freight rate structure to bring it in line with the cost of travelling to any other resident of any province of Canada over a stretch of 90 miles between his province and any other in this country. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has already admitted to the country that our transportation system is in a deplorable situation. Our only hope is that it does not become more chaotic and that the minister and his officials face up to the fact that CNR cannot be expected to become a profit-making, self-sustaining operation having regard to its present policy and the service that it is presently offering the travelling public of this country.

It is rather significant and timely that this motion should be debated in the House at this particular time, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary, the silver anniversary, of our becoming a part of Canada. Of course, as part of this celebration thousands of exNewfoundlanders and fellow Canadians will travel from cities in Canada to visit that newest province in the present year.

I think it is important that something be done as quickly as possible to bring in a rate structure for passenger cars and freight on these ferry services that will be comparable to the cost of travelling on any 90 miles of the Trans-Canada Highway. It is also important in that the economy of our province relies to a large extent on the tourist industry and its potential development. As a province that in many respects is unique and has managed to maintain its uniqueness, we have a tremendous tourist potential. By maintaining our individuality we can offer to the Canadian and American tourist something that cannot be found anywhere else on this continent.

Newfoundland can boast of being one of the oldest territories to be settled on the North American continent, and fragments of the early settlements are still in existence. We continue to enjoy a quality of life that has long been forgotten on this continent. We have managed to maintain the advantages of a quiet life, yet not primitive; of a happy people, yet not pretentious; of a scenery that is beautiful and natural, and not marred by industrial development.

In Newfoundland we recognize one very important point, and I have no hesitation in putting it forward here. It is that one day tourism will be our biggest and most profitable industry, provided of course the government recognizes that fact and is willing to co-operate with our province by formulating a more equitable policy with respect to our transportation needs. The progress we can achieve with respect to tourism will be determined to a large extent by the consideration and by the justice that we receive from the government of Canada.

I could go on for hours to talk about the high cost of living in the province, the high cost of shelter and the high cost of many other things attributed to a large extent to the high cost of transportation. But I am afraid there is nothing I could say that has not already been said in this chamber by colleagues over the past few years. In closing, Mr. Speaker, through you I suggest to the government that one of the most tangible efforts it could make, in its acknowledgement and appreciation of our twenty-fifth anniversary in confederation, would be to come up with a more equitable and more just transportation policy with respect to our province, and indeed with respect to the other Atlantic provinces as well. I am sure that one of my colleagues from P.E.I. will want to comment on ferry service with respect to his island province, so I will not encroach more on the time of the House except to request again, respectfully, that my motion be given serious and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, now that I have been categorized in the press as an old war-horse I can admit that I have heard many private member's motions and bills but I have never heard one that strikes me more as being possessed of sincerity, conciseness and thorough going reasonableness as that which has been presented by my colleague from St. John's West (Mr. Carter). He has been, since I have known him, a most diligent, thoughtful, persistent and persuasive representative of his people, and in my opinion he has spoken eloquently for them on a most, if not the most, important problem facing them on this very timely occasion of their silver jubilee as a part of this great dominion. It is a timely, thoughtful and most appealing subject and one which the authorities, at the moment vested with the governance of this country will neglect at their peril.

The hon. member was also correct when he said, about this province, as could have been said about mine a century ago, that in the days of our greater prosperity it was to our comparative advantage to be on and by the sea. In those days the Atlantic was a corridor of commerce. But now, as decade has followed decade, it has become disadvantageous for us to be in that once favoured location. We have seen the fulcrum of economic power move ever westward and, to use a polite word, we find ourselves on the unfortunate end of too many things such as transportation, price, the market, and so on. My hon. friend from Norfolk wants me to bring in a cow analogy; I would rather not do that because I want to retain the pristine purity of my remarks. But I have a fellow feeling for what the hon. gentleman has said. He has put his finger on the issue.

Why should the people of the two island provinces pay an exorbitant price to move to the other eight provinces of the dominion? Mr. Speaker, do you pay $9 to go from Manitoba to Saskatchewan? Is there a toll of $5 to cross a bridge here in Ottawa and go from Ontario to Quebec? Why, because God made us islands—and beautiful islands at that—should we have to pay every time we move to or from our island homes that are a part of confederation? It is a notorious injustice, and because we have had it so long is no reason why we should be expected to grow accustomed to it.

We live in an age when we talk about separatism in one part of the country and alienation in another, but because we in the Atlantic region have had our grievances for a century should not suggest that their very longevity detracts from their appeal, because certainly it does not. I think before any government of Canada can even conceive that it has made any kind of step to bringing about equality in this country it must make a major assault on the transportation inequities which face eastern Canada. For too long we have been out on the end. For too long we have paid dearly, partly not only in terms of remoteness from the major markets but also because of the very matters which the hon. member for St. John's West has mentioned.

It was interesting that the hon. member mentioned the railway. The railway has diminished its function in his province and in mine, certainly, more than in any of the other provinces in the dominion. But when there is a rail strike, which two provinces suffer most because other means of road transportation cannot function? That is the irony we went through last summer in both our provinces. It caused cruel and shameful harm.

Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island have much in common. I was once intrigued by the suggestion of former premier Smallwood that he was not interested in maritime union at all, but he might think of union between P.E.I. and Newfoundland. I never was an advocate of maritime union because I have not been convinced of its advantages, but a union of Newfoundland and the Turks and Caicos Islands and other islands down in the Caribbean would give us a country that stretched from the Bahamas up to the top of Labrador, and that would appeal to me. It might give us some new dimensions, new visions, new perspectives and a new province too, but that is the kind of province I would like to see.

I notice that in the council of maritime premiers we have one of the fastest growing bureaucracies. I have been in Ottawa for 17 years so I know something about bureaucracies, but I think the council of maritime premiers is the largest empire without territory which the world has even seen, with the possible exception of the dying days of the Holy Roman Empire. Rather than considering questions of what we do organizationally and administratively to regroup and reconsolidate, we should apply ourselves in the way that my colleague has applied himself this afternoon, to a practical problem. I want to join him by supporting his contention that we must abolish this hardship upon the people of the island provinces. We must move away from the infliction upon them of a grievous toll as they move about this country. What was confederation all about, if it was not to provide a domain in which all citizens might move freely from one part to another?

The injustices outlined by the hon. member seem to me to indicate an infraction, an infringement and indeed a mockery of confederation. I will join him in not resting content until injustice is abolished and inequity corrected. I commend him for the vigour of his presentation and the authenticity of the argument he brought for a great province and a great cause, one which I support 100 per cent.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility to participate in debate on the motion of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter). I believe, in all sincerity, that the spirit of festivity and joy that is characteristic of Newfoundlanders as they celebrate their twenty-fifth anniversary as members of confederation may very well account for the over-exuberance which gave rise to the motion before us. Certainly, were it not for the good will and amity that is prevailing between Newfoundland and the other nine provinces on this happy occasion, I would be tempted to term this motion as going a bit too far.

I am glad, and prepared, to address myself to the motion seeking reduced passenger car fares and freight rates on the North Sydney to Port aux Basques and Argentia route. On April 1, 1949, Canada undertook to provide a freight and passenger steamship service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, and Argentia was added in 1964. Since 1949 there have been only two marginal increases affecting passenger fares and freight rates, while revenue has dipped to less than 20 per cent of operating costs.

I believe that this motion would benefit from a closer examination of the facts. Mention was made of the Trans-Canada Highway. Annual operating costs in the order of $35 million, as opposed to freight and passenger revenue totalling little more than $7 million, do not to me constitute an exactly inequitable arrangement. And these figures, Mr. Speaker, do not reflect the sizeable capital investments made during the last quarter century. They total close to $220 million and are projected to rise even further over the next decade. With deficits far outstripping revenue and capital costs burgeoning, I find it difficult to comprehend the rationale behind the hon. member's motion.

I am one who, along with the federal government, strongly supports the concept of stronger ties and communications between Newfoundland and the mainland. Newfoundlanders have had to apply more careful planning and economic utilization of their resources in order to strive for a quality of life that compares favourably with the rest of Canada. It is much to their credit that—I am pleased to note—Newfoundlanders have succeeded to a stunning degree, in bending their environment and resources to their will. After all, who has not heard of the gigantic Churchill Falls hydro-electric project? Who is not aware of the massive iron ore operations at Wabush and elsewhere? Who does not know that the tremendous timber stands at eastern Labrador have enabled Corner Brook to produce newsprint that is sold on six continents? And, finally, what could be a more strategically apt and economically vital achievement than the development of an oil refinery at Come-By-Chance?

But, I must now return to the specific matter at hand. One has only to examine the Ministry of Transport's user-cost or beneficiary pay concept for it to become readily apparent that the ferry services from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland are run at great cost to the federal taxpayer and to the great benefit of its users. Newfoundland is the unquestioned beneficiary of this service. The user-pay concept of the Ministry of Transport does not apply nearly as severely as it does, for example, to air operators and travellers using ministry-owned facilities. The federal government does not intend to introduce a user-pay system which will finance all of its services in full. On the contrary, even now this concept is not applied universally across Canada. However, I do not think the federal government is being in the slightest bit unreasonable or insensitive to the needs of its people when it expects users to pay a reasonable share for the use of the extensive and valuable facilities and services provided. And in the case of the ferry services to Newfoundland, I do not think one can reach any other conclusion but that the user-pay concept is applied with kid gloves and tender loving care.

I am not aware that the present passenger fare and freight rate structures pertaining to the Nova Scotia-Newfoundland runs are acting as any sort of deterrent to the flow of goods and people along this route. On the contrary, my information indicates that the addition of vessels during peak periods coupled with plans for further supplements in the near future reflect the steadily growing use of this ferry service. Newfoundland, much to its credit, is increasing substantially in popularity with tourists who are spending more money and longer vacations there. This year, with the commemoration of its 25th birthday, promises to activate a tourist invasion of truly awesome proportions.

A 15 per cent annual growth in passenger-related vehicle movement should, to my mind, Mr. Speaker, raise the question of whether the ferry service capacity is sufficient rather than whether the time has arrived for the service to reduce fares and freight rates. I am sure the hon. member who proposed this motion is aware of the difficulties encountered in deploying vessels on a ferry service that carries 55 per cent of its passenger traffic during July and August. There is great expense involved in operating vessels at capacity levels of 10 per cent during the off season.

It would appear, once again, that the problems to be addressed by this House and my hon. friend would include the rationalization of vessel deployment to obtain maximum utility and maximum economy without sacrificing the quality of service for passengers. In addition, terminal capacity at North Sydney and Port aux Basques will shortly require expansion and, as I already mentioned, additional vessels are being planned for introduction to meet future passenger needs. All such improvements will involve large capital expenditures and I, for one, am in favour of upgrading this ferry service as the need arises. Such steps will further consolidate, both symbolically and tangibly, the historic links which have bound Newfoundland and the rest of Canada together on a steadily strengthening basis since 1949.

Turning to the movement of Gulf freight, this has been so heavy that rail car ferry charters have had to be extended and, if present growth rates continue, further ferry acquisitions and major shore facility extensions will have to take place for this service alone. In 1972, freight movement accounted for 78 per cent of the Gulf deficit at an average cost of $27 per ton to the federal taxpayer. This freight movement is, barring an upset in economic growth prognostications, likely to incur an even higher subsidization of goods by the taxpayer.

This situation does not strike me as being one calling for a reduction in freight rates. On the contrary. I would think that shippers are being provided with an economical conveyer of goods the like of which they would not have even if presented with the choice of competitive, free enterprise services. Private enterprise, the impetus that has made Canada forge ahead economically in such impressive fashion over the years, still forms the basis by which we stimulate growth and progress in this area. However, in the case of the ferry services in question, were it not for government intervention in providing a cheap, yet efficient, transportation service from Newfoundland to the mainland, the economic fortunes of our tenth province would not seem nearly as bright. Nevertheless, it would be foolhardy for me to suggest that all is well with our ferry services. Like all other operations, they suffer from inadequacies and imperfections.

The major problem, to which I alluded a few moments ago, lies in the allocation of ferry vessels where they will serve most effectively. Study and research with respect to improving the performance and seaworthiness of ferry vessels under all conditions is being conducted on a continuing basis. Service reliability under all conditions is another major consideration when planning the construction of new vessels, and the ultimate goal is to find a happy mean between an extravagant service and a hopelessly inadequate one.

With respect to the ferry service in Newfoundland, I do not imply it is an extravagant one. Far from it. It is the very lifeline which nurtures her relationship with the mainland and I would be rigidly opposed to any attempt to undermine or erode this vital connection. However, the question at issue today involves the reduction of passenger fares and freight rates. I do not believe such a move would benefit Newfoundland or its inhabitants to any significant degree.

With accelerating fuel, labour and maintenance costs, coupled with the need for heavy capital expenditures, it has been eminently generous of the federal government not to have passed on these added expenses to the users of the ferry service. Any proposed reduction simply does not make economic sense and belittles the appreciable contribution already made by the federal government in promoting economic expansion and tourist traffic to Newfoundland. This is another aspect we do not often talk about although it is related to the problem in question.

While disagreeing with the motion before this House today, I am equally in concord with Newfoundland's goals as a province. As I salute her past achievements, I wish her well in her future endeavours.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will only be a few minutes. I wish to support my colleague's motion. I might say that all wise men think alike. My motion, No. 5, will be called in the very near future. It relates to considering the advisability of introducing legislation implementing the government's constitutional responsibility in providing a link between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I was surprised he did not go overboard for this motion. I remember a transport committee visit that he and I made to my district. Everyone treated him so well that I felt he would come back and run in my district.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I helped you out, just the same.

Mr. Marshall: I am disappointed he is not supporting the motion, particularly for the reasons he gave. No motion is more worthy of recognition and being passed by the House than the one of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter). In describing user service the hon. member for St. Boniface used the words "tender loving care". This is analogous to the manner in which the Department of Transport treats our province. The only thing tender loving care reminds me of is a hairspray. That is probably the way they are going to overcome our transportation difficulties.

The main problem in Newfoundland is isolation. This dictates that we must have special status in the consideration of our over-all transportation policy. One need only be reminded of the difficulties that we experienced last summer. This problem was alluded to by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). Because of the CN strike, hundreds of thousands of tourists from the United States, indeed from all over North America, were stranded in Newfoundland for days, and sometimes weeks. This caused great incovenience to these people as well as to Newfoundlanders stranded on the Nova Scotia side because they could not get back to their families and their work. The situation reached almost emergency proportions. Fortunately, the strike was settled when it was, because it had reached the point where it was becoming an emergency from a medical and survival standpoint. This in itself should make the government realize that some form of communication must be ensured between these two provinces. I hope the government will soon realize this and begin to act. The government must support some kind of communication which would solidify both provinces.

Mention was made of the relationship between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and their relationship to the Trans-Canada Highway. The Trans-Canada Highway, which was built with such great fanfare by the federal government, was built on a deal to take away rail passenger service. However, even at this moment the Trans-Canada Highway is not up to standard. The government should realize its responsibility and take a look at the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland. Millions of dollars need to be spent to provide proper passageway; there should be a proper road for the buses. The Trans-Canada Highway must be brought up to standard. As the hon. member for St. John's West stated, the Trans-Canada Highway must be considered a link between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and should be completed in our province. On April 22, hopefully my motion will be called. At that time I will elaborate on many other points of interest and concern to Newfoundlanders. We need a decent transportation policy and base in order to develop our many resources.

● (1740)

The hon. member for St. Boniface mentioned the cost to the government. I should like to remind him that the passenger rail service cost the federal government some $900,000. But immediately after that decision was taken, an order was issued by the Canadian Transport Commission to the effect that should the CN decide to abandon any other railway passenger services, it could be required to continue to operate them, in which case it would receive an 80 per cent subsidy. A few days ago I happened to come across the latest report issued by the CTC. It showed that subsidies amounting to $126 million were paid last year in respect of such passenger operations. And the figure will probably be higher in the years to come.

I should also like to remind hon. members that there is another isolated region only 10 or 11 miles from the northern part of Newfoundland. Only that distance separates the island from the great mass of Labrador, whose inhabitants are completely isolated during the winter months and who have become familiar with living in conditions where they are shut off from goods and services. I hope the parliamentary secretary will remind the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) of my bill to establish a crossing between northern Newfoundland and Labrador. This would do wonders to encourage the development of the vast resources in that wonderful region.

In order that the motion may proceed to a vote, I end my remarks by expressing once again my support for the proposition advanced by my hon. friend from St. John's West.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it might appear out of place for a Toronto member to take part in a debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter). However, there are in Toronto a large number of fine people from Newfoundland who have settled in the city and contributed to the lifestyle of our metropolis. They are highly respected there and well known for their fine wit and sense of humour. Over the years they have established a high reputation not only for themselves but also for Newfoundland as a province.

Then again, we also have a ferry boat service. It connects, on a year-round basis, one island, which is constantly populated, with the mainland and it serves a second island, or set of islands during the summertime when extensive use is made of them for recreational purposes. We are therefore familiar with the question of ferry boat routes and the cost of transporting people by water, though I admit the circumstances are totally different from those in respect of which the hon. member for St. John's West spoke this afternoon with great sincerity.

What I find surprising is this. Only two weeks ago the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), also a member of the Conservative Party, condemned the CN on a number of grounds. He said, as reported in Hansard at page 753:

> One of the major problems the country faces is this: we are stuck with a national railroad which is improperly and ineptly managed. It is not managed as a business; it is managed in a political fashion, and therein lies the problem.

So we find a member from a wealthy urban community condemning the CN for not doing things in a businesslike manner. Now, two weeks later, we find an hon. member from the same party asking the government to behave in the directly opposite manner. The hon. member for Mississauga favours a businesslike approach; the hon. member for St. John's West is in favour of an approach which does not consider the balance-sheet. I must say my heart is with the hon. member for St. John's West for a number of reasons, though I doubt whether the time allotted is sufficient for me to explain them.

But here we are up against one of the typical contradictions which arise within the Conservative Party, not only on the issue of transportation but on oil policy, bilingualism, consumer affairs, agricultural policy, and so on. One member of the party says one thing, but a few days or weeks later another member proposes exactly the opposite. We suspect that they speak to each other in caucus once a week in an attempt to resolve these differences in outlook. Nevertheless, they find they cannot stick together. So much for the consistency of the Progressive Conservative Party—more conservative than progressive, perhaps.

I see the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) leaving the chamber. Perhaps the situation has become intolerable for him even though it is only a short time since he crossed the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have made him lose his balance.

Mr. Hellyer: At least we are not a bunch of sheep like you are over there. We think for ourselves.

Mr. Caccia: I am glad the hon. member has changed his mind and decided to stay with us.

Mr. Hellyer: I am overwhelmed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caccia: The hon. member for St. John's West has made a good point. It is one which raises the question of the kind of policy we should follow in Canada in the field of public transportation. It is easy to make speeches about running a transportation company in a businesslike manner, but how is this to be done in a vast, thinly populated country such as ours without raising freight rates to a point at which only a limited section of the population could afford to pay them? Freight rates would need to be subsidized until the population was large enough to allow the subsidy to be discontinued. In the meantime, we need to consider something broader than the balance-sheet alone.

● (1750)

At the same time, the hon. member for St. John's West would be the first to press the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to see that the facilities and equipment of the vessels used on this type of service are not only modernized and kept up to date but are adequate to meet the needs of the public. This cannot be done by reducing tariffs and rates. A balance must be struck whereby some financial reserves are accumulated to improve facilities and equipment. Also, decent wages and salaries must be paid to the captains and crews of the vessels as well as the technicians employed in this kind of service, and must be similar to other salary levels in the country.

Reduced transportation rates will not bring this about. The only way to reduce rates without reducing revenue is through higher taxes, and then the question remains as to who is to pay these higher taxes. Perhaps the wish to keep the country together and to facilitate movement of people from one province to another is so strong that no one would object to this, but it sees to me it would at least be reasonable for any member requesting a reduction in rates to put the whole picture before the House and to discuss the consequences of such a measure. Then we would discuss the total scene, rather than just discuss the question of reducing rates in terms of accusing the government of total indifference.

However, I think the hon. member for St. John's West has made a good case in the sense that there is merit in providing a transportation service for all Canadians regardless of income, therefore permitting the exchange of individuals from one province to another. People living on an island are at a certain disadvantage as a result of geography. On the other hand, there are advantages to living on an island and they are not to be underestimated. The fact that a body of water has to be crossed usually tends to screen the island from visitors, and in this sense the island is not swamped by waves of thousands of tourists. I would not be at all surprised if the reason that Newfoundland has been able to retain its character and quality about which we hear and read so much these days is that it has been isolated from the mainland because it is an island. Probably the same concept applies to the beauty of P.E.I. Islands seem to be immune from industrial development and the pollution that arises therefrom because of the fact that they are removed from the mainstream of economic life.

I have tried, Mr. Speaker, in the very short time available to put forward a few thoughts. The motion of the hon. member for St. John's West raises a much broader question, one which was the subject of debate only ten days or two weeks ago on a motion introduced by the New Democratic Party. Much was said by others more competent than I about this subject on the occasion of that debate, and I encourage members interested in the subject to examine what was said as reported in Hansard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had a few things I wanted to say in the course of this debate, but I am afraid I shall have to disappoint the House because I should like to see the motion come to a vote. Therefore, I rise simply to say that I support it.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) has assured us that the federal government is paying close attention to the Newfoundland ferry service to ensure that an uninterrupted and efficient service is maintained year round. As part of its ongoing program to upgrade and expand all ferry facilities on this service, Newfoundlanders in particular will be pleased to learn that a new rail car ferry costing about $14 million is scheduled for completion in late 1975. The vessel, a 7,000-plus ton twin-screw rail carrier capable of doing 17 knots, is designed to accommodate 34 rail cars on five tracks with stern loading.

Its secondary function is the carriage of highway trucks and trailers on containers between the terminals of Sydney and Port aux Basques. The vessel is, however, also suitable for certain other docks and sundry highway slips. The vessel, which will be capable of carrying rail cars weighing a total of 2,200 tons, is intended for year-round operation in the service across Cabot Strait and will be suitable in all respects for operation in the sea, wind, temperature and ice conditions encountered in that area.

A reliable and speedy gulf freight service is essential for the day-to-day exchange of vital commodities between Newfoundland and the mainland. The provision of yet another rail car ferry on this run is an example of the federal government's long-range planning and foresight in anticipating Newfoundland's present and future needs. I feel confident that with the addition of a new rail car ferry, coupled with the expansion of terminal facilities, Newfoundlanders will be satisfied with the calibre of service and fairness of freight rates that characterize the transportation mode bearing the brunt of commerce between the island and Nova Scotia. I think we cannot help but be impressed by the manner in which this operation is managed by the federal government and by the dedication of the crews and shore personnel who labour year-round under harsh weather conditions to maintain this vital link that keeps Canada united and whole.

[Mr. Caccia.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, COMPENSATION FOR OIL IMPORT COSTS AND REGULATION OF PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That Bill C-18, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I had come to my remarks on each part of this bill. Part I, dealing with exportation, would call for the return to the principle that it is always rather odd to speak of exporting natural resources such as petroleum when our country is forced to import it.

It would undoubtedly had been more logical and appropriate to adopt measures avoiding such a nonsensical situation where an oil exporting country finds itself at the mercy of foreign producers and has to suffer the repercussions of particular political events happening far from here, while we are oil producers ourselves.

However, this situation is the result of various circumstances and it should be corrected without delay.

Subject to the requirement that we should satisfy our particular needs inasmuch as it is physically possible, which should be done, it follows that when we are required to export, it is normal that we levy charges on our exports and at maximum prices. I think it is perfectly appropriate for our country to obtain the highest possible return on its natural resources when they are exported.

We agree on this principle of charges on each exported oil barrel, at the highest level.

With regards to Canadian oil prices restraint, we should ideally aim for price uniformity throughout Canada. But, as I already pointed out, the restriction imposed on transportation could result in quite tremendous cost differentials which could perhaps nullify that nice effort to ensure equality in prices across the country. If for each barrel of oil moved from one area of Canada to another the price turns out to be exorbitant that will result in people in some areas of this country having to pay an equally exorbitant price.

I think the minister and the government have not been specific enough on the line of action they would follow and it is only once we get that information that we will be able to judge whether oil is sold at an equal price in Canada. Price fixing based on foreign oil is as far as domestic consumption in Canada is concerned, somewhat arbitrary. Mr. Speaker, if we are fortunate enough to have natural resources as important as oil it seems to me that Canadians should really benefit from it, that is to say that for consumer needs the cost to the consumer should be in relation to how easy it is to obtain that product.

If in an entirely arbitrary way a price is fixed in relation to overseas I find that some details are missing in that respect and the line of reasoning followed lacks basis. I understand that that must have been related to the fact that we are also at the mercy of oil imports which would explain the price based on foreign oil but in principle if we get down to the root of the problem the fact still remains that we are faced with a situation where we can obtain a product at a given price but we are selling it back to the Canadian consumer at a much higher price simply because it also costs more abroad. I think that principle is wrong and I feel that that policy should have been based on an even lower price for the consumer of this country even if, as a consequence of that, we must increase the price of foreign-sold oil either through charges or otherwise, particularly since, Mr. Speaker, we are not sure whether the situation will always remain the same and that it will not be possible at a given time, for example, for eastern Canada, to buy oil at a lower price. How can one foresee that this bill might not handicap the commerce the Canadian consumer might benefit from, and the eastern consumer in particular?

So, to my mind, we should aim for the minimum price for Canadian consumers and the maximum price for foreign consumers at which to sell our oil according to international schedules. Mr. Speaker, when we come to Part III of this bill, which deals with additional domestic oil price restraint, we feel even more apprehensive because, through this additional control, federal authority in this regard could become absolute, and control in as important a field as that of oil could, at some point or other, deprive the provinces of the autonomy they have always cherished.

We therefore have reservations about an additional control at the hands of the federal government in this field. Moreover, in view of the extra controls this bill is designed to implement, wholesome competition is threatened. We wonder at times to what extent this control, these set prices will be depended upon, and to what extent profits will be neglected, as well as consideration of the fact that prices must be proportionate to production costs, to what extent due consideration will be given the fact that fixed prices are not much higher than production costs. Those dangers warrant mentioning.

Part IV, which deals with petroleum import cost compensation, is the one, Mr. Speaker, which to my mind contains the most contentious elements, for the simple reason that controlling the cost of foreign oil is most difficult to begin with. Just ask the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) when he had to buy heating oil what results he obtained and why he had to pay black market prices to avoid possible shortages.

It is therefore extremely difficult to achieve reasonable control over foreign oil prices, all the more so as a Canadian importer is faced with the fact that he is simply refunded the differential between the foreign oil price and the price set in Canada. We might be in a situation where the importer is not in the least interested in obtaining better prices or where at a given moment, he might be able to make profits.

In my opinion, this compensation for offshore oil price is not clear enough and may be dangerous, especially since certain details are not clear. For instance, subclause 51 (c) on page 21 states that will be considered as importers and entitled to compensation those importing petroleum into Canada to be purchased by other persons for the purpose of having it processed in Canada. If you read carefully this clause you may conclude that someday we will only have oil transiting through Canada to be processed here and exported abroad.

Controlling this will be an extremely difficult task and we wonder to what extent this control will be adequate. In brief, we would have preferred that the government did not have to introduce such a legislation. However, we understand the situation which existed and which is likely to exist again in the future and which could lead to many problems.

Therefore we understand the intentions, but we are afraid that the situation might get worse if we rely on those good intentions, since such pricing would not enable us anymore to think that we will be able at a given time to have a supply of heating oil at a very low price. We can no longer hope that the consumer will be able to get gasoline or other by-products of oil at a real low price.

That is why we are wondering whether this bill does not merely confirm the final victory of multinational oil companies, that will have won all along the line by causing prices to rise to the level they wished, in the case of a product that only comes from the soil after all and the real cost of production of which we are not so sure.

Considering the skyrocketing price paid by oil consumers during the last few months and the fact that on the other hand, the Quebec Minister of Finance says that seven oil companies have not paid a single cent in tax, we are asking ourselves questions. And in such circumstances, our fears are justified. That is why we suggest that the minister and the government should take into serious consideration every clause of this legislation so that this measure will not be the ratification of the inflationary price rise of a Canadian product that the consumer could get at a much lower price and that we accept to sell at an exorbitant price.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if our foremost concern consisted in providing for the needs of the Canadian citizens instead of making profits, I am sure we would not be discussing now price rise and inflation in this regard but that we would think about something like this: We have oil, we are going to do everything in order that the Canadian consumer may at least buy it at the lowest price possible. I think this bill does not take that into account. On the contrary, it confirms a fact that results from world events that have nothing to do with us. With a good administration, Canada would never have known any oil crisis. Hence, it is arbitrary to determine prices; if there is a price increase, it is because of a lack of foresight and of adequate organization.

I am still deeply convinced that a country having ressources like oil can make it available to all citizens. So, if we decide arbitrarily on prices just to please oil companies, it is unfair to the Canadian consumer, and I think we should first consider essentially human factors in order to provide an adequate legislation.

[English]

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to offer a few remarks on the bill before the House today I wish to make clear that the principle of the bill as expressed by the minister earlier is not in dispute. However, I feel bound to say that a clause by clause examination of the bill before us raises some questions with respect to the implementation process of the March 27 agreement, questions which I have no doubt will also be raised in the minds of provincial political leaders of the various provinces, and particularly the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

In preparing for this debate I reread the Prime Minister's statement delivered in the House of Commons last March 28, and I must state that the contrast between the tone of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on that occasion and the tone and contents of Bill C-18 are startling, to say the least. I refer specifically to clause 36(1) of the bill before us which reads as follows:

> Where no agreement is entered into pursuant to section 21 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province (hereinafter in this part called the "exporting province").

Clause 36 of this bill is offensive in that it confronts our producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan once again with an ultimatum: either fall in line or we will legislate an agreement.

This bill goes far beyond the agreement and understanding reached between the first ministers on March 27 as explained by the Prime Minister. Under this legislation, the government seeks powers to establish oil prices within provinces under certain conditions. The March 27 agreement is to terminate in 15 months, yet this bill is open-ended with respect to the term of its powers and provisions. Its penal provisions can only be described as draconian in their nature, and I refer you specifically to clauses 27 to 40 inclusive.

> 27. A person who
> (a) knowingly makes any false entry or statement in any record, book of account or other document required by this part or any regulations thereunder . . .
> is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or both.
> 28. (1) Every person who contravenes any of the provisions of sections 23 to 26 is guilty of an offence and is liable
> (a) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding twenty thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or both; or
> (d) on conviction upon indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

It is language of the sort contained in the clauses referred to which raises legitimate concerns in Canada's energy industry, concerns of the kind that could create for Canada energy shortages in the future where none now exist. Unless the government sheds its conspiracy theories and punitive mood it will damage not only the companies but the country. The whole federal government's performance dating back to last September in connection with energy matters raises substantial questions of competence, questions which can only give rise to profound uneasiness in the minds of all Canadians at the sweeping, far-reaching powers of control over the energy industry and the reduction in the provincial governments' ability to control the development and sales on a long-term basis of their natural resources.

Our Canadian energy industry which formerly exhibited strength and confidence is now wracked by uncertainties as to future government policy, uncertainty with respect to future prices, with respect to land leasing regulations, additional forms of taxation, and the formation of a national petroleum company and its possible role. These uncertainties and others constitute a major disincentive to Canada's petroleum industry and, if allowed to continue, will result in further loss of investor confidence which has already been badly shaken by recent events.

Under these circumstances, the ability of the industry to attract new venture capital to sustain Canadian resource exploration and development will be severely impaired and could even result in a flight of capital from Canada to areas offering a more stable economic environment, notably the United States.

Ultimately, of course, a long-term energy supply crisis could unnecessarily develop in Canada. Currently, Canada is in the very enviable position of producing more oil than it consumes. As a result of the national oil policy established in 1961, markets west of the Ottawa Valley have been reserved for western Canada crude, and western Canadian production in excess of domestic needs found an originally reluctant but now ready market in the United States. These markets, both domestic and in the United States, were a major factor in the development of the petroleum industry of western Canada and the level of domestic proven reserves we enjoy today.

However, Canada will become a net importer of oil at the end of this decade if new Canadian reserves are not discovered and developed. Simplistically stated, Canada is at the stage in which the United States was in the mid 1960s in that we are already eating into the lead time required to discover, develop and bring new supplies to market.

In western Canada it probably takes five to seven years to do the necessary geological, geophysical and drilling work required to develop a specific producing area and start selling oil and gas. In the frontier areas the lead time is even longer. Gas was discovered at Sable Island in 1967 and some millions of dollars, 66 wells and six years later, the first gas is still a considerable period away from being produced and sold. Gas was found at Drake Point in the Arctic in July, 1969, and it is unlikely that any gas will be marketed from that area until the 1980s.

The long-term nature of such investment requires a careful evaluation of the political climate, favourable or unfavourable. The industry needs relatively stable political conditions and cannot operate satisfactorily on a stop and start basis. It is important to remember that it is only within the past 20 years that Canada has become a significant producer of crude oil. At the time of the Leduc discovery in 1947, Canadian production was no more than eight million barrels per year—about what we now consume in a week. It tends to be forgotten, in the light of recent events, that until very recently there was considered to be in North America an overabundance of natural gas.

Under these circumstances, natural gas prices in both Canada and the United States were kept distressingly low when compared with the cost of alternative, less attractive fuels. The direct result of this mistaken policy is the serious shortage of natural gas, particularly in the United States, prevalent today. For the balance of the 1970s it is estimated that the Canadian energy industry will require $30 billion of development capital. This new capital will have to be raised in competition with worldwide industry requirements, estimated at $500 billion during the same period.

The task of developing new energy resources deserves, and should be granted, the highest priority by the federal government and appropriate policies and regulations put in place to ensure that the necessary capital will be available and the necessary exploration and development work is carried on as expeditiously and rationally as possible. Piecemeal policies have no place in this context, and co-operation rather than confrontation is required. Other areas of the world are already competing for development dollars at this time and there is evidence that Canadian technical expertise and personnel are being lured away by more attractive offers in the United States and elsewhere.

The petroleum industry in Canada must be encouraged to press forward with the task of finding, developing, processing and bringing petroleum products to consumers. Policy-makers must provide a suitable operating environment within which the industry can perform its function. Parts of the bill before us are counterproductive in this respect and deserve review and revision by the minister proposing their passage.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 puts into effect the agreement reached, after many weeks and months of negotiation, between the federal government and the provinces and establishes many important precedents in Canada. It establishes one oil price right across the country. It establishes a two-price system for Canadian oil, namely, a domestic price that is much lower than the international price and it also maintains the export tax on Canadian oil sold to the United States. It further recognizes the fact that oil and the other natural resources of this country come under provincial jurisdiction and law. That is a most important fact which all of us must recognize in a debate of this sort.

There are a couple of things that concern me as a member who comes from one of the oil producing provinces, Saskatchewan, as I look at this bill and rise to participate in debate on it. The first thing I notice is that the agreement reached between the consuming and producing provinces will give the people of Saskatchewan actually less per barrel of oil than they were receiving under the voluntary agreement which expired in March. They will now receive $6.50 per barrel under this agreement which we are now legislating, but under the voluntary arrangement they were receiving $6.60 per barrel, made up of an outright sum of $5 per barrel for oil sold in the province, plus 50 per cent of the export tax, which on the production of oil in Saskatchewan worked out at about $1.60 per barrel, making a total of $6.60. So as a result of the agreement reached in Ottawa, the actual direct revenue to the people of Saskatchewan will be a lesser sum of money than they were receiving before those negotiations concluded.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, as a member from a producing province I am also concerned that the producing provinces are not getting a share of the export tax. Our party made it clear right from the outset, through the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and through our leader, that the producing provinces deserved a share of the export tax. It seems to me particularly unfair that the export tax should be used to subsidize the consumers in eastern Ontario, the four Atlantic provinces and Quebec, because when this is done it is using funds that should at least in part go to the producing provinces.

What I am really saying is that I agree with the fact that we are subsidizing the eastern market because of the international situation, but I am arguing that the subsidy should be paid on the basis of equality and equity right across the country, without being taken solely from the revenues due the two producing provinces. An appropriate analogy might be if we were to lower the price of automobiles in Canada and if we were to accomplish this by subsidizing buyers with money taken from Ontario because that is where the automobiles are produced, or if we were to do the same kind of thing with farm machinery and take the subsidy from Ontario provincial resources because that is where it is produced.

It seems to me that this is all part of the built-in tradition that goes against equity in this country in terms of distribution of wealth and income. And if it were not for certain other developments I would have a difficult time being convinced that this is the right direction in which to proceed. However, it is my understanding that in the case of Saskatchewan the federal government is willing to look at some significant trade-offs, or what might be called quid pro quo, with respect to things that would lead to greater industrialization of our province, such as a major steel industry.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has suggested that we should take a look at the freight rate system and correct some of the inequities in it. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is talking about stabilizing the income of farmers in Saskatchewan, and indeed of farmers all over Canada. If some of these things are coming, then perhaps the deal that is before us from the point of view of my province will be good, that is, if we have these particular trade-offs. If our oil is sold across the country at lower than world prices, that will be all right with us if we can purchase other commodities coming into our province at lower than the world price, and if our oil is used to help build an industrial base in Saskatchewan giving us equality with other parts of Canada. That is a very important factor in this debate and one that should be recognized by all members regardless of the regions they represent.

I suggest that the province of Saskatchewan is a totally different case from the province of Alberta. In effect, here we are dealing with apples and oranges, with two radically different situations. Saskatchewan is basically a have-not province and Alberta is a have province. Alberta has vast quantities of oil, not only in conventional sources but in the tar sands. Saskatchewan has only about 80 million to 85 million barrels trapped under its land and will run out of oil in nine to ten years. That is something that must be clearly understood when we are talking about this bill. Saskatchewan is essentially an agricultural province, and if we do not expand our industrial base, after the oil has gone what will we have left?

At present we have 4 per cent of the nation's population, and our provincial population has been falling for a number of years. In 1968, Saskatchewan had 962,000 people; in 1973, it had only 906,000—a drastic drop. If the same proportionate drop took place in Ontario over the same period, it now would have a population of six million instead of eight million. In effect, it would eliminate the city of Toronto. Just imagine the effect that would have on Ontario. The same thing applies to provincial income. We depend so much on the agricultural industry and on funds derived from natural resources. In Saskatchewan the fluctuation of income can be as great as 40 per cent from one year to another. Compare that with Ontario, or with the nation as a whole, where income fluctuation has never been over 10 per cent from one year to another.

Why does this happen in Saskatchewan? There is a very obvious reason. The rural parts of the country, and Saskatchewan is perhaps the most rural of all, do not have an integrated economy. They do not have an industrialized, developed economy. This is because of the old national policies which we have pursued for so many years, directed developing the industrial parts of the country, particularly the golden horseshoe in southern Ontario.

These have been policies that have been based on tariffs and on a railway system designed to take raw materials from the hinterland to the industrial heartland. As a result, we find an area like Saskatchewan is supplying new materials and foodstuffs in an unprocessed state to factories in eastern Ontario, or indeed to places like Vancouver, where the raw materials are processed and manufactured and where, of course, there are the jobs that go with the processing and manufacturing.

Commodities and items such as livestock, rapeseed and natural mineral resources are shipped from the prairies at a rate lower than the equivalent weight of finished goods. There is therefore an incentive to ship goods from the prairies, and thus an incentive to export jobs as well, which means that the people leave the rural areas. All this will have to change, and a start could be made with the oil policy in this country which could expand into a new national policy, one that would treat all commodities the same and remove inequities in the freight rates system and develop the economy in a rational way. There should be equity of conditions. That could be done if we set our minds to it.

This bill concerns me on other grounds as well, and I hope this House will look at them. One concern is that under the bill, multinational oil companies will have another windfall or another rip-off in terms of profits. We all know the figures for the last year and we all know that the oil companies are going to be big winners. In Alberta the provincial government has decided to split the extra revenue 65 per cent for the province and 35 per cent for the oil companies. This means that the $2.50 will be split 88 cents for the oil companies and $1.62 for the people of Alberta, giving the oil companies in the province additional revenue of some $528 million per year. Actually, it will probably be higher because of some additional things that have developed during the last few days. This is of great concern to me and I think we should look at this part of the bill.

Another thing that concerns me is the way the government is going to subsidize the oil companies in eastern Ontario, Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces. They will subsidize them, trusting their accounting system and their judgment on how much the oil is going to cost when they purchase it offshore. I suggest we are going about this the wrong way. We should, instead, establish a national petroleum corporation or marketing board that would purchase all offshore oil and sell it to the people in the east. That would be easier and less bureaucratic than the system we are getting into.

How do we know how much Exxon is going to pay for oil in Abu Dhabi, Saudi Arabia or some other states in the Middle East? How do we know how much of the price paid for oil in Canada is real and how much artificial? How much of it will be theirs, because they are handling it with other subsidiaries? How much can they obtain, because it is in the hands of parent companies in the United States? How much information can we really get? Mr. Speaker, these are questions that I ask and that our party wants answered before the bill passes.

I also wonder about the fact that the bill is to be administered by an allocation board. Why is that? When the allocation act passed it was my understanding that the only time this board would be operational, except for a small staff, would be if the government or parliament declared an energy emergency. Why will this legislation not be administered by the National Energy Board or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, instead of building another bureaucracy to do it? These are a few of the questions that I ask, Mr. Speaker, a few of the questions that I want answered and which I believe that the people of Canada want answered before we pass this legislation.

Clause 54 of the bill, on page 24, deals with special cases. An importer may ask for more funds than are provided under the bill if he meets irregular or abnormal circumstances. I wonder how that provision will be interpreted and whether it might not open the door to companies to make higher profits. I have serious questions about that part of the legislation.

As we debate this bill I think we should see it as a step toward a new national policy in this country. I do not know why we do not have two-price systems in other commodities. As a Saskatchewanite, I sometimes wonder why it is that two of the three commodities for which we have a two-price system are produced in Saskatchewan—oil and wheat. We do not have a two-price system for commodities such as iron, lumber and nickel. It seems to me that we should have a two-price system for them and charge a lower domestic price than the world price. We should have an export tax, for example, on commodities and channel the funds back to the provinces and Ottawa for further development of the resources and basic commodities of the country. We should be pursuing such a policy. This would help fight inflation and help the economy. I do not know why we are not doing it. I suggest we should be moving in this direction.

Mr. Speaker, when we discuss gas and oil we should be considering public ownership. We should be treating these as public utilities, owned and controlled by the people as hydroelectricity is in most parts of the country. We should examine the example of Saskatchewan where all the money gained from oil is going back for exploration and development of the gas and oil industry in the province, under public ownership and control. That should be done at the national level, with agreements between the provinces and the federal government.

When I hear the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) speak about the development of the tar sands, I am terrified. He has been going around the country talking about bringing in billions of dollars of capital from Japan, Europe and the United States, developing the tar sands and using the revenue from the sale of oil to repay the debts accumulated in building tar sands plants. Who is calling the shots here, Mr. Speaker? That plan was devised by Herman Kahn at the Hudson Institute. It strikes me as strange that the Minister of Supply and Services would be peddling Herman Kahn's ideas. It strikes me as strange that he should have made representations to cabinet on two occasions last fall about the development of the tar sands.

It strikes me as strange, Mr. Speaker, because I suggest there are certain connections between the Hudson Institute and the Liberal Party. The Hudson Institute has opened an office in Montreal, Hudson Institute (Canada), which is headed by one, Claude Frenette. He is no stranger to the Liberal Party. He is very close to certain cabinet ministers, such as the Minister of Supply and Services. He was also a vice-president of Power Corporation. I wonder about his connection with Power Corporation and the talk about Power Corporation going into the oil business.

These are questions that I throw out. Who is calling the shots? Who is advising on a national oil policy for Canada and a national resources policy? Is it actually the government of this country, or is it the multinational corporations or some of the big business concerns in this country and abroad? Mr. Speaker, these are a few of the questions that I raise about the bill before us, and I think they should be answered before the legislation passes this House.

● (2050)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate almost with a sigh of relief, relief that the question of crude oil pricing in Canada is finally approaching the point of solution. We in the House of Commons, and indeed all Canadians, will be able to get back to what are more important questions over the long run, namely, taking advantage of the tremendous opportunity Canada has with regard to energy. I say "almost a sigh of relief" because it would have been a genuine sigh of relief had the minister and this government restricted themselves to bringing in a bill which had the purpose of implementing and giving legislative back-up to the agreement reached between the first ministers at the long lunch at 24 Sussex Drive.

It is a relief for me, this House of Commons and, I am sure, all Canadians to hopefully be seeing the end of an incredible history of vacillating policy commitments, contradictions and inconsistencies. Commitments were made one day and broken the next. This goes back over a considerable length of time. Indeed, two years ago the minister first promised he would be generating an energy policy that would be coming out that winter.

The question of pricing in particular became an issue on September 4 last. We left for the summer recess in July, only to be called back in August because of a railway strike. While we were on recess, the leader of the New Democratic Party was travelling around the country saying that he had just about had it with this government and he did not know how much longer he could support them. I notice he has been saying the same thing during the past couple of days.

We came back to this House and legislated the railroaders back to work. The government felt compelled to make some statement on inflation. The cost of living was going up at that time at what we thought was an astronomical rate of 8 per cent. We know now that was almost low compared to what the government managed to achieve this year. In any event, the government felt compelled to make a statement. The cabinet met through Labour Day weekend. On September 4, at 2 p.m., we came into the House to hear a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We had to adjourn for two hours because the statement had not yet been typed.

We came back to the House two hours later and were informed there was a freeze on the price of western Canadian crude oil. As a sop, if you like, to western Canada, the province of Alberta in particular, the government also said it was going to build a pipeline to Montreal in accordance with the wishes that had been expressed over the previous eight or nine years. It was nine days later that the government realized it could not make this freeze work, as a result of section 83 of the National Energy Board Act which required the National Energy Board to restrict any exports of Canadian crude oil at less than market value.

The government then quickly invented an export tax and put it in place. At that time it was 40 cents. That was on September 13. This gave rise to all of the history with which we are now only too familiar, the understandable cries of concern from the producing provinces and a great deal of concern by those on this side of the House about the direction the government was taking. There was then the Middle East war, the Arab embargo, all the resulting moves by OPEC nations, and so on. No one could have foreseen this. Whether the OPEC nations took advantage of a situation, or only obtained their just due, I think there can be arguments on both sides.

What is appalling, totally unacceptable and disgusting is the claim by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and this government that this price freeze and the export tax was a demonstration of their tremendous foresight and, indeed, without this export tax and price freeze they would have been unable to implement the pricing policy that appears in this bill. That is a bunch of nonsense. That move on their part caused nothing but ill-will. It will take a great number of years before that is cleansed from our society. Regrettably I make that statement.

I have no interest in maintaining the animosity which might exist between certain people in western Canada and eastern Canada. It is very unfortunate for this nation that it exists, but if there is fault it should not be placed with the manufacturers or the displayers of bumper stickers. It should be placed where it belongs, with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I will cite a further example, if any further proof is needed of this government's deceitfulness. Although the government claims it had a tremendous amount of foresight in its moves of September 4 and 13, we need only look at the Toronto Star which was quoted this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). The Prime Minister is quoted as saying he did not feel the federal government had any right to interfere in the energy pricing policy. In terms of an oil pipeline to Montreal, we need not look any further than page 14 of the energy analysis which the government tabled at the end of June last, in which it is stated:

> To date, the security threat has not appeared serious enough to justify the very costly arrangements of supplying the region east of the Ottawa Valley with western Canadian crude oil.

It is a sad history of inconsistencies, broken promises, vacillations and incompetence. I could think of a few other words but they might not be parliamentary. As the Middle East war produced its supposed embargo and actions by the OPEC nations, we saw really incredible behaviour by this government. They behaved very much like the character in a children's story about the sky falling in. I think the name of the character is Chicken-licken who said, "The sky is falling in, the sky is falling in." The government were literally running around in circles saying, "The sky is falling in." They said, "We won't have any oil this year. We will be short of oil. People will freeze in the dark." The Turkey-lurkeys said, "Yes, indeed the sky is falling in. We had better do something." In the case of the children's story, it was Chicken-licken, Foxy-loxy and Turkey-lurkey. Indeed, it was Foxy-loxy who convinced them the sky was falling in in the first place.

Foxy-loxy in this case is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, for his own purposes, convinced some people that indeed we were in a terribly perilous situation with regard to energy, we would have terrible shortfalls and we must act to implement everything he suggested. Unfortunately, Chicken-licken and Turkey-lurkey were not eaten, as they were in the story. I suggest that is only right, because poor Foxy-loxy would have had indigestion.

It cost the people of Canada at least $15 million because of some asinine heating oil purchases by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). The story unfolded as the result of persistent questioning from this side of the House. In terms of the government's purchase of heating oil last winter, it is absolutely unbelievable. They paid an average of 79 cents per gallon for heating oil which is now being offered for sale at 25 cents a gallon in Montreal, and there are no takers. It is incredible. Indeed, the amount of money that that oil deal cost was far in excess of the cost of the Bonaventure. In terms of the Bonaventure, we at least had the Auditor General look into it. It is about time the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) asked the Auditor General to look into this heating purchase, because there are still many unanswered questions. Another incredible aspect of this story was illustrated on December 6 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was making his statement indicating that the freeze would not end on January 31. Incidentally, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had promised just the night before that it would. Nevertheless, the Prime Minister used this opportunity to expound upon all of the new national oil policy initiatives the government was taking, among which was a decision to establish a national petroleum company. The Prime Minister said, and I quote from Hansard:

> Finally, the company will assist in assuring reliable and adequate imports of oil to meet present and foreseeable new needs for foreign oil.
> The government has found in recent weeks that it can play an important role in purchasing petroleum and petroleum products. It proposes to exercise this role through the company.

