CHAPTER X. the city hospital in Rouen that night a stout young man introduced himself to Bar-rett, superintendent of poren Smith and Horner, sheriff "My name is Meredith." he said. "Mr. Harkless was an old and—and—" He paused for a moment. The Plattville an nodded solemnly. "An old and some difficulty, and Warren Smith took him silently by the hand.

"You can come in and see this man, the Teller, with us if you like, Mr. Mertendent. "Your friend made it very hot for him before the two of 'em got away with him. He's so shot and hacked up his mother wouldn't know him if she wanted to. At-least that's what they say out here. We haven't seen him. He's called Jerry the Teller, and one of my sergeants found him in the freight yard. Knew t was the Teller, because he was stowd away a one of the empty cars that ame from Plattville last night. And Slattery-that's his running mate, the owned up that they beat their way on that freight. Looks like Slattery—let the Teller do all the fighting. He ain't scratched. We've been at Slattery ead, and we hope to get something out of this one. He's delirious, but they say he'll come to before he dies. Do you want to go in with us?" "Yes," said Meredith simply, and a young surgeon presently appeared and led them down a wide corridor and up mall, quiet ward. There was a pungent smell of chem-cals in the room. The light was low, and the dimness was imbued with a vhisperings that came from a cot in he corner. It was the only cot in use the ward, and Meredith was con-ious of a terror that made him dread o look at it, to go near it. Beside it nurse sat silent, and upon it feebly ged the racked body of him whom rrett had called Jerry the Teller. The head was a shapeless bundle, so athed it was with bandages and loths, and what part of the face was sheet the man looked immensely tall-as Horner saw with vague misgivingn, as though he had been all broken pieces. His attempts to move were nstantly soothed by the nurse, and a as constantly continued such atmpts, and one hand, though torn rom a wandering, restless movement hat Meredith felt to be pathetic. He id entered the room with a flare of ate for the thug whom he had come he old friend whose nearness he had never known until it was too late. But at first sight of the broken figure he elt all animosity fall away from him. Only awe remained and a growing raitorous pity as he watched the long white fingers of the Teller pick at the coverlet. The man was muttering capid fragments of words and sylla-in a pleasant voice: "It's all right, old man; it's all right. Slattery wants to cot Warren said something indicative know what you did with that man down at Plattville when you got through with him. He can't remember, and he thinks there was money left on him. Slattery's head was hurt. He can't remember. He'll go shares with you when he gets it. Slattery's going to stand by you if he can get the money."

"Slattery wants to know," repeated the young surgeon, gently moving the hand back upon the sheet. "He'll divvy up when he gets it. He'll stand by you, old man." "Would you please not mind," whisplease not mind if you took care not to brush against my shoulder again?"

The surgeon drew back, with an exclamation, but the Teller's whisper gathered strength, and they heard him murmuring oddly to himself. Meredith moved forward, with a startled "Seems to be trying to sing, or something," said Barrett, bending over to The Teller swung his arm heavily of the sheriff's presence, and the hand over the side of the cot, the fingers never ceasing their painful twitching. The surgeon leaned down and gently moved the cloths so that the white, scarred lips were free. They moved steadily. They seemed to be framing the semblance of an old ballad that Meredith knew. The whisper grew more distinct. they heard it singing like the sound of A sleepy young man had been

The bandaged hand waved jauntily over the Teller's head. "Ah, men," he said, almost clearly, and tried to lift himself on his arm, "I tell you it's a grand eleven we have this year! There will be little left of anything that stands against them. It's our championship. Did you see Jim Romley ride over his man this afternoon?"-

As the voice grew clearer the sheriff with a loud cry of grief, threw himself on his knees beside the cot and seized the wandering fingers in his own. "John!" he cried. "John, is it

The voice went on rapidly, not heeding him, "Ah, you needn't howl! Well, laugh away, you Indians! If it hadn't been for this ankle-but it seems to be my chest that's hurt—and side—not that it matters, you know. The sophomore's just as good or better. It's only my egotism. Yes, it must be the side—and chest—and head—all over, I believe. I'll try again next year-next year I'll make it a daily. Helen said, not that I should call you Helen-I mean Miss-Miss-Flsbee-no, Sher-wood-but I've always thought Helen was the prettiest name in the worldyou'll forgive me?-and please tell Parker there's no more copy and won't be-I wouldn't grind out another stick to save his immortal-she said-ah, I never made a good trade-no-unlessthey can't come seven miles—but I'll firish you, Skillett, first; I know you! I know nearly all of you. Now let's sing 'Annie Lisle'"— He lifted his hand as if to beat the time for

"Oh, John, John!" cried Tom Meredith, and sobbed outright. "My boy, my boy-old friend!" The cry of the classmate was like that of a mother, for it was his old idol and hero who iay helpless and broken before him.

