

Correspondence.

For the Colonial Farmer.
REPORTER VERSUS WOMAN'S UNION.

Excuse me, I have been an interested reader of the scenes transpiring around town this winter, and have been especially watchful of the women's organization, not being over-enthusiastic of their ability to transact business, but I am aghastly surprised...

In speaking to a lady on the subject, I pressed rather hard on the editor, with indignation flashing from her eye, she asked me, "If it were likely that a housewife man who had generally refused payment for the sale of a column of his paper, the interests of the temperance cause, would do anything so mean and ungentle?"

In the last issue there is a positive denial of this conclusion. Correspondents are expected to patrons; it is to be expected that new advertisements, following hand in hand with "Genuine Syrup," following hand in hand with "Cod Liver Oil," good in its way, but only out of place in a column granted as a free offering to the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

Mr. Editor, - While looking over the last issue of your valuable paper I notice a very important question which is asked the Hon. Board of Works, which in my opinion will remain a question, unless the Hon. Board will give liberty for the parties who have tendered for Bridges, and other Government work, to answer for him.

Speaking of Green River Bridge, it is a simple structure, and if the contractor, who ever he was, actually received $6,000 for that bridge, there is no doubt in my mind he had $5,000 clear.

But the question is, are these large sums not divided among the contractors and members of the Government? Mr. Editor, these things look dark, and therefore, kindly and I might say thoughtful, getting their eyes open so that they can see into these things.

The Railway Bridge granted to the contractor Green River is a Howe truss bridge, two spans 67 feet each, and is under contract the man that was defeated on the repairs of the Woodstock Bridge.

The name of W. Elder appears in the Public Accounts of this Province in the following connection. Printing Educational Circulars, $73,227, printing Provincial Debentures, $85,000.

This W. Elder is none other we presume, than William Elder, M. P. P., for St. John. The 23rd Section of Chapter 4 of the Consolidated Statutes is as follows: "No contractor with or under the Government, nor any surety of such contractor shall be capable of being elected or sitting in the House of Assembly while such contract is subsisting or such person has any interest therein."

One of a long, lank, individual with a general gaitic declination on the proper way keeping bank accounts so as to make $20,000 look the same as $22,000. Another of a similar looking individual arguing that a cent per acre is enough for operators to pay for stolen lumber when they have friends in power.

Lucy's Stock consists of Boots.

The kindness of the Chief Commissioner of Public Works in answering our previous questions leads us to continue the edition. We are anxious that the position we will lead to repentance on the part of our Honorable friend from Northumberland.

The contract for the Green River Bridge - not that referred to in our correspondence - "Fair Play's" letter - was $29,900 with no allowance for extras - see Financial Returns of February 14, 1877, page 15. There was paid on account of the construction of this bridge:

Table with columns for dates (1870, 1877) and amounts ($100,000, $300,000, $300,000, $24,875, $125,000, $100,000, $103,000).

A New Battalion - A proposition to organize a company of infantry at Fredericton, N. B., has, we learn, been favorably received and forwarded to Ottawa by the District staff officers. It is claimed that the military strength of the Dominion (excluding Quebec) is inadequate to the duties required at the seat of Government.

King Humbert opened the Italian Parliament, Thursday, and delivered the speech from the throne. He said: "We shall consolidate and render fruitful the great work of Italy, which is the glorious work of the Italian people."

Legislative Summary.

A casual visitor to the Assembly would be apt to carry away the impression that the numbers of that body had very little to do and were in a great haste to do even that little. Such is not the case, for although as yet very little discussion has taken place on the floor of the House, and only a few local and private bills have been passed, excellent work is being done by the Committee.

The Opposition are also very busy and are daily moving resolutions asking information on important subjects. In every case a Government spokesman is being sought for; but this course indicates no especial interest on their part since it would be unadvised to move resolutions when the Government is not prepared to answer them.

WAR NEWS.

A despatch from Constantinople of the 5th, says that the title "Preliminaries of Peace," and contains twenty-nine articles. The opening articles relate to Montenegro, Serbia and Bulgaria. The indemnity is fixed at fourteen hundred and ten million roubles, but eleven hundred million are covered by territorial concessions.