Well, if it is the wish, and if it is the will, and if the Chicken-lickens and the Turkey-lurkeys Liberals and NDPs force a national petroleum company on this unfortunate country, at least let us hope that those individuals who were working for Supply and Services in connection with this heating oil purchase are not hired by the company to act as its agents. Because if we lose $15 million every time the company makes a purchase in the market we will soon find it is costing us a very substantial percentage of the federal tax revenue.

During this period, during this frantic "the sky is falling in period," when everybody, or at least everybody on the Liberal side and in the NDP corner of the House, was convinced that disaster had struck, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources used the crisis atmosphere first to get cabinet approval of his national petroleum company, second to expand the responsibilities of his department and agencies accountable to his department, and third to introduce the energy supplies emergency bill and get it through the House.

In that situation this party made every possible effort to determine the facts in terms of Canada's shortfall in energy reserves this winter. We made every possible effort to see that expert witnesses were brought before the committee in order truly to determine Canada's position. At every step our moves were obstructed by the government and by the NDP. They said, "How could you be so irresponsible? Don't you know there is going to be a tremendous oil shortage this winter? If you are going to be responsible, pass this act immediately so that the government can set up its emergency energy allocation board and allocate the available supplies."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that indeed we did back down from some of these demands and we did give approval to the bill, with some important changes. We did manage to get a degree of parliamentary control, but with the passage of that bill one of its provisions was the creation of another empire for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources to administer, namely, the energy allocation board. This energy allocation board was supposed, according to that bill, to be responsible for implementing and allocating energy supplies within the country should we be faced with a situation of shortage. Indeed, we were faced with a shortage, and its most knowledgeable people stated there was no reason for us ever to be faced with a shortage since we were self-sufficient and all that was needed was a reasonable amount of good planning. This board really did not have a job. I see that as a result of part III of this bill the energy allocation board now has a job. I suppose I am happy to see it; I hate to see underemployed civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, I have omitted a considerable amount of detail in this sad story of the government's performance in the energy sector over this last year and a half, actually since the last election. It truly is a sad story and I sincerely hope, for the benefit of all Canadians, that the bill marks the end of that sort of behaviour; that from now on we shall see responsible, consistent behaviour from whoever is minister of energy, mines and resources and it will be in accordance with the type of advice which is offered in this book. It is incredible to me that the government would offer this energy analysis for consideration at the end of June last year, a booklet which contained so much excellent advice, and then proceed totally to ignore it and to confuse, distort and disrupt the situation to an unbelievable extent.

In particular, I wonder why the minister will not, in spite of our representations, follow his own advice, namely, that given on page 9 of this energy analysis that no national policy can be contemplated without the fullest intergovernmental consultation and consensus. That is excellent advice, yet we have an admission from the minister that this bill, implementing a very important agreement in terms of price, has never been submitted to the provinces; that the provinces have never been asked to respond. The minister told us this is an important part of national energy policy. He stated today that there has to be the fullest consultation between governments before a national oil policy can be implemented, and it puzzles me that the minister will not take his own advice.

Parts I and IV of the bill implement the agreement reached between the first ministers at their luncheon recently and we have no general disagreement with this aspect of the bill. Part I provides for the export tax, legalizing the tax which has been in existence since September 13. We think it is about time it was legalized. Part IV provides a subsidy so that Canadians east of the Ottawa Valley will pay the same price for petroleum products as those in the area west of the Ottawa Valley. This has been the policy of the Conservative Party, one price across Canada, since well before the government even thought of it, so we can hardly object to that provision.

However, we do object to some of the aspects of part IV because it seems as though the government has looked at four or five different ways of doing things and has chosen the most difficult and the most complicated to administer. As to parts II and III, let me say that if we seek a uniform price less than the world market price, all that is required is an export tax. A uniform price existed in Canada prior to any export tax at all. It was based roughly on the Chicago price as being the main market area, and that was pretty well uniform all over Canada served by western Canadian crude. It is clear that if you put an export tax on crude destined for the Chicago market, it will lower the price of western Canadian crude. The same conditions which resulted in uniformity of price before will still apply and we would have a uniform price system. That is all that is necessary.

In part II of the bill the government has gone far beyond this. It is proposing a complicated set of regulations in clauses 22 and 23. Why it has taken this route and imposed this unnecessary complication raises very serious questions in my mind. Quite frankly, I can be forgiven if I suggest that perhaps this provision is directed at the provincial marketing boards. It may be there is another motive behind this move by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Rather than seeking to achieve uniform price as he claims, perhaps he is seeking to outlaw or to disqualify the operations of any provincial marketing boards that exist in Saskatchewan and Alberta. If that is the case, I think this is a very devious way of going about it. It may be a valid thing to do, but surely if the government is going to stick to its commitment to consult, this step should be taken after consultation and with the consent of the provinces, not as a result of a unilateral proposal that is snuck into a bill in which it does not belong.

These kind of ad hoc addenda to legislation to achieve some other purpose are becoming a habit with this government, not a habit which we should condone. Certainly this party will want to have a good look at this particular aspect. We are not going to be bullied into passing these parts of the bill in the same way as we were bullied into passing the energy supplies emergency bill last Christmas. The fact of the matter is that the sky is not falling in and we do have time to consider, to consult, to call witnesses and to make sure that we pass good legislation. This is our responsibility to the people of Canada.

As for part III, this section of the bill raises very great concerns. It appears to be, to all intents and purposes, a club to hold over the producing provinces so the federal government can say, "Unless you reach agreement with us, we shall impose our agreement. Furthermore, we shall impose it without consultation and without the approval of parliament; we will do it on the word of the minister alone". As my colleague for Peace River stated this afternoon, this is a part of the bill that we cannot swallow. As my colleague also indicated, before we can take the word of the minister as to a commitment, we want to make sure it is given under oath.

Clause 34, which provides that part III shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation, should be amended. The act should come into force only after approval by the House of Commons. Then we will have had an opportunity to be sure that the proper consultation between the federal government and the provinces has occurred. We would then know that if an agreement had been reached it was not because the minister or the federal government in general had used this club to which I have referred.

Part III is very similar to the other parts in that it contains a great deal of detail and unnecessary law in terms of implementing a uniform price across Canada. We do not feel that this is the desirable way of approaching the matter. It is quite unnecessary to be so complicated. We suspect the minister has other motives in mind.

Part IV of the bill implements the program to subsidize imported oil coming into eastern Canada, so that the price Canadians in that part of Canada pay for their oil is the same as the price Canadians in other parts of Canada pay. As I have indicated, it is obvious that the government has selected the most complicated subsidy program imaginable. The government is going to subsidize on a separate basis literally every single boatload of oil imported into Canada. The government must have chosen to do things in this way because the energy allocation board has built up such a staff that it needs a complicated method like this to keep the staff busy; I can think of no other reason.

Surely if we can have one uniform export tax we can have one uniform import subsidy; the same basic principles apply and it would be much easier to implement. Customs and excise officials could keep track of the amount of oil imported, and companies could apply for their subsidy in the same way as they pay their import duties. Administration would be dramatically simplified and the powers that the government asks for in part V would not be necessary. Therefore, I seriously question why the government has taken this unnecessarily complicated way of subsidizing the importation of crude oil into the region east of the Ottawa Valley.

There is also no provision in the bill to cover the situation we witnessed this winter where Canadian crude was shipped from the port of Vancouver through the Panama Canal to the eastern part of the country, thus decreasing our reliance on Middle Eastern crude which was under embargo, and possibly helping us avoid a shortfall this winter. Under the proposed subsidy program it would be impossible for a company to do this again, because clearly it would have to pay all the transportation costs out of its own pocket. The company would be better off bidding for some of the high-priced Middle East oil at $30 or $40 a barrel. It would not matter how much it bid for it, because it would get a subsidy from the Canadian government.

This brings me finally to why I contend the subsidization program is wrong in principle. It gives companies no incentive to shop around. As I say, it does not matter what they pay for oil, because they are going to get a subsidy. If a company has an option on some oil, then regardless whether the oil is $40 a barrel or $50 a barrel, the government will pay a subsidy which will bring the price down to $6.50 a barrel. Therefore, I contend the program is wrong and should be thoroughly examined.

To me, part V is the most incredible part of the bill. The powers granted to enter premises and seize records and information go beyond the bounds of common decency. I know we tend to worry about the privacy of the individual and not about the privacy of corporations, agencies and so on, but I think it is about time we did give them a little consideration. Yet under this legislation the federal government could walk into the premises of the Energy Resources Conservation Board of Alberta and seize all their records. They could walk into the premises of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the province of Saskatchewan and seize all their records. I contend it is absurd to give the federal government this sort of power.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps they think that is the only way the minister can get intelligent information.

Mr. Andre: As my colleague from Peace River says, it is probably the only way the minister can get information about what is going on. It is regrettable that we have a continuation of this ad hockery by this government in its approach to things such as energy policy. Had they stuck to part I and part IV we might have passed this bill by Wednesday. I am sure we could have had it passed by Wednesday—but no, they had to put in this other nonsense.

● (2120)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: You guys haven't even read the bill; what are you talking about?

Mr. Baldwin: Ask Goyer what it all means.

Mr. Andre: Yes, ask Goyer. This is indeed regrettable, because it is about time the energies of this House, of this government and of this country were directed to the more positive aspects of the Canadian energy situation. Canada should be in an enviable position compared to the rest of the world, and I suggest that after the next election it will be in that position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: We have the potential. We have a great racehorse under us, but unfortunately we have a 250-pound minister on top. We have a tremendous opportunity in Canada, being the only nation that is self-sufficient in energy. Our crude is selling for $4 less than anywhere else in the world. This should give our industry a competitive advantage vis-à-vis the rest of the world, an advantage we have never had. It is a source of sorrow to me that we continue to have fumbling and incompetence on the part of this government when in fact we should be charging ahead and taking advantage of the opportunities available to us.

There are many other aspects of this pricing agreement which I might have gone into, including some of the points referred to by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) regarding the so-called quid pro quo promised both producing provinces at current production rates if we exhaust this resource in 12 or 13 years. Clearly, that means a responsible government has to look at two things, diversification of our economy during this period of time in order that we will not fall into serious economic straits when that time comes and, secondly, at ways to ensure that an aggressive and active exploration program is maintained.

In both these provinces the potential exists for further discovery. If we as a nation are to remain self-sufficient, we must discover these extra supplies of oil. The government would be irresponsible not to progressively pursue a policy that will result in such exploration and, hopefully, discovery. By a responsible government I mean a government that will ensure that those knowledgeable in the area have the opportunity. It is totally irresponsible to suggest on the one hand that Mr. Macdonald's national petroleum company is to discover all the conventional crude oil available, and on the other that Mr. Goyer's tar sands plan will discover the unconventional supplies. I see you getting ready to rise, Mr. Speaker, so I will close on that point.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this bill we are being asked to give parliamentary approval to a major decision, I think one of the most major decisions that has been taken in the life of this country and one that could well set a pattern for the future of the nation. I think the best that can be said is that it is a solution, but it certainly poses the significant question: Is it the best solution at the moment, and what will it lead us to?

It is significant, it seems to me, in that it confiscates the natural resources of some provinces for a time, to be used in the so-called national interest. This is something that rarely has been done in our country, but there have been occasions in the past. There have been occasions during which prices paid to producers for very valuable commodities have been deliberately made significantly lower than the market value. One such occasion was in respect of the price of wheat during the Second World War when Canada sold wheat to our allies at prices far below world prices. Memories of this action in respect of wheat are particularly vivid among the western agricultural community, and there is no doubt that considerable western alienation or skepticism about central Canada arose as a result of the pricing of that wheat so low on the markets of the world.

By adopting a mechanism for pricing crude oil in Canada at prices much below the world level, which might seem like a very good idea for the moment, we may well be opening a Pandora's box of trouble in the long run by exposing our trade in the markets of the world to considerable retaliatory action. No one will dispute the fact that a sudden rise in the price of crude oil could create great hardships to home owners and other users of our oil, and this is of particular importance in view of the cold Canadian winters. A cushioning mechanism is needed to avoid undue exploitation and hardship, and fortunately we are able to do this because of the situation. It is no secret that other forms of energy, even those controlled by government agencies, are to increase in cost rapidly within the next few years. Mr. Schreyer, Premier of Manitoba, has announced that Manitoba Hydro will experience a 14 per cent increase over the next three years, bringing the increase to well over 50 per cent. At the present time Manitoba enjoys one of the lowest hydro rates in Canada, indeed on this continent.

Just a year ago, at the time of the Manitoba election compaign, the premier accused some members of the opposition of misrepresenting the cost of hydro development in that province when they suggested it would require $171 million in respect of the so-called Winnipeg control, yet now the chairman of Manitoba Hydro has said the same thing will be worth $233 million. The same thing is true in respect of the Nelson River project. The cost of installation was said to be $1 billion, but the latest estimates are in the neighbourhood of $4 billion. Just as with private corporations, government corporations are finding it impossible to hold the price line.

By reaching in and setting the price of products, the federal government has effectively taken away from the provinces the control of their own natural resources. By setting a two-price system we are inviting the same thing to occur in respect of other commodities as that which occurred in respect of wheat; and this has already occurred to some extent with lumber, pulpwoood, plywood, paper, products of the auto industry and many other products controlled by government.

I suggest that we have been perhaps unduly concerned about oil because it has been so cheap that we have come to rely on it in the western world perhaps to an abnormal extent. I suggest that control of oil prices would not have come about except that the producing provinces happen to be in western Canada. Had oil producers been in Ontario and Quebec it is obvious that a much different approach would have been taken to the problem. Oil prices would in all likelihood have been allowed to increase, with perhaps a subsidy to help those unduly affected.

● (2130)

So far as confederation is concerned, the westerner believes that to a certain extent his resources are being used for the good of Canada generally without any equivalent care being taken to compensate him for this. We can expect to see increasing disregard for provincial rights by this government as time goes on. Enormous bureaucratic control will have to be employed in order to exercise jurisdiction over this commodity. This will certainly decrease private initiative and investment in respect of oil activity in the oilfields.

The way the so-called $6.50 a barrel was arrived at is interesting. The ten provincial premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sat down and decided what a barrel of oil should cost. Why is the same thing not done in respect of the price of eggs, beef or other commodities? It is obvious that not much thought was given to the continuation of supplies of oil, oil exploration and the oil industry. It is difficult to see how exploration can continue with the price of oil at $4 a barrel while it is necessary to compete for exploration money with other parts of the world where the price of oil is much greater.

Even if we say the government can enter the exploration field, this requires dollars which then would not be available for other purposes. This method of dealing with the problem leaves much to be desired. It seems logical that if the price at the wellhead is to be increased, the money could go to the oil companies directly and that the tax structure, including an excess profits tax if necessary, should be employed to make sure that undue profiteering will not take place. In this way legitimate exploration and development would be rewarded.

What has happened is that the three provinces, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan can add an extra $1.7 billion revenue from their producing wells. Some of this money may be allocated to the oil companies to encourage them to increase their exploration and developmental activity. However, there is no compulsion on them to do so. Saskatchewan apparently intends to give nothing, and presumably intends to carry on its own exploration. It seems at this time that the plans of the provinces are hazy. It is almost certain that most of the revenue accruing to these two provinces will have to be used in the service industries to service the people in the normal way.

At the same time, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces will receive large sums of money and tax equalization grants from Ottawa while being insulated against realistic prices of oil. It has been calculated that over $100 million of additional equalization payments will be forthcoming from Ottawa and that most of it will go to Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. In respect of the provinces which list their new-found wells in their capital accounts, this will mean that they will not be calculated as part of Ottawa's national tax equalization formula.

The end result is that Manitoba and Ontario will pay extra for oil but will receive no offsetting compensation from Ottawa. Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan will receive tremendous windfalls, although their motorists will have to pay extra for gasoline. Quebec and the Alberta region, although having to pay extra for gasoline, will receive handsome equalization payments from Ottawa. So Ontario and Manitoba will not benefit to the same extent. Some people might ask why Ontario needs this benefit since it is so rich in any event.

In relation to the export tax and our trading stance with the rest of the world, there are some very interesting developments. We can almost certainly expect retaliation for our actions. I would think this export tax would be considered by the rest of our trading partners as a non-tariff barrier. We will not be able to protest if extra tariffs should be placed on bauxite, orange juice and many other tropical items we are unable to produce in our country.

This whole bill, although relatively simple, brings forward some interesting discussion about Canada's role, particularly as a trading nation. We are a trading nation.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

We have always relied to a great extent on the export of energy to help our foreign exchange position. We have imported low-cost oil in eastern Canada and we have imported coal into Ontario. At the same time, we have exported surplus energy to the United States midwest. We have exported electricity at a variety of border locations in Manitoba. For instance, Manitoba has a very good arrangement with its United States counterpart. It exports electricity during the summer in order to keep the Americans cool during their hot weather period, while during the winter the electricity is retained for the heating of homes. I think this is a very good arrangement.

One might ask what would happen if the United States decided not to export coal to Canada? In certain circumstances they would certainly be justified in doing so, and this would create many problems for our country. The world's low-cost energy has been held in the hands of a few nations. We must decide whether we want to concentrate on our own security or maintain our position as a trading area. It seems that for many years we pressured the United States to allow us to export oil, yet now many Canadians are saying we should not do this. One could hardly blame the United States for attaching little validity to what we said many years ago.

We should not disrupt international trade agreements so long as we do not endanger our current security. It has been recognized that trade in energy is only part of our total trading pattern but that any withdrawal from this area would create many problems for us. Another important area about which we must think is the way in which we use our energy resources and whether or not we develop them for our own purposes. There are conservationists who say that we should not develop any energy sources because this leads to pollution, and so on. Unfortunately, however, no matter how good this philosophy might sound, we cannot follow it. It is generally considered that we must maximize our wealth in order to give our people a better standard of living.

There are those who say we should import no energy into Canada and should not export energy in any form. The example I gave in respect of electricity and the arrangement between Manitoba and its counterpart in the United States is not very compatible with such a view. We must recognize that there are some problems involved in adopting such a stance. There is the matter of the scale of economics involved in bringing into supply the energy we shall need for our own use. This may well be too large a problem for our relatively small domestic market to sustain. We could incur substantial economic penalties. One example might be the Mackenzie Valley. It is obvious that the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline can only be tapped in the immediate future if the Americans are involved. Then, again, we wish at present to export both resources and technology in many areas. We want to export uranium, Uranium, Candu technology and nuclear-generated electricity all fall into this category.

It seems to me that we also must realize that national interest must be put above regional interests, and this poses a real problem. It is obviously very difficult to reconcile the national interest with regional interests. The province of Saskatchewan, which for many years was a have-not province, having suddenly become the owner of a scarce resource found that it could not capitalize from it as it should in a purely economic way. There must be recognition of the fact that provincial rights regarding the ownership of resources should not be changed unilaterally by the federal government. If this bill is to change the right of the provinces to their resources, the provinces will find that they will lose in importance to their own people, that they will be diminished and eventually will become not much more than city governments.

We must also accept the fact that our economic growth must be maintained. The important question that this bill tackles is who should exercise control over the development of resources and how the benefits flowing from them should be distributed. In other words, how should our energy resources be used to maximize our financial potential: should they be used to subsidize the manufacturing industry in its various forms? I think this is the central question and one that is causing those who live in the remote parts of the country serious thought with regard to the government's thrust.

There are those who suggest that manufacturing activity has been hampered in Canada for many years, that it has been insignificant and inefficient. I think it is fair to say that without the great wealth which our energy and natural resources have brought us, the manufacturing industry could not have provided Canada with the high level of income that it enjoys. Wealth distribution is necessary. Also, it must be remembered that the province of Saskatchewan has been prevented from reaping the benefits of its resources. Finally, we must ask ourselves whether we want to have a market economy in control of our petroleum resources. I think this is probably the key to the problem. Traditionally, Canada has had a market economy in the oil industry. Personally, I have had to make the decision whether to use electricity, gas or oil. I chose heating oil because it afforded greater flexibility and was the best choice for my purpose. But will the price of $6.50 set by the government be enough?

We must remember that when the economics of oil are considered, $200 or $300 spent in the Middle East will produce one barrel of oil a day. In the North Sea, $25 spent will produce a barrel of oil a day, whereas we require $10,000 to produce a barrel of oil if the tar sands are exploited. In the United States, new oil brings upward of $10 a day. It attracts Canadian companies and Canadian money, mainly the independents which are considered to be our particular contribution to the oil industry, Will the price of $6.50 for oil bring them back? The fact that oil reserves are being reduced by half a billion barrels a year—that is, the traditional, conventional oil wells—and that we have not had a strike in many years must not be forgotten.

Oil drilling statistics indicate that Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have reduced their oil drilling activities so far this year. Obviously, this will pose a significant problem. There is no point in saying that we have found a solution in setting the price of oil at $6.50 a barrel. So long as the Americans will pay $4 for it, or so long as the Arabs hold it up, the fact is that this will be a continuing problem. Will the entry of the government into the market enhance activity within the oil producing sector of our economy and provide us with the required amounts of oil for the future?

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is not long ago that I rose to speak on an oil bill. At that time it was the oil allocation bill and I rose to speak on it because the government was asking for extraordinary powers to deal with a so-called crisis which I felt was a transportation crisis rather than one of supply.

Today we look at Bill C-18 which is to impose an export tax on crude oil and provide subsidy funds to the non-producing areas. Again I see that the government is asking for extraordinary powers which I do not think we should grant them. Already the government possesses many of these powers under the National Energy Board Act and other existing legislation. However, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said, the government is like a fox in the crowd, trying to sneak in some powers which perhaps were not considered at the provincial-federal conference which was held recently.

As we have said before, we would not have too much objection to passing parts I and IV of the bill, as the hon. member explained when speaking about the history of the export tax and its necessity after the price freeze on oil. But why do we need to grant the government powers under parts II and III?

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for being able to get the ten provinces together and come up with some agreement. Before I go on to a close scrutiny of the clauses in the bill, I would like to speak about a group of people who are caught in the middle. They do not have much to do with the producing provinces or with the federal government so far as the export tax or the subsidy is concerned. These are our Indian or native people.

● (2150)

On numerous occasions I have spoken to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern development (Mr. Chrétien) respecting the return of the export tax to the Indian people. But before continuing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I was quite concerned just a few weeks ago when it came to my attention that even if the price of oil were to increase to $6.50 a barrel, the royalty rate to Indian people on their reserves was set at $4 a barrel, and there would have to be substantial changes made in the schedules to the legislation so that they could collect increased royalties and so that the oil companies would not receive the additonal $2.50 per barrel. I commend both ministers for having regulations changed whereby the Indian people could increase their royalty rates above those established under the schedules to take advantage of the increase in price from $4 to $6.50.

So far as the export tax is concerned, I find that although the federal government has been collecting this money it has not allowed the Indian people to take any advantage from it. From October, 1973, until April 1, 1974, a large amount of this money has accumulated in the federal treasury and has not been redistributed to the Indian bands. Perhaps there are some reasons for this. There may be problems involved in giving the total of this amount of money back to the Indian bands, or even half, according to the precedent set under the previous arrangement whereby Saskatchewan and Alberta got half.

It is something the federal government should look into because future development of oil reserves in the tar sands will not do the Indian people as much good as such development will do for all the rest of Canada. Perhaps we should look at this money as an investment in the ability of these people to look after their own affairs, and in turn to invest it in opportunities for their future. Perhaps they would be able to set up certain industries with it, buy machinery, set up agricultural feed lots, or invest in the lumber and mineral industries. I call on the minister to make an announcement respecting the return of the export tax to the native people as soon as possible, because they could take better advantage of it in late spring and during the summer to build houses or to make investments in their own industries.

Part I of the bill deals with the export tax. I must echo the words of some other hon. members who have said they feel this export tax is setting a dangerous precedent. I have some concern that we may face reciprocal action by other nations in the future, particularly the United States. We have already seen that the example of the OPEC nations in setting the price of international oil is being followed in other areas. Take the case of fishmeal in South America. Some of the nations there have taken a good look at the OPEC pricing of oil and have set higher prices for their fishmeal, even though the price at which this product was previously being sold to Canada gave everybody a reasonable profit. We also find that bauxite from Trinidad and South America is demanding a much higher price in recent days.

What will happen to the world situation if countries start hoarding resources which are not in plentiful supply? How will the third world nations afford those resources and meet the wishes of their peoples to reach the standards of living enjoyed by Canada, the United States, Europe and, more recently, by Japan and a number of other countries? As I say, I am quite concerned about the precedent we are setting in taking advantage of other countries.

Premier Lougheed is a good Canadian who, with his government, has done everything possible during the past year to get oil from Alberta to eastern Canada, shipping it across the mountains and through the Panama Canal. In a recent speech immediately after the conference in Ottawa he said he was pleased with the negotiated price. Perhaps I might outline some of the things he said. I quote:

> I would now like to outline the reasons why we concluded that an average price of $6.50 per barrel is in the public interest of Alberta at this time:
> The price is approximately the same as the average United States domestic crude oil price which is a matter of significance in terms of continued exploratory drilling for conventional crude oil in Alberta and Canada.

The point has been made many times that we have perhaps only ten to 15 years' supply of conventional oil in Canada, and the industry will require at least ten years' lead time to enable the tar sands to make up the difference in future demand, or perhaps to find more conventional oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan, offshore or perhaps in the Arctic. Adequate incentives must be available to the oil companies so that they will continue to explore for oil here rather than going to other countries such as the United States or to the North Sea oil fields. Premier Lougheed also said:

> Such a price at this time in our view provides adequate encouragement for continued interest in future oil sands projects and should permit the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant to start to make up for previous losses. Syncrude did not anticipate last August that such a price would be realized until 1984.
> The instability of the OPEC pricing structure is well known, and a higher price until the world pricing situation has stabilized is considered ill-advised for now. United States energy chief, William Simon, predicted earlier this week that world market pressures would force down the price of oil.

I have heard the question asked by eastern Canadians: What is Alberta going to do with all the money it will receive from increased royalties on the oil it is producing? I think Albertans should make it clear that they are not going to stand forever for the export of their raw materials and resources to other parts of Canada, or to other parts of the world, to be manufactured there and then shipped back to Alberta, with Albertans having to pay the transportation for their return. In Alberta we want to provide industry for the people who are coming there. I see you looking at the clock, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps I might continue another day.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize profusely to the hon. member, but I have to remind him that it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little about the situation in British Columbia where we have a strike not only at Vancouver international airport but at all the airports in the province, a strike that I think could have been avoided if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) had taken a little more care in dealing with people in that area. I would like to read a telegram sent to these ministers a number of days before the strike took place. It reads:

> Owing to the deterioration of labour morale in the federal civil service of western Canada and possibly all of Canada, and after eight years of fruitless bargaining, we find ourselves in a position where we, the airport firefighters of western Canada, must withdraw our services for an indefinite period to study our worsening plight. At present we are over $4,000 per year behind our local counterparts. There have been abnormally large staff resignations in western Canada. One airport in British Columbia plans mass resignation if immediate action by Treasury Board is not taken to guarantee federal government fire-fighters parity with outside counterparts. If the trickle of resignations of the present is not sandbagged, the floods of tomorrow will destory the very foundations of all the civil service. Treasury Board must be made aware of the dangerous trend. There must be an immediate reversal of their inhuman, indifferent, and unfair bargaining philosophy.

Fire Fighter Action Committee
658 Miller Road
Richmond, B.C.

• (2200)

I am happy to see the President of the Treasury Board here tonight, Mr. Speaker. Five days before the strike took place, his office was called and asked if he would go out and talk to these men because they were concerned about what was happening; the regional bargainers had not been able to settle the problems. That phone call from the firefighting committee has not been answered yet. I should like to refer to page 852 of Hansard of March 25, 1974, and quote the President of the Treasury Board on the subject of regional pay policy which the firefighters are seeking. He said:

In the case of regional pay policy, the government for years has taken the position that it will not be a leader in matters of pay and salary but will follow the pattern set by what is generally known in this country as the private sector. Given the choice of trying to equate the pay of the public service to that of the private sector on a national level or on a regional level, the government must, for common sense reasons, use a regional basis.

I would say to the President of the Treasury Board that that is exactly what the firefighters at Vancouver are looking for. I have been talking to them on a regular basis since before the strike began, and I know they have tried very hard to contact the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Transport to ask them to come to British Columbia so they can explain their problems. This morning I telephoned the office of the Minister of Transport to say that I had a proposal from the firefighters on strike that I thought could end it tomorrow. The strikers were asking that the bargaining be done in Vancouver, not with the union in Ottawa which they do not think is doing a good job for them. They were asking for reassurance that the government is willing to talk wage parity with the municipalities in British Columbia and that the talks be based on settling the problems on a regional basis.

I told the minister's executive assistant that these people would be available to discuss this proposal before the House sat today. The members of the union had asked me to attend the meeting because I am the member of parliament for the area which has the largest airport in British Columbia, Vancouver international airport. I have yet to receive a call from the minister's office. In the House this afternoon the minister rose and said, "I was told a couple of minutes ago that my people have landed in Vancouver—"

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Which minister?

Mr. Reynolds: The Minister of Transport. I can just about quote him verbatim. He said, "A couple of minutes ago my people landed in Vancouver to talk to the strikers". At a quarter to ten tonight, Ottawa time, I spoke to the strikers and they told me they have yet to hear from the people who landed there this afternoon. The conduct of the minister and of the government in ignoring these people in Vancouver leaves a lot to be desired. If they do not get this problem settled we could have strikes all across the country, which will mean a lot of difficulty for many people. I had a telephone call from a man who came back from Mexico last night. He complained that he went through four Customs' stops. First they were checked in Mexico, then in Seattle, which passed them to Blaine, then the Canadian Customs checked them, and again at Vancouver international airport. This creates great inconvenience for the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think this government or the minister concerned are making a sincere effort. It is time the ministers went out there to talk to the people, because it is obvious that this dispute cannot be settled at the regional level. The Minister of Transport and the President of the Treasury Board are the gentlemen who have to settle the strike; it is part of their job. They must find out what the real problems are in British Columbia. We hear of western alienation, and this is one of the reasons. Ministers send other people out instead of going themselves to settle the problem. What else can one say but that the ministers should get out there and settle the strike? I know we will now hear from the government about all the work they have done. They have not done a damn thing, because airplanes still are not landing in Vancouver.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last few words of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) are normal for members of the opposition. They draw conclusions before they even hear an answer. The hon. member made reference to a parliamentary secretary. I want to make it clear that he did not speak to me today. He might have spoken to another parliamentary secretary, but certainly not to me.

With regard to the hon. member's question, the Ministry of Transport firefighters in Vancouver and at other airports in British Columbia walked off the job at 8 a.m. on Friday, April 5. Prior to this walk-out we had engaged in numerous discussions with the leaders of the firefighters in Vancouver in an effort to dissuade them from this course of action. These employees are represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada which was certified under the Public Service Staff Relations Act on August 2, 1967 as their bargaining agent.

The collective agreement governing their terms and conditions of employment, including rates of pay, expired March 31, 1974. Bargaining for a new collective agreement with Treasury Board began February 20 and several negotiating sessions have taken place since then. The members of this group have selected compulsory arbitration as the method to settle the dispute if they are unable to reach agreement in direct negotiations.

The heart of the current problem is that the employees in B.C., especially in Vancouver, are seeking what is known as regional rates of pay and the bargaining agent, through its convention, has a policy of national rates of pay. Therefore, as you can appreciate, it is not a dispute with the Ministry of Transport but, rather, a difference of opinion between some members of the bargaining unit and the organization that represents them. The Ministry of Transport is caught in the middle.

In collective bargaining for most parts of the public service, Treasury Board acts as the employer, and negotiations for the firefighters in the public service are between

Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Those who are familiar with labour legislation will realize that an employer must deal with the certified bargaining agent and he cannot make separate arrangements with parts of the bargaining unit. In fact, most labour legislation contains specific prohibitions in respect of such action. In the Public Service Staff Relations Act, section 8, subsection (1) reads as follows:

> No person who is employed in a managerial or confidential capacity, whether or not he is acting on behalf of the employer, shall participate in or interfere with the formation or administration of an employee organization or the representation of employees by such an organization.

We have attempted to convince the employees concerned that the only lawful course of action must be through their bargaining agent and we are prohibited by law passed by this parliament from pursuing any other course in this regard. We have attempted, and are continuing efforts to persuade employees that this is the proper way to deal with their problems and are doing everything within our power to facilitate such action.

FINANCE—RESULT OF COURT ACTION AGAINST PERSON DISCOUNTING GOVERNMENT CHEQUES—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF SMALL LOANS ACT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, for three years now I have been raising in this House the question of government action to control the practice of discounting operations on government cheques. On March 19 I asked the following question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray):

> Is the government contemplating amendments to the Small Loans Act which would bring within its ambit this kind of transaction which is essentially a lending operation?

The minister replied:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is being examined.

After three years, the government is still studying the question. At least when I raised the question initially with the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, three years ago, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), I got some action. There were some changes in UIC regulations which prevented the assignment of unemployment insurance cheques to discounters which diminished, if it did not eliminate, the practice of discounting unemployment insurance cheques. Beyond that, the Superintendent of Insurance carried out an investigation to see if the practice of discounting government cheques was in violation of federal statutes, and a discounter was taken to court. The discounter won the case, as I was informed on March 19 by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), a fact which suggests to me that legislation is required. If the government was serious about dealing with the problem, it would have had legislation prepared to handle the problem in the eventuality that the court ruled against the Crown's case.

Discounting is the practice of providing someone with a sum of money on the basis of their having proof that they are entitled to receive a like or greater sum, and assigning that entitlement to the person providing the immediate cash. Thus, a correctly completed income tax form indicating a rebate due can, if the right to the receipt of the rebate cheque is assigned, provide the means of obtaining immediate cash. In the types of operation I wish to stop, the amount of cash received is usually 30 to 40 per cent less than the actual amount of the rebate. If computed as interest on an annual basis, that 30 to 40 per cent discount represents usurious interest rates amounting to 1,000 per cent or more when one considers that the lender of the money has only to wait a few days, or up to a couple of months at most, to be reimbursed.

The difficulty in controlling the situation is evident when one attempts to define what this practice of discounting actually involves. If it is, in effect, a lending operation then the powers the federal government possesses under section 91 of the BNA Act to control banking, bills of exchange and interest rates would come into play. Thus, the logical step would seem to be that of amending the Small Loans Act to bring the practice of discounting government cheques of less than a certain amount under its provisions, thereby restricting the effective interest rate charged to a maximum of 2 per cent per month. This is what my bill, C-257, now on the order paper for the second parliament and the third straight session attempts to do.

If, on the other hand, the evidence of entitlement to receive money in the future from the government can be considered to be a piece of personal property liable to sale, then regulation of the amount of discount to be allowed might well fall under section 92 of the British North America Act which lays down the right of a province to deal with contract law.

The area may be regarded as an obscure one and thus best dealt with by means of federal and provincial action. I fail to see why the federal government should fear to take the lead. There is a problem, as the figures show. In 1972, the number of rebates discounted in British Columbia amounted 5,273; in Alberta, 6,391; in Saskatchewan, 2,406; in Manitoba, 1,269; in Ontario, 543; in Quebec, 477; and in Nova Scotia, 93. Thus, more than 14,000 income tax refunds were discounted by sharp operators posing as tax preparers. The total value of the refunds claimed amounted to some $3.2 million. How much will it be in 1973 and in 1974?

The effect of federal inertia has been to force British Columbia to take unilateral action to deal with the situation by using its licensing power to force loan sharks out of business. Persons seeking a licence to prepare income tax returns who also engage in discounting might not get a licence. Manitoba, I understand, is contemplating similar steps. No one, I believe, would consider such legislation to be good legislation. It is arbitrary, it sets no standards and thus it is open to abuse. But it sets no standards and thus it is open to abuse. But in the absence of federal action, indeed, in the light of federal recommendations that this is the action which provinces concerned about the problem should take, there is little else a province can do.

It would seem to me that the federal government should immediately introduce legislation bringing the practice in this country under the Small Loans Act and that it should immediately seek concurrent legislation from the provinces validating the right of the federal government to take such action in this specific case. Only in this way can we finally rid this country of a despicable practice in a manner which is completely in accordance with the concepts of due process and equality under the law.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my view the hon. member greatly underestimates the legal problems and constitutional complexities underlying the very real problem to which be referred.

I completely agree with him on the fact that there are some absolutely unforgivable abuses, and he gave us a few cases, but I must tell him that so far, in view of the few cases of jurisprudence, the courts have considered that discounting of a government cheque was not a loan but essentially a transfer of credit and, in that respect, I think the hon. member will agree with me that provincial jurisdiction is much more real than federal jurisdiction. In my view, the government of the province that he represents so well in the House could do more since transfer of debt comes first under provincial jurisdiction.

In any event, I want to assure him, even if he is listening with some skepticism, that all federal government departments involved in this matter—National Revenue, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Justice and Finance—are now working on a solution to this problem without infringing the Canadian constitution. Then, how can this cheque discounting problem which he is referring to and which has lead to absolutely regrettable abuses, not to mention usurious rates, be brought under federal jurisdiction? I want the hon. member to know that it is not a very simple matter, but I agree with him that we absolutely must put a stop to such abuses.

Another related problem must be taken into consideration; we should not tend to restrict unduly the freedom of the Canadian people.

In certain cases, some of them may discount their cheque for reasons which are their own, and I do not think the philosophy of our government system allows the administration to decide for its citizens what is good for them; this, of course, is true within certain limits, which presumes equality between lendee and lender, an equality which is often lacking, I must agree with the hon. member.

I should, however, like to thank him for having raised this problem and to assure him that the Departments of Justice, Finance, Consumer and Corporate Affairs and National Revenue are working towards finding a solution within the framework of the Canadian constitution.

ENERGY—HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT FROM ROUMANIA—REASON FOR PURCHASE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the gradual unfolding of the story of the government's handling of the heating oil purchased last winter has produced an incredibly sorry picture of incompetence, bungling, and indeed suspicions of serious conflict of interest.

Last winter after the Middle East war and the Arab oil embargo came into effect there was, naturally, quite a bit of concern about the security of supply of oil to the eastern part of Canada which relies on imported oil. The government was obviously confused and uncertain, to put it mildly. It appointed a group called the technical advisory committee on petroleum supplies, consisting of representatives from industry and several government departments. Based supposedly on the recommendation of this committee, the government decided that there would be a shortfall in supply this winter of between 75,000 and 200,000 barrels of oil a day. Although questioned extensively, the government steadfastly refused to provide proof, or even knowledgeable evidence, that this was a reasonable estimate of the shortfall.

To my knowledge, only one company, namely Imperial Oil, which incidentally does not rely on Middle East crude, publicly suggested that this estimate was valid. Many other companies indicated they would look after their own customers and would do so without government assistance. Of course, we later learned that the government had not taken into account the supplies that would be available from the Newfoundland refinery at Come-By-Chance, sometimes known as the Shaheen refinery, supplies from which would have been available by the end of December last.

We now know that on November 9, 1973, the Department of Supply and Services contracted with Canadian Fuel Marketers—incidentally, a member of this technical advisory committee—to purchase 20,000 metric tons of oil from Roumania and 40,000 metric tons from Shell International Curacao refinery in the Caribbean at a price to be arranged. It is interesting to note that on November 15, 1973, my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), asked the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) with what company he had arranged this contract. His exact words were, as reported at page 7819 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the minister is in a position to say to whom he has given this blank cheque?

I doubt that my friend the hon. member for Calgary South realized just how prophetic that question was, because last week in the miscellaneous estimates committee the minister finally acknowledged that the average delivered price paid for 26 million gallons of oil purchased was an astronomical 79 cents per gallon. The price paid for the Roumanian portion was an unbelievable 99½ cents per gallon. Asked why he had made such a terrible deal for the Roumanian oil, the Minister of Supply and Services said it was part of the deal which enabled the government to purchase cheaper, but still tremendously overpriced, Caribbean oil. Yet in committee officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, upon whose advice the Minister of Supply and Services claimed he relied, stated that the Roumanian deal was quite separate and was undertaken on its merits.

● (2220)

Which story is true, Mr. Speaker? If the true story is that of the Minister of Supply and Services, then why would Canadian Fuel Marketers, a company owned by Shell International, insist that Canada buy oil from the Roumanian State Oil Company with no apparent profit motive on their part? If officials of the Energy, Mines and Resources Department are right, then why did the government buy such incredibly expensive oil, evidently the highest priced heating oil sold this winter or sold ever, for that matter?

These questions need answering, Mr. Speaker. This oil cost the Canadian taxpayers $20.5 million and has a current commercial value of less than one-third that amount. In other words, this deal has cost us more than did the outfitting of the Bonaventure, that other example of government bungling and incompetence. The time has come for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) to have the Auditor General conduct a full-scale investigation into this blatant misuse of public funds.

There are a number of questions that need answering, including the question of possible conflict of interest, the question of proper or improper business practices of the Department of Supply and Services, and the question of the competence of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which evidently supplied the background information.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) ranting away in his rather ugly manner about this question for the last ten days or so there are several conclusions to be drawn. The first is that while members of this House, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), were saying on November 5 that they were concerned about the situation in respect of oil in eastern Canada, and that this government should go out and purchase oil on the market to cover the shortfall that was evidently going to occur, the hon. member for Calgary Centre would have opposed that at the time.

At the same time, he would have said we should not have exercised the contracts on behalf of the eastern Canadian consumer of heating oil and would oppose that as well. That kind of improvidence, that kind of heartlessness and that kind of narrow parochialism which has always distinguished the hon. member for Calgary Centre in this House is the kind of attitude that I suppose more than any other will damage the relations between one group of Canadians and another. I regret that this kind of ugly attitude is represented in this House. We have to put up with that member with patience, but I must say with regret.

What is the fact of the matter? The fact of the matter is that a substantial portion of the heating oil used in eastern Canada for many years has come from imported products. With international markets tightening up, it was important that the Canadian consumer should be protected in this way. Because of the dramatic increase in the international price due to the shortfall on the international market and the embargo, importers were not in a position to import this oil; therefore the government moved in to protect the eastern Canadian consumer by taking an assignment of the contract so as to open up, in the first place, the Roumanian market for the purpose of access and also to pick up existing contracts from the Caribbean.

The hon. member says the government was uncertain as to the amount of this shortfall. Of course the government was uncertain, as was every intelligent person. Could any intelligent person predict that we would have a cold or an average winter this year, or a milder winter as it turned out to be? Could any intelligent person at that time predict whether the Arab embargo would continue in the way it did, or that production would be reduced progressively by 5 per cent a month? Of course not.

It is all very well to have such magnificent hindsight and talk as the hon. member has, now that we have come successfully through the winter and that eastern Canada did not suffer from the shortfall. Now we have a series of false allegations being made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre and by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour). We have had allegations that the oil was not up to snuff, that there was a conflict of interest and that it cost too much because it was paid for at market price on the international market.

I would have to say that the important thing from the standpoint of the government is not to take chances with the people as the hon. member for Calgary South and the hon. member for Calgary Centre are prepared to do. A responsible government will protect the Canadian people against the very worst possible anticipated risks. It is in that framework that we acted to protect the people. I would far sooner have prepared for the worst, and have the best, than to have acted as the hon. member for Calgary Centre suggests, to have hoped for the best and wound up with the worst.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

URBAN AFFAIRS

DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR CENTRETOWN OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the commitment expressed by the government on a number of occasions to ensure and in fact to encourage public participation in the production of urban development plans, and in view of the reluctance of the National Capital Commission to provide the information concerning its development plans which is required for the proper production of an official development plan for the centretown area of Ottawa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House directs the Minister of State for Urban Affairs forthwith to table all studies and plans produced by the National Capital Commission concerning future developments in the centretown area of Ottawa and further directs the minister to ensure that in future the National Capital Commission co-operate with the Centretown Citizens' Planning Committee in the preparation of the official development plan for centretown.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put to the House.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) may I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether, in light of the statement that imports of beef from the United States containing DES are going to be banned—

● (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that we are on motions, not on questions. There is no provision under the Standing Orders for a question period during motions.

Mr. Gleave: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the very great importance of such a decision to the total industry in Canada, I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether a statement will be made on motions to outline—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not in order. The hon. member can ask during the question period whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wishes to return to motions for the purpose of making such a statement, but he cannot ask that at this time.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM HURON TO HURON-MIDDLESEX

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-277, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the riding I represent from Huron to Huron-Middlesex in order that it will more adequately represent in name the area that the constituency encompasses. I trust that with the co-operation of the House leaders it can receive passage at an early date in private members' hour as have other such bills.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Rodriguez: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I presume it is because I sit so far back that you did not see me standing during motions, but I have a motion to present to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member. He is right; I did not see him. I am sure hon. members would have no objection if we returned to motions for the purpose of allowing the hon. member to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43.

HEALTH

PROPOSED TOTAL BAN ON USE OF DES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the approval of the House under Standing Order 43 to propose a motion in respect of an urgent and pressing issue. In view of medical evidence implicating DES as a possible cause of cancer, in view of the fact no legislation exists to prevent the prescription of DES to women for various medical uses such as "morning after" pills, and in view of the government's rapid banning of imported meats treated with DES, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to impose forthwith a total ban on any and all uses of DES in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT BRITISH COLUMBIA AIRPORTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and urgent matter, namely, the illegal strike of firefighters in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South has given due notice in the usual and proper manner to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of debating what he refers to as "the illegal strike of firefighters in the province of British Columbia". The hon. member has been helpful in providing background information which the Chair has found to be very useful. There are several facets to this problem which have given deep concern to the Chair.

The first consideration is whether the appropriate labour legislation should be allowed to operate without the intervention of the House at this time. Another difficulty relates to the status and effect of the injunction issued by the Federal Court in the dispute. These factors, in my view, cast some doubt on the advisability of allowing an emergency debate at this time.

On the other hand, the Chair is required by the Standing Order to consider whether there will be another suitable or early opportunity to debate this important and urgent matter. I must take note of the notice of motion which would provide an adjournment of the House until April 22. That being so, it may be the sense of the House that a debate of some kind should take place before we adjourn. This suggestion has to be reconciled with the necessity to debate and dispose in due course of the important legislation before the House to be called for consideration later this day under government orders. In the hope that this difficulty can be resolved, the Chair would like to reserve its decision until after consultation on whether a debate should take place and, if so, whether it can be arranged at a suitable time and subject to acceptable limitations. Therefore I seek the co-operation of hon. members to allow the Chair to defer its decision on the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver South until later this afternoon after I have had consultation with the several House leaders.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can he now give the House a specific date when he will be bringing down his budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Minister of Finance give the House a specific date when he will be able to give the House a specific date for the presentation of the budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Within a week after the House returns following the Easter adjournment I will give a specific date.

SUPPLY—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF OPPOSITION DAY IN WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 22

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have one further supplementary. I should like to ask the government House leader whether he has had an opportunity to confer with his colleagues about the question I asked him yesterday, that is, the designation of a specific day during the week of April 22, the first week of our return following the recess after the adjournment that I presume will take place at some point. Has the minister had an opportunity to confer with his colleagues, and is he now able to give a more positive assurance that a date will be set aside as an opposition day during that first week of our return than he was yesterday?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with my colleagues and I am not in a position to undertake that I will call an allotted day in that first week. It may be that I will do that, but I am not giving any undertaking.

DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the answers of the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact it is much more in order, much more traditional, to have the budget in the month of March or in April, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is a government decision that the budget not be brought down in the month of April?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has not been an announcement of a date. Therefore I cannot confirm or disaffirm the hypothesis stated by the hon. member. I would remind him there is no traditional or fixed month for the budget. It is usual that our sessions have started in October and, as the hon. member knows, this one only started in February.

Mr. Lewis: Do I understand from the Prime Minister, that the government has not yet come to any decision with regard to the items in the budget? Is that the reason for the delay or is there some other reason?

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might surmise that a budget is not something which is fixed months in advance but something which is prepared and developed over a period of time to respond to the economic necessity of a particular period. If the hon. member has any particular ideas about the budget, or if the Official Opposition has, we will be very happy to hear them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: He is waiting for another telephone call from you, David.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to send the Prime Minister some serious suggestions as to what the budget should contain, if they have not already been brought to his attention, but I do want to ask him or the Minister of Finance this question. In view of the necessity to deal with the cost of living and the excessive profits being made by industry, despite what the Minister of Finance says, how long does he intend to delay bringing a budget before parliament so that something can be done in some of these areas?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Finance answered that question in reply to the Leader of the Opposition. He will announce the date in the week following our return after Easter. But I repeat that there is still time to get your ideas in if you have any.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INFLATION AND COST OF LIVING—REQUEST FOR INTERIM MEASURES TO PROVIDE RELIEF

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that it will be at least a month before a new budget is brought down and in view of the escalating cost of living and the high rate of inflation currently running in the country, which according to all indications, will be confirmed by the consumer price index tomorrow, the date of the proposed adjournment of the House, may I ask the Prime Minister what interim measures the government is prepared to announce to provide some relief to Canadian consumers?

Oral Questions

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is based on two facts which are not verifiable. One is that it will be a month before the budget is brought down, which the hon. member does not know and neither do I. Second, we will only know tomorrow when these figures are made public.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. McGrath: May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the indications in the wholesale price index that we can expect substantial increases in the price of food tomorrow, the proposed date of the adjournment of the House, may I ask the minister what proposals or what measures to bring relief to Canadians the government is prepared to bring before the House before the adjournment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend is basing his question on something that is still hypothetical. In any event, it is based on figures that were gathered over a month ago.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the Chair will be allowed to proceed to the question of the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but I appreciate that the hon. member for St. John's East wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my question was not based on a hypothesis but on the facts contained in the wholesale price index and in all the readings to which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs seems to be blind.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REPRESENTATIONS BY QUEBEC ORGANIZATIONS FOR ADMISSION OF CHILEAN MARXISTS TO CANADA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their warm greetings. I hope that, this time, I have come back for good. The accident is over with and I do intend to take part as much as possible in the proceedings of the House.