. Two pairs of carriage lamps sparkled in front of the hospital in the earliest of the small hours, these subjoined to two deep hooded phaetons, from each of which quickly descended a gentleman with a beard, an air of eminence and a small, ominous black box, and the air of eminence was justified by the haste with which Meredith had sent for them and by their wide repute. They arrived almost simulta-neously and hastily shook hands as they made their way to the ward down the long hall and up the narrow corridor. They had a short conversation with the surgeon and a word with the nurse, then turned the others out of the room by a practiced innuendo of manner. They stayed a long time in the room without opening the door.

Meredith went out on the steps and breathed the cool night air. A slender taint of drugs hung everywhere about the building, and the almost imperceptible permeation sickened him. It was deadly, he thought. To him it was imbued with a hideous portent of suffering. The lights in the little ward were from a chamber of horrors, while he waited as a brother might have waited outside the inquisition, if indeed a brother would have been allowed to wait outside the inquisition.

Alas, he had found John Harkless. He had lost track of him as men some-times do lose track of their best beloved, but it had always been a comfort to know that Harkless was somewhere, a comfort without which he could hardly have got along. Like others, he had been waiting for John to turn up-on top, of course-he had such would always care for him and believe in him so that he would be shoved ahead no matter how much he hung back himself: but Meredith had not expected him to turn up in Indiana. He remembered now hearing a man who had spent the day in Plattville on business speak of him: "They've got a young fellow down there who'll be governor in a few years. He's a sort of dictator. Runs the party all over that part of the state to suit his own sweet will just by sheet personality. And there isn't a man in the district who ow how Henry felt over the great wouldn't cheerfully lie down in the sard. How tall he looks! That mud to let him pass over dry. It's doesn't seem to me like a thug's hand."

The surgeon nodded. "Of course if there's a mistake to be made you can that young Harkless, you know. Owns the Herald, the paper that downed McCune and smashed those imitation. there's a mistake to be made you can count on Barrett and his sergeants to make it. I doubt if this is their man. Had been struck by the coincidence of hen they found him, what clothes the name, but he had not dreamed that when they found fill, what clothes the wore were torn and stained, but the Carlow Harkless was his friend hey had been good once, especially until Helen's telegram had reached him that evening.

He shivered. His name was spoken to talk to you a little. Rouse up, will the steps with the two eminent surgeons, and the latter favored him with a few words which he did not understand. He did understand, however, "See here, Jerry?' repeated Barrett ore sharply. "Jerry! Rouse up, will look of the sheriff's Sunday coat, wrinou? We don't want any fooling, un- kling forlornly from his broad, bent derstand that, Jerry! He dropped his shoulders, was both touching and solution on the man's shoulder and shook. He said simply: "He's conscious and not out of his head. They're gone The Teller uttered a short, gaspi in to git his antemortem statement."

"Let me," said Gay and swiftly Harkless' eyes were bandaged. The Meředith gave an exclamation.

Was stlance.

"Now, Mr. Harkless, if you please," said Barrett insinuatingly, "If you feel like telling us as much as you can about it."

He answered in a low, rather indistinct voice very deliberately, pausing before almost every word. It was easy work for the sleepy stenographer. "I understand. I don't want to go off my head again before I finish. If it were only for myself I should tell you nothing because if I should tell you not have the same tell should be a single s you nothing, because if I am to leave I should like it better if no one were punished. But that's a bad community over there. They are everlastingly worrying our people. They've always been a bother to us, and it's time it was stopped for good. I don't believe very much in punishment, but you can't do a great deal of reforming with wean them on whisky, you know. I realize you needn't have sworn me for me to tell you this.' Horner and Smith had started at the mention of the Crossroads, but they subdued their ejaculations, while Mr. Barrett looked as if he had known it, of course. The room was still, save for the dim voice and the soft transcribings of the stylographic pen.

"I left Judge Briscoe's and went west on the pike to a big tree. It rained, and I stepped under the tree for shelter. There was a man on the other side of the fence—Bob Skillett. He was carrying his gown and hood—I suppose it was that on his arm. Then I saw two others a little farther east in the middle of the road. I think they had followed me from the Briscoes' or near there. They had their foolish regalia on, as all the others had. There was plenty of lightning to see. The two in the road were simply standing there in the rain looking at me through the eyeholes in their masks. I knew there were others-