Nothing is fixed concerning the terms and period for payment of the three hundred and ten million. No guarantee is stipulated, nor is the mention of Egyptian or Bulgarian tributes, or the cessation of the Turkish fleet. The treaty simply states that Russia and Turkey shall agree subsequently on payment.

Muslims may return to Bulgaria. Any property of Muscovites who have not returned which they have unimpounded is to be sold after two years for the benefit of the widows and orphan's fund.

THE GREAT FEMALE REMEDY.

This invaluable medicine is useful in the cure of all those painful and distressing disorders to which the female constitution is subject. It purifies the blood and restores the system, fortifies the youthful constitution for the duties of life, and when taken in infancy, calms the nervous system, and enables the mother to perform her duties with comfort to herself and the child.

It cures of Nervous and Spinal Affections, Pains in the Back and Limbs, Fatigue on slight exertion, Palpitation of the Heart, Hysterics, and Whites, these Pills will effect a cure when all other means have failed, and although a powerful remedy, do not contain iron, calomel, or anything harmful to the constitution.

The Ministerial Election in connection with the Reform Club was very successful. There was a little delay in putting on the various pieces a lack of power in some of the speakers and of language between the speakers and the speakers in at least one case, but the performance as a whole was capital, and we are satisfied that the Club has shown the defects we mention will be remedied.

CHAPTER VII.

THE BOARDING-PLACE, AND WHAT TWO LADIES THOUGHT OF HER.

Ben's conversion was sudden, and, in most similar cases, he found a difficulty in staying converted. While his pride was flattered by the confidence reposed in him by Miss Frost, there were times when his old misanthropic propensities almost overcame him. On the third day, John Cotton was passing Ben's desk, the latter thrust out his foot into the passage-way between the desks, and John tumbled over it, breaking his slate.

"What is the matter?" asked Mabel, looking up from a book from which she was hearing a class.

"Ben hadly tripped me up," said John, rubbing his person, and looking ruefully at the broken slate.

"Did you?" asked Mabel.

"Ben was already sorry and ashamed, and he would not have been under any other teacher. With all his faults he was a boy of truth, and he answered, 'Yes,' rather sheepishly.

"You should be careful not to keep feet in the aisle," said Miss Frost, quietly.

"I suppose you'll be willing to buy Ben a new slate."

"Yes," said Ben, promptly, glad to have the matter and that.

"I need a slate now," grumbled John.

"I'll lend you mine," said Ben, promptly, "and buy you a better one than mine."

"You might have broken my legs, grumbled John.

"The girl I didn't," said Ben, ruefully, "for I couldn't have brought you a new pair."

John laughed, and so the matter passed.

Mabel was judicious, and did not think it necessary to speak to Ben on the subject. She quite understood that the accident was "done in a moment," but she did not try to humiliate Ben, but rather to keep him on his good behavior. So she was as friendly and confidential as ever, and Ben preserved his self-respect. He kept his promise, and bought John the most expensive slate he could find in the village store.

Mabel very soon found herself mistress of the situation. Experience goes for a good deal, but it does not always bring with it the power of managing boys and girls. Mabel had had, however, before the week was out, all was running smoothly in her department, a little to the disappointment of Miss Clara Bassett, who felt that the school should have been hers.

Mabel still boarded at the hotel. She was quietly on the look out for a more desirable boarding-place. She had a little of her own money, and she was a little of a miser, whose cheap dress indicated poverty, but who possessed a natural and instinctive refinement, which her wear marked than in any other pupil. Mabel inquired into her circumstances, and learned that her father had been an officer in the civil war, and had been killed at the battle of Antietam. All that he left to his widow was a small cottage, and a pension of twenty dollars a month, which his service entitled her. On this small sum and a little additional money earned by sewing, Mrs. Kent supported her family, which besides Ben, included a boy two years younger, who was in Miss Bassett's school. One afternoon Mabel visited home with Rose, and introduced herself to Mrs. Kent. She found her a delicate, refined woman, such as she imagined Rose would grow to be in time. Everything was inexpensive, but there was traces of good taste about the little establishment.

"I am glad to see you, Miss Frost," said Mrs. Kent, with a quiet cordiality. "I have heard of you continually from Rose, who is your enthusiastic admirer."