I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did he receive representations from organizations, either in Montreal or anywhere else in Quebec, concerning the admission of 5,000 Chilean marxist immigrants to Canada?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such pressures. There have been suggestions from all over the world that some Chileans should be allowed into Canada.

[Mr. McGrath.]

HOUSING

TORONTO—INCREASE IN COST—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and it is not hypothetical but actual. During the past year the price of housing in Toronto increased by about 40 per cent. I would like to ask if this is the kind of disruptive fact he was referring to in the Speech from the Throne which he said needed to be assented to, and what is the government going to do about this situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter that is being attended to, and I would refer the hon. member to the various statements of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Gillies: Again I direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I have read the statements of the minister and that is why I am directing the question to the Prime Minister. Because this problem is so serious and involves such a variety of ministries, has the Prime Minister or the cabinet designated one minister to take an interest in and be responsible for this problem and instructed him to bring forth, in a priority sense, some sort of program to deal with this enormous escalation in the price of housing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking a question about the internal functioning of the cabinet. I just want to point out to him that the ministry of housing and urban affairs was set up to ensure that co-ordination was effected by that ministry. In a sense it is a ministry that is more concerned in influencing policies of the government than in carrying out specific programs which very often are within the purview of various departments.

Mr. Gillies: I have one final supplementary, again to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether or not the government has given priority to trying to bring in some law, some legislation, to deal with the rising cost of housing in Canada at this time?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is one of our priorities and we realize, as does the hon. member, that this is a problem that cannot be solved by the federal government acting alone. That is why we have tripartite conferences. As the hon. member knows, the provinces and the municipalities, either through their zoning laws or through their response to federal programs, are jointly engaged with the federal government in trying to solve this problem.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES—REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER TO BANKS TO HOLD THE LINE—RATE CHARGED BY GOVERNMENT ON ADVANCES TO CMHC

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It has become apparent that the American banking system is going to increase its prime interest rate to 10 per cent. Has the minister made any representations to the Canadian banks to get them to hold the line?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been in constant touch with the Canadian Bankers' Association and with the governor of the Bank of Canada, but it is not my practice, nor indeed was it the practice of my predecessors, to speculate on the movement of interest rates.

Mr. Blenkarn: It has become apparent over the past week that government borrowing costs have reached 8.4 per cent. What rate is the government charging Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for advances for social housing?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are charging in the statutory proportion above the cost of government borrowing, but I would have to check the exact rate today and send it to the hon. member.

HOUSING

TORONTO—MEASURES TO STOP UNWARRANTED INCREASES IN COST—REQUEST FOR CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON LAND SPECULATORS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the shocking and disgusting increase in the average cost of a home in Metro Toronto, which is now $50,435, an increase of about $15,000 in the past year, what immediate steps is the minister going to take to stop these unwarranted and unjustified price increases?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are working very closely with the minister responsible for housing in Ontario to get as much money invested in land assembly for quick start land as is possible.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that one of the main components in the high cost of housing has been the cost of land would the minister impose an immediate 100 per cent capital gains tax on land speculators?

● (1430)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have noted the hon. gentleman's idea.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation. The hon. member for St. Catharines rises on a supplementary.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS TO LOWER COST

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister has told the House that nothing can be done without consultation with the provinces. Can the minister at this time not finally take off the 11 per cent excise tax on construction materials to help the housing situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question has been brought up several times already by the hon. member and other members. Again, it is a budgetary matter. Whether I will be able to respond yes or no will have to await the appropriate date.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MEASURES TO MAINTAIN EARNINGS OF WORKERS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I asked the minister a question regarding the Steel Company of Canada increasing wages ahead of the scheduled contract time. He said he had no comment to make on the action of the Steel Company of Canada. Because of his "no comment" comment, and in light of the fact that many labour negotiations have brought about a cost of living clause plus an additional escalation clause in their contracts in order to reduce the effects of inflation, does the minister view this as a common occurrence in future labour negotiations and, if so, what additional steps will the minister take to make sure that real wages keep up with inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question has a lot of speculative content. I had no comment yesterday and I have no comment today.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURPOSE OF "NEAT PITCH" EXERCISE

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether he is aware of the existence of a series of exercises developed by the Canadian Armed Forces, apparently under the code name of "Neat Pitch", and if so, could he say whether these manoeuvres are aimed at revising army strategy in the event of a crisis?

[English]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the meeting which was referred to recently in the newspaper Le Jour took place more than two years ago, which would indicate that this newspaper is not very current. It was a normal contingency planning meeting on aid to the civil power. It took place in Montreal because Montreal is the headquarters of mobile command, but it dealt with aid to the civil power in all the provinces. I might add that aid to the civil power is only undertaken at the request of the Attorney General of a province.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF BILL C-18 TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources along the lines of the question I asked yesterday. Is it his intention or the intention of the government to refer Bill C-18 for study by a committee of the whole House and treat it as a tax bill? Would the minister agree to have it go before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works for study so that witnesses can be called on behalf of provincial governments to assure not only the House but the country that the bill contains terms and conditions in accordance with the agreement made by the ten first ministers of Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary—I was not too sure just what the minister was saying yes to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see the House is in good humour and I am sure the minister will be as well. Will the minister assure the House that the bill will go to the standing committee first for study so that witnesses can be called prior to it going before the committee of the whole House for clause by clause study?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is what I said, but my understanding of the rules is that it will not have to go to committee of the whole if it is referred to the standing committee.

EFFECTS OF PROPOSED EXPORT TAX ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS ON REFINERIES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the proposed export tax on refined petroleum products as announced yesterday, can the minister tell the House whether his department has undertaken a study of the effects of existing refineries in the Atlantic provinces and if new ones planned would be totally thrown out of business as a result of this tax?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might respond to the question. The tax applies only to products from Canadian produced crude oil.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT BRITISH COLUMBIA AIRPORTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the problem of the strike by firefighters at airports in British Columbia. You will recall that yesterday I asked that someone do something to get the armed forces involved in restoring service in British Columbia. That had the direct result of the firefighters at the National Defence unit in Esquimalt walking out this morning. I am going to press my luck today and ask the government to get involved. Maybe that will have the effect that they will fade away, if they cannot do anything.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has just struck out. The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

STATUS OF WOMEN

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND INTERESTS—OTHER AMENDMENTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour who is also in charge of the status of women. In view of the great expectations raised in the hearts and minds of Canadian women by the promise of the government in the Speech from the Throne and by the minister's speech in the House that there would be legislation this session to provide equal treatment for women, can the minister tell us when the long-awaited legislation to set up a federal commission on human rights and interests will be brought forward?

Mr. Baker: Right after football!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I am taking notice of the question for referral to my colleague when he comes back to the House in a few minutes from now.

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): As the minister is not available may I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. If he did not hear it I will repeat it. In view of the great expectations raised in the hearts and minds of Canadian women by the promise of the government in the Speech from the Throne and by the minister's speech in the House that there would be legislation this session to provide equal treatment for women, can the Prime Minister tell the House when the long-awaited legislation to set up a federal commission on human rights and interests, will be brought forward?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to proceed with that legislation in this session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will graciously allow the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway a supplementary.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether I should repeat my question or ask my supplementary first. I will put the supplementary. In view of the fact that hope long deferred maketh the heart sick, can the Minister of Labour tell the House when the amendments to the Canada Pension Plan, the Canadian Citizenship Act and the omnibus bill on the status of women will be placed before the House? If he does not know that, when will the commission on human rights and interests be set up?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has mentioned quite a few amendments to various acts, all of which I referred to in my speech in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I indicated then and I indicate today that it is a priority area in terms of the government's program as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, and I would hope that the hon. member might soon see the specifics that she is looking for.

An hon. Member: But after football!

SPORTS

SIZE OF PLAYING FIELD IN OLYMPIC STADIUM UNDER CONSTRUCTION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Because of the fact that the Olympic stadium in Montreal is being financed through profits from the sale of Olympic coins and a lottery, can the minister advise the House why the playing field within the track is being constructed in accordance with American National League and, indeed, World Football League specifications?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether this matter is so urgent that it should be dealt with now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to say it is a fact that, in order to accommodate Canadian football in the proposed Olympic stadium as presently planned, a considerable alteration will have to be made at great cost to the Canadian taxpayers after the Olympic games. I simply ask the minister, therefore, if he can assure the House that he will intervene right now to make sure that the Olympic stadium will accommodate the Canadian Football League as well as other leagues?

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The minister appears to be anxious to reply to the hon. member's question.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that the Olympic Games financing program does not apply to any specific building but to the over-all Olympic Games, and that the way the funds from the sale of coins are to be spent by the Olympic Corporation is a matter that does not concern the Olympic Games financing program.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a point of order. The minister has said on numerous occasions that the Olympic games are not a federal matter. But we are dealing with the Canadian taxpayers' money in that the Olympic coin program and the lottery program directly involve his department. It should be his responsibility to take care of these things and see that they are done after proper consultation.

Mr. Speaker: The minister will be allowed to reply to the hon. member's alleged point of order. I would think it is debate but, in fairness perhaps the minister should be allowed to reply to the hon. member's argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Olympic Games finance program is a voluntary program. I am surprised the hon. member is not yet aware of it.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY BOXCARS IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister remind tomorrow's meeting, when he appoints a boxcar co-ordinator, that there is also a serious shortage of boxcars in eastern Canada and that, therefore, the co-ordinator will have the serious responsibility of seeing that goods are able to move in Atlantic Canada as well?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to underline this problem to the railways.

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY BOXCARS—POWERS OF CONTROLLER RESPECTING ALLOCATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question just asked. Will this co-ordinator, so called, or controller have the power to direct the allotment or apportionment of cars to the various and several elements in the economy? Will his direction involve penalties, in the event that the railway companies do not carry out his directives?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I do not think that this man will have this power.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What power will he have?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman is a lawyer. I do not know under what power I can authorize this man to direct. I think this man will make reports to the department. I will be ready to table the reports here, and if there is any kind of injustice we can intervene. Legally, however, I do not have this power, and the right hon. gentleman would not have it either.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliament has the power. I ask the minister, why does he not bring such a bill before parliament?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why all the pussyfooting around on this matter? Is this another mess such as the minister described in his department?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the right hon. gentleman's question, he never asked me to bring in a piece of legislation; he asked me if this co-ordinator would have certain powers and I answered no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This will lead to the same mess one now sees in Vancouver in connection with the airport firefighters' strike.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Inasmuch as the minister is going to deny parliament the opportunity to set out the procedures and rules for this co-ordinator, in the event he is unable to function because he will be so restricted will the minister lay his job on the line as a result of that malfunction?

AGRICULTURE

SITUATION OF PORK PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Some time ago I drew to the attention of the minister the fact that pork producers have been losing money in the last few months, to which the minister replied that he was looking into the problem.

Can he tell the House whether this study is now complete and, if so, whether he will make a statement to the House before the Easter recess?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the first official national representation was made today. They were still having discussions in my office when I came to the House. I doubt very much if there will be any announcement before the Easter recess.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since before the House met representations were made to me that feed grain prices had greatly increased this week, can the minister tell the House whether he also received such representations?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have received a brief from the National Pork Producers Association of Canada and they have pointed out all the aspects of the industry. We have had lengthy discussions with them. As I said, the discussion was still continuing when I left my office.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROBLEMS

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the government, in answer to questions from this side of the House, has admitted that there are difficulties in the payment of the subsidy to cattle producers, can the minister tell the House whether an investigation has been made into the problem and the results of such investigation if, in fact, one has been made?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the information I have been given is that the inquiry is still being carried on.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it has not yet been completed. Officials were still trying to arrange a date on which they could make final approval. I would have to check the terms of reference—I believe the review was undertaken jointly with the provincial governments—to see whether publication would be intended.

COMBINES

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE—ALLEGED AGREEMENT BY CERTAIN COMPANIES ON LEVEL OF PREMIUMS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

tion which, according to the Federation of Cooperative Family Economics Associations and the IPIC, prevails in the car insurance business regarding premium rates of different companies some of which colluded to maintain premiums at a certain level? Does the minister intend to use his power and will there be an inquiry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, up to now this request has not been brought to my attention. I think this is a matter for the director of combines to handle, and I am convinced that he will take his responsibilities.

NATIONAL SECURITY

DISCUSSIONS WITH LEADERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION LESS COMPREHENSIVE THAN WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister based on a statement he made on October 16, 1970, when he informed the House that he regarded the War Measures Act as an interim and unsatisfactory measure. I quote his words as recorded on page 194 of Hansard for that date:

> Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature.

Noting that three subsequent throne speeches have been delivered and that no mention was made of this commitment and, in particular, in these times of highjackings, kidnappings and so on, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he has had these discussions yet, if he has not, when he intends to do so, and whether legislation is going to be introduced along the line of the commitment he appears to have made in 1970?

● (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to verify the exact dates but, if my memory serves me right, when I was speaking thus in the House it was at the time the War Measures Act was in application. There were at that time—I cannot recall whether it was before or after—talks between myself and the leaders of the other parties. The hon. member will recall also that the War Measures Act was replaced by legislation which was fully debated and passed by the House. The War Measures Act was replaced by legislation which lasted well into the first part of 1971. So this is perhaps a follow-up on the action to which I was referring at that time.

Mr. Nielsen: That was not the impression which I and I am sure other members got from the Prime Minister's words. Can he say now whether the government is giving any consideration to legislation of a similar nature but less comprehensive than the War Measures Act in order to deal with the kind of crises which may arise in the future and which he obviously had in mind when he made that statement?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that without checking the dates I cannot say, as the hon. member assumes, that is what I had in mind. There was a piece of legislation introduced and passed, legislation to which the hon. member did not refer in his first question. He is right in saying there was discussion, perhaps then but I rather think at a later date, probably during the month of December, regarding legislation which would eventually do away with the need for any special legislation of the kind we had, perhaps by way of a permanent amendment to the Criminal Code.

The answer is that a great deal of work was done on this by the government at the time. We did not feel any need to bring forth a bill. We do not now, but I will very gladly discuss the matter with the leaders of the other parties and if they felt it would be a good idea to take this kind of action on a contingency basis for some future situation I would certainly arrange such a meeting.

PENSIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO CONDUCT INQUIRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the offer made by the minister on several occasions, notably on March 11 and March 22 in the House and in Winnipeg on March 24, to appoint a commissioner to examine into all aspects of railway pensions, including the provisions for those still at work and the pensions of those now retired, can the minister say whether he is yet ready to announce the appointment of such a commissioner?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. We are not yet ready, and I can tell the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre precisely why. Discussion with some of the railway union leaders is under way, and I do not believe the matter can be finalized until further talks have been held with them. I hope it will not take too long.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—ALLEGED FAILURE OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS TO GET IN TOUCH WITH STRIKERS

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the minister said that two senior officials of the department had flown to Vancouver to settle the conflict as soon as possible. Can the minister tell us when these two officials are going to work, because as of 45 minutes ago they had not contacted the striking firemen?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The two officials from the department who were sent to Vancouver were, of course, not conciliators but representatives of the Department of Transport. They were supposed to try to get in touch with the strikers in order to get them back to work. But those who walked out have refused any kind of negotiations and have said they just want what they have asked for.

Mr. Fraser: If the minister would like to see me after the question period I will give him the telephone number at which these gentlemen can be reached. I assure the minister that they have not been contacted and that nobody has tried to contact them.

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—AUTHORITY OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS IN SEEKING SETTLEMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): I appreciate your recognizing me again, Mr. Speaker. The preamble to my earlier question was somewhat lengthy. I would like to ask the minister a question in light of the situation as it is developing. The strike is spreading. The National Defence firefighters in Esquimalt walked out this morning. Have there been any discussions between the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Labour with a view to ending this serious situation? I should also like to ask whether the people who have been dispatched from his office to settle the strike and investigate the situation in Vancouver have sufficient authority to discuss meaningfully with the firefighters in Vancouver who are waiting to be contacted—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply. We are running short of time.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): My answer will be brief, Mr. Speaker, but it will be in two parts. First, may I say it was quite inappropriate for a member of parliament to have put a question in the House yesterday which had the effect of pulling the Esquimalt firefighters out from work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have to understand that there is a union called the Public Service Alliance of Canada which is certified for the whole country to negotiate for public servants, including the firefighters, and the government of Canada is bound by its own law. This means that the government has to negotiate with the alliance and not with a group which is fighting against the alliance. I hope the hon. member understands that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have time for a few supplementaries, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: I should like to direct a question—

Mr. Reilly: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Hamilton West. He will be recognized in a moment. The hon. member for Ottawa West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has deliberately attempted on three occasions in the last 24 hours to persuade members of this House that his department has its hands tied by virtue of labour legislation and the requirement to deal with the collective bargaining agent. However, if the bargaining agent, as is the case here, cannot negotiate for its members because they will not obey it, there is a law, and the minister has a duty to enforce the law, which he is not now doing.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Cite the law!

Some hon. Members: What law?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the points of order or questions of privilege. Perhaps this will make it unnecessary for us to arrange for an adjournment or special debate on the question. If hon. members wish to solve the matter in five or ten minutes, we can forget about a special debate. The Minister of Transport rises on the point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I simply wish to say that if there were a law which would allow the government to go around the rights that have been given by parliament to the alliance, outside the injunction and the sending to jail of workers, I would like the hon. member to tell me what it is because he would be rendering a great service to the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I seek the co-operation of all hon. members. The hon. member now wishes to rise on a further point of order. It seems to me that this is strictly a debate in which members are engaging. I would hope there might be an opportunity later in the day at some time convenient to the House to engage in further and more enlightening debate on this very important matter. For the moment the hon. member for Hamilton West has been recognized.

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT—SUGGESTION THAT MINISTER OF LABOUR APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplemental to those already asked. Is the Minister of Labour playing any role with respect to this dispute? Is he, indeed, aware of the role he could play in terms of the promotion of industrial peace by assigning a mediator? Has this question been under consideration by his department?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I think the question implies, as the hon. member is fully aware, that with reference to this particular dispute the Department of Labour is not responsible. Obviously, though, if there are facilities available in the department of which other departments wish to avail themselves, they are available.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. We have reached the end of the question period, but in fairness to the hon. member for Témiscamingue, who had a brief question earlier, perhaps he might be allowed to ask a question at this time.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—DECREASE IN GRANTS TO NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—INCLUSION OF ROUYN AND NORANDA WITH HULL

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he say why the budget of Opportunities for Youth Program was reduced by 57 per cent in the northwestern part of Quebec and why the department joined the cities of Rouyn-Noranda to that of Hull where the problems to be studied and solved are entirely different?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have on several occasions, both in the House and before the committee, explained the precise basis for the allocation formula. It involves the 33 labour market areas in Canada, the 1971 census of youth population, and an assessment of the jobs available to such people without the skills or experience required. As for the figures regarding the precise district to which the hon. member refers, I will certainly look into them, but that is the basis for the allocation.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think some clarification must be made of the minister's answer to me with regard to the airport firefighters' strike in terms of what his department can do under these very difficult circumstances. It appears to me that the Minister of Labour is abdicating his responsibility in this regard by indicating that it is up to the Minister of Transport and his officials and Treasury Board—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —to negotiate a settlement with the firemen. I point out to the minister quite emphatically that he has a role to play under section 195—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I asked earlier this afternoon whether a statement on motions would be made respecting the action of the government in banning, in whole or in part, cattle imported from the United States. I was informed by Your Honour that I might receive an answer during the question period, but it has not been forthcoming. I plead with Your Honour that the minister should make a statement to the House on this important matter in view of the fact that on March 15, as reported on page 556 of Hansard, he told the House:

However, I do not think anyone can guarantee that there are or are not such cattle coming in.

That statement was made by the minister. He has not clarified the position or told the House the circumstances and conditions under which United States cattle will be banned from entering Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I think I would have to classify the hon. member's point of order in the same category as the one raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West. It is more debate than a point of order. Orders of the day.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, COMPENSATION FOR OIL IMPORT COSTS, AND REGULATION OF PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

The House resumed, from Monday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-18, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, last night when I was speaking in the debate on Bill C-18 I was making reference to what the province of Alberta intended to do with the amount of money it would receive from the new royalty rates that had been set up. Perhaps I might clarify what royalty rates the province of Alberta has attempted to place in legislation. According to a ministerial announcement in the legislative assembly of Alberta on March 28, 1974, for all "old" oil the government proposed an average supplementary royalty rate of 65 per cent on the amount of the price increment over the existing price of crude oil in Alberta; and that for all "new" oil the government proposed an average supplementary royalty rate of 35 per cent on the amount of the price increment over the existing price of crude oil in Alberta, corresponding to the average supplementary rate of 65 per cent on "old" oil. The Leduc field, discovered in 1947, happens to lie entirely within the riding of Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May we have order, please. It is extremely difficult for the Chair to follow the debate and to hear the hon. member for Wetaskiwin who has the floor. It is even difficult to hear the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, the point of order I wished to raise was that I was under the impression the hon. member was trying to make a speech, but it was very difficult to determine which member it was who was making the speech. I think Your Honour has clarified the matter already.

Mr. Speaker: The point is well taken. I have to call for the co-operation of hon. members to give an opportunity to the hon. member who has the floor, and who has been recognized by the Chair, to be heard by all members of the House who want to follow his speech and take part in the debate.

Mr. Schellenberger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to make my speech as interesting as possible so hon. members may listen to my words of wisdom. The Leduc field, discovered in 1947, lies entirely within my riding, and the people in that area are becoming concerned that in 10 or 12 years' time this oil supply will be entirely depleted. Many of these people depend entirely for their livelihood on production of this oil. They are raising families and would like their youngsters to stay in the area. Therefore, it is essential for the government of Alberta to provide alternative sources of employment, to provide industries for the area when this oil runs out. I think the province intends to use some of this revenue to establish industry that will keep these young people in the area.

If I may return to the bill, I should like to make some comments on Part IV. As provided in the bill, the import subsidy is indiscriminate. It seems that the subsidy is paid to the importing oil companies no matter what this refined oil is used for. I think it would be far better for the bill to provide some mechanism whereby we could apply a discriminate subsidy so that people who use petroleum products for luxury items, such as cars, boats and similar vehicles, would not be subsidized. Only oil used for essential purposes should be subsidized. Surely, it is not beyond the capabilities of the minister or his department to devise a mechanism whereby a more discriminate subsidy, rather than the wide open one now proposed, is applied.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there is a notable exception made in the bill. I refer to the fact that individual oil importers are not required rationally to compete in the purchase of offshore oil. According to my understanding of the bill, it is left up to them to buy offshore oil at whatever price without first trying to make the best possible purchase. These companies know they are going to be subsidized at the expense of the taxpayers so that the cost of the oil is brought down to $6.50 a barrel. I suggest that when the bill goes to committee this part of the bill should be carefully scrutinized and perhaps amended with a view to being fair to both parties, and so the oil companies will rationally compete for oil in the market.

Parts II and III of the bill give me the most concern since the government is being given a wide range of powers. In fact, an attempt to document them verbatim from the bill required almost nine full pages of foolscap. Why do they need these powers and are they really necessary? It seems to me we are looking at the same type of powers we were asked to approve in the oil allocations bill. I hope this party will not allow the government to again force this big brother attitude on the Canadian public.

Among the powers required by the government in Clauses 2 and 3 is the freedom to establish the export price of oil at any level at any time. Basically, then, what we would have would be a flexible tax subject to government whim and variable from month to month. The government has also asked for freedom to grant exemptions from the tax to anyone should it so desire. If these powers are granted, surely it is not too much to ask that they be scrutinized by a parliamentary committee, with its findings presented to the House.

Furthermore, the federal government would be in a position under Clause 36 of this legislation to fix the price of oil within provincial boundaries if it so desired. We feel this is a provincial responsibility, and that provincial governments should be brought into the picture in order that they would be at least consulted and asked to grant approval of the fixing of such a price, should it be necessary. Powers of the sort to which I have alluded are just not necessary, but could quite easily lead to a precedent whereby other industries or resources could be brought under similar legislation, such as our coal resources or perhaps even hydro electric power for that matter.

This bill also gives the government the power to unilaterally establish the price of oil in any province should that province wish to withdraw from the agreement. Let me refer in Hansard to a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) just after the Federal-Provincial Conference. He stated on March 28:

—the pricing and other arrangements I will now outline will last for a period of 15 months, beginning on April 1 and therefore going to the end of June next year.

I went to the Alberta Hansard since and this is the only way we can tell whether this bill is in line with the conference decisions, and I found that the Premier of Alberta stated immediately following that conference:

I made one interim undertaking—but only one. I agreed that in the interest of stability of the Canadian economy, we would ask the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission to hold the average price of $6.50 per barrel to that level for a period of one year. The request was made by the Federal Government and it is our understanding that they—for their part—agreed that any proposed Federal legislation involving the interprovincial trade and movement of petroleum would be enacted in such a manner as to complement and not conflict with the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission Act.

Looking at the bill, I fail to find any clause that states there is to be a 15-month termination date. Instead, I find a clause which states that the government has the power to unilaterally set the price of oil if at such time a province wants to get out of this agreement. In other words, the government has the power to say that it is sorry, but if things change within the next year or so that is too bad; they will have to keep the price at the same level. That is the power this government wants, and I think we should thoroughly look into it to see whether these agreements were in fact made. The provinces should tell this parliament whether this bill is in line with the discussions that took place at the conference.

Other clauses, in particular Clause 60, give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) the power to appoint people to look at the records of any company or province importing or exporting oil. It seems to me that under this clause the government is asking for the authority not only to go to the companies but to the provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan in particular, or their marketing boards, and ask for the records kept and the reasons they set certain prices, or anything of that sort.

As I stated earlier, we do not know whether this power is in line with discussions that have taken place or is just another one of those foxy items placed in the bill which the opposition should scrutinize thoroughly before approving. On reading between the lines, perhaps this part of the legislation is intended to be all-encompassing so as to include domination of these particular marketing boards. We should recommend the establishment of a parliamentary committee to investigate the proper usage of this legislation should it be passed.

It is interesting to note that we had long discussions about the energy allocation board which was to be responsible for administering the oil allocation bill. Apparently it did not have too much to do and we now find, according to this bill, it is given some work by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In his speech yesterday the minister stated three reasons for this bill, and I think they are important. The first reason was that the price of Canadian crude oil should move upward to encourage exploration and development in Canada and thereby ensure further availability of our resources. The second was that approximately one-half of Canadian crude oil production which is exported should be sold at a fair and reasonable opportunity price in the United States markets. The third was that the proceeds from the sale of oil in the U.S. at a price higher than the domestic Canadian price should be employed in order to reduce the exposition of consumers in eastern Canada. I suggest those are practical reasons. Although some of us may disagree with some of the principles, at least those are the practical reasons the minister had in bringing this bill forward.

The question I have been trying to place before this House is: Does the minister require all the powers in Clauses 2, 3 and 5 of this bill? There are nine pages of powers documented here. For this reason it is necessary that the bill be sent to a standing committee of the House for further study and amendment in order that it will really embody the principles discussed at the Federal-Provincial Conference.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of saying a few words in respect of this energy bill, Bill C-18, designed to impose an export charge on oil products. In addition, the bill will put into law the agreements of the first ministers regarding energy prices which was settled on March 27 of this year. It also gives the federal government the power to set the price of oil if the first ministers do not reach a voluntary agreement in connection with oil prices by June 30, 1975. In addition, it proposes to compensate oil companies in respect of the price paid for oil imported into eastern Canada.

Bill C-18 is the latest plank in the ongoing saga of this government's attempt to offer a national energy policy. The structure so far has appeared very fragile, resting on weak foundations. One wonders who the real architect of this so-called ongoing national oil policy is; the minister of energy or the oil companies themselves.

A number of bills were introduced in the last session, and this is the latest in this session, in an effort to formulate the kind of oil policy that would benefit Canadians. It seems to me if we are to have an oil policy that makes any economic sense there are three key components which must be contained in it. First, we must ensure that Canada has control of the oil industry in this country. Second, we must move in the direction of self-sufficiency in oil for Canada. Third, we must have the ability to set and control prices of oil in this country. Let us look at those three elements as they exist today and what the New Democratic Party would like to see develop in these areas. First, regarding the control of the petroleum industry in Canada, it is shocking to recall that 91 per cent of the oil industry in this country is foreign-owned and that 99 per cent of all petroleum refining capacity is also foreign-owned.

We all know this foreign ownership means that decisions are being made by multinational companies whose primary interest is to maximize their own profits, not necessarily for the benefit of the Canadian economy. This means that decisions in respect of energy development, exploration, export of energy and price to a large degree are made outside this country and outside the parameters of the government of Canada. It also means that profits in terms of billions of dollars flow out of the country into the coffers of the multinational companies, most of which are located in the United States. It also means that to date exports have been designed primarily to serve United States markets. This has meant we have used up our inexpensive reserves of oil and natural gas which will mean that when Canada needs these commodities we will have to pay more because we will have to get oil, for example, from the expensive oil sands or from the far north. While we have been exporting our cheap energy to the United States and the American industry has been benefitting, the Canadian economy is now faced with high energy costs.

On the issue of control, the New Democratic Party called for export controls in this 29th Parliament as early as January 1973. Finally, much later the government decided to cut back some of our oil exports to the United States but nowhere sufficient to really bring about self-sufficiency or control of this vital commodity. If we are to have an oil policy which makes sense, it seems to me that we must move in the direction now of controlling the multinational oil companies through a national petroleum company. I do not mean a national petroleum company as hinted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). A Liberal national petroleum company would be created, it seems to me, just to compete with the private sector. I should like to have a national petroleum company that would have the power to be the only purchaser of domestic and imported oil. By being the only purchaser this national petroleum company would therefore be able to set the price of oil and determine policy in the interest of Canada so far as oil supply and development are concerned. The policy which presently exists is primarily designed in the interest of the multinational oil companies.

The second element in a national energy policy must be self-sufficiency. Why is that? Well, without self-sufficiency in oil we are at the mercy of the international oil market which, it now has become very evident, was manipulated by the multinational oil companies in order to raise oil prices. These world prices for oil now bear no relationship to the cost of production. Indeed, some of the Saudi Arabian oil which sells at $10 or $14 a barrel costs the oil companies four cents a barrel to get out of the ground and into the tankers in the Middle East. We can see what has happened insofar as the manipulation of price in the world market is concerned. Indeed, a spokesman for Imperial Oil in Canada said that his company will charge what the market will bear and that not necessarily does the price of oil have to be related to the cost of production. It is also very important that we have self-sufficiency in order to insulate ourselves from the manipulative world market.

It is very important as well to have self-sufficiency because of what lies in store for us within the next decade. From recent reports I have read from all sources, including the oil industry and independent analyses, it appears that by 1980 this country will be short of oil to the extent of 720,000 barrels a day. The situation now is that we produce in round figures two million barrels of oil a day, one million barrels of which is exported to the United States. In addition we import one million barrels a day into eastern Canada because there is no pipeline to the east. Projections show that the demand for oil in Canada by 1980 will increase by an extra one million barrels a day. We have no pipeline to the east. Although we have the proposed Sarnia-Montreal pipeline and the proposed production of the oil sands by 1980, the maximum production from the oil sands will be 380,000 barrels a day which will leave Canada short to the extent of 720,000 barrels a day by 1980 if we continue to export to the United States.

Because of an oil policy initiated in 1961 by the Conservative Party which did not provide for extension of the oil pipeline to eastern Canada we have this problem today. The minister announced the extension of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal with an initial capacity of 250,000 barrels a day and a future capacity of only 500,000 barrels a day. In light of this extension of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline I wonder whether we will ever have an all-Canadian route designed to supply eastern Canada. From reading the literature of the oil companies it would seem that they are quite unhappy about a prospect of an all-Canadian oil pipeline. They see it as a danger to their markets in eastern Canada in terms of manipulating prices which I will explain later. It seems to me that over the past few years, because of international development, the oil companies have boxed the minister into a corner. He needs to export oil now in order to collect the export tax which he will use to subsidize consumers in eastern Canada. But we all know he will run short of oil by 1980. The oil companies argue that they need to charge the world price for oil in Canada in order to obtain sufficient funds to explore for new oil and to develop the oil sands.

It is a myth that there is a need to have world prices on oil in Canada in order to have sufficient funds. I remind members of the House that in 1973, before the freeze on crude oil was introduced in Canada, the oil companies received an increase of 33 per cent in the price of crude oil and the oil companies in Canada benefitted to the extent of some $700 million a year. This recent agreement which was reached on March 27 gave then another $528 million a year. In light of that windfall, in light of the profits they have been making so far, I think their argument that they need even higher prices to stimulate exploration in Canada does not hold any water, or oil, if you want to put it that way. It seems to me that the priority for a Canadian energy policy is to serve the Canadian market first. Unless we do this, we will have a real crisis by 1980. It seems to me imperative that we begin to phase out oil exports to the United States in order to meet the Canadian demands by 1980 because he will have to import 720,000 barrels a day and then we will be more and more in the hands of the international oil companies and subject to their manipulation of world prices.

● (1530)

The third element of a sensible national oil policy is one whereby the Canadian government can determine the prices of oil and oil products in this country. Many months ago the NDP called for a two price system for oil when oil prices began to rise. We advocated the use of the export tax to accomplish this, and the government finally agreed. One half of the revenue of that export tax was to return to the producing provinces. The price freeze on western oil was to come off on January 31 last, but again under pressure from the NDP, the government, which was quite afraid of an election at that time, said they would extend the freeze over the winter months until this spring.

Then, of course we had the fateful federal-provincial conference on energy on March 27. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said: "This is a great day for Canadian federalism" and both he and the premiers of the provinces emerged from the conference with smiles, each claiming a victory. When I read about the results of that conference and listened to the statements of the federal and provincial authorities, I thought to myself that George Orwell's "1984" had finally arrived. We have been used to double talk around this House, but now the circle is complete—we have double think as well.

I remind members of the House that in 1972 crude oil in Canada was selling at $3 a barrel. By 1973, it was up to $4 a barrel. In 1974, this year, it is up to $6.50 a barrel. It has doubled in two years. Who is the chief beneficiary of this doubling of the price of oil in Canada? Is it the Canadian consumer who will be paying eight to ten cents more per gallon for gasoline?

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie permit a question from the hon. member for Calgary North?

Mr. Symes: I think the hon. member for Calgary North would benefit from listening to my arguments. I will be glad to answer his question at the end of my remarks when he has heard how I have argued my points.

As I was asking, is the Canadian homeowner the chief beneficiary of this doubling of the price of crude oil in Canada? The Canadian homeowner who heats his house by oil can expect to pay some $80 more next year to heat his house. Of course, all Canadians will pay more now. Because farmers will have to pay more for fuel, it will mean that the cost of food will go up. Because transport companies will have to pay more to move manufactured goods, the goods in department stores will be more expensive as well. So who is the chief beneficiary of this doubling in price? Not the Canadian consumer. Is it the producing province? Alberta, which is the chief producer of oil in this country, will be getting a great deal of revenue from this new price increase. But I notice that when you compare the amount that Alberta will be getting with the amount which the oil companies will be getting, the province comes out second best. When the price of oil was frozen at $4 a barrel, the Alberta government was taxing at the royalty rate of approximately 22 per cent. Of the recent $2.50 increase per barrel, the Alberta government will get $1.62 and the oil companies will get 88 cents. Therefore, of the $6.50 per barrel of oil the oil companies will now get $4 a barrel. That is not bad when you realize that the production cost of a barrel of oil is approximately $1.53.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I hope you never teach math.

Mr. Symes: That is the last figure I have. It may have gone up a couple of cents since then. The province of Alberta is getting more, but the oil companies are getting much more out of this recent deal. The province of Saskatchewan, which produces a minimum amount of oil for Canada under this new formula gets 10 cents a barrel less than when it was sharing under the old export tax formula. But the difference between what happens in Alberta and Saskatchewan—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —is like night and day.

Mr. Symes: Yes, it is like night and day because all of the difference between the price increase and $3.38 a barrel which the oil companies are allowed to take for their crude oil and the $6.50, which is the new price, goes to the provincial treasury in Saskatchewan to be returned to the people of Saskatchewan in terms of the future development of energy and other provincial programs. This is an example of what a national petroleum company could be doing for all Canadians. If we had a government with a will to do so, it could follow the Saskatchewan example.

The oil companies have reaped a bonanza from this new pricing policy. In 1973, oil company profits were up over 1972 by 45 per cent for Imperial Oil; there was an increase of 43 per cent for Shell Oil over 1972; and in 1973 an increase of 58 per cent over 1972 for Gulf Oil. I can just imagine what the profit increases will now be for 1974! The consumer pays and pays, and meanwhile the oil companies want more with no guarantee that the increased profits will be re-invested in Canada in exploration and energy development. Indeed, Gulf Oil, as I mentioned earlier, in a January publication calls on all Canadians to be willing to pay the world price of $10.50 a barrel here in Canada. This price rip-off is made legal by this bill. It is the result of a lack of a national energy policy. We will be examining Bill C-18 clause by clause in committee, and I hope it will be in the Committee on National Resources and Public Works and not in Committee of the Whole.

I should like to make a few comments on some clauses in Bill C-18 before we deal with them in greater detail in committee. As I mentioned, the export charge will now be legitimized by this bill and will apply to all Canadians. I think it would have been much better if we had remained with the old formula of a fifty-fifty split in the export tax between the province and the federal government. But here we are presented with a fait accompli. The March 27 federal-provincial negotiations decided the issue. Bill C-18 will also legitimize the March 27 price agreement for 15 months. It gives the federal government power to set prices if there is no agreement. Again, we will see more of these ad hoc solutions to a national problem.

But the one part of the bill that gives my colleagues and myself the most concern is that part which is designed to compensate oil companies in eastern Canada which import oil. What a beautiful set up! The oil companies in eastern Canada have to import high priced oil because there is no pipeline there. They import the high world price oil, and thus provide the argument for western oil producers to up the price of the cheaper western Canadian oil so that there is one price for all of Canada. Meanwhile, the eastern oil companies are being subsidized by the federal government so that the price will not rise to the world level.

The question then is: how do we determine the amount of the subsidy to go to the multinational oil companies? The minister says that the price difference is common knowledge; that the companies pay the posted price. He may be a trusting soul. He may accept the word of the oil companies, and we saw evidence of that recently when the government agreed to that roundabout deal to purchase Roumanian heating oil at $1 a gallon. But I am more suspicious than that. I wonder how the Canadian government will know the real price of this oil that is being purchased abroad.

The Canadian government does not have access to the financial records of the international oil companies. We have difficulty in finding out the real transportation costs of the multinationals because of their system of selling to subsidiaries. We have seen this take place time and time again in eastern Canada with Exxon, the parent company of Imperial Oil, buying Venezuelan oil, selling that oil to its subsidiary, Creole Oil, at a mark up, and Creole Oil in turn selling it at a mark up to Imperial Oil. Of course this shows as an increase in price to Imperial, but all the time the profit is going back to the parent company, Exxon. It is all one big happy family, and the Canadian government will be subsidizing it.

It is here that we need a guarantee that there will be a thorough investigation of the books of the Canadian subsidiaries, and also access to the pricing policies of the multinationals and of the foreign governments from which they buy oil. We also want to know what guarantee there will be that the foreign oil companies, the multinationals and their subsidiaries, will purchase oil at the lowest price when they know in advance that they will be compensated by the Canadian government. The NDP members on the committee will be proposing amendments to tighten up this part of the bill.

This is not the occasion to go through the bill clause by clause, Mr. Speaker, but one thing I would like to re-emphasize is that until the government comes up with a comprehensive oil policy to control the Canadian oil industry, to set forth the goal of Canadian self-sufficiency and to move toward it speedily, and to set up a system whereby we can control prices in Canada, we will have a series of these ad hoc bills arising out of crises that will develop in this very important sector in Canada. When we see what lies ahead of us in the next decade it seems to me more and more crucial that the government must move in the direction I have suggested, in the direction of government control and regulation of this precious source of energy on which the whole nation depends.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North, on a question to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the hon. member talking about the price of crude petroleum now being $6.50 a barrel. Didn't the Premier of Saskatchewan agree to that price, and did he not ask for a higher price, because he felt he should have the international price for Saskatchewan because a lot of its oil is exported, with Saskatchewan of course using a considerable amount of crude from Alberta? Didn't Blakeney agree to that $6.50?

Mr. Symes: The situation of the province of Saskatchewan cannot be compared with that of Alberta. It is like trying to compare apples and oranges because of the amount of oil produced by Saskatchewan and because it is a have-not province. Nevertheless, in the circumstances, and under the guidelines with respect to the negotiations set out at that time, of course Mr. Blakeney had to agree to the best deal for the people of that province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions then before I recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) perhaps I could present what the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) has suggested to the House by way of a point of order, and that is that this measure, if it passes second reading, be considered in a committee outside this chamber rather than in the committee of the whole.

Usually such questions have been reserved until the end of second reading and debate thereon, because sometimes the Chair can then sense whether such a change would be acceptable or not. But in fairness to the hon. member, and to all hon. members, perhaps I could put the suggestion now. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie is suggesting that this measure go into the committee on National Resources rather than into the committee of the whole. On this point of order, which I gather we could best deal with now, I will recognize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite agreeable to that. The actual name of the committee is National Resources and Public Works, and perhaps by unanimous consent the motion before the House could be amended so as to delete the reference to the committee of the whole and make a specific reference to that committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: We certainly agree to that, and that is the reason we asked the question today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All right then, it is agreed and ordered that the question be on second reading with referral to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on Bill C-18 I must comment on the seriousness of this debate and on the lack of attendance by government members. It is they who are changing Canada's constitution one more time through this particular piece of legislation. As I say, this is a major debate on how we Canadians shall go forward from this day on if this bill is passed. This is the second major change in Canada's constitution that has been implemented by the government. I will not take the time now to deal with the first one, but the third one still to come has to do with the Canadian Wheat Board.

In the case of the first change, enabling legislation was passed by the provinces. That is not the case in this instance. No enabling legislation is necessary. The federal authorities are taking absolute control of the oil resources of the provinces, which at the moment happen to be concentrated in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In the negotiations at the energy conference on March 27 once again western Canada was taken by the ear to the woodshed by eastern Canada. I have no doubt that that is what happened. Why did Lougheed make what he said was the best deal possible? Why did he say that $6.50 was the best deal possible? The answer is quite simple. What happens in the woodshed? The wood is put to the person brought to the woodshed. What was the wood on this occasion? The wood was section 92(10)(c) of the British North America Act which reads as follows:

> Such Works as, although wholly situate within the Province, are before or after their Execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general Advantage of Canada or for the Advantage of Two or more of the Provinces.

● (1550)

The federal government threatened, beyond the shadow of a doubt, to use that heavy hammer on the provinces. Mr. Lougheed and Mr. Blakeney bowed to the heavy pressure. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because they could foresee the huge constitutional legal crisis confronting Canada.

In Alberta we saw through the scheme of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada a short while ago in relation to the Supreme Court. The obvious choice for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was a gentleman by the name of Martland from Western Canada. But no constitutional crisis in this country was going to be fought with something like a fair break in the Supreme Court with a chief justice who originally came from the province of Alberta. We do not have the same constitutional setup as the United States, so the Prime Minister can put anybody he likes into the Supreme Court without his action being ratified by this House or the Senate. He put a junior member of the Supreme Court in this superior position and thus the Supreme Court was loaded against western Canada. Mr. Lougheed, the premier of Alberta, knew it and Mr. Blakeney, the premier of Saskatchewan, knew it.

Some people might suggest that I dreamed this up but an article in the Montreal Gazette of March 29 puts it rather clearly as follows:

> More generally, Wednesday's agreement amounts to a major constitutional concession by the two producing provinces that their natural resources are not subject to exclusive provincial jurisdiction as traditionally maintained. And because they have been persuaded to put their mounting oil revenues into capital rather than current account, these dollars will not distort the existing federal-provincial revenue equalization program out of all recognizable shape.

The Montreal Gazette knew what was going on in the woodshed. So did the Globe and Mail on March 28, in an article which read:

> However, several premiers said that the agreement on price was reached only after a federal ultimatum threatening to set the price unilaterally.

An article in the New York Times of March 24 pointed out the same thing. The United States is watching our situation very closely. This article reads:

> ... Canada's oil-producing provinces and the federal government are trying to negotiate their way out of a legal dispute that involves the confederation that holds this country together.

The Prime Minister came out of the woodshed and said it had been a great day for federalism. Any time you have to take the children into the woodshed and whip them over such a serious case as this, you can rest assured that when they become of age or when they have the means, they might retaliate. You may rue the day you took them to the woodshed.

I just want to issue a word of caution to this House, Mr. Speaker. Who am I to say that one slight change in Bill C-18 could not add electric power in the preamble and thus impose a charge on the exports of electrical power? Why could that not be added now that we have broken precedents? Why could the James Bay Power not be taxed by the government as well? I say to all members of this House who are worried about confederation, do not think that federalism was served well by that particular act in the woodshed, because it was not. There may be serious consequences in the days ahead.

There is no question in my mind that Premier Lougheed fought a violent fight and did the best he could for Albertans.

An hon. Member: He was satisfied.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Was he satisfied? My hon. friend can look at the mathematics. Before March 28 they were getting something like $4 a barrel for crude plus half the tax of $6.40. That gave them $3.20 plus $4, making $7.20. That is what Alberta was getting before April 1. After April 1 it was getting $6.50. Were they satisfied?

An hon. Member: He said so!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Certainly. He took his licking like a man and came out smiling. Many a time a boy was locked into the woodshed with the school teacher and had to come out smiling before the class. The cards were stacked against him and the teacher had the strap. The strap was the constitutional weapon.

What is going to happen now? Hon. members can ask if Albertans are greedy. An increase of $2.50 per barrel will mean revenue of $900 million per year for the province. They might ask what we are going to do with it. For one thing, we could build the new railroads that we badly need. We could give some help to the oil companies if we want them to continue exploration. But on all oil produced in Alberta there remains a tax of $4.20 under this bill, which applies for one year. What it will be after that is open to question, but $4.20 on every barrel of oil that is exported comes to about $3.78 million per day and that is pretty good money.

In a case before the National Energy Board recently, there was an application for permission to export more oil to the United States. It was said that it would be necessary to export the oil because in order to establish one price for oil all across Canada, money would be needed to subsidize the provinces east of the Ottawa line. That is no secret. Everybody here knows that the tax will be used to subsidize consumers in the provinces east of the Ottawa line. What does that $3.78 million per day mean over one year? Well, it amounts to $1,400,000,000. Albertans realize that they will get $900 million more under this contract but the province of Quebec will get even more. Will it serve federalism well for Albertans to realize that? I do not think it is going to lessen the alienation that exists in western Canada when these figures are understood. Our educational system is pretty good out there and people will be able to make the calculations.

The most significant thing about this payment is that it does not affect the equalization payments so Quebec continues to get 50 per cent of that, whatever that might be. I grew up in a large family—

An hon. Member: Do you approve of them?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, I approve of large families, but my parents could not have shown that much favouritism and have kept the other eight happy. My friends over there can laugh, but if they think this is a great day for federalism they may nod their heads with approval today because tomorrow they might not be able to nod. That is how bad a day it is for federalism. One wonders what Alberta and western Canada might do with the money. Well, they could give the oil companies a better shake or build a new railroad through the mountains in order to get their products to the west.

We see the NDP saying that there must be an export tax on all products such as refined oil products and lumber. Of course, we could build an empire and completely isolate ourselves from the world with a tax like that, but we cannot afford isolation.

● (1600)

Recently the government said it wants to see a 513-mile pipeline built from Sarnia to Montreal. That pipeline is to satisfy Quebec's needs. We are supposed to defer additional sales to the United States in order to solve eastern Canada's oil difficulties. If the government really means what it says, it would not advocate the building of a 200,000 barrel a day capacity pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal. It would build a pipeline from Winnipeg, or from the tar sands. Then, we could really assure oil for Quebec and eastern Canada. But what has happened? The superport will still be built on the St. Lawrence, up by Quebec City. Why should it not be built there? After all, as things now stand that is the only way the government will be able to guarantee oil for the eastern market. The mechanism for bringing oil from the west to the east does not exist. The pipelines from Sarnia will not provide for all eastern oil requirements, even by 1980. So, this government proposal is nothing but window dressing.

The Prime Minister on March 28, after the $6.50 per barrel price and the single price across Canada had been agreed on, said that that was a great day for federalism. He said that Canadian oil reserves are limited, so we must encourage further exploration and development if we are to enlarge our reserves. He said that a huge investment is necessary, to guarantee adequate future supplies and that, therefore, a higher domestic price was justified. Then, he said that he was dead against windfall profits accruing to multinational oil companies.

A long time ago a newspaperman asked me, "What do you think of Americans coming to Alberta and finding oil?" I said that if an American wants to come and clean out my barn, let him bring a pitch fork, and I will tell him where to pile the manure. There is little difference in principle between an American coming over to clean out my barn and an American coming over to find oil. They have come over and found oil, and now the Alberta government says, "We, the government of Alberta, will take 65 per cent of your take as royalty." Mr. Speaker, 65 per cent is a fair hunk. That is the size of the royalty paid on conventional gas and petroleum taken from Alberta. To encourage new finds, the Alberta government has agreed to take only 35 per cent on newly discovered reserves. I would not be suprised if the multinational oil companies think these royalties a little steep. They could easily say to us, "Keep your oil; it is pretty expensive. We will go somewhere else." For that reason I was not surprised to read in the April 8 edition of The Albertan that:

> Harold McKenzie, president of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Ltd., says that even now oil exploration activity is swinging away from Canada to the United States where the relative return to producers is higher.

The article goes on to say:

> It's a simple fact of economic life, says the president of Shell Canada Ltd. that the industry needs to achieve a fair rate of return as an incentive to further investment... unless petroleum companies are encouraged to explore in the Arctic and off shore, Canadian supplies from present commercially available reserves will fall below total domestic demand by 1977 and make Canada a net crude importer.