plenty-but I thought they were coming from behind me-the west. "I wanted to get home-the courtouse yard was good enough for meso I started east toward town. I passed the two gentlemen, and one fell-down as I went by him, but the other fired a shot as a signal, and I got his long enough, and it was Force Johnson. I know him well. Then I ran, and they followed. A little ahead of me I saw six or eight of them spread across the road. I knew I'd have a time getting through, so I jumped the fence to cut across the fields. I lit in a swarm of them. It had rained them just where I jumped. I set my back to the fence, but one of the fellows in the road leaned over and smashed my head in, rather-with the butt of a gun, I believe. I came out from the fence, and they made a little circle around me. No one said anything. I saw they had ropes and saplings, and I didn't want that exactly, so I went in to them. I got a good many masks off before it was over, and I can swear

to quite a number besides those I told

He named the men slowly and carefully. Then he went on: "I think they gave up the notion of whipping. We all got into a bunch, and they couldn't get clear to shoot without hitting some of their own, and there was a lot of gouging and kicking. One fellow near-ly got my left eye, and I tried to tear him apart, and he screamed a good deal. Once or twice I thought I might get away, but somebody hammered me over the head and face again, and I got dizzy, and then they all jumped away from me suddenly, and Bob Skillett stepped up and-and shot me. He waited for a flurry of lightning, and I was slow tumbling down. Some one else fired a shotgun, I think, I can't be sure, about the same time from the side. I tried to get up. but I couldn't, and then they got together for a con-sultation. The man I had hurt—I didn't recognize him-came and looked at me. He was nursing himself all over and groaned, and I laughed, I think; at any into my hand, and after a little of that I quit feeling.

"I'm not quite clear about what happened afterward. They went awaynot far. I think. There's an old shed, a cattle shelter, near there, and I think the storm drove them under it to wait for a slack. It seemed a long time. Sometimes I was conscious, sometimes I wasn't. I thought I might be good for me. Then I remember being in motion, being dragged and carried a long way. They carried me up a steep, short slope and set me down near the Skillett, Force Johnson and one or two top. I knew that was the railroad embankment, and I thought they meant to lay me across the track, but it didn't occur to them—they are not familiar with melodrama—and a long time after that I felt and heard a great bauging and rattling under me and all about me, and it came to me that they had disposed of me by hoisting me into an empty freight car. The odd part of it was that the car wasn't empty, tog there were two men already in it, and I knew them by what they said to me. "They were the two shell men that cheated Hartley Bowlder, and they weren't vindictive. They even seemed perhaps they were only stealing my clothes, and maybe they thought for

I haven't known anything more until those surgeons were here. Please tell me how long ago it happened. I shall not die, I think. There are a good many things I want to know about." He moved restlessly, and the nurse soothed Meredith rose and left the room with a noiseless step. He went out to the stars again and looked to them to check the storm of rage and sorrow that bus-feted his bosom. He understood lynching, now the thing was home to him, and his feeling was no inspiration of a fear lest the law miscarry. It was the the Crossroaders unless you catch them young, before they're weaned. They itch to get his own hand on the rope. pered a long, broad, profound curse upon the men of the Crossroads, and Meredith's gratitude to him was keen. Barrett went away soon after, and Meredith had a strange, unreasonable desire to kick Barrett, possibly for his sergeant's sake. Warren Smith sat in the ward with the nurse and Gay, and the room was very quiet. It was a long vigil. They were only waiting.

At 5 o'clock he was still alive—just that, Smith came out to say. Meredith sent a telegram to Helen which would give Plattville the news that Harkless was found and was not yet gone from them. Horner left for the station to catch a train. There were things for him to do in Carlow. At noon Meredith sent a second telegram to Helen as barren of detail as the first. He was alive; was a little improved. But this telegram did not reach her, for she was on the way to Rouen, and half of the population of Carlow—at least so it seemed to the unhappy conductor of the accom-nodation—was with her. They seemed to feel that they could camp in the hospital halls and corridors, and they were an incalculable worry to the authorities. More came on every train, and nearly all brought

Those who had heard his statement kept close mouths until the story appeared in full in the Rouen papers on Monday morning. But by that time every member of the Crossroads White Caps was lodged in the Rouen jail with Slattery. For women Scott's Emulsion does this and more. It is a most sustaining food and tonic for the special trials that of his old friend. He waved his hand to the figures, and they vanished like figments of a dream; but, all the same, the vision had been realistic enough for the lady to look exquisitely pretty. No one could help wishing to stay in a world which contained as charming a picture as that.

But the next night Meredith waited near his bedside, haggard and disheveled. Harkless had been lying in a long stupor. Suddenly he spoke, quite loudly, and the young surgeon, Gay, who leaned ever him, remembered the

HYMENEAL

DEARBORN—FELCH.

The home of Mrs. Joseph H. Wright, 16 Congress St., Lynn, Mass., was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday, Sept. 28th, when her sister, Miss Bertha Ellen Felch, was united in marriage to Mr. Harry Nourse Dearborn, of Cilitondale Mass.