"Rose and I are excellent friends," said Mabel, smiling kindly on the little girl. "She never gives me any trouble."

"I have never heard of any complaints from any of your teachers. One thing that I have heard, however, is, that you are a very wonderful teacher."

"You have wonderfully changed Ben, who has been the torment of previous teachers."

Mabel smiled.

"I like Ben," she said. "From the first I saw that he had many good points. He was merely mischievous."

"Merely mischievous," Mrs. Kent, smiling.

"Mischief may give a good deal of trouble, but the spirit that leads to it may be turned into another channel. This I have done with Ben. I find him very bright when he exerts his abilities."

"You understand managing rogues, I can see clearly. I hear that this is your first school."

"I never entered country school till I commenced teaching here."

"Your success is wonderful."

"Don't compliment me prematurely, Mrs. Kent. Failure may yet be in store for me."

"I think not."

"And I hope not."

"You are boarding at the hotel, I believe."

"Only temporarily. I am in search of a pleasant boarding-place."

"Mrs. Brock might be willing to take you as a boarder. Indeed she has boarded several teachers before."

Mabel had met Mrs. Brock. She had the reputation of being a good house-keeper, but withal she was a virgin, and her husband a long-suffering victim of domestic tyranny. She was a thin little woman, with a shrewish face, who was seldom known to speak well of anybody; but she provided the best table in North Sparta.

"I don't think I should enjoy boarding with Mrs. Brock," said Mabel, straightforwardly. "I should like much better boarding with you."

"You don't know how plainly we live," said Mrs. Kent. "I should like very much to have you here, but my table don't compare with Mrs. Brock's."

"Let me make you a business proposition, Mrs. Kent," said Mabel. "I don't pretend to be indifferent to a good table, and I know the small amount I could justly pay for a teacher's board would not justify you in changing your style in living. I propose, if you will be kind enough to receive me, to pay you ten dollars a week as my share of the expenses."

"Ten dollars!" ejaculated Mrs. Kent.

"Why, Mrs. Brock only charges three."

"But I would rather pay the difference and board with you."

"Excuse me, Miss Frost, but how can you? Your salary as teacher is seven dollars a week."

"I see that I must tell you a secret, Mrs. Kent. I depend on your not making it public. I am quite able to live without touching a penny of my salary."

"I am glad of that," said Mrs. Kent, but it seems so extortionate, my accepting ten dollars a week."

"Then don't let any one know how much I pay you. It will improve my secret if you do, and I to consider myself accepted."

"I shall be very glad of your company," said Mrs. Kent, and I know Rose will be delighted."

"Will you come here, early and truly, Miss Frost?" asked Rose, eagerly.

"Since your mother is willing, Rose,"

Rose clasped her hands in delight, and showed clearly how acceptable the arrangement was to her.

Mabel's choice of a boarder place excited surprise.

"I wish the school-man joy of her boarding-place," said Mrs. Brock, toasting her hands. "Why, wider Kent has most only once or twice a week, and once when I called about supper-time, I noticed which she had on the table. There she had a little apple sauce, and tea. It'll be something of a change from the tavern."

"She lives better now," said Mrs. Cotton.

"This was several days after Mabel had become an inmate of Mrs. Kent's house,"

"I called yesterday on purpose to see what she had for supper, and what do you think? she had cold roast beef, preserved sardines, and two kinds of pies."

"Then all I can say, that the woman will be missed before the summer's out," said Mrs. Brock solemnly. "What the school-man pays her won't begin to pay for keeps!"

"I don't brook myself, and I don't think my table is beat by many in North Sparta. Mrs. Kent's foot to pumpers common school man that way."

"You're right, Mrs. Brock," but, poor woman, I suppose she has to. That Miss Frost, probably forces her to it. I declare it's very inconsiderate, for she must know the widow's circumstances."

"It's more than inconsiderate—it's inhuman," said Mrs. Brock, solemnly.

"Mrs. Kent can't be very proud, but she does not seem to care for the other lady."

Miss Frost flatters Rose, and gets round the mother in that way. She's a very artful young woman, my dear, and she would do anything to get her feet in the village store."

Mabel very soon found herself mistress of the situation. Experience goes for a good deal, but it does not always bring with it the power of managing boys and girls.