We have been told over and over again in this House that we can do one of two things. If we cut off oil exports to the United States, we will have enough oil for our own use for about 11 years. If we continue to export oil to the United States and so expand the foreign market for Canadian oil, our oil will last about another six years. So, the Liberals can chuckle all they want about the Prime Minister's statement that March 28 was a great day for federalism because oil prices had been kept down to $6.50 per barrel.

About a week ago the financial section of the Toronto Star carried an article which said in so many words, "If you want to invest soundly, invest in Home Oil." The writer was addressing Torontonians who read the Toronto Star. Why did he advise them to invest in Home Oil? Apparently the majority of Home Oil shareholders are in Toronto. So, there was one Torontonian telling other Torontonians to invest in their own company. But, why did he tell them to invest in Home Oil? I looked into this. It appears that Home Oil owns or has rights to North Sea oil producing properties. Clearly, nobody is going to freeze the price of oil found in the North Sea. So, Home Oil is exploring for oil in the North Sea. Apparently, it is not interested in looking for oil in Canada.

Now, I come to windfall profits. What is a windfall profit? What is an excess profit? Let me illustrate. This year I lost a lot of money in the cattle business. In the first four months I lost a great deal of money. Perhaps in the next six months I could break even. Perhaps I shall enjoy a windfall profit which will make up for the loss I sustained in the first part of this year. There is nothing wrong with that. A man could lose money one year and, if he has enough reserves to stay in business, could make perhaps 200 per cent more next year, to make up for his losses. I listened to members of the NDP speaking on oil profits. One said that an oil company made 45 per cent profit last year; another company made 42 per cent, and a third company made 47 per cent. I was amazed that profit margins were so low. Dominion Stores increased profits by 102 per cent in 1973 over 1972. Falconbridge made 722 per cent more than in the previous year. What did the company make in the year previous? You must look at the whole picture if you want to see what is happening to profits.

I hold in my hand an advertisement put out by Imperial Oil and carried in Maclean's Magazine. I assume the advertisement is correct; otherwise the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would act. According to the advertisement, Imperial Oil made expenditures between 1947 and 1972 of $20.1 billion. Revenues from operations in the same period totalled $18.1 billion. If these figures are correct, and I assume they are, is Imperial Oil not justified in looking for a little profit somewhere?

Let us consider another publication put out by The Chase Manhattan Bank. According to the pamphlet entitled, "The Petroleum Situation":

> This Bank's 30 company study group constitutes a major portion of the entire petroleum industry throughout the non-Communist world. And its experience closely parallels that of the industry as a whole. The chart that accompanies this discussion measures for each year from 1970 through 1985 the amount of profits the group will have to earn if an 18 per cent average annual growth is to be achieved.

In this country the industry will need to grow at an 18 per cent average annual rate if we are to remain self-sufficient in oil after ten years. We must encourage the finding of resources, because we are using them at an alarming rate. The pamphlet goes on to say:

> Also measured are the actual earnings of the group in 1971 and 1972. Clearly indicated is the fact that profits in those years were substantially below the required growth trend. The chart also reveals that, despite the large percentage increase over last year, the expected net earnings of the group—

The group referred to makes up practically the entire petroleum industry in the free world.

> —this year will fall short of the required level—by more than a billion dollars. If the group's profits are to reach the required level in 1974, they will have to be 30 per cent higher than this year. Or, if the earnings are to be on trend next year and also make up the deficit of the three preceding years, they will have to be fully 70 per cent higher than this year.

● (1610)

That gives you an idea. The article goes on to explain that if you don't like it, and you force the oil companies out of business by fixing prices too low, you discourage exploration. And if the government gets into it, they cannot do it any cheaper than private industry. So who pays? The consumer. It reverts to the consumer.

There is some feeling that windfall profits are a curse. I saw the Prime Minister on television playing cheap politics and saying windfall profits are a curse. I know a lot of farmers. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board says he cannot make a final payment on wheat because farmers are worrying about income tax. Mr. Speaker, a farmer doesn't have to worry about income tax. He can continue to expand. For instance, he can go on buying cattle, and with costs like they are today, he won't have to pay income tax. The same provision is there for the oil companies. If they make an excess profit the income tax will take it unless they expand. It may be said they will expand somewhere else. But they cannot. If they make a profit in Canada they have only the privilege of taking one dollar out of ten should they decide to expand elsewhere. So the income tax takes care of windfall profits made by farmers, cattlemen, oil companies or anybody else. They have the opportunity to reinvest in this country, and if they reinvest we do not tax them; they write it off as expenses. This is simple economics, understood by anybody who has been through high school and earned a dollar, I am sure.

We ought to take a look at what would happen if oil prices rise to a price near the world price. If the price went to the world price we would have one price in Canada. We would have the world price. We could also have it at a dollar or two below the world price. But if you mark it down to half the world price you are doing it for cheap political gain and in the long run your self-serving act will catch up to you. It is interesting to note that the U.S. oil industry used to be able to charge off all exploration costs in Canada against United States income tax. They are no longer allowed to do this. The tendency will be for them to keep their money in the United States. More money will have to be spent by the oil industry in Canada. If we keep the price of oil at $6.50, Home Oil and other good Canadian companies will do their exploring somewhere else. There are two rigs operating in Saskatchewan right now. More in Alberta, because they have not given up faith in the Albertans understanding the industry to some extent.

We hear a great deal of talk about a national oil policy. The national oil policy in my opinion is a short-run conception and will end up being a failure for Canada. We have often heard a great deal of talk about developing an industrial strategy. Western Canada is talking about industrial strategy and a policy for industry. How does this cheap oil for the rest of Canada coincide with a shrewd, wise national industrial policy? I should like to quote from Fortune magazine. It draws parallels which I think are equally valid in Canada. An article which appears in the March, 1974 issue at page 109, says this:

Industry has traditionally been a prodigal consumer of energy because the stuff was simply too cheap to worry about. The price of oil, which accounts for about half of all the energy consumed in the U.S., increased by only 30 per cent from 1948 to 1972.

I think the increase here in Canada in percentage terms is comparable.

Since the general level of prices rose by 74 per cent during this period, the price of oil, measured in constant dollars, actually fell substantially.

Largely because oil was such a bargain, but also because federal regulations held down the price of gas—

That did not happen in Canada, of course.

—the total cost of energy purchased by U.S. manufacturers rose by only 5 per cent in current dollars from 1958 to 1970. Meanwhile, the cost of nearly everything else, particularly labour, was rising rapidly. Thus, manufacturers had every incentive to substitute energy for labour wherever possible. The manufacturing sector of the economy used 66 per cent more energy in 1970 than in 1958. By contrast, the use of labour—measured in man hours—increased by only 35 per cent.

Because energy was so cheap, U.S. business never worried much about using it efficiently.

I recommend this article to the attention of hon. members. I do not intend to quote it all, though I shall quote another portion. It lists industries which are the greatest users of electricity. It speaks about the lavish use of oil as an energy source by electrical utilities. This does not apply with any particular force to Canada since only in Nova Scotia do we develop much energy from the use of petroleum products. The article goes on to say this:

Five industries account for close to 40 per cent of the energy consumed by U.S. manufacturers as a whole and for about 16 per cent of all the energy consumed by Americans. Steel, aluminum, cement, petroleum and paper are the giant fuel guzzlers.

Consider steel, for example. What happened in 1973? The prices of steel products were high, but Canadian steel was the cheapest in the world, and steel is in short supply in Canada. This is a situation in which Canadian steel is able to get into world markets more easily but it does not necessarily mean cheaper steel for Canadians, since the world price will continue to determine the price at which steel is sold domestically, and we, as consumers, will pay.

Take another product we export—pulp and paper. This industry is one of the big five fuel users, and accounts for one of our biggest export volumes, top of the line, especially when wheat sales fall short. Cheap petroleum for consumption by the paper industry will not benefit the Canadian consumer. It is the world at large which will benefit because it is the export price which will determine the domestic price. We can go right down the line. We have a tremendous aluminum industry in British Columbia and Quebec on the basis of which a huge export market has developed. With this cheap fuel for the aluminum industry, who is going to benefit? The aluminum companies of Canada? I suggest aluminum will not be cheaper in Canada because world demand will set the price. Therefore, why sell oil and gas from the province of Alberta cheaply?

Then I come to cement, one of the primary products used in the construction industry. If we want to build in western Canada a manufacturing and industrial empire we will have to receive some favouritism in regard to cement prices. If we are going to sell our energy cheaply to other parts of Canada, we must gain some benefit in regard to the primary product used in developing oil in western Canada. The cement industry now uses about 8.8 million BTU's per ton of product. If the industry recycled more waste heat, cut down on convection and radiation losses and repositioned some kiln burners, it would need only about 3.6 million BTU's per ton. But because cement has been so cheap, the cement industry in the United States has not bothered to take the necessary steps to effect a saving in BTU's.

The article goes on at great length to explain the problems and has this to say about refiners:

> Refiners spend a total of about 65 cents of every sales dollar on energy. Aluminum producers spend about 18 cents, plastics manufacturers about 15 cents, iron and steel producers about 12 cents, glassmakers 10 cents, shoe manufacturers only 4 cents, and makers of tobacco products and office equipment only three cents each.

That gives hon. members some idea how energy is used and who uses it. There is also an interesting comment about certain trends today. One of my pet beefs has been that in this country there is a lack of initiative and foresight in regard to doing anything to improve the railroading industry. At page 191 of this magazine appears an article on the transportation industry which reads as follows:

> Highway construction is one of our largest consumers of energy: asphalt is itself a petroleum product and cement manufacturing is highly energy-intensive. Thus, a $5-billion highway-building program uses 220 trillion BTU's, whereas a $5-billion railroad-building program would demand only 80 trillion BTU's.

The article goes on to say that labour requirements are relatively the same, but in this country we are trying to scrap the railways and build more highways. If our energy resources were expensive, we would soon scratch our heads and say we must make the economies that are demanded of us so as to conserve our precious fuel stocks. We would find ways of generating electricity without the use of oil, would embark upon a large gasification program, and do many other things that need to be done. But so long as we continue to sell the industrial heart of the country cheap oil, these steps will not be taken. It is true that the province of Ontario is going to have to pay a lot more for its oil, but the industrial heart of the nation is still receiving the cheapest oil in the world. I ask hon. members to name one other country in the world that has cheaper oil than $6.50 a barrel.

I realize some hon. members will say that my speech in the House this afternoon stamps me as somewhat anti-Canadian, but I would be less than honest if I did not warn Canadians about the danger of selling oil too cheaply. The same thing will happen to the oil industry as will happen to our beef producers if we knock down the price of our beef too far: one day there will not be any more beef for sale. I suggest the same holds true for the oil industry. Windfall profits have not been proven. The figures cited this afternoon by the previous speaker do not convince me that any oil company has made windfall profits.

The hon. member spoke about going through the books of oil companies. Let me tell him I have tried my best to examine the books of Crown corporations while I have been a federal member of parliament for the past 16 years. Any prospectus of a company listed on the stock exchange will tell me more about the company than the annual report of Air Canada would tell me about Air Canada, or the annual report of the CNR would tell me about the CNR. Incidentally, we have not referred the annual report of the CNR to the transportation committee for something like three years. So when these NDP members, these socialists to my left, suggest that we must have Crown corporations to know what we are doing, I say that has not been proven in my experience in this House.

I ask hon. members to call representatives from every oil company in Canada before the energy, mines and resources committee and see whether they have made any excess profits. According to Imperial Oil's figures, in 1947, a significant year for Imperial Oil in Canada, they spent $20.1 billion, with operating revenues of $18.1 billion. That is operating revenue, Mr. Speaker, not net profit. I agree they have reserves valued at billions of dollars still in the ground, and they will derive operating revenue when they get those reserves out of the ground, but those are their figures.

If I may come to my concluding point, there is no question that we have ample supplies of oil in the Alberta tar sands. How are these going to be affected by the provisions of this bill? As an Albertan, I have always believed that the tar sands belonged to the province of Alberta and that Alberta should determine how rapidly they should be developed. Yet this bill gives power to some board to move right in and take over. I would not mind that so much if what I hear from the federal government was sane, sound and sensible. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) who sits over there is the laughing stock of the city of Calgary since he made a speech there. They did not think that he was sane, sound, or anything else. They did not even think he could utter a sound economic statement after the speech he made out there. We are all aware of his venture into the oil business last winter, when he bid a fabulous price for some oil and then found it was low in viscosity and sulphur content. Now he does not know what on earth to do with it. With this kind of management we do not need Part V of this bill, and I speak as an Albertan.

I am very pleased to hear that the bill will go to the energy committee. I hope representatives of the province of Alberta and the province of Saskatchewan will come down to Ottawa suitcases in hand and make a good case for their provinces. I have always believed that the people closest to a resource develop most experience in the handling of that resource. The tar sands have great potential. They can put Canada well ahead of the United States or any other country in the world—and I conclude on this note—provided the tar sands are developed wisely and prudently, and in such a manner as to give a return to the people investing in them, whether they be Albertans or other Canadians.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I join other members of my party and the House in this debate on Bill C-18, an act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade. We are at second reading stage of the bill, which in effect places a surtax on crude petroleum exported from Canada to the United States and sets a price on Canadian crude for purposes of interprovincial trade. In addition, it provides compensation for certain oil import costs in the area of Canada east of the Ottawa Valley. That is really what this bill is about.

● (1630)

On March 28, we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) make a statement in the House to the effect that the 10 top ministers in Canada had reached an agreement, and he suggested this was a great day for federalism. In view of the fact that since 1968 the Prime Minister has held many conferences on the constitution and other things, at which he has suggested that the provinces take the federal government's view or leave it, it was rather exciting even for us over here to learn that the Prime Minister and the 10 premiers of this country had come to an accord in reference to three matters, namely the setting of the amount of surcharge, the setting of the price for Canadian crude in international trade and the setting of compensation to be paid to the provinces of Quebec and the Maritimes for the importation of oil at anywhere from $6.50 a barrel to $11.75, being the difference between those prices.

On April 8, I asked a question in the House as to whether Bill C-18 really included the full terms and conditions of the agreement reached between the premiers on behalf of the provinces and the Prime Minister on behalf of the federal government. I then asked whether the premiers had seen this bill, to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said:

> As the hon. member knows . . . the general principles involved in the bill were the subject of an agreement between the first ministers on March 27. As the hon. member also knows, it is not in accordance with the practice of the House to circulate a bill outside the Privy Council before it receives the first reading in the House.

That was a neat way to get around my question, but this is not the ordinary piece of legislation. If the minister were honest and did not want to misrepresent the fact, and I would not suggest he was otherwise, he should have said that this bill contains the terms and conditions of the agreement reached between the provincial and federal governments. If we had an agreement arrived at following a constitutional conference, in turn followed by a piece of new legislation, I am confident that any responsible government would make certain that in producing that legislation to implement the changes the bill would be produced to the 10 premiers in order that they might study it, through their attorneys general, to make sure that the terms and conditions of the agreement were fulfilled. I suggest, therefore, that this answer was nothing more than a weak-kneed excuse, dealt with adequately by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

The minister suggested that bills could not be circulated ahead of time, but this bill was certainly circulated at the caucus where civil servants explained it, so there should not be any difficulty in that regard. If one accepts the strict interpretation and the bill should not be sent to the provincial premiers until it is produced in the House, surely after first reading it should go to the premiers or the respective attorneys general for study in order that the terms and conditions of the agreement could be reviewed to determine that the bill does not misrepresent those terms and conditions of the agreement.

Following that, I asked a supplementary question which appears at page 1232 Hansard as follows:

> I have one supplementary question arising from the fact that this bill is the result of an agreement between the federal government and the provincial governments concerning the export tax and setting the price of crude petroleum and its by-products. Am I to understand from the minister's answer that neither he nor the government have made any attempt to obtain from the provinces an acknowledgement that the bill embodies the terms and conditions of the agreement made at that time?

The minister answered:

> The terms and conditions reached as a result of that conference have been incorporated in this bill. The bill is a public document for the first ministers' examination and as far as I know no exception has been taken to its terms.

I would suggest that between the date of first reading and the date I asked that question, April 8, the provinces would not have had the time to study the bill clause by clause and come to the conclusion that it contains all those terms and conditions, but I will get to that a little later. I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) that this is a verbal agreement, and if there is a written agreement it has been hidden and never produced in the House. Surely, under these conditions, and I want to drive this point home, this minister on behalf of the federal government should have taken it upon himself to produce that bill in order that the provincial premiers would have a chance to study it and approve of it, whether they be premiers of producing or consuming provinces. That is the point I want to make.

I was happy to note that we flushed the minister out today, but I hope that as a result we do not have more problems when we meet in the committee. Let me spend a few minutes on the normal procedure. Even under the new rules a bill such as this would be sent to the Committee of the Whole as it is a taxing bill. If anyone thinks it is not a taxing bill he should consider the surtax being the difference between $6.50 and $11.75, whatever the figure may be, which is the international price. Such a bill would normally go to the Committee of the Whole. That is why I asked whether it was the government's intention to bring the bill before the Committee of the Whole for clause by clause study. I asked whether before doing that the bill would be sent to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works where representatives of the provinces could present evidence during a clause by clause consideration of the bill, and might indicate whether the bill properly represents the arrived at agreement. I might add that I feel representatives of industry, as well as consumer associations, should have the opportunity to appear before the committee in order to voice their opinion and give the best advice and expertise possible as to whether this bill will serve the country and, more importantly, fulfil the terms and conditions agreed upon by the 10 premiers.

I am very pleased that the minister has followed the course recommended by his own party, which was suggested by me in the form of that question, in that this bill is now to be sent to the standing committee and then come before the House. I hope that when the steering committee gets together it will not be told that the committee should not call witnesses but should quickly rush through the bill clause by clause with hon. members putting up their hands in agreement like little children. It was with this in mind that I asked the question, and I almost fainted when the minister said "yes". He usually says no, and when he replied in the affirmative I became a little suspicious. Did he say yes because he is willing to have witnesses called?

● (1640)

An hon. Member: Ask him.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to hear what he has to say. If he said yes because he is unwilling to agree to witnesses being called and having the bill aired in the proper way rather than sweeping anything under the table about which the provinces may find out later, then we may have been fooled.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has a question of privilege.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, perhaps I may be able to put the hon. member out of his agony in this regard. I said yes to the suggestion that it be dealt with in the standing committee rather than in Committee of the Whole. It will, of course, as always is the case, be for the committee itself to determine whether it wishes to call witnesses from outside the public service for the purpose of hearings, and I will abide of course by the decision of the committee in that regard.

Mr. Woolliams: That is an answer I like, Mr. Speaker. I think you will see through that answer immediately. I have often noticed the heavy hand of the minister when dealing with a steering committee on which the Liberals are well represented. We find the heavy hand on the shoulder of the committee or its agent, who you might say is just like a parrot of the minister. He says yes when the minister tells him to say yes and no when the minister tells him to say no. If the minister were really fair, he would say that he would do everything in his power, if there should be a request from any party or from any member of this House on that committee or otherwise—that witnesses be called, to see that the committee takes the time to do so, thus making sure that this bill is aired and the facts are placed before the Canadian people. We will fight for this right, and I hope we will not be disappointed.

Now, I should like to say something about the bill. It really establishes a surtax to be charged on the price of petroleum at the wellhead which results in a price of $6.50. I listened to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) this afternoon. I see now that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is here but when the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie was speaking he stood alone. He said that Mr. Lougheed had overcharged Canada in respect of the agreement for a price of $6.50. He said that the price had gone up from $3.50 to $4 a barrel and that, now as a result of the agreement which took place in the Prime Minister's office, they arrived at a price of $6.50. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie comes from an area that is not far from western Canada and I would have thought he would know the NDP premier. This NDP premier said in a wonderful article which appeared in the Globe and Mail that he would press for the world price and that Saskatchewan would not bonus or subsidize eastern Canada.

I know Mr. Blakeney personally. Saskatchewan is my home province, although I live in the province of Alberta. Incidentally, Saskatchewan is also the home province of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). We went to Alberta because it is a much better place. In their talks the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Mr. Blakeney, who was fighting for all he could get, arrived at a price of $6.50 a barrel which no doubt was the highest price they could come up with. I agree with the premier of Alberta when he said he is the premier of Alberta but he is a Canadian first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: He said he is the premier of Alberta and that he wishes to represent the interests of Alberta to the best of his ability. I think he came up with the best deal under the circumstances. Mr. Blakeney must have felt the same way as the premier of Saskatchewan. I think Mr. Blakeney must frown now when he sees the Lewis', son and father—

An hon. Member: And the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Woolliams: I was not going to bring in the Holy Ghost—cruise through the province of Saskatchewan because these men embarrass Blakeney each time they speak.

I hope I have answered the question about price once and for all. When I read certain newspapers—I suppose we all on occasion become somewhat regional and really speak for the regions from which we come—and see cartoons depicting Alberta and Saskatchewan as taking advantage of the rest of Canada, all I can say is that I believe the premiers, whether NDP or Progressive Conservative, measured up pretty well as Canadians. They came up with an agreement. When speaking on television some months before, the Prime Minister said that the price of crude petroleum would be increased to a realistic price within the complex world conditions. Our leader agreed with that statement. So, I hope I do not hear any more drivel from the NDP about Alberta getting the price up, because their premier was also a party to the deal. He fought as hard as the premier of Alberta in reaching that agreement. The position taken by the members of the NDP might be good for home consumption and on the hustings but it is not honest, it is not correct and it is not fair.

The second part of the legislation is that which provides for more than $1 billion by way of surtax from the export of crude petroleum to the United States in order to compensate the consumers of eastern Canada who are paying something like $10 or $11.75 a barrel for imported crude petroleum. I shall have something to say about security of supply in a few moments. Until the Prime Minister placed the surtax on the export of crude petroleum to the United States, there was no surtax income from the oil in order to subsidize Quebec and the maritime provinces to the extent of $1¼ billion or $1½ billion depending on the total amount of exports approved by the National Energy Board. However, I believe the figure is about one million gallons a day. On this basis we can say that the subsidy would amount to about $1 billion some odd. The purpose of this subsidy is to eliminate the differential in price so that the consumers in Quebec and the maritimes, apart from transportation costs, will pay the identical price for gasoline for their cars and for energy for their factories as the people in the province of Alberta.

This is why I say the premier of our province and the premier of Saskatchewan have measured up first as Canadians for the good of all Canada because energy at this time, particularly in world affairs and in respect of the confrontation which is going on in the Near East, is so important to the economic activity of our country. For that I congratulate our premier.

● (1650)

Now, as to the two producing provinces, let me emphasize something. The NDP love to compare what the province of Alberta is making out of oil with what the people are getting out of it. I can answer that very quickly. It is time that that fiction was exploded because it makes me sick. I have lived in both provinces. We had a CCF government from 1944. As a result of their socialist and nationalistic philosophy, industries were driven out of the province. That is the reason the province of Alberta is a have province and for years the province of Saskatchewan has been a have-not province.

Then, members of the NDP talk about whether the people are going to collect 15 cents a barrel or 25 cents a barrel. Let me tell them that if people live in an economy that is expanding it is because investments are flowing in and development is taking place. Whether it is on the ranch, on a farm, or in the oilfields, when the people are prosperous they can afford to live in a province which is the only one without a sales tax. That is the difference between the Conservative and the socialist philosophy. The socialist philosophy is one which says: now we have found one egg, let us not let the hen lay 11 eggs because we will divide that one egg thinly among all the people. We say: let us have 12 eggs and we will have more for the people. That is the difference between us.

An hon. Member: Chicken lickin'.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, chicken lickin', and I will tell you why. It is because these people think small.

As I pointed out, the premium, with the increase of $2.50 a barrel of crude petroleum, set the price of royalties so that 65 per cent goes to the province and 35 per cent goes to the oil companies. If the oil companies made nothing out of the deal, there would be no development.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know who said "oh". I say there will be no development at all unless the oil companies have something with which to develop. Would a well have been drilled in Alberta or even in Saskatchewan if the oil companies made no profit? It is time the story was told. When the CCF took over in Saskatchewan there was no oil development to start with. Finally, they developed the royalty system, and do you know from whom they copied it? From Mr. Manning's government. Even Mr. Clarence Fines, who left the province fairly wealthy after being provincial treasurer, would be the first to admit it, if we could only find him. One sits here day after day and listens to some of these stories.

Another myth I want to explode is the following one, and it is time that this question was answered. We hear this story so often that one might think that people believe not only the words but the tune. It is said that by 1980 we will look into our wells and find them empty—there will be no gas and no oil. Do you know why they say that? For years I have listened to that group and I even went to some of their meetings. I have thought about the matter. They thrive on adversity. That is how they succeed. They want trouble, and they say to the people: we are saving you.

Now I should like to speak about supply. Do you think for one moment that no more wells or oil fields will be found in the province of Alberta or indeed in Saskatchewan? Do you think there will be no more oil found in the Arctic and no more natural gas? Do you think no oil will be found offshore in the Maritimes? There would not be if we had an NDP government because the oil companies would all leave and go to the North Sea.

My time is just about up, so I would like to put down some real facts.

Mr. Knight: What facts?

Mr. Woolliams: Don't worry about that. You do not have such a big majority in Assiniboia that you can be so confident.

Let us take a look at our resources. The next question that came to my mind in considering this bill was that the future supply of petroleum and natural gas is so important to our wellbeing. That is why we have been enacting so many bills. May I say now that according to recent technical papers—and this is material researched by an independent petroleum association—Canada is considered to have, at current rates of production, undiscovered reserves equivalent to 100 years supply for oil needs and 250 years supply for gas needs, provided of course that the Athabasca tar sands are developed. Those reserves will not dry up in 1980. When you say that they will run out by 1980, let me point out that if no one develops any more crude petroleum or natural gas, then certainly the supply will run out. If no farmer in Saskatchewan or Alberta planted any more wheat, we would run out of it also. That is what is wrong with their thinking.

Not long ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred to the Alberta oil sands, and that reference can be found in Hansard. He said that the Alberta oil sands are estimated to contain 250 billion barrels of oil, of which approximately 26.5 billion barrels are recoverable by current processes. Those figures come from a report of the Canadian Petroleum Association, an independent petroleum group which hired technicians and geologists—not members of the NDP—to make these calculations. While these potential reserves are large, they will only become a reality by exploration, and only through risk exploration can Canada become assured of long term supply. In undertaking this risk exploration it must first be recognized that compared to Middle East supplies or any other reserves in the world except in the United States, Canadian oil and gas are high cost in terms of finding, development and transportation.

The cost of the development of a new field in Alberta or even in the Arctic is very high. Our wells in Alberta produce about 100 to 200 barrels of the best per day, while in Venezuela one can produce about 10,000 barrels a day, and therein lies the difference because the cost of drilling a well, whether it is in Venezuela, in the Middle East or Alberta, is approximately the same. So the cost to produce crude petroleum in Alberta is greater than it is in the Middle East or in Venezuela.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT BRITISH COLUMBIA AIRPORTS—RULING MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Earlier today the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) proposed to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 to discuss the work stoppage at Vancouver airport. I indicated at the time that I had serious reservations about the advisability of putting the motion. I might say that in normal circumstances I would have ruled that the proposed motion did not meet the stringent requirements of Standing Order 26. However, it was felt that the Chair should take into account that a motion to adjourn the House for an Easter recess would, if carried, effectively prevent any discussion of the important and urgent matter between now and April 22. After consultation with the House leaders I have come to the conclusion that, on balance, it might be wise to permit the motion to be put this evening at nine o'clock.

Discussions with several House leaders suggest that there would be agreement that proceedings under Standing Order 40 be suspended, that the motion under Standing Order 26 be deemed to be carried not later than eleven o'clock this evening, and that speeches be limited to ten minutes except for the mover and the spokesman replying on behalf of the government who would be allowed fifteen minutes each.

Is this proposal unanimously agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business, as listed in the order paper, namely public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT HOUSEWIVES TO MAKE CONTRIBUTIONS AND COLLECT BENEFITS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge) moved that Bill C-108, to amend the Canada Pension Plan (housewives' contributions and benefits), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan I have been moving private members' bills along this line in order to get fairer treatment for men and women who alternate between industry and home, or sometimes between being ill and being able to work. The principle is equally important in both cases.

Women may be invalided and, as a result, may not work for a number of years, or they may have to assume certain responsibilities at home and later wish to return to the labour force. Because there is no provision for housewives' contributions, even on a self-employed basis, women who find themselves in that position suffer a penalty to the extent that they do not get a full pension. That is a very wrong principle. A similar problem arises when someone has a prolonged illness and has to be out of the labour force for a considerable period of time, but re-enters it at a future date. There is provision for dropping off the years in which he has not been earning, and very often that person cannot recoup the years he has lost by making voluntary contributions during the period of his illness. Thus he suffers a disadvantage when he becomes eligible for pension.

I know that the government is looking at amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. On reading the statement given to the standing committee by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) one assumes that the government is sympathetic to amendments. As a matter of fact, some amendments are before the House now that would provide greater equity and fairness, as the scheme now stands, with respect to contributions made by those in the labour force and by those who are self-employed. But these amendments do not make provision for housewives' contributions or house persons' contributions. Two suggestions have been made. One is to correct an obvious defect in the Canada Pension Plan so that the benefits a husband receives will be split between himself and his wife. Obviously, there are some difficulties here. If the rates remain at their present level you do not really accomplish very much because you simply split them in two.

The second thing being considered is really the substance of Bill C-108 which is before the House at the moment, namely, that the housewife or house person be able to contribute on the same basis as a self-employed person. There are many arguments and difficulties involved in this concept, but it seems to me there are no more greater difficulties involved than there are with self-employed people paying into the fund. If the housewife could make a contribution to the plan, or remain in the plan, her husband could pay for her if he was in a position to do so. Some people say husbands pay for it anyway, but not in straight monetary terms. At the most the payment would be $4 a week. It seems to me that $4 a week for the satisfaction of having a babysitter, a mistress and a purchasing agent is not really too great for a man to be willing to pay.

In this liberated age, of course, the man may stay at home, but even if the housewife or house person only worked 40 hours a week—in many cases they work far more than that—here we are still talking about only 10 cents an hour. This is not an outrageous figure for a man to contribute in order to ensure that his wife has an opportunity to get a full pension on her own. We are living in an age in which it is considered proper that a woman should have the independence of not having to rely on the income from her husband's pension. And of course if there is a common-law arrangement, if there is no legal contract on which the relationship is based, there is no reason why the same arrangements could not be worked out. Under those circumstances perhaps the woman is in a somewhat stronger bargaining position to insist on getting her $4 a week, or 10 cents an hour. I firmly believe women would be able to obtain these contributions if it were possible for them to get into the plan.

Of course, a problem arises in connection with people who are too poor to make a contribution. If people are on welfare, obviously they cannot make a contribution. Many of the people on welfare are women who have a number of children to support, and certainly there is no surplus from their welfare money with which to pay a Canada Pension Plan contribution. What happens in a case like that? It is grossly unfair if those who have husbands and are in a position to contribute $4 a week can obtain pension benefits, while people on welfare cannot. In a case like that it seems to me that the government has already assumed a kind of surrogate role on behalf of society, and in discharging that role should make the contribution on behalf of the individual woman. If, in fact, she is receiving welfare, a transfer payment is being made to her on the basis of necessity for food and for the care of her children, and surely this principle could be extended to provide a contribution to permit her, at some point, to get the benefit of a pension under the Canada Pension Plan.

Another point to be remembered is that people on welfare do not always remain on welfare. Some people temporarily go on welfare when they are in difficult circumstances. A woman on welfare may have been working previously. She may have established some eligibility in terms of a pension under the Canada Pension Plan. I submit that when she is on welfare for a period of time she should be enabled to maintain payment of her contributions. Chances are that as her children become older, or her temporary sickness situation disappears, she will be able to return to the labour force, will be able to make payments to the plan, and she will get a pension when she retires.

If a person is on welfare all her life, we certainly accept the responsibility to assist her through the old age pension supplement. If she has no other income except the old age pension a supplement is paid to her. But because of the way the Canada Pension Plan is structured, half of what is received by a pensioner under it is deducted from the old age supplement. This means that the government saves some money on the supplement, and it enables the person to get this pension in a different fashion than otherwise might be the case. Therefore the cost to the fund does not seem to be particularly onerous. This would be a worthwhile principle to establish with respect to welfare recipients.

There is a far greater problem involved when we come to consider the working poor. They are not poor enough to be on welfare, so how do we make an arrangement for them? I really do not see any clear answer for this problem, except in so far as we are examining a scheme to provide supplementary income for the working poor, and therefore we should consider assisting them to make their contributions to the Canada Pension Plan.

It seems to me vitally important that we establish the principle that women on their own are entitled to pension in the same way as men who are on their own because, by the nature of society, the kind of work they do in the home is equally as important as the work that is done in the factory. Many women work in factories, but also many women work at home. It is important that their work be placed on an equal footing.

Then, there are problems with the costs involved. If presented on the basis of the Canada Pension Plan, in three years they are eligible for some benefits, in five years they are eligible for others, and in ten years they are eligible for full benefits. Since we are trying to mesh it into an existing package, it obviously provides considerable advantages to people of certain age levels as against others. A longer meshing in period may be required in order to accommodate ourselves to that. If housewives are integrated into the Canada Pension Plan, there are some savings because things like survivor benefits and dependant benefits would not be required. As women tend to live longer than men, they would be drawing from their own pension rather than receiving a survivor benefit so in the long run perhaps the cost of the Canada Pension Plan could be reduced. If a way cannot be found to integrate housewives into the Canada Pension Plan, then I think that Pension Plan must be abandoned. I do not think we can afford to have a plan that so blatantly discriminates against the women in our society.

● (1710)

I discussed this matter with my friend and colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who suggested we would be spared a lot of problems by simply increasing the old age security benefit. As he is in many things, it seems to me that the hon. member is correct in this. If we cannot adapt the Canada Pension Plan to include housewives, then we must find a way of providing benefits and equity in the old age security benefit. I think this plan is an example of one of the finest social security schemes. It is universally accepted by Canadians and is eminently fair, making no distinction between men and women. Money has been paid into the fund through sales tax, income tax and corporation taxes based on the ability to pay or ability to consume and the benefits are distributed on a universal basis. The tax system is progressive and those who are better off in society, although they receive the old age pension, make a repayment through income tax. This plan is the best of all the social security schemes that we have.

If the Canada Pension Plan cannot be adapted, and if the difficulties that the minister has pointed out are so profound, then we should go the other way. This would probably mean that each person in Canada would be entitled to a basic pension of $250 or $275 a month. It might be just as well for us to move in that direction because it would improve our old age security system to include some of the good features of the Canada Pension Plan. For instance, we could incorporate into the old age security benefit an option to include disability benefits so that if a person became disabled at age 50 or 55, he or she would be eligible for the old age pension. This would take us along the road to social justice. There are people in our society aged 55 who have worked very hard in an occupation that has worn them out. Most people would agree that good as our old age security system is, under certain circumstances of disability there should be provision for earlier retirement.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have to take a stand and do something about a pension for housewives. I hope the House of Commons finds a way of opening up the Canada Pension Plan to give justice to the women in our society or perhaps the House should give up the Canada Pension Plan and instead, improve the old age security plan. In order to come to some kind of resolution on this matter, I hope that all members of the House will allow the bill to receive second reading and go to committee where these things could be examined.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am deeply confused to find myself in the somewhat ambiguous position of having to kill a bill. Let me explain that it concerns Bill C-108. I know that my words usually say the truth, but a hidden truth. Then, Bill C-108 was graciously introduced by my hon. colleague from Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) for the benefit of Canadian women.

At the outset, I wish to point out to him that if he had a sharper awareness of the daily problems of the women in Canada working without pay, he would have made sure to call them "housemistresses" and not "housewives". He should have read the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in which I had the honour of participating and which I co-authored. He would have seen one of the things that most hurt the 3½ million women who stay at home and work full time without any salary. Indeed, Statistics Canada asked them during the census: Are you working or are you a housewife?

This is a very complex problem, because it goes to the very roots of our society. However, I readily agree that my hon. colleague showed much good faith in attempting to present a private bill that would enable housemistresses to make full contributions, if I may say so, to the Canada Pension Plan, and certainly I hope, to the Quebec Pension Plan. But, of all he said in introducing his bill, I remember one thing that, I admit, shocked me. He said:

[English]

The working poor—they are a problem. I really regret I do not have any solution.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

● (1720)

[Translation]

He added a bit further on: For me, introducing this bill—I quote his words, not word for word, but as I remember them—is a matter of principle.

Mr. Speaker, in my case, my position is almost the opposite of his. To me the problem of principles, the big words of social justice are an ideal we strive for a bit more every day; to me that is something relative and not absolute. Who created the problem of house-mistresses in Canada? First of all, it is a problem of the "working poor" or the "poor". I pointed it out in my maiden speech when I first had the honour to address this assembly after being elected. The royal commission proved one thing to the Canadians who read the report: that the poorest of the poor in Canada are the women. In this regard, I shall express a few ideas in the course of this debate concerning an eventual contribution by house mistresses to the Canada Pension Plan.

What problem affects them most with regard to the Canada Pension Plan? Of course, I must say that after having held public hearings and done some research, the commission decided to include in its report a recommendation, which has been ground down in any event and in many ways since, recommendation that is closely related to Bill C-108 now before us.

I would like to revert to what we said actually. First, we said as regards women in Canada and the Canada Pension Plan that the most important difference is that existing between sexes in the Canada Pension Plan and it is to be found in the benefits granted to the spouses and children. Consequently, we recommended as the commission did that the legislation related to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan be amended so that the provisions concerning the wife and children of a male contributor may also apply to the husband and children of a female contributor.

This reform which is under way—and in this connection we have had a press release last April 5—is a technical reform involving more people and correcting a genuine injustice between sexes.

The other problem is different. Besides we had moderated our way of thinking at the time. Page 40 of the report reads as follows, and I quote:

> Therefore, we recommend that (a) both the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans be amended so that the spouse who remains at home . . .

We had the wisdom to foresee times still to come and we did not mention only women.

> . . . can participate in the Plan and (b) the feasibility . . .

And God knows that we recommended measures rather than studies, but here we had to say:

> . . . the feasibility be explored of:
>
> (i) crediting to the spouse remaining at home a portion of the contributions of the employed spouse and those contributions made by the employer on the employed spouse's behalf, and
> (ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker.

We did that for several reasons because few women and few groups came to request the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to include this recommendation in the report. However, some women did. There was nothing wrong with this recommendation. But practically, what does it provide people? And first, what is its origin? In my opinion, it originates not so much from a real problem of discrimination between the sexes but from a psychological problem by which one fails to recognize a role which is essential in the structure of our society and that of today's family.

This recommendation therefore comes from the uneasiness that housemistresses have expressed and that I shall summarize, if I may, by quoting from an article by the very famous Galbraith, which article was published in the March 1974 issue of Maclean's and in which the author deals with the virtue of social convenience. He says, and I quote:

> The virtue of social convenience is extremely useful in bringing people to do disagreeable tasks. Not so long ago it convinced the young men to joyfully and conscienciously accept military service despite much lower pay than the normal rate, which automatically reduced the fiscal burden of taxpayers which were already well-off. Any resistance was considered despicable and even antipatriotic and was condemned. The same virtue——social convenience—

> —guaranteed the charitable and careful services provided by nurses or home and general hospital services. There again, the credit earned before the eyes of the community served as a substitute for fair payment. (It should however be noted that physicians never did accept this type of payment!) But the absolute success of the virtue of convenience comes with the conversion of women into servants.
> In pre-industrial societies, women were appreciated of course for their procreative ability, but also for their performance in domestic duties and their value on the farms, as well as, in the higher classes, for their intellectual, decorative or sexual merit.

This is what Mr. Galbraith says. According to a very famous Canadian economist, the housemistresses whom my colleague from Waterloo-Cambridge calls housewives make a very significant contribution to the gross national product, but one which is totally hidden or even ignored in our method of social accounting.

He said: "The work . . " and I take his figures instead of ours, because they are higher and more recent, and I think that he has a better reputation than the modest report of the royal commission. I go on quoting:

> The work of the average woman . . .

According to me, it is a bad translation and it should read: "housewife from an average family"

> . . . is approximately equivalent to the salaries paid in 1970—$257 a week or $13,364 a year.

Economists have tried, especially in the United States, also in Sweden and to some extent in England, but not so much in Canada, to give an economic value to the work of the housewife and to conciliate our social accounting accordingly.

These problems will probably make some members smile. But women very well know that they are housewives, cooks, laundresses and ironers all rolled up into one, even if we are blessed with modern and very useful appliances and what have you. They vigourously resent this lack of social acknowledgement of their identity, their role and their definitely economic contribution.

Those women are not the majority, housemistresses of families in the high or fairly high income brackets who could probably pay themselves the luxury of making optional contributions each year to the Canada or Quebec Pension Plans.

They would have to double the amount we pay because someone will have to pay the employer's share. I will not go into the technical details to say that about $200 will have to be spent by those women so that they get a corresponding pension at the age of retirement.

There is no problem there. So much the better for them, but the women who would not draw a pension are those whose condition is extremely modest, not to say underprivileged, the poor women who must stay at home because they have no skill or because they lack the necessary training to get a remunerative job outside, or perhaps because they have no husband. Nobody spoke about this in this bill. The women whose husbands do not earn enough money, those who simply do not have $200 for the contribution of both the employee and of the employer to the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan have been forgotten.

It is certain that it is not the social symbolism but the practical result which interests those women. As far as I am concerned, in spite of the endeavours we made through the royal commission, in spite of the efforts of the Department of National Health and Welfare to find a solution to the possible participation of those women to the Canada Pension Plan, it is much more by a formula such as the guaranteed annual income that we will help the women who really need help.

Now, before closing my remarks, I would like to ask some questions which should prompt people to reflect on definite practical problems. I think this bill is cute. I apologize but I have no other word to describe it. Though it was conceived in good faith, I do not find it very practical and I do not think it will be of real help to women.

● (1730)

On the other hand, it is unfortunate that the press, the media, the feminist movements are bringing in this question in a wrong light. Even some hon. members, when they get interested in the women's condition—put in the spotlight this sole recommendation as being the very symbol of what is commonly called women's lib. This is a social lie we are now telling them. The mass of women—and I apologize for such a crude term—will one day be made up of widows and this for two quite simple reasons: first, the married man, still nowadays, according to Canadian and western statistics, usually marries a woman younger than himself and furthermore, women live longer than men.

Based on those innocuous and practical considerations, I therefore conclude that women have more chances, according to statistics, of becoming widows and as such they are covered; so there is nothing to worry about, it is in the legislation. The rare cases of widowers will soon be covered. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has suggested the necessary amendments to that effect.

Secondly, in order to be practical, I would like to ask my colleague from Waterloo-Cambridge if he forgets the fact that times change. His bill seems to have come to a standstill. However, women are increasingly coming on the labour market and they are often working part-time. How should the earnings of those women be assessed? We have not found any answer to that question in the bill introduced by the hon. member and I know that the very serious work performed by the royal commission and everything done by the department involved since last year have not provided any practical solution taking into consideration all the women who work part-time.

I would have much more to say on that matter, but I will not take more of your time. I would ask my male colleagues interested in the status of women to read the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada. They can obtain a copy at a reduced price as members. Indeed, it can easily be purchased at Information Canada. They should choose the recommendations whose application will affect most Canadian women and, as a priority, the poorer Canadian women.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognized the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore, but I did not notice that the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) was rising. Although the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore is entitled to the floor, I wonder whether he would yield, to use a phrase heard very often in the U.S. Congress, to the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. Blaker: I will be delighted to yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I, on my part, Mr. Speaker, will undertake not to take more than ten minutes. I think we are all very grateful to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) for having introduced this bill once again. It has features which are of interest, and the most important thing about it to my mind is that it gives us the opportunity to discuss the whole matter of housewives and their proper pension coverage under social security programs.

To the hon. member across the way who has just spoken with such eloquence I would say that it is three years since the Royal Commission on the Status of Women recommended very strongly that housewives be included in the Canada Pension Plan, and I would have hoped that the government she supports would have seen fit to give us a lead before now as to a method by which this difficult task could have been achieved. I agree absolutely with her and with the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge that housewives ought to be entitled to full pension coverage. They should also be covered by pensions in their own right as individuals.

The difficulty about fitting them into the existing Canada Pension Plan is very real. In the first place, the Canada Pension Plan is geared to earnings and the great majority of housewives have no earnings. There is the first difficulty. If we say that they are worth a great deal of money—and they are; their services are worth a tremendous amount—are we going to lay down a flat rate and assess their earnings at being so much, and consequently say so much is to be paid for them out of the treasury in respect of a pension?

[Miss Bégin.]

If we do that, we will have fights everywhere on the business of the flat rate. Is a woman with a husband and three children to be considered in the same earnings bracket as a woman with a husband and six children, or one with a husband and no children? It is very difficult to assess as a basis for Canada Pension Plan coverage an income that a woman doesn't get. In the second place, the Canada Pension Plan is geared to individuals, it is not geared to families, and I am beginning to wonder, as are the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge and the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), whether the Canada Pension Plan is the best vehicle for providing the coverage that housewives ought to have.

The ideal thing would be to give housewives an income. I have urged for a long time that women who stay at home and make a career of raising their children, instead of going out to work behind a counter or engaging in some other means of earning a livelihood or a partial livelihood, should be paid an income in respect of their duties as housewives. If we had done that and if housewives were receiving an income, perhaps related to their responsibilities at home, then it would not be difficult to bring them under the Canada Pension Plan.

To my mind there is one very great difficulty about all of the solutions that are put forward. For one thing, we are given no figures showing the monetary effects of these solutions, what the cost would be to the treasury, the household, and so on. The really great difficulty in the discussion paper submitted to the health and welfare committee by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) related to the solution where housewives would have a split pension credit with their husbands. In other words, the husband pays 50 per cent for his own pension, building up his wife's pension with the other 50 per cent. That is perhaps a good solution in a case where the husband earns a very good income. He and she, can then afford to have his pension credits split in that way. But what about the person of modest income, or the working poor? When you split the pension credits of these people, it means not enough will be left for the wife to live on when she reaches old age even if a halt is put to inflation. This is why I do not think that solution would be workable.

Just as the unemployment insurance scheme had amendments made which perhaps destroyed its original purpose of being geared to earnings, there are features of these proposed amendments to the Canada Pension Plan that steer it away from its original intention, which was to be geared to individuals who earn money. Perhaps we should consider looking after housewives, at least for the time being until they are paid a salary for their housewifely duties, under our old age security system. If that were done, we would encounter very few of the difficulties we would face bringing them into the Canada Pension Plan. Then, as their income increased they would be taxed accordingly, but would not be penalized if their income dropped.

If housewives were brought under the Canada Pension Plan it would be a real bonanza for housewives in wealthy homes. I would not want to see this happen. I do not want to see the poorer housewives brought into a scheme where they would have a split pension credit with a husband who had a hard time earning a decent pension for himself. Then there are other problems, such as marriage breakdown, separation or divorce. Certainly these are matters that would have to be resolved. This is why I think housewives should have the elasticity of the old age security system, where they could be permitted to receive old age security at a lower age if they were without means.

I promised not to go beyond my time, and I shall not do so. I want to assure the hon. member across the way that I am just as keen as she on including housewives in a pension scheme and recognizing their value as housewives. Until such time as housewives earn money of their own, I do not want to see them included in some inadequate pension split with husbands who in far too many cases are not earning sufficient to assure an income for their wives, be they living with their husband, separated, divorced or eventually widowed.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it is a well known expression that "such-and-such is a rather difficult act to follow" I suggest that in considering this private member's bill, Bill C-108, with respect to pensions for housewives it is an extraordinarily difficult act to follow when two lady members of parliament have commented on the subject. I notice the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) has moved to behind the curtains for a moment.

[Translation]

But if I could reassure the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) concerning the English word "cute"—

[English]

She used the word "cute" to describe the bill, and I agree with her because it is an oversimplified bill that does not go to the heart of the difficulties of women in Canada.

[Translation]

If I may explain the meaning in English of the word "cute", I will say that it is "bow-legged"—

[English]

In other words, to be "bow-legged" is to have a body with a fault. That is a perfect description of this bill, one about which the hon. member for Saint-Michel has no need to be embarrassed. This bill is a body with a fault, because it does not go to the essence of the problem that was considered by the hon. member for Saint-Michel and by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). May I pay my respects to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) for putting forward this bill which does go to the essence of one of the many problems women have in this country. But I noticed that the two previous speakers commented not so much upon the details of the bill as upon some of the problems in the over-all sense that relate to the status of women in Canada.

If I may be permitted to continue this approach to the subject, I would tend to examine the legal and economic rights of women in Canada. Before too much of my time elapses, may I briefly comment that there are many problems respecting Bill C-108 in regard to defining a housewife as an employee. With the greatest respect to the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway, I do not think it is possible that in the near future we can begin to pay everybody who is defined as a housewife—whatever that definition might be—some kind of salary. I say that not because I object to paying housewives a salary but, rather, simply because obviously the cost to the public treasury would be almost incalculable.

Perhaps because of my own background I would tend to consider another aspect of the problem, namely, the rights of women under the law. There is no doubt that as a result of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the government of Canada has succeeded in making substantial improvements in this field, at least in law, though I would be the first to admit that there is a very considerable distinction between law and practice. It has always been a conviction of mine that equal pay for equal work would resolve many of the problems relating to the status of women in this country. I have changed that opinion in recent months because I have seen too many instances where, while the law requires equality, reality in fact does not confer equality upon women. While I might disagree with some of the approaches of the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway as to the possibilities there might be for equality for women based upon an income for housewives, and so forth, at least I can agree with the principle involved, which is that the time has come to put an end to the economic distinctions we make in our society with respect to the status of women.