The cremon of the pleasure of the passing much stir would likely tire of the monotonous much the beauting as we certainly should not have the rich and tender verdure which spring invariably brings to us after the mellowing effects of winter upon our fields and forests. From this point of view we are disposed to accept the poet's theory that "whatever is is best," and that no improvement, can be made upon the plants of a wise Providence.

We notice with regret a tendency in some of our leading political papers to write in a very disparaging manner about British thought and influence so far as they relate to Canadian affairs. There is surely no need of this discourteous, not to say disloyal, style of dealing with British political affiliations. Our ancestry and our colonial union with the greatest empire on earth afford sufficient grounds for our cultivating a spirit of cheerful papers to write in a very disparaging manner about British thought and influence so far as they relate to Canadian affairs and providence.

The home of Mrs. Joseph H. Wright, 16 Congress St., Lynn, Mass., was the seem of a pretty welding This fact should not hide from us the greater consideration that the vast majority of people on both sides of the Atlantic cherish for each other feelings of the highest respect and of the most perfect confidence. Britain is proud of her Canadian descendants, and we have equal reason to be proud. is proud of her Canadian descendants, and we have equal reason to be proud of our worthy ancestry and of our national connections. That the neighboring republic should be so excessively boastful of its flag and its political life, whilst Canadians, in many instances, speak so discourteously of our flag and our British political affiliations is to us a matter of surprise. flag and our British political affilia-tions, is to us a matter of surprise, of regret, and of humiliation. Such utterances are not only unnecessary, but they are ignoble and censurable. We cannot in any way add to the dignity or prosperity of Ganada by spreading the seeds of national dis-cord and dislike among our children. Let us be free, indeed, but let us show our appreciation of this freedom by manifesting a true spirit of loyalty and patriotism.

There are on the property about 12,000 trees bearing fruit, from which the estimated yield is about 16,000 barrels, and about 10,000, ranging from one to nine years, which have not yet come into bearing. The farms are all in a prosperous condition, with

W. Bigelow, Ex-President of the Nova Scotia Fruit Growers' Association, and an authority on all matters of this kind, outlined the possibilities of fruit culture on a large scale in special article in the Morning Chronicle's New Year Edition, in which he showed that an English capitalist who was willing to invest $25,000 in a Valley orchard, providing it could b proved that it had paid an average of 10 per cent. clear per year for ten years, could find any number of or-chards capable of doing this, but could not find an owner willing to sell at a valuation of $1000 per acre He also speaks of an orchard, bough ten years ago for $1000 per acre, which had vielded a dear profit of over 20 per cent. per year for the ten years. Mr. Bigelow is enthusiastic about the prospects of the company.

Apples alone will not be the depe ence of the company, as they will cultivate small fruits extensively, as well as potatoes and other vegetable and erect a canning and vinegar plant.

There will also be built a barrel and box factory for the making of their fruit packages, for which there is a great demand all over the province. Hog raising on a large scale will be another important branch of the company's work, and the small Valley prices on this market, will grow and fatten on the waste apples and wind-

THE POPULAR SONG. (By S. E. Kiser.) song,
The song that is always a hit;
You'll observe that the rhyming is very, strong—

That's one of the beauties of it. A little child was dying where The light grew dim, one day, The bedclothes they were lying the floor;
She looked up at her father, and
She unto him did say:
"Please, father, don't beat mother

any more.

Don't take your wooden leg off when I'm lying 'neath the ground, Asleep away out yonder, cold and dead,

For some day you might break it, as you try to hop around And with it pound poor mother on the head."

CHORUS. Father, don't beat mother

With your peg leg any more
When, at night, she greets you
At our cabin door;
Father, keep your peg of
After I am dead and gone;
Be kind to dear old mother, for
You know she isn't strong, The father knelt beside her there

He put his leg away,
And down his furrowed cheeks the
tears did roll;
"Oh darling, I'll remember," he
Unto the child did say,
As in his arms the dear one he did

The mother stood and listened, and her heart was very sad, She had a beefsteak fastened on one-eye;
"Be kind and gentle to her," said
the child, "remember, dad,
That raw meat it has risen very high."

CHORUS.

Father, don't beat mother, etc. That night beside their dear one they Did linger all alone.
The peg leg it was laid across a

The peg leg it was laid across a chair;
The joy had all departed from That happy little home.
No more would childish laughter echo there.
The sobbing mother took the beefsteak from her damaged eye,
The saddened father unto her his wooden leg did bring.
She put it in the stove, and while with it the steak did fry
The spirit of the child did near them, as they ate it, sing:

Father won't beat mother With his peg leg any more
When she comes to greet him
At their little cottage door;
Father's peg will never
More cause mother dear to weep;
They will now be happy, and They'll save a lot of meat.