We can pass legislation providing that women should be allowed equal income for equal work, but in fact we find that women are not getting equal income for equal work. We can pass legislation, as we have in the province of Quebec from which I come, which in many regards has improved the status of women and taken it out of its relatively feudal state and brought it up to, perhaps 10 or 15 years ago, a state in law which is not too much criticized today. Changes have been made such that women who at one time were not able to make decisions affecting their families are now able to do so despite the absence of the husband or even despite his disagreement.

We could consider, for example, the right of women in the province of Quebec to determine what constitutes the best medical consultation in respect of themselves and their families. Again, this is something relatively new. I do not suggest, necessarily, that such reform of the existing legislation on the status of women has gone as far as it should go, but I would like to point out that the question of the status of women is improving with considerable speed.

On the subject of pensions as contained in Bill C-108 proposed by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, while I am in full agreement with the purpose of the bill, which I believe is to bring before this House the need to consider the economic status of women, I remain at the same time somewhat disturbed by many of the problems, some of which were referred to by the hon. member for Saint-Michel, which relate to an attempt simply to redefine a particular expression, in this case the word "employee" in the act.

The principle for us to consider should be the right of women in law, economic law, to enjoy the same benefits as men in a partnership which our society calls marriage. The fact that in some cases one of the partners chooses to remain in the home and to accept, I suppose, both the joy and burden of governing and caring for the entire family in the homestead, should not preclude that person but in fact should provide an additional right for that individual to share in the benefits of the economic results of the other spouse's working. I do not mean to be trifling when I say that the point of identifying the housewife as an employee could be considered well intentioned but there are a growing number of male persons who might very well be included in such definition of "employee" in so far as the Canada Pension Plan is concerned. So we cannot arrive at a solution to this problem of women's rights to pensions simply by including the word "housewife" within the definition of "employee."

The problems which can be referred to, it seems to me, should be taken in two basic divisions. One is that as this private member's public bill is now drafted it would result, I think, in considerable inequity in respect of wives and families which are not economically or financially better off, because if voluntary contributions were to be the rule of the day, then obviously housewives in preferred financial situations would be in a better position to make voluntary contributions than wives of low wage earners. In that regard I think one should mention that the Income Tax Act provides, under section 79, for any individual, regardless of sex, particular economic income or activity, to deduct from their income—if I recall correctly—the lesser of either 10 per cent of income or $2,500. What is proposed is on the right track on the principle that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the sex of a person who makes the contribution to their own pension plan.

The second problem which somewhat concerns me in respect of including a housewife in the definition of "employee" is the difficulty referred to by both the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Saint-Michel. That is the problem of what happens in the case of separation or divorce or any other change in the legal status of the person involved. What I should like to see in the final analysis is a situation where the whole family, both in the sense of its status as a total family and in the sense of the rights continuing in the event a family should suffer a breakdown, including the father, the mother and the children, would have all the economic rights available in Canada and equal access to all government-sponsored benefit plans.

Until we arrive at the stage where we are prepared to submit legislation to this House the result of which would be that women are truly equated with men both in an income and legal sense, then I suggest this bill as it now stands has the merit of raising the problem, pinpointing and spotlighting it, but it does not at all resolve the problem. I would rather see us put more thought and time into this subject, rather than put definitions into the Canada Pension Plan, the result of which would be to recognize the absolute and complete legal right of every woman in Canada to share in all the family benefits provided by our government and our economic system.

[Mr. Blaker.]

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) at the conclusion of his speech pleaded that we allow this bill to go to committee. It has been made abundantly clear during this debate that the bill has a number of defects. I am not suggesting there is no value in its going to the committee, because certainly those difficulties would become obvious to hon. members participating in the committee's work. However, it is clear that this procedure could be followed during discussion on the paper tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) which agrees in principle that homemakers in this country should be able to participate in the Canada Pension Plan and provide for security of income at a later date. I think a discussion on that paper would accomplish exactly what the hon. member wants, and that is an open discussion on the issue of including homemakers in the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, COMPENSATION FOR OIL IMPORT COSTS AND REGULATION OF PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-18, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain oil import costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil in interprovincial and export trade, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, just before five o'clock I was dealing with the clauses of the bill. For a few moments I wish to discuss with the House clause 21. Clause 21 deals with the agreement made between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on behalf of Canada and the premiers on behalf of the provinces. As recorded at page 1244 of Hansard, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said:

> One of the strange things about this pricing mechanism is that we are being asked to approve it although there is no written agreement. Clause 21 of the bill makes reference to an agreement, but goes on to provide that the agreement need not be expressed in any formal document, that the agreement can be contained in reciprocal orders in council. We can discuss this matter later, but I want to point out now that neither this House nor any committee of this House should be asked to pass legislation giving authority to the government to impose a price mechanism on the basis of an agreement that we have not seen and of reciprocal orders in council that have not been tabled. This I hope the minister will do before this bill is dealt with any further.

My concern is that this bill is supposed to crystallize the agreement between the Prime Minister and the ten provincial premiers who met and agreed on the pricing of oil, on the compensation and on the surtax. Clause 36 shows very clearly that the federal government wishes to take over control. When dealing with price, the Prime Minister and the minister said that the question of price in the agreement would last only 15 months. I would refer you, sir, members of the House, and indeed the media, to clause 36 which provides:

Where no agreement is entered into pursuant to section 21 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies—

What I am saying is this: clause 21 deals with the agreement. There is nothing in writing. The agreement was reached at a luncheon meeting. The premiers and the Prime Minister came out and held a press conference. The only thing we know about this agreement is what we read in the press and the fact that it was held in secret.

Clause 36 in effect says that if that agreement is terminated, and it will be in 15 months, or if there is a feeling on the part of any province in breach of the agreement, then the federal government can move in and make the decision through the governor in council, which means through order in council by the cabinet. This is the reason I am very pleased the minister agreed today, after interrogation on my part yesterday and today, to send this bill to a standing committee provided, of course, we are to hear witnesses from the provinces, from the companies and from the consumers in respect of the bill as it is written.

The question we must ask is whether this bill really expresses the agreement that was entered into verbally on March 27. There are a few things I should like to say before I close in reference to what has happened in the past few months. There has been talk about shortage of supply and about the fact that the supply of 200,000 gallons per day dropped down to 50,000 gallons a day, and in the end we did not know what the supply would be and what the shortage would be. As I have said, there was not an energy crisis in Canada. There was a transportation crisis.

If this government since it took office had built transportation facilities from the west by pipeline—not from Sarnia to Montreal, which means only an additional 15,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day—to carry crude petroleum into Montreal, and indeed to the maritimes, would we have had sufficient supplies of crude petroleum in Canada to supply our needs without any importation. Therefore, I agree with the former leader of the NDP when he talks about the bill setting out certain terms which mean, of course, control by the federal government and the taking away of control from the provinces. This is the reason I am pleased the bill is to be referred now to a committee, before which I hope we will be permitted to call witnesses and to hear evidence from the provinces, from the oil companies and from the consumers' associations to determine exactly what is meant by clause 36.

Clause 36 says that if the price freeze runs out in 15 months, and that is what the Prime Minister spoke about on March 27, then the federal government can pass orders in council and thus will control not only the price but will compensate the industry and move into the field. I say to you, sir, that that is totally unconstitutional.

What I would have liked—and this has been my ambition since I have been a member here—is the government to have had the vision to see that free enterprise should continue in the exploration and development of crude petroleum and natural gas, not only in Alberta and Saskatchewan but in the Arctic and offshore in the maritimes. We should build pipelines so as to supply the whole of Canada. Every day we export one million barrels of crude petroleum to the United States, and we import into Canada the same amount either from the Middle East or Venezuela. Our imports and our exports are just about equal. But if we had had a government with vision, a government which realized the possibilities which exist in this country—in the same way the CPR was built— we would have the means of transporting energy from western to eastern Canada.

We should be self-sufficient in this natural resource. Before supper I pointed out that we will have a sufficient supply of crude petroleum if the tar sands are developed—apart from what might happen offshore—for 100 years, not only to fulfil our export commitments but to satisfy our own needs as well, and sufficient natural gas for 250 years. Men with small minds, men who want to play politics with regard to this subject, will tell you that we will run out of these natural resources by 1980, because what they want is adversity for the sake of power. What I want to see in this country is a new national dream, a new transportation system to transport energy and gas which would come down from the Arctic by pipeline, with the help of the United States, to the industrial centres of eastern Canada and indeed to the industrial centres of the United States, each country paying a price to transport those resources under a joint venture, joint financing, because in the oil and petroleum industry risk capital is needed.

Members of the NDP always say that we will run out of oil and gas. I say that we would run out of them if we accepted their philosophy. They do not want to give anything to industry. They say, "We have this much and we will share it with the people of Canada." But I say if we had vision with regard to corporations we would provide the average man with incentives to enable pipelines and transportation facilities to be built. There never was an energy crisis in Canada. That was fiction and built-up emotion because of the ineptitude of the government and its inability to provide leadership. That can be proven today. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has bought, this winter, heating fuel at 89 cents which we now know is worth 13 cents to 15 cents.

An hon. Member: Ninety-nine cents.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody from the Liberal Party says 99 cents. Whatever it is, it will cost the taxpayers between $40 million and $50 million. I have a recommendation to make to the House, and I make it seriously. I suggest that the president of the proposed company, an idea which the NDP sold to the Liberal Party—they are all socialists, anyhow—should be the Minister of Supply and Services, because with his ability to purchase oil you know what the oil companies would say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member—and this is not what the oil companies in Calgary would say—but his time has expired. He may be allowed to complete his remarks but it would require unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I would like to see the minister appointed president of the company, because then they would realize the imperfections of a federally-run company. You can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the companies which have found oil and the natural gas will find that there is no competition when they have the minister as president. That is my recommendation, that the Minister of Supply and Services be named president of the new company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Goyer for president.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I speak on the bill before us tonight having read some of the speeches in Hansard and having heard others speak in the House on this legislation. I find it interesting to note in particular that at page 1235 of Hansard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) is reported to have said:

—I would like to join with the Prime Minister in asserting that federalism triumphed in reaching a solution to a problem which was at its heart a matter of relative equities and sharing within our country.

This is not the first time I have heard that comment about federalism being triumphant. But surely the minister in making that type of statement is glossing over the hard fact that if there had been a little more foresight on the part of the Trudeau government or the Liberal government that has governed this country since 1963, there could well have been no crisis or disaster over which federalism would have to triumph. Surely it is a strange but accurate observation that this government gets into trouble repeatedly and then, rather than admit that they should have foreseen what transpired, they take credit, if they can, for coming out with some type of a solution. I trust that come an election, the electors of Canada will not accept the explanation given by the government concerning this type of situation. I believe that federalism has triumphed, not because of the Trudeau government but in spite of it.

Now I would like to deal with specific clauses in Bill C-18 because I believe that the government has left us open, perhaps inadvertently, to a serious drain should their administration of this legislation not be as successful as expected. I am referring to the petroleum import cost compensation sections of the act beginning with clause 51.

I think it is fair to say that, subject to the various safeguards that they have put into the bill, the minister is contemplating that an importer of petroleum products, or of petroleum itself, will be entitled to apply for and to receive compensation for the amount that he pays for his foreign product over and above a stated level as set out in the bill.

This matter was first raised in committee, and we in the committee were quite surprised at the lack of precision which the minister's department showed in defining how exactly the compensation would be determined. Let us put it in the simplest terms. The departmental officials are indicating that they feel they can audit a system of costing at the Canadian import point that will justify their compensating the importer really with no limit. I stress "really with no limit" because surely most of us here were quite surprised during the last two weeks to learn that, on the instructions of this minister, the Department of Supply and Services in early December last purchased fuel oil at a price of 89½ cents to be delivered at the Black Sea.

If we translate that into the cost of the fuel per barrel, it can readily be seen that it was over $30 a barrel which the Department of Supply and Services, at the request of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), paid for that fuel. Not only did they pay virtually the highest price in the world for the fuel, but by accident or otherwise they ended up paying at the rate of 10½ cents a gallon to have it shipped from the Black Sea to Canada. That again works out at almost $3.50 a barrel, or almost the price of our domestic oil at that time. I repeat, it works out at almost $3.50 a barrel simply to have the oil shipped across the sea to Canada. On the formula that this bill contemplates we would find that an importer of that fuel could pay those kinds of prices, which presumably he can justify and have it documented, both as to transportation and the actual cost of the fuel itself, and then turn to the Canadian government and say, "Compensate me for the difference between the basic price level in Canada and the cost of my importation."

I suggest that this is a rather alarming situation for the people of Canada to be getting into. It is virtually a blank cheque proposition to those who may, to give them the benefit of the doubt, through sheer stupidity buy oil at unduly high prices throughout the world or, worse than that, enter into some type of conspiracy to see to it that relatively large rip-offs take place, knowing that the government of Canada will pick up the tab. That is why I was particularly pleased today when the minister indicated he was willing to have this bill go to the standing committee, because I believe that these clauses, not only the compensating clauses but certain other clauses in the bill, deserve very close scrutiny before they are passed by the House. But my pleasure in having the minister agree to having the bill referred to the standing committee was lessened somewhat when he qualified the extent to which we would be given an opportunity to hear witnesses concerning the bill.

We who sit on the national resources committee have been very disappointed with the guillotine that has been used by the NDP and Liberal members who sit on the steering committee with respect to guaranteeing that witnesses whom we want to appear before the committee are not given an opportunity to do so. I sincerely hope that the minister will do his best to ensure that any witnesses we as a caucus see fit to call before that committee will be given an opportunity to appear before it and receive a proper hearing. For his own protection, the minister should allow the committee to investigate intensively the provisions of this bill. He cannot hold a club over the committee as he did previously when we were attempting to deal in a prudent way with the allocation bill. At that time, in his mind anyway, a dreadful crisis was hanging over Canada which did not afford us an opportunity in time to review the bill properly. I suggest that Bill C-18 does not have to fall into that category and it should be investigated intensively.

Let us accept the fact that the total tax raised with respect to our exportation of oil will be between $1 billion and $1½ billion. Granted, that is a large amount of money, Mr. Speaker, but we have to weigh whether it will be sufficient to cover the cost of the importation of oil into eastern Canada as contemplated in this bill. I say this because I found it interesting that in the international economic report of the President of the United States, issued in February of this year, the total costs of oil imports to certain countries around the world, including Canada, were estimated. In that publication they project that the Canadian cost of importing oil in 1974 will be $4 billion, compared with $1.3 billion last year. They point out that this is an increase of $2.7 billion in extra expense to somebody in Canada for the cost of our oil imports.

In the committee we questioned the minister on whether he agreed with that figure, and frankly I was startled to find he would not even hazard a guess as to the cost to Canada. Yet our neighbour, the United States, a month earlier was able to publish the estimated figure for Canada and for other countries throughout the world. Surely we must find it alarming that we have a bill before us drafted by a minister and his department who cannot even tell us what possible cost they are attempting to cover. We know the amount of the export tax to be between $1 billion and $1½ billion. That is why I say we in the committee must be very cautious to determine to what extent, under the compensation formula, costs may run at a much higher level than anybody to date has foreseen.

We see figures given in publication after publication. I refer, for example, to the February edition of The Petroleum Economist. They point out that the total cost of fuel to consuming countries in 1974 will likely be $160 billion. In short, Mr. Speaker, we enter a tremendous money field when we start dabbling in international trade in oil and petroleum products. We need an act with teeth in it to guarantee that multinational companies, the tanker lines and those working with them, will not be able to put Canada into a rip-off position such as we have never seen before.

I anticipate that Aristotle Onassis will jump with glee when he hears, as he must, that the Canadian government is contemplating a compensation plan such as the one before us tonight. I find it odd that when we speak of Onassis we get right back into the Olympics. As most members know, his ships are called Olympic, and for those who are interested in knowing the number of Onassis ships that may be involved in the compensation plan that the minister is asking us to accept I would refer them to the Shipping and Shipbuilding Directory which shows the magnitude of his fleet and that of certain other shipping magnates who are waiting to carry oil into Canada.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I say that the minister should be much clearer than he has been to date on how they not only intend to audit the delivery and cost slips but how they will ensure that the cost of the fuel delivered has not been marked up, through tax havens or excessive tanker costs, on the way to Canada. Most people agree that this market has been dominated by cartels for many years. In a book which deals with large international firms in developing countries, and specifically the international petroleum industry, a passage deals with the tremendous interrelationship between the world's great oil companies, the producing companies and the tanker fleets which deliver the products. At page 151 appears the following statement:

> In the nature of the case, any such cartel arrangements would be kept as secret as possible, and much of the evidence for their existence would have to rest on inference from the observed behaviour of the companies. The Federal Trade Commission—

That is referring to the United States Federal Trade Commission.

> —in its report, The International Petroleum Cartel, made a comprehensive attempt to collect the available evidence, and, as the title of their report implies, concluded that the designation "cartel" was appropriate. The report did show that some of the companies had attempted to establish marketing cartels in numerous markets before the Second World War, that all were very much aware of the desirability of limiting rivalry among themselves and of respecting each other's markets, and that a worldwide pricing system was effectively in operation for varying periods.

Mr. Speaker, this is the type of market that will benefit from the compensation policy proposed in this bill. Prices differ sharply from country to country. For example, if the cost, including transportation, is $11 per barrel for Saudi Arabian oil and $9 per barrel for Venezuelan oil, there is no guarantee that the importing company in Canada will not route the $11 oil to Canada and the $9 oil to a sister company, say in the New England states, because of the $2 per barrel compensation that the Canadian government will pay if this bill is passed. That is the type of situation that we have to analyse. When we realize that we are talking in terms of a million barrels a day, we can see the rip-off that could take place if there are loopholes in the formula. Perhaps $2 million a day is not much money to the Trudeau government at the rate they spend, but I suggest that even they have to be cognizant of the impact of a drain of $2 million per day over a period of years.

From time to time the government has referred to the new price for oil as being an increase of $2.50 per barrel. Now they are trying to say that it was always their intention that the increase should be $2.70. Mr. Speaker, while a 20-cent difference may not sound much, I would point out that it is 8 per cent. When you are dealing with figures of the magnitude that we are with regard to oil in Canada, 8 per cent is an extremely significant figure. As parliamentarians, I feel that we must be exceedingly cautious and not accept the bill at its face value without its being demonstrated that the government knows—maybe it will be for the first time—what it is doing and what it is setting out to do.

I have referred to the fact that this is an extremely large market that we are getting into, the international oil market, and it may cost the purchasers of imported fuel $160 billion this year. It should also be borne in mind that while Canada is relatively self-sufficient in oil we are, unfortunately, rather small in terms of the amount we are importing out of the gross amount to which I have referred. That is why I think any mechanism with respect to compensation could have far reaching results for Canada. This is a big market and any mistakes we make will also be big. For example, in 1973 it is estimated that total world exports of oil amounted to $27 billion U.S. Exports in 1974 are estimated to be running at nearly $100 billion. As the price has expanded so much in such a large market, there is a great chance that we in Canada could be "taken" if we are not sharp in the drafting of our legislation, in our administration and in the handling of the compensation program.

● (2040)

I believe others wish to speak on this bill. I know our time is limited. I wish the government had been far-sighted enough to build a pipeline transportation system in Canada which would have guaranteed Canadian self-sufficiency in oil not only in theory but in practice. It is tragic that we in this country must impose an export tax on oil and use the net proceeds of that tax to pay for the excess cost of importing roughly the same amount of oil as is exported for the other side of the country. I believe no other country in the world can claim that its petroleum resources have been worse managed than our resources under this government.

Most alarming of all is this: the government does not feel any great urgency in making sure that the pipeline transportation facility is built even now so that domestically we may be guaranteed self-sufficiency in energy. At the committee hearings, after reviewing the Montreal-Sarnia pipeline extension which, admittedly, will cover only 25 per cent of the eastern Canada shortfall and 50 per cent of the shortfall at most, the minister said that the all-Canadian pipeline is still under review. He was talking about a Canadian pipeline which would carry enough oil from west to east, or east to west, if we are lucky enough to find oil in the east, to ensure self-sufficiency. Surely this should be a priority program. In addition, the government should plan to make sure that the resources of this country, including the tar sands and other resources in frontier areas, are developed without further delay so that there will be no more shortages in Canada of fuel, especially oil.

To conclude, I urge that once the bill has been referred to committee the minister and committee members do all in their power to make sure this legislation is properly scrutinized. Let the committee hear all appropriate witnesses. At all costs, let us not railroad this bill through committee in the same way as other legislation has been railroaded through by the government in the past year.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, as there is a general disposition in the House to end the debate on second reading this evening and as at least one other hon. member wishes to speak, I will restrict my remarks to a single point.

[Mr. Stevens.]

The recurring theme of the New Democratic Party in this House for the past few months is that the House, in this session, will need to deal in a concrete way with three questions relating to energy policy. It must decide, first, what is to happen to the price of petroleum and petroleum products in Canada once the voluntary price freeze ends on March 31. The bill before us deals with that question. Second, what form will the national petroleum corporation take? Is it to be simply a research group, or will it have other powers? Third, who, and under what circumstances, is to develop the new petroleum resources, new conventional resources and new synthetic resources such as may result from the exploitation of the Athabasca tar sands, the heavy oil deposits and other energy sources in the frontier areas of Canada? The answers to these three questions are interrelated. I want to indicate to the House this evening that you cannot act in one of these three areas without affecting the others.

This bill answers to the satisfaction of the government what is to happen to the price of oil once the freeze of $4 per barrel at the wellhead is lifted. The price is to increase to $6.50. Producing provinces will be given extra compensation for their oil. They will obtain additional revenue and will participate to a degree in the prosperity they have a right to expect because of the increased world price of oil. At the same time, the export tax will enable the federal government to obtain revenue which will make possible a single price for petroleum and petroleum products across the country. The tax will be used to offset the higher prices for petroleum and petroleum products which must be paid in eastern Canada, partly as a result of the Ottawa Valley line which was created either in 1961 or 1962. Under this legislation, the federal government will also undertake to compensate the oil companies for any disadvantages they might suffer in attempting to hold the price line in eastern Canada on petroleum and petroleum products. The disadvantage I speak of is the difference between the world price and that set for western Canadian crude.

The answer to my second question, what will be the form of the national petroleum corporation, is closely related to the first question. The problem members of parliament face is calculating the compensation that is to be paid to all companies to offset any disadvantage they may suffer because they cannot charge the higher international price. How will we know that the compensation to be paid by the people of Canada to those companies bears any relation to the actual disadvantage from which the companies suffer? The minister told the House that he will have the right, which he will exercise, to examine the books of Canadian petroleum companies. The problem is that Imperial Oil of Canada is a subsidiary of Exxon. Exxon is an international corporation and the minister has no right to look at Exxon's books. It does not matter to Exxon what price it charges its subsidiary. if the subsidiary is to be compensated by the treasury of the government of Canada. The member who spoke before me spent considerable time on this aspect of the question. I agree with him; there is a difficulty here.

Thus, unless we have a national petroleum company operating as the sole purchaser and supplier in this country, there is no way of knowing whether the compensation paid is reasonable and just or whether, as the hon. member who has just spoken believes, it was a rip-off which could amount to $1 million or $2 million a day in loss of potential revenue to this country.

So while my party has taken some satisfaction from the fact that the government has looked at the suggestions we made to deal with the energy crisis and has at least paid lip service to some of the concepts we have put forward, unless there is a little more substance to the form they have adopted, not only will the country be in trouble with respect to its energy policy, not only will it be paying unjustified compensation to companies whose profits have already risen by an average of 46 per cent in one year but the government will find itself shortly in trouble with the Canadian people in the midst of a general election. I say this because we in the NDP cannot stand by and see the people buffaloed by oil companies which have taken advantage of a situation which has disadvantaged not only Canadians but also people throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I know there is another hon. member who wishes to speak. There are only five or six minutes left to us, so I will conclude my remarks on that note.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of taking part in the debate on Bill C-18, although there is little one can say in four or five minutes. I should like to restrict my comments to one clause which concerns me a great deal, that is, clause 36(1). Coming as I do from one of the producing provinces, Saskatchewan, I find this clause offensive. Perhaps I should put it on the record.

> Where no agreement is entered into pursuant to section 21 with the government of a producer province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may by regulation establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province—

In my opinion, this clause is pure and simple blackmail. I am aware that the minister, speaking in this chamber yesterday, indicated, as recorded at page 1236 of Hansard that the government does not intend at this time to proclaim part III of the measure in which this clause is found. But in the months ahead it will be necessary for the federal government and the governments of the producing provinces to negotiate wellhead prices for oil. It is clear from the minister's remarks yesterday that the bill before us was not discussed with the various provincial premiers before its presentation to the House. I agree with the comments made by my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) when he stated that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) should have been in touch with the producing provinces to ascertain their views on this bill before submitting it for second reading.

It is obvious that if there is to be agreement on prices, negotiations will have to take place; and how can satisfactory negotiations take place while the federal government is holding clause 36(1) of the bill like a club over the heads of the premiers? Part III contains provisions of the type which ought to be dealt with by parliament rather than by order in council.

I see there is little time left, Mr. Speaker. The minister indicated this afternoon that the bill would be referred to the standing committee for consideration. I trust that while before the committee it will receive thorough examination and that the minister will give serious consideration to suggestions and amendments put forward by members on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise merely on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, to confirm that after second reading the bill will be referred, not to committee of the whole but to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT BRITISH COLUMBIA AIRPORTS

Mr. Speaker: It being nine o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day the proceedings now before the House will be interrupted in order that consideration can be given to a motion to adjourn the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) moves:

> That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to take part in this emergency debate at a time when firemen employed by the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence in the province of British Columbia have withdrawn their services in the course of an illegal strike. This has occurred as a result of—I am sorry to have to say this—a combination of circumstances which has culminated in their feeling that the negotiations being conducted between the Public Service Alliance in Canada and Treasury Board are not taking their proper interest into account.

I emphasize that this strike is an illegal one, and nothing I may say in the next few minutes should be interpreted as meaning that this House and the public of Canada approves in any way the actions of any group, no matter how strongly it may feel justified in its own case, taking the law into its own hands. In the long run, this can lead only to anarchy. I am sure all members are in agreement with me when I say this.

Airline Firefighters Strike

There is something unsatisfactory about a situation that compels men who are otherwise law-abiding to decide to take the law into their own hands and withdraw their services, despite the fact they must appreciate that the great inconvenience they are causing will hardly win them any friends among the general public. It is because this unhappy situation has developed that a total of 211 men in the province of British Columbia have now withdrawn their services as firemen, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in a move for which I commend him, has very sensibly and appropriately closed ten Department of Transport airports. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, we cannot take the chance of a grave accident occurring; we must have firemen at the airports to carry out the duties in which these men are so well trained.

The fact of the matter is—and there is no running away from it—that these men believe their legitimate interests have not been adequately handled under the present negotiating system and so have withdrawn their services. British Columbia is now without air transport, either from within the province to the outside and back, or within the province itself. This, I say with respect, is a matter of the utmost urgency not only to my own province but to all of Canada, so it is proper that tonight we debate the matter.

It seems to me that if we reach a situation, no matter how complex, where a number of men have withdrawn their services, with the result that the public interest is no longer being served, then there is a duty upon the government of the day to do something about it. It is very easy to say that this is an illegal strike and that the men should go back to work. Today's Globe and Mail reports that these firemen have said they will go to jail rather than comply with the injunction that has been obtained against them in the courts. I do not for one minute condone that attitude, Mr. Speaker, but nevertheless that is the fact. It is also apparently the fact that at least for some time it will be extremely difficult to replace these men. They are highly trained, they are skilled, and they are worth-while people in our community. But they have withdrawn their services and as a consequence British Columbia is isolated. What is also important, communities within the province are isolated.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, tonight we must search for some way of bringing these men back to work, and bringing them back to work before the stoppage results in any further harm being done to the province of British Columbia and this country. We must bring them back to work before inevitably we have to allow the law to take its full course and to visit upon them the punishment that the law must visit upon those who break the law, especially in a case where the public interest in transgressed. Surely it is in the interests of all of us to find a way to end the stoppage now before we must resort to the harsher methods to which a community must ultimately resort if there is to be a difference between civil order and anarchy.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport was urged by members of the opposition, especially members from the province of British Columbia, to go to Vancouver to meet these firemen. Why, Mr. Speaker, were we asking this? We were asking it, surely, because all of us recognized, as I think the Minister of Transport recognized, that decent men do not take these very severe measures unless there is some justice in their complaint. If there is some justice in their complaint, and if there is no means by which they feel their complaint can be heard and dealt with, then finally in frustration they do what men have done before in our tradition—they break the law; and they have very honestly said that they know exactly what the consequences of this will be.

There is no denying the fact that within the Public Service Alliance there is a division of opinion about the variation in pay about which these firemen feel so strongly. Therefore, we urge the minister to go to Vancouver, along with representatives of Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance, and meet these men. We urge the minister to bring his officials as well as representatives of Treasury Board and the executive of the Public Service Alliance, together with the dissident firemen so as to find a way in which these firemen will have confidence that the complaints they are making and the aspirations they have in their own legitimate self-interest can be resolved.

The minister has said that he cannot do this. As reported at page 1226 of yesterday's Hansard, he said:

> We have a certain number of laws in this country which regulate labour relations between employees and employers. You have the Public Service Alliance of Canada which is certified to represent this group, and Treasury Board is negotiating with the certified agent. Treasury Board cannot negotiate with anybody else because this is an exclusive bargaining right.

Most of the members of this House understand exactly the dilemma in which the minister finds himself. In the strictly legalistic sense there is some merit in the position that the minister has put forward. But with respect, as the minister has himself admitted, this is not an ordinary situation. It is a situation where we have a strike, not by the union itself but by a dissident minority of the union. The usual order has broken down.

The minister informed us that the Public Service Alliance has told these men they must return to work, but they have not done so. The laws of the land say that they have no business doing what they are doing, yet they have not returned to work. We have a situation where the usual system has broken down. In a case such as this, can we sit back and take a rigid position? Can we say that although under normal circumstances we would be dealing with the Public Service Alliance, in a situation where nothing is normal a minister of the Crown cannot go to Vancouver to talk to these people? These people, Mr. Minister, are citizens, as we all are.

Surely the minister is not going to break faith with the Public Service Alliance of Canada, organized labour or any other group within the community because he takes it upon himself to do the one thing he can do at this time, which is to go to Vancouver and meet these people in an attempt to decide on a formula through which they can express their particular grievance.

It is clear that this strike cannot go on forever. The minister said he sent two members of his department out there, but the fact is that only tonight are those men meeting with representatives of the dissident firemen. What have they done while they have been out there?

They took steps to try to find a way to put the Vancouver airport back into partial service, and they were partially successful. But there are nine other airports. What happens tomorrow, if these men who were sent out by the minister do not have the authority to make any commitment on behalf of this government and do not find a way for the expression of the views of these people on what they believe is a legitimate grievance? There is no way, in my view, that this House has any business adjourning tomorrow while we are faced with a situation in which one of the provinces of Canada is isolated because it has no air transportation, knowing that communities within that province are unable to communicate with each other because of lack of air transportation services.

Can you imagine the situation in which hon. members of this House pack up and leave for a holiday tomorrow, leaving unsettled this problem in my province and leaving a serious problem for other parts of the country in the event the situation in British Columbia is not settled?

On August 31 the former minister of labour said, as reported at page 6117 of Hansard:

> I want to point out, as an observer, that we have under federal jurisdiction the finest Department of Labour in the eleven jurisdictions of this country.

One must ask why the Department of Labour has not become involved in this extremely difficult situation, and why it has left it to the Minister of Transport alone to resolve the entreaties, the opposition and the complexity of the situation in which the minister must find himself.

An hon. Member: Bring back Mackasey.

Mr. Fraser: Surely tonight all of us can agree that an essential first step to be taken is that the minister take with him senior representatives of Treasury Board and members of the executive of the Public Service Alliance to meet with these men in an attempt, within a very short period of time, to work out a formula which will be accepted as fair and under which they can put forward their points of view. I feel if this were done immediately we would stand some chance of restoring air transportation in my province rapidly, with a minimum of damage to the lives of those unfortunate people who have taken a route of which I do not personally approve, and also with a minimum of dislocation to the country at large.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in the very few moments available to me to make my contribution to the debate on the very difficult labour problem in British Columbia as a result of the firefighters walkout at airports in that province. I further stand in my place to compliment the gentle and responsible member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) for putting forward this motion under Standing Order 26 which initiated the debate this evening. With the greatest personal regard for the hon. member for Vancouver South, I wish to compliment him heartily as one member of the Conservative Party with enough guts and enough responsibility to disagree with his leader and his party colleagues in demanding wage and price controls, especially the 90-day freeze about which we have heard so much in the last day or two.

An hon. Member: Sit down; you've lost your marbles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: I hear some hon. members calling at me, using obscene adjectives. I am moved therefore to ask in all humility, as friends of organized labour, especially highlighted by recent private bills and the calling out of Canadian forces, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), who was himself the tank-commander, how the Conservative posture this evening could be reconciled if in fact his party were in government today? Would their attitude be expressed identically to the way so ably expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver South tonight, or would it be somewhat different?

Putting aside all further partisan comments, Mr. Speaker, this matter of relating the national rates of Canada to affluent areas such as British Columbia is an extremely thorny problem. It is fine to say, as I have said in the past, that it is stupid to spend billions of dollars through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, with which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has had a good deal to do, to reduce regional disparity on the one hand, and then opt for regional rates on the other which lock in the workers of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces with lower rates for their labour for the same kind of vocation. National rates may provide an example of great logic, but cut no ice at all in British Columbia. I suggest that if regional rates are appropriate for the public service, the regional rates should also apply equally to old age pensions, family allowances and even the salaries of MPs.

But saying this, Mr. Speaker, I think begs the essential question: why, in all justice, should a fireman, a stationary engineer, an aircraft controller, and their families working in the province of British Columbia be perpetually condemned to a lower standard of living than that enjoyed by their provincial or municipal counterparts if federal employees are doing exactly the same type of job? Many are now receiving $150 to $200 less per month. That is a serious problem that has confronted me many, many times in discussions with federal public servants.

We debate here tonight because Vancouver airport firefighters are being paid $3,000 or $4,000 less than municipal Vancouver firefighters. We know also that the stationary engineer working at the federal penitentiary in New Westminster is being similarly disadvantaged as compared to his counterpart working at the Okalla provincial jail. The story is the same with prison guards and clerical workers. Hon. members will recall that last August the same kind of refusal attitude was evidenced in respect of the position of the British Columbia railway workers during the national rail strike and the reluctance of B.C. rail workers to go back to work.

I suppose what I am saying essentially is that the problem we are having in respect of Vancouver Airport firefighters is merely the tip of the iceberg of widespread public service discontent in the province of British Columbia with the prevailing national public service rate structure.

An hon. Member: And elsewhere.

Mr. Rose: Someone suggests elsewhere, but I see that the member comes from Ottawa so I will discount what he said. All of us here tonight want the men to go back to work, there is no question about that, but a reasonable solution escapes us for the moment I was pleased to learn through reports over the phone tonight that the Ministry of Transport has now belatedly contacted the firefighters and that discussions aimed at ameliorating this wage issue are soon to be in progress if they are not actually in progress now. I hope these discussions prove fruitful and the men go back to work, not because of threats but because it is in their interests and every body's interests to do so.

Let us leave aside for the moment the legal niceties that have been bandied about here during the last couple of days. I am fully aware that bargaining sessions between the Public Service Alliance and Treasury Board are currently in progress, and I know as well about the national pay scale resolution passed overwhelmingly by the recent Public Service Alliance convention; but I am firmly convinced that national rates ignore the feelings and the welfare of British Columbia workers.

The federal public servant in British Columbia has to live right next door to his provincially and municipally paid vocational equal, but receives $150 or $200 less a month for this efforts. He has to keep up with Mr. Jones who works provincially and he, Mr. Smith, solely because he is employed federally, is at a severe economic disadvantage. The cost of living, it may be argued, is essentially the same all across Canada, but the standard of living, especially in British Columbia, is far above the national norm. No federal public servant in British Columbia, I am convinced, wants to increase his income at the expense of his colleagues in Halifax or Montreal. What he cannot accept continuously year after year is a 30 per cent hammering in comparison to men similar to himself but working in provincial institutions.

I plead with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), and any other person who has been involved in this thing, to recognize what I have attempted to express tonight and those ideas contributed by the hon. member for Vancouver South with an attitude of great responsibility, public awareness and good faith. We ask that some action be initiated immediately. If it means that the Minister of Transport has to vacate his lofty position here and go out to the coast to speak to these men, well and good. I think he must ensure that national rates apply, but that those national rates are so developed that the high-wage areas do not suffer unreasonably and that the higher rates apply to all of Canada. I ask this not just for British Columbia, but for Rouyn, Quebec, or wherever else they may be appropriate. All federal public servants must have an opportunity to live up to the standard of living which prevails in the high-wage areas.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting ready to stand, but in five seconds I should like to plege that I am prepared to accompany the Minister of Transport to Vancouver in any attempt that might be successful in bringing the two parties together. We must have a successful solution to this very disturbing problem emanating from the province which I am very privileged to call my home.

[Mr. Rose.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that this afternoon when I heard we were to have this special debate tonight I thought that a debate of this kind would not be very useful in terms of providing a solution to the problem. However, I notice that those who have spoken up until now have tried to make a contribution in order to help the situation rather than hamper it. To that extent I am very happy.

I would like to know a little less about the labour movement and the wage structure in Canada so that I could speak with my heart and my feelings, but I know too much and some other hon. members here in this House also know too much. We must take into account certain realities. There is the fact of the illegality of the walkout. There is no doubt about that. We know that this action or movement has started in Vancouver and we make an effort to understand it from a human point of view. We should not immediately try to crush a movement which perhaps has some kind of justification or at least a very sound explanation. This is one aspect and this is the reason we have not proceeded more rapidly. The second thing is that the regional and national wage structure is related to two things, the structure of the labour movement and what we call the national bargaining unit. I am sure the alliance is not opposed to the people of Vancouver having a decent salary, but they know that from the moment you regionalize the wage structure sooner or later you will have a breakdown in the bargaining unit and in the alliance.

I am not defending here a thesis in which I believe very deeply. This is the thesis that has been sustained by the labour movement, the CLC, and this is what is at stake. The alliance is not trying to keep the firefighters of Vancouver in a position of inferiority because they like it, but because they opted for what we call the national wage structure, and that means that the less developed regions in Canada where wages are naturally lower, as in the maritimes and Quebec, are helped. On the other hand, perhaps this does not help the most advanced provinces. This is the reason for the reaction which comes mostly from British Columbia. I understand the reason.

I also understand why those who come from the maritimes would probably sustain the thesis of a national wage structure because there is no doubt that it helps them tremendously. This is why we had to be very careful. We have the structure of the union and the national bargaining unit. I think the alliance is quite prudent, and I understand why. On the other hand, I am sure I am one of those who understand why the firefighters at the Vancouver airport who are earning $2,000 less than the firefighters in Vancouver no doubt feel frustrated.

I understand this, and this is the reason I have asked my people who are meeting right now in Vancouver and who have been meeting for an hour, to tell the men that I cannot make a promise that a move will be made to negotiate. This is not the system we have. If anyone wishes to change the system, perhaps he would tell me what it should be. We have what are called exclusive bargaining rights of the union certified by the board. We cannot go through any other channel. This is the law. There is exclusivity of bargaining rights. The alliance possesses this, and we must go through the alliance. If we did not do so, we would be in violation of our own law. We have no choice. If someone should have another suggestion, perhaps he could make the suggestion, but this is how we must proceed on the side of the government.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Who is on the side of the people of British Columbia?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I just spoke about the people of British Columbia. What is the situation? On the part of the government we have Treasury Board which received a mandate from the government to negotiate in the name of the government. I am not a party in this; I am just the victim because I am supposed to operate an airport. If I have no firefighters at the Vancouver airport, surely I would not take the risk of having a serious accident in British Columbia just because I wanted to operate an airport without firefighters who are essential to the operation of the airport.

As I have said, at this time the representatives of the department are not trying to negotiate with the firefighers; they have no mandate to negotiate. I told them this previously, and again over the phone. I told them they can tell these men that there is a lot of sympathy for their situation, but that we must proceed according to the law and according to the union structure we have in Canada as well as the bargaining rights which were awarded according to the law. We must proceed in that way. If we were to continue otherwise, there could be another situation tomorrow that would be worse, and there is no doubt that there could be a good deal of sympathy for a strike all through Canada. We could have a problem because the firefighters are not treated equally. I do not have to pass judgment on this, but I have the figures and it strikes me, as I am sure it strikes others, that the disparity is so great that I understand the reaction.

I would like to tell the firefighters, if they were here, "We are trying to understand your side of the dispute, and we want to see if we can reconcile with your demands the system which we have so far as collective bargaining is concerned". This is what we are trying to achieve. I do not think there is any other way out.

I announced at eight o'clock tonight that the operation of the airport will be resumed tomorrow on a partial basis, a very limited basis. I think that if we can at least do something, not with the union members, not with the firefighters or strikebreakers but with the supervisory personnel who accepted voluntarily to operate the airport and who were notified, as were the unions and the strikebreakers, in order to prevent the worst from happening—because all the airports now, except military airports, are closed—then we are ahead. I hope that these firefighters, who are being told at this moment that this will be the situation tomorrow and that we are doing it, not in order to break the strike but because normally they should not be on strike, will accept that.

Their union voluntarily opted for arbitration. Whether they were right or wrong they will find out later on. Probably their judgment will be different, but normally they should abide by the arbitration decision. However, they took the other route, and of course in the circumstances we can do nothing else. I am doing the best I can to try to provide some service in Vancouver as well as in other places later on, and at the same time to try to solve the human problem which is at the basis of the difficulty confronting us. I do not see what else I can do. If somebody has a better idea, I would be glad to hear it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wish to put a question to the minister?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Did I understand the minister correctly to say that all the MOT airports in British Columbia are closed as a result of the firefighters strike?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Most of the airports are closed.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to express my appreciation to you and to my colleagues in the House for allowing us the opportunity to discuss the very serious situation that has existed in British Columbia since Friday. I listened to the remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) with keen interest. I have been awaiting an announcement by him of the action he took to avert the very serious situation that exists in B.C. right now, and not only that but to attempt to avoid its spreading throughout this land.

The situation in British Columbia is not unique. There is a similar one in Edmonton, Winnipeg and other areas in Canada. We questioned the minister yesterday and again today about the action he will take. He told us he is dispatching two senior officials of his department to Vancouver in an attempt to get together with the people who are illegally on strike, this against the advice of their association or their union, in an attempt to find a solution to the problem. It is quite obvious to me that what these two senior officials did in British Columbia until eight o'clock tonight was to go around the airport in Vancouver, make telephone calls throughout B.C. and communicate with the minister here in Ottawa recommending the action that he has implemented tonight. I have here the press release that the minister issued from his office tonight. It reads as follows:

> Flight operations at Vancouver international airport will resume on a restricted basis at noon tomorrow—
> Emergency services will be restored permitting these operations by a volunteer crew of supervisory personnel.
> They will work tomorrow afternoon and then begin an eight hour day starting Thursday. The ministry, in agreement with commercial operators, will establish operations between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. on a regular daily basis.
> The emergency service will permit the unlimited operations of DC-9 and Boeing 737 jet aircraft or others that may fall under the 120,000 category limit. Under this limit flights by the larger Boeing 727 aircraft will be permitted but on a restricted basis. Passenger aircraft which still will not be able to make use of the airport include DC-8's, 707, 747 and the Lockheed 1011. These are all larger capacity jet aircraft used extensively on international as well as on domestic operations.

The supervisory personnel are all extremely well qualified individuals with years of experience in airport emergency operations and firefighting techniques—

What a farce to perpetrate on this House tonight! The officials of the Ministry of Transport went out there to set up this arrangement and to break the strike—the very thing which the minister has accused us of trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: This is what happened in Vancouver: the officials went out there and arranged with management personnel to break the strike behind the back of the Public Service Alliance. That is exactly what has happened; and this action was taken before these people met the workers on strike at Vancouver. It happened before eight o'clock, and the meetings did not start until eight. This is exactly how this must be interpreted and I take strong objection to it.

Let us take a look at the situation as it exists. There are three parties involved in this dispute. There are the dissident members of the union who demand recognition of their regional plight. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the spokesman for the NDP in this debate have adequately described the situation. Then there is the Public Service Alliance, the union to which these members belong. They have a job to do to ensure that their members are treated equally throughout this land. Theirs is a very difficult situation. Then there is the government which says that it cannot become involved in the internal workings of the union, that it has no responsibility to the people on strike in Vancouver who cannot make ends meet and who cannot keep up with the Joneses because they make $3,000 a year less than workers who come under the municipal and provincial governments.

I challenge the Minister of Transport, who has left the House; he cannot stand the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: He cannot react to anything but a crisis. The minister does not know how to forecast or plan. He himself admitted in the House and to the press that there is no transportation policy in this country. He knows only how to react to a crisis and an emergency situation. This is the same kind of situation as the one that existed when we adjourned last year for a summer recess and then had to return to settle the CNR strike. It is the same situation that prompted us to threaten him with a postponement of the spring recess because of the boxcar situation. I see another minister opposite making derogatory signs at me. It is easy for him to do that: it makes a lot of sense and solves many problems!

We want the minister to do what the hon. member for Vancouver South suggested. Let him apply a practical mind to finding a solution. I would phone the Public Service Alliance and say, "Look, you put me in an embarrassing situation because members of the opposition are crying for action. You and I should go out to Vancouver and discuss the problems with these people." Members from Vancouver have said that they would be ready to have a truck standing by awaiting the arrival of the minister, they would sit down and discuss the problem with him at a moment's notice and they would put the airport back into operation, not only the airport at Vancouver but every other airport in British Columbia.

This strike will spread and the problem has been recognized. On March 25, 1974, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) said, when he spoke about this very problem not only with the employees of CNR and Air Canada but with all employees under federal jurisdiction who are members of the Public Service Alliance:

In the case of regional pay policy, the government for years has taken the position that it will not be a leader in matters of pay and salary but will follow the pattern set by what is generally known in this country as the private sector.

● (2140)

We are not talking here about the private sector; we are talking about the public sector, about the employees of municipalities and provincial governments. He says that given the choice of trying to equate the pay of the public service to that of the private sector, on a national level or on a regional level, for common sense reasons the government must use the regional basis. The President of the Treasury Board has admitted this. He has announced it as government policy. But the Minister of Transport refuses to recognize that there are serious problems being experienced by employees in western Canada who find it very difficult to understand why their neighbours make $3,000 to $4,000 a year more than they do, performing the same job and having had less training than they are called to undertake in the interests of public safety. Yet the minister refuses to act. He swept out of the house. This Press release will not get him off the hook.

I will find it very difficult tomorrow night to leave here and arrive at Vancouver airport in a DOT aircraft. Those fellows are going to say, "Oh, you are taking an Easter recess. Where are you going on your holiday?" I will be interested to see how hon. members to my left answer that question.

Mr. Rose: I am not taking a holiday.

Mr. Oberle: If you are interested in staying here, so am I. This is a very serious problem and other members of my party feel the same way. Of course, hon. members to my left will also have a difficult time when they read some of the comments made by the Premier of British Columbia who has called upon them to resign from their party if they cannot go along with his suggestion that the federal sales tax be removed. I expect the resignation of at least six members of the NDP next week, and I am willing to stay around for that because it would really be a bright day in the life of this parliament.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has circulated a pamphlet entitled "Throne Speech, 1974." In it we find these words:

Those Canadians least able to protect themselves have a right to be protected from the consequences of events over which they have no control and from intimidation from big business, big labour or big government.

There are 210 firemen in the province of British Columbia who have a right to protection from the federal government. The government has to intervene there. It has to call the three parties together and bring the strike to an end before it spreads to unmanageable proportions in Canada.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the three gentlemen from Vancouver as they walked a tightrope. They included my good friend in the NDP. I can understand his dilemma more than the dilemma of the other two hon. gentlemen because of his labour background and orientation. That was probably the reason his speech was so wishy-washy.

I remember a few years ago when we had a famous bill known as C-186 in this House. That was a moment of truth for the House of Commons. I wish all these eloquent spokesmen had been around in those days. I opposed Bill C-186, Mr. Speaker. I think these hon. gentlemen would have done the same. But for newcomers here, may I say that Bill C-186 was simply a concept advanced by certain regions of this nation that, in a country this big, national bargaining units were not reasonable, not logical and that other things should be taken into consideration such as were advanced this evening, regional pay rates, the culture of an area, the language and the virtual impossibility of a Quebec-based union infiltrating a national bargaining unit. I supported the national bargaining concept, and still do, because if we were to have regional bargaining in this country some area of the transportation industry would be on strike all the time.

The fundamental point here is not whether there is justice or injustice done to the striking firemen. On the surface there seems to be a very solid, basic case that somewhere along the line the firemen's wage rate has fallen behind what seems to be a decent wage rate for firemen in B.C. The answer is not to pull down the British Columbia rate to the level of the Newfoundland rate but to bring the Newfoundland rate up to the British Columbia rate. But having said that, Mr. Speaker, that is a point that you must argue within the laws, of the country, and the legalities of our country are very clear.

We have a national bargaining unit across the country associated with the Public Service Alliance that speaks on behalf of these firemen in British Columbia. Really, what I think hon. members are asking the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to do, as a tribute to his well known knowledge of labour and not necessarily because he is Minister of Transport, is to intervene in a dispute in which under the law he has no right to direct participation. By law the employer is designated as Treasury Board. By law the representative of those 200 firemen is the Public Service Alliance, and any direct infringement on that relationship by the Minister of Transport, by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) or any other minister other than the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is a direct contradiction of the law of the land.

If the law is wrong, change the law. If the 200 firemen do not have faith in the ability of the Public Service Alliance to sell the concept to Treasury Board that wages offered are unrealistic, they have a legal obligation to take up their grievance within the Public Service Alliance at the first possible opportunity and to say, "We are not being adequately represented by the bargaining organization for which we voted." Mr. Speaker, we are not doing a favour to the workers, to the firemen or to the labour movement in this country to suggest any other procedure such as those I have heard suggested by members of the opposition tonight, including the member of the NDP.

Really what they are saying, for the sake of expediency, because they are B.C. members—I would probably act the same way—is that here they have 200 friends who have a case. There is an obvious injustice because they are underpaid in relation to other firemen in B.C. Although the hon. gentleman made a very eloquent plea, really what he was advocating was that they ignore the law of the land, because the law of the land says that regardless of this injustice the solution is not to strike illegally.

It always seems to me very paradoxical that opposition members will holler about the SIU wanting to go on strike weeks before such a strike occurs because this will affect the grain trade, but at the same time they will endorse an illegal strike at Vancouver airport because there is an obvious injustice in the rate of wages. Did it ever occur to them that there would be an obvious injustice in the wage pattern of the SIU when they decide to go on strike? Wasn't there an obvious injustice—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), but I do not think he really meant to say that the opposition endorses this illegal strike. I think our spokesman made that very clear. I would ask him to withdraw that remark.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This is hardly a point of order. The hon. member may suggest that the hon. member's remarks do not correspond with what might have been said in the House, but the Chair cannot go so far as to ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to withdrawing my remark. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) made it clear that he did not endorse an illegal strike, but he did not tell me that he was the official spokesman for his party; and the other hon. gentleman had another view.

● (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? I do not ask this question in any antagonistic sense, but what is the difference between the minister sending two of his officials out to settle this strike and going out himself?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, there is a very fundamental difference. The minister did not send two officials out to settle the strike; he sent two officials out to reason with the men, to get them back to work and then settle in a perfectly legal manner. That is the difference. The proper way is to settle around the bargaining table and to obey the law of the land as it is written at the moment. If that law is wrong, we can amend it; but the law says: You cannot strike legally. Like it or not, that is the law of the land.

Simply because it is your own community, or province, or city you cannot endorse or even condone an illegal strike because it happens to be in Vancouver but be appalled by similar action in Montreal. Are we advanced to the point that we are now saying, "Let us have one region for British Columbia, let us have a region for the prairies, one for Ontario, one for Quebec and one for the Atlantic provinces"? I do not think hon. members really want that. What we should endorse is the national bargaining unit concept. That exists, and it is the Public Service Alliance. To deviate around the Public Service Alliance and deal with 200 well-meaning people who are part of it is to undermine the trade union movement. That is hardly in the best interests of those same firemen when two or three years hence they come back to the bargaining table.

The whole concept of unionism is unity. It is a voluntary movement. If you are going to have two or three firemen saying that they have no faith in their negotiators, the Public Service Alliance, and that they want to negotiate directly with the Minister of Transport themselves, they are really saying that they have no faith in the organization to which they belong. That is more important even than the monetary question in the final analysis. As the Minister of Transport has said, if the complaint is injustice as far as salaries are concerned, surely the arbitrator or conciliator or representative of the government and of the Public Service Alliance should be able to reconcile matters. Public opinion would demand it.

That is the purpose of our democratic system. The people of Vancouver and the people of Canada would certainly tell the government in no uncertain terms if these people were being unjustly treated, if we the government were taking advantage of their inability to strike long enough for economic reasons. On the one hand the hon. gentleman is saying that these men have a grievance, and because they have a grievance they are entitled to use their bargaining power and walk off the job—

Mr. Fraser: I did not say that.

Mr. Mackasey: On the one hand he is saying, "Run out there and put them back to work because of the inconvenience." You cannot have it both ways in a democracy. The law is the law, and the law says this is the way it must be done. You cannot walk off the job, no matter how just or unjust your case may be.

It is the same thing with nurses in the maritime provinces. Why should they be paid less than those in Ontario and British Columbia? I never accepted the regional rate principle. Speaking as an individual member, I have always felt that if you want to have national bargaining and wage rates, go toward the top. It costs just as much to live in the maritimes as in British Columbia. That is my opinion, for what it is worth. Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I cannot condone an illegal method of settling this type of injustice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. I did allow him an extra minute and a half because of the questioning.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to make the following points to members of the government. No one in his senses can justify or condone a group of Canadians breaking their bargaining pattern, breaking the law, if you like, although that sometimes does happen in these things. But I do not think that anyone, including the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)—whose sincerity I do not for a moment question—has really got to the point which gives rise to this kind of situation. If you are going to have national rates, and I am personally totally in favour of it, I regret those areas in the public service that now have regional rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I regret that there are registered nurses working for the federal government in Halifax receiving about $1,800 a year less than registered nurses working for the federal government in Victoria, or Vancouver, or Toronto. I regret that a dockyard worker in Halifax is making $100 or $150 or $200 per month less than a dockyard worker in Victoria. I am in favour of national rates. But if you are going to have national rates in a way which will avoid the kind of grievance that has arisen in British Columbia, those rates must be close to the top rates and not close to the bottom rates, otherwise you are going to have trouble.

I agree entirely with the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) that the objective has to be to raise the rates of the people of Newfoundland to those of the people of British Columbia. You cannot have a national rate that will be at the top of the regional rate, I agree, but it should be so close to the top that the people who have to accept that rate do not feel aggrieved, do not feel that an injustice has been done to them. They are ready to take something smaller in British Columbia for the sake of having the people in the Atlantic provinces or Quebec or Saskatoon or Regina get a higher rate than they would otherwise get. When you permit— this is where Treasury Board is so at fault—a national rate to place the people in the higher wage are in a position of real disadvantage, they would be angels if they did not react, Mr. Speaker; and we are not any more angels than they are.

The federal government ought to be a model employer, but in many circumstances Treasury Board acts like the most reactionary employer in this country. That creates the problem. One of the things that always creates problems is delay. If it were possible to get these negotiations going so that it looked as if they were coming to a successful end prior to the end of the contract, that is, April 1 or March 31, so that the people knew that their wages would be raised $1,000, $2,000 or $3,000 per year, or whatever the settlement might be, and we cannot settle it here, then we would be in a different situation. But when nothing happens, when the municipal firefighters get an increase on January 1 of this year and the airport firefighters lag behind to a point where they feel really disadvantaged, then trouble arises.

As a matter of fact, one of the reasons I think the firefighters in British Columbia are mistaken in what they are doing is that in my reading of the situation Treasury Board would like nothing better than to have regional bargaining right across the country in every component of the public service. That is what the minister wants, and that is what these strikers in British Columbia may be forcing, against the interests and rights of many working people in this country. Treasury Board would love to have regional bargaining for public service rates. It makes it easier for them. They can go to a place like Halifax, ascertain the wage rate in surrounding industries, then enforce it on the public servants and that is it. No one can kick. They would have a much easier time. Whether it would cost less, or more, I do not know. I have never made that kind of calculation. I know that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and Treasury Board officials prefer regional bargaining. When the employer prefers something, employees ought to suspect that it cannot be on their side. That is where I think the firefighters are making a mistake. They are going to open the door and let Treasury Board get exactly what it has wanted for many years, as any spokesman of the Public Service Alliance or the Professional Institute of Public Servants will tell you, Mr. Speaker.

My final point is this, and I may not agree with what my colleague said, which shows that we are not monolithic in thought. I can appreciate the problem of the Minister of Transport in going out there and giving these 200 strikers, or whatever the number may be, the status and improvements they want in order to break the national bargaining situation. I know the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) will experience the same kind of difficulty. But it would not be difficult for the President of the Treasury Board and his officials to settle with this component of the public service and right away increase the rates of firefighters across Canada and reduce substantially the injustices from which firefighters in British Columbia are suffering. That could be done in one week.

If the President of the Treasury Board, who really has the duty to act in this situation, were to say, "I am meeting with the bargaining committee tomorrow and we are going to make a settlement as fast as humanly possible which will remove most of the disadvantages from which these men suffer now," I am certain that those reasonable men would go back to work tomorrow. The responsibility, sir, is not that of the Minister of Labour or of other ministers; the responsibility is that of the President of the Treasury Board. He should have been here tonight to assure this House, the firefighters, the president of the Public Service Alliance and the other officials who are in the gallery that the negotiations which are now going on will be speeded up so that the problem in British Columbia will be, if not solved at least alleviated to the point where the strikers will go back to work.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I inform the hon. gentleman that the President of the Treasury Board is not here because he replaced me at a ceremony. I preferred to be here. He should be here later.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to accept that and I withdraw my condemnation of the President of the Treasury Board for not being here. But I do not withdraw my criticism of him for the policy which he pursues.

Airline Firefighters Strike

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, most of the salient points have already been presented to the House in a way much better than I could put them. Nonetheless, I wish to comment about some of the issues raised by my colleagues this evening in all parts of the House. In fairness to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—and here I direct my remarks to the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey)—I suggest that what he was proposing was that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and other responsible cabinet officials should involve the Public Service Alliance and other appropriate representatives in the process of conciliation—not "deviate around them."

Although we do not endorse this strike which is, rightly, termed illegal, we recognize that in the public interest something must be done. As the hon. member for Verdun and the Minister of Transport have emphasized, there are certain laws in this country which ought to be obeyed. Nevertheless, they are not immutable like the laws of the Medes and Persians; and one should remember that the law is an ass, if it is administered by asses.

I suggest, in all seriousness, that the problems we are discussing tonight go much deeper than they first appear. This point was made by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) and by others. The strikes at Vancouver airport and Esquimalt have been called illegal, rightly so, but their root causes are disturbing. Many factors have brought about this situation. The Minister of Transport is concerned about this apparent breakdown in the orderly process of collective bargaining. But he should be encouraged, as well, by the responsibility that the Public Service Alliance of Canada in general, and other firefighters across the nation in particular are showing. Their courage and responsibility in the face of the very short-sighted and poorly conceived pay policies are to be commended. Those policies, as the leader of the NDP pointed out, are being administered by the head of Treasury Board.

As I have mentioned in this House on other occasions, the intransigence and unyielding attitude of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is responsible for a great many difficulties and needless complications in many government departments, including not only the Department of Transport but other departments as well. Last year we witnessed the striking example involving federal nurses. Their representative, the Professional Institute of the Public Service, tried valiantly to get a fair deal for them right across the country. Those efforts were stymied by the unyielding attitude of the President of the Treasury Board. One could point to other examples. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) said half in jest when repeating a point I had raised earlier, if the government is to follow regional pay policies across the board, members of parliament ought to be paid different rates according to the regions they represent. That shows what would happen if you took the policy to its logical conclusion.

What we are discussing tonight is serious, because what could happen could bring serious consequences with regard to the jurisdiction of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. I do not profess to be an expert in labour matters. Let me say this, however. If the government means to perpetuate the philosophy expressed on previous occasions by the President of the Treasury Board and other spokesmen, does it not realize that its actions will affect significantly the fabric of the Public Service Alliance? Why should we divide the public service into compartments? Why should the government pay less to some people who happen to live in the poorer regions than to compatriots or companions who live in the so-called prosperous regions of Canada? Such policy can only weaken the fabric of the Public Service Alliance. The entire membership of the various associated unions will become more restive if such policies are pursued. They will be open to blandishments and raids from other unions. The situation will have a disrupting effect on the entire labour movement. It cannot be called a constructive situation. We cannot afford to disrupt the workings of the public service by reimbursing employees in one part of the country more than in another part for the same type of work.

In a letter dated September 25, 1973, the President of the Treasury Board calculated how much it would cost to pay public service employees on an equal basis right across the country. He said in part:

> An estimate of the cost today of converting federal public servants who are paid on a local or zonal basis to national rates would be about $54,000,000. This figure represents only the increased cost of the wage bill and not indirect costs of such things as fringe benefits.

I say to the hon. and venerable President of the Treasury Board, so what? I know $54 million is not peanuts; neither is the $750 million the government has budgeted to pay outside consultants in the present fiscal year. I know that Treasury Board may not be able to make the commitment to end regional wage disparities in one fell swoop. Yet surely the time has come for a firm commitment which will remove these disparities.

The Minister of Transport has the expertise, credentials and knowledge of the labour movement to bring in new policies for his department as he promised and on which he is publicly working at present. He should take the lead, together with some of his more enlightened colleagues such as the hon. member for Verdun and, presumably, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in trying to convince the President of the Treasury Board and some of his colleagues who are taking a reactionary stand in terms of regional pay disparities that it is time to make a commitment to stop perpetuating this philosophy. As a former minister of regional economic expansion, he must surely realize the paradox which is inherent—as some of my hon. friends have mentioned—in, on the one hand, spending hundreds of millions in the name of increasing regional economic opportunities in this country, and on the other hand going along with a philosophy which continues to pay people, who in many cases live in areas of the country where not only is the pay lower but the cost of living is higher, on a lower wage scale than those more prosperous areas of the country.

I do not think the Minister of Transport really subscribes to this philosophy. It does not make sense to allow such a situation to continue. The President of the Treasury Board, however, has been quoted in no unequivocal terms on the subject. As reported at page 7121 of Hansard for last fall, his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) put it this way:

> As the President of the Treasury Board has said on more than one occasion the government as employer is committed to paying rates which are equitable and competitive with those paid outside the public service for similar occupations.

He doesn't honour the commitment, since this definitely does not apply in the case of the firefighters in Vancouver. It is certainly not true in the case of the nurses under federal jurisdiction, where the Professional Institute of the Public Service sought in vain to get them a fair deal. The disruption which took place in the Department of Veterans Affairs was disturbing to many members of this House and particularly disturbing to the veterans who suffered as a result.

The situation is very clear. Just as it has interfered in this case with the portfolio of the Minister of Transport, just as it interfered in the recent past with the portfolio of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), Treasury Board pay policy will continue to be a thorn in the side of other ministers on the treasury benches.

So I plead once more with the Minister of Transport not only to bring in a policy clearing up the present difficulties in transport, but to try to convince the antedeluvian head of Treasury Board to take a more enlightened attitude toward the question of regional pay scales for public servants.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, once again air transport in British Columbia has been brought to a standstill, this week because of an illegal strike. Travel between Vancouver Island and the mainland by air is limited to small sea planes. To those of us who come from the island, it appears that the mainland is isolated. That could be a headline in the Daily Colonist tomorrow if that paper were not also tied up by a strike.

I am not prepared to put the blame for Canada's industrial troubles entirely on stupidity or prejudice on the part of either employers or employees. The main causes of Canada's accelerating labour troubles appear to me to be, first, a considerable increase in people's expectations, largely the result of improved advertising, inflation, and the functioning of the mass communications media—it is sometimes referred to as the inflation psychology—and, second, a lack of competent leadership. The government shows no confidence in its own actions. It passes legislation but is either unable or unwilling to make certain that the law is respected. This is particularly evident when working conditions in government service are in dispute. The government issues edicts. They are ignored. The government threatens. The threats are ignored. It is like the pusillanimous schoolboy drawing lines in the dust and daring an opponent to step over them, which the opponent immediately does. This is the case of an illegal strike followed by disobedience of a court injunction. The minister regaled us with his tale of inflexible law but he is the one person who can institute change.

What has brought our industrial relations to this sorry state? There was a time not so long ago when the labour movement was dedicated to improving the lot of all working men and women. This seems to have been replaced gradually by a "devil take the hindmost" scramble to stay on top of less powerful fellow men. A desire for social justice seems now to have been replaced by a desire for social revenge. Every man's hand is turned against his neighbour.

I received a telephone call yesterday from a young man in Victoria, an employee of Pacific Western Airlines. The staff has been warned that in the next day or so 500 employees of the airline company are to be laid off. Who was protecting this young employee? Certainly not the government, certainly not the unions, certainly not the dissident workers. This young man was a booking agent. He told me he had just seen three months' work go down the drain. He had booked flights from Victoria to Vancouver, to California and the Hawaiian Islands, to England and to Sweden. Then suddenly, through the actions of another group, his winter's work was wasted. At the end of the conversation he said, "I wish to hell I was getting $9,000, which I am not."

I think it is up to us in parliament to realize there is something basically wrong with our labour legislation. What causes people to go constantly on strike? A lot of us who enjoy higher incomes say they should do this or that because of their fellowmen or for their country, for patriotic reasons or the good of the economy. That is not the way the workingman sees it. Most workers are mainly concerned with money. Let hon. members not look down their noses at that. Money is very important, particularly to those who do not have it. They do not readily understand the need to save and invest as well as consume, or accept the need for national sacrifices. Every gardener and farmer knows that you cannot consume the seed corn. This fact is not understood about the need for investment. Many people fondly believe that they can consume the entire product of a particular industry. With inflation running at what seems likely to be a rate of 15 per cent, we are bordering on a catastrophic situation and only tremendous sacrifices on the part of everyone will save us from the fate of the Weimar Republic.

I should like to quote a few remarks by what I consider to be one of the most responsible labour leaders in the world today, Mr. Frank Chapple of Great Britain. He had this to say a few weeks ago, and I would draw it particularly to the attention of our friends in the socialist party to our left:

> I certainly do not believe that free collective bargaining has achieved better results than the application of a prices and incomes policy. If there is a criticism that can be made of the present wages structure it is that it stems directly from the effects of a free collective bargaining system and not from the successful application of a prices and incomes policy—

Then he went on to add, in what I consider to be a very good way of putting it:

> I am always suspicious of people who have all the answers to a problem, but there is a very great need for those with the responsibility of managing the industry to involve those who have worked in the industry in a meaningful dialogue about objectives and expectations.

I should like to point out that the situation in Canada in regard to labour unrest is nothing short of disastrous when compared with a country such as Sweden. Over a period of time, Canada lost 3½ million man-days per year at the same time as Sweden lost 75,000 man-days per year. This is in a country roughly one-third the size of Canada.

Mr. Nesdoly: What difference does that make?

Mr. McKinnon: Let me just read to my friend from Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) a few things about Sweden. Compared to many other west European countries, state-owned undertakings in Sweden account for a relatively small part of the whole economy—6 per cent—Swedish industry being still overwhelmingly in private ownership.

Mr. Nesdoly: They have a socialist government.

Mr. McKinnon: They may have a socialist government but they do not have a socialist state. Their industry is largely in private hands, but they do have trust in each other. The workers trust their leaders. I think the leader of the NDP served his country ill tonight when he said that when the employer wants something, the worker should oppose it. He was speaking of the government of Canada as the employer. It is this attitude of turning one Canadian against another, telling them to be suspicious of everything that the other side does, that leaves us in the position where you cannot sit down and get opposing sides to talk to each other. They have been so indoctrinated with this kind of demagogic outburst that their rationality in bargaining has left them.

I can only say to the minister that I enjoy his eloquence very much. I always enjoy his speeches in the House. If there is a reshuffle of the cabinet I should like him to be a minister without portfolio so that I can enjoy his speeches without suffering what he does to various departments.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with some attention to this debate tonight. Let me say at once that if the fact that we are having it indicates that the members of the House from various parts of Canada are concerned about the situation in British Columbia, then perhaps it will have had some value. It may indicate that in our minds there is real concern that we arrive quickly at a fair settlement of the negotiations regarding this particular situation in British Columbia.

Having just listened to my colleague from southern Vancouver Island, I think we should not put this matter out of perspective. It is not as if we are faced with a national disaster in any sense of that word. It is quite true that a large number of people in British Columbia are seriously inconvenienced, and one cannot discount that. But the fact remains that if we are going to have what some of us like to consider a free society in which working people are not serfs under the lash of the employer, then we must continue the bargaining process. If grievances reach the point where they have to be strongly expressed, that is part and parcel of that process. Certainly this particular situation does not mean the end of the world for people on Vancouver Island, in Vancouver or in Prince George.

The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) suggested that he would be prepared to stay here all next week—I thought I understood him to say—to debate this issue. My only comment would be that if we were to stay here all next week and listen to the kind of inflammatory speech that was made by my colleague for Prince George-Peace River, there would probably be a strike at all airports in Canada.

I do not believe that this House of Commons, in the kind of debate we are having here tonight, is indeed the proper forum in which to arrive at a settlement of a collective bargaining dispute. I certainly agree with what was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), that this dispute is not the responsibility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He is not the employer. His job, for better or for worse, is to operate the airport system in Canada. The only person in this House who has any ministerial responsibility to whom we can address ourselves is the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). He, in effect, is our agent in this situation, and when I say "our agent" I mean in the sense that the government of the day is responsible to this House for its action or lack of action. In this instance the proper member to whom we should address our remarks is the President of the Treasury Board.

In the days before collective bargaining in the public service had been introduced—days when the only kind of business agent people in the public service had was their member of parliament—I remember putting forward the proposition advanced tonight by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), namely, that rates of pay of people in the public service in St. John's, Newfoundland, should be roughly the equivalent of rates in Vancouver. I must say that all efforts I made in this direction were not apparent as far as producing results is concerned, but it is heartening to find someone on the government side of the House advancing that thesis. It is only unfortunate that the hon. member for Verdun, in advancing the thesis, is not speaking as a member of the ministry. Perhaps one of the reasons he is not in the ministry is that he has not been able to convince the President of the Treasury Board of the equity of that kind of position.

One hon. member mentioned that the President of the Treasury Board said it would cost $64 million to equalize rates. We hear a lot of debate about equalization payments, and quite frankly I cannot think of any more economically sound form of equalization payments that might flow from the federal treasury of Canada than reasonably equalized rates that are uniform across the country within reasonable limits. Those rates, just as the equalization payments, have to be based on some calculation of the highest average rather than on some calculation either of the median or lowest average. I hope the hon. member for Verdun will continue to pursue his line of argument with his colleagues in the Liberal caucus, and in particular with the President of the Treasury Board.

That is the real solution to this situation and that would bail the Minister of Transport out of his present dilemma. That and that alone is the kind of approach I feel this House of Commons should suggest to the government tonight. I do not believe that much more can be achieved by the House of Commons at this point in time. When we reach eleven o'clock tonight we will not have passed any motion except that the House adjourn. Unless the President of the Treasury Board is in a position and willing to rise some time before eleven o'clock and make a real announcement, we will have to endure the collective bargaining behind the scenes in which he is involved and await the outcome of that process. Otherwise, I see little advantage in prolonging this debate.

We have made our views clear and we have tried to say what should happen. That having been done, the matter should go back to the collective bargaining forum with the realization that sooner or later something has to be settled. I think even the President of the Treasury Board would be prepared to make that admission. I know that he likes to take the hard-fisted approach on occasion, particularly in reference to money matters, and in part at least that is his responsibility.

However, I suggest that if he wants to do a real service toward resolving the kind of dilemma which keeps recurring, the dilemma which some of us from areas such as Vancouver Island have to wrestle with from time to time as a real and proper grievance, he will be prepared to rise tonight and announce that he accepts the principle of the federal service of Canada being paid on a national rate at a level which is reasonably equivalent to the average of perhaps the two highest salaried provinces in Canada, or some such formula. Then perhaps hon. members such as the hon. member from southern Vancouver Island will be able to go home for a comfortable sleep in the knowledge that Canada is not falling to pieces quite as badly as he suggested.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few comments in respect of this entire matter and to offer some praise to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who had the ability to determine that such a motion was required at this time. What he has tried to do, and I think he has done the job in an exceptional fashion, is bring home the point that someone here in the House of Commons must be concerned about the public interest.

I come from a city which is labour-oriented, with big unions, and I therefore have appreciation for what is talked about in terms of the collective bargaining process. Since I have been here no one has seemed to want to stand up and talk about the interests of the third party, that is, the Canadian public—that interest not represented at the bargaining table but which in many instances has found itself on the short end of the stick and wondering why.

The hon. member for Vancouver South has attempted to say that he has a responsibility as a member of parliament to bring home his concern, the concern of all members of parliament, for the public interest. I have heard a lot of talk about management, whether it be in the government or in the private sector, and a lot of talk about the unions; but no one seems to take it upon himself to suggest that there is another party not represented at the bargaining table about whom we should be concerned. I intend to continue to register my concern as a member of parliament, as did the hon. member for Vancouver South, for that third party.

It has been suggested that this is a Vancouver or a British Columbia problem. That is not quite so. When stopping at the Toronto international airport yesterday on my way to Ottawa, I was approached by several members of Air Canada who were up in arms over the fact that travellers aboard BOAC hoping to get to Vancouver were told they could not stop over at Toronto but had to get back on the plane and go to Calgary and take their lumps there. I wonder whether the minister is aware of that fact, or the fact that those travelling from the Atlantic provinces en route to Vancouver could not stop at Toronto but had to go on to Calgary and take their chances there. For that reason it is not right to say that this is only a B.C. problem. This problem is centred in British Columbia but it is nationwide, if not international, and it might well become that to a significant degree. Let us not make any mistake about that.

It disturbs me to hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) say he cannot intervene because we have a Public Service Alliance, which is the agent on the one hand, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) on the other hand. What the minister should appreciate is the fact that the negotiations are not realistic and he has every right, under section 195 of the Labour Code, to appoint a mediator. This is a general section which perhaps needs more interpretation on my part. But the Minister of Labour has said he is aware of this situation and that mediators are ready if called upon. I think he should take the initiative.

What bothers me is the attitude of the President of the Treasury Board. When we hear that he is involved, the only conclusion most of us can reach is that he is callous and hard, and I say that with a great deal of respect. I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board knows about the discrepancy which exists. A fireman is a fireman no matter where he works, and this is the important situation the President of the Treasury Board must face. He must approach this problem with full disclosure and bargain in good faith. He must realize that there is an ever-widening discrepancy as a result of which people are becoming extremely frustrated. I agree with the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) who suggests that we must reduce that discrepancy.

We find that the national wage is approximately $9,100, yet in the city of Toronto a municipal firefighter is paid about $12,124. A firefighter at the Hamilton municipal airport is paid by the city of Hamilton approximately $11,500. A firefighter in Vancouver earns about $13,000, and in Calgary, where there is some peculiar arrangement because of its status as an international airport, firefighters are paid $13,000. In Edmonton they are paid $13,000. The most significant statistic I can find relates to the fact that a first-class constable in the RCMP in the 1960's was earning an average of approximately $4,000 per year, as was a firefighter. Now, as I understand it, an RCMP constable is up to $12,000, while for the firefighters it is approximately $9,000.

Does the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), with all his wisdom, not realize that this discrepancy is frustrating and leads to the sort of thing that has happened at Vancouver where the dissidents, against the will of the Public Service Alliance, went on strike? We do not condone that, of course not. It was most unfair of the ex-minister, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) to even suggest this. He is a good friend of mine, but I must say it was most unfair of him to even suggest to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) that he was condoning an illegal strike. The hon. member for Vancouver South when he opened his remarks was most careful and responsible in that regard in stating that we do not go along with it and do not condone it. He was attempting to bring to the attention of not only the President of the Treasury Board but also the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) the very serious situation in terms of the discrepancy that exists.

The Minister of Transport said he has sent out two representatives. The hon. member for Vancouver South said he does not understand this. I have difficulty in uderstanding it myself. If he can send two representatives out to discuss this matter with the dissidents, why cannot the minister himself to out there? I am not concerned about what the former minister of labour, the hon. member for Verdun, said about this. If we can send out two representatives, it is no more frustrating, surely, to the collective bargaining process than if the minister went out there himself. It is a matter of great importance.

I am getting sick and tired of ministers who seem to have some hang-up with regard to the collective bargaining process. They seem to have forgotten that the public interest must remain paramount. There can be no question about that. If there is, then I find that my six years of experience here have come to naught, because I thought we were sent here to protect the public interest regardless of which facet we are talking about. I see the minister shaking his head. I understand. I am trying to be responsible today. Normally I get mean and rant and rave, but this is different. I am attempting to make some valid points. The minister cannot just sit there day after day. We had to beg the Minister of Labour personally to intervene in the Seafarers' International dispute. He said he could not do that because it would have been premature. We on this side seem to know what we are doing. The other side does not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should first apologize for not having been present throughout this debate. I had wished to be here during the course of the whole debate. However, I have had reported to me, albeit second-hand, some of the views expressed and I have listened to some of the speakers.

The suggestion was made by the last speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), that the government is not concerned with the public interest. Perhaps if I were not to try to disclose the course of the negotiations, but to indicate some of the background, it would be seen that the government is preoccupied with the public interest. The objective of the government is to secure agreement through the collective bargaining process. It is only in the event that we cannot reach agreement through this process that resort is had to arbitration, which is the method of dispute settlement chosen by the firefighters in this particular case.

As the hon. member for Hamilton West and others have pointed out, there are quite considerable variances in the wages and salaries paid to people in the profession of firefighting across Canada. Firefighters are regarded differently in Canada by the communities in which they work and serve rather differently. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these communities are entitled to their views and that it should not be up to the federal government by fiat to tell them that their ideas and values are wrong and that it knows better.

It is for this reason the government has proposed, in the interest of harmonious relationships between employer and employee—and Treasury Board is the nominal employer—that where a man or woman engages in the federal public service and is likely to remain throughout his or her working career in that particular community, that is, a condition known as lack of mobility, there are marked differences in the kind of rewards that communities in Canada accord to these particular professions. Where there are marked differences and lack of mobility, we suggest—and I emphasize this—and indeed offer a regional approach rather than a national approach.

This means that those who avail themselves of this offer look for comparability with people in a corresponding trade in the community in which they live and work, and comparability where their wives shop, with the wives of other people engaged in the same profession. A number of unions have accepted this with satisfaction. A number of other unions have not accepted it. The fact that they have not accepted it does not mean we do not reach agreement. The government offers this to them, and if they accept it we reach a collective agreement.

In the present case we have offered to the firefighters regional rates, that is, the firefighters would be able to achieve comparability with corresponding people in the area in which they live and work, rather than the national average. The leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis), suggested, I think rather irresponsibly for a member of this House, that we should in effect pay public servants the highest rate going anywhere in Canada. He suggested that in this way you can obtain harmony.

An hon. Member: He did not go that far: he said close to that.

Mr. Drury: Close to the highest probably sounds good to the people looking for a large increase and not so bad to the taxpayer who has to pay the bill. We have a system which has worked very satisfactorily and which has led to a very large number of collective agreements, whereby the federal government's position is that those who wish to be on national rates will bargain for a settlement at close to the national average.

● (2250)

Mr. Lewis: That takes in the lowest.

Mr. Drury: Of course it does. We all understand arithmetic. The average is the mean between the top and the bottom, and it includes both. We are prepared to offer the national average and we have concluded a great many agreements on this basis with those who prefer that kind of arrangement. The result is that where there are not wide differences of rewards across the country, there is not much disparity between the various communities. However, where there are wide disparities, as in the case of the firefighters and a number of other trades across the country where disparities exist, it is conducive to intense dissatisfaction.

The union, in so far as the firefighters are concerned, feels it is bound by a statement of principle that national rates are the rule. They are bound by the rules of the convention. Consequently, they responded to the government's over-all regional rate, which means substantial increases for places like Vancouver, Toronto, and some of the other western provinces mentioned, and to lesser increases for some other communities where there is not such a large disparity, by saying that their policy was national rates. Clearly, this is highly unsatisfactory to the firefighters in Vancouver, indeed in the whole B.C. area. It has been indicated to us that firefighters in another unit in B.C. and also in the employment of the federal government will go out with other services in sympathy with the claims of the airport firefighters. The local in Vancouver has made it quite clear in public statements that they would be prepared to defy the injunction ordering them back to work in what, as everyone admits, is an illegal strike.

Mr. Nielsen: Who is the applicant?

Mr. Drury: The applicant was Treasury Board. The hon. member for Hamilton West has been complaining that the government does not have the public interest in mind.

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Mr. Drury: When members of the public service engage in illegal practices, in this case an illegal work stoppage, we invoke the law. We have no whips and we would not use them if we had; but we do invoke the law, and the ruling of the law is the order to return to work. This order of the court has not been observed by the workers in Vancouver, which indicates quite clearly how strongly they feel about this, and I sympathize with their plight and recognize that there is a wide disparity. In the name of national rates they are being asked to make a considerable financial sacrifice in terms of comparability—in the name of national rates, in the name of the dogma. As I say, I sympathize with them in this. In fact, I might say that the workers in Vancouver have gone on an illegal strike in support of Treasury Board policy. That is something.

An hon. Member: Beautiful.

Mr. Drury: That happens to be a fact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Hamilton West, Mr. Alexander.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think I had better bow to seniority.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes left I would like to add something to the debate. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hamilton) referred to a conflict of interest that exists in every case where Treasury Board sits down at the bargaining table with the bargaining agents of the employees. It seems to me that there is always a conflict. On the one hand, Treasury Board acts on its own behalf as the nominal employer, and on the other hand it purports to act on behalf of the public of Canada generally.

We have put forward the suggestion—if the hon. member for Hamilton West had the time, I am sure he would have done so himself—that there should be some independent body that could sit at the bargaining table for these purposes. Many times in the past we have suggested the creation of a public service disputes commission which would act in the public interest.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have it.

Mr. Drury: It is called the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

Mr. Nielsen: That has no more independence, in the sense in which I speak, than the minister himself.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. I hope the hon. member for Yukon will withdraw what he said in giving his views of me and interpreting the same optic to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and its distinguished chairman, which is nothing but a slur on him. I hope he will withdraw that comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is getting close to eleven o'clock, so I hope the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will try to arrange that.

Mr. Nielsen: This is a debate, and no slur was intended. I was really trying to be fair to the minister, trying to be non-partisan. The minister said that he endeavours to approach these problems on a regional basis. If that is so, why is there this great gap between what MOT firefighters are being paid at Vancouver and what municipal firefighters are being paid? I understand it is in the order of $3,000. If he is sincere in trying to settle on a regional basis, then what is the reason for this great gap?

The last observation I have—and I have three seconds in which to make it—is that I am wondering why Treasury Board applied the injunction knowing full well they have to commence proceedings and claim irreparable damage in order to obtain their injunction. And then they sit on it, because if there have been damages, as there must be otherwise the judge would not have granted the injunction, what was the purpose in getting the injunction if Treasury Board intended to sit on it and not make any effort to carry it through?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Pursuant to section 13 of Standing Order 26, I am satisfied that the debate has been concluded and the motion is deemed to have carried.

It being eleven o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At 11 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—OBJECTION TO CERTAIN INSTRUCTIONS TO COMMITTEE CHAIRMEN

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects the rights and privileges of every member of this House in a very serious way. I have given Your Honour the notice as is required, of course, by the Standing Order.

I have here what purports to be a copy of a letter written by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, presumably, with the rigid discipline that applies in this case, including the consent, knowledge, and approval of the government House leader. It is dated March 26, 1974. There are three very brief paragraphs which I feel I must read in order to lay the foundation for the development of this very serious breach of privilege by the hon. member.

The letter is addressed to committee chairmen and the subject is committee reports and estimates. We have heard of papal bulls; this is parliamentary bull being handed down by the hon. member.

The second paragraph states:

For your information and guidance—

This is the hon. member giving guidance to the committee chairmen who presumably have or should have the qualities of the Chair in regard to independence and objectivity in their approach to the problems that are placed before them. To begin again, the second paragraph of this amazing letter states:

For your information and guidance please note that reports from standing committees dealing with estimates should—

The letter does not say "ought"; it says "should". It continues:

—consist of approval, reduction, or elimination of estimates only.

The word "only" is in capital letters and underlined.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That is very sound procedure.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is an instrument in this direction from the top down to hon. members of the House including most of them in his own party.

Mr. Trudeau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to inquire from the hon. member how he reaches that conclusion?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Quit clowning.

Mr. Baldwin: The third paragraph of the letter states:

Reports of a substantive nature, including recommendations on items relating to or contained in the estimates, are clearly not allowed.

That is our great Caesar over there suggesting that recommendations of this kind are not allowed, and this is a direction to the chairmen of standing committees.

Mr. MacEachen: Sound procedure.

Mr. Baldwin: I could read a lot more, Mr. Speaker, but I will content myself with the last paragraph which states:

In carrying out your responsibilities vis-à-vis the committees' consideration of estimates, please try to ensure that this principle is at all times maintained.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: How can you get up on a point of order?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: This is a question of privilege.

Mr. MacEachen: I would just suggest that the hon. member table the letter in view of the fact he has quoted from it extensively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We are always glad to do that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: We are straightforward, honest chaps and we are always glad to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The rules do not provide for the tabling of letters except official documents that are read for use in the course of a debate by a minister of the Crown.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: You had better go back to Beauchesne, Allan.

Mr. Baldwin: I would only say in that regard, Mr. Speaker, that if the government House leader and the Prime Minister will come to my office after orders of the day I will be glad to read them the letter.

An hon. Member: And read them the rules, too.

Mr. Baldwin: In trying to substantiate this fantastic direction, this attempt to direct the operations and the decisions of committee chairmen, the hon. member cites a ruling made by the Chair in a situation that developed in the House on June 18, 1973. Your Honour will, of course, recall that particular discussion.

At that time the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) attempted to move concurrence in a report of the committee on transportation and there was a very interesting discussion in which I, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and other hon. members participated. The question was on the very narrow ground whether that report of the committee, which had been dealing with estimates, could be the subject of a motion for concurrence in the House. We had an interesting discussion and Your Honour postponed your ruling and then came up with one of those fine, intelligent, reasonable and objective rulings which have made this House from time to time a better place to be in.

An hon. Member: Don't push your luck.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Is there any place you would rather be?

Mr. Baldwin: At that time Your Honour said that in the first instance, very specifically, such a motion could only be moved on an allotted day. That is of interest to us today when we find the government running away from allotted days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: At any rate, that was the narrow ground upon which Your Honour made your ruling. You did indicate at the time that in your view, and I think quite properly because I found myself in agreement with Your Honour, not only because you are the Speaker but because your decision was right—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —there was a collateral point, an obiter dictum, in that a recommendation in a committee report of a substantive nature which appeared to deal with the expenditure or proposed expenditure of money was not one which could be dealt with in a committee report through a motion to concur in that report. I think that was the gist of what was said. At that time the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River did make a very strong and spirited attempt to put forward the same views he has put forward in this letter. I objected to that, as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but Your Honour did not rule on that ground.

As a matter of fact, Your Honour referred to a previous ruling in a previous situation in 1969 when on an allotted day there was in the House a debate on the following motion which I moved:

That this House concurs with the views expressed by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates relating to the use of $1 items in estimates as set out in paragraphs one and two of the fourth report of the said committee on February 28, 1969.

At that time that committee, with due regard to its responsibility to examine with care and scrutinize with exactitude expenditures made by this government, saw fit to include in its report a collateral recommendation as to these $1 items. We undertook through the motion which I moved on an allotted day to ask for concurrence in that recommendation.

● (1410)

It was not a day on which we voted. We had a very good debate. I will always remember that debate. It took place on March 3, 1969. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made the very serious charge that parliament has now lost control over the public purse. I hope he still holds that view. In light of that fact I think it is absolutely unforgiveable that a member of this House who happens to have a semi-official or official position with the government, not as high as he would like to go but maybe higher than he should be, should undertake to dictate to the chairmen of standing committees, hon. members who have very responsible positions, as to what they should or should not allow to be discussed or included in the reports of those committees. I am not moving a motion, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I would hope that as a result of this debate the hon. member in his official function will be relegated to the duty he performs best, that of saying no to motions under Standing Order 43.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have been the subject of a 15-minute speech by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I assure him that what was done was done on my own authority.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: As you know, Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable debate in the House of Commons with regard to exactly what the powers of standing committees are, particularly with reference to the making of reports on estimates. I was approached by a number of committee chairmen as to what rulings there had been in the House of Commons which would indicate to them what powers committees have to make reports to the House on estimates.

I recall very well debating the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I recall the ruling. I obtained sufficient copies of the ruling and elucidated what I thought were the main points of the ruling in a covering memorandum. I then sent this memorandum to committee chairmen on all sides of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in interpreting your ruling it may have been that I erred. If I did err I apologize to you and to the House of Commons. If there should happen to be in your view, Mr. Speaker, some reason to believe that the memorandum I prepared and the ruling I circulated were not accurate, perhaps this might provide an opportunity for you to clarify the issue once and for all so that we would know clearly and precisely what are the rules of the House of Commons in respect of the consideration of estimates by committees and their powers in reporting to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members do not expect the Chair to attempt to clarify a ruling which was made on another occasion. Certainly that would not be according to well established practice. I would prefer to allow the matter to stand where it is now. In any event, the hon. member for Peace River has not proposed a motion for the consideration of the House and I suggest we should not pursue the matter further.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like, if I may, to follow up briefly the point that has been raised by the extensive reading from a letter by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It is my submission, and I make it briefly, that in these circumstances when a letter is read into the record it is the obligation of any member to table the letter. I certainly agree with you, Mr. Speaker, that if a minister quotes from a public document that document must be tabled, but I think there is also an obligation on the part of an hon. member who quotes from a letter to lay it upon the table. I believe that is indicated in citation 158, page 134, paragraph 3, which reads as follows:

An unsigned letter should not be read in the House. On the 16th May 1928, a member stated during debate that a letter which he had been quoting was not signed. The Speaker said: "Such a letter should not be read into Hansard; all letters when read must be signed and they become part of the documents of the House."

The only way a letter can become part of the documents of the House is by tabling it and not by being recorded in Hansard. Further, citation 159, paragraph 3, which does not refer to a minister or a public document, says:

It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the House—

Some hon. Members: Read on.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Peace River referred to the hon. member for Kenory-Rainy River as holding an official or semi-official position.

—if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

I suggest that the document could be tabled. The citation continues:

The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Surely the hon. gentleman would not be so impolite as to quote from private letters in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a memorandum.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope we would not pursue the matter. I might say that I have already made a ruling on the point which was raised in the first instance by the minister and I am prepared to confirm the ruling I made earlier. However, I do not want to prevent the hon. member for Peace River, if he wishes to, from adding to the considerations for the guidance of the Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Normally at the beginning, before the minister rose, I would have asked for unanimous consent to table it, but in view of the sanctimonious hypocrisy of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: —who on many occasions when members on this side have sought to table letters has rejected them, I now say that he can table his own letter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, this question of the tabling of documents, letters or memoranda cited in the course of a debate has been considered very often and there are any number of rulings to the effect that it is only in relation to official documents cited in a debate that there is a requirement that such documents be tabled. When letters or documents have been quoted by hon. members other than ministers in the course of a debate, very often a member occupying the seat immediately next to the member who had the floor would suggest that the document be tabled, and this has always been objected to by the Chair.

The relevant citation in this case would be the paragraph following those quoted by the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Citation 159 (4) reads:

Official papers quoted during a debate should be laid on the Table of the House.

The minister suggests that the document in question is an official paper. I doubt very much that it can be considered as an official paper. I do not consider it as such and would rule that there is no requirement that it be tabled at this time by the hon. member who has quoted from the document.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

ADVERTISING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising out of one of the methods used by the government in spending public funds. The motion is self-explanatory. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That in view of the answer to an order paper question on April 8 by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that his department awarded $1.7 million in advertising contracts to Vickers-Benson Limited in 1973 without calling tenders or competitive presentations, this House requests the minister to cease authorizing expenditure of public funds for advertising purposes in future without first obtaining tenders or competitive presentations.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF BOXCAR CONTROLLER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity and of particular concern to prairie farmers.

On March 14, 1974, in reply to my request to the government to bring in legislation to provide a boxcar controller with power to direct the rail companies to allocate boxcars, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said, "I should like to have the reaction of my colleagues to the concept, which I am inclined to support entirely." Yesterday in the House the minister reversed himself and denied such a statement, saying in reply to a question that the member for Prince Albert "never asked me to bring in a piece of legislation; he asked me if this co-ordinator would have certain powers and I answered no".

As Canada's wheat markets are being lost because of failure to deliver—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in accordance with contractual obligations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I therefore move—

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate, of course, to interrupt the right hon. member but I am sure he appreciates that under Standing Order 43 a speech should not be made. Under the Standing Order a motion is suggested for consideration by the House, without lengthy explanations. I would hope the right hon. gentleman would come to the motion.

Mr. Trudeau: Get your information right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I never make speeches when I raise motions, but I have to give the information to this government that has shown such a contempt for the facts. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher):

That this House condemns the government for its failure to bring before parliament legislation to provide for the appointment of such a controller possessing the power above mentioned and, on failure of the railroad companies to carry out such orders, that heavy penalties be imposed.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of the Standing Order the motion requires unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Denied by the Liberal members again. Western farmers will remember.

GRAIN

FEED GRAINS MARKETING POLICY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the open letter from the Progressive Conservative party to the Prime Minister calling for the implementation of the Minister of Justice's feed grains policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly):

That this House calls upon the Prime Minister to reject the policy of placing feed grains on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange, an action that would destroy the Canadian Wheat Board as an effective bargaining agent for western producers.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

FINANCE

LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Concerning small businesses that lack the investment necessary to increase its production and its profitability, present financial institutions refuse to extend more credit to them. In view of the price increases in resources and transportation, their present credit is not sufficient.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House consider the possibility of increasing loans made to small businesses by way of endorsement of bank loans and of providing them better interest rates.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since we have gone past the motion respecting the Easter adjournment, I wonder whether the government House leader or the Minister of Justice might like to tell us, in order to keep our hopes alive, what will happen to this recess motion that is of great interest to many people?

Mr. Speaker: The motion called by the Chair is in the name of the Minister of Justice. Stand.

PENSIONS FOR RETIRED CHARTERED BANK EMPLOYEES

Question No. 32—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Has the Minister of Finance, or the Inspector-General of Banks acting for the minister, since March 14, 1973, had any further discussions with the chartered banks concerning the need for the pensions paid to their retired employees to be escalated annually by an amount at least equal to the rise in the cost of living and, if so, can the minister now say whether the chartered banks are implementing this practice with respect to their retired employees?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): As indicated in the reply on March 14, 1973, the hon. member's starred questions numbered 811 and 1082 were drawn to the attention of the president of each of the chartered banks. Responses since that date indicate that banks are not formally committed to a continuing future escalation of pensions based on the cost of living because of the unpredictable liability involved. However, most banks, including all the larger banks, review the situation annually, taking into account rising living costs, and make special supplementary payments particularly to the older pensioners or their survivors who have been most affected by rising costs.

ONTARIO HOUSING AUTHORITIES CONVENTIONS

Question No. 38—Mr. Hellyer:

Has the government considered contacting the government of Ontario to suggest that the annual association of Ontario Housing authorities convention be rescheduled on a bi-annual basis in order to save the time of the participants and cost to the taxpayers and, if not, will the government undertake to do so?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): While the federal government has not considered contacting the government of the province of Ontario with respect to the frequency of the meetings of the Association of Ontario Housing Authorities, it is understood that the provincial government has been engaged in a continuing review of the operations of Ontario Housing Authorities, including the questions of conferences, meetings and training programs, and some changes in their organization and functions are anticipated.

Order Paper Questions

PUBLIC WORKS—RENTAL OF PREMISES

Question no. 49—Mr. Cossitt:

Do any of the following government departments rent premises of any kind from Stewart Hackett, David Soper or Deborah Lawlor (a) Post Office (b) Public Works (c) National Defence (d) Solicitor General (e) National Revenue (f) Manpower and Immigration and, if so, where are these premises located and what are the terms of the rental?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) A search of the Department of Public Works' records indicate that it leases space on behalf of the Post Office Department from Deborah Lawlor at Lyndhurst, Ontario, only. This lease covers an area of 1,170 square feet in the Webster Building on Main Street for a period of five years from May 1, 1973 to April 30, 1978, at an annual rental of $5,500. which includes all services. The search of their records has necessarily been confined to the persons named in the question, and could not take into account the possibility of these persons being shareholders of a company leasing space to this department. (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) No.

INCOME TAX—DEDUCTION OF MORTGAGE DEPRECIATION

Question No. 122—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

Has the Minister of Finance studied the possibility of alleviating the burden on the small owner by allowing him to deduct the depreciation of his mortgage from his income tax return and, if so, on what date will this amendment come into effect?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I assume that "depreciation" should be construed as "interest", and hence the proposal is for the deduction of mortgage interest in arriving at taxable income. This proposal has in fact been considered, and while it has some merit, it is also subject to serious defects: it discriminates strongly in favour of home owners and against renters; it would necessitate tax increases elsewhere in the system to offset the loss of several hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue its implementation would occasion; and, because it would tend to increase the demand for housing, it would tend to drive up both house prices and mortgage interest rates, thereby substantially reducing the net benefits attributable to the measure. Were such a measure to be implemented, this would be done by means of a budget announcement.

REFRIGERATED ROLLING STOCK

Question No. 138—Mr. Fairweather:

What action is proposed by the government to remedy the shortage of refrigerated rolling stock and will a government-assisted rolling stock construction program be announced soon?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The government is in continuing contact with the railways to promote the effective utilization of refrigerator equipment. As with other areas where statutory rates do not apply, the government has no plan to engage in a federally assisted refrigerated rolling stock construction program at this time.

[Mr. Basford.]

INSURANCE FOR COMMERCIAL VESSELS IN ARCTIC WATERS

Question No. 148—Mr. Forrestall:

What arrangements are contemplated in 1974 by the government towards making available to commercial vessels in the Arctic waters insurance at a reasonable rate?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No action is contemplated for 1974. However, as a part of larger studies on navigation in the Arctic, MOT officials are studying various methods by which assistance could be made available.

OPERATION OF SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS IN WATERS WITHIN CANADIAN JURISDICTION

Question No. 156—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government ensure that no submersible vessels of any type is ever employed within waters inside the jurisdictional purview of our government that does not have at least one internal emergency back up method of life preservation and extension, other than simple escape capability, to permit delayed rescue in the event of entrapment?

2. Will the government give the highest priority to such absolutely mandatory requirements in 1974 and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. When regulations are written concerning submersible vehicles they will include such fundamental requirements as an internal emergency back up system of life preservation and extension, other than a simple escape capability. Information on submersibles in use in waters within Canadian jurisdiction reveals that they all are equipped with a least one internal emergency back up method of life preservation and extension referred to above.

2. The priority given to this subject must depend on the need for regulations and requirements in other aspects of safety of life at sea and pollution prevention. The degree of study necessary to write regulations for submersibles will preclude promulgation in 1974.

STANDARDIZATION OF DESIGN OF EXTERNAL ADAPTORS TO SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS

Question No. 157—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to initiate consideration at the international level to provide for a standardization of design and construction of external adaptors to submersible vessels to ensure universal ability to service any such vessels in terms of life extension and preservation pending delayed rescue, in the event that such vessels would become endangered outside the area of possible operational rescue ability of the nation to which such vessels would be registered, or in whose waters they would normally be operating in 1974 and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Ministry of Transport already has representation on an international committee known as The Special Committee on Submersible Vehicles which was created to meet the need expressed by industry to prepare regulations governing commercial submersibles. The committee will be holding its next meeting on April 17, 1974. The question of standardization of design and construction of external adaptors to submersible vehicles to ensure universal ability to service any such vehicles in terms of life extension and preservation pending delayed rescue will be discussed. In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned military submersible vessels conform to the international standards contained in a standard NATO Agreement entitled "Adaptions for Supply of High Pressure Air to Sunken NATO Submarines".

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 260—Mr. Nystrom:

OLD BOUNDARY BAY AIRPORT—SECURITY

Question No. 337—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Due to continued vandalism at the Old Boundary Bay Airport site in Delta, British Columbia, will the proper security be reinstalled and, if not, for what reason?

2. For what reason was the security removed from the Old Boundary Bay Airport in Delta, British Columbia?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. As the majority of buildings have been declared surplus for removal, the cost of maintaining security, other than by local police, cannot be justified.

GOVERNMENT BORROWINGS FROM THE BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 400—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Did the government borrow from the Bank of Canada during the past ten years and, if so (a) in what amount each year (b) at what interest rates (c) for what period of time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Under Section 18(1) of the Bank of Canada Act "The Bank may . . . (i) make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the government of Canada . . . on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada . . . (j) make loans to the government of Canada . . . but such loans outstanding at any one time shall not, in the case of the government of Canada, exceed one-third of the estimated revenue of such government for its fiscal year, . . . and loans should be repaid before the end of the first quarter after the end of the fiscal year of such government;" No such borrowings have been undertaken during the past 10 years.

FEDERAL GRANT TO MUNICIPALITY OF ALMA, LAC ST. JEAN, QUEBEC FOR SPORTS FACILITIES

Question No. 401—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Did the government grant a loan to the Municipality of Alma, Lac St. Jean, Quebec, to provide sports facilities through the Government of the Province of Quebec, within the framework of the investment-loans program and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for what period of time (c) at what rate of interest (d) on what terms (e) is a percentage of such loan non-refundable and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): A loan application for $1,328,188 for the construction of recreational facilities in the municipality of Alma has been approved under the Winter Capital Projects Fund as follows: (a) no funds advanced to date; (b) loan application contemplates a 20-year loan; (c) and (d) to be established at the time of loan advance(s) in accordance with program guidelines; (e) amounts equivalent to 100 per cent of project direct on-site labour costs incurred during winter i.e. December 1 to May 31 and 50 per cent of project direct on-site labour incurred during summer; i.e. June 1 to November 30.

INFORMATION CANADA—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. E. MILLER

Question No. 405—Mr. Coates:

1. (a) On what date was the Deputy Director General of Information Canada, Mr. E. Miller, appointed (b) at what salary (c) under what set of conditions?

2. What is Mr. Miller's background and age and what are his present responsibilities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In so far as Information Canada is concerned, the answers are as follow: 1. (a) Mr. E. Miller, Deputy Director General, was appointed on June 1, 1973. (b) He was appointed at the SX 3 level, which at that time had a salary range of $28,000-$35,000. (c) Mr. Miller was appointed under Section 7(1)(b)(ii) of the Public Service Employment Regulations. He is a continuing employee subject to the benefits and limitations of his colleagues in the Senior Executive (SX) group.

2. Mr. Miller was self-employed as a Management Consultant before joining Information Canada. Prior to that, he was a senior executive with a number of advertising agencies. He is forty-four years old. The Deputy Director General is responsible to the Director General. In this capacity, he develops and recommends information policies and guidelines for submission to the Committee on Science, Culture and Information and, with the Director General represents Information Canada in this respect; directs and co-ordinates the planning, development and implementation of policies and programs relating to (a) the marketing, sale and distribution of government of Canada publications; (b) the dissemination of information on government programs and services through an enquiry service and other communication techniques and the collection of citizen feedback through a regional organization; (c) the provision of advice, evaluation, co-ordination and assistance to departments in the area of social and

REFUSAL OF VISA TO KONSTANTIN GUEIVANDOV

Question No. 408—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the government refused a re-entry visa to Soviet journalist Mr. Konstantin Gueivandov and, if so, was the reason given that his activities when previously in Canada were not related to his work as a journalist?

2. What is a full and complete description of all such activities, including dates and places, that caused the government to take this step?

3. Were any Canadian citizens or residents of Canada involved in activities objected to by the government on the part of Mr. Gueivandov and, if so, who were these persons?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes, Mr. Konstantin Gueivandov was refused a visa to re-enter Canada because some of his actions were not related to his work as a journalist.

2 and 3. It is not considered to be in the public interest to divulge the information requested.

SOVIET JOURNALISTS IN CANADA

Question No. 409—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names of all Soviet journalists presently in Canada with valid visas and what are the names and addresses of the news media that they represent in this country?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The news media representatives of the Soviet Union presently in Canada reside in Ottawa. They are I. I. Mironov of Tass, A. Palladine of Novesti Press and V. K. Kurnikov of The State Television and Radio network.

PURCHASE OF TULIP BULBS FOR OTTAWA

Question No. 410—Mr. Haliburton:

1. How many tulip bulbs are purchased each year for Ottawa?

2. How many years are the bulbs re-used?

3. When the bulbs are disposed of, are they sold by public tender or destroyed and, if destroyed (a) what is the manner of so doing (b) what is the cost?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am informed by the National Capital Commission as follows: 1. Approximately 200,000 to 250,000 tulip bulbs are purchased each year by the NCC. The number varies depending upon which priority floral display areas are replanted.

2. There are four major priority floral display areas, they are Dow's Lake, Parliament Hill, 24 Sussex and Rideau Hall. These beds are normally replanted every second year. If the first year display is poor they will be replaced the next fall, conversely if the second year display is particularly good they will be kept a third year. The other floral displays are replanted when necessary every three or four years.

3. The tulip bulbs are heeled in after they are removed in the spring, sorted during the summer and the flower size bulbs are replanted in the fall in the secondary floral display areas such as the borders along the Driveway system. (a) The remaining bulbs, which are too small to produce a flower are buried. (b) Approximately $250.

RECENT AIRCRAFT ACCIDENT AT FROBISHER BAY

Question No. 425—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With respect to the crash of a Canadian business jet aircraft near Frobisher Bay in the last week of February 1974, were both the BRAVO and FOXTROT radio beacons functioning at the time of the crash?

2. Was the pilot of the craft made aware of any shut-downs of radio aids at the Frobisher Airport?

3. Were Department of Transport Aeradio Station personnel at Frobisher made aware of the estimated time of arrival of the business jet in question?

4. Is it customary for standby beacons to be installed at those DOT airports licensed for IFR approaches so that in the event of a malfunction of one beacon then another is immediately available as a substitute?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

TENDERS FOR POST OFFICE, OROMOCTO, N.B.

Question No. 450—Mr. Howie:

1. On what date were tenders for the government building to house a post office at Oromocto, New Brunswick first scheduled to be called and to what date and for what reason was this tentative call postponed?

2. On what date is such tender now anticipated?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Tender call for the government of Canada building in Oromocto, New Brunswick, to house a post office was first scheduled for March 28, 1974. This was postponed due to the fact that Canada Post Office are reviewing their requirements.

2. Tender call is now anticipated in the first week of June, 1974, provided the Canada Post Office review does not change existing requirements.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS—IDENTIFICATION OF "BELMONT" HOUSE IN LINCOLN, N.B.

Question No. 452—Mr. Howie:

1. Will the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada consider identifying the house known as "Belmont" in Lincoln, County of Sunbury, New Brunswick as the home of the Hon. Robert Wilmot, a Father of Confederation, and on what date and by whom will the necessary research be undertaken to confirm such an identification?

2. How will the home of the Hon. Robert Wilmot be recognized by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Research necessary to confirm the identification of the building with the Hon. Robert Wilmot, a Father of Confederation, will be undertaken prior to the autumn meeting of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, the date of which will be established during the board's spring meeting in May. In addition to this, an architectural examination of the building will be made. It is not possible at this time to give the names of the researchers who will carry out the task, nor the precise date on which the research will begin, as the work on the documentation required for the autumn board meeting is not assigned until after the spring meeting has taken place.

2. If the board recommends that the house is of national significance and that recommendation is accepted, then the customary commemoration in such instances would be by plaque.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS TAKING FRENCH COURSES AT ALLIANCE FRANÇAISE D'OTTAWA

Question No. 454—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many members of the Public Service have taken or are taking French language training courses at Alliance Française d'Ottawa over a period of the past three years directly or indirectly at government expense?

2. What is the total expenditure involved and what is the average cost per student?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. None.

2. Nil.

LA MALBAIE CULTURAL CENTRE

Question No. 466—Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix):

With respect to the government's contribution to the construction of the Cultural Center at La Malbaie, Quebec during centennial year (a) what was the cost of the Center (b) how much has been invested by the government from 1967 to date (c) what were the terms of the agreement spelling out the procedure to be followed with respect to the right of the Town of La Malbaie to acquire the Center (d) does the agreement include a provision forbidding the Municipality from disposing of the building?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): (a) The total estimated cost of the project at the time of approval by the Centennial Commission in October 1966 was $100,000. The final claim submitted by the province of Quebec to the Centennial Commission indicated a cumulative cost of $224,440.85 at that time. (b) The total contribution, by the Centennial Commission, toward the cost of construction was $33,333.33. This amount was paid to the province of Quebec on approval of claims as follows: May 24, 1967, $19,104,06; Nov. 16, 1967, $10,895.93; Jan. 29, 1969, $3,333.34; total $33,333.33. (c) and (d) The Centennial Local Projects Program was the subject of Federal-Provincial Agreements between the Centennial Commission and each province and territory. Therefore, there were no provisions in the agreements regarding the rights of a municipality.

FREDERICTON AIRPORT

Question No. 486—Mr. Howie:

1. How many persons used the DOT airport at Lincoln serving Fredericton, New Brunswick from January 1 to December 31, 1973 and what space is now available to serve passengers and those waiting for flights?

2. Are there any plans to increase the size or capacity of this airport to provide additional waiting rooms or other restaurant or lounge facilities and, if so, on what date?

3. How many DC-9 jet aircraft can the runway apron in front of the airport safely accommodate?

4. Are there any plans to increase the size of this apron and will an additional taxiing runway be added and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Eighty-six thousand, three hundred and fifty Air Canada and eastern provincial passengers used the airport facilities. Departure lounge and waiting room consist of 451 and 1,600 square feet respectively.

2. Preliminary plans are being reviewed to increase the size of the present terminal facilities, but no scheduled date has been established.

3. Three DC-9 aircraft can be accommodated simultaneously on the apron.

4. Plans have been developed to expand the aircraft apron and provide a parallel taxiway to runway 15-33 for 1976-77, subject to the availability of funds and national priorities.

PERCENTAGE OF CANADIANS SPEAKING FRENCH ONLY

Question No. 508—Mr. Mather:

What was the percentage of Canadians speaking French only in the years 1960, 1965 and 1973?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Data is not available for the years requested. However, information on the percentage of the Canadian population speaking French only* is available from the Census of Canada for the following years:

Year	Per cent of Canadians speaking French only
1961	19.1
1971	18.0

*It should be noted that the above percentages may include French speaking members of the population who speak a second language other than English.

CMHC—LOANS FOR SINGLE-FAMILY HOUSES

Question No. 510—Mr. Boisvert:

Since its inception, what was the total amount loaned by CMHC for the construction of single family houses and, of this amount, how much has been paid back?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: Since 1946, CMHC has made loans totalling $3.9 billion to assist in financing the construction of single-family houses in Canada. It is not possible to provide information on the amount repaid, since the accounting records of CMHC do not differentiate among the various types of structure.

MAGNESIUM IMPORTS

Question No. 525—Mr. Laprise:

Does Canada import magnesium and, if so, in what quantity and at what value for every year since 1970?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: The following table provides data on annual imports of magnesium in the period since 1970:

Year	Quantity (lb.)	Value ($'000)	Unit Price
1970	4,072,862	1,501	0.36
1971	3,654,067	1,458	0.39
1972	8,913,518	3,090	0.34
1973	10,101,238	3,818	0.37

METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 558—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

1. What was the total cost of developing the design for the metric symbol?

2. For the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73, what was the total amount spent by the Metric Commission in furnishing, publishing and disseminating information concerning conversion to the metric system?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. $16,320.

2. 1971-72, $4,690; 1972-73, $221,600.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—RETURN ON INVESTMENT

Question No. 560—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

1. Does the Canadian Development Corporation have a target of a prospective return on investment by any company in which it acquires shares?

2. What is the minimum return on investment it expects?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. The Canada Development Corporation has stated publicly that it seeks a 15 per cent rate of return on its investment for each of the companies in which it acquires shares. The CDC does not necessarily expect this return in the first year or even the first few years. But, over the lifetime of its investments, it expects to obtain a 15 per cent rate of return on a discounted cash flow basis on each investment.

HUDSON INSTITUTE—LETTING OF CONTRACTS BY DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Question No. 574—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Were any contracts let to the Hudson Institute by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal years 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74 and, if so, for what amount?

2. What was the nature of the work performed under these contracts?

3. Other than a contract, does the Department have any other working relationship with the Hudson Institute?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce participated in the final phase of a three-part multi-client Hudson Institute study "The Corporate Environment 1975-85", and is currently participating for a one year trial period in a multi-client extension of that study known as the "Corporate Environment Program". The fees paid to Hudson in respect of these studies were, respectively, $20,000 (U.S.) in fiscal year 1972-73 and $17,000 (U.S.) in fiscal year 1973-74.

HUDSON INSTITUTE—LETTING OF CONTRACTS BY DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Question No. 577—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Were any contracts let to the Hudson Institute by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the fiscal years 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74 and, if so, for what amount?

2. What was the nature of the work performed under these contracts?

3. Other than a contract, does the Department have any other working relationship with the Hudson Institute?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

3. No.

2. What was the total amount of loans made by CMHC in Canada and the Province of Quebec in the same years?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 15 is acceptable to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree that notice of motion No. 15 be deemed adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF REPORT OF INVESTIGATION RELATING TO DESTRUCTION OF AN AIR CANADA DC-8 JETLINER AT TORONTO

Motion No. 15—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the complete report arising out of the investigation, which was ordered by the Minister of Transport, involving the explosion and destruction of an Air Canada DC-8 jetliner at the Toronto International Airport on or about June 21, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

● (1430)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions No. 1, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19 and 20.

COPY OF AGREEMENT RELATING TO WEST INDIAN WORKERS

Motion No. 1—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the agreement between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the West Indian governments with respect to the hiring of West Indian workers to harvest certain Canadian crops.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the agreement requested is contained in numerous memoranda between the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the participating Caribbean governments. No formal treaty or international agreement is necessary to provide for such a movement of seasonal workers. The arrangement to bring seasonal West Indian workers to Canada arose out of proposals negotiated during the Commonwealth Caribbean-Canada Conference of July, 1966.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacGuigan: In view of this, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the motion to be dropped or transferred for debate?

Mr. Reid: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

NEW LOAN APPLICATIONS UNDER VLA

Motion No. 8—Mr. Marshall:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all material resulting from the first meeting of the VLA Senior Management team convened by the Director General of the Veterans Land Administration in Ottawa from March 26 to 29 as follows (a) operational plans in the periods before and after the March 31, 1974 deadline for new loan applications (b) further implementation of MBO as the VLA style of management.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the materials requested are internal, departmental documents of a confidential nature and cannot be produced. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Marshall: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reid: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPIES OF ALL DOCUMENTS RELATING TO NEW HOUSES AT NEUFCHATEL

Motion No. 9—Mr. Godin:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all documents or reports prepared by representatives of CMHC following an inquiry made January 22, 1973 in relation to certain houses located at Place de la Promenade at Neufchatel.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the documents and reports in question concern mortgage operations between CMHC, as a loans company, and a number of borrowers. As such, they are considered as working papers of a confidential nature. In view of the circumstances, I trust the hon. member will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the production of thoses documents because I am being sued for half a million dollars and the accuser does not want to accept monthly payments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member. What must be decided here is whether the motion is to be withdrawn, agreed to, put or transferred for debate.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I insist and must get those document. In the final analysis, they are public documents.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF ALL CONTRACTS RELATING TO USE OF BALLANTYNE, LAPOINTE AND CENTENNIAL PIERS, VANCOUVER

Motion No. 10—Mr. Neale (Vancouver East):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all contracts between the National Harbours Board in Vancouver and the following firms (a) Empire Stevedoring Co. Ltd. (b) Canadian Stevedoring Co. Ltd (c) Canadian National Railways respecting the use of Ballantyne Pier, Lapointe Pier and Centennial Pier for the years 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the documents requested are private and confidential. They are contracts for operating certain shipping terminals in the port of Vancouver which actively compete for business with the port of Seattle and making them open for public inspection could prejudice their position. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the hon. member's behalf I call for the question.

Mr. Reid: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF LATEST EVALUATION REPORT OF CANADA MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Motion No. 12—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the evaluation report of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program was prepared jointly by the department and the Treasury Board Secretariat as an internal working document for their exclusive use. I would therefore ask the member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not a chance.

Mr. Reid: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF REPORT BY GENERAL DARE FOR PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Motion No. 13—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the final report by General Dare, prepared recently for the Privy Council Office.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the report asked for in this motion was tabled in the House on March 12, 1974 and a copy was forwarded to the hon. member. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPIES OF ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENTS BY EVERGREEN DEVELOPMENT LTD., WINNIPEG

Motion No. 14—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of annual financial statements by Evergreen Development Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba, submitted to the government or any of its departments or agencies, pursuant to contractual arrangements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence is unable to submit copies of the annual financial statements by Evergreen Development Ltd. since there are no legal contractual obligations for the company to submit such statements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Reid: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO NEW NEWFOUNDLAND AIRPORT, GANDER

Motion No. 16—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and/or other persons or agencies, with respect to the Newfoundland Airport at Gander, including buildings and equipment together with any other property used for the operation of the Airport pursuant to Section 33(b), of the schedule to Chapter 22, Statutes of Canada, 1949, Volume 1, page 1 thereof, and copies of arrangements made, or agreements entered into and trusts existing in respect thereof, as to continued service for Canada to take over the equipment and especially the operations as referred to in Section 33(b).

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to ensure that all papers dealing with this subject would be obtained, an extensive search would have to be made of many files now located in the archives. To complete an assignment of this magnitude would involve considerable time and cost, with the provision of special staff. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Agreed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING BORDEN—TORMENTINE FERRY PRIOR TO LATEST RAILWAY STRIKE

Motion No. 19—Mr. Macquarrie:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents between the Minister of Transport and other responsible Ministers and the Government of Prince Edward Island respecting the Borden-Tormentine ferry service subsequent to the date of the latest national railway strike.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this motion is not acceptable because the release of these papers might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Macquarrie: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO PROPOSED EVICTION OF TENANTS OF ROCHDALE COLLEGE

Motion No. 20—Mr. Stackhouse:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Clarkson and Company in respect to a proposed eviction of tenants of Rochdale College, Toronto.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence referred to consists only of the letter of March 1 which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs wrote to Mr. Biddell of Clarkson and Company. The minister read the text of the letter into the record in the course of the debate on Rochdale College on March 18, and I would therefore hope that the hon. member would be willing to withdraw the motion. If, however, he insists, we would be willing to table the correspondence again at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped?

Mr. Stackhouse: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Reid: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Will the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have just witnessed a resumption of the abuse of the concept and idea of the rules which this government has engaged in for the past few years. It automatically demands that certain motions should be transferred for debate, not for the purpose of debating the merits of the motion, whether documents should or should not be tabled, but for the purpose of sweeping the idea under the rug and denying the House an opportunity to come to a conclusion on such matters. The government has engaged in this practice ever since the rule was established permitting motions to be transferred for debate on alternate Thursdays.

I think that Your Honour should take cognizance of this practice but should not say, as you have done before, that it is a subject for consideration by the committee that deals with procedure and rules, which meets from time to time. Instead, you should declare that the government is abusing the rules, using this device to prevent debate and, particularly, to prevent the House of Commons from making a decision on the matter.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On March 27 I raised a question of privilege with respect to notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 3 to 6 inclusive. The parliamentary secretary indicated that the following week, which was last week, 10 to 15 notices of motions would be called. Last week he was not in a position to call any and this week, even though some notices of motions have been called, Nos. 3 to 6 inclusive were not called. As these notices of motions for the production of papers were on the order paper in the last session and were placed on the order paper months ago, the government has had more than the necessary time to obtain the limited number of documents involved and present them to the House. This is a really scandalous situation. I think my question of privilege is genuine and the parliamentary secretary should apologize to the House for his conduct.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the point of order raised by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) is well taken. I apologize to him and to the House. Unfortunately, in my position I do not have power to force ministries to come forth with documents that are required. I have done all within my power to bring these documents forward, and I sincerely apologize to the hon. gentleman.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF CONTINGENCY PLAN TO DEAL WITH INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the very alarming rate of inflation indicated once more by the increase in the consumer price index, as published by Statistics Canada today, is the government prepared immediately to introduce its contingency plan, to which he has referred frequently, to deal with the rate of inflation as a matter of national emergency?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the rate of inflation is indeed of great concern but the answer to the question is no.

● (1440)

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to trespass too much upon the good nature of the right hon. member who obviously hurried to answer the question in such a manner that I could not hear it. Would he be good enough to tell me what he said?

Mr. Trudeau: I will gladly repeat the answer and elaborate on it. I know it is not very often that the Leader of the Opposition is applauded by his own followers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and I think it would only be fair for me to repeat what I said.

Mr. Hees: Back to the old Trudeau.

An hon. Member: Give him a haircut and he thinks he is king.

Mr. Hees: The old, arrogant Trudeau.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the noise which is coming from across the way. The Tories used to be so good at lipreading that I am surprised they did not lipread what I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to ask the Prime Minister about his popularity, my popularity or about who gets applause. I am asking him whether he is concerned about the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —and whether, in view of the abject failure of his so-called anti-inflationary policy during the past year, he is prepared to make a statement outlining any fundamental change in the approach of the government before the House adjourns for the Easter recess, if, as and when it does?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If members opposite look at Hansard they will see that my answer which they did not understand indicated precisely that we have great concern for the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —and that these figures were a source of concern to us. On the second part of the question as to whether I am prepared to make a statement, I certainly am prepared to elaborate on my earlier answer. You know, Mr. Speaker, that sharply rising agricultural and industrial commodity prices have been the main sources of inflationary pressures. There is reason to believe that these pressures may begin to subside given good crops around the world and increased supplies of industrial materials—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —together with some moderation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I am wondering whether it is the wish of the right hon. member that we revert to motions for the purpose of a statement. I certainly do not want to be unfair. It is always difficult for the Chair to decide whether an answer to a question is so long that it might better be made by way of a statement on motions. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might be allowed to ask a supplementary which might permit the right hon. Prime Minister to complete his answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there is a perfectly simple way out of this problem. In view of the desire of the Prime Minister to make a speech on the subject, is the government House leader prepared to allocate tomorrow as an opposition day?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition ought to make up his mind. A moment ago he was talking about an Easter recess. Now he is talking about sitting tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF REVIEW BOARD WITH POWER TO ROLL BACK UNJUSTIFIABLE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has made up its mind regarding early legislation to establish a prices review board, not necessarily limited to food, with power in the board or the government to roll back unjustifiable price increases, many of which are now gouging the Canadian consumer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government is on record several times as saying it is prepared to introduce such legislation if indeed the previous steps have been taken—that gouging has been established and that the gougers have refused to abide by the advice or enjoinders of the Food Prices Review Board. This remains the position of the government. We would not bring in such legislation needlessly, but if indeed gouging is established by the board and the people responsible for it refuse to redress their ways, we will bring in such legislation.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact this approach has obviously failed in the past number of months, in view of the fact that legislation passed by parliament giving authority to the appropriate agency or to the government to roll back prices would in itself have a deterrent effect on those who increase prices unrelated to increases in their cost of production and, finally, in view of the fact we have evidence of the incapacity of the Food Prices Review Board to achieve this purpose, may I ask the Prime Minister whether instead of waiting, God only knows for what, he is now prepared to introduce such legislation to prevent this kind of thing continuing to happen?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the commitment is as firm as it can be made. I disagree with the premise of the question about failure. The position of the government has always been that gouging should be established and we would then bring in the legislation. The hon. member will have to point out cases where the enjoinders of the Food Prices Review Board have not produced effects. In those circumstances, we would be prepared to act.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a second supplementary and will then see the hon. member for Shefford and return to this matter. The hon. member for St. John's East will be recognized at that time.

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO PROTECT PRIVATE PENSION PLANS AGAINST FURTHER EROSION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government given consideration to the condition of private pension plans which are not subject to indexing in line with the rise in the cost of living and are therefore being eroded very rapidly? Has the government given consideration to legislation by parliament or legislation by parliament in conjunction with the provincial legislatures to protect private pension plans from further erosion as a result of the increased cost of living?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a week or so ago, that is one of the matters seriously under consideration.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF NEW PRESIDENT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the president of the CN will be retiring at the end of the month, can the Prime Minister tell us whether the cabinet has made a decision concerning the choice of a new president?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we think that the choice of a successor will be announced in the near future.

Mr. Rondeau: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether it can be expected that a French Canadian will be appointed president for the first time in the history of the CN?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the member has made a suggestion with which the government is acquainted and will give it thorough consideration.

Mr. Rondeau: I should like to put another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the name of the Minister of Transport appears on the list of possible candidates to the chairmanship of the CN?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, nor that of the member for Témiscamingue.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION OR CALL ELECTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the consumer price index today shows an annual rate of increase in the price of food of 18.6 per cent, an annual rate of increase in the price of shelter of 7.5 per cent and an annual rate of increase in the price of clothing of 10.1 per cent, all items essential to the wellbeing of Canadians, is the government now prepared to bring in measures to alleviate the situation, or is the government prepared to act responsibly, do the honourable thing and go to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is a remarkable lack of consistency between the premises and the conclusions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Just answer the question.

An hon. Member: Stop playing around.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair and hon. members to understand either questions or answers when there is considerable shouting across the floor.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that hon. members opposite should talk about playing around. This is a very serious subject. Frankly, the type of diversionary tactic brought in earlier today by the hon. member for Peace River to waste the time of the House is not an indication of seriousness on their part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope that we would try to make some progress during the question period. We do not seem to be making much progress now. However, the hon. member for Peace River is rising on a point of order and I will recognize him.

Mr. Baldwin: I simply want to say that I was not playing football with it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Prime Minister that his arrogance and contempt will not go unnoticed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps Your Honour will allow me to direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the last consumer price index showing an annual rate of inflation of 9.6 per cent drew the response from the minister that there was no relief in sight, may I ask him whether, with an annual rate of inflation of 10.4 per cent now, he can tell the Canadian people that there is some relief in sight?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us be realistic about this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The sharp rise in prices makes a disturbing scene for the Canadian people, and I think everyone in the House recognizes that. As the hon. gentleman pointed out in his question, the prime thrust of the rise in the cost of living does continue to be food and world commodity prices. When I said to the House some weeks ago that there was no immediate relief in sight, I meant just that. I do not think that any member of the House can promise a moderation of the rate of the rise in the cost of living until food prices around the world, world commodity prices, and now fuel prices, work their way through the Canadian economy.

The government has made three serious responses, and I can state them very briefly since the hon. gentleman has put a very serious question. The first is to protect those Canadians least able to protect themselves by increasing disposable income. The second is by way of selective intervention either by way of subsidy or by the oil price freeze, and so on. The third is to encourage an increase in supply. The only way of equalizing the forces of supply and demand is by increasing agricultural production and industrial capacity in this country. Those are the responses that we have made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there are a considerable number of members seeking to ask supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps we might start with the hon. member for Skeena.

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—SUGGESTED ACTION TO FORCE PRICE ROLL-BACK BY FOOD PROCESSORS OR ELIMINATION OF TAX REDUCTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the moment the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Skeena. We will return in a moment to the hon. member for St. John's East who has a third supplementary.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I was about to direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning an aspect of food prices that seems to have escaped his attention. Inasmuch as the greatest culprits are the food processors and inasmuch as they were also recipients of the corporation tax cut, which was warmly embraced by the Conservatives as well and has not been passed on to the consumer but has been stuffed into the pockets of the food processors, would the minister be prepared to do one of two things, either order the food processing companies to roll back their prices to the extent they have received this windfall gift of a tax cut or eliminate the tax reduction as it applies to the food processing industry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has already given the government's response. If in a report of the Food Prices Review Board the facts alleged by the hon. member are shown to be true, then the government will take appropriate action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East for a third supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, by way of a final supplementary, the minister referred to the three options that the government had already carried out. May I ask the minister whether he is now prepared to carry out the fourth and ultimate option, which is for this government to resign?

INFLATION—PROPORTIONS CAUSED BY INFLATIONARY PSYCHOLOGY AND DOMESTIC FORCES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact we are now in the longest and most sustained period of inflation Canada has had, certainly since the introduction of the consumer price index in 1913, I have a two-part question for the minister. First, what proportion of inflation does the government feel is being developed due to an inflationary psychology in this country, and what is the government going to do about it? Second, seeing that the minister has put such emphasis on foreign forces creating inflation in this country, what proportion of the inflation in Canada is determined by domestic forces as opposed to international forces, as ascertained by members of his staff?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be impossible either for me or the hon. gentleman for that matter to try to estimate what contribution psychology is making by way of behavioural reaction to the economic forces at play. I would not be able to give him an answer to that question, but I would be interested in what further suggestions he might make regarding the behavioural aspect of the economic art. In reply to the second question, on the basis of information and advice that I have obtained both from within and without, the government, I am of the opinion that the prime thrust of inflation in this country still remains the imbalance between supply and demand, domestically and internationally.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, again my supplementary is for the Minister of Finance. Is it the position of the government that an increase in housing prices of 40 per cent in an area like Toronto is not the result of inflationary expectations at this time? What the government should do about this, of course, is to introduce—

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

HOUSING

ACTION BY GOVERNMENT TO REDUCE COST

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Don Valley and is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact the minister's answer to the question of the hon. member for St. John's East did not relate to the question of housing, exactly what steps has the government in mind to bring down the cost of housing, and can the government assure the House today that the rate of increase in the cost of housing in Ontario will be mitigated over the next year?

● (1500)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, has referred to this question on several occasions in the House.

Mr. Stanfield: Only distantly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The price of houses depends upon a number of factors including the price of land and the interest rate, both domestic and international. Basically, one of the problems is the excessive demand for housing within the middle-income group which is produced, first, by an attempt by Canadians to protect themselves against inflation and, second, because the profit from the disposal of a house is still the only thing free of capital gains tax.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo on a supplementary question, followed by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In view of the fact that the minister did not answer my first question, and in light of the rise reported last week of some 41.8 per cent in the cost of housing in Toronto in the last year, with the consequences that situation has for millions of young Canadians who probably will never in their lifetime be able to afford a home, can the minister assure the House that the government believes the steps it has taken already or contemplates taking will be adequate to ensure that the cost of housing will not increase in the coming year at an even higher rate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we cannot give the hon. member that guarantee, but we can assure him that we share his view of the seriousness of the problem he has stated.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FURTHER INCREASE IN PRICE OF SUGAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE PRICE DECREASES WITH WORLD PRICE

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who will be aware that the consumer price index today showed that sugar prices have more than doubled in the last three months. In view of the fact the three largest refiners in Canada are currently being prosecuted for price fixing, which is estimated to have cost Canadians upward of $125 million in the last ten years, what steps is the government taking to ensure that the wholesale price of sugar in Canada is responding in full to the recent drop in world sugar prices?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend has confirmed that the present action before the courts arises out of the investigatory work of the combines investigation branch of my department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The act in question does not give us the regulatory authority to take the action sought by my hon. friend, but certainly the branch will carry out its responsibilities if there is any indication of possible ongoing offences against the act. By the way, my hon. friend indicated an interest in beef prices the other week, and I think it should be noted that the price figures indicate a decline in the price of beef and pork—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore on a supplementary question.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is possible to ask a supplementary to a question that has not been answered, but I should like to ask whether the minister is in a position to assure the House and Canadians that prices being paid by consumers for sugar on the retail shelves are justified by world and wholesale prices, and that wholesale prices themselves are justified by the cost to the refiners?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear from the information available that world prices are very high, and this is bound to be translated into the price paid in Canada. The Food Prices Review Board has been set up by order in council under the Inquiries Act to enable us to get that kind of information.

AMOUNT OF RETURN TO FARMERS FOR PRODUCTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on these questions in respect of which there has been so much theoretical discussion, I have been watching the Minister of Agriculture—a practical person—and I am going to direct my question to him.

An hon. Member: Wake up, Eugene.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is not his view that, as far as food prices are concerned, farmers today are getting less than they should of the total amount of the national pie? In other words, the prices they receive are below the level of those that would provide farmers with a fair return?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can honestly say that in respect of some commodities that is true but in respect of others it is not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are making some progress, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister to separate the two, because he is speaking differently here in the House than he does outside. Which are the farm prices that are not in the category of the question I asked, in other words, that are not justified?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the cereal grain people are getting a very fair price for the cereal grain they are selling. The people selling pork, turkeys and some other poultry products, and beef are probably not receiving the return which they should; and I have said that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: If you read the latest speech I made in Chatsworth, up in Grey-Bruce in the riding of the hon. member for Bruce, you will see that I said that publicly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that we have the farmers exculpated, generally speaking, from responsibility for generally high prices, what are the particular farm products in respect of which there is gouging, or anything like gouging as described by the allies of the Liberal government who sit to my left?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I know of no farm products in respect of which they are gouging the public at all. If we want farmers to produce, we will have to make that clear, and that includes making it clear to everybody in this House. We will not get them to produce if people like the hon. member for St. John's East keep yelling about prices, as he has, and seeming to blame the farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now we know the farmers are not to blame.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I raised this question in the House today because Canada now has a rate of inflation of 10.4 per cent and the cost of food in this country has gone up over 18 per cent. The minister should know, if anybody in this House should, that there are people in this country who are suffering because of the government's attitude.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the publication of the brief submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the members of the federal cabinet, could the minister say if he intends to implement the recommendations of this brief concerning farm production and, particularly, the statement that government should stop worrying about overproduction and restricting production in that area?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): If I understood the hon. member correctly, Mr. Speaker, I gathered that he was suggesting there be a limitation on feed grain production. I know of no such suggestion by anybody as to the adoption of a limitation on feed grain production.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO PREVENT FURTHER INCREASES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact there was a 4 per cent increase in the price of bread between February and March, what immediate steps will the minister take to alleviate this situation and to assure that the Canadian Bakery Council will keep prices down?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check but it seems to me these figures related to the period before the report of the Food Prices Review Board indicating what would be acceptable increases, and as far as I am aware the bakery industry is still acceding to the views of the board in this regard.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, will the minister tell the House what immediate action he will take to alleviate the high rate of inflation which increased to 10.4 per cent in the last 12 months?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have well set out the constructive action we have taken in the past and have indicated their ability and commitment to similar and other action as the occasion demands.

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN FARM COSTS—ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. He may not be aware of the fact that one of the greatest contributors to rising food prices is the fact that farm input costs have gone up over 20 per cent in the last year. What action does he plan to take to correct these severely rising costs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we have recognized the rising input costs in agricultural production. Many of the things used in agricultural production in Canada, including feed grain production, come from other areas of the world, and you have to pay their price or you do not get the product. That is about what it amounts to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would draw hon. members' attention to the fact that we will soon be reaching the end of the question period. If each member wants to ask one, two or three supplementaries to every question it will be difficult to recognize more than five or six members before the end of the question period. Hon. members should keep that in mind. I will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca and then the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

● (1510)

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, had I received a proper answer to my question it would not have been necessary to ask a supplementary. The minister says he recognizes there is a problem. That is not what I asked him. I asked him what he is going to do about it.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you one thing, I am not going to impose a freeze-thaw-warm-up program like the hon. member's party suggests, because that would only curtail production.

REQUEST THAT MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the cost of housing went up 7.5 per cent last month over that of a year ago, the principal reason given being the increase in interest rates, on which the government can take corrective action, I ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has any intention not only of stopping the escalation in interest rates but also of reducing them?

Mr. McGrath: What about your vote on the housing program?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. gentleman that in a tight housing market such as we face in Canada, particularly in some of the metropolitan areas, subsidization of interest rates such as he suggests would merely result in capitalization of the difference in interest rate against the price of the house, which is what happened in the United Kingdom when they tried the measure the hon. gentleman suggests. I say to him it would not achieve the result that he and I would like to see.

Mr. Broadbent: Just to be clear on what the Minister of Finance is saying, Mr. Speaker, let me put the question in this way. Would the minister and/or the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, on behalf of the government, consider implementing a policy of 6 per cent interest rates which would be conditionally attached to a medium-priced house in any urban area, so that the result the minister refers to which has occurred elsewhere could be prevented?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with the market forces such as we find them, the difference between a conventional mortgage of, say, 10 per cent and the 6 per cent he cites, namely, 4 per cent, would be capitalized and increase the capital price of the house. Inevitably, that is what would happen, if not on first sale certainly on the resale price of every house in the country.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION ON DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN PRICE INDEX INCREASE IN HOUSING PRICES AND ACTUAL INCREASE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is supplementary to other questions. The price index indicates that the cost of housing has gone up 7.5 per cent, when in fact in metropolitan areas the price of housing is up over 40 per cent. It seems to me and to others that the price index is not correct. Can the minister explain why the price index shows an increase of only 7.5 per cent in this case?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member ought to direct his question in writing to Statistics Canada or to the minister responsible for Statistics Canada. I do not produce these statistics. I read them and review them in the same manner as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga will be recognized for one supplementary, and then the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Blenkarn: Clearly the minister cannot explain the discrepancy in that way and so quickly. Has the minister, on his own, made any investigation and, if not, will he investigate Statistics Canada to find out if they are really minimizing inflation insofar as housing is concerned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into the question to see whether there is any real substance to the hon. gentleman's question.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY TO LEVEL OF PURCHASING POWER

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As during the past 12 months the money supply in Canada has increased at a rate greater than three times the rate of increase in production, is the minister planning in the very near future to introduce specific production incentives aimed at inducing production to rise to the level of purchasing power, which has been driving up prices at an ever increasing rate, and thus attempt to control inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman really has to be kidding. The incentives given the manufacturing and processing industries have resulted in an increase in capital expenditures in 1973 over 1972 of 18 per cent, and another 20 per cent is anticipated this year. If that is not an effective increase in production, I would like to know what is.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister, since I cannot get an answer from the minister. Has the Prime Minister read the Gallup poll which came out today and, if so, does he not think he should set aside his arrogance and try to become a human being once again?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister of Finance. The hon. member has got to be kidding.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON RENTS OF MARRIED QUARTERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In light of the information made available to us today during the question period, would the minister indicate the position he has taken with respect to the rents paid for married quarters at Canadian Armed Forces bases, and would he consult his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance, regarding a freeze for at least one year, and possibly two, on such rent?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we do give very careful consideration to the rental of PMQs. The increases that have been put into effect are modest compared with the increases in the private sector. However, we will consider the representation.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF MARGARINE—STEPS TO PREVENT FURTHER INCREASES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns the rising cost of margarine. Bearing in mind the fact the Prime Minister said on March 6 that, in contrast with most countries of the world, Canada has all the resources necessary to cope with inflation, and in light of the fact that the price of margarine rose over 7 per cent in March and 42 per cent over the year, can the minister tell us if the government is going to take any steps to alleviate the situation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly following the situation. There is no question that our record in comparison to that of other countries is very favourable. I was asked previously about the price of sugar. The Food Prices Review Board report indicates that 85 per cent—

SUCCESS OF UNEMPLOYMENT OFFICES FUNCTIONING IN SAME BUILDINGS AS MANPOWER CENTRES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have the pilot unemployment offices he has reopened proved worth while to date, and where opened in the same building as manpower offices has this improved the situation? Also, has any directive been given to any unemployment insurance officials to review all claims on a quota system?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I made a detailed response generally to the question the hon. member has posed when I appeared before the committee. I shall be glad to send him a copy of it, because it would require too lengthy an answer at the present time. But I will make sure he gets that information.

AGRICULTURE

CERTIFICATION THAT CATTLE IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES ARE DES-FREE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. During his negotiations with the United States government in respect of the import of beef and cattle fed with the additive DES, and in view of the need for good trading relations between Canada and the United States, did the minister discuss the possibility of certification by consignees or producers of beef and cattle coming into Canada as a protection, or did he insist on United States Department of Agriculture certification?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had discussions in Ottawa with people from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and we have discussions in Washington. I talked with the Secretary of Agriculture for the U.S.A. We asked them to do the same thing they ask us to do when it comes to certification. They are still considering it, but I do not think it is very likely they will follow it up.

● (1520)

Mr. Gleave: In view of the statement over the public media last night by United States Department of Agriculture officials that they are very concerned about the effect on trade relations, would the Minister of Agriculture or, indeed, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, engage in further discussions so that we may be assured of good trade relations in this very important sector?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have had lengthy discussions, and the door of our department is open to them at all times. I understand that one of their people is in Ottawa today discussing the certification of meat and to see whether there is anything that they can do. So far as I am concerned, we will not accept any kind of certification that we do not ask of our own people.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE BY FIREFIGHTERS AT BRITISH COLUMBIA AIRPORTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact there are reports that two representatives of the striking firemen are in Ottawa today, can the Prime Minister give the House any indication of how negotiations are going toward the settlement of the strike in British Columbia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I do know that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Transport have been very much involved in this matter. I cannot give an up to date report.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Laval, then the Leader of the Opposition and will then call orders of the day.

SPORTS

SIZE OF PLAYING FIELD IN OLYMPIC STADIUM UNDER CONSTRUCTION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General concerning the proposed construction of the Olympic stadium in Montreal. Will the playing surface inside the stadium be built according to American football leagues specifications, as stated yesterday in the House by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the statement of the hon. member of the opposition yesterday, I immediately contacted the General Commissioner of the games. He assured me that the hon. member's allegation is completely unfounded. On the contrary, the specifications set out for the construction of the stadium are those of a track and field facility; moreover, there is sufficient room inside the track for a Canadian football field. Indeed, the surface inside the track is 240 feet by 516 feet, which is more than enough for Canadian football.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER REPORT ON EFFECTS OF CORPORATE TAX CUTS GRANTED LAST YEAR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask whether it is his intention to give the House the benefit of any serious study respecting the effects of the corporate tax cuts for manufacturers and processors granted by the House last year, a study which would enable members of the House to form a valid opinion as to the effect of these cuts compared with what I have to describe as a farcical interim report upon which nobody could base any valid opinion.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will not accept the full force of that preamble. The measures went into place, as the hon. gentleman knows, last summer and were followed, in response to his own request, by a preliminary report, to be followed by a more complete report at the end of the year. That report is a report of business intentions. There is no better evidence available than the minds of those who will be making the decisions to back up those intentions in this country. That report is also substantiated by objective evidence put forward by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Let's have it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on Monday tabled a report, a survey, an analysis of 20,000 companies in this country showing that business intentions are up remarkably, and that is a reflection of the incentives given to them for the production of jobs and the stabilization of prices in the medium term.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley rising on a point of order?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the statement made by the Postmaster General. May I say, first, that I am very happy that he seems to be concerned, after having said that it was not the government's business to deal with the stadium. I would like to clarify the fact that I did not in any way intend to mislead the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —and that the information was conveyed to me as late as noon yesterday by the city of Montreal engineering department. I was simply asking a question on behalf of the people of Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —with regard to this matter. If there are any apologies to be made, I apologize to the minister, but I repeat that in no way did I want to mislead the House. I was told by the engineering department of the city of Montreal that the dimensions of the field were not those given by the minister.

Loans Acts Amendments

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises out of an answer delivered a few moments ago to question No. 408 on the order paper answered by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. This is my first opportunity to outline briefly my reasons for rising on a question of privilege. The question was as follows: "What was the full and complete description of the activities of the Soviet journalist, Mr. Konstantin Gueivandov, that resulted in him being refused re-entry into Canada and whether Canadian residents or citizens were involved in any way in these activities." The minister's answer was: "It is not considered to be in the public interest to divulge the information requested."

I believe that this type of answer raises a very legitimate question of privilege and that it is an affront to parliament. As a member of this House, I have asked a legitimate question concerning the way in which a visitor to this country has been dealt with, and I submit that the government has been interfering with the rights and privileges of this House by hiding behind this all too often used phrase that "it is not in the public interest".

Finally, if something did happen here that was wrong, this House has a right to know and it is a breach of our privileges that we are not allowed to know. If something did not happen here that was wrong, I submit that this House has a right to know whether or not this journalist is being persecuted because he wrote things that the government did not like.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister rising on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member?

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can only tell the hon. member that I am quite sure we are following the practices recognized in the House for many, many years in matters like this. It is a question that does pertain to the national interest, and I say in all seriousness to the hon. member that disclosure of the information behind it would not be beneficial to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there have been some discussions and that there might be a disposition to refer this bill, after second reading, to a committee of the whole rather than to the overloaded Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore the motion will be that Bill C-14 be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole House.

[Translation]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, members of the House have before them a legislation to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. These three acts are well known to the House. They allow the Minister of Finance to guarantee term loans granted by chartered banks and other designated financial institutions, loans granted to farmers, small businessmen and fishermen in order to finance a variety of improvements requiring capital expenditures for their business operations.

● (1530)

[English]

Under the existing provisions of each act these programs would expire on June 30, 1974, and one of the purposes of Bill C-14 is to provide for the continuation of these programs for a three-year period beyond that date. Before discussing the detailed provisions of this bill I would like to comment on each individual program.

The Farm Improvement Loans Act was implemented in 1944, initially for a three-year period. It has been amended on numerous occasions to add new lending periods and to enlarge the benefits available to farmers qualifying under the act. Presently, farmers may borrow up to $15,000 to help finance the acquisition of farm implements, buildings, equipment or livestock, and to repair or improve assets which are used in their farming enterprises. In addition, farmers may borrow up to $15,000 for the purchase of small parcels of land to round out an existing farm unit. The total amount which may be outstanding to any farmer at any time is $25,000 for all loan purposes.

The maximum period over which repayment may be spread varies with the purpose for which the loan was obtained and ranges from three years, in the case of trucks, to 15 years in the case of land purchase loans. The Farm Improvement Loans Act has played a crucial role in the financing of Canadian agriculture, as is evidenced by the fact that almost $3 billion have been loaned during almost 30 years of operations under the act. Lending activity in the 12 months to December 31, 1973, amounted to some $230 million, which is the largest volume of loans ever made in one year under this plan. Claims paid under this program have been remarkably low and amount to about one-fifth of one per cent of the face value of loans made.

The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act came into effect in 1955, also for an initial three-year period, and has subsequently been extended and amended from time to time. Under the current provisions of the act, fishermen may borrow up to $25,000 to help finance the purchase, construction or repair of fishing vessels and equipment. The development of shore installations and equipment, which are a necessary part of a fishing enterprise, is also an eligible loan purpose. Borrowers may take up to ten years to repay most loans, although in the case of loans for certain purposes the maximum repayment period is shorter, more closely approximating the useful life of the asset being acquired. Lending under this program remained at relatively low levels for several years. More recently, however, there has been a marked increase in lending activity. In the year ending March 31, 1973, fisheries improvement loans reached a peak and amounted to $7 million. Claims have also been very low under this program, totally less than one-fifth of one per cent. Returns in the current loan year to date indicate that lending under this program is continuing at this high level.

The Small Businesses Loans Act came into effect in early 1961 for a three-year period and, like the other acts, has been extended and amended from time to time since. The legislation provides for loans of up to $25,000 to assist operators of small businesses in financing improvements in their business enterprises. In order to qualify, an enterprise must have gross annual revenue of less than $500,000 and must be engaged in one of the following forms of business activity—manufacturing, retail or wholesale trade, provision of services, construction, transportation or communications. Loans may be used to assist in acquiring fixed or moveable equipment or for the purchase, construction or renovation of business premises. Since inception, including the last full year of operation, $290 million have been made available to small businesses under the provisions of this legislation. Lending reached a peak of $30 million in the year ended December 31, 1973. Losses under this legislation have again been very small, being of the order of one half of one per cent. Indications are that lending under this program is also continuing at a high level.

A number of general provisions apply in connection with loans made under each of the programs. Borrowers are required to pledge security for loans, generally by way of a charge on the assets acquired with the loan and by giving a promissory note. In certain circumstances additional security may be required by the lender. Potential borrowers must also be prepared to make a minimum investment of their own in the project for which they seek a loan.

There is also a maximum rate of interest which lenders may charge on loans. Maximum interest rates are determined semi-annually on April 1 and October 1 of each year. The rates are based on the average yields of selected government of Canada bonds over a six-month period, to which is added a margin of 1 per cent. The maximum rate which can be charged during the period which commenced on April 1, 1974, is 8 per cent for loans made under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act for all loan purposes except the purchase of additional land. The maximum rate for land purchase loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, currently 8.25 per cent, is determined by a slightly different formula which is designed to reflect the fact that farmers may take up to 15 years to repay these loans.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-14 provides for a continuation of these lending programs for the three-year period July 1, 1974, to June 30, 1977. The bill also sets out amendments to the various acts, resulting from a major review of the effectiveness of the programs and from discussions and suggestions received from various interested groups. I shall deal with the amendments proposed for each act separately.

With respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the bill proposes the following changes in addition to the extension of the legislation for three years:

1. To raise the maximum amount which may be advanced during the three-year period ending June 30, 1977, by lenders under guarantee of the minister to $1,100 million for loans made by chartered banks and $300 million for loans made by other lenders.

2. To raise the maximum amount which a borrower may have outstanding to $50,000. The sub-limits are to be dropped.

3. To extend the eligible purposes to include major repairs and overhaul of equipment and implements.

4. To allow joint borrowers to have only their share of such borrowing count against their entitlement under the plan.

5. To provide that the Alberta Treasury branches be permitted to make loans under the plan.

With respect to the Small Businesses Loans Act, the bill proposes the following changes:

1. To raise the maximum amount which may be advanced during the three-year period ending June 30, 1977, by lenders under guarantee of the minister to $250 million for loans made by chartered banks and $100 million for loans made by other lenders.

2. To raise the maximum amount which a borrower may have outstanding to $50,000.

3. To change the definition of eligible businesses to make new businesses eligible to borrow.

4. To change the definition of small business to mean one where estimated gross annual revenue for a fiscal year does not exceed $1 million.

5. To extend the eligible purposes to allow for the purchase of land necessary for the operation of the eligible business.

6. To provide that the Alberta Treasury branches be permitted to make loans under the plan.

With respect to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the bill proposes the following changes:

1. To raise the maximum amount which may be advanced by lenders under guarantee of the minister to $60 million for loans made by chartered banks and $10 million for loans made by other lenders.

2. To raise the maximum amount which a borrower may have outstanding to $50,000.

The bill also provides for an increase of $5 million in the amount which may be loaned under the guarantee in respect of the current lending period ending on June 30, 1974. Lending in recent months by the chartered banks has shown a substantial rise, and unless the loan pool is enlarged banks will cease to make these loans when the current ceiling of $20 million is reached, probably in April or May, 1974.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that these measures have been instrumental in the provision of intermediate and longer term funds for farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. The government believes that these programs should be extended for a further three-year period and that the amendments proposed for the various acts will enhance the value of these programs to the various groups they benefit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have now agreed to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole after second reading.

I shall leave my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), in charge of this debate.

As for me, I must appear before the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, pursuant to an order issued by that committee.

So, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I leave my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Terrebonne, in charge of the debate.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has indicated, this bill is actually a compendium of amendments to three acts, all of a similar type, dealing with loans that can be made available under government guarantee from chartered banks. We see the government has realized that inflation has caused an impact and that the three acts are meaningless without these amendments. It is not my intention to make any lengthy remarks on the individual parts of the act, but several of my colleagues will speak on specialities with regard to farm improvement loans, small businesses loans and fisheries improvement loans.

● (1540)

I am glad that my suggestion that we deal with this bill in committee of the whole was followed. One has to be realistic about the passage of legislation in this House. If hon. members want the fishermen or the small businessmen to benefit from these amendments, then the legislation must be put in the starting position and processed through to royal assent in the minimum of time. When one speaks of referring any item of business to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs it must be remembered that this government has not established its priorities. Including this item and one that was referred to the committee last week, that committee has for consideration seven major items in addition to the estimates.

We know that the discussions and hearings on the competition act will go on into June, so this bill would not be reported from committee until after that. I felt that was totally wrong. In light of the breakdown of negotiations for adjournment, the best use that could be made of today, and likely of tomorrow, would be to get this bill through all stages in the House. We could make shorter speeches to achieve this end.

I want to say something now about the increase in the ceilings of farm loans, small businesses loans and fisheries improvement loans to $50,000. I wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were here. The other day he was guilty of the grossest inexactitude. I do not think it was deliberate, because I do not think he understands the Veterans Land Act. When my colleagues, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others, asked for an increase in the ceilings under that act, he thought this was going to cost more money. He found it ridiculous for the opposition to advocate, on the one hand, the curtailing of government expenditure, and on the other to ask for greater government expenditure of this type.

That was utter tripe from the Prime Minister, because those loans are repayable; they are not an expense of government. If one followed the logic of the Prime Minister, one would say this is an increase in expenditure by the government. There is not any expenditure here by government, Mr. Speaker: the loans are made by the chartered banks or those that have status to make loans under the acts.

The ceilings of these loans are increased. It is true that there is a contingent liability under the guarantee, but when we are limited to one-tenth of the loans that may occur, the chances of a loan by a chartered bank or its equivalent are miniscule. The suggestion made by the Prime Minister the other day in trying to score a cheap political advantage did not have any substance whatsoever. I am sure if he were here this afternoon he would be trying to use the same sort of fallacious argument.

The small business enterprise is now deemed to be worth $1 million. This means we will have to review some of the other legislation such as the Canada Corporations Act. When we changed the law on Canadian corporations three years ago, they said if the sales volume is $3 million it is big business. Now we are getting into a small business with a ceiling on turnover of $1 million. These are some of the effects of inflation. Only when we see these practical examples of the day to day changes that have to be made in the law do we realize the type of cancer there is in this country at the present time against which this government is not taking action.

As the minister indicated this afternoon, the government tries to make changes by getting more income to certain people. What does that argument mean? If you are bleeding from a hole in the aorta, which is about as serious a condition as inflation in Canada today, when the minister says he will redistribute income that is equivalent to putting a band-aid on the exterior instead of performing the necessary surgery and maybe imposing restrictions to stop the bleeding. The government puts little band-aids on the outside, and we see the blood oozing all around, just as we see in the inflation all around the government programs.

Another argument with which the minister had difficulty was this. He talked about food prices and said we cannot really control them because so much of the food in Canada comes from outside the country, and therefore controls on food prices in this country would have little effect. But the third element of the problem is that we must grow more of our own food in Canada although this will have little effect on inflation.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

My colleagues will deal with the difficulties encountered in bank interest rates which today are over 9 per cent because of the mortgage rate. The fixed rates applicable to these programs under the guarantee make it impossible for the banks to make loans in the desired volume. The chartered banks are the only ones who deal with liquidity today, because the other institutions like the treasury branches, and so forth, must operate differently. They do not have the same formula for liquidity and so are restricted. The banks can operate with greater flexibility, but their liquidity was down to one-fifth of one per cent recently.

It is no wonder that money is tight with the banks in these circumstances and that they are only going to make loans which are most advantageous to them. They were never intended to be philanthropic institutions and that is not expected of them. Under these programs, however, there is a real problem and I believe my colleagues will point them out. We have to be realistic about this, so I hope we will have the appropriate number of speeches on second reading and then move to committee of the whole so the bill can be expedited and whatever limited benefits flow from these changes will be available to the appropriate classes in the Canadian economy.

● (1550)

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I believe many small businessmen, farmers and fishermen will welcome this legislation.

An hon. Member: If they can get loans.

Mr. Gleave: As my colleague to my right says, if they can get loans. I suppose people who have taken out loans will take them out again, to meet present commitments, without thinking too much of the consequences in the future. The legislation reflects the changing conditions of farming and business. When the loan ceiling was $7,000 we thought we were doing well by increasing the ceiling to $15,000. This amendment would increase it to $50,000. It is true that farms, businesses and fisheries have become more mechanized and need more capital for electric power, internal combustion engines and other necessary equipment. Much of this increase is to offset the declining purchasing power of the dollar, of the money that is needed for capital or for repairing existing machinery.

Farm improvement loans are to be made for machinery repairs. It seems that the farmer cannot generate enough earning power to provide for the repair and maintenance of his machines; he must borrow money to keep his machines running. I am concerned that those responsible for planning the fiscal, financial and industrial policies of this country think that farm earnings will not provide for the repair and maintenance of machinery and that we must provide for guaranteed bank loans to cover these repairs. Or, to turn the argument around, do the financial institutions with whom the farmer must deal, the banks, credit unions and caisses populaires in rural communities not want to lend money for maintaining machines on the farm? Do they want to get out from under that risk and have the government of Canada assume the major burden? Is that why we are being asked to approve loans, guaranteed by the citizens of Canada, which are to be used for maintaining farm machinery?

The chartered banks are in the business of lending money. Since we do not allow foreign banks to do much business in this country, I think it is the responsibility of our chartered banks, given these conditions, to lend money to farmers, small businessmen and fishermen for the ordinary operation of the farm, business or fishery. I am surprised that we need to guarantee bank loans to enable farmers to continue in the ordinary business of farming.

I do not oppose the bill. Probably it will provide an added service to the farmer. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can say, since the minister is not present, whether this provision was brought forward at the request of the banks, at the request of farm organizations, or whether it originated with the government. Quite apart from the increased ceiling, it is a new departure. In the field of farm credit we badly need new policies and new directions on the part of government. We need new approaches in the field of loans to farmers. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has said we need changes. The deputy minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan, Mr. McArthur, has suggested the need for changes in that direction. In addition, the deputy minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan, the CFA and others have said it would be better if farm credit programs came under the control and direction of the provinces rather than under the control and direction of the federal government.

The other day we asked the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation what would be the effect of such policy on farm development policies and land transfer policies. We wanted to know what would happen in individual provinces with regard to the transfer of land and farms. In other words, we wanted to know what would be the effect on people operating farms. We were not given detailed information. It was not presented to the committee in a way which enabled us to make an assessment. We were given general information. When we or Crown agencies follow land policies which affect the social structure within a province and will eventually affect the farm structure within the province, the province should have the right to make major decisions involving that kind of policy. In this connection I quote the following:

● (1600)

Mr. Hamilton suggested that under such a system, Ottawa would provide the bulk of the funds to the provincial agency and participate in the development of national policy guidelines.

"With the credit actually being provided and administered at the provincial level, the lending function could be integrated into the provincial agricultural development program, within the national guidelines, including its agricultural extension services."

Such a system would not necessarily need to have its credit offices, he said. "If traditional lending services wished to participate in the system, the federal-provincial program could work with them by providing guarantees and developing expertise and counselling services."

Mr. Hamilton said such a system is needed because, even with improvements, the chartered banking system will not meet all the requirements as farmers see them.

That is what a person in one of the farm organizations is saying about our present credit system. He goes on at some length to deal with this problem. It is significant that the Federation of Agriculture as well as a deputy minister of one province made this point and made it very explicitly. I could also quote the deputy minister but I do not think that is necessary at the moment. I hope the government will take these points of view into account. They received recently a brief from the Federation of Agriculture. They have that in their hands. I do not know the response of the government to the representations made to them by the Federation of Agriculture with regard to several of these points.

The government failed to make changes in the bill which would make credit available to groups of farmers in adequate amounts. Maybe that is because the bill had already been drafted; I do not know. As I said, I did not see any signs in the Standing Committee on Agriculture of the government's advancing new approaches that are needed. They act as though not too much has changed and just go on doing business in their standard way.

What is going to be the method of setting the interest rates? What will control the interest rates? This question was raised by the previous speaker. Are we simply going to let the interest rate go up as it increases in the system or as the banks choose to increase it, or are we going to have some definite control? What is going to be the policy? Will it be an election boondoggle, or a policy, that we will have? A prize boondoggle which backfired occurred on September 28, 1972. On that date the then minister of agriculture, standing for election, sought to save himself by freezing the interest rate on farm improvement loans. The order in council reads:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, pursuant to section 6 of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, is pleased hereby to amend the Farm Improvement Loans regulations made by Order in Council P.C. 1969-592 of 25th March, 1969, as amended, in accordance with the schedule hereto.

The schedule reads:

1. Section 7 of the Farm Improvement Loans regulations is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the base rate for the interest period commencing on the 1st day of October, 1972, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1973, is,

(a) in respect of a loan described in paragraph (2)(a), six per cent per annum; and

(b) in respect of a loan described in paragraph (2)(b), five per cent per annum."

That was one of the most blatant manipulations of an interest rate under a federal act that had been pulled off for some time. One lesson the government might very well learn from it is that it did not work. The then minister of agriculture did not make it back here. It provided a very bad example for successive governments. It had the effect of temporarily drying up supplies of money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for some months because of the unwillingness of the banks to lend money at that interest rate. I hope we will get some information on what is to be the interest policy under the regulations of this act. I hope the parliamentary secretary will give us more information this afternoon.

Another concern we should have about this kind of legislation is the ability of the farmer, businessman or fisherman to repay. Increased costs on the farm front will cut very deeply into the price structure with which the farmer is now living. It was interesting to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say this afternoon that one of the big factors affecting the cost of food is the international price structure around the world. He said, by inference, this is affecting the Canadian price structure.

I do not know at exactly what price the Canadian Wheat Board is selling wheat, but we can look at the Chicago market. Wheat has declined to almost $2. Corn has declined. Rapeseed and flaxseed have declined substantially. The prices of live beef and live pork have declined substantially. All this has been within the past few months.

An hon. Member: What about grain prices?

Mr. Gleave: The hon. member asks about grain prices. Wheat prices have declined. You just do not have a system to get it to you.

An hon. Member: What are you quoting?

Mr. Gleave: I am quoting international prices, because that is what the Prime Minister and other ministers were speaking about. Beef and pork, red meat, on the domestic market have declined in price. This is having an effect on the consumer. My point is that we are talking about a loan program for farmers who are dealing and living with an international market for their products. The market for their products fluctuates and there is very little market guarantee. The present market guarantee for hogs is so far below any market price that is significant that it just does not count. The same is true with the fisheries. Whether or not there is any real intention on the part of the government to change this situation, I do not know.

● (1610)

The Minister of Agriculture was asked about increased costs this afternoon and he blamed them on international factors. The bulk of our fertilizer, with the exception of imported phosphate rock from the United States, is manufactured in Canada. One of the sharpest rises in price of any commodity that the farmer uses is in the cost of twine. Sisal is imported. We also manufacture synthetic twine. In the area where I farm, most of the hay is tied with synthetic twine. I do not know why the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) permits such an outrageous price for synthetic twine. This is manufactured from by-products of refined petroleum.

Hon. members opposite get very excited about energy prices and want to keep the cost of petroleum, of the raw material, at what they say is a Canada-wide level. I refer to heating oil, gasoline, and so on. But why do not the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer Affairs concern themselves about added costs that will accrue to the farmers for synthetic baling twine? I have had many telephone calls and letters about this.

Polyethylene baling twine is manufactured from a by-product of petroleum. We do not have to be totally dependent on offshore supplies of oil to get supplies of baling twine, though we are partially dependent. We do not have to let the oil companies overcharge the farmer and keep baling twine in short supply. This is what is happening, yet hon. members opposite show no concern. There is no use my quoting the price of baling twine today. I talked to some people in Ontario the other day who were very closely connected with the business, and they told me the farmers will have to pay whatever somebody asks them to pay wherever they can find baling twine. I have been told by farming groups contracting in the Peace River country that they can no longer place any firm contracts.

We are only a few months away from the time when our farmers are going to tie up a lot of hay in this country, tons of it. Therefore, I would have thought that the minister would show some concern for this particular problem. If it is fair to hold down the price of gasoline to a certain level for people driving cars in Ottawa and Toronto, it should be equally fair to hold down the price of synthetic baler twine for a farmer baling hay in Saskatchewan. Both these groups are consumers.

As far as this lending program is concerned, if we are going to allow the price of baling twine, fertilizer, farm machinery products, anti-freeze and repairs to rise at the same rate as last year, then neither the government nor the banks will be able to loan the farmers enough money to keep them in operation. The industries that supply the farmer are getting all set to take him to the cleaners.

In my area, Mr. Speaker, one does not have to worry about lending the farmer a lot of money to buy tractors, because the farm machinery companies do not have any tractors for sale. I do not know what is happening in this regard, but it should be the business of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture to find out. If we have run out of steel supplies to make tractors and machinery parts, that is one thing. But I suspect that the farm machinery companies are doing to the farmers what the oil companies did to the economies of the United States and Canada. They were running consumers deliberately short of petroleum from the refineries and then jacking up the price, and I think the supply of farm machinery is being quite deliberately run down so that the price can be jacked up. The same thing is happening with the supply of other essentials to which I have referred today, such as baler twine, chemicals to control weeds and insects, fertilizer and farm machinery parts. If you go right through the book you get essentially the same pattern.

So far as transportation is concerned, we have one of the most inefficient transportation systems, in terms of annual operation, that we have ever had. Here again, this will cost us a great deal of money. We do not know when the situation will be corrected and we will be given the kind of service we need. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board talks of farmers hauling their grain "X" number of miles past their own delivery points to the railroad so they can get their grain off their farms this year. This is added cost both in money and in time.

Like the farmers, Mr. Speaker, the businessmen of Saskatchewan are also trying to survive. One of them asked me whether I would check why he had not received a reduction in price, as an independent handler, as a result of a tax cut at the wholesale level. The reduction in price had not been passed on to this small businessman. I told him that I would investigate it, but after a while he told me not to do so because they might cut him off entirely and he said he would rather pay the extra money. This is the sort of thing that is happening.

It is significant that we are financing three groups of people—the farmers, who are small businessmen, the small businessmen themselves, and the fishermen who, again, are small businessmen. Why does the government finance these three groups within this sector of the economy? My answer to that question is, because the multinational corporations are able to pass on unnecessary charges and costs to this sector of the economy. That is the reason.

● (1620)

John Kenneth Galbraith, in his book, said they have a planned economy in the United States—and that goes for Canada as well—but that the economy is planned by multinational corporations who decide how it will run and how it will work. Then he said those same corporations prey on the unorganized and the unprotected sector which is made up of the very people to whom we are guaranteeing loans. This is the unprotected and vulnerable sector of the Canadian economy. One of the problems with this government is that it is prepared to guarantee loans so the banks can give them money, and that is fine because the banks will lend the money. But the government is not prepared to take tough, hard, concrete action to protect these people to whom we are giving ever increasing amounts of money. The government is not prepared to guarantee them the kind of protection they ought to have.

The government is prepared to sit quietly while these people are overcharged for baler twine and for fertilizer, for example. The government sits quietly while the packing companies and the retail chains overcharge for beef. This is where the government ought to be getting tough. Unless the government takes steps to see that this sector of the economy is protected and can survive and function, we will be back here next year, or two or three years from now, being asked for even bigger lending limits or, perhaps even worse, the banks will be here asking us to make good on some of the guarantees we will make under this legislation. There is a point at which this well will run dry; let us make no mistake about that.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, since there seems to be co-operation in the House for the adoption of this bill and also from the official opposition, as shown by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I would not like to enter this debate and prolong the adoption procedures of this very important bill.

I would only like to make a few comments. First I would like to commend the government and especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for having submitted this very adequate measure.

In view of the government's intention to increase production to solve the problem we are now facing, in Canada as well as in other countries, the presentation of such a bill was in my opinion very important.

The member for Edmonton West has suggested to accelerate the adoption procedures of this bill by studying it after the debate of the second reading, in the Committee of the Whole, instead of referring it to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He has given a few reasons by saying that many measures were referred to this committee and that we would have to wait until June or July to see it adopted.

But I think that in the mind of the hon. member for Edmonton West who has a lot of experience in Parliament there is that concern, or rather that desire, that desperate eagerness of the official opposition to have an election. He is afraid to go before the people, the voters in Edmonton West, without this very progressive bill to help farmers, small businessmen and fishermen. I realize that there are not many fishermen in Edmonton but there are elsewhere in Canada, and I imagine that the Tories if they want to make some progress will try to get the fishermen's votes.

Mr. Speaker, that is indeed what I see in the remarks by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Of course, this government is not like—and thank God for that—the party of the official opposition. If I remember well, the so-called ARDA act was passed in 1962, but no amount was set aside to help farmers. It is the party I have the honour to represent in this House, Mr. Speaker, and that is a well known fact, which insisted on the ARDA plan and ensured the major developments we now have in my area as in all eastern and western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I will now get back to the bill. I am satisfied, and I say so on behalf of farmers, small businessmen and fishermen, with that increase from $25,000 to $50,000 in the amount that can be guaranteed by the government and loaned by banks. I want to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Comtois) and this government that farmers in my area are very disappointed at the way they are treated with respect to farm loans, specially in the Gaspé area.

When a farmer in my area applies for a farm loan he is put through piles of red tape and ends up being offered a clearly inadequate and ridiculously low amount.

For instance, when it comes to evaluating a farming business, some inspectors who come from God knows where, maybe the Montreal area, evaluate a business in the Gaspé Peninsula on the same basis as a farming business in the prosperous Montreal area. I believe that this is unjust for our farmers.

People often dare say that there are no farmers in the Gaspé Peninsula: there are, and if the Farm Loans Act were more adequate and if the people who administer it and the inspectors responsible for reporting on the farming business of the applicants were more just, there would perhaps be a greater number of prosperous farmers in our area, and we do have a few. If this were the case, fewer farmers would be refused a farm loan by the Farm Credit Corporation on the report of the more or less qualified inspectors who appreciate or evaluate the stock, the value of the property, of the land or of the buildings. Instead of going into a production which would allow them to live comfortably and provide for their families, these farmers must abandon their land and, since they do not have the necessary training to go into other fields, they swell the ranks of people on welfare.

I wanted to emphasize this fact and I should like to urge the hon. Minister of Finance, through his parliamentary secretary, to consider my criticisms, because it is not the first year that I have heard farmers complain: I am by profession a notary. I have to review and complete files for farmers concerning farm loans, and during my career as a notary, which extends over more than 20 years, I have seen that in the Gaspé Peninsula, at least at the time when I practised my profession actively, the farmers of my area received no more than five loans from the Farm Credit Corporation. Why? Because its rules are too strict, and no consideration is given to the region in evaluating the property and assets of the farmers. In my opinion, our farmers, whether they be from the Gaspé Peninsula, from the Montreal area, from the west or from the east, have as much right to live as those who are advantaged by market and climate conditions.

I therefore trust that those remarks will not fall on deaf ears and that, in the future, our farmers will get more attention on the part of the inspectors who, in their reports, decide whether or not they will be entitled to a farm loan.

Contrary to farm loans, loans to small businesses have been of immeasurable help and have enabled several businessmen in my area to survive and even expand their businesses. That increase from $25,000 to $50,000 will certainly help, in view of the considerable increase in construction and equipment, and to a greater extent, both businessmen and merchants. The same goes for fishermen who, for the second time in less than a week, are being helped by the government of Canada; last week, with regard to subsidies for their fishing boats, the government changed the act and increased its help.

I therefore want to thank the minister and the government for having introduced those measures, those amendments to the law which will, I trust, give the help their beneficiaries are entitled to expect.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I commend the previous speaker for bringing forward some very good points. However, he did refer to the statement of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that we could perhaps get on with the business of an election. I think the farmers of western Canada and Canada generally would forgive us if we were out of this House for a few months, then came back and proceeded in a new direction. All we have been hearing from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is talk. It was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne that there would be a number of things done in respect of agriculture. We have not yet seen introduced any of the bills in this regard.

Mr. Whelan: There is one in the Senate.

Mr. Schellenberger: We have not seen the legislation which was promised for the benefit of Canada. It is time these bills were brought forward so that we could see if there really is something in store for western Canada.

Bill C-14 is not new legislation. It has to do with legislation that has been in place for some time. This legislation is very important to farmers, small businessmen and fishermen of Canada. A number of the provisions of this legislation deal with housekeeping items such as increasing the period from 1974 until 1977. I am glad the government finally has come around to doing what the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) fought for the last time such a bill was before the House; that is, that the Treasury branches of Alberta be able to provide loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act.

This bank has been in place for a number of years and is in competition with the other banks and credit unions in Alberta. I think it is only fair that the farmers of Alberta should be able to go to the bank with which they deal in many cases in order to obtain a farm improvement loan. The main purposes originally for this legislation were the purchase of agricultural implements, new and used, the construction, repair or alteration of farm buildings, the purchase of livestock, the purchase of additional farmland, and general works for the improvement or development of a farm, including clearing and breaking of land, irrigation systems, farm electric systems, fencing and draining works.

When looking at these original purposes, I suggest the reason for the increase from $25,000 to $50,000 is abundantly clear. The price has not only doubled, but it has multiplied drastically in respect of most of these purposes. The price the farmers have to pay has in most cases increased several times. We might consider agricultural implements, for example. Most farmers have found that in the last five or ten years the price of tractors has doubled. In some cases the price has tripled. We find that the price many farmers in western Canada must pay for a tractor is $12,000.

Because of the inability to obtain labour, most farmers must face increased capitalization costs in order to purchase machinery. They can no longer obtain the necessary labour to move the hay off the fields, and therefore must buy automatic bale-stackers, and so on, in order to remain in business. Professional agronomists have stated that one of the most serious problems facing agriculture today is the lack of labour. It seems to me that this situation forces farmers to become involved in increased capitalization in respect of machinery, and the result is that farm improvement loans in an amount of $25,000 are inadequate today. Inflation plays a large part in this situation.

I am happy to see included in this bill a new provision that would allow farmers to use farm improvement loans to finance major repairs and overhaul of equipment. We have seen reported in the Globe and Mail—and many farmers have told me the same thing—that there are not—tractors and equipment available for purchase if the farmers wish to purchase them. In the past number of years many farmers were unable to afford the price of new equipment. This year, however, because of the higher prices for grain we find that some of them are now in a position to buy new equipment.

I have had reports from the west that equipment which had been ordered last fall still has not been delivered. What is the result? The old equipment used by the farmers will have to be repaired. I think it is time a provision was included in this legislation that would make it possible to use the Farm Improvement Loans Act for financing repairs until such time as these farmers are in the position to obtain new equipment.

Even though this provision is included in the bill, I think we should look at the debate of April 2, 1974, when the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) brought forward a private member's motion which stated that many of the farmers of western Canada or of eastern Canada are not able to obtain repair parts for their equipment. We have seen examples of $12,000 or $14,000 combines and tractors sitting idle when they are required for the planting or the harvesting of crops. In the article which appeared recently in the Globe and Mail I noted that a good deal of the equipment necessary this year has been made from spare parts, and that in fact even in the United States there are increasing numbers of auction sales where new equipment is being sold at three or four times the list price. Because the farmers need it so badly, they are prepared to pay this amount in anticipation of higher prices for their agricultural products in coming years.

● (1640)

I think this is a serious matter, one which the Minister of Agriculture should look into. I know that he has spoken to them about it down there, but I think we should do everything in our power to see that parts are available for equipment this year and that new tractors and other new equipment will be available to meet demands in the future.

I see in the bill a clause which allows the purchase of livestock or beef stock. I assume that it also allows beef farmers to purchase equipment and make major repairs. I know that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) will be happy with this clause. A large amount of the honey produced in Canada comes from his constituency, and perhaps farmers in that area will be able to purchase some equipment to keep the bears away, because that is their major problem at present.

In clause 2 we see an amendment to increase farm improvement loans from $25,000 to $50,000. The reasons for it have been stated. Inflation is the main problem. A number of applications had to be turned down because there were simply not enough funds available for farmers to make the necessary additions to their farming operations. Farming is one of the major industries in Canada which must depend upon lending institutions and upon credit to keep the operation going from year to year. We have no major worries regarding the increase from $25,000 to $50,000 and we hope the clause will be passed as quickly as possible.

The other clauses simply add time to the bill, from July 1, 1974, to June 30, 1977, and allow institutions to lend more money than they are presently able to do. I have only one more comment to add to my brief speech on farm improvement loans. It concerns interest rates. It has been my experience that many bankers are not willing, or not as willing as they should be, to lend money to farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act interest rates which, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said, averaged 8.4 per cent. I think the major reason for this is consumer credit which is in such demand today with the large number of Chargex and Master Charge cards. This type of credit carries an interest rate of 12 per cent or more. Surely any wise manager of a financial institution will look more favourably on loans if he can receive 12 per cent or 14 per cent interest than he will on loans that are guaranteed but are at an average rate of 8¼ per cent.

I hope that we can ask some more questions in the committee and that the bill will be passed. I also hope the minister will consider some of the suggestions that have been made regarding certain aspects of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this is a very unusual bill in which we put farmers, fishermen and small businessmen in the same package. I would suggest that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has been remiss in his responsibility, because he should also have thrown in veterans so that the amount of loans could be doubled for them as well. This suggestion has been made in committee and would apply to the small holdings of veterans. That is what we have been asking about, and that is what the whole ball game is about.

This government does not seem able to do anything about the rising cost of commodities and inputs, the various factors that go into making up the requirements of these three sectors of our economy. The solution, therefore, is to raise the amount of money that can be borrowed by them. I think it is a sad commentary on our society that the best we can do is to say to the banks that these are not viable industries which can operate by themselves. Borrowing is not easy, therefore the banks will have to be assured of guaranteed loans or the money will not be made available for these purposes.

Since the Veterans Land Act holdings fall into the same category, I am surprised that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and the minister responsible for small businesses did not get together so that the four of them could bring in this piece of legislation, rather than only three. I would like to tell the Minister of Veterans Affairs that I think this provision including veterans would have been passed as easily as will the present one which concerns the other three groups, and we would have accomplished something that everybody feels is necessary.

I say that this is a very bad way in which to do business, for a number of reasons. The first is the fact that in these three vital areas the individual who is operating at the bottom of the line in the industry is in all cases in financial difficulty and has trouble raising sufficient capital for his needs. It is a fact—my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) pointed this out—that this can be highlighted in almost any field of agriculture where production costs have gone up so rapidly that there is no comparison between the input a year ago and the input now. He used the example of binder twine. I have discussed this with a number of farmers in my area. The day of coiling hay, using a hay-hook and putting hay loose into a barn or stack has almost totally disappeared from the Canadian scene. So it is vitally necessary for us to have binder twine, and if we cannot have it we must have a substitute in the form of plastic cord of one type or another.

I discussed this matter with a farmer the other night over the telephone. He told me that last year he bought binder twine through the farmers' union at $5.35 a bale. This year, the co-operative with which he is dealing told him it had no twine available. I am informed that binder twine will be available, but the price will not be $5.35 or, with the 10 per cent increase, $6.50. It will be between $22 and $30 a bale. The minister shakes his head. I hope that he can give some arguments to prove that this is not so. This is an input cost to a small farmer with 30 head of cattle which is very high. It is the difference between $225 and $650, a sizeable increase in his cost of production. I understand that you can do 500 bales of hay with one bale of twine. The farmer would normally use 30 to 35 bales. The minister can do the arithmetic. I am told that farmers today will be lucky to get away this year with paying $700.

I could give examples in almost every other area, such as the cow calf operation and the cost of raising calves. We could talk about land or about fertilizer. The previous speaker mentioned machinery parts. It is not only a question of parts but a question of whether parts are available at all. Last fall I intervened on behalf of a farmer who had a David Brown tractor which had been tied up for three or four months while waiting for a very small part—incidentally, a part that was a failure in every David Brown tractor of that type. There were no parts to be had. But after I raised the roof, a part was found in transit and sent to this farmer, allowing him to get his tractor back into service. The part cost much less than $100 but the actual cost to the farmer was considerably more. This farmer's large tractor had broken down at a time when he had to do the plowing. As a result, he had to use a considerably smaller tractor and therefore his costs were two or three times greater.

I am not blaming the minister for such situations. I have great personal affection for him. We both have sat on the same committees, including the farm machinery committee. At times we both have been rebels. He knows that decisions made by that committee were made by a predecessor to it and in fact dated back ten years. But those decisions have not yet been implemented. I am still waiting for the present minister to put them into effect.

Then there is the unnatural increase in the price of the commodities that a farmer must buy. In fact, a farmer gets a hosing when he sells and also when he buys. Farmers in my area have been selling their products through Community Sales, and I suppose eventually to the packers. Members of the public are paying $3 billion in subsidy to make sure the farmer gets a fair return, but I think it is almost impossible for the individual farmer in my area to get this 7½ cents and it is almost as difficult for him to get his 5 cents using the Community Sales method.

Who is making the profit? Canada Packers are ripping off great big gobs of it. As I say, I do not blame the minister. I am sure he is aware that Canada Packers are ripping us off and that all the other packers are doing the same. There really is not much that he can do until some of his colleagues decide to intervene in the middle, in the market place, and take away the unconscionable profit that part of the industry is making. I do not believe Canada Packers when they say they were losing money before and now they have to make up for the loss. If you look at their financial statement you see that they do not have to make up much. Their profits went up immensely over the last year or so.

The same applies to fertilizer. There really will not be any more fertilizer used this year than last year, yet the farmer has to pay considerably more money for it, that is, if he is going to get fertilizer, and in most cases he is not yet sure whether he will receive the amount of fertilizer that is necessary for the crop that he anticipates planting. In fact, the pattern of the western farmer may be repeated. For years the price of seed and of working the land, and all the other cost factors going into production, were so high and the price of the end product so low that the western farmer found there was no point in putting fertilizer on his land, and as a result did not reach maximum production.

I agree with the minister that all members of parliament, whether they represent consuming areas or producing areas, must be careful to ensure that agriculture gets the maximum return possible and that the commodity involved reaches the consumer with as little rip-off as possible. I am not suggesting that we get rid of all the in-between people. That is not possible. We operate in a modern society, using modern methods. There will always be middlemen and they will always have to make a reasonable profit. The emphasis is on "reasonable". Canada Packers and others involved must be allowed a reasonable profit. But when you look at Kraft, Mr. Speaker, their profit is not fair. It is unconscionable. They should be tarred and feathered for the profit they are making. They have developed a monopoly. One of my colleagues says we could boil them in caramel. Certainly we could boil them in Cheese Whiz if we wanted, or in any of the oil products left in the residues from Procter and Gamble and other such companies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are cheesed off.

Mr. Peters: And so is the consumer. Apparently our solution now is to guarantee the banks the right to lend farmers more money. I think a farmer borrowing more money may have to do the same thing as George Weston does. George Weston became interested in a small ice-cream plant in my area. In fact, I was approached in connection with a DREE grant and I was quite prepared to help get a DREE grant to expand the operation. But then the George Weston people asked a very simple question: How much profit does the plant make? When it was pointed out that it made only 4 per cent, the George Weston people said they were not interested and as far as they were concerned the government could go ahead and put whatever capital it wished into the enterprise. In fact, they said they were not interested in any industry which operated at less than 8 per cent profit.

As a result, that particular enterprise was sold to a small dairy in Timmins and is now run by a totally different group of people. The point I am making is that the farmer is not making 8 per cent on his operation or else he would not need to borrow this kind of money. If my brother were able to make 8 per cent on his business, which I suppose is capitalized at a couple of hundred thousand dollars, he would have been paying a considerable amount in income tax over the last few years. But he has not, and neither have other farmers. They have found they have to put their money into their business and in fact have to borrow more and put that into their business too. The same applies to small businessmen.

I talked to a small businessman the other day. We discussed Kraft. He showed me the long sheets, page after page of print-out from a computer, sent to grocery stores from headquarters in Toronto. Some five or six of the pages were taken up with Kraft products that were going up in price. He has to remark and re-price the products which he gets that are on those price lists. The prices change almost week by week. I looked at three weeks of these printed sheets, particularly with respect to Kraft products, and in several instances the same product had increased in price in each of those three weeks.

● (1700)

The small businessman must also be in trouble. Most small grocery stores used to operate on the basis that if they kept ordering from National Grocers or Loeb's, they had a mark-up of 5 per cent or 6 per cent on canned goods, so much on meat and so much on fruit and vegetables. It was consistent and they marked up the product according to the invoice they received. That is no longer possible, because every commodity has a different mark-up which the manufacturer suggests. I am sure that is true in other fields as well. There are several plywood plants in my area, and the price of glue has increased so rapidly that one owner tells me that if the increase continues there is no point in staying in business. Every time an item used in the manufacture of plywood was re-priced, he had to re-work all his bids to customers and it was not worth the trouble. This kind of problem is arising all the time.

I am sure the cost-price squeeze is hitting fishermen too. It is a major factor in agriculture. I think it would be safe to say that most small businessmen in this country have been very independent in thought and in politics. In many cases they were selling their own personality and their own method of operation. This is true, to some extent, of the farmer as well who has been able to prosper by putting in a very long day and being very careful in his operation. He is no longer in that position, Mr. Speaker. He can no longer make decisions from week to week that will be to his advantage.

To take binder twine as an example, again, it cost $225 last year and this year it will run something over $700. How is he to recoup or take that into consideration? Does he ask for more money from the marketing board? We have gone from reasonably priced dairy rations at about 32 per cent protein to 16 per cent protein, and we are using urea as the main base of concentrates because it gives increased production. The farmer has changed his operation as far as he can, but there are many things over which he has no control. A farmer would be foolish to borrow $25,000 or $50,000 in order to expand his operation in the hope that he could solve some of his problems. Indeed, it is unlikely that his farm will produce enough to repay the interest, let alone the principal. He is likely to be involved with a large loan and yet his enterprise will show an unreasonably small profit.

Some farmers in my area are selling their farms for as much as $450,000, but I wonder about the person going into a dairy operation at that price and then borrowing another $50,000 for improvements. It is unlikely he can make a go of it because the margin is not high enough. He will have to put in some magic figure and find a way of overcoming rising costs in face of a relatively fixed income.

I suppose all hon. members will support this legislation, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we have to support it. I strongly urge the minister to consider some of the problems that have been raised in this debate. There may be a better way to help the farmer than lending him money. I know the minister is a farmer himself and has gone to the bank upon occasion to discuss his business with the bank manager. Often the bank manager tells farmers that they are foolish to borrow more money when they cannot see their way clear to repay it. I congratulate the minister on knowing what the problems are and for taking the right tack. All we have to do now is wait and see if he can accomplish his objective. We must encourage farmers to stay in farming; we must make it possible for them to stay and to expand Canadian agriculture to the limit.

Some economists in the United States are saying that food will be so short there this summer that there will be riots. I do not know whether that is true, but I am sure there will be a great shortage of foodstuffs in the world this summer and that a large percentage of consumers in Canada will be affected. They will not have the money to buy the food they want. It is time that we took a stand with the food chains. If we are seriously aiming at being self-sufficient in foods, we must make a concerted effort in all areas. Perhaps most people do not realize it but even in sugar, which was mentioned this afternoon, we could easily be self-sufficient. At the moment we produce approximately 15 per cent of the sugar we use, but if the government guaranteed the forward price to the sugar beet producers and provided assistance for the re-establishment of refining plants in this country, we could easily be self-sufficient.

I know that the minister does not get much co-operation from the food processors in this country, but now he has a glorious opportunity to step in and put some controls on the food chains. Canada can be a major producer of agricultural products if we take the right direction. This can only come about with a healthy and viable farm population, and for that we must make available more money in the form of guaranteed bank loans.

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in contributing to this debate I will restrict my remarks to those parts of the bill dealing with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Although we welcome the amendments which will increase loans ceilings under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act from $25,000 to $50,000, I doubt if they will be of real value to fishermen of the Atlantic area and some other parts of the country. Since the act was proclaimed in 1955, less than $8 million of the money provided for under the act has been lent in the Atlantic area. There are probably a good many reasons for the lack of interest in the advantages of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act shown by fishermen of the Atlantic area.

The fact that all the Atlantic provinces have seen fit to establish provincial fisheries loan boards indicates to me that the act is not working properly in the Atlantic area. I understand that fisherman on the Pacific coast, in British Columbia, have shown more interest in loans under the act than has been the case in the Atlantic area. I understand that only 27 per cent of the moneys made available have been lent in the Atlantic area, most of the remaining funds being lent on the Pacific coast.

In the 17 years this act has been in effect, fishermen in Newfoundland have received only 1.7 per cent of the total funds made available by the government by way of guaranteed bank loans. The province has had to establish its own fisheries loan board. Established a few years ago, the board has lent about $6 million to fishermen and has processed 2,000 applications for loans. I suspect that the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act does not appeal to Atlantic fishermen because of the high interest rates charged on loans made under the act. That, at any rate, is one reason.

As my colleague from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said earlier, it is not easy to find a way around the high interest rates being charged by banks for these loans. Surely if the Atlantic provinces can lend fishermen money at 3½ per cent, as opposed to 9¼ per cent which the banks charge under the federal scheme, it should be possible for the federal government to make these loans available at lower interest rates than those being charged.

The requirements of banks for security for loans have probably prevented Atlantic coast fishermen taking advantage of the act. As you know, fishing enterprises on the east coast are smaller in scale than those on the Pacific coast. The government should consider lowering the requirements for security for loans. Why, Mr. Speaker? If a small fishing operator loses his boat or fishing gear in a storm, he has lost his security. Thus, it is impossible for him to qualify for a loan under the act.

Also, fishermen in the Atlantic area have not availed themselves of the provisions of the act partly because of the attitude of the chartered banks with regard to lending money under the act. They do not want to lend money at rates of interest lower than those they are charging their regular customers. There is evidence to show that bank managers in my riding have been reluctant to entertain loan applications from fishermen. I suspect this holds true for the rest of the country. I suppose the reason for this is that, being in the business of making money, the banks prefer to lend it at higher interest rates than those made available under this act.

For these reasons the minister should consider establishing some system under which applications submitted by fishermen can be monitored by the department. When a fisherman submits an application to a bank for a loan under the act, a copy of that application should be sent to the appropriate government department. If that bank manager or that bank has refused to grant the loan, a government official from the appropriate department should ask the manager or the bank for an explanation. All too often when fishermen apply for loans, bank managers will impose restrictions which are not required under the act, and in many cases they prevent the fishermen from qualifying for loans. It is important for the government to keep a close eye on what happens to applications submitted by fishermen so that if there is any suggestion of banks being unfair to fishermen applying for loans something can be done.

As I say, we welcome the amendment whereby the ceiling on loans will be increased. However, I am not sure it will have the desired effect in certain parts of the country. Another reason fishermen have not taken advantage of the act is that in many small settlements in remote parts of the country there are no banking facilities. It is extremely difficult for fishermen to get to the areas where the lending agencies are established. Consequently, the government should establish some kind of mobile loan service to bring this service to the people. It should do everything in its power to encourage fishermen to avail themselves of these loans and improve their operations accordingly.

A serious problem arises from the inability of fishermen to get loans from the chartered banks. Because of the attitude of some bank officials, the fishermen are being driven into the clutches of the loan sharks. In many cases they are required to pay higher interest rates than those being charged by the banks.

Another suggestion I make to the minister is that his officials undertake a massive advertising campaign to advertise the act and explain how a fisherman should go about applying for a loan. It should state all the benefits that are available. I do not suggest that will be the entire solution to the problem. As I said earlier, the matter of interest rates being charged on these loans will have a very large bearing on whether the fishermen will want to avail themselves of this program.

I hope that the increased loan ceiling will not give the minister an excuse to reduce the amount of the federal subsidy on boat building. At the moment the subsidy amounts to 35 per cent of the actual cost of the boat. I understand that rate has not been set for the current fiscal year. I hope the minister will not attempt to reduce the amount of the subsidy by virtue of the fact he has increased the ceiling of the loans available.

I am sure there will be much more debate on this bill when it goes to committee. I look forward to questioning the minister on certain aspects of the amendments at that time. I am sure my colleagues will do likewise with regard to other aspects, namely, farm improvement loans and small businesses loans. I repeat, we welcome the amendments but are disappointed that provision is not made whereby the interest charged on the loans will be reduced.

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-14, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Colleagues of mine have spoken on the part that relates to farm improvement loans, and the hon. member who preceded me spoke about the part that relates to fisheries. I will dwell mostly on the section that relates to small businesses. This is a very important area of our economy, particularly in southwestern Ontario which is heavily populated with small businesses.

It is very important that special consideration be given to these amendments. I wish to inject a couple of ideas that will possibly improve the bill. The improvements listed in the bill are to make new businesses eligible for loans. They include loans made for the purchase of land necessary for the operation of a business as well as raising the limit from $25,000 to $50,000. Those are briefly mentioned in the recommendation. They are covered in more detail in the bill. These are fine and are very credible.

The key to small business and the progress of small businesses existing at the present time, as well as encouraging individuals with nerve and enthusiasm to launch into a new business venture, is working capital. Until now, only those who have gone through the small business exercise appreciate the lack of working capital. I have been through the small business exercise. Therefore, any comments or suggestions that I make are without any conflict of interest. I hope that at the present time my business is beyond what the act encompasses. Consequently, I am speaking without any conflict of interest.

I encourage the minister to increase the area of available working capital. I am not talking about the money referred to in the amendment which is to be used for buildings, machinery, and so on; I am talking about money to keep a business alive when receivables reach their limit of money available, as well as inventory. These two areas are the stifling points of small business. The bill refers to a limit of $1 million or less. I am thinking about businesses in the $100,000 to $200,000 bracket, or those starting from scratch.

I started my business in 1955 with practically no capital. When I think back, I must have been more mental than when I considered running as a member of parliament. However, at the moment it appears I made a success of my business. Time will tell how much success I have had as a member of parliament. When I started business I had only a few hundred dollars. When starting a new business you are brainwashed by those who sell you the material you require. They tell you, when you buy a load of equipment or feed, that you should receive the money for it before you need to buy another load. It does not work that way in the farm supply business. A farmer buys feed, fertilizer or equipment and in some cases he may have to wait for a large loan to come through from the Farm Credit Corporation, or wherever.

● (1730)

The small businessman is in the same category. He sells to farmers and to the agricultural trade, and in some cases farmers have to wait 2, 3 or even 6 months before their credit is approved, in some cases rightly so. Certainly loans from the Industrial Development Bank take a long time. Sometimes when they go to a bank to borrow money, even if they are willing, so to speak, to even put up their wives they have to prove they do not need the money before they actually get it. The smaller the business, the more this applies. I have gone through this, Mr. Speaker. They give it to you with one hand, and then ask you how much you can pay back with the other.

I have changed my bank several times. I remember one occasion in the late 1950s when one bank told me I could not have any more overdrafts because money was tight. I went to see another bank and put my cards on the table. I had been told by the first bank it just did not have enough money to lend, so having by now been approved by the new bank, I told the original bank I would have to move my affairs to a bigger bank. This is the kind of situation small businesses are faced with. As I say, you have to prove you do not need the money before you can get it. I think the provisions of the act should be widened to permit more government risk capital. The act simply guarantees that if a loan goes sour, the government will back up the bank. A lot of individuals in this country have the idea that farm improvement and small business loans are government money. That is not so; this is bank money.

In his presentation this afternoon the minister claimed lending was at a high level. I believe this is true of farm improvement loans, but around the London area the banks have made no small business loans to speak of. The reason is that banks can lend their money at far less risk in other ways, and as a result they really do not care whether small businessmen receive loans or not. As suggested by one of my colleagues in the previous debate, one way of alleviating the situation is to oblige banks to lend this kind of money. Naturally, a ceiling would have to be placed on the extent of the loans and the banks would be obligated to reach that ceiling. Unless such a system is implemented, I can see no way to encourage the banks to make loans to small businessmen.

Perhaps it will be necessary to strengthen the government's guarantee to the banks. After all, the government is handing out money under LIP, OFY, or you name it, all of them credible in their own right. But the small businessmen of this country can become big businessmen. Let us not forget that all big businesses were at one time small. This is the sort of thing that has made Canada. During the first 100 years of confederation many small businesses grew. A man has a dream, thinks he can make something go, and armed mostly with enthusiasm, plus a lot of hard work, he builds up a business. Today there are many large businesses which 50 to 75 years ago were launched with a few hundred dollars. I have a feed business franchise that is in this category. Eighty years ago the founder of the business mixed his first bag of feed with a scoop shovel. Today the business is one of the top ten in North America. But, as I say, once it was a very small family business.

The point I am trying to make is that the government can afford to put up more risk capital to support small business. After all, even if a business goes under someone else may pick up the idea and carry it on. The banks should be made more aware of their obligations to the country and to the small business community. As I have said, I am sure some sort of a quota system for Banks to lend this risk money could be worked out. Take the case of the small business with $100,000 in receivables—which today is not a large amount—another $100,000 or better in inventory, and something happens to the economy which slows up revenue. Two or three years ago, for example, a lot of businesses literally went bankrupt as a result of a Post Office strike. These were businesses that depended on money coming in through the mails. The clients of these businesses no doubt in some cases took advantage of the situation. After all, who could prove that the cheques were not held up in the mail? Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I have gone all through this. I know all the answers and what to look for so far as trying to survive in business is concerned.

Our obligation as members of parliament is to encourage small business. I have lived this life of trying to survive in small business, Mr. Speaker, so I think I know what it is all about. Small business cannot be successful without a lot of thought, research and planning. However, rather than some of the band-aid approaches we have seen from this government, they should take some positive action that will show further results in the next 100 years. When the bill goes to committee I shall want to discuss some of the amendments and, hopefully, put forth some of the ideas I have espoused this afternoon.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Like previous speakers, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see this bill now before the House as it is long overdue. Certainly it will help small business considerably as they go along their way. Small businesses play a very important role in the Canadian economy. They create over 50 per cent of Canada's gross national product and they pay close to 50 per cent of taxes collected by the government, while employing more than 50 per cent of the people working in Canada.

Small businesses provide the productive outlet for the energies of a large group of enterprising, independent people who attach great value to economic independence. In industries with optimum-size production units where the sales have been small, often the most efficient form of organization is provided by small business. For many reasons, because of closeness of management to operation they can effect economies which are not possible in larger businesses. Small businesses act as specialist suppliers to large companies, suppliers of parts and sub-assembly components at much lower costs than many of the larger companies. Small businesses add greatly to the variety of products and services offered to the consumer because they can flourish in a limited or specialized market which would not be worth-while or economical in many cases for large businesses to enter. In an economy which seems to be propelling itself toward larger, multiproduct companies, small businesses can provide competition both actual and potential and provide some check on the monopoly profits and inefficiency which monopoly breeds.

I am glad to see that the gross revenue allowable portion of this bill is being raised from $500,000 to $1 million and that the amount of a loan is being raised from $25,000 to $50,000. I cannot help but think back to the first session of this twenty-ninth parliament when the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) had a notice of motion on the order paper to increase the small businesses loan limit to $75,000 and government members at that time talked out the motion. We are now in April, 1974, and we have not yet seen the 1973 report, although the minister in his opening remarks quoted from it so I assume we will be getting it in the near future.
